NEW YORK (UPI) — Prices opened mixed Monday in active trading of New York Stock Exchange issues.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fell 1.82 points Friday, was off 0.94 point to 894.57 shortly after the opening. Preplanned profit taking at the 900 level has thwarted the Dow from breaking through that mark. The Dow lost 1.30 points last week.

Briefly ...

GALVESTON, Texas (UPI) — A tropical depression today kicked up high seas, forcing pleasure boaters into Louisiana and Texas ports, but residents along the Gulf of Mexico mostly ignored the driving rains and went about their business.

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (UPI) — Canadian police today held an unidentified woman in custody after a United Airlines jet en route from Denver to Seattle was forced to land at Vancouver International Airport by a passenger who said there was a bomb on board.

MADRID, Spain (UPI) — Terrorist gunmen striking in three cities across Spain shot and killed three policemen today in an apparently coordinated offensive. First reports said the terrorists were arrested in Barcelona.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States today moved once more to improve the value of the dollar by increasing demand for it overseas. The Federal Reserve Board eliminated reserve requirements on foreign borrowings for its member banks.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (UPI) — A strike by businessmen wanting to topple president Anastasio Somoza Debayle spread to the capital today as the death toll from anti-government demonstrations rose.

Pope Retains Vatican Staff

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope John Paul I today confirmed all heads of Vatican departments would remain in their posts and Vatican sources said he wanted to familiarize himself with men and issues before making any changes.

Officials confirmed in their positions included Cardinal Jean Villot, the French-born secretary of state, American Cardinal John Joseph Wright, head of Congregation for the Clergy, and all other department heads.

Also confirmed in his post was Archbishop Agostino Casaroli, head of the Council for Church Public Affairs, the Vatican equivalent of a foreign minister.

The Vatican announced John Paul's decision less than two days after he was elected pope Saturday in the briefest conclave in this century.

The decision was in line with his promise Sunday to continue the moderate reformist policies of his predecessor Paul VI.

Vatican sources said changes in the top posts of the Curia, the central church government, may come later after the pope has settled in. They said he may want to hold a consistory for the appointment of some new cardinals before reshuffling the Curia, so he can bring in some new faces.

The sources said they understood Villot, 72, had been talking for some time about retiring but John Paul asked him to stay on in the post he held for nine years under Paul VI.

The new pontiff showed his regard for Villot by staying in the French cardinal's apartment as a guest from the moment he left the conclave area Sunday morning until attendants got the papal private apartment ready for him in the afternoon.

The new pope announced plans for a simple enthronement next Sunday rather than the elaborate coronation rites usually held for Roman Catholic pontiffs.

As Cardinal Albino Luciani, patriarch of Venice, he acquired a reputation as a devout theological conservative.

But in his first major address Sunday, John Paul pledged to continue the policies of his two immediate predecessors and namesakes — John XXIII and Paul VI — which radically reformed the church liturgy and led to rapprochement with the Orthodox churches of the East.

In a self-effacing manner, the 65-year-old pope declared "I don't have the wisdom of the heart that was Pope John's nor the preparation and culture of Pope Paul, but I am in their place and I must try to serve the church."

MHS Principal Knocks Down Walls

By SUSAN VAUGHN
Herald Reporter

One of Jacob Ludes' first official acts as principal at Manchester High School was to tear down a wall in his office.

Perhaps it is symbolic of what he hopes to do as far as communications in his first year as new head of the 2,000 student educational complex.

In an interview this week, Ludes, whose office was a tiny cubicle, said he wanted to make more room for visitors and group conferences. Several other physical changes in the office set-up have been instituted, to make for smoother operations and because Ludes wants the office to be a team and to "share the burden" of duties.

Breaking down the wall of his office may be the only major change Ludes will try this year until he gets more input from parents, students, faculty and other community residents interested in education.

The young and friendly administrator said he has spent the summer listening to many people, whom he said have been very frank and honest. He plans to continue listening when school opens Sept. 6.

"Right off the bat on the first day of school," Ludes said he will send a newsletter to parents of M.H.S. students to inform them of school regulations and activities. He plans regular newsletters to parents.

He also wants to invite parents to a series of coffees at the high school during the school day, just to talk with them about "where the school has been and where we are going."

Ludes said the timing for the changeover in administration at the high school couldn't be better because it is in conjunction with the 10-year evaluation and accreditation by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges. Manchester High will spend this year in self-evaluation and preparation for the accreditation visit in the fall of 1979.

Ludes thinks that the input into the evaluation by the community-at-large is very important. "If a school serves a community, the community ought to be involved," he said.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Postmaster General William Bolger, refusing to reopen contract bargaining, today warned unions representing 500,000 workers a postal strike could jeopardize the future of the Postal Service.

Bolger's remarks came amid continued mediation with postal union leaders in an effort to avert an illegal strike threatened to begin at midnight.

Leaders of the largest postal unions have refused to indicate whether they would honor or ignore a federal court order barring a walkout.

President J. Joseph Vacca of the 180,000-member National Association of Letter Carriers scheduled a mid-day news conference to announce whether his members would honor the no-strike order.

Bolger, who met informally Sunday with the heads of three unions, said today he would not return to the bargaining table, but would honor the results of compulsory arbitration.

The postal unions last week rejected a proposed three-year contract providing a 19.5 percent wage and cost of living increase that was within administration anti-inflation guidelines. The contract would raise the average worker's salary from $15,877 to $19,200 in three years.

"I could not in good conscience agree to anything more at the bargaining table now," Bolger told the annual convention of the National League of Postmasters, a rural postmasters group.

Bolger said postal employees "certainly have the right to reject the contract, but they don't have the right to strike."

Any walkout by postal employees could spell the end of Postal Service control of first class mail, he warned, noting a 1970 walkout lost the Postal Service customers that never returned. The Postal Service faces increasing competition from private delivery firms.

"Frankly, I can think of no greater way to help those who want to repeal our monopoly on first class mail than for our employees to strike," Bolger said. A strike is the "worst possible thing" that could happen to the service and its employees, he said.

Federal mediator Wayne Horvitz met with both sides in the dispute today, and a spokesman for the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service said the discussions were going on without a timetable.

"We are trying to find some way to resolve the situation now," spokesman John Rogers said. Three of the postal unions were represented, Rogers said, but they were not meeting face-to-face with negotiators for the Postal Service.

"People are running into each other in the halls, but they are not sitting across the table from each other," Rogers said.

The letter carriers' union constitution called for a walkout at midnight tonight. President Emmet Andrews of the 280,000 member American Postal Workers Union was under pressure to set a strike for midnight Wednesday — five days after union members voted to reject a three-year contract.

James LaPenta, secretary of the bargaining coordinating committee for the three unions, called Bolger's position "irresponsible" and a reflection of his "inexperience in labor relations."

"We think he's being heavy-handed in relying solely on the law to settle a labor dispute," LaPenta told a news conference late Sunday. "There's nothing in the framework of that law that prohibits him from sitting down at the table and negotiating a settlement at this time, which would be acceptable to everybody."

LaPenta is an official of the 40,000-member National Post Office Mail Handlers union, which rejected the contract but did not give its officers a mandate for setting a strike deadline. That union was expected to go along with the larger unions' action.

Bolger is under pressure to hold down the money package in the contract for two reasons: he says it will allow him to prevent a postal rate hike for 2 1/2 to 3 years; and President Carter is pushing for restraint to help hold down inflation.

Local Mail Plan Is Not Revealed

What local U.S. mail service will be like if postal union employees go on strike tonight will be determined by the U.S. postal regional office in New York, according to Paul Donovan, Hartford postmaster.

Patrick Humphrey, Manchester assistant postmaster, would make no statement today when asked how Manchester mail delivery would be handled.

Donovan said the post office has contingency plans to meet most any kind of emergency, and he listed power outages and storms.

"If an action of some kind were to happen among the employees, we would get our instructions from the regional office in New York," Donovan said.

Asked if he had any gut feelings about the results of the current union contract negotiations, he said, "I don't want to sound evasive, but I honestly don't know. I understand the federal board of mediation is meeting with both sides now and there's always hope they can come up with something."

About 7,000 out of 10,000 postal employees in the state are union members.

In Manchester, all but nine of the about 130 postal employees are in the bargaining unit.

"The local contract is no good," Charles Chambers, president of the Manchester local carriers' unit of the postal union, said.

A postal employee and carrier for more than 19 years, Chambers said that the proposed increases do not take into consideration the rapid rising cost of living increase, and the increased workload and pressure put on the carriers.

"We have lost 60,000 employees since 1970 and they've never been

Governors Tap Grasso

BOSTON (UPI) — Connecticut Gov. Ella T. Grasso, who faces a tough primary battle next month from her lieutenant governor, today was unanimously elected vice chairperson of the Conference of Democratic Governors.

Mrs. Grasso was so thrilled by her election that she confidently invited Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., to come to Connecticut to campaign for her after Connecticut's Sept. 12 Democratic gubernatorial primary — the first in the state's history.

At a morning meeting, the Conference of Democratic Governors — comprised of the 38 Democratic governors — selected North Carolina Gov. James Hunt Jr. as chairman to succeed South Dakota Gov. Richard Kneip.

Immediately after Hunt's election, Mrs. Grasso, the first woman ever elected governor without the aid of her husband's name, was unanimously chosen vice chairperson, succeeding Nevada Gov. Michael O'Callaghan.

"I look forward to working with Gov. Hunt and the other Democratic governors to develop positive programs and to extend the role of governors in federal and state relations," said the 59-year-old daughter of Italian immigrants, who wore a beige outfit.

On her way to deliver her opening remarks at the beginning of the governors conference, Mrs. Grasso bumped into Kennedy in a hallway at the Sheraton Hotel. She asked him if he would come to Connecticut after the primary battle with Lt. Gov. Robert Killian. Kennedy said he would.

Mrs. Grasso was one of three speakers who welcomed the nation's 50 governors to New England for the 70th annual meeting of the National Governors' Association.

"Today we embark on a kind of town meeting. We are not the voices of a single community, but we represent the voices of all communities throughout our land," she said at the opening plenary session of the conference.

"As governor, every one of us is accused from time to time of that terrible condition of the mind, parochialism. We in New England come by it naturally. We know we invented the country."

When the Search is Serious...

The search process...everyone experiences it sometime or another...some people more often than others. It takes place when you've made a decision. You want something. It may be something you'll buy, like a motorcycle, a baby bed or a new home...maybe an automobile.

Whatever your need, you've decided to take the steps necessary to fulfill it. So you begin to search. In other words, you're taking the search process seriously.

The newspaper Classified section was designed to accommodate people in your situation. In fact, it was devised by people just like you. Years ago, when newspapers were in their infancy, readers quickly recognized an effective way to tell people on the other side of the county they had something to sell or trade.

Since that time, this meshing of reader, advertiser and newspaper has blossomed and grown all over the world, mutually benefiting all three.

Today, and every day, people in all walks of life turn to the Classified section of their newspaper to begin a serious search for something they want. They do this because it works.

Job satisfaction high

There are those who contend that modern industry provides a sterile, uninteresting workplace and that the people who work in it are unhappy with their jobs. That criticism is not supported by a study undertaken by the Conference Board, a business-sponsored research organization, by National Family Opinion, Inc. In a national survey of 5,000 families, the researchers found 87 percent were either "satisfied" or "very satisfied" with their present jobs. Another 10 percent said they were "dissatisfied" and three percent answered "very dissatisfied."

That is far from the picture of the modern worker painted by industrial critics. Judged by the findings of the Conference

Board's sampling, the responsibility is on the critics to produce their own statistics to back up their arguments. A 13 percent "dissatisfaction" rate within any working population indicates a low level of dissatisfaction. The survey found negative job attitudes varied by age and income, as could be expected. Nineteen percent of those workers under 25 said they were "dissatisfied," but only 7 percent of workers over 55 so replied.

All of which indicates that the American job market is responding well to the job aspirations and interests of the workers. It is not perfect, but the level of job dissatisfaction is far from the dismal picture some have painted it.

Other Editors Say:

When it comes to a long running bit comedy, Seabrook has been eligible for some kind of award. It isn't that the disgraceful events surrounding the delay of the Seabrook station are humorous. Those events would qualify more in the realm of tragedy. It's the cast of characters which makes it a comedy. The clowns involved in Seabrook couldn't play a serious role if their lives depended on it.

Marathon court cases and endless adjudicatory hearings before regulatory agencies have resulted in the future of the Seabrook station being as much in doubt as it was two years ago. Ultimate construction is still in the hands of the bureaucrats. It's the caterwauling from the sidelines which is getting on everybody's nerves.

On one side of the construction site there's the Clamshell Alliance with its varied and sundry groups preaching everything from "Love thy neighbor" to wholesale destruction of all nuclear sites. The Clams are still trying to get their act together following the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's reinstatement of Public Service Company of New Hampshire's construction permit. We can expect that the Alliance - or some of its member groups - will stage another series of illegal actions at the site of the Seabrook station.

Even the Clams and their members must realize that their demonstrations - massive and petty - have gone beyond the point of evoking any additional support. They've simply become a costly pain in the neck.

Then there's Governor Meldrim Thomson.

Perils of the Conference Committee

By WILLIAM E. CLAYTON

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The natural gas pricing issue, involving tremendous amounts of money and extremely tough politics, points up the flaws as well as the powers of a House-Senate conference committee.

The conference committee is the bipartisan group charged with reconciling the different House and Senate versions of a bill.

But it can pick up new concepts that appeared in neither House or Senate version. Where the congressmen themselves are fuzzy or undecided on an issue, the staff can write the language for them.

No transcript is kept - not even full notes sometimes - of the proceedings.

At times, the wording of the conference bill comes out in ways some congressmen did not anticipate.

With a proposal as complex as the natural gas bill, with its dozens of prices and regulations, the conference committee's system of flexibility can virtually paralyze it.

That happened to the natural gas bill, interviews with various congressmen and staff members showed.

The bill is one of the most controversial in years, designed to phase out price controls on newly produced natural gas by 1985.

Several reasons are given: The bill is so complex that there are differing perceptions - among staff as well as congressmen themselves - on some legal points.

The stakes are high. Americans will spend billions of dollars more for their natural gas before the price deregulation plan hits the streets.

Sometimes, congressmen were uncomfortable with a certain decision and deliberately leave it unclear. Or, they could change their whole thing into legal language and that report hit the desks of congressmen for their signature, some of them cried, "This is not what we agreed on."

The refusal of some of them to sign the document sent the leadership into an agonizing new round of negotiation to persuade them.

How could such a long process almost come apart at the last? Several reasons are given:

The bill is so complex that there are differing perceptions - among staff as well as congressmen themselves - on some legal points.

Thought

I've quit mountain climbing at least three times. I huff and I puff and my legs talk back saying they do not want to take another step forward.

"Never again," I say to myself. "Who needs it!"

But you'll find me on the trail again. I like the smell of the woods, the pines and birches. I like to hop over brooks. The trail starts easy up a mountain. You hardly feel that you are going up a grade at all.

Then comes a definite upgrade and you go up and up until someone in your party, probably me, says, "I'm stopping at the next soft rock!"

After an hour or so of climbing you break out of the trees to the rocky ledges and catch a glimpse of the summit. The trail has actually leveled off and you watch for the cairns or piles of rocks to guide you to the top.

Life is like that. Have you ever caught a glimpse of what it is like to live in the presence of God? It's like living on top of a mountain! You want to know more of God after just catching a glimpse that our God is a personal God.

You take it easy at first, reading philosophy and discussing values a lot with friends. You resist reaching for the Bible but at last someone or something you have read, perhaps even this article, prompts you to pick up the Bible and there he is - in every page.

You take yourselves to be taught and soon you will be caught by God. Bless us in your climb to him.

Rural Citizens With Impact

By MARTHA ANGLE and ROBERT WALTERS

MARSHALL, Minn. (UPI) - In urban areas throughout the country, citizens are banding together to form community-based organizations to deal with common problems - but only one such group exists in a rural setting.

It is the Countryside Council, a unique experiment that applies the concept of neighborhood organizing to an area where a farm family's nearest neighbor may be miles away.

Based on the campus of Southwest State University in this community, the council was formed five years ago and now serves the 340,000 residents of 19 counties in Minnesota's southwestern corner.

Ray Johnson, a Windom, Minn., farm manager, candidly describes the region as "kind of a forgotten land."

Most of Minnesota's famed "10,000 lakes" and scenic beauty lie to the north, while the state's southern tier resembles the flat Iowa plains to the south.

Within the Countryside Council's service area, almost two-thirds of the population lives on farms or in communities with a population of less than 2,500.

The area's economy is heavily dependent on corn, soybean, oat and wheat crops.

In addition to the widely dispersed population, other factors mitigate against successful organization of residents of a rural area to provide a unified voice on issues affecting their lives.

"You have to count on the spring and fall" for organizing and meeting because they are the planting and harvesting seasons, says Maggie Anderson, a council research coordinator.

"And in winter, the blizzards make the travel problem worse."

Yet the council has surmounted those difficulties. "Now our voices can be heard, even though it's only 19 counties. Without the council, we wouldn't get to first base," says Johnson.

"The Countryside Council has allowed all of us to walk a little taller," adds Porter Ostad, a Hanska, Minn., farmer. Ostad is chairman of a task force formed after local residents became frustrated by the inadequate telephone services provided by both independent companies and the Bell System.

Party lines were overburdened, rate structures often required farmers to pay toll charges on calls to nearby communities and telephones frequently were unusable because they were out of service.

After the council's task force of about 50 citizens began investigating the problem, "the telephone companies started to pay attention," says Arford.

Minnesota's governor made a trip to personally inspect the situation and later appointed a member of the council staff to the state's Public Service Commission.

When proposed abandonment of railroad freight service threatened farm-to-market crop shipments, a task force was formed to study that issue. Its report had a significant impact both in the state capital at St. Paul and in Washington, where federal legislation provided funding for continued service.

A task force study of the arts led to the formation of the new independent Southwest Minnesota Arts and Humanities Council. Other task forces have examined a wide variety of problems.

Providing financing for young people interested in purchasing farms, training local public officials, alternative energy sources, health services, weather modification and economic development.

The W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, Mich., has financed the Countryside Council with two three-year grants totalling $1.33 million for providing an average annual budget of less than $25,000 but new sources of funding will be required if the work is to continue.

In Manchester's olden days - say seven or eight years ago - the annual Merchants' Day produced a ghostly downtown quiet.

Then, Herald reporters, year after year, would sit down and write the annual story - about hearing a pin drop on the sidewalks whence bustle had vanished. It made a good color story, and it was true in those days.

Merchants' Day brought the typical assignment this morning. The reporter walked out into a roar of motor traffic, and glanced up and down Main Street. Everything was closed, supposedly. But the traffic was increasing; cars were parked here and there; the sidewalks were sprinkled with people. There was no spectral quiet.

The reporter found a drug store open, and called up his city editor. "Is this the right town, and the right day?" he asked.

"Yes," said the city editor, "and your name is John Doe and this is The Herald."

The reporter went back out on the beat. At some risk of life and limb, he succeeded in crossing the street twice. Stores indeed were closed. Only newspapermen, lawyers, and restaurants, faithful servants of the public at all times, were actually in business. Yet the tide of traffic and people continued.

On his way back to the office, the reporter found what seemed to be the only news in strict harmony with Merchants' Day. A carpenter was hard at work modernizing a Main Street store front.

Like any other day in front of Genny's Men's Shop, the talk turned to the Red Sox.

Afterward, turning the corner of Bisell Street (we were then in the old building), the sound of the hammer came sharp and efficient over a brief lull in the traffic roar.

A few years ago the standard headline over the Merchants' Day story always included the words "deserted village."

You struggle with this one, city editor.

The editor had his own note penned to the story. It said this:

Next assignment for the reporter: Read the headline on the headline of this story. City Editor.

Nope, it wasn't our story. It might have been Earl Yost's, if the Red Sox was the topic.

Let's see - 25 years ago Lou Mandell was the city editor, because he replaced Jerry Sapientia in June of that year, and this was Wednesday, Aug. 12. Jerry went to a Pennsylvania paper.

Reporters? Maybe Alex Girelli, or Len Zeidenberg; or could it have been Yost?

Wasn't me - FOR SURE! Merchants' Days are no longer celebrated here.

Killian Explains Events Leading to Grasso Split

HARTFORD (UPI) - Lt. Gov. Robert Killian says he realized he was in the wrong administration when Gov. Ella T. Grasso told him to talk to her Republican efficiency expert about a money-saving idea and he refused.

In an interview with Hartford Courant editors and reporters, Killian said Mrs. Grasso wanted a yes-man despite an agreement between them that he play a devil's advocate role in her administration.

"The most serious blow-up came when I talked to her about a problem in government and she referred me to Mr. Grengas," Killian said, referring to E. Clayton Grengas of West Hartford, a Republican businessman appointed by Mrs. Grasso to oversee state government efficiency.

"I talked to her about federal surplus properties - like hospital equipment, helicopters, sporting equipment - and the fact that we weren't doing anything in that area," Killian recalled.

The lieutenant governor said he explained to Mrs. Grasso that "... the feds had changed the rules and we could get millions of dollars of properties just by the hauling. She said talk to Clayton about this."

Killian said he refused and became convinced "I was in the wrong business, in the wrong administration, at the wrong time."

Killian, who is challenging his boss for the number one spot on the ticket in an unprecedented gubernatorial Democratic primary Sept. 12, also said "there was talk about" offering him a federal or state judgeship last month if he would drop his pursuit of the governorship.

Killian said he did not want to be a federal or a state judge anyway.

The gubernatorial aspirant also told editors a graduated state personal income tax may be the only way of fairly taxing income.

Killian said he did not think a statewide property tax would correct tax inequities because "you would extract from the same people now, the poor and the middle-income people. It's another tax right on top of their backs."

The Grasso paid $20,862 in taxes, according to their 1977 federal income tax return.

Lt. Gov. Robert K. Killian, who is challenging Mrs. Grasso in a Democratic primary Sept. 12, lists income as his $18,000 state salary, $28,510 from his law partnership and $21,800 in interest and dividends.

The statement shows the Killians paid $24,291 in taxes on the $68,400 total.

GOP gubernatorial hopeful, Rep. Ronald Sarasin, R-Conn., did not provide financial data to the CCAAG.

However, his congressional disclosure statement for the last quarter of 1977, which is much less detailed than the statement requested by CCAAG - lists income for that quarter as $14,375, about 25 percent of his annual $57,500 salary.

Sarasin also received $4,100 in fees for speaking engagements. He said he made about $10,000 on the speaking circuit in 1977.

The CCAAG statements show the Grasso have a net worth of $388,570 and the Killian's a net worth of $213,800. Sarasin, who is divorced, has said he will provide a more detailed financial statement when he returns to Washington after Labor Day.

Principal Removes Walls

Continued from Page One. As far as security at the high school, Ludes said, the school will still have two security guards and he hopes to improve the communications system with them with the use of some paging devices. "Ludes said he also sees a need for a master plan for equipment replacement in several departments, however, he said he will not have much input in the budget process this year. Ludes sees the pendulum swinging to the "back to basics" trend and agrees that there is a need to reorganize it extensively. He said he would look at options, however, in terms of reorganizing within the existing structure. "We'll see how we can make a more intimate place with this kind of structure," he said. Ludes also said he would spend some time talking about the open campus with parents and students. He said he wants to emphasize that the open campus is a privilege. He can see "some tightening up" of the open campus, but "with minor adjustments I think it can work," Ludes said. The open campus situation is being closely watched by the number of staff, Ludes said. He said the school with 2,000 students is actually staffed for the 1,500 who are usually in the school at one time. For instance, adding extra study halls would mean adding more teachers.

Red Sox Capitalize on Breaks, Bob Stanley Wins 10th Straight

BOSTON (UPI) — If the mark of a champion is winning the tough game, and using a little bit of luck to do it, Sunday's 4-3, 12-inning win over the California Angels was a good omen for the Boston Red Sox. The Red Sox won on a pair of unearned runs after the Angels had gone ahead 3-2 in the top of the 12th. Carl Yastrzemski led off the 12th with a single, his fourth hit of the day and Fred Lynn drove a one-out walk. After Dwight Evans flew to center, George Scott grounded to third for what appeared to be the final out. But Carney Lansford's hurried throw landed first baseman Jerry Rudi off the leg. Jerry Remy, pinch running for Yastrzemski, scored from second on a close play to tie the score. Angel manager Jim Fregosi raced out of the dugout to protest the Remy call. Umpire Jerry Neudecker heard enough and ejected the Angels' skipper. "Downing (Angel catcher Brian Downing) had the plate blocked and Remy never tagged the plate," Fregosi fumed. "The umpire was in front of the plate because he never expected the play. He can't see the play from where he was." Lynn moved to second on the bizzare play and scored the winning run moments later when Butch Hobson drilled a single to center field. Bob Stanley picked up his 10th straight win to set a record to 11-1. Dyer Miller, 4-1, was the tough-luck loser. "I win 10 in a row, you have to have a lot of luck. This has been my lucky year. Who knows? Maybe next year I'll get killed," Stanley said. "It's always nice to win until after the season and I get in and save it for Luis (Tiant) because he has had a lot of 'White Sox' this year." Hobson also helped Stanley in the pitcher's last relief win when the third baseman elicited the bases on a 65-foot popup against the Cleveland Indians on Aug. 10. But his hitting and fielding this week has dipped because of painful bone chips in his elbow. "I'm trying to do some things differently — like laying the bat out on the ground when I swing. There's only one thing that will help and that's to have them (bone chips) out. But that will have to wait until after the season and I get in and save it for Luis (Tiant) because he has had a lot of 'White Sox' this year." Selection Said Relief and Joy

HARTFORD (UPI) - Roman Catholic leaders across the state expressed surprise and relief at the speedy selection of Cardinal Albino Luciani, patriarch of Venice, as the new pope. "The church is like a family that has been without a father for the last three weeks," said Archbishop John Whealon of Hartford. "The selection of John Paul I as the new pope is a relief and joy to me," he said. The archbishop, referring to Luciani's surprise selection and low profile in church politics, said it reminded him of the selection of Pope John XXIII in 1963. "Everyone kept asking John who," Whealon said. Bishop Walter W. Curtis, of Bridgeport archdiocese, who also expressed surprise at the quickness of the new pope's selection, said Saturday "He must be a man who will satisfy the needs of the church." "We join the whole church in praying for the new pope as he prepares to take up this great responsibility for the church and the world community," Norwich Archbishop Daniel Reilly said. "We receive this news with great joy." Virgil C. Dechant, supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus, in a statement issued from the group's New Haven headquarters, said Sunday the new pope's "selection of the name John Paul I suggests further plans to build on the precious legacy left by his two innovative predecessors." He pledged the support of his organization's 1.3 million members to the new pope and hailed the choice of the College of Cardinals.

mass "Our program will be to continue his (Paul VI's), in the path already indicated by the great heart of John XXIII. John Paul spent his first night Sunday in the papal apartments of the vast Vatican palace. His official schedule was left blank for today. The Vatican announced the pope had decided to be enthroned next Sunday, Aug. 3. The ceremony was called an entronement rather than a coronation, indicating John Paul plans to eschew the elaborate rites usually held for Roman Catholic pontiffs. Vatican officials said the decision also probably meant John Paul did not want to receive the papal triple crown. They said the gesture would be similar to that of the late Paul VI, who sold the triple tiara and donated the proceeds to the poor. John Paul, 65, who served as patriarch of Venice for nine years, said he would continue the reforms of the Second Vatican Council that ended in 1965 and would carry forward the council doctrine of collegiality - the sharing of power with the bishops. The new pontiff, a thin man who wears wire-rimmed spectacles and speaks in a soft, high-pitched voice, also said he would work to carry forward the effort toward Christian unity through the ecumenical movement.

"Mutual relations between churches of different denominations have made constant and extraordinary progress that is before everyone's eyes," he said, adding, "this is why we intend to devote our well-weighted attention to whatever can favor union, without doctrinal yieldings but also without hesitation."

He also said he intended to "preserve intact the great church discipline in the life of priests and believers," perhaps revealing an intention to take a strong stand against birth control, the ordination of women and the married priesthood. John Paul, son of a migrant worker father and a hospital servant mother in the northern Italian Dolomite region, also called for international action against poverty, hunger and ignorance and "the blind violence that does nothing but destroy and spread ruins and mourning."

In a message of congratulations, President Carter said the pope's voice can be an inspiration for world peace. "I pray it will be heard and echoed by people of good will throughout the world," the president said. The new pontiff's election Saturday came on the fourth ballot, and only eight votes and 54 minutes after the 11 cardinals began voting in the secret Sistine Chapel on Friday.

"I was quite calm when I entered the Sistine Chapel to vote yesterday," John Paul told a crowd estimated at between 300,000 and 400,000 in St. Peter's Square for his Sunday noon blessing. Using the simple, direct language of a parish priest, John Paul said, "I would never have imagined what was about to happen to me."

Crowds gather in front of the house where Pope John Paul I was born. An estimated 2,000 tourists converged on the village of Canale D'Agordo Sunday for a glimpse of the new pope's birthplace. (UPI photo)

TEEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) - Prime Minister Menachem Begin says he is willing to spend many days at Camp David to reach an agreement that will lead to further peace talks with Egypt. "It is not to be supposed that you can solve the problems of conflict, which lasts for 30 years, in a few days," he said. "You have to negotiate."

Speaking after a four-hour Cabinet meeting Sunday, Begin said he will be taking Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, Defense Minister Ezer Weizman and nine aides to the talks beginning Sept. 6. The Israeli delegation will base its position on the government's 26-point plan calling for Israel to maintain its presence in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, he said. Pressed about his proposal for limited agreements in case a full peace settlement proves impossible, Begin said, "No, we don't have to have new options." But he said, "We shall see on the spot - if the idea comes up we shall negotiate it."

Israel stands by its willingness to discuss a territorial compromise, but the offer to grant the local population self-rule under Israeli control is a better solution, Begin said. He also said Israel would be willing to discuss sovereignty over the territories five years after a peace treaty is signed - a position he has previously stated. Officials pointed out that a communiqué issued after the Cabinet formally approved the trip resolves that the Israeli delegation will not sign an agreement between the parties. In a second clause it authorizes the delegation to maneuver during the summit, which Begin said, "I don't think it will take weeks, but it may take many days."

"I do not want now to suppose a failure," Begin said. "We go there with good will, an open mind to discuss any proposal to be brought before us, and then I suggest that we all pray and wish for success of an agreement," Begin said. The separation allows the delegation room to maneuver during the summit, which Begin said, "I don't think it will take weeks, but it may take many days."

Uncertain Color 'Smoke Thriller'

VATICAN CITY (UPI) - Italian newspapers have been calling "The Smoke Thriller" and the "St. Peter's Square Whodunit." Black smoke coming from the chimney over the Sistine Chapel was supposed to mean that the cardinals had failed to agree on a new pope; white smoke meant that a pontiff had been chosen. But all the planning of the Vatican chemists went for naught Saturday. Nobody could tell what color the smoke was. The ballots on which the cardinals made their selections were to be burned in the chapel's stove and the smoke rising from the chimney would give a signal to the outside world. If the cardinals had failed to elect a pope, the straw would be added to the ballots to make the smoke black. If they had chosen a new pontiff, the straw would be dry and the smoke, presumably, would be white. To avoid the confusion that arose at the last conclave, the cardinals also were supplied with special chemicals to throw on the fire to make the smoke black or white, as the voting dictated. The trouble began at noon Saturday when a puff of black smoke belched from the chimney, clearly indicating there was no pope. As watchers turned away, there were two more puffs of smoke, one black and one gray. By Saturday evening with the sun setting behind the Sistine Chapel, Vatican radio waved until Cardinal Pericle Felici stepped onto St. Peter's balcony and announced to the world that Italian Cardinal Albino Luciani had been chosen pope and had taken the name John Paul I.

Announcers variously described the smoke while it was billowing out for more than 30 minutes as "apparently black," "apparently white," "gray-black," "whitish-gray," "dirty white," "not as black as this morning" and "definitely gray."

When he came to see me in my office he would always ask first 'How is the faith?' and then 'How are the people?'" the priest said. "He is absolutely convinced of faith and faith alone is his positions."

Norris Leaves HARTFORD (UPI) - Assistant U.S. attorney Hatcher Norris plans to go into private practice at the end of this month. The 28-year-old federal prosecutor is believed to have been the only federal prosecutor of American Indian extraction in the nation at the time of his appointment three and a half years ago. Norris, a 1974 graduate of the University of Connecticut law school, has specialized in criminal prosecutions.

Previously stated. Officials pointed out that a communiqué issued after the Cabinet formally approved the trip resolves that the Israeli delegation will not sign an agreement between the parties. In a second clause it authorizes the delegation to maneuver during the summit, which Begin said, "I don't think it will take weeks, but it may take many days."

"We go there with good will, an open mind to discuss any proposal to be brought before us, and then I suggest that we all pray and wish for success of an agreement," Begin said. The separation allows the delegation room to maneuver during the summit, which Begin said, "I don't think it will take weeks, but it may take many days."

There was an element of the dramatic in Carter's decision to trim his vacation and fly back Wednesday, since he will be going back to a near-deserted Washington with Congress and much of the bureaucracy away for the Labor Day recess. Powell said the president decided it was necessary to return to the White House to deal with "very crucial" domestic matters now before Congress. "We view the fight on this natural gas compromise to be as difficult as any we have faced in Congress," Powell said. "It is in some sense a culmination of almost two years of effort to try to provide the country with a national energy policy. It has from the start been a difficult, uphill fight. But it is a fight which we believe has a tremendous impact for the country and we don't intend to lose it if there is any possible way - anything we can do."

Earlier this month a deal was reached that would phase out regulation of natural gas prices by 1985. Supporters said increased revenues would lure gas companies into spending more money to drill new wells, but liberals from the North, vowing to defeat the compromise, said it would lead to higher consumer prices. They propose, instead, a simple bill giving the president the power to allocate natural gas supplies in an emergency. Powell said Carter does not consider that to be an alternative. "It is at best a cosmetic effort to try to make the American public think that if the Congress rejects this natural gas legislation, they are actually doing something as an alternative," he said. "This is not an alternative." The president also was returning to the White House to prepare for the Middle East summit at Camp David that begins Sept. 5.

First Words

VATICAN CITY (UPI) - Pope John Paul I's first words to the cardinals who elected him Saturday were: "God forgive you for what you did to me," one of the church princes said today. Cardinal Joseph Hoeffner related the remark in a pastoral letter to the people of his diocese of Cologne, West Germany.

Thousands Converge On Pope's Birthplace

CANALE D'AGORDO, Italy (UPI) - Tourists tramped the tiny garden of beans and squash in the yard and ripped up cobblestones from the path that led to the birthplace of Albino Luciani. Inside the simple three-story stucco home, Edoardo Luciani, 81, the younger brother of Pope John Paul I, was angry. "Some television people took away photos of Albino as a child and described the new pope as a humble man who is close to the people but who is uncompromising when it comes to matters of faith."

"Over men may play and make exceptions, but he will never compromise over ideas or beliefs," said Rev. Luigi Semesato, a priest of St. Mark's Basilica. "When he came to see me in my office he would always ask first 'How is the faith?' and then 'How are the people?'" the priest said. "He is absolutely convinced of faith and faith alone is his positions."

Governors Not Ready For Health Insurance

BOSTON (UPI) — Despite prodding by Carter aides, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and his own leadership, the nation's cost-conscious governors are in no mood to endorse national health insurance.

Kennedy was scheduled to address the opening session of the National Governors' Association today to push his Senate bill for health insurance.

Truce Called In Economics

LYNN, Mass. (UPI) — For at least one day a truce was called in the economic rivalry between the "frostbelt" and the "sunbelt."

Georgia Gov. George D. Busbee and North Carolina Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. were invited North to hear and see for themselves some of the urban problems of the Northeast.

On Saturday the two Southern governors were treated to some Northern hospitality while attending in Boston a daylong North-South Regional Summit of the Northeast-Midwest Economic Advancement Council.

Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., chairman of the coalition, and Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, later led some of the visitors on a tour of Lynn, one of New England's most troubled cities.

The economically depressed city of Lynn is trying to revive itself. The old downtown area is trying to find uses for empty shop facades and there is a possibility of a major marine industrial area along the city's waterfront.

Earlier in the day Busbee said he understands the Northeast's problems, but said the South has its own problems and he is not going to go home and fight for federal funds for the North at the expense of his own region.

Busbee last year sparked the "sunbelt-frostbelt" controversy by saying his region was being "raped" of federal funding due to Northern favoritism in Congress.

Governors Return With Bodies of Fliers

HONOLULU (UPI) — An honor guard of congressmen, generals, and admirals saluted as servicemen and women carried the flag-covered coffins of 15 U.S. fliers lost in the Indochina War from a C-141 Starlifter to white-topped olive drab ambulances.

The bodies and a congressional delegation returned to Honolulu from Hanoi Sunday. The congressmen returned to Washington tonight to report first to Congress and then to the White House and State Department.

The remains of the servicemen were being examined by the Pentagon's Joint Casualty Resolution Center in Hawaii for positive identification.

Rep. Henson Moore, R-Ia., said Hanoi's and Vietnam's cooperation in tracking Vietnam War servicemen missing in action is a sign of their desire for better U.S. relations.

"We are recommending that the United States and Vietnam with the aim of normalizing relations," said Skelton.

Delegation sources said the congressmen favor an exchange of ambassadors and resumption of trade between Washington and Hanoi.
