Bay State eyes repeal of blue laws

BOSTON (UPI) — The Massachusetts Legislature's Government Regulations Committee today began studying a bill to repeal the state's colonial-vintage "Blue Laws," at the urging of lawmakers, businessmen and tax experts. Proponents of the bill testified Thursday its repeal would generate $300 million in sales and $8 million in additional tax revenues. Manpower Affairs Secretary

Howard Smith said repeal would result in an additional 10,000 to 15,000 jobs. Taxation Commissioner Owen Clarke told a State House public hearing of the Government Regulations Committee the majority - $5.4 million - of the new revenue would come from the sales tax. Another $1.4 million would come from tax revenues on liquor and cigarettes now going to New Hampshire where prices generally are lower and stores are open on Sunday.
