Luckily Nixon Brought News We have, over the course of the Nixon administration, maintained a proper degree of professional sympathy with Washington's news gatherers as they have complained over the failure of President Nixon to conduct regular and frequent press conferences. So we tuned in, last night, on the first full televised news conference held in the White House since June 1, way back in open questioning, in which the nation's best reporters put all those great questions they had been saving up for the past year, we found ourselves in possession of one additional piece of information and enlightenment. It was an item the President himself had, perhaps out of courteous apprehension the occasion might fall flat without it, brought to the news conference and volunteered himself. It was the news that the United States,

South Vietnam, and North Vietnam have all agreed to go back to the negotiating table at Paris on July 13.

This was important news, and most of the evening's questions then revolved

We share the President's obvious hope the table at Paris will constitute a new opportunity for both sides to demonstrate a new flexibility inside those basic positions which, since neither can alter them substantially, have to be given different shadings and interpretations for there to be a possibility of settlement. So much for the news of the press conference. Back to the conference itself. We observe that it displayed President Nixon himself in such fine fettle that one wonders why he should ever avoid such evenings, that it displayed the press itself in such a kindergarten mood that one wonders why it claims it wants and needs more such evenings. This is not, we hasten to add, the fault of the press; give it more regular press conferences, such as it had under Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy for instance, and it would eventually relax, stop pressing, and ask questions with something more in mind than the audience.

Once there was horror over what i supposedly did to the lower incomes. But we have become so acclimated to it that, if it does represent a special burden on any one level of income, we don't really notice it any more. There was no real outcry over the agreement Governor Meskill and the Democratic Legislature reached to send the tax up to its new all time high at seven per cent. Nobody is really going to notice pay some of our faithful rampart watchers never tire of warning us, the Communists never for an stop trying to subvert us.

At the moment, we have to guard our selves against one of the most fiendish of all Russian efforts to entice us away from our own style of life. We refer to the advice being given t the Russian people, by their chief nutritional expert, to have themselves at least four meals a day, which is one more than the good old American standard of thre What Dr. Konstantin Petrovsky recom mends is a good heavy breakfast, equal to at least 20 per cent of the food to be consumed during the whole day, followed by a 35 per cent lunch, followed by a 35 per cent supper, with it all to be capped off by a late-evening snack which would provide 10 per cent of the day's food in-

It is this daringly subversive promo tion of the late-evening mack, an illicit and clandestine custom which has already, we are afraid, invaded too many American homes, which should be the major concern of those who dedicate themselves to the defense of our tradi tional American shape in the world,

It has to be recognized, as we plot our defenses, that the idea of a late-evening snack has indeed already infiltrated the American scene to such an extent that there are quite likely to be some characters who will even proclaim that it is more of an old American custom than a new Russian wrinkle. But there is an obvious difference between sneaking a snack in the privacy of your own kitchen, which keeps it an illicit special privilege, and openly proclaiming it as an approved formula for the n established custom, would do more than any other Communist plot has done to turn us soft and defenseless, depriving us even of our will to resist. Let the Commies keep their gluttony to themselves, and let us deport any fourth meal fifth columnists we discover. Would anybody who suspects a neighbor of late-evening snackery please write an anonymous letter?

The Word Ethic

Not long ago the New York State Controller reported widespread "underutilization of employe time" - in other words, goofing-off at taxpayer expense The report was denied of course, yet it obviously hit pretty close to home.

It found, for example, that city water meter readers did one-half the work of employes performing similar jobs in private industry, that building inspectors goldbrick one-third of their time, tha truck crews average only a half-day's actual work each day (or twice as much as road repair truck crews, whose performance was recently measured at about two hours daily by The New York

But low productivity is not confined to the public sector. Private industry is similarly afflicted.

Several months ago "Engineering News-Record," McGraw-Hill's construction weekly, published an extended analysis of the sort of restrictive labor union practices and low production quotas that, according to the publication, waste from 15 per cent to 40 per cent of every

For example, one master mechanic. who in accordance with a union requirement that he is paid for every hour that any man is working on the job (either one of his mechanics or an outside ser vice man), was paid more than $94,000 one year-$18,000 in base salary and a whopping $75,000 in overtime. Coffee breaks not uncommonly erode 15 per cent of a sever-hour day. Jurisdictional disputes over things like which union is responsible for holding the nozzle on a fuel truck during fueling operations have caused hundreds of stoppages and cost hundreds of thousands of dollars in de-

In both the private and public sector, the work ethic-the belief in the dignity of honest toil, the feeling of accomplishment at having helped produce something worthwhile-clearly has fallen on hard times. We worry that the greatest effect of this is on the character of a people. Work is not always enjoyable, and certainly loafing has been known to all imes and ages. Yet work is necessary to progress, and we wonder how long a society can remain viable if too many people are content to get by without effort .-WALL STREET JOURNAL.

outskirts of South Manchester. He was a genial man and very well liked by his customers. In later years he built and operated a small store on the west side of the street opposite his home. A Keefe family lived on the southeast corner of Spruce and Wells. On the northeast corner was Jim Burke's grocery and grain store on top of a bank several steps higher than the road. Burke's saloon was in the rear of the store. The law then required all saloons to close at 11 p.m. For some time after that hour the sidewalks were not wide enough for many men who wound up in the streets or someone's door yard. One night O.C. and a buddy had spent the evening with a friend and were returning home a little after 11. Everyone we met was trying his best to follow those crooked and dancing streets home. But opposite the saloon were two men standing in the heavy shade of a maple

Before we reached School St. O.C. was hit in the back with a stone but because his heavy coat hung loose he was not hurt. Turning around he shouted "What the matter with you?" Answer "We'll show you," and the two Irishmen came running up the hill.

The one on O.C.'s side was several strides ahead of his companion and very foolishly kept on running in until his jaw met something that didn't give way. O.C. had every advantage that could be asked for. A foot against the base of a corner light pole so he could reach out with all he had. It seemed the poor guy's feet jumped up. He landed on his head in the cobblestone gutter before his feet got back down. The other fellow stopped short. For what seemed a long time three of us. without a word, stood looking at the other who didn't move or make a sound. At last he started to groan and then move a little. His friend got him up and started helping him away. We came home.

The big Globe Hollow dam was under construction and O.C.'s buddy was waterboy or time-keeper or something. He "That fellow you hit works over on the new dam. His name is Sc&So. He was a short stocky fellow.

South Windsor

Town Gets Grant For Youth Work

State Representative Thomas Donnelly has announced that South Windsor will receive a state grant for $11,730 as "action money" for establishing a youth services bureau within the Police Department.

Donnelly said that funds, granted by the Connecticut Planning Commission on Criminal Administration, are part of P fiscal 1972 allocation for youth crime prevention in the state. Donnelly added that South Windsor is the only town of comparable size to have been selected to receive the award during the "funding round." According to Donnelly, the grant provides funds for one year for salary and expenses for a Youth Services Officer within the town's detective bureau. "The objective is to represent a consistent policy of service to young people in our community and to curb pre-delinquent conduct, specifically with juveniles in the town's population." He noted that the youth population in town is reaching 17,000 and said he felt with this aid, the police department will be better able to coordinate activities with our loon a "high priority basis." Library Hours Library hours and dates for summer playground activities have been changed and are as follows: Monday, Pleasant Valley; Tuesday, Orchard Hill; Wednesday, Wapping; and Thursday, Ell Terry; starting at 10 a.m. daily.
