New Wave of Attacks Launched by North Viets

The resolution was passed on Friday at the group's national convention in Minneapolis.

Morton London, a former Jewish Veterans national commander from Teaneck, N.J., said he was hotted down in 1965 when he urged defeat of a resolution backing war policies of President Lyndon B. Johnson, a U.S. Command spokesman.

Today I don't need to speak," he told a reporter. "The change in our stand reflects the change in attitude of Americans in general."

The primary argument against the resolution appeared to hinge on the Nixon administration's attitude toward the Middle East.

"We stick our necks out in an effort to prevent escalation of the Vietnam war," said Jack Hellig of Chicago. "And right now every man in this room is asking, 'How much chance is there for U.S. aid for Israel?'"

David Green, who approved resolutions calling for admission of mainland China to the United Nations "without prejudice to the continued membership of the Republic of China," said he was "not a pacifist."

He said the resolution was "not a statement of principle" but a "statement of fact."

South Vietnamese forces freed 31 civilians held by the Viet Cong in a raid against an enemy base camp in Quang Ngai province on the northern coast, the Saigon Command said.

than a big power world. It is complicated, and more trouble than the world has ever been able to handle, but the name and purpose of the game is quite simple. It is survival.

Riddling That Income Tax Line

It's part of the generic and growing confusion of the times that the financial pages and the sports pages are beginning to read alike.

Those interested not only in how to get rich fast but in how to manage riches after they have been attained will do better, these days, to turn to the sports pages first.

"This loan thing should be obvious to everybody," said Professor Fran Tarleton, in a somewhat impatient lecture to Steve Cady of the sports staff of the New York Times.

"Why?" Professor Tarleton continued. "Because of the tax advantage. You take less salary and more loan, and that package could get you the top dollar."

Sports Writer Cady obviously didn't consider Professor Tarleton's lecture totally clear, so he consulted an attorney, whom he identified as a "prominent New York tax lawyer."

"The lawyer, who asked that his name not be used," wrote Cady, "described such loans as perfectly legal incentive 'kickers' to persuade high-income individuals to work for an agreed salary."

The actor or player who takes the loan totally clear, so he consulted an attorney, whom he identified as a "prominent New York tax lawyer."

We Have Been Here Before

A lead editorial in the New York Times the other day bore the title "Trade War With Japan" and discussed the urgent need for better understanding and future cooperation between the economic policies of both the United States and Japan.

The editorial noted that Japan enjoys a trade advantage over us while, at the same time, it benefits from military expenditures we are making in Japan. This is cited as a circumstance which bids Japan exercise moderation in its further approach to American markets.

The editorial warned on the other hand against the possibility that American policy should, either in fact or in appearance, attempt to assume the right to lecture and dictate to Japan, or take out on Japan some of its own domestic and international economic frustrations.

But the main point is more significant than the discussion. The main point is that one of the problems with view with concern and anxiety in the world of 1971 is the possibility, or perhaps, rather, the early stages, of a trade war between those two erstwhile friends, Japan and the United States.

Across from the editorial page in this same edition of the New York Times there was the latest dispatch from Peking by James Reston, the New York Times editor who had, as a correspondent in Communist China, the headline placed over his interpretive piece of the day read "China's Nightmare," and one of the summation sentences in Reston's piece read as follows:

"It is not the U.S. that causes the greatest concern in Peking, but the old enemy, Japan, and her new ambitions."

Such a resumption of a long-range view on the part of China clashes, in an ironical way, with what some American policy makers consider their own troublesome little problem of the moment. They are afraid that, for a little while longer, the Japanese might continue to have such an aversion to militarism it may be difficult for us to encourage Japan to carry its share of the armaments and preparedness load in its region of the world.

China, on the other hand, has no such worry.

Perhaps, with its Marxist theory of a deterministic history, it calculates that a nation big enough to find itself in a big trade war with the United States will inevitably swing into the development of military strength to match its economic prowess.

In there anything, in this picture, which suggests anything the United States might have been doing differently, or can do from now on, to avoid what may loom ahead?

One minimum thing we can do.

We can realize that, for all the past tragedy of our experience, here we go again, down the same old history, letting the same terrible things begin to repeat themselves.

Economy Blues

By D. J. R. BRUCKNER
 The Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — The economy looks like Mr. Nixon's political Vietnam.

Increasingly, people suspect he does not know what he is doing, or that nothing can be done and no one is admitting it. It is not important that public opinion polls show twice as many people think the Democrats are doing better than the GOP; such opinions can be reversed quickly. It is more significant that the percentage of personal income going into savings has been increasing steadily for more than a year.

Nor is it only the common man who feels uncertain about the continuing inflation and high unemployment. Traders and investors on Wall St. are about as secure as aerospace workers now. Many big-city investors fear that Mr. Nixon, if he wants to win again next year, may choose suddenly to stimulate the economy, at the cost of terrific inflation in 1972.

The people may be squirreling savings; investors have to wonder whether they should not borrow every penny they can. What with the federal government and most local governments borrowing increasing sums at a high rate of interest, even the saying public must wonder whether the entire political and economic system of the United States has not developed a vested interest in maintaining a high rate of inflation.

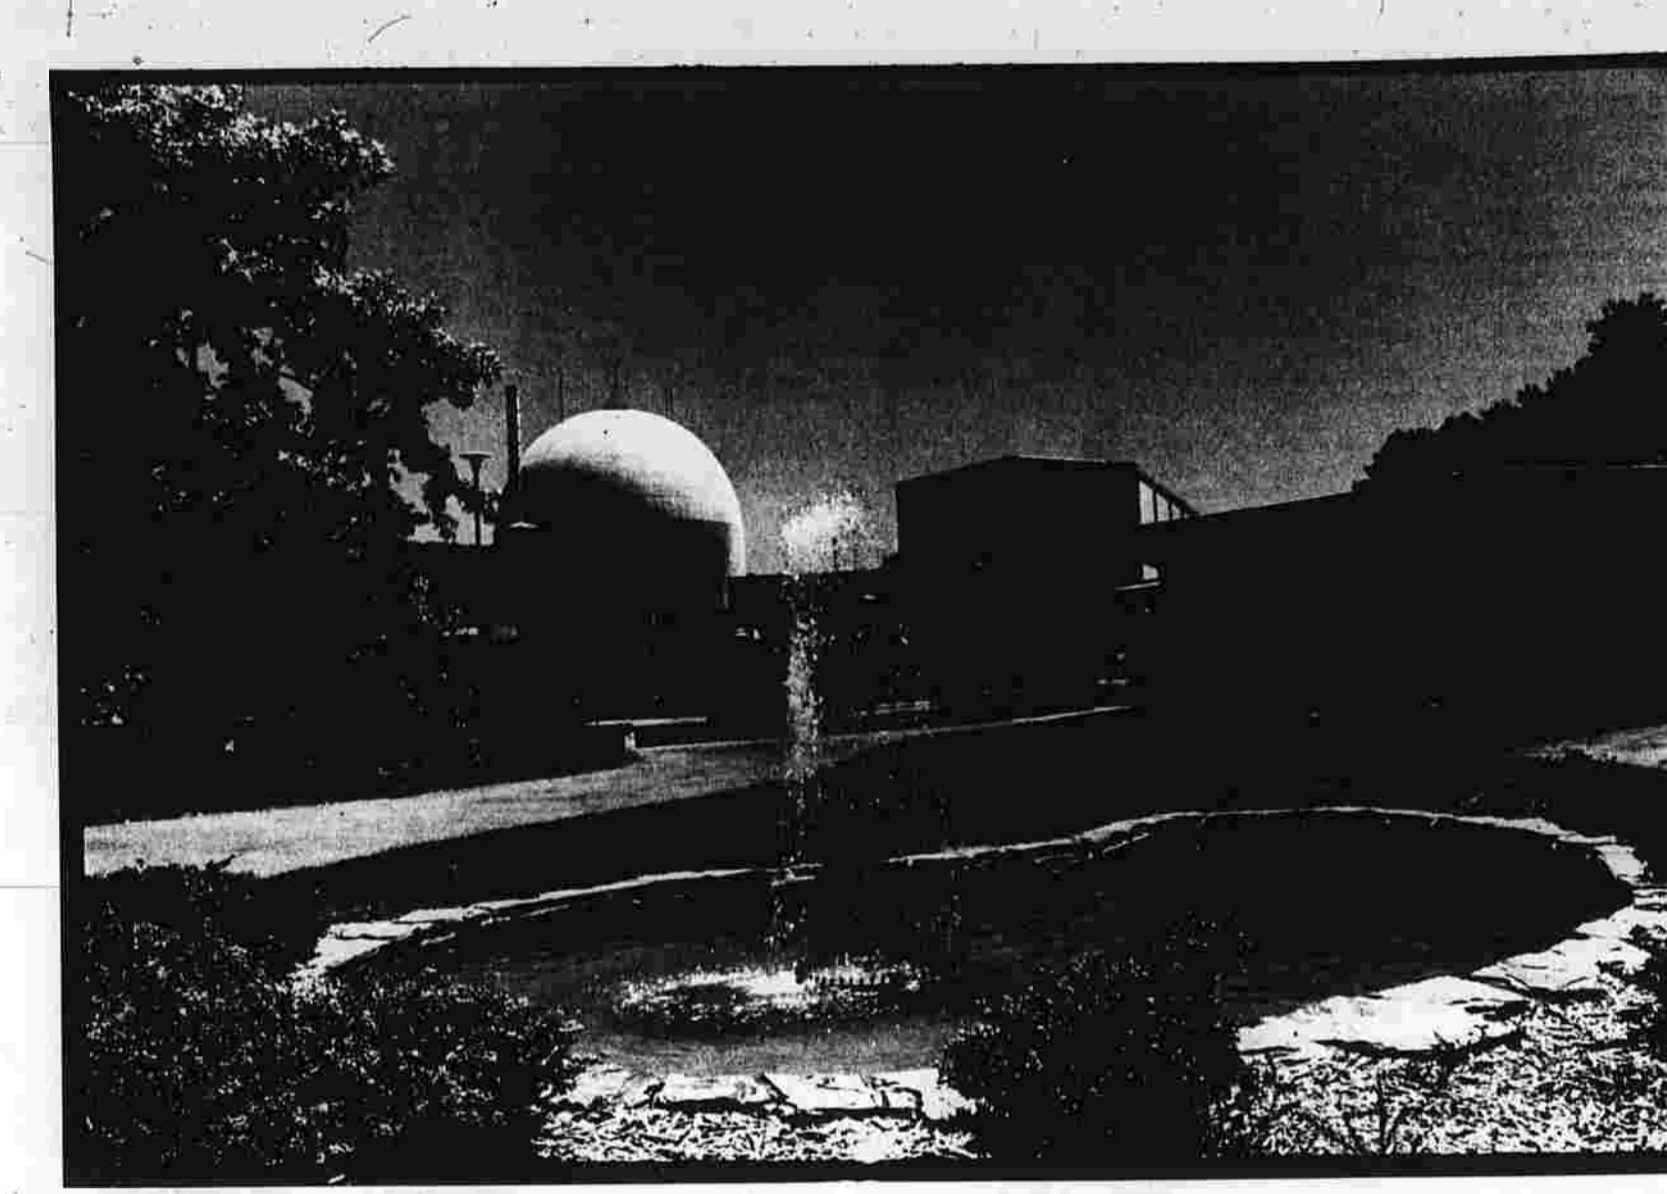

There is not much confidence at the top either. The chairman of the Federal Reserve Board is the academic economist, lately the oracular high priest of this civilization, are about as credible now as generals.

Some industrial plants, led by autos, suddenly announce greatly increased profits for the first six months of this year. This is encouraging. But the very next week Otto Eckstein, once a member of the Council of Economic Advisors and now a Harvard professor, noted that corporate profit figures announced in 1969 have now been "revised downward" by 7 billion dollars (8 per cent), and those for 1970 have been "revised downward" by 6 billion dollars (7 per cent), which makes one wonder whether management, or the accounting profession, or both, are being less than candid with the investing public.

Uncertainty is too mild a word for popular attitudes toward the great industrial machine of America. Doubt is a better one, or cynicism.

The long debate over Lockheed's troubles can scarcely promote public confidence in the wisdom of business management; debate about ecology has raised enormous questions about the real human worth of the wealth produced by business. The near-collapse of hundreds of Wall St. firms recently raises serious questions about the sense of responsibility of those who hold great economic power. The collapse of the Penn-Central Railroad raises doubts about the probability of management.

In the light of such uncertainty it is not surprising that

It was a member of one firm's most or infamous far rightist organization, received a generous round of applause for its announcement.

A few minutes later, that same audience was demonstrating its patriotism by singing the National Anthem, but singing it with a stirring hatred of their domestic foes mixed in with their love of country.

A little later the same school of passion produced the open statement that one form of tax being considered (being which was nothing more or less than a Communist plot, being advanced by Communists sitting in the Legislature.

There was, somehow, somewhere, still enough collective self-discipline to bring the evening to a close, at quarter past two in the morning, leaving the democratic process battered and torn, but still possessed of some faint pulse.

But like Senator Pac, any midlevel observer, accustomed to the assumption that democracy can always handle its own problems if only it keeps close enough to the people, had to be frightened. It almost turns out to be a question of who keeps closest to the democratic process, its mild, meek friends, or its passionate, hypocritical enemies who proclaim themselves to be its only true defenders.

Senator Stanley Pac, the independent-minded, idealistic, by-then British Democrat, who is now to the state political scene and who reacts with a certain refreshing naivety to his own experience in the legislature, was an educational television briefly during the first tumultuous break in the evening session, and what impressed him was the look of hatred he found in so many eyes that evening, a look which made him wonder what in the world was happening to his state and country. He confessed that it frightened him.

Why and how that look was present had been indicated, a little while before, when one of the speakers, announcing that

It was a session which was, theoretically, open to all the people of the state.

And there was, now and then, some individual who had obviously appeared, with his or her own thoughts, out of his or her independent, personal philosophizing, in a demonstration that spontaneous public opinion hearings are for.

But when there is such an invitation open, there are special individuals and groups who are most likely to appear.

They are the passionate extremists, who throbb with convictions beside which the thoughts of ordinary citizens are pallid and inconclusive.

When they come out, they bring their own atmosphere with them.

Justice Department Ruling Angers Students' Families

None has been brought to trial. Craig Morton, Kent State student body president at the time of the shootings, and one of those indicted, said he was "morally appalled" by the Justice Department decision, but added it was "sort of what I expected."

"I'm not so naive as to believe the Nixon administration would take a position to be interpreted as pro student," said Morgan.

The American Civil Liberties Union of Ohio said in a statement issued by Executive Director Benson A. Wolman, that it would "redouble its efforts" in civil courts to hold guardsmen accountable for their actions at Kent State.

Peter Davies, a New York insurance executive who conducted a 14-month private study of the Kent State shootings, said the Justice Department should have let a grand jury decide whether there was sufficient evidence for indictments.

Davies said in his report that he believed guardsmen opened fire on a prearranged signal after agreeing demonstrators should be punished.

"It is for a jury to decide on the evidence whether or not there is a prosecutable case. There was a mountain of evidence that warranted a grand jury investigation. It seems to me the Justice Department has taken the jury's function on itself," Davies said.

The parents of the four students as well as congressional and civil rights spokesmen had urged a federal grand jury investigation.

In a statement issued in their behalf in Washington Friday, the parents said: "The shock of learning of the decision... is nearly as great as the shock that came when our children were killed at Kent State on May 4, 1970."

Now we know that the Department of Justice will not act. It is inconceivable to us that this is so, particularly because its own investigative reports indicate that such action would have been fully appropriate.

The statement was issued in behalf of the Sheuers and Mr.

and Mrs. Arthur Krause, parents of Allison Krause; Mrs. Elaine Miller, mother of Jeffrey Miller, and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Schroeder, parents of William Schroeder.

The current student body president at Kent State, Bill Slocum, accused Mitchell of refusing to protect the rights of students.

"So far as Mitchell is concerned, law and order will be applied against blacks and against students and certainly not for blacks and for students," he said.

State Collects Late $73,000 In Gains Taxes

HARTFORD (AP) — The state Tax Department said Friday it collected another $73,000 this week in its campaign to find persons who did not pay state capital gains taxes last year.

Working with federal income tax information, state officials have collected nearly $600,000 in unpaid capital gains taxes over the past seven weeks.

According to F. George Brown, the state tax commissioner, inspection of federal tax records this week turned up $27,000 in unpaid taxes.

In addition, $46,000 was sent to the department by persons who learned of the collection campaign and took advantage of the commissioner's assurance that voluntary payments will not be subjected to the usual 10 per cent late penalty.

Brown said eight members of his staff continued to sift through federal income tax returns at the regional center in Andover, Mass.

Tiger 'Kitten' Wanders Home

ZIONSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Ivar, the baby Siberian tiger, looking snug but thirsty, came back to the rural home of Dr. Edward V. Schaffer, Indianapolis orthopedic surgeon, Friday after being missing 38 hours.

The Schaffers are raising the tiger for Robert Baudy, an animal trainer of Center Hill, Fla.

Turnabout Is Seen In Economic Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — There is widening belief in the administration that September 21 is the magic date for a turnabout in President Nixon's anti-inflation policy.

On that day Nixon will discuss with his 18-member National Commission on Productivity a recommendation for creating some form of wage-price review board—or perhaps separate boards for basic segments of industry.

The meeting was mentioned by Nixon at his Aug. 4 news conference. He emphasized he would reject any wage-price control proposal that would invite "a new bureaucracy with enormous criminal powers to fasten itself on the American economy."

He said he had never seen a control plan without that flaw.

But Nixon still left open the way to adoption of a purely voluntary program for reviewing pending major wage settlements and price decisions. Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur F. Burns has been plugging for such an "incomes policy" for months.

The commission will look at industries in which major negotiations are pending, Nixon said, "and in addition to that we will consider a recommendation on wage-price boards."

Nixon's avowed skepticism that any workable stabilization policy can be achieved by persuasion led many congressmen to express doubt that the proposal would get beyond the debate stage.

But now a number of officials are convinced a White House decision for greater price-wage intervention has been all but made in principle, and that only the scale and structure of the effort remain in question.

"I don't believe the President would have mentioned the Productivity Commission in this connection unless he was preparing to raise some recommendations with them," one ranking administration official said.

An abrupt reversal of position by Secretary of the Treasury John B. Connally was cited by another source as convincing evidence of a new official line. When Nixon named Connally his chief economic spokesman late in June, Connally told newsmen at the White House:

"He (Nixon) isn't going to institute a wage-price review board. He isn't going to impose mandatory wage and price controls. He isn't going to ask Congress for any tax relief. He isn't going to increase fiscal spending."

Yet on Aug. 4, when 13 Republican senators broke with administration policy and introduced a bill to create a wage-price review board. Connally issued a two-page statement saying the administration welcomed "a all-fledged debate" in Congress on the issue.

"That's quite a shift in just five weeks," a White House aide commented.

Nixon said the slipping competitiveness of U.S. industry, as exemplified by the recent steel wage settlement—and the immediate steel price boost of 8 per cent—was a basic cause of his increased concern over inflation.

"This kind of settlement, where a wage increase leads to a price increase—and particularly in steel, where the industry is already noncompetitive with foreign imports—is not in the interest of America, not in the interest of labor, and not in the interest of industry," Nixon told his news conference.

The important questions are how to solve the problem "without putting the American economy in a straitjacket," Nixon said, and whether the price and wage guidelines should be imposed only on major industries or right down to neighborhood filling stations and grocery stores.

The problem of deteriorating competitiveness and trade balances, Nixon said, will be "Subject A" in the meeting of the Productivity Commission.

The commission, made up of top industry and labor figures and key government economic officials, was created last year in one of Nixon's first concessions to rising demands for stronger anti-inflation action.

The emphasis thus was focused on efforts to increase national productivity, on the accepted theory that inflation is fostered by wage and price advances that outrun the gains in output per worker.

Assurances that Nixon is determined to deal with the inflation problem "in a fundamental rather than a cosmetic way" were given Thursday by Secretary of Housing and Urban Development George Romney.

Romney hinted at possible legislative action on wages and prices in a speech to the National Association of Real Estate Brokers in Atlanta.

"In my view what is needed fundamentally probably involves major statutory reforms that will strengthen the basic forces of market competition in our economy," Romney said.

"I personally am hopeful that such a program will be developed and adopted before too much longer."

Many Urge Meskill To Sign Tax Package

cent on income under $1,000 and reached a top of 6 per cent for income over $12,000. One voice raised publicly against the tax package was that of the Connecticut Petroleum Council, which opposes the proposed 2-cents-a-gallon increase in the gasoline tax, boosting it to 10 cents a gallon—the highest rate in the nation.

The council also protested a provision of the bill to send the added gas tax revenues into the state's General Fund instead of the Highway Fund.

"This diversion of highway revenues signals the end of the road building program in a state which has a long way to go in highway modernization," said council Chairman William A. Crowley in a telegram to Meskill.

Crowley claimed to be speaking for the "millions of customers" of the petroleum industry, as well as the industry itself.

Also unhappy with the tax package was the tobacco industry, which has repeatedly warned that any increase in the 16-cents-a-pack cigarette tax would multiply Connecticut's bootleg cigarette problems. The tax package before the governor would raise the cigarette tax to 21 cents a pack, highest in the nation.

Critics of the tax ranged from liberals, who considered the tax too heavily centered on middle- and lower-income wage earners, to conservatives, who opposed the concept of an income tax.

The tax rates started at 1 per in Birmingham, U. W. Clements, counsel for the NAACP and Negro plaintiffs in the Jefferson County school desegregation case, asked for an injunction keeping Wallace and school officials from interfering with the desegregation order.

U.S. District Court Judge Sam C. Pointer Jr. set a hearing for Monday.

Jefferson County School Board President C. R. Botenfield said: "We don't have any intention of disobeying the police powers of the governor."

Williams said that he had no power under state law to reopen schools closed by school board action, but he hoped Wallace's action would provide the basis for similar action by the Mississippi school districts themselves.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Fifteen-year-old Pamela Davis cried in June when she found out she had been assigned to spend her first year of high school at a predominantly black Westfield High under a court-ordered desegregation plan.

The tears prompted her mother, Mrs. Robert Price, to write a letter to Alabama Governor George C. Wallace, explaining why Pamela should not be bused to the school 22 miles from her home.

Thursday Wallace acted and ordered the Jefferson County Board of Education to transfer the teenager back to Minor High, four miles from her home, despite the court order.

Mrs. Price, whose husband is a war-disabled Birmingham electrician, said Pamela wanted to be in the school band but could not if she attended Westfield, because of the long drive.

She had expected, she said, that her letter to Wallace "would go in the trash can."

But Thursday night, she called her daughter, who was visiting relatives in Indiana, and told her Wallace had replied.

"I feel like Gov. Wallace is a sort of a god; he's an answer to a prayer," Mrs. Price said in an interview. She added there was no racial motive in her decision to write to Wallace.

The letter said Pamela might have to give up music at Westfield, because she would be able to stay at a school located 22 miles from her home after school for the long hours... in order to fulfill the obligations required of her."

Jefferson County School Supt. Dr. J. Revis Hall said Pamela was one of about 400 students who had been reassigned throughout the county.

Under the court order, students must attend schools in zones in which their legal residence is located, not necessarily the closest school.

Hall said when the transfers were made the students were notified that if the transfers were out of order, they could be appealed.

But he said, no word came from Miss Davis of her family. Hall said the school board doesn't know what it will do if Wallace sees fit to make reassignments of students.

"But I believe the board will recognize the governor's police powers. I expect them to honor the governor's request," he said.

Prime Minister Brian Faulkner of Northern Ireland accused Lynch of "hypocrisy and cant" for urging Lynch to replace his Belfast regime.

"What is apparent," said Faulkner, "is that no further attempt by us to deal constructively with the Dublin government is possible."

He accused Lynch of encouraging the IRA's terror campaign in the north.

"This organization is based in the Irish Republic," Faulkner said. "It trains and organizes in the Irish Republic; it sends across from the Irish Republic the explosives, the arms, and the ammunition intended to kill and maim Ulster people; it enjoys by and large in the Irish Republic."

He said the IRA has been working for the past 8-10 years to organize a non-violent revolution, but the conservative governments in Northern Ireland and in Britain are "trying to force our hand, get our millions and finances used up, and throw us all in jail."

Kenny said Northern Ireland is made up of two-thirds Protestants, while there are just five per cent in the South. He said both sections have the same problems in housing and jobs, with 52,000 unemployed in the North.

He said American Irish politicians and others are offering generous support to his group. A fund raising dance is planned in Springfield, Aug. 28.

Republic a safe haven and an atmosphere of approval." CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) — A visiting Irish Republican Army (IRA) official charged Friday that there are 1,600 Northern Ireland political prisoners in English jails.

Sean Kenny, general secretary of Sinn Fein, the political wing of the IRA, said "political internees are chained together without charge or trial, some of them imprisoned on the British prison ship 'Maldenstone' in Belfast lock."

On an American tour to raise money for the dependents of what he called "Irish political prisoners," Kenny said despite efforts of the British army to roundup IRA leaders, "most of the leadership of the IRA are still free, organizing resistance to the British troops."

He said the latest violence in Belfast was sparked when a passing milk truck backedfire near some British troops, and the soldiers shot and killed the driver later admitting it was a mistake.

Kenny said 25 have been shot dead in the fighting, including three British troops.

"People don't understand that this is not a religious war in Ireland," Kenny said. "It's a war for national independence so that Protestant and Catholic working class people can have their right to a job, their house, the vote and the land. The real problems in Ireland, north and south, are ownership and control of our natural resources."

He said most of the mining rights, fisheries, tracts of housing and other economic key-ones in Ireland are owned by "a small elite few, most of them former British army officers."

He said the IRA has been working for the past 8-10 years to organize a non-violent revolution, but the conservative governments in Northern Ireland and in Britain are "trying to force our hand, get our millions and finances used up, and throw us all in jail."

No Middle Grounds For 'Family' Fans

By CYNTHIA LOWEY

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Reaction to 1971's most controversial television program continues with no middle ground: Viewers either love it or hate it. But any resemblance between the character of Archie Bunker of CBS' "All in the Family" and the veteran actor who plays him, Carroll O'Connor, is purely physical.

Archie is the embodiment of all the prejudices that have come to mean bigotry and racism. His appearance in a television series has been hailed on one side as healthy exposure while others suggest that he reinforces the narrow minded.

O'Connor won his bachelor's degree from the National University of Ireland, and his master's from the University of Montana. While his politics are private, his outlook generally is liberal and cosmopolitan.

"I'm not a member of any political party," O'Connor said, almost reluctantly. "I really don't care much for politics, and I just don't know what words like 'conservative' and 'liberal' mean anymore."

"When Roosevelt was president, a lot of people thought that a 'liberal' was pro-labor, pro-welfare and wanted to take care of people and a 'conservative' was pro-big business and anti-welfare. Now it is all mixed up."

O'Connor, rehearsing for one of next season's "All in the Family" episodes added:

"I grew up in New York, but I never heard Archie's kind of talk in my own family. Mine was a family of teachers—my mother, an aunt and an uncle. My father was a lawyer and was in partnership with two Jews, who with their families were close to us. There were two black families in our circle of friends. My father disliked talk like Archie's—he called it the hallmark of ignorance."

O'Connor's interest is in building Archie's character—

"bigots have dimensions," he said with a grin.

"I've been told that Archie is a sort of hero to racists," he said. "What the hell! Let them have a hero, and if a foolish fellow like Archie is their hero in spite of this changed world, more's the pity."

Constant viewers of the series, including those who deplore Archie's attitudes, find themselves warming to the blustery character. O'Connor seems to be fond of him—and one suspects that although Archie will keep right on making cracks about polacks and hebbs he is going to be more lovable and—hopefully—funny when the series starts its first full season next month.

Lorne Greene plays double role in "Bonanza" segment Aug. 22. Here he plays a busy con man.
