Ban Off-Track Betting In Town, Says Genovesi

By SOL R. COHEN (Herald Reporter) Anticipating that Gov. Meskall will sign into law the legislation which would ban off-track betting in the state, Genovesi is urging the adoption of a local ordinance to ban off-track betting in Manchester.

He said there is little evidence to support claims of some backers of the bill that legalized gambling drives out the underworld. "Don't fool yourself into thinking that if our state allows horse racing and off-track betting we will be able to keep the mobsters out," he cautioned.

Tollard Negotiations Hindered By Referendum

Last week's referendum ordering an additional $90,000 out of the school budget has been cited by the Tollard Education Association and the school board negotiating teams as the reason for the TEA's decision to seek state mediation on the teacher's contract.

In a joint release yesterday the TEA and school board negotiating teams outlined briefly the negotiating process to date concluding with the statement on June 10 that the TEA wrote to the State Board of Education requesting mediation, since it felt further negotiations were in view of the cuts made by the town in the board's budget.

The contract negotiations were almost approved at two separate times, once in March and again in May. The actual negotiations sessions were started on Nov. 30, 1970 in the hopes of obtaining an early settlement.

On March 9, at the conclusion of 12 meetings, an agreement was reached between the negotiating teams. This agreement was rejected by the teachers on March 19, consequently it was never acted upon by the school board which had scheduled it for a March 17 meeting.

Additional meetings were held in an effort to resolve those items unsatisfactory to the teachers and on April 15 the TEA negotiating team advised the board of its acceptance of proposals previously discussed.

On May 4, the teachers formally approved the agreement, which the board was to act upon at its meeting May 5. It was at the May 5 meeting however that the board received unofficial word of a pending additional $90,000 cut in its proposed budget ordered by the Board of Education.

The school board felt the cut would make it impossible to implement the agreement negotiated and voted not to accept the agreement, offering instead to meet the following week to discuss the matter.

Further meetings were deferred until after the town meeting on May 17 and although a meeting was held June 1, it was evident that any action on the part of the board to accept the results of the town referendum June 3.

Sheinwold on Bridge

NO THOUGH WASTED IN PLAY AT BRIDGE BY ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Most bridge hands are played quite quickly in ordinary rubber bridge. You win a trick as soon as you can, you draw trumps, you go after a long suit of some kind, and you score it up and go on to the next hand. It is this that is the wrong line of play, at least you can truthfully claim that you wasted no thought on it.

South wanted neither north nor time on today's hand. He took the first trick with dummy's QJ. What do you say? Answer: Bid 5-N. You have 10 points, and your partner has 10 to 15 for his bid. The total should be 20 to 26 points, enough to provide a good play for game.

Old-Fashioned Economics Again?

We quote, because we like both the writing and the optimistic inferences, Alfred L. Malabar, Jr., on the business outlook, in the Wall Street Journal last Monday:

"Back in the mid-1960s, some economists and politicians in Washington declared that the U. S. economy had entered a 'new era' in which the traditional business cycle of expansion-contraction-expansion was dead. Henceforth, these optimists proclaimed, business activity would perpetually expand, under the aegis of government of federal experts, without any nasty old recessions to spoil the fun. Events since 1969, of course, have made painfully clear that the business cycle remains very much alive. The prestigious National Bureau of Economic Research, for example, recently concluded that the long 1961-69 expansion ended in November 1969. The business cycle has returned to its normal November 1969 and November 1970 'chained' recession occurred, the 27th full-fledged slump in U. S. business history.

"The fact that the business cycle lives on," Malabar continues, "may be disheartening news to any glib soul who believed all that talk back in the mid-1960s about a new era of recession-proof prosperity. That anyone with a modicum of skepticism about new era shouldn't be at all surprised or upset that the business cycle is still with us. Indeed, the fact that it is alive and kicking should provide a considerable degree of comfort to any faint hearts who may be nervously wondering just where the 1971 economy is heading.

"In recent days, all sorts of fears have been expressed that business might be falling into trouble again. The worries have been well-publicized: Interest rates are too high for continued business recovery, or consumer spending plans are too low for continued business recovery, or something else is the matter.

"But very little has been said about the central fact of today's business scene: the 1969-1970 recession ended more than six months ago and the economy, still firmly in the grip of the business cycle, is in an expansion phase."

Malabar's analysis then goes into detail in which he seeks to prove, by past statistics, that the present condition of interest rates and consumer spending indicators is not abnormal for the early phase of a new business expansion.

No amount of theorizing is likely to convince the individual who is out of a job, or the small manufacturer who finds his own volume of business still shrinking even after signs of turnaround have appeared for the industrial giants who used to be his basic clients.

And there are others among us who will still regret that nobody has ever found that way to "fine-tune" the economy so it never takes recession again.

But there is some comfort in the possibility that, even if the old-fashioned disease has hit us, the old-fashioned cure may also still be around, and the convalescence already under way, even if we don't quite feel like running a hundred yard dash.

The "Starving" Reversed
For some time now it has been obvious that the only people who are still excited over dirty movies are those crusaders who would like to be able to deny to all their fellow citizens the right to see such movies if they so pleased. There is quite a moral in such a situation.

It is a moral on the perpetual war between those who believe in the freedom of individual taste and those who believe in prohibition.

It has to be confessed true that, in this period of libertine freedom, more dirty movies have been made and shown and then than most of us would have liked.

But if, underneath our instinctive prudish reaction, we have some sincere desire to have the filthy movie decline in importance on the American scene, then we have to yield grudging credit to our two or three year span of widespread movie licentiousness.

Instead of a public which may have thought it was starved, we have seen movies which are starving at the box office. They are starving at the box office because most people don't want to see them.

This is something people have found out for themselves. Prohibition, on the other hand, would have narrowed the opportunities for seeing such films, but would have left their allure and their illusive intact.

We would hesitate to make any firm single law about prohibition and freedom of individual taste that could be applied to every kind of temptation. But we think the next film, that, when it comes to the box film, the public taste is safer and more reliable than prohibition.

An Idea For A Million
"If I had a million dollars, one of the things I'd like to do..." So goes a thought recurrent in many minds. Actually, however, it is a thought which is not confined as often as it is begun.

The number of possibilities we can actually respond to with clear cut, unimpeded, unqualified enthusiasm turns out to be surprisingly few.

Once in a great while, however, we encounter a proposition we think we might buy. We have in mind one particular endeavor which Stewart R. Mott, the famous young philanthropist, is making part of the "substantial year" in which he is taking a sort of holiday from giving away money and spending a tidy piece of it making himself a "vegetable garden" on the lavish terraces of his Park Ave. apartment.

The main story is that he is spending $50,000 on his vegetable garden, which is certainly more than it is going to be worth, produce-wise. But that is a familiar story to many of us, in many cases of income.

What young Mott is doing that really engages the fancy is this: He has ordered, and is going to grow, all the seeds advertised in one seed catalogue - 400 varieties of vegetable in all.

This is the kind of gesture which requires, in addition to money, a certain grotesque splendor of imagination. If we have a million dollars, one of the things we'd like to do would be to take an entire seed catalogue and grow it.

Why Not DST All Year?
The extra hour of light gained with the start of Daylight Saving Time today makes life more pleasant and safer. DST makes sense and if more thought were given to it, Connecticut's legislators might well decide to use this advantageous arrangement all year round.

"The time has come to say what should not be said at all," proclaims Battle Line. "The dumping of Vice President Spiro Agnew from the ticket."

As for life style, DST has it all over Eastern Standard Time. Children coming home from school, adults returning from work are accompanied importantly by the additional light. It's much better for a youngster to play outdoors for a while after school than it is to be forced indoors by darkness. At least, it's more fun. Recreational opportunities for adults also are increased by after-work daylight, and the trip back home is safer as well as more relaxing.

Suburban living has made Daylight Savings Time even more useful than in the past. Outdoor chores have increased in this do-it-yourself era and these can be better managed with additional light than in the normal time in the backyard or on the lawn.

On the other hand, there is not much that can be done with the morning light gained through Eastern Standard Time. At that time of day, people are naturally indoors, anyway. It used to be that DST helped early-rising farmers but it doesn't make much difference to them these automated days.

About the only thing against DST is the possible inconvenience if neighboring states do not adopt it. But if Connecticut decided to have DST year-round, other states might follow suit. But somehow we go on the same old way, perhaps guided by habit rather than reason. - NEW HAVEN REGISTER.

Inside Report The Agnew Shocker

By Rowland Evans Jr. and Robert D. Novak

WASHINGTON - Increasing talk at high Republican levels that Vice President Spiro Agnew may bow out of the 1972 Republican Presidential ticket has its source not among Agnew-haters but in the very boom of the Vice President's political family.

Two of Agnew's long-time intimates - Stanley Hilar, top Vice Presidential aide before he ran unsuccessfully for governor of Maryland, and Agnew's fund-raiser J. Walter Jones, a rich Baltimore businessman - have been dropping hints that Agnew may not want to be Vice President another term.

One theory for these obvious Agnew-inspired leaks is that Agnew may be trying to light a backfire against anti-Agnew campaigns by Republican liberals who regard him as a dangerous 1972 hazard. Thus, political speculation that Agnew is seriously considering not running is easily converted by the Vice President's passionate devotees into an apparent effort to undermine him. That, in turn, could become the catalyst for a massive counterattack by conservatives to force President Nixon to keep Agnew on the ticket.

Just such a counterattack under a bold "Agnew Must Stay" headline dominates page one of the June issue of Battle Line, the publication of the American Conservative Union, whose chairman is Mr. Stanton Evans, editor of the Indianapolis News. "The time has come to say what should not be said at all," proclaims Battle Line. "The dumping of Vice President Spiro Agnew from the ticket."

But far more important to a possible Agnew withdrawal is new political intelligence that he would in fact be a liability, not an asset, on the Nixon 1972 ticket. Top party leaders are studying a Michigan poll, for example, which shows Agnew cutting Mr. Nixon heavily in 1972 Republican ticket would be unacceptable to American conservatives. In Kansas, however, a Midwest Republican cradle, a recent Oliver Quayle poll shows a decline in Agnew's "favorable" rating from 56 per cent to 46 per cent between September 1970 and last month. The President dropped only from 68 to 59 per cent.

Even in large parts of the Dixie stronghold of Nixon Republicanism, where Agnew's name glitters, the President now outruns his Vice President. Party professionals interpret this as meaning one thing: That despite Agnew's singular popularity, Mr. Nixon has now built himself a political base solid enough to run well without Agnew. As one Deep South Republican senator recently, Agnew emphasized what he says privately to his own staff: that he couldn't care less about another four years in the Vice Presidency. To this routine disclaimer, he often adds wistfully that he wants to make money while there is still time. He has been told that as a political commentator, wearing the mantle of what he has attacked as "the small and unselected elite" could grow up to half a million dollars a year.

In short, the prospect of the Republican party's most prolific fund-raiser in history becoming a fund-raiser for himself is taken seriously inside the Agnew camp.

But far more important to a possible Agnew withdrawal is new political intelligence that he would in fact be a liability, not an asset, on the Nixon 1972 ticket. Top party leaders are studying a Michigan poll, for example, which shows Agnew cutting Mr. Nixon heavily in

Connecticut Yankee

By A.H.O.

Between the hours of 3:30 and 6:30 last Monday afternoon, the House of Representatives, historic center of Connecticut political decision, legislated what was probably the single greatest one-stroke change ever made in the character of Connecticut life.

One would have expected, for such an occasion, an historic debate, one would have expected that the very woodwork of the historic hall might find tongue. One would not have been surprised to hear from the great ghosts of the past. One expected, at least, to find the talents of the present. House rising slightly above themselves.

Instead, all that was really historic about it all, except the grand oratory of the day, going back to the Trojan horse of the Connecticut, like Troy, was about to be "sacked," and endeavoring, in vain, to rouse the very church steeple and stone-walls of the Connecticut landscape into some last minute miracle protest.

What was happening was that Connecticut was, in one short afternoon, dismantling its founding Puritan traditions and deconstructing its long-time god of thrift, and plunging into a quiet orgy of three kinds of permitted gambling, at the track, off the track, and in a state lottery.

The shock of a state lotto that it reduced some of the potential creators against it to the status of stutterers. They came closer to exploding themselves than they did to exploding any of their former language.

Some of the potential de-fenders of the Connecticut of yesterday even turned from the Organizations have their mottos. The nation has its flag and great seal. The state has its flower and bird. Colleges have their mottoes, colors and masonry. Fraternities have emblems and coats of arms. Trademen have their trade-marks. Traffic is directed by signs and shapes. Even words on the page are symbols that somehow communicate thought to us. Some languages are so well learned the symbols of sound or markings. Religion is no exception. There is no meaning communicated to the uninitiated until he comes to learn the underlying meaning of the words and the symbols. Even the church building can best be understood in its symbolic fashion. It is the place the members go to in their continuing search for life's deepest meanings. It is the place where the church is found. As a human being, who did not create yourself, you would do well to go to the church to find your deep meanings in life, not necessarily these doctrines authoritatively taught, but that in life which means to you. You can make the church the greatest symbol in your life.

INSIDE REPORT
lean chairman told us: "With Nixon as strong as he is, we might as well buy a Nixon-Rockefeller ticket here. That fellow Rockefeller (New York Gov.) doesn't wear horns any longer."

Finally, Agnew himself is studying polls showing that the new youth vote - which will reach a potential 27 million by 1972 - may go Democratic as high as seven-to-one. Agnew correctly worries that a presence on the ticket would be no help there.

By presenting the seed now of a possible voluntary exit from the 1972 ticket, Agnew from Manchester High School buys important psychological protection against an involuntary exit dictated by Mr. Nixon University and has taken on it and when that time comes additional course in business in a secret hideout between the University of Hartford, Moore, Nixon and Agnew, the Vice President can emerge with the Manchester Association of the word that the decision to Independent Insurance Agents bow out was his, not the President's.

News for Senior Citizens

By WALLY PORTIN

Hello there! Well, it's that time again, and for a few days we've been getting some real nice weather. A little hot, but that's what we've been getting, and so we'd better take it while we can.

Tuesday morning, I had to get up ahead of the chickens to open the Center, and to see that all was in readiness for those going on the Pennsylvania Dutch trip.

There were 30 people in all, and Tom O'Neill, our good will ambassador, was in charge.

The gang departed in one of the city's garbage buses with air conditioning, and even a rest room for their convenience.

They were back late Thursday day, but this column will be all types and dropped at the Herald Office before then, so we'll wait until next week to tell you how everything went.

Register for Trip
While on the subject of trips, we start registering for the Cathedral in the Pines Monday morning, starting at 1:30. The price is $2.50 per person. You may bring your own sandwiches for lunch, and we'll provide a nice dinner before returning.

When registering, we will ask you what one of four names you want, so please read our offer carefully, and then tell us the number when you register. Better yet, cut this post card out, so you can have it with you to help speed up registrations.

Menu No. 1: Broiled haddock, 2/3 lb.; No. 2, Chicken salad, 1/2 lb.; No. 3, Chicken salad, 1/2 lb.; No. 4, a king, macaroni and cheese, potato salad, sliced tomatoes, jellied salad, tossed salad, deviled eggs, home-made breads and pastries, fresh fruit bowl, and a beverage, $3.50. Now in my book, menu number four is really a deal. Think about it.

Don't forget now, when you register, you will be asked to give your selection of a menu. Oh yes, we will be registering all "wines" and "beverages" which are $1.50 per person. You may bring your own wine, but you may not bring your own beer. You may bring your own wine, but you may not bring your own beer.

Hijack Victim Expresses Frustration

was talking to two of the stewardesses and then I saw the other stewardess point with her thumb.

He said she couldn't talk out first. "All I heard her say was help me! help me! I then saw the gun which had a long barrel..."

The passengers, many of whom were not even in their seats at that point, fled quickly off the plane as White flashed his .38-caliber pistol and held the frightened Miss Culver.

Les Margaret, a Queens attorney, said: "I was seated and had just finished fastening my seat belt when I heard a scream. I looked up in the aisle and I saw him holding her. I couldn't believe what was happening. She was hysterical."

Margaret said the gunman ordered all of the men off the plane and everyone left, but one man, who apparently frightened the hijacker, was shot and fatally wounded.

"I was in the jetway," Margaret said. "I heard a noise that sounded like garbage cans clanging together. Later I heard they were shots."

Alfred Fuchs, of Great Neck, N.Y., said the hijacker pulled a gun from an umbrella after Miss Culver told him to get off the plane because he didn't have a boarding pass.

"I couldn't trip him because he had the gun at her head," Fuchs said. Steven Kessler, Little Neck, N.Y., told a newsmen he noticed the man before boarding the plane. "He seemed to be afraid and shrugged his shoulders while I looked at him," Kessler said.

Kessler thought the whole experience was "like out of a movie."

No Postal Bid

No bids for the contract to provide and operate a postal station near the intersection of Main and N. Main Sts. had been submitted yesterday at 2 p.m., the time scheduled for opening bids.

Postmaster Edward H. Sauter said the contract will probably be put out to bid again if anyone indicates an interest in providing quarters, equipment and personnel and offering services including money orders, certified mail, accepting parcel post, and selling stamps and postal supplies. The contract would run from July 1, 1971 to June 30, 1972. The station would be open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 8 a.m. to noon on Saturday.

The contractor for the station must be 21 years of age or older and a citizen. He must be able to furnish a $3,000 bond.

had just put in his last day as police chief of Cary, Ill., volunteered.

Wearing a TWA flight jacket and armed with two pistols, Zito wriggled through a window into the cockpit while the hijacker was in the plane's cabin.

As the plane took off for New York, Zito looked through a peephole at the hijacker, who was occupied in watching Miss Culver, the marshal told a news conference.

About 30 minutes after take-off, the hijacker walked away from Miss Culver toward the back of the plane.

"I think I can get him now," Zito said he told the captain.

An estimated four North Vietnamese battalions supported by four tanks Friday overran the Laotian outpost of Ban Nik on Route 23, which links Pakse with the Bolovens Plateau, military sources reported.

Laotian T-28 light bombers destroyed two of the Russian-made PT-76 tanks but could not halt the Communist drive, which cut a Laotian task force in half.

Bad weather prevented American F4 Phantom jets from providing support, the sources said.

The Laotian command in Vietnam said it did not have full casualty reports because contact had not yet been re-established with Laotian units that fled from Ban Nik. Two Laotian colonels were known to have been killed.

An American observation plane spotted targets for the Laotian F-7Es as shot down in the battle, other sources said.

The injured American pilot was rescued and hospitalized in Ubon, Thailand.

are about 12 miles east of Phnom Penh.

Lt. Col. Am Rong, a spokesman for the Cambodian military command, said the command was unsure about the situation at some outposts in the marshes. Many of the Cambodian troops in the swamps are surrounded by the Viet Cong 9th Division.

Some Cambodian positions can be supplied only by air drops or helicopters. The loss of the two helicopters seriously hurt the Cambodians since they have only about a half dozen operable craft. Am Rong said that some food and ammunition being parachuted by the air force is missing the troops but that most supplies are getting through despite heavy enemy fire.

The Cambodian command reportedly is asking its South Vietnamese allies for help in the fighting around Phnom Penh. Two Cambodian generals, Brig. Gen. Thea, commander of Phnom Penh's defenses, and Brig. Gen. Hong Sin, chief of operations, flew to Saigon for talks with South Vietnamese leaders.

Informal sources in Vietnam reported that the Laotian army has rushed reinforcements to southern Laos in the wake of fighting that brought North Vietnamese forces to within 17 miles of the regional capital of Pakse.
