Bad Change For Bad Reasons

The objection to the new proposal for election of members of the Board of Education, as at has been formulated by the Charter Revision Committee, and supported by a partisan vote on the Board of Directors, is an objection not only to campus, but has gone off campus to take a leading part in demonstrations what the change would do, but an oband protests. Now he has been indicted jection to the motivation behind the proby the Federal government on a charge posal in the first place. of conspiring to counsel men of draft

By this proposal the people of Manchester are being asked to change the traditional system for election of boards of education by staggered terms, and to expose future boards of education to possibly complete turnovers of membership every two years. But, although the general principle of making "the Board of Education more responsible to the wishes of the electorate" is cited as the Charter Revision Committee's excuse for this proposa appealed all the way to the Supreme the sharp particular issue in the minds of the framers of this proposal is "Project Concern," by which 62 children from the North End of Hartford have been bused to attendance in Manchester schools during the past two years.

To the great credit of the membership of the Board of Education at the -time it was voted to allow Manchester to participate in Project Concern, it was not made a partisan issue by the members of the Board. It became an issue in which members of the Board, like all the rest of the people of Manchester, searched their hearts and came up with the decisions of their individual consciences. When the issue was handled on the Board of Education, in such a manner, it became a notable example of the highest possible standard of operation for representative democracy.

To some of the community's opponents of Project Concern, however, the action of the Board of Education wore no such laudable luster. They regarded it as a betraval of what they themselves believed or hoped would have been the majority opinion of all the voters in the community. They went to the polls in the next town election with punitive action in their hearts, and they have been seeking ever since for political leverage with which to remake the town's whole governmental structure and political system, if need be, to insure that no more decisions are made which take Manchester into any participation in any attempted solution of the problems created by the existence of Hartford's North End ghetto.

The sad import of the action of the Charter Revision Committee, and of the partisan vote on the Board of Directors, is that these extremist opponents of Project Concern have come close to turning one of our political parties into the instrument of their own particular

We in Manchester are, in the years ahead, going to have to decide a great many issues which will involve our relationship with social, economic, and racial problems which extend across town borders. By such decisions, we will be playing our own relatively small partsmall in the big national picture, but large enough for us in its relationship to our own town and our own living-in the decisions which may determine whether the American way of life can survive.

It would be a tragedy for life in Manchester itself, let alone what it might involve for our role in those problems which must be faced by everybody, i we should drift into a condition in which our community decisions on such questions were to be made along rigid, hardened political party lines.

It should be the first duty and responsibility of Manchester voters, of whatever party, to see to it, when the voting on these Charter revisions does come up, that they rescue the town, and the particular political party involved, from all the real and symbolic consequences of this Board of Education pro-alesmanship Opportunity Missed One cannot fail to remark, as the opportunity is revealed too late, how easy it might have been for Congress and the Post Office Department to sweeten the most controversial item in the new postal rates—the increase to the six cen

After the increase has been voted, and put into effect, Postmaster General D'Brien now reveals that his departmen has plans to formally acknowledge something it is already doing extensive ly in actual practice - give air mai service for the regular first class mail rate. Most first class mail already goe by air, it is said, without having to pay the 10 cent rate which guarantees it. By another year, the Department has a idea it can merge the airmail and first class mails into a single class, carried at a single rate.

It seems quite possible, then, that the Post Office Department and Congress had an opportunity to put the new six cent letter rate to the people not as an crease in the first class letter rate, but as a bargain decrease in the air mail letter rate. "For only a cent more," they could have been telling their customers, "you're about to get air mail handling for all your letters." This could have been applauded as a remarkable example of bureaucratic efficiency, and a rare once in a lifetime gift to the people. Best of all, it migh have given the Department time to print up a few six cent stamps before the rate increase went into effect, which would also have been efficiency.

Is Mr. Coffin Out Of Order? The Reverend William Sloane Coffin Jr., chaplain of Yale University, is no stranger to criticism. He does not have to be pushed into controversial matters. He jumps. He has been vocal and active in the cause of racial justice and equality. He has long and loudly found fault with our Vietnam policy. He has not confined himself to statements on age to violate draft laws. If convicted, he may go to prison. There is opinion to the effect that the government should not have sought his ndictment. Mr. Coffin himself does not share it. He deliberately did what the law forbids. His purpose was to test the law. He acknowledges that the government's action against him is legal and logical. But he challenges the constitutionality of the law, and more-he challenges its morality. A conviction, were it to eventuate, would presumably be

> Court. Should it be upheld by that bench of last resort, there would remain the contention that the law is in violation of morality. Neither legal vindication nor legal condemnation can still the appeal to conscience which Mr. Coffin is sound-The criticism directed against him is on various grounds. For example, he is said to be giving aid and comfort to Communists, foreign and domestic. This is undoubtedly true in a way. Hanoi has sent greetings to Americans opposing the Vietnam war. Its opponents here at home include Communists, and it is obthat Communists have inspire and controlled some demonstrations. But the aid and comfort to the Communists is accidental and relatively unimportant Mr. Coffin, as well as others like him, is not a creature or a tool of the Communists. He is in the mainstream of American and Christian tradition. He is sure that he is exercising rights and fulfilling duties which are inalienably his as an American and as a Christian, that he is bearing proper and obligatory wit-Or again, it is said that he is being unpatriotic and is contemptibly letting down our servicemen suffering and dying in cruel combat. Walter Lippmann has well put it that this is an unfair argument, one which is designed to suppress legitimate debate. Mr. Coffin's words and actions have not interfered with the prosecution of the war in the field. There is no evidence that his doings have in any way imperilled the safety of our forces or their morale. He is questioning the policy which puts our forces in Vietnam, and trying to stir up such questioning throughout the country The proponents of the war have no monopoly of patriotism. Unexamined policy may be extremely unpatriotic, as may be automatic agreement with what ever elected leaders decide to do. Indeed, it may be the higher, truer form of patriotism to insist on dinning and dramatizing the query whether our pol icy is really in the country's intrinsic and long range interest and really in conformity with the principles we do or

No. As we have previously remarked here, the Christian Church is taxed with irrelevancy, with not being alert to and concerned about vital issues in the contemporary world, of dodging the very difficulties which most grip men's minds, most trouble their hearts, most drastically affect their lives. Yet when a clergyman does speak and act on precisely such points, and especially when he does so in a manner forthright and provocative, he is immediately held by some to be flagrantly ing 1967, Mr. Johnson finds himout of his field. And the some include persons who at other times accuse the Christian Church of the stagnation and silence of indifference. We cannot vouch for the wisdom, immediate or ultimate,

A few other omissions, and the sketchiness of other key elements of the payments program, belie the Treasury's official claim that the tougher payments policy was started ast May with a Rose Garden speech by Mr. Johnson. Rather, devaluation of the British pound riggered wild gold speculation which so magnified the U.S. payments deficit and threatened the dollar itself that Washington was forced to act in an atmosphere close to panic. Moreover, in contrast to the universally favorable reaction to the Jan. 1 package there is growing undercurrent of criticism that the package was too hastily constructed. While everybody still agrees that strong action was needed to defend the dollar the details of the President's plan are now being assaulted by monetary experts

Although the border tax is supposed to provide revenue for a proposed export subsidy (also omitted from the Jan. 1 statement for lack of time), its major impact is protectionist.
