Plot To Kill Daley Seen In Chicago

CHICAGO (AP)—Police say additional arrests are expected in connection with an alleged plot to assassinate Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago and the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson, a Negro leader and head of Operation Breadbasket.

The alleged plot was revealed Monday when two black militants—Earl P. Dillard, 37, and Howard Harris, 35—were charged with soliciting to kill Daley and Jackson.

They were arrested on Saturday five days after two other black militants also were charged with soliciting to commit murder.

Police declined to link the alleged plot to a state's attorney general's office, which is investigating a plot to assassinate Sen. Charles Whittaker, 55, of Illinois.

The phrase undoubtedly set the tone for his own leadership, and for that psychological national response, which helped this proud country live through those depression days when so many of our certainties had collapsed on us. Today we find in the news a paraphrase of the Rooseveltian remark, using the word "hope" instead of the word "fear," and coming from one Jacques Monod, a French Nobel Prize scientist who is famous for having "cracked the code of life."

Having "cracked the code," Mr. Monod holds that everything exists as a result of pure chance, on the one hand, to start anything going, and of necessity, through Darwinian selection, on the other. Thus, there is no master plan of creation involved, and no proclaimed duty or destiny for man himself. There is no intention in the universe and man himself is just an accident, and the whole business might just as well never have begun.

Finding himself in such a situation, what does man do? Merely despair? It is in his answer to that question that Mr. Monod formulates his own little theory, comparable to President Roosevelt's. "We have no right," says the French biologist, "to have no hope, because if we have no hope, there is no hope." What shall we hope about, or for? Well, since we are here by the merest chance, and it wouldn't matter much if we weren't even here, and since there is no authority anywhere which sets up what we should try to do or what values we should follow, we are, after all, quite free to do as we please. We have total free choice.

In such a situation, what does Mr. Monod himself choose? He wants what he calls a "stable-state society" in which we could keep other population growth or technological progress from running away with us, and he wants the "destruction of nuclear stockpiles." To climb toward the summit of our potentialities. We try to climb, no matter how much we keep slipping back as we try to achieve this will, he believes, call for "some form of world authority."

Why try to work for something like that? Because, although by accident, in a world which has no plan, we ourselves cannot resist trying to climb, not so much because the mountain is there, but because we are. Where does this bring us? Back to the beginning. "We have no right, there is no hope. . . if we have no hope, there is no hope."

The answer is that we have all been forced to admit that the Nixon Administration's effort to achieve a nice balance which would protect both the value of the dollar and a property level for jobs has somehow failed. What is more, it has to be admitted that, as the effort to balance the two objectives has failed, the result of the failure has been incredibly cruel. The number of jobs has gone down, but the amount of inflation has continued upward. This happens to be precisely the opposite of what we were seeking to accomplish.

We do not know precisely what went wrong. The Nixon Administration's original plan of battle seemed sound. One of the potential policy tragedies of our time centers, in fact, on the possibility that perhaps the Nixon Administration's original plan was working, and would have worked, if we could have held it a few months more without finching. But it is hard to blame anybody for finching, as the hardship of joblessness began spreading. Finch we all did, the Nixon Administration included, last fall, when the first deliberate move to feed tonic to the economy, no matter whether the tonic happened to be inflationary in nature, were taken. Since then, we have had lip service for the battle against inflation, and monthly claims do not really mean what the figures say. The loss of jobs and get some who have already lost their job back to work.

Now to talk of a tax cut is to consider going all the way—all the way to an openly inflationary policy which would, we hope, release money which would, it would be hoped, trickle down into job-creating channels. What disturbs us most is that all this progress from one policy to another and from one objective to another has been accompanied, all along, by the advice and support of respectable professional economists, supposed experts in the business of forecasting our economy, and supposedly qualified, if anybody would be, to try to manage it.

"The Only Hope Is Hope" The only thing we have to fear," Franklin D. Roosevelt said once, "is fear itself."

Full Circle On Inflation? The latest reports on the economic front out of Washington are to the effect that the Nixon Administration has now begun to weigh the possible advantages of a tax cut.

If these reports are credible, they mean that the government is now completely full circle, we have come back to what began as a battle against inflation.

Even to think a tax cut is to think in an inflationary way. What has happened, then? Was not inflation an evil, threatening thing when we first set out to control it? Does it not threaten just as much immediate damage to the people on fixed incomes and to the elderly, and just as much long range damage to the soundness of the economy, as it ever did?

How can it be possible for an administration which began by pledging its efforts to shut down on inflation to come to a point where it is even considering helping inflation open up again? We all know the answer. It is that temporarily we have come to fear something else—unemployment—more than we fear ballooning prices, wages and living expenses.

The answer is that we have all been forced to admit that the Nixon Administration's effort to achieve a nice balance which would protect both the value of the dollar and a property level for jobs has somehow failed. What is more, it has to be admitted that, as the effort to balance the two objectives has failed, the result of the failure has been incredibly cruel. Why try to work for something like that? Because, although by accident, in a world which has no plan, we ourselves cannot resist trying to climb, not so much because the mountain is there, but because we are. Where does this bring us? Back to the beginning. "We have no right, there is no hope. . . if we have no hope, there is no hope."

The answer is that we have all been forced to admit that the Nixon Administration's effort to achieve a nice balance which would protect both the value of the dollar and a property level for jobs has somehow failed. What is more, it has to be admitted that, as the effort to balance the two objectives has failed, the result of the failure has been incredibly cruel. The number of jobs has gone down, but the amount of inflation has continued upward. This happens to be precisely the opposite of what we were seeking to accomplish.

We do not know precisely what went wrong. The Nixon Administration's original plan of battle seemed sound. One of the potential policy tragedies of our time centers, in fact, on the possibility that perhaps the Nixon Administration's original plan was working, and would have worked, if we could have held it a few months more without finching. But it is hard to blame anybody for finching, as the hardship of joblessness began spreading. Finch we all did, the Nixon Administration included, last fall, when the first deliberate move to feed tonic to the economy, no matter whether the tonic happened to be inflationary in nature, were taken. Since then, we have had lip service for the battle against inflation, and monthly claims do not really mean what the figures say. The loss of jobs and get some who have already lost their job back to work.

Now to talk of a tax cut is to consider going all the way—all the way to an openly inflationary policy which would, we hope, release money which would, it would be hoped, trickle down into job-creating channels. What disturbs us most is that all this progress from one policy to another and from one objective to another has been accompanied, all along, by the advice and support of respectable professional economists, supposed experts in the business of forecasting our economy, and supposedly qualified, if anybody would be, to try to manage it.

"The Only Hope Is Hope" The only thing we have to fear," Franklin D. Roosevelt said once, "is fear itself."

The phrase undoubtedly set the tone for his own leadership, and for that psychological national response, which helped this proud country live through those depression days when so many of our certainties had collapsed on us. Today we find in the news a paraphrase of the Rooseveltian remark, using the word "hope" instead of the word "fear," and coming from one Jacques Monod, a French Nobel Prize scientist who is famous for having "cracked the code of life."

Having "cracked the code," Mr. Monod holds that everything exists as a result of pure chance, on the one hand, to start anything going, and of necessity, through Darwinian selection, on the other. Thus, there is no master plan of creation involved, and no proclaimed duty or destiny for man himself. There is no intention in the universe and man himself is just an accident, and the whole business might just as well never have begun.

Finding himself in such a situation, what does man do? Merely despair? It is in his answer to that question that Mr. Monod formulates his own little theory, comparable to President Roosevelt's. "We have no right," says the French biologist, "to have no hope, because if we have no hope, there is no hope." What shall we hope about, or for? Well, since we are here by the merest chance, and it wouldn't matter much if we weren't even here, and since there is no authority anywhere which sets up what we should try to do or what values we should follow, we are, after all, quite free to do as we please. We have total free choice.

In such a situation, what does Mr. Monod himself choose? He wants what he calls a "stable-state society" in which we could keep other population growth or technological progress from running away with us, and he wants the "destruction of nuclear stockpiles." To climb toward the summit of our potentialities. We try to climb, no matter how much we keep slipping back as we try to achieve this will, he believes, call for "some form of world authority."

Why try to work for something like that? Because, although by accident, in a world which has no plan, we ourselves cannot resist trying to climb, not so much because the mountain is there, but because we are. Where does this bring us? Back to the beginning. "We have no right, there is no hope. . . if we have no hope, there is no hope."

NATCHAUG RIVER AT CHAPLAIN, LOOKING TOWARD EASTFOOT

Connecticut Yankee

By A.H.O.

Earlier in the season, they trooped down out of the Litchfield Hills, across the young manhood of J. Henry Hornback, determined to keep the public utility empire he godfathered from drawing new designs across the natural inheritance of western Connecticut.

The other day they trooped in from mid-eastern Connecticut, in defense of the perpetual possibility of one single river. They have been in Capitol Hill for other hearings on other matters too numerous for us to cover.

They are the largest, most dependable, most insistent lobby of the 1971 session.

For each new issue, in each new location, they draw out fresh local talents.

But there are a few key leaders who are state officers in various organizations of similar cause, seem to appear and reappear regularly at one hearing after another.

It is, of course, the lobby of the ecologists, or the environmentalists, or the wildlifers, or the open spaces, or the well-landers, inland and coastal.

They were, the other day, in Hartford to defend the Salmon River from the threat of displacement from a sewage treatment plant the Borough of Colchester has been attempting to build. By the time they had got through they had probably won their battle against that.

What we mean to say is that their eloquent, poetic, sparkling description of the present natural beauty of the Salmon River coupled with their repeated and in this day almost unbelievable assertion that the water of this river now bears the official classification of "fit to drink," was probably of great value.

Some men, like Rogers C.B. Morton, when he was Republican National Chairman—have also seemed sincerely convinced that increasing the opportunities for opposition party response would diminish the presidency and drug the chief executive into matters of high statecraft.

That fear seems exaggerated, indeed, an opposition that is not a substantive discussion of the issue, would almost surely risk public condemnation.

Expansion of the opposition party's access to television is a step toward responsible politics and a major step, at that, not toward destructive partisanship.

One reason that no one speaks up is that there is rarely a time between elections when the opposition must speak. Equal time on television with the president, at regular intervals, would provide the incentive for creating policy-making process in the opposition party.

Finally, such a custom would serve the public interest by putting issues in the forefront of the political debate. Too many recent campaigns have seen the issues shoved aside by showmanship, slogans and spectacular spending.

Many voters have despaired of the Christ's Hope.

In my stead the Savior stood, My name upon His brow The "thorns," the tears, His hands, His feet, The sacrifice complete.

In my stead for sin alone The God of mercy moved, My debt to pay, His blood atones, Triumphant in my stead.

Grace and power thy Word declaring, By the Cross gives full supply, Grace and power for all desires, Christ the Lord, will not deny.

Hope is now while time shall last, Our awakened souls prepare; God's alone our all to cast, Where time knows no care. Cecil Kille

Junior Women Sponsor Sale

The Manchester Junior Women's Club will sponsor a rummage and garage sale Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. at the garage of Mrs. Earle Everett of 327 S. Main St.

Items to be offered have been collected from over 50 area homes and include baby and toddler clothes, adult clothing, toys, books, furniture and miscellaneous household items.

Persons wishing to donate items may contact Mrs. Ernest Everett of Berkley Dr., Vernon for pickup.

Proceeds from the garage sale will go toward a new incubator for Manchester Memorial Hospital and for athletic equipment for the Big Brother program.

In the event of rain the sale will be Sunday. Shoppers are urged to park on Fern St. to eliminate traffic problems.
