CIA & Cancer

WASHINGTON (UPI) - A quarter-century ago, the CIA considered experimenting on terminal cancer patients under the guise of "legitimate medical work," but government documents fail to show if such ideas were carried out.

Heavily censored material obtained under the Freedom of Information Act showed the agency was looking into ways to "knock off key guys" through inducing apparently natural causes such as cancer and heart attacks.

The CIA also was concerned about the vulnerability of U.S. leaders to assassination by such virtually undetectable means.

But there is nothing to show whether the talk about inducing cancer and heart attacks ever got 'encouraged" about the bubble size. A spokesman for Metropolitan Edison, part-owner of the stricken nuclear plant, said the bubble, which is complicating the vital cooling of the nuclear core is "about 170-175 cubic feet right now and there is evidence in might be disintegrating." If true, the report would mean the bubble is far less than half its original size when it first posed a dangerous problem to the cooling process. It was because original efforts to eliminate the bubble produced no results that mass evacuation plans for the whole area are being considered. However, a spokesman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which is in charge of the operation at Three Mile Island, refused to confirm the Met-Ed report. The NRC has consistently had figures on the size of the bubble higher than Met-

"The only thing we have is that there is reason to be encouraged about the bubble size," spokesman Ken Clark said.

Meanwhile, engineers at the site continued the slow process of starting to convert hydrogen gas in the containment building back to water to help cool the reactor. The new attempt began just hours after President Carter - himself a trained nuclear engineer - and Gov Dick Thornburgh donned bright yellow protective boots, personally inspected the plant on the Susquehan na River island and reported the situation "stable."

Engineers hooked up hydrogen recombiners" to the vents of the containment building, where the nuclear core is housed, to start today's operation.

The two recombiners were in place and were expected to be in full operation later today, according to Harry Kister, a Nuclear Regulatory Commission official in Philadelphia.

The recombiners are designed to convert some of the hydrogen gas buildup in the containment building back into water by heating it with oxygen - a process similar to the way steam from a teapot is converted back into water vapor.

Once that is achieved, the engineers hope to use the reconverted water to help in the cooling process.

Success in the conversion attempt also would reduce the possibility of a second hydrogen gas explosion. Officials believe such an explosion damaged the facility last Wednesday, less than 10 hours after the nation's worst nuclear accident

Authorities said the maneuver posed no new danger and Thornburgh as if to stress the belief - ordered state employees to report for work as usual today in the state Capitol complex, 10 miles from the plant site.

Carter - who 27 years ago was part of a Navy team that helped avert a nuclear disaster in an experimental reactor at Chalk River in Canada made a 26-minute on-site inspection of the mist-shrouded Three Mile Island plant Sunday.

During his visit, he passed a wall of instrument panels showing the damaged reactor's condition.

Later, he went to nearby Middletown, Pa., and told residents Thornburgh may have "to take further steps" to protect the population. He appealed to residents in the affected area to remain calm.

Civil Defense officials put six counties - or some 636,000 people - in central Pennsylvania on "advanced phase-in, and that has been alert" Sunday for possible evacuachallenged by United Illuminating tion of the population in an area ranging up to 20 miles from the Thousands of residents already had fled the area. There has been no official evacuation order, but Thornburgh suggested that pregnant women and pre-school children stay at least five miles away from the facility.

The main task now faced by the engineers is to cool the reactor core so they can shut it down cold. Unless the fuel core can be cooled, the danger of a melt-down of the core the worst possible nuclear catastrophe - could arise.

Harold Denton, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's operation chief at the plant site, said the level of hydrogen in the containment building was increasing. But he said if the increase in hydrogen was due to a decrease in the size of the bubble, "that's what we hoped to achieve.

Carter, cheered and applauded enthusiastically by about 600 Middletown residents when he arrived at the local town hall, shook hands, grinned and waved to the crowd as he departed for Washington.

But inside the hall, the president appeared grim as he repeated three times that his main concern was the safety of the population.

'If we make an error, we want to err on the side of extreme caution and extra safety." Carter said. "The health and safety of the people will be paramount "

Giant Tank Reaches Pa

SCRANTON, Pa. (UPI) - A convoy hauling a giant nuclear radiation containment chamber to the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant trundled into Pennsylvania today, after winding its way through Connecticut back roads and across New York State.

Moving at 30 to 35 miles per hour, the convoy crossed from Connecticut to New York at 5:30 a.m. and crossed into Pennsylvania at Port Jervis, N.Y. at 7:55 a.m.

State police accompanied the convoy, which includes a spare truck for the 117,000-pound, 85-by-15-foot holding tank, a crane for lifting the truck around tight corners, a pickup truck and a pace car. The convoy continued on Interstate

DEAR ABBY: In reference to the third grader who wanted to give out 23 invitations to her birthday party when here were 29 in her class: Bless you, Abby, for siding with the teacher who wouldn't let her give out the invitations at school unless everyone in the class was invited. (You said, "The pain of having been eft out will remain with those six who were uninvited long after the fun has been forgotten by those who attended. You are so right, Abby, I'm 29, and I still get pains in my stomach when I recall how one popular girl in my sixth grade class invited everybody but me and another girl to her veen party. She gave out printed invitations, then, the day before the party, she must have realized that we knew about it and felt hurt, so she "invited" us, but told us the

I'M SO GLAD YOU

My mother hurriedly made me a costume and dropped me off at the girl's house. I kept ringing the doorbell for the longest time. When nobody answered, I walked home cry-I hated school the rest of the year.

PAINFUL MEMORIES DEAR MEMORIES: I received a surprising number of letters from others who also had some painful memories: DEAR ABBY: The pain of being left out is still remembered by this 59-year-old reader I remember when a girl in my class had a sweet-16 party and I wasn't invited because I wore a heavy brace on my leg I'll never forget this heartless girl telling me to my face that she really liked me, but didn't invite me to her party because there would be dancing and I wouldn't have a very good time sitting and watching everyone else dance!

J.W.D., CHICAGO DEAR ABBY: A letter in your column certainly jogged some unhappy memories of my school days. When I was in the eighth grade, a girl in my room had a birthday party and invited everybody in the class but me and another girl. Her party was held on a Friday night and I skipped school that day because I was so humiliated I didn't think I could face my classmates without breaking down in tears. That was 53 years ago, but I remember it as though it was wouldn't let a student pass out invitations to a party. I am a retired schoolteacher who frequently had to fight the same battle with some of my students' mothers. You would not believe how insensitive some people could be Some kids would have parties and exclude all the Jewish kids . . . or the black kids . . . or the Indian kids. Small wonder some of those youngsters grew up to be bigots. They were carefully taught at home that anybody who was "different" was inferior. Thank heavens things are

FORMER TEACHER: S.D.

DEAR ABBY: When I was in fifth grade, we moved out of state and I had to change schools. Being very shy, I didn't make friends very easily at my new school, so when the popular boy in the class had a party, he invited everyone except me and a very fat boy. I felt terribly hurt. One of the kids in our class liked the fat boy, and refused to attend the party unless he was invited, too. The fat boy in turn said HE wouldn't go unless "the new kid" (me) was invited. So as it turned out everyone in the class went and had S.L. IN ILLINOIS
