Hussein Appoints Minister

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — King Hussein named Ahmed Husseini as Jordan's prime minister to succeed assassinated Wafiq Taji. A royal decree said Taji, 66, would rule under the same mandate that Taji received when he was named by the king to head the Cabinet a little more than a year ago. Taji, slain in Cairo on Sunday, was an unrelenting foe of the Palestinian guerrillas who opposed Jordan's annexation of the West Bank in 1950. Hussein's appointment of Taji came after Taji was buried in the royal cemetery in Amman. About 5,000 persons, many of them weeping, attended the state funeral. A 21-gun salute was fired as Taji's coffin was lowered into a grave next to King Abdullah, Hussein's grandfather, who was assassinated 20 years ago. Taji is the first commoner to be buried in the cemetery. Tears streamed down Hussein's face as he offered condolences to Taji's widow. Taji died of multiple bullet wounds at the entrance to the Sheraton Hotel in Cairo. Jordan's foreign minister, Abdullah Salih, was grazed in the leg and an Egyptian security officer and one of the gunmen also were wounded. Egyptian authorities arrested four Palestinians with Syrian passports and said three of them admitted shooting Taji. Egypt's official Middle East News Agency said one of the three, Monie Khalifa, told interrogators the assassination plan was formulated in Amman by the Black September organization, a movement formed to avenge the guerrilla slaying of the Jordanian army's crack-down in September 1970. King Hussein broadcast an appeal for unity among Jordan's 2.5 million population, two-thirds of it Palestinian. He called Taji a "true scidier who fought to the last breath of his life for Jordan's dignity, peace, security and progress." But there was widespread jubilation among the Palestinians at the murder of a man they considered one of their chief foes. The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) spokesman said the assassination was a "great victory for the Palestinian people." In addition to Manchester, others working at the election today are: Checkers, Margaret M. Deery of 188 Hilliard St. and Michael B. Benevento of 87 Homestead St.; demonstrator, Gladys Harrington, 82 Hilliard St.; machine attendants, James H. Moriarty of 90 Hilliard St., Anthony Zilnickas of 38 Oakland St., Lawrence F. Noonan of 146 Hollister St., F. M. Fitzgerald of 238 N. Main St., James Conina of 64 N. Main St., Joanne Morgan, 376 Aug. 15-Nov. 11, 1971. Senate leaders said they hoped to complete action on the measure tomorrow. It was uncertain whether the Nixon administration would try to knock out the retroactive pay feature which it opposes. This feature is specifically designed to give pay raises to teachers and others who were denied them because of the date selected for the bill. Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of the Senate House Economic Committee, announced in advance he planned to vote against the bill unless it is drastically revised on the Senate floor. The administration's Phase 2 program "is so complex, unworkable and unenforceable that it is bound to engender a healthy consumer and worker's strike throughout the country and the serious economic confusion is likely to slow the economy and aggravate unemployment," Proxmire asserted. Senate Debating Wage-Price Curbs

By JOE HALL WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate opened debate today on a bill giving President Nixon extra authority to continue wage-price controls but also allowing most pay hikes stopped by the Aug. 15-Nov. 11, 1971. Senate leaders said they hoped to complete action on the measure tomorrow. It was uncertain whether the Nixon administration would try to knock out the retroactive pay feature which it opposes. Nixon Vows Veto Of Tax-Cut Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon announced today he will veto the tax-cut bill pending in Congress if it reaches his desk with what he called "budget-busting amendments" in a controversial presidential campaign. Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon reached the decision during a three-hour morning conference with Clark MacGregor, counsel to the President for congressional relations. Ziegler and MacGregor said Nixon is optimistic that the type of tax law changes he seeks will be passed by Congress before legislators go home for Christmas. Asked whether the chief executive might call Congress into a special session if it quit without passing the bill, Ziegler said that was a matter for the future. Ziegler spoke of "budget-busting amendments" in a plan to give tax relief to parents of college students and to increase the personal income tax deduction to $800. MacGregor said the Senate President's fiscal deficit is $4.3 billion to $5.6 billion each of the next three years. Nixon, as part of his new economic program, called for cutting taxes by $27 billion over three years. MacGregor said the Senate bill would increase from the regular army's East

Allied Talks First On Nixon's Agenda

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon, expected to announce a date for his China trip within 48 hours is described as eager to ease East-West tensions—but not at the expense of old friendships. Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said a desire to have meaningful consultations with major allies prior to journeys to Peking and Moscow was a key reason for Nixon's announced intentions to meet during the next five weeks with leaders of Britain, France, West Germany, Japan and Canada. Talking to a group of newsmen aboard Air Force One as the President flew here Sunday night from California, Ziegler said: "The purpose of the consultations is to inform our allies about our views of the world and to inform them about what the President intends to accomplish. . . . The President wants to hear their views, and he's going to give his. . . . Another White House official, who declined to be identified, said Nixon was bound for Peking and Moscow "to relax tensions but not to sacrifice allied unity." This source said the allied leaders would not be granted an "absolute veto" over any initiatives which controls a 100-square-mile triangle of land, pointing into India's West Bengal, they will be taken into consideration. An army spokesman in Rawalpindi said casualties at Jhelum were substantial. The Pakistanis said the Indians had launched an offensive on four fronts around East Pakistan's border with India. Woes of Small Operator Told by Iowa Farmer

By GORDON HANSON BOONE, Iowa (AP) — Many small farmers are being squeezed out of business by the big operators, a farmer told a group of men here today. The odds are against him. Yet for more than two decades he has asked to be granted an annual game where the odds are so low that it hardly makes his huge investment worth sitting down at the table. King is an Iowa corn farmer.

Many cornbelt farmers have investments in land, livestock and machinery that go into six figures. They're got to put much into their operations, King feels, if they're going to survive. But they don't all have ready cash, and King says interest payments can be as much as 12 percent on the debt. And the small operator—the farmer with just a couple of hundred acres—is having the toughest time, King says.

King has more than 800 acres of land, but he says he's not a big operator. He has a starburst of investments piled against an ungenerous return. He has many things seem in his favor except determination. A paradoxical world King lives in. He wants corn prices low so he can feed his cattle at a profitable return. He also wants corn prices high when he sells to warehouse planters the crop. Finding that in today's economy, King feels, is the plight of the American farmer is again receiving national attention as the Nixon administration attempts to have Earl Butz confirmed as the new U.S. secretary of agriculture.

Butz has been described as an advocate of agricultural modernization, attempting to have Earl Butz confirmed as the new U.S. secretary of agriculture. Judge Recalls 'Vagabond Law'

BOSTON (AP) — Chief Justice Elijah Adlow of Municipal Court says that if old English laws making it unlawful to be a "vagabond and abroad in the night" were resurrected, crime in the streets might go down. Adlow, long noted for his peppy comments on a wide range of topics, told a television audience in Boston that such laws date to the days of King James of England, and he credited them with making pickpockets and handbag snatchers almost nonexistent at the time.

In October, he said, 121 waiters in Boston's public transit system. "This was $4,000 in hard-earned money taken by criminals who knew they were going to get away with it," he said. "When you could pick them up as vagabonds or for being abroad in the nighttime without good reason, this type of crime was very low," the judge said. He was interviewed on WGBX-TV.

A Campaign Reform Package

The trouble with legislating some system which would solve the problem of financing presidential campaigns is that the party which already has the President, whether it is Republican or Democratic, needs assistance less than the party which is on the outside of the great federal power, looking in.

At the moment, the Democrats are out of office and broke. The Republicans have a President, and they are in touch with all the financing they need for putting on a campaign for his reelection.

The result is elemental. The Democratic Congress is willing to vote through some scheme for financing both presidential campaigns through tax dollars.

The Republican party, and its President, are violently opposed to such a proposition.

And neutral observers, unfortunately, seem to have no very clear or convincing verdict as to the soundness of the proposal.

What we should all want, in theory, is clear enough.

We want some system which will reduce the likelihood that the Presidency can be for sale, to be bought by the candidate or party which has the most money to spend on television time. We want a system which will eliminate the debts a successful presidential candidate owes to campaign contributors and traditionally pays off in dollars, but in favors, preferences, or honors which come out of the public treasury.

If we are ever going to attain such a relatively pure system, we are going to have to make reliance on governmental financing of political campaigns compulsory, and not merely optional. And, in order to persuade the parties into that arrangement, we are going to have to decree and set some stern limits on the amount of campaign spending, whatever the source, which will be permitted.

That would have to involve a close limitation of something like the British system, in which there are, by law, strict limits on the amount of money a candidate or party can do, but also on the time it can claim. Theoretically, the British get a lot more hoopla and advertising agency income-making and a lot more direct discussion of the issues than we do. Theoretically, we ought to be in favor of the British system. Shorter, tighter, more frugal campaigns might lead to better campaigning and more intelligent voting.

But what we do not see anywhere, not even among the politicians who are most in trouble with finances because they are out of power, is any willingness to go all the way in reforming the American political campaign.

They are willing to vote themselves campaign money out of the public treasury. They are not willing to limit the time or the purposes for which it can be spent.

But when the people undertake to have the public treasury finance political campaigns, as they may do some day, they have a right to insist that they have a right to finance that, because an especially notorious example of the official hypocrisy notices sometimes indulges in.

But the technique is not any more importing when it is employed by that civilized and intelligent Jew, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, to explain her orders to her troops to cross an international frontier and invade East Pakistan. In fact, it may be even more shocking to find such hard-boiled ruthlessness coming from the land once supposed to be dedicated to the principles of non-violence than it was to get it from Hiller. At any rate, the Indian troops are under orders which permit them to invade East Pakistan as a "defensive action," and that is what they have been doing.

The question is, who is pure enough to quarrel with India's self-defense invasion of another country?

Certainly not Russia, which invaded both Hungary and Czechoslovakia for their own good, without even bothering to plead any imaginary self-defense.

And certainly not the United States, which, as long ago as the Mexican War, and as recently as the other day in Southeast Asia, has claimed the right of the "protective reaction strike" to reach across boundaries to punish even an unfriendly rural gesture.

The realistic truth is that the world is helpless before its own hypocrisy, because almost everybody, not merely the acknowledged villains, but also the supposed good guys, has some complicity in it. To end a war is obviously much more important than it might be to end the hypocrisy by which one side or another justifies whatever actions it feels like undertaking. But it might be that, if nations weren't so brazenly confident of their ability to force everybody else to accept the cover-up words, they might hesitate a little more before committing the act.

We Knew The Music

It was only by his death, the other day, that we even learned of the existence of a jazz composer named Ses Contrey.

And our ignorance fell even more contemptible when we discovered, reading about him, the identity of the compositions his talent gave to us all.

Until we read that it was he, we had been under the law, unformed information that "Kitten On The Keys" was one of those pieces of folk music, handed down, like "Greensleeves," without ever being credited to any name.

And if anyone had asked us who wrote "Grandfather's Clock," we would probably have tried to get away with attributing it to Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

It is an especially sad kind of ignorance and error, which denies credit and honor to anybody who creates a piece of happiness and pleasure for the world through his art. We hope that, somehow, Ses Contrey heard the number of times so many of us played and whistled and sang the pieces he wrote.

Questionable Kind Of Vigilance

As much as we sympathize with the objective, we harbor misgivings over the State's request that citizens report any motor vehicle giving off excessive exhaust and noise.

While State Motor Vehicle Czar, Robert Leuba is careful to point out that a police limit on such reports is a "police" type of procedure only a step removed from the police, the State's request requires great discretion. The possibility of abuse, when the non-professional citizen's standards cannot be ignored.

Using one driver to evaluate and take action on the other driver's exhaust emission, could open the door to more of this sort of questionable vigilance. The intention is to educate drivers to a source of air pollution, but it's a type of spying that is not consistent with the American way of doing things and carries the potential for mischief.

The registered owner of a vehicle, under the system, will be sent letters of complaints that have been made through post cards provided at various locations by the state. But the name of the complainant will be withheld so that the innocent target of any malicious complaints will not know who is subjecting him to a nuisance. There's just too much opportunity here for people motivated by ill will.

Granted, no "real" harm is done because no arrest is made, but if a car owner is unjustly charged with a nuisance that could be counter-productive. A serious matter will not be taken seriously.

Even sincere complainants could be wrong. In the winter, when hot exhaust gases form thick vapor trails, the car could be mistaken for excessive exhaust emission.

It seems to us that the heavy smoke given off by the defective vehicles the State is targeting can be detected easily enough by teachers, or other law-enforcement officers should be the ones to do the simple checking. The offending car would be towed by the trained eye of a policeman.

Service stations could be enlisted in the effort. The state might ask operators of the stations to point out the defect to drivers. Between the police and the station attendants, it would be possible to mount an effective campaign without relying upon the partly-informed public which is the subject of this NEW HAVEN REGISTER.

But when the people undertake to have the public treasury finance political campaigns, as they may do some day, they have a right to insist that they have a right to finance that, because an especially notorious example of the official hypocrisy notices sometimes indulges in.

But the technique is not any more importing when it is employed by that civilized and intelligent Jew, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, to explain her orders to her troops to cross an international frontier and invade East Pakistan. In fact, it may be even more shocking to find such hard-boiled ruthlessness coming from the land once supposed to be dedicated to the principles of non-violence than it was to get it from Hiller. At any rate, the Indian troops are under orders which permit them to invade East Pakistan as a "defensive action," and that is what they have been doing.

The question is, who is pure enough to quarrel with India's self-defense invasion of another country?

Certainly not Russia, which invaded both Hungary and Czechoslovakia for their own good, without even bothering to plead any imaginary self-defense.

And certainly not the United States, which, as long ago as the Mexican War, and as recently as the other day in Southeast Asia, has claimed the right of the "protective reaction strike" to reach across boundaries to punish even an unfriendly rural gesture.

The realistic truth is that the world is helpless before its own hypocrisy, because almost everybody, not merely the acknowledged villains, but also the supposed good guys, has some complicity in it. To end a war is obviously much more important than it might be to end the hypocrisy by which one side or another justifies whatever actions it feels like undertaking. But it might be that, if nations weren't so brazenly confident of their ability to force everybody else to accept the cover-up words, they might hesitate a little more before committing the act.

We Knew The Music

It was only by his death, the other day, that we even learned of the existence of a jazz composer named Ses Contrey.

And our ignorance fell even more contemptible when we discovered, reading about him, the identity of the compositions his talent gave to us all.

Until we read that it was he, we had been under the law, unformed information that "Kitten On The Keys" was one of those pieces of folk music, handed down, like "Greensleeves," without ever being credited to any name.

And if anyone had asked us who wrote "Grandfather's Clock," we would probably have tried to get away with attributing it to Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

It is an especially sad kind of ignorance and error, which denies credit and honor to anybody who creates a piece of happiness and pleasure for the world through his art. We hope that, somehow, Ses Contrey heard the number of times so many of us played and whistled and sang the pieces he wrote.

Questionable Kind Of Vigilance

As much as we sympathize with the objective, we harbor misgivings over the State's request that citizens report any motor vehicle giving off excessive exhaust and noise.

While State Motor Vehicle Czar, Robert Leuba is careful to point out that a police limit on such reports is a "police" type of procedure only a step removed from the police, the State's request requires great discretion. The possibility of abuse, when the non-professional citizen's standards cannot be ignored.

Using one driver to evaluate and take action on the other driver's exhaust emission, could open the door to more of this sort of questionable vigilance. The intention is to educate drivers to a source of air pollution, but it's a type of spying that is not consistent with the American way of doing things and carries the potential for mischief.

The registered owner of a vehicle, under the system, will be sent letters of complaints that have been made through post cards provided at various locations by the state. But the name of the complainant will be withheld so that the innocent target of any malicious complaints will not know who is subjecting him to a nuisance. There's just too much opportunity here for people motivated by ill will.

Granted, no "real" harm is done because no arrest is made, but if a car owner is unjustly charged with a nuisance that could be counter-productive. A serious matter will not be taken seriously.

Even sincere complainants could be wrong. In the winter, when hot exhaust gases form thick vapor trails, the car could be mistaken for excessive exhaust emission.

It seems to us that the heavy smoke given off by the defective vehicles the State is targeting can be detected easily enough by teachers, or other law-enforcement officers should be the ones to do the simple checking. The offending car would be towed by the trained eye of a policeman.

Service stations could be enlisted in the effort. The state might ask operators of the stations to point out the defect to drivers. Between the police and the station attendants, it would be possible to mount an effective campaign without relying upon the partly-informed public which is the subject of this NEW HAVEN REGISTER.

A Campaign Reform Package

The trouble with legislating some system which would solve the problem of financing presidential campaigns is that the party which already has the President, whether it is Republican or Democratic, needs assistance less than the party which is on the outside of the great federal power, looking in.

At the moment, the Democrats are out of office and broke. The Republicans have a President, and they are in touch with all the financing they need for putting on a campaign for his reelection.

The result is elemental. The Democratic Congress is willing to vote through some scheme for financing both presidential campaigns through tax dollars.

The Republican party, and its President, are violently opposed to such a proposition.

And neutral observers, unfortunately, seem to have no very clear or convincing verdict as to the soundness of the proposal.

What we should all want, in theory, is clear enough.

We want some system which will reduce the likelihood that the Presidency can be for sale, to be bought by the candidate or party which has the most money to spend on television time. We want a system which will eliminate the debts a successful presidential candidate owes to campaign contributors and traditionally pays off in dollars, but in favors, preferences, or honors which come out of the public treasury.

If we are ever going to attain such a relatively pure system, we are going to have to make reliance on governmental financing of political campaigns compulsory, and not merely optional. And, in order to persuade the parties into that arrangement, we are going to have to decree and set some stern limits on the amount of campaign spending, whatever the source, which will be permitted.

That would have to involve a close limitation of something like the British system, in which there are, by law, strict limits on the amount of money a candidate or party can do, but also on the time it can claim. Theoretically, the British get a lot more hoopla and advertising agency income-making and a lot more direct discussion of the issues than we do. Theoretically, we ought to be in favor of the British system. Shorter, tighter, more frugal campaigns might lead to better campaigning and more intelligent voting.

But what we do not see anywhere, not even among the politicians who are most in trouble with finances because they are out of power, is any willingness to go all the way in reforming the American political campaign.

They are willing to vote themselves campaign money out of the public treasury. They are not willing to limit the time or the purposes for which it can be spent.

But when the people undertake to have the public treasury finance political campaigns, as they may do some day, they have a right to insist that they have a right to finance that, because an especially notorious example of the official hypocrisy notices sometimes indulges in.

Man Meets P51—Again

George Valentine of Ashland, Ohio, is obviously a very happy man. Reason: Seeing again after 26 years a P51 fighter such as he flew on 22 missions over Nazi-occupied Europe during World War II. It wasn't his exact plane, but close enough to bring a rush of nostalgia. Valentine, now with the staff of Ashland College, was invited to get the feel of it again by the owner, an Air National Guard member. Bottom right, Valentine in the cockpit and, left, with his own P51 26 years ago.

Ansonia Brass Plant Open Despite Strikes Elsewhere

ANSONIA (AP) — The company spokesman said a bargaining committee representing three unions was presenting a settlement proposal to the company's six plants across the country to remain free of strike problems. About a half-dozen picketing workers from other plants, however, were stationed at one gate of the plant here in protest of failure in contract bargaining. An Ansonia American spokesman said the disagreement was "strictly one of wages." Like union spokesmen, however, he declined to give specific information about current pay levels or figures advanced in the bargaining. Workers have been on strike since Saturday at plants in Waterbury, Los Angeles, Detroit, Buffalo, N.Y., and Kenosha, Wis. "I know what position it puts me in with the international but I have a mandate from the union members," Carlson said. "The strike is still on everywhere," said Bill Kent, international representative of United Auto Workers. "I know that it had been agreed earlier that all of the plants would be struck," said Pascal R. Pacific, president of United Steel Workers Local 908 in Buffalo. "However, you have an agreement for a settlement here because it concluded the most packing firm had profits too high to warrant the increase. The commission said the company's profit margin over all this year is higher than profits in the base period. The commission also announced receipt of 70 new applications by 49 firms, bringing the total so far to 255 applications by 192 companies. These are area companies which ask permission today to raise prices. The items involved are not specified. Where incomplete information was submitted, an "X" is entered in place of the percentage increase. Agnew Criticizes AMA For 'Doomsday Rhetoric'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Vice President Spiro T. Agnew says he expects Democrats to use "doomsday rhetoric" about pollution, but he's sorry to see the American Medical Association do the same thing. The vice president's criticism of the AMA came in a Sunday night speech before the American Medical Political Action Committee, meeting here in conjunction with an AMA convention. Agnew referred to a national advertisement in a national magazine last month which said diseases caused by pollution cost some $5 billion a year. MANCHESTER STATE BANK CELEBRATES 1ST ANNIVERSARY

Assets Now Over $6 Million Growth of Bank Result of Directors Policy

One year ago, the Manchester State Bank opened for business with $1.7 million in assets. Today, after one year of operation, its assets are in excess of $6 million.

The reason for this outstanding growth rate is the bank's "Full Service" capability and the fact that its policy is to serve the needs of local business and local residents.

The Board of Directors of the bank recently reaffirmed their position as a local bank by pointing out the following information: In the past five years the Manchester market area population has increased by 5.4% to 109,924 people.

The Manchester area is growing at a very fast rate, however, in line with this growth there is one very important fact, the new business growth is being developed by local business people.

The objectives of the Manchester State Bank were set forth by the local men who planned the bank over three years ago.

Mr. Edmond Parker, President, stated that "Service to local residents means many things, such as: Saturday banking from 9 a.m. to 12 noon, 24 hour deposit system, after hours banking from 8 to 5 (every day except Fri.) to our drive-in window, banking by mail with postage paid both ways by us and many other services, some small in nature, others more important, but all of them aimed at one thing... service to our customers.

Gaming Unit Seeks Agents For Lottery

HARTFORD (AP) — The Connecticut gaming commission is looking for thousands of store-owners and other businessmen to become ticket agents for the new state lottery.

Santa Claus made a couple of preliminary visits to the area recently and he is reportedly planning others. Herald photographers Albert Bucevicius and Reginald Pinto were among the fans present when Santa arrived at the Parkade and later at Tri-City Shopping Plaza. Santa was obviously well-received, but one little boy was unsure about accepting his gifts.

Veterans Day Enriched Sunday by NFL Backs

NEW YORK (AP)—Veterans Day arrived a bit late for National Football League quarterbacks this year.

Three of the walking wounded, field generals returning from summer skirmishes that had put them out of commission, joined the autumn of football Sunday.

Two of them were the battles but the war. For the third, it was just the other way around.

Joe Namath, exploding onto the scene in New York, tossed three bombshells on route to a 28-yard aerial attack only to miss the mark in the last minute as the Jets bowed to the San Francisco 49ers 24-10.

And Bart Starr, coolly directed the Green Bay Packers, mitted tactical blunders that made the difference as a 20-13 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles.

But Sunday's other clash, Baltimore's Ralph Slaughter 27-14, Cleveland beat Houston 37-24, Cincinnati stomped San Diego 31-0, Minnesota smothered Atlanta 26-7, Buffalo topped New England 27-20 and St. Louis swatted the New York Giants 24-7.

In tonight's nationally televised (ABC, 8 p.m., EST) game, the Chicago Bears invade Miami to face the American Conference East-leading Dolphins.

At 6:58 p.m. screamed their approval, Namath trotted in to replace starter Bob Davis, injured in the second quarter.

Namath hit Rich Caster on a 37-yard pass play for the Jets' first touchdown, but San Francisco came back with a Brodie, 4-11.

The crowd had never stopped cheering and Namath responded with a 20-yard pass to Caster, who was put on the field.

"I want to feel at home out there," but today I didn't. I've hated just prior to the contest Ed Bell to bring New York to improve my mental and who had not played in a game since August when he injured his left knee in an exhibition game against the Detroit Lions.

Thrilling Twist Provided By Namath in Jet Defeat

NEW YORK (AP)—Joe Namath has returned. He's not a new Joe Namath; he even has more scars from the last time he trotted from the Shea Stadium sidelines onto the football field. But the 1971 Joe Namath is a very popular model.

Namath, the New York Jets' quarterback, played in a regular season National Football League game Sunday for the first time since October 1970 when he broke his hand against Baltimore. He didn't start against the San Francisco 49ers, but he didn't bring home a victory. But the model-style swinger, who has a fair for the dramatic, provided every thrill.

It was a homecoming, of sorts, except for the person being welcomed. "I want to feel at home out there," but today I didn't. I've hated just prior to the contest Ed Bell to bring New York to improve my mental and who had not played in a game since August when he injured his left knee in an exhibition game against the Detroit Lions.

Bill's Top Draft Pick Too Much for Patriots Hill Figures He Has Shot At Winning Rookie Laurels

BUFFALO (AP)—J. D. Hill, the Buffalo Bills' top draft pick, figures he still has a shot at rookie-of-the-year honors.

Hill, injured before the National Football League season got under way, has played in just two games and only three are left on the schedule.

But in his first starting role Sunday, he scored two touchdowns on pass plays that covered 11 and 47 yards as the Bills won their first game of the season by defeating New England 27-20.

Straight Basic Football Wins For Cards Against Giants

NEW YORK (AP)—"It was very simple," said St. Louis Cardinals coach Bill Holliday. "We just played straight basic football against the Giants."

Whenever the Giants marched straight basic football against the Cardinals' safety Larry Wilson had a more accurate explanation.

"No team can make as many mistakes as the Giants made and hope to win," Wilson said. "I don't feel I played well. I've got to improve my mental state because I didn't feel at ease," Namath said.
