President Meets with Democratic Leaders

President Gerald Ford Friday met with the democratic congressional leadership to seek areas of agreement. He agreed to review the majority party's energy and economic proposals while at Camp David. With

Economic-Energy Plan Compromise Possible

CAMP DAVID, Md. (UPI) — President Ford is considering whether to compromise his economic-energy program with a Democratic congressional plan. Ford is spending the weekend at this Maryland hilltop presidential retreat with his wife Betty and the problem of whether he can mesh his solution for the recession and the energy shortage with that of the Democrats who control Congress.

Unexpected Climax

Ford, in an unexpected climax to a meeting Friday in the White House with Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, House Speaker Carl Albert and other Democratic leaders on Capitol Hill, halted six weeks of attacking his opposition for doing little or nothing to solve America's woes.

At meeting's end, he said of his and the Democratic plans, "There are some differences as to details."

Early Decision Promised

"I have agreed to study the plan submitted by the Democratic leadership, and on Monday, if not before, I will indicate to the speaker and Sen. Mansfield where I think we can find an area of agreement, of accommodation."

He cited one "possible area of compromise" — his $3 a barrel hike in oil import fees. The first $1 of the increase went into effect Feb. 1. The second $1 was scheduled to take effect today.

Postponement May End Feud

Congress last week voted to suspend the entire fee hike for 90 days, a direct challenge to the President's drive for his energy plan. Ford has vowed to veto the suspension measure. But he said Friday it had been suggested he postpone the March 1 installment to signal an end to his war with the Democrats over the energy issue.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Ford was considering suspending the March $1 installment for 90 days. Nessen said this would not be "a concession" by Ford but a signal of "success in his effort to get Congress to get busy."

Plan Based on Many Factors

Ford's energy plan — of which the import fee is only a preliminary step — is based on raising retail prices of gasoline and other petroleum products through a system of oil taxes and tariffs in order to reduce demand and make the country more independent of Arab oil suppliers.

The Democrats oppose the oil taxes and tariffs but would raise the federal gasoline tax 5 cents and use that money to finance energy research.

Both Ford and the Democrats want to cut income and business taxes. Ford would reduce them $16 billion. The House this week voted for $21.3 billion in tax cuts.

NEWS CAPSULES

Subway Wreck Toll 29

LONDON (UPI) — Subway officials say they suspect brake failure in the crash of a crowded train that killed 29 rush-hour passengers in a dead-end tunnel under the city's financial district. Rescue workers with oxygen torches burned through the compacted metal of the first car in the six-car train to try to reach 15 bodies still inside. Eighty-eight persons were injured when the train carrying an estimated 300 morning commuters ran into the end-of-the-line brick wall on a downhill approach at Moorgate station in London's financial center, known as The City.

Amnesty Extended

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford has extended for a final month his earned re-entry program for Vietnam draft dodgers and military deserters. The extension did not deter critics of the limited amnesty. "It's irrelevant," said Mitch Snyder, a convicted draft resister. Ford's program, launched in September and already extended once, was to expire at midnight tonight. Ford extended it until March 31. He said this would be the "final extension."

Rebels Shell Airport

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Rebel gunners shelled Pochentong airport today one hour before six U.S. congressmen arrived on a fact-finding mission, but the rockets caused no damage or casualties. The five representatives and one senator flew in from Saigon aboard Air America commercial aircraft and immediately went to the U.S. Embassy for a briefing on Cambodia's deteriorating military and political situation. Communist troops Friday seized bases at nearby Toul Leap and Ang Sdok, leaving the insurgents within easy artillery range of the airport and American planes which have been supplying the capital with food and ammunition.

Bomb Seize

DANBURY (UPI) — A bus bound from New York to Boston was halted for four hours Friday evening while Connecticut state police looked for a bomb reported by an anonymous caller.

New York Port Authority police alerted Connecticut authorities at 4:30 p.m. that Greyhound Bus Co. had received the bomb threat.

Passengers were checked and evacuated from the bus after it was stopped by police on Interstate 84 at Danbury.

The passengers were taken to a restaurant while a state police bomb squad went through bus and baggage. Nothing was found and the journey continued at 8:45 p.m.

Welfare Staff Honors Amodeo On Retirement

Friends and co-workers honored Vincent Amodeo Friday night at the Colony upon his retirement as acting regional director for the division of children and youth services in Manchester, a post he has held since October.

A resident of West Hartford, Amodeo has spent several years in Manchester working in welfare related services. Prior to his work in social services, he was a recruiter in the U.S. Navy medical corps for 20 years. After retiring from the service, he worked with the welfare department in Hartford while attending the University of Hartford. He received his masters degree in social work from the University of Connecticut in 1967.

He came to Manchester after his graduation as a supervisor of adult public assistance with the state welfare department.

Since then, he switched between Hartford and Manchester on different assignments with the state welfare department.

In 1971, he was program supervisor in Manchester. In that office, he was responsible for all public assistance workers, the child welfare workers, and all the clerical staff.

In 1973, he was appointed program supervisor of everybody in the welfare department, including the protective services unit which protects the rights of all children.

Lorenz Kidnapers' Demand Granted by West Berlin Police

BERLIN (UPI) — West Berlin police today released two leftists jailed for illegal demonstrations, meeting the first demand by kidnapers of a West Berlin mayoral candidate.

Shortly before 10 a.m., police freed Ettore Cannella and Gerhard Jagdmann, sentenced to seven and 14 months in prison respectively.

The kidnapers of the Christian Democratic mayoral candidate have warned they will kill Peter Lorenz unless authorities release six more of their jailed comrades and fly them out of West Germany by Monday.

Police Friday said they would release the two prisoners to meet an earlier deadline, but appealed to the kidnapers over local radio stations for "convincing proof" Lorenz is still alive.

The kidnapers Friday said they wanted three urban guerrillas brought from West German jails to West Berlin by Sunday and released by Monday, along with three more from prisons here.

They also wanted a fully fueled, Boeing 707 jet with crew, to fly them all out of the country, and at least $8,000 each.

Earlier they said they wanted 10 persons who were jailed after an illegal demonstration last year to be let free, but authorities said eight already had been released and the last two would be on the streets today.

The kidnapers outlined their demands in a letter to the West German news agency DPA. The envelope also held a picture showing their captive huddled on a rumpled bed in a nondescript room.

Two males and a female, carrying sub-machine guns, seized Lorenz early Thursday. Social Democratic Mayor Klaus Schuetz said Sunday's elections will take place, but politicians have suspended their campaigns.

Guerrillas Murder American Consul

CORDOBA, Argentina (UPI) — Leftist guerrillas killed honorary U.S. Consul John P. Egan with a single bullet between the eyes Friday night and dumped his body along a lonely dirt road.

His hands were tied behind his back and he still wore his bedroom slippers and the clothes he had on when four heavily armed men dragged him from his home Wednesday.

Draped in Flag

His body was draped in the blue and white flag of the leftist Montoneros guerrillas.

A newspaper clipping describing the death of two Montoneros in a gunfight with police Monday was wired to his body. The Montoneros said earlier they kidnaped Egan in the name of their slain comrades.

A scrawled message on a piece of cardboard leaning against the body read: "Peron or Death. Long Live the Fatherland. Until victory, my general."

Claim Link to Peron

The Montoneros, who claim allegiance to the memory of Juan Peron, the late Argentine president, had vowed to execute Egan unless the government bowed to their demands for proof that four missing comrades were still alive.

They set a deadline of 7 p.m. Friday, but Foreign Minister Alberto Vignes said the government would never negotiate with terrorists.

Egan, 62, was a Perma, Mont., native who worked for the Kaiser Corp. for 30 years before he retired to this city 430 miles northwest of Buenos Aires.

He had been serving as honorary consul since the previous American consul was kidnaped last year.

'Despicable Crime'

In Washington, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger called the slaying "a senseless and despicable crime which shocks the sensibility of all civilized men."

"Mr. Egan was a loyal, dedicated citizen who served his country quietly and effectively," Kissinger said. "He joins the ranks of loyal Americans who have laid down their lives in the line of duty."

New Fears Raised

Egan's death raised new fears for the safety of the president of the supreme court of Buenos Aires, Alfredo Benedicto Anzoarregui, who was dragged from his chauffeured car Friday in Monte Grande, about 17 miles south of Buenos Aires.

In another incident, Montoneros armed with machine guns ambushed a patrol car in a southwest Buenos Aires suburb and killed three policemen.

Regional Training Center Bonds Given Quick Approval

The State Bonding Commission needed only minutes Friday to unanimously commit $1.4 million to Manchester for its Regional Occupational Training Center for the handicapped.

The facility, approved in referendum last November, will be constructed on 2.2 acres of land at Hillstown Rd. and Bidwell St. The parcel is on the campus of Manchester Community College but was deeded to the town by the state.

The town will issue short term notes for the construction cost but will be reimbursed 100 per cent by the state when the center is completed. The $1.4 million committed Friday is for that reimbursement.

The town's cost will be the interest on the notes, estimated at about $60,000. Lawrence Associates of Manchester, architects for the center, estimate it could be completed and in use by mid-1976.

The center will be the property of the state for five years (under the supervision of the Manchester school board). At the end of that period it would become a town-owned facility.

Regional towns which have sent letters of intent for participating in the center's program are: Andover, Ashford, Bolton, Columbia, Coventry, East Windsor, Ellington, Hebron, Mansfield, Marlborough, South Windsor, Stafford, Tolland, Vernon and Willington.

Those who participate would pay tuition and the state would furnish a grant toward the operation. School board estimates are the town's share of the operating cost would be about $22,500 annually.

The Weather

Cloudy today with the highs in the upper 30s or low 40s. Partly cloudy tonight with lows in the 20s. Partly cloudy Sunday with high in the 30s. Chance of precipitation 20 per cent today and tonight. Monday's outlook: fair and cold.

Economist Challenges Upturn Predictions

WASHINGTON (UPI) — For the first time, a respected economist has used the ugly word "depression" to describe where he thinks the economy is headed.

Arthur M. Okun, who served as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Lyndon B. Johnson, told Congress Friday that the administration's predictions of an economic upturn this summer are wrong.

"It becomes ever more likely that the history books will record this episode as a depression rather than a recession," Okun told Congress' Joint Economic Committee.

Chides Congress

He chided Congress for taking so long to cut taxes to stimulate recovery.

In an interview, Okun, now a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, said by predicting a depression he did not mean anything to compare "in duration, magnitude or severity" with the Great Depression of the 1930s.

In his testimony, he said, "It would take a miracle to stop unemployment below 9 per cent, and it is close to an even bet that it will reach 10 per cent."

No Standard Definition

Although economists have no standard definition of the term "depression," Paul Samuelson, winner of the Nobel Prize for economics, defines it as a period when unemployment reaches 10 per cent.

The administration has predicted that unemployment, which reached 8.2 per cent in January, would peak this summer at 8.5 per cent and average 8.1 per cent this year.

Alan Greenspan, President Ford's chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, says he is reviewing his forecast that joblessness will not go beyond 8.5 per cent. An upward revision is "possible," he has testified.

Okun says that while the plunge in homebuilding and auto sales may end this summer, businesses are selling off accumulated inventories rather than adding to them and are slashing their spending for expanding plants and buying equipment.

"These will pull the economy down to even lower depths in the months ahead," he said.

Rhode Island Prison Inmate Found Dead

CRANSTON, R.I. (UPI) — A new inmate at the Adult Correctional Institutions here was found stabbed to death in his cell Friday night, breaking a brief calm, which had set over the prison following two days of inmate disturbances.

Peter Lombardi, 46, a former Providence policeman, sentenced last Monday to two years after pleading guilty to selling heroin, was found stabbed in the back in his cell after missing the nine p.m. headcount.

Earlier Friday 13 "ringleaders" had been transferred within the facility after three prisoner incidents with 24 hours had prompted authorities to call in riot-equipped state and local police.

Lombardi's death was ruled a homicide but not immediately linked to the earlier black-dominated inmate troubles, prison officials said.

A four-poster Sheraton bed with original fringed ruffie on the canopy dominates this pink carpeted room with pink floral paper.

The dining room is reflected in the gold framed bull's eye mirror which hangs over the buffet.

The autumn-gold counter divides the kitchen area from the family room. The multi-paned window and sliding glass doors provide a full view of the back yard and access to a patio.

Originally the Bidwell farm, this Federal colonial home is now the residence of Dr. and Mrs. Charles W. Strant, 97 Prospect St.

A Heppelwhite mahogany sideboard with serpentine front, and adorned with girandoles is the focal point in the dining room.

Heralding Homes
They Knew it Was for Them

A few years ago when the future of Coventry's development was at issue, Dr. and Mrs. Charles W. Strant decided to sell their early American salt-box-type home in Coventry and seek more permanent quarters. Fate guided them to a Federal colonial on Prospect St. which the Strants say feels "like we've always lived here."
When Dr. Strant first entered the house to look at it, he just stood there and said to himself, "This is home."
Although their salt-box house still stands in Coventry, it remains as a colorful reminder of their former home in the form of a painting over the mantle in their present living room.
The one-time farm house on Prospect St. has undergone many changes during its history. At one time, says Dr. Strant, it was a two-family house with a large ell which has been removed.
Once there was a general store in the back which the Bidwell family operated, says Dr. Strant. Possibly, it is the oldest house in the immediate area, certainly the oldest on the street, the Strants agree.
With Dr. Strant's hobby of collecting and trading antiques, he has acquired a collection of some fine pieces of antique furniture which completes the colonial design of their home. Besides the Sheraton pieces in the living room, there is a Victorian arm chair worked in needlepoint in the corner by the fireplace. Complementing the furnishings are two wing chairs, one in gold, green and brown striped velvet, and one in a gold and brown floral print. A handpainted silk fire screen is one of Dr. Strant's favorite items. The period pieces are enhanced against celery green walls and soft green carpeting.
The hallway between the kitchen and dining room is uniquely lighted by an English heat lamp with a cranberry inverted thumbprint shade. The lamp, says Dr. Strant, was originally used in the ship captain's headquarters.
The kitchen and family room at the back of the house is one of the most attractive areas in the home, and the place where the Strants spend much of their time.
Colored pictures of the Strants' travels in the West are arranged on the paneled walls. A weathered horse is mounted above the pictures.
The grays, rose shades, pale green and white in the braided rug made by Mrs. Strant complement the green, gold and purple accent pillows on the floral print divan. Gold draped windows and a pair of lounge chairs upholstered in dark green and red vinyl give the room a homey look.
There's a family tradition involved in the chair Dr. Strant uses at the drop leaf table in the kitchen. The captain's chair was the doctor's grandfather's, and now Dr. Strant is a grandfather. It will go down in family history.
In what Mrs. Strant calls the "boy's room," (it's where the grandsons stay when they visit) there is a very masculine looking four-poster maple mushroom post bed that has been handed down in the Strant family.
Also from Dr. Strant's family are a small oak chest with stenciled carving and metal handles and a cane seater tiger maple chair.
The pine chest of drawers is one of several antique items in the house which Dr. Strant has refinished himself.
A rather small room, uniformly in color decor complements its size. The carpet and tweed effect wallpaper blend in golden harmony. White ruffled curtains and a white candlewick spread complete the decor.
Antique gold is also used in the medallion wallpaper design selected for the hall, upstairs and down. Combined with a rich gold and brown tweed carpeting on the hall floors and stairs, it creates a constant look of sunshine.
One of the outstanding features of the shaded colonial house is the sun parlor off the living room, which faces south. The window seats and valances are covered in matching cheery green floral print. Sunlight filters through the sheer white ruffled curtains.
Here Dr. Strant enjoys relaxing in a Lincoln rocker upholstered in wine velvet beside a Duncan Phyfe drop leaf table. Built-in storage units are full of catalogued information and slides of all the trips the Strants have taken.
If home is where the heart is, the love and appreciation of antiquity have helped the Strants to put their heart in their colonial home.

A low Sheraton drop leaf desk and a white brocade Sheraton sofa give the living room a period atmosphere.

No Need To Rush

We wonder if Gov. Ella Grasso's move to revamp the state's Public Utility Commission (PUC) isn't a bit premature. We know this was a promise and we know her use of the PUC issue in the last campaign undoubtedly added weight to her winning plurality. But the real question right now is not what reorienting, restructuring or redefining the PUC might accomplish but in the light of the many uncontrollable factors affecting energy supplies, whether the concept of state regulation of public utilities isn't becoming redundant. For example, to what extent can a state regulating, agency hold down rate increases due to increased taxes or import duties levied by the federal government? To what extent can Connecticut attempt to control utility prices and not undercut its utility firms' ability to attract investment funds in the credit market in competition with other private utilities now so restricted? At what point, if the state embarks on a bonding program to aid the utilities, does this investment begin to influence the state in favor of higher rates to enable the repayment of such bonds on schedule? Would this become a conflict of interest? This leads to another serious question which should be thoroughly debated. Should the state, if it becomes a conduit for investment funds for utilities, have a voice in management with a position on the board of directors? If so, who will represent the state? An elective or appointive official? A member of the revised PUC? Would the latter be a conflict of interest? But perhaps the paramount consideration for deferring Mrs. Grasso's plan is the need for the federal government to evolve and adopt a national energy policy. Until the federal government can establish the broad guidelines of energy use and development for the next decade or two, we do not see how any state regulatory agency can evolve and act in the context of a long-term state energy program to hold down prices and conserve scarce forms of fuel. This is not to say that Gov. Grasso's concept of revamping the PUC is wrong. Only the timing is wrong. We would hope the General Assembly will take her suggestions and give them an exhaustive and deliberate review. We think her pledge to the voters last November will be essentially filled if the PUC is revamped in 1976 or anytime before her term expires. What is proposed has far-reaching ramifications not only for the state, the utilities, the consumers and energy-dependent industries, but for the future generations of our state.

"I admire the incentive to cut, but this is not the right place," said Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-Va. And that's the way it is, Mrs. Balderdash Whitehurst was addressing himself to Defense Secretary James H. Schlesinger's proposal to save $250-million a year by ending federal subsidies to military food commissaries. Whitehurst represents a district which has a heavy population of retired military people, who still have commissary privileges.

Five other House members complained at an Armed Services Committee hearing that Schlesinger's plan would offend military voters. They are: Bill Nichols, D-Ala., Abraham Kazan Jr., D-Tex., Robert W. Daniel Jr., R-Va., Mendel J. Davis, D-S.C., and Antonio Won Pat, D-Guam.

In short, the idea is still to get re-elected. Subsidies to military commissaries enable these yummy supermarkets to sell food for an estimated 19 per cent less than stores patronized by the nation's common, civilian herd. Yet, as Schlesinger noted, military pay has risen by a whopping 125 per cent since 1964. Retirement pay, and the military is almost absolutely protected from unemployment.

Now a saving of $250-million, relatively speaking, is just hay. It represents about $1.25 for each resident of the United States. But it's still a saving. More important, the commissary issue offers members of Congress the chance to prove that they're serious about saving dough for all the taxpayers, not just a chosen few. Opposition to cut unfortunately reflects Congress' general attitude. A member will vote to economize, but only if economizing has no effect on his constituents.

What too many of our national legislators like to do most is wave the flag. Members of the committee grasped this patriotic opportunity by giving Schlesinger a spontaneous burst of applause when he warned that further cuts in the Pentagon's awesome $92.8-billion

ANDREW TULLY The Idea Is Still To Get Re-Elected

WASHINGTON - "I admire the incentive to cut, but this is not the right place," said Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-Va. budget could reduce the U.S. to a second-rate military power. Schlesinger's point was that defense "is a shrinking burden on American society," compared with the Fifties and Sixties. What he meant was that the military budget now represents a smaller bite of the Gross National Product (GNP).

That's true, my friends—but so what? So what when your citizens, many of them in the supposedly comfortable middle-income bracket, are scratching to make ends meet? The guy trying to get up college tuition for his kids is not comforted by the pronouncement that less of the GNP is going to support the military. To him, that statistic is wholly academic, producing no salutary effect on his own household budget.

I do not buy Schlesinger's attempt to scare me out of my skin when he says: "Now, it may be the decision of the American people and the Congress that we no longer want to be a military power second to none...but if that is the decision, then we are heading in the right direction."

That's the warning that brought applause from his audience. Assorted Pentagon chiefs have been telling us the same thing for more than two decades, and we're still militarily ahead of the Soviet Union. Maybe we need some new weapons to keep that lead, but so what? Weapons programs should stand on their own feet, not trumpeted as the savior of our foreign policy.

Schlesinger apparently was looking for a pat on the back when he reminded the committee that military manpower levels are down by 600,000 from 1964. No hand of mine will deliver that pat. If our military forces have shrunk that drastically and the cost of supporting the Defense Department is still the highest in peacetime, somebody, over there has been doing something wrong.

Ford's Energy Plan Would-Be Albatross

WASHINGTON - (NEA) - One point in President Ford's costly energy self-sufficiency program should be made crystal clear. The plan calls for building and protecting a multi-billion dollar, admittedly inefficient production capacity.

This will be accomplished, if a Ford-Kissinger proposal goes through, by guaranteeing oil prices high enough to make the high-cost plants sufficiently profitable to encourage reluctant investors. Consumers will pay through the nose.

The net result will be a white elephant complex of energy-production facilities too costly to scrap and so inefficient they will be a load on American prices for years to come.

So swiftly does science advance when breakthroughs start that these plants will most surely be out of date before they're completed and put into operation.

Now it is true that the Ford-Kissinger proposal guaranteeing a high minimum petroleum price seeks in part to force companies to enhance U.S. military capability by using less oil and use it more efficiently. But a major objective, as noted above, is to push industry, with government subsidies, into investing large sums in not thoroughly developed methods for turning out energy in one form or another.

Two of the favored processes, the gasification of coal and the extraction of shale oil, are not efficient today, even in the laboratory.

The long-range outlook for oil substitutes looks exceedingly bright—in solar heating, nuclear fusion, geothermal energy and coal gasification or liquefaction. But before these happy days arrive there must be a great deal more research effort over an extended period of years. These are not problems which respond to quick research fixes.

As has been noted repeatedly by those closest to the practical problems involved, what's really needed is much more effort aimed at efficient energy use. Heavy increases in United States output are a long way off, though the Alaskan north slope and military reserves hold great promise.

President Ford apparently has been hustled into his involved price fixing and far-out production drive by the strong wishes of some of his closest advisers.

It is this way to appreciate the reason for President Ford's hasty efforts, especially since U.S. dependence on Middle East oil is increasing steadily, as Canada, Venezuela and other suppliers cut back on what they're sending us. But it is not easy to understand why he's chosen this economically-unsound route.

A sounder approach would be to combine the drive for more efficient energy techniques and the push for a cutback in non-essential use with an all-out drive for the exploration and development of petroleum, gas and other cheap energy sources in a fastidiously, heavily populated countries around the globe. Countries which do not belong to the cartel but which do need funds for their own development. If the body of oil producing nations becomes large enough, the cartel will fall of its own weight.

Already, as the data for 1974 make clear, there has been a noticeable increase in known petroleum and gas reserves outside the cartel lands. A strong U.S. effort could raise the production of these countries to our mutual benefit.

Church Women Plan World Prayer Day

A World Day of Prayer observance will be sponsored by the Manchester Church Women United Friday noon at St. Mary's Episcopal Church.

Those planning to attend are reminded to bring sandwiches. Pie and beverages will be served.

This 89th celebration of the World Day of Prayer will be observed in 100 languages and dialects by Protestant, Orthodox, and Catholic Christians in 169 lands.

The theme for the 1975 celebration is "Become Perfectly One" a search for the meaning of Christian unity in the broader context of a pluralistic society, Irene Gos, chairman, reported.

The worship service has been prepared by the Women's Ecumenical Prayer Fellowship of Egypt.

On World Day of Prayer, a nationwide offering will be received for the Intercontinental Mission fund, by which Church Women United make annual grants to agencies for higher education for women in overseas Christian colleges, preparation and distribution of Christian literature for women and children in Asia, Africa and Latin America, education for minority women in new careers and for American Indian youth; ministries among migrant farm workers, and support for the Christian ministry in national parks.

The offerings also make possible gifts to short-term projects such as reconstruction and rehabilitation services to women and children victimized by war, economic ventures and international conferences for women, pilot projects for refugee women, day care centers, family planning, health and nutrition education and clinics.

WINGS OF EVENING by CLIFF SIMPSON

Soul Searching. Lent for the Christian is a time for looking within, a time to search for that in which we can live closer to God and to our fellowman.

How can we move from what we are to what we want to become in our better moments? This concerns us all, Christian and non-Christian, but for the followers of Christ Lent is a special time of soul-searching and soul-healing.

Recently I preached in New London. Hanging on the wall of the minister's study were these words: "What we are is God's gift to us."

What we become is our gift to God. This is in line with our Judeo-Christian background. Judaism and Christianity are closely intertwined. Practically every verse in the New Testament has its antecedent in the Old. Dr. Montefiore, the famous Jewish scholar, says that the difference is in what Jesus selected from the past as being of most importance, and the Christian's belief in the Incarnation.

As followers of the Christ, we meditate upon His words and upon His life, death and resurrection. We examine our own lives and realize how inadequate they are. The feeling expressed in this poem comes from such soul searching.

Friendless and faint, with martyred steps and slow, Flung for the flesh, but for the spirit free, Pain for the flesh, but that came to save the soul.

The Master tolled along to Calvary; We gazed Him, As He went, with hounding grief, Till His dim eyes for us did overflow; We cursed His vengeless hands thrice wretchedly — And this was nineteen hundred years ago.

But after nineteen hundred years the shame of Calvary, and we have not made good the loss. That outraged faith has entered in His name. Ah, when shall come love's courage to be strong!

Tell me, O Lord — tell me, O Lord, how long we have had this Christ writing on the cross! Edwin Arlington Robinson

The Final Word is JOY. I am sharing two poems with you this week because the ultimate word is not "Christ writing on the cross" but the triumph of Easter morning.

Yes, we know we sin, but we also know that we are forgiven sinners. We are the fellowship of the forgiven and the forgiving, which is John Calvin's definition of the church. There is a vertical relationship with God that determines our horizontal relationship with other men and women. John Maxwell expresses that Easter joy in this poem:

I did not think, I did not strive, The deep peace burst upon me alive; The bolted door had broken in, I knew that I had done with sin; I knew that Christ had given me birth To brother all the sons on earth.

O glory of the lighted mind! How dead I'd been, how dumb, how blind!

Overwhelmed With Word? Our maxim comes from the words of Michel Quist, quoted in "Twentieth Century Men of Prayer."

"Never say you are overwhelmed with work, or you will soon believe it. When you feel you are reaching your limit, stop, breathe, pray. That is an economy of time — and renewing your strength. At the end of the day, place your work through prayer in God's hands and leave it there."

I suppose the only one in our large family who is sleeping in the sister who took Mama to live with her. I've tried to ease my conscience by telling myself that I wasn't really ashamed of Mama like my brothers were. But I wasn't cheap, like another sister. I DID buy her things which she never really needed or enjoyed much. But I CAN'T SLEEP. I hope Mama forgives me.
