Behind Beard, a Dreamer

By CLEMENWELL YOUNG

The bearded bard spread across the pages in an issue of the Life Magazine some time last week to hand out prizes to un-degraded poets and to read his own work in the fifth annual Wallace Stevens Program.

"I can make a loan," Benny replied. "If he'd like it, he can have it. It's not me. I'm a very big fan of President Johnson."

The girls will meet from 1 to 3 p.m. and their discussion, with both boys and girls meeting together for the balance of the program beginning at 3 p.m.

Mrs. Dick will discuss the emotional, psychological and spiritual nature of man and woman during the afternoon and evening. A folk mass performed by a group from St. Mary's Church in New Britain will be held at 8:15 followed by supper and recreation at 8. The program resumes at 7:30 culminating in food, fun and song at 9:30. Sunday's schedule is devoted to students in the Junior and senior years of the school, and follows the above schedule beginning at 10 a.m. A special Mass for the youth will be held at 11:45.

Four Undecided Two Rescued Miners Likely to Go Back

HOMINY FALLS, N. Va. (AP) - "I expect I'll go back into the mine," said John Moore Jr., 46, of Blacksburg. "I've been a coal miner 17 years now. These things happen."

Moore was one of six men feared dead who were rescued from the Gauley Coal and Coke Co. No. 8 mine at 4 a.m. Thursday after spending 33 hours trapped underground in a flooded coal shaft. Another 15 abandoned mines, were rescued last Saturday.

Larry Lynch, 28, of Richwood, another of those feared dead, said he would go "wherever God calls me."

"If I can serve him best down in that mine I'll go down there," he said.

Joe E. Fitzwater, 33, of Rupert, Jennings H. Lilly, 26, of Mt. Neo; Edward F. Scarbro, 35, of Richwood, and Eugene H. Martin, 34, of Clintonville, said they had not yet made up their minds about going down again in the No. 8 mine.

The six men had been washed to points in the mine shaft that remained above the waterline. The Gauley No. 8 was one of nine active mines in Big Sewell Mountain—mines which provide the livelihood for residents of this tiny hamlet.

Opened in November, 1968, it produced 1,600 tons of coal daily.

Like others in West Virginia's eastern region, it is a "low mine"—its coal seams average only three feet high. The men who mine these hills earn about $27 a day hunched over on hands and knees.

They wear hard hats, knee pads and steel-toed boots, and sometimes have to crawl several miles to work in the low tunnels.

"Low mines" are generally considered more dangerous than the "high mines" of the southern region, where the tunnels average six to nine feet high. In the event of a fire or dangerous gas accumulation, a man on his hands and knees does not have enough time to escape.

In a flood, like that which gushed into the No. 8 with such disastrous results, a low mine can easily become a grave.

Memorial services will be held in area churches this Sunday for the four dead men.

Ottie Junior Walton, one of the first 15 miners rescued, said, "Mining is the only thing I rent."

Someone has to pay the SUGGESTION

NEW YORK (AP) - Mayor John V. Lindsay offered Wednesday a tongue-in-cheek suggestion on how his city might get more state aid and cooperation.

Addressing 500 new policemen, Lindsay said: "I sometimes think when I see New York's finest, with 30,000 troops, 12 police boats and five helicopters, that we ought to sail up to Albany and take over, because it is my job to constantly seek the resources we need."

Currently the City of New York is seeking legislative approval for an additional $50 million in taxing powers.

Aircraft Noise Control Approved for FAA
WASHINGTON AP — The Federal Aviation Authority, now powerless in this field, would be authorized to draw up regulations controlling aircraft noise under a bill approved by the House Commerce Committee.

The measure approved by the committee Thursday is backed by the administration. It would empower the FAA to set standards for measuring aircraft noise and sonic booms and draw up regulations to control them.

Guidelines the agency would have to observe in prescribing regulations would include whether they impaired safety and were economically feasible.

Vernon
The Rockville Rotary Club presented the 12th annual citizen of the year award to a fellow Rotarian at the annual dinner meeting last night at Ellington Ridge Country Club.

Lester Baum received the honor because he has "for years exemplified the ideals of leadership, service and achievement."

Announcement of the award committee Thursday is backed by the administration. It would empower the FAA to set standards for measuring aircraft noise and sonic booms and draw up regulations to control them.

Guidelines the agency would have to observe in prescribing regulations would include whether they impaired safety and were economically feasible.

Thomas Wolff who acted as master of ceremonies said there were 75 in a crowd that included whether they impaired safety and were economically feasible.

An chairman of the Redevelopment commission for many years, Baum has worked diligently to get the project underway. Ground was broken recently for the Tolland County courthouse.

In the citation it was noted, "Lester's efforts are going to result in a new look for this community and we are grateful to him for that."

Ralph Lipman was chairman of the selection committee and he was assisted by William Keller and Atty. Klaczak.

No Easy Time
What does the selection committee look for in choosing the citizen of the year? The qualifications are simply stated. The award is given to a man or woman who lives or works in Vernon, Tolland or Ellington and who has, through leadership, service and achievement, made an outstanding contribution to the community.

The selection committee said it did not have an easy time naming this year's winner. Several names were submitted for consideration. The committee expressed regret that the honoree could not be bestowed on each of the deserving people.

It pointed out, however, that said press officer Carl Barth.

In a joint communique issued by President Johnson and President Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia as they conferred Thursday, the Tunisian leader "expressed his understanding of America's aim in supporting the principle of national independence and self-determination in Southeast Asia."

MAHRC Elects Officers, Hears Report by Fendell

Mrs. John H. Kennedy Jr. of 21 Willard Rd. last night was elected president of the Manchester Association of Retarded Children (MAHRC) at its annual banquet and election of officers at the Village Lantern Barn. She succeeds Alfred J. Fendell.

Others elected are Mrs. Thomas Finnie, vice president; Mrs. Randolph Howe, recording secretary; Mrs. Eleanor Peterson, treasurer; Mrs. John Ladda, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Arnold Landberg, financial secretary; and Mrs. William Hoshorn, Mrs. Francis Matson and Sylvester Bosson, members of the board of directors.

About 120 attended the event, which was the 10th annual banquet of MAHRC. Guests of honor at the head table included the Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth R. Steere of Center Congregational Church, Edward Gaffney of the Mansfield Training School and Mrs. Doris Belting of The Herald.

Other guests at the event included teachers at Bunce Center and the Sheltered Workshop, and volunteer workers at both locations. Mrs. Hazel Finlay was especially commended for her volunteer work as an art teacher at the Sheltered Workshop, where she not only volunteers her services but provides materials for her class as well.

The newly elected president is a charter member and organizer of MAHRC and has served in practically all capacities "except as president or treasurer," Norman Fendell, past president of MAHRC, gave the annual report.

He began by saying, "since this is the year of the miniskirt I shall make sure that my talk will be long enough to cover the subject but short enough to be interesting."

During the past year, he said, the accomplishments of MAHRC "have been great in some areas and far too little in others." He outlined the pre-school program at Bunce Center which, he said, provides nursery school experience for younger retardates in preparation for many of them for eventual admission to public school special classes.

"A major objective of the Bunce Center Program," Fendell said, "is to serve retarded children who do not fit into or are not discovered — members of MAHRC "end at least one representative of the family to monthly meetings of the association. I recommend that you be concerned with meeting the unmet needs of the retarded in this area. Mental retardation is a community project and problem, and affects all parts of our society. It is both child centered and parent centered. For the child, it is hoped that he can be helped to reach his highest potential of functioning, through a program designed to meet his individual needs. For each retarded child, an opportunity for care and training will not only increase his worth as an individual but also show the community's recognition of his dignity and right to training for daily living as well as preparation for learning."

Fendell also mentioned that 23 retarded clients were now being trained at the Sheltered Workshop, now in its third year of operation. "Our basic philosophy at the workshop," he said, "is that every retarded client should be given the opportunity to develop his full potential."

"Institutionalization," he said, "is only one of a wide variety of ways in which care of the retarded away from the family may be provided. The greater availability and quality of services within the community, the less the need for institutionalization. In my opinion, Manchester is the most logical location in the state for a regional center."

The annual report also included the fact that Fendell will speak on the Foster Grandparents Plan at an International

Mrs. John H. Kennedy Jr. of 21 Willard Rd. last night was elected president of the Manchester Association of Retarded Children (MAHRC) at its annual banquet and election of officers at the Village Lantern Barn. She succeeds Alfred J. Fendell.

Others elected are Mrs. Thomas Finnie, vice president; Mrs. Randolph Howe, recording secretary; Mrs. Eleanor Peterson, treasurer; Mrs. John Ladda, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Arnold Landberg, financial secretary; and Mrs. William Hoshorn, Mrs. Francis Matson and Sylvester Bosson, members of the board of directors.

About 120 attended the event, which was the 10th annual banquet of MAHRC. Guests of honor at the head table included the Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth R. Steere of Center Congregational Church, Edward Gaffney of the Mansfield Training School and Mrs. Doris Belting of The Herald.

Other guests at the event included teachers at Bunce Center and the Sheltered Workshop, and volunteer workers at both locations. Mrs. Hazel Finlay was especially commended for her volunteer work as an art teacher at the Sheltered Workshop, where she not only volunteers her services but provides materials for her class as well.

The newly elected president is a charter member and organizer of MAHRC and has served in practically all capacities "except as president or treasurer," Norman Fendell, past president of MAHRC, gave the annual report.

He began by saying, "since this is the year of the miniskirt I shall make sure that my talk will be long enough to cover the subject but short enough to be interesting."

During the past year, he said, the accomplishments of MAHRC "have been great in some areas and far too little in others." He outlined the pre-school program at Bunce Center which, he said, provides nursery school experience for younger retardates in preparation for many of them for eventual admission to public school special classes.

"A major objective of the Bunce Center Program," Fendell said, "is to serve retarded children who do not fit into or are not discovered — members of MAHRC "end at least one representative of the family to monthly meetings of the association. I recommend that you be concerned with meeting the unmet needs of the retarded in this area. Mental retardation is a community project and problem, and affects all parts of our society. The best thinking of labor, industry, the professions, and the

are acceptable to existing programs. Such an objective implies a continuously shifting and changing program. A dual philosophy underlies the operation of Bunce Center. It is both child centered and parent centered. For the child, it is hoped that he can be helped to reach his highest potential of functioning, through a program designed to meet his individual needs. For each retarded child, an opportunity for care and training will not only increase his worth as an individual but also show the community's recognition of his dignity and right to training for daily living as well as preparation for learning."

Fendell also mentioned that 23 retarded clients were now being trained at the Sheltered Workshop, now in its third year of operation. "Our basic philosophy at the workshop," he said, "is that every retarded client should be given the opportunity to develop his full potential."

"Institutionalization," he said, "is only one of a wide variety of ways in which care of the retarded away from the family may be provided. The greater availability and quality of services within the community, the less the need for institutionalization. In my opinion, Manchester is the most logical location in the state for a regional center."

The annual report also included the fact that Fendell will speak on the Foster Grandparents Plan at an International local citizens must be brought to bear on this problem. It is too significant a problem and too tough a challenge to be left to a few specialists and other interested persons."

Entertainment was provided after the meeting. "The Village Chorus," a quartet from the Mountain Laurel Chapter of Sweet Adelines, sang. Theodore Fairbanks played the organ before the dinner and for group singing afterward.

Withdrawal Power

There is still some small room for sanity and logic in this world of our madly mad.

Creation comment is beginning to discover that President Johnson actually strengthened himself, rather than lame-ducked himself, with his twin anti-scientists.

For a time, we were treated to superficial judgments that, by taking himself out of the race, the President had destroyed his own power for the very policy objects he had in mind.

These superficial judgments ignored any possible importance for elements of power which might be founded in moral strength.

They were, in fact, the same kind of superficial judgments which, only a few weeks before, had been the focal point of Senator McCarthy's own view of entering the New Hampshire primary.

To us, it seemed logical and inevitable, from the moment of the President's announcement, that he had suddenly increased and magnified his own power as a leader many times over what it had been before.

And nothing seemed more cruel than the verdict of so many southerners that the President, by his course and inevitable had taken a default course of dividing influence for himself.

Now, as we note, a sounder and more encouraging reassessment is taking place.

Max Frontol of the New York Times quotes the President himself in a somewhat humorous appraisal of his new estate.

"The White House correspondent" dined the other night, "may even call you a statesman. Walter Lippman may think you are but I can't quite bring himself to say it."

Frankel himself continues, this way: "It is not just in that one of the things that have started to happen since the President stepped out of President's and his "great tactical flexibility in the developing talks with North Vietnam."

Perhaps the most truly remarkable thing about this evolving assessment of the President's power is that it is being made by people who do accept the President's retirement decision as a final thing. It is, therefore, very definitely power of the moral, intangible kind they are conceding him. Perhaps people in public life should try that kind of power more often, not merely to retire by, but as an occasional fuel for careers they intend to continue.

To Step Into Something Simple

It may be that, just as scientific progress in general has been so accelerated in recent years that the discoveries and accomplishments of the last few decades can be said to equal all the previous progress of mankind, so we are at the beginning of a development which will speed up the evolution of the science of clothing eliminating the steps of cutting and sewing.

Other experimental developments in the news indicate that one feature of such a dress could be an inflatable portion which would form a chair for the lady to rest upon whenever she wanted to press the right button, so the dress includes one piece garment of the future may also include a portable chair.

Still another adventurous experiment in trying to get out so that anybody could wear a new garment can step into an upright cloth shell, twist about, and by one's own convolutions gather to one's frame something tailor-ordered and ready to wear.

All this restless experimentation in the direction of relating clothes more directly and sensibly and harmoniously to people and to the world they live in is welcome stuff. We look forward to the day or a year or a lifetime by stepping into something simple, and that will be the end of the clothes problem.

Unwanted Subscriptions

In the near future somewhat more than 200,000 of the 400,000 subscribers to the Saturday Evening Post (no relative of this newspaper) will be informed that the magazine is unilaterally terminating its connection with them. The disclosure that they have been banished from the circulation lists will, of course, be accompanied by reimbursement for the unfilled term of their subscriptions. This reversal in the traditional relationship between publication and customer can only be described as revolutionary. The phrase "I don't want to see that damn thing in my home again"—is an ancient American battle-cry, applied to magazine and newspaper alike by frustrated families on many occasions. But never in anyone's memory have the owners of an existing journal engaged in a mass execution of readers whose subscriptions were unexpired.

There is apparently no mystery of motivation behind this remarkable act of violence. In a desperate effort to achieve financial stability, the SEP's latest "new team" has decided that it must seek "quality" rather than quantity in its subscription roster. With rising costs of production, the objective is to acquire an audience whose income levels impress prospective advertisers. Computers are available to identify the residents of the lower brackets who are to be stricken from the rolls in the purge.

It is hardly my province to question the fiscal wisdom involved in this step; neither do I see any crucial civil liberties issue at stake. The magazine will continue to be sold on the newsstands and any scorned subscribers who cannot live without it will be able to sustain the habit by buying individual copies or rushing to the Public Library for free subscription.

What concerns me—as it must the bigger minds at Curtis—is how the new will be broken to faithful fans who, through no fault of their own, are of social and financial status, are about to be cut off from the continued receipt of the SEP through the mails.

I assume that the Curtis establishment, in order to carry the deadly cancellation notices, one is tempted to imagine the eagerness of the link between Mrs. Myrtle Jones receives the envoy.

"Good morning, Mrs. Jones, I'm from the Saturday Evening Post—I have a letter for you."

"That's very nice, but it really isn't necessary—we've very old subscribers and we renew regularly every year."

"That, you see, is the problem, Mrs. Jones."

"You mean Tom let the subscription run out? He's getting so absent-minded. I'll take care of it right away."

"That isn't it, Mrs. Jones. I'm afraid we have to cancel your subscription. It's part of a new program at the magazine office."

"Now, young man, please stop playing jokes. I'm a very busy woman; I haven't time to do my shopping yet."

"But it's true, they've asked me to read the letter to you."

"I've never heard of such nonsense. For years I've been turning young men like you away from my door, peddling all sorts of magazines that don't interest me. You're saying the Saturday Evening Post is taking up my subscription?"

"No, just terminating it. Of course we'll pay you back for the issues you've received."

"And why were we chosen for this special recognition?"

"Oh, it's all explained in the letter—it's really not just you, it's many, many others, too. It's a matter of economics and costs. . . . We are all deeply sorry, and I am here to express the company's very deep regrets."

"Well, really on the basis of income and you see, advertiser appeal. . . . It's very complicated. I think we may be able to arrange to transfer your subscription to you transfer my subscription? After all the years we've been sending our checks in, even some times when we really couldn't afford it? . . . Now you say we're off the list because we're not rich enough. It's humiliating, I wouldn't read it."

"I assure you, madam, that we have no intention of revealing the names of those subscribers who have been so graciously cancelled. That will remain our secret. We are doing everything possible to spare you any embarrassment."

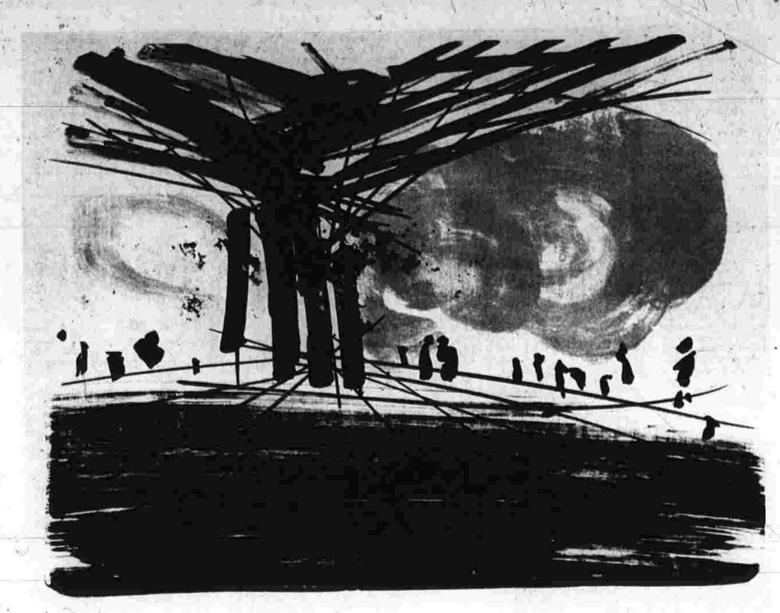

"That's very fine of you, but I couldn't care less. . . . I at least leave the letter with you?"

"Bye-bye, madam, if that letter was signed by Benjamin Franklin himself, I wouldn't read it."

"Just doing my job."

"Yes, young man, I know. You probably even read the magazine. But you're really my husband wasn't around when you brought us this new one. He has a very bad temper. He never liked that magazine, anyway. He won't even notice that you've left us."

"Oh, I am relieved to hear that, Mrs. Jones. I do hope you realize there is nothing personal about all this." JAMES A. WECHSLER IN THE NEW YORK POST

Inside Report

by Rowland Evans Jr. and Robert D. Novak

WASHINGTON—Although no final decision has been reached, the search for the Pentagon in 1968.

Coupled with this demand Dr. Kirk was the threat of total disruption of the university if the demand wasn't met. That's exactly what happened.

Having made dramatic gains in its war against IDA, the SDS is now preparing to improve its will on other aspects of the relationship between national security and the academic community.

One target is the Reserve Officer Training Program (ROTC), which enables students to take part-time military training.

After graduation, the students go on to officer training schools in the Army, Navy, or Air Force and gets a commission. Defense officials are now deeply worried that the success of the student campaign against IDA may stimulate an all-out war against ROTC.

Another demand being made on university administrators is that endowments—running into the hundreds of millions of dollars—must not be invested in "war-mongering" companies.

Considering the broad spectrum of "defense contracts" within the U. S. economy, that takes in most of the nation's major producers.

Although some universities undoubtedly have failed to give their student bodies a large enough share of administrative power, officials here regard the trend toward capitulation to such demands as both as dangerous and as certain.

But if severing this link would be a body blow to the national security, it is a preview of what runaway student power, joined by militant, young faculty members, may be able to do in other areas connected to national defense.

Even before the Columbia outbreak, two of the IDA-linked universities were told by faculty committees that they must disassociate from IDA. This was the main subject at the last trustees meeting of IDA in March, and it was at the same meeting that Dr. Grayson Kirk of Columbia first informed the trustees that his own campus was on the verge of an explosion over the IDA.

A tentative decision taken at that meeting would have given the university presidents power to name one trustee each to sit on the IDA board, with the presidents themselves stepping off. But the student newspaper at the University of Chicago, under heavy SDS influence, refused to accept that compromise. The University of Chicago thereupon became the first of the 12 to end its association with IDA.

How far the SDS would like to push its campaign to deprive the Defense Department of the intellectual stimulus of the universities can be only understood by reading its demands. Mark Rudd, head of the Columbia chapter of SDS, wrote Dr. Kirk in March that "all Columbia military-intellectuals" . . . Rudd made the astonishing assertion in that letter that "academic freedom does not include the freedom to perform secret research for the Pentagon in 1968."

Parental permissiveness makes the fact that parents had no particular moral norms to pass on to their children clear, but no moral values, coming to me and saying that they don't know what's wrong with their youngsters."

So this generation is simply doing what comes naturally. In the names of freedom and democracy, they are destroying everything while experimenting with new drugs, and exotic orientals philosophies. Perhaps they are trying to find their own norms of conduct. We pray that, in their search for something stable, something unchanging, they are destroying everything that we have built. In 1792, the New York Stock Exchange was founded.

Dr. Benjamin B. Wolman, dean of the Institute of Applied Psychology and professor of psychology at Long Island University, spoke as follows: "The new generation is rebelling against the nothingness of the suburbs. What's wrong is that the parents are leading hollow, empty, shallow lives, and not giving their children anything to hold onto. Parental permissiveness makes the fact that parents had no particular moral norms to pass on to their children clear, but no moral values, coming to me and saying that they don't know what's wrong with their youngsters."

So this generation is simply doing what comes naturally. In the names of freedom and democracy, they are destroying everything while experimenting with new drugs, and exotic orientals philosophies. Perhaps they are trying to find their own norms of conduct. We pray that, in their search for something stable, something unchanging, they are destroying everything that we have built. The God they claim they have buried.

Regionalism Deferred?

To the Editor,

Running through all the statements and letters opposing the Project Concern in Manchester is the thread of a single argument: The fear of "regionalism."

I would suggest that approval of Project Concern has taken a step toward the solution of these problems and a step away from regionalism by fiat.

"The Issue At Hand"

To the Editor,

Since when does voting "yes" or "no" at the polls on any issue make you "Moral" or not, "charitable" or not or worse, label you as "racist," "bigot" and "liar"?

The issue at hand was not whether or not we cared enough about our fellow man to educate 62 underprivileged inner-city children but whether we would support basing in any form which has become a fact in many communities.

Most of us who voted "no" honestly believe that Project Concern is just the "foot in the door" needed to allow school boards to solve their problems by busing between cities in the near future.

When this question was put to the League of Women Voters representative at a meeting in a neighborhood home we were assured that such legislation could not be passed without a vote. What a farce this has become since the results of Monday's vote by the school board.

Help for the underprivileged should be given by churches and civic groups instead of by local and federal governments. Then it truly would be a charitable undertaking.

Our two local parochial schools have pioneered in this effort at our own expense, which parishioners will soon be asked not forced to share.

Now we shall stand up and be counted.

Respectfully,
Mrs. D. J. O'Connell

France Unrest Threatens To Spread to TV, Radio

PARIS (AP) — France's student-worker unrest threatened today to spread to the national radio-television network. Despite a television appeal to Frenchmen by Premier Georges Pompidou to "show that you refuse anarchy," no slowing of the movement was in sight. The government called up police reserves to add to the big force already in Paris but kept the gendarmes at a discreet distance from the occupied University of Paris and factories to avoid a repetition of last week's street battles.

In brief, this was the situation: Classes were still halted in most French universities. Students held meetings in classrooms and auditoriums, railing against the established order but undecided on what they wanted to replace it. Striking workers occupied four plants of the nationalized Renault automobile company, France's biggest employer with some 80,000 workers. Newspaper sales in Paris were disrupted by a strike of the central distribution system. The papers were printed but were left at the plants. The personnel committees of the Office for French Radio and Television called a general assembly to vote on an unlimited strike. The principal demand is for independence from control by the ministries of information and finance. Workers held the state-owned Renault-aviation plant at Nantes for the fourth day, and the regional director of the company was a prisoner inside. The main radio-television network, where most work is done on the Pompidou and the Concordat aeroplane transport was not affected. The striking workers want better job security, shorter working hours and higher pay, and their support for the students has been only token since the huge demonstration in Paris Monday protesting the police brutality last week. President Charles de Gaulle continued his state visit to Romania and a spokesman said he would not cut it short. He is due back Sunday, and Pompidou said he had spoken with him by telephone. While there was no sign police would try to clear the occupied factories and universities the government mobilized about 10,000 police reserves to help Extra police cordoned off the Eiffel Tower, the Paris Opera and the government TV studios to prevent demonstrators from seizing them. But defiant students broke padlocks on the Odeon Theater and reoccupied parts of it.

Golf Team Swings into Action with A Cut, a Birdie and a Shout of Fore

Once again golf clubs are swinging and the cry of "fore" is heard as the MEHS Golf Team opened its 1968 season at West Hartford, taking on Hill High School and Bristol Eastern High School, the golfers defeated Hill, 3-1, but lost to Bristol Eastern, 3-2. Fred Marshall posted a fine 81 on his par 73 course.

The Indians then went to Meriden Municipal golf course on May 2 to contest Fitch High and Concord High. Again they lost the decision by defeating Fitch, 4-1, and losing to Concord, 4-1-1/2. Contributing to the golf team's efforts were Tom Crockett, Carl Wainman, John Road, Jim Becker, and Bud Duder. On most afternoons the MEHS Golf team can be found at the Manchester Country Club as they prepare for their future O.C.L.L. matches.

No Senior Skip

Manchester High School does not have any Senior Skip Day. Students who are absent whether they are Seniors, Juniors, or Sophomores will be bound by the attendance rules as published in the Student Handbook. Wash-In For Student Recently, a dozen or so members of the MEHS Student Council, received a check for $50 for washing windows of the Manchester High School. The council received this money from the hospital's admission office and they will be able to use it for a worthwhile fund-raising project.

Compromise Expected to End Bombing sort of thing that they are doing, and they have got to indicate specifically they are ready to re-establish the zone before we negotiate with the enemy to achieve that de-escalation." Harriman's words indicated that the United States would in fact accept a compromise on the settlement on genuine demilitarization of the DMZ as a condition for ending the rest of the attacks on North Vietnam. Officials said he was not interpreting any new condition to the talks but making clear the protection the United States wants for American and allied troops near the North-South border, if all attacks on the North are to be stopped. The more hopeful U.S. and French diplomats believe a compromise will give the enemy the form of a secret understanding that if Johnson would "unconditionally" stop the bombing and "all other acts of war" North Vietnam would then scale down military operations.

End of the Line
Another protest in the walk to the second time in the last two years, won't hold any longer because it was against the judgment of the umpire.
Dillon Jones beat out a pinch hitter over the mound, scoring a run. Reggie Smith's line drive hit the right field fence for a home run.

Error Opens Big Eighth Inning Rally
Junior High Program Needed

BOSTON (AP)—Shades of 1967 the Boston Red Sox, who scrambled and clawed their way to the American League pennant last year, are at it again.
The Red Sox capitalized on an error, three solid hits, an infield single, walks, a sacrifice fly and a suicide squeeze bunt for six runs in the eighth inning Thursday night in overwhelming New York Yankees for an 11-10 victory.

Here in There
Frommen with the Boston Red Sox team have been in the clubhouse for two days.
Both have played in all 112 regular season games since the '67 season was organized.

Frank Howard led the Yankees in the eighth inning, but he was out of the game with a big crowd (22,679) on hand.

Spot Open on Roster For Lonborg Return

BOSTON (AP)—The spot is open on the Boston Red Sox roster for the return of Jim Lonborg, but spring training muscle twinges are going to keep the right-handed ace sidelined a little longer.
The Red Sox made room for Lonborg by plugging southpaw Gary Roggenburr on the 60-day emergency disabled list Thursday.

Lonborg, the 1967 Cy Young Award winner who posted 23 victories in helping the Red Sox to the American League pennant, hurried batting practice for eight minutes, throwing about 50 pitches.

Lonborg agreed with manager Tom Yawkey that he would be ready to go back to the mound in about a week, but he's not sure he can handle the pressure of a comeback.

Lonborg's return would be a major boost for the Red Sox, who are looking for a playoff berth in the American League East.
