Feds Try To Block Highway

HARTFORD (UPI) - The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency moved Friday to block the extension of Interstate 84 east to Rhode Island, but state and construction officials said the challenge could merely be a costly delay.

EPA's regional office in Boston asked the U.S. Department of Transportation to withdraw its approval of the eastern Connecticut highway, claiming the road would have "unacceptable environmental and public health impacts." But Connecticut Construction Industries Association Inc. spokesman William Huebner said EPA was only trying to stall the highway's construction and force the state to lose its federal funds for the project. "It's a delaying tactic, no question The DOT earlier approved the project, after its urban impact statement turned up nothing wrong with the extension State officials last week followed up that action by ap-

Can technology be controlled? If so, how should it be done and, in a democratic society, who is to do it? And toward what ends should it be directed? These questions involve value judgments as well as technical judgments. In the past dozen years, the search for answers to these questions has led to Technology Assessment - the attempt by experts, the public, and the government to forecast and evaluate the possible social, environmental, and human consequences of technological developments before they are applied. Until recently, technology was judged primarily in terms of its immediate - or "first-order" - effects. For example, the immediate effects of the automobile are transportation for its driver and sales for the manufac-However, technology also has many broader impacts automobile), the environment (pollution), and even international politics (reliance upon imported oil). Along with the benefits of increased mobility, the automobile has had some undesirable consequences. Technology Assessment evaluates the social benefits and compares them with the social costs ("disbenefits") by process called risk analysis, or social cost benefit analysis. Action can then be taken to maximize the benefits while minimizing the possibility of socially

Questioning Technology

Although technology's impact had been a social, political and economic issue in Britain and Europe for more than a century, not until the mid 1960s was technological advance seriously questioned in the United States. Why?

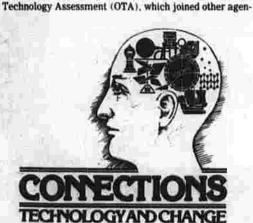

The combined impact of Vietnam, the civil rights movement, and the social and cultural aftermath of - > World War II led to a value crisis and some disenchantment with the "American Dream." Technology inevitably was questioned along with other values and institutions. At almost the same time, some highly publicized accounts of harmful byproducts of technical developments led to mounting public concern: Rachel Carson, in "Silent Spring" (1963), described the danger of DDT; in "Unsafe At Any Speed" (1965), Ralph Nader alleged that car manufacturers ignored safety factors, and in the same period the media publicized the birth deformities from thalidomide, a drug that had been administered to help expectant mothers.

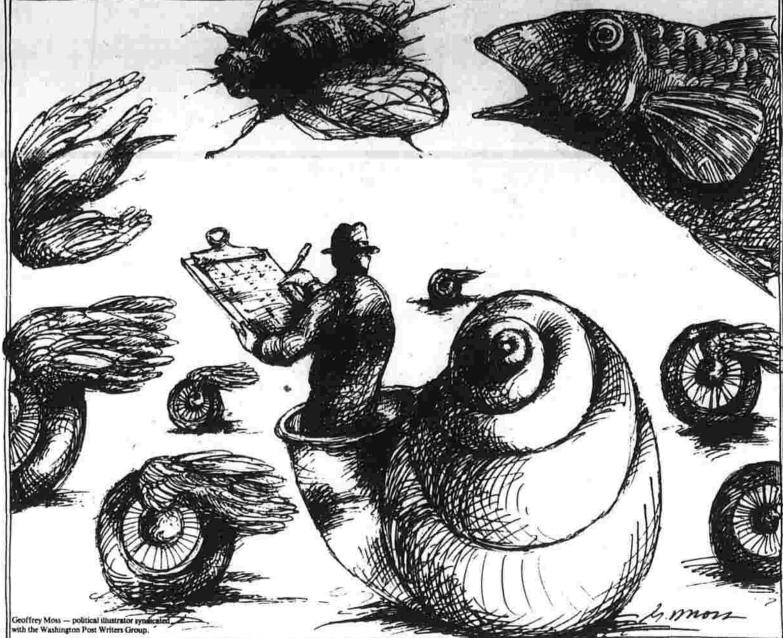

Thalidomide and DDT were banned; and the government mandated safety belts in automobiles. Almost overnight the environmentalist and consumerist movements came to maturity and "Technology Assessment" was born. The term was first used in 1966 in a public document by

Doubloon Sales Price Sets New Coin Record

By RUSS MacKENDRICK This has nothing to do with getting a Christmas gift for cousin Egbert, but it is something earth-shaking in the field of numismatics. The Brasher Doubloon shown here went for $725,000 at an auction a couple of weeks ago. This is a new record price for any coin anywhere. The auction was the first section of the Garrett sales being staged by the Bowers & Ruddy Galleries. The highest auction price for a coin was et in 1970 at $77,500 for an 1804 silver dollar. In 1974 a similar coin brought $150,000, and this year, $200,000 -- but the Brasher Doubloon bid makes this seem relatively peanuts.

The Garrett sale results as a whole will mean an overhauling of the pricing structure for rare coins. For nstance, the Coiled Hair Stella of 1879 (a $4 gold piece), is the recent Red Book at $90,000 — at the auction it brought $115,000.

1888 Flowing Hair Stella is listed at $45,000 and it went to $65,000. A Templeton Reid quarter eagle (2.50 gold), in uncirculated condition, sold for $27,000 in 1976. Dave Bowers reports that a specimen grading only Very Fine was bid off at $47,500. Another aspect of the auction, besides the upward repricing it has made necessary, was the establishment of figures for rare coins not priced at all in the Red Book. DEAR ARRY: I belong to a weekly card club consisting o eight intelligent, interesting women. While playing cards wentrate on the game, but when we sit down to eat,

What is the matter with such a person?

one lady in the group always monopolizes the conversation with long, drawn out stores about herself, her children, her opinions, her this and her that, etc. I see the other women in the group, all waiting for a chance to talk, but "Mrs. Motor Mouth" never gives anyone else a chance to say a word. There is one in every ladies club I've ever belonged to.

Dear Abby

PITTSBURGH

DEAR PITTSBURGH: The person who comes into a group and hoge all the conversation is no less a pig than the pe who comes to the table and eats all the food. Such pigs hould be rationed. And until someone in your club tells Mrs. Motor Mouth" to idle her motor, prepare to be a frustrated, captive audience. It's in the cards.

DEAR ABBY: Please print this in your column without mentioning my city or state since this problem is one I have turned over in my mind so many times I can't think clearly anymore. Perhaps your objectivity can help. A gentleman and I attended the same social occasion no long ago but, unfortunately, we were not introduced at the

I have been following his career quietly since then, and found that we have much in common - neither one of us has ver been married, and although he is quite a bit older than I, we share the same religion, ethnic background, educational level, hobby (gardening) and long-time interest in government and business. We both hold respected and onsible positions, but live and work miles apart The dilemma: Since I don't know a mutual friend who seld make the introduction, how can I express my admiration and interest in this man without appearing tasteless or

Loving Tree

Children and Christmas Children and Christmas trees are a natural pairing at Yuletide, but a little girl in need of a Merry Christmas tree is treated to one by a very unique pine tree, on "The Tiny Tree," the animated special to be rebroadcast Wednesday, Dec. 19, on CBS.

As Squire Badger, the narrator of the tale, says, "The Tiny Tree" is about "love and sharing, not just at Christmas, but year round." The tree of the title is a small whispering pine standing in a meadow
