Guardsmen close off riot area

Nobody facing shutoff

MANCHESTER — The Manchester Area Conference of Churches knows of no area residents who will be affected by the utility company's decision to shut off service today to poor people with delinquent bills.

A winter moratorium on power shutoffs was mandated by state law. It had been legally lifted April 15, but the utilities had voluntarily extended the moratorium to today for hardship cases.

On April 14, Joanne Mikoleit, director of the MACC Fuel Bank, had said she knew of 157 homes that would have had their power cut off. But in the month-long interim, Ms. Mikoleit said most people have "had good luck making payment arrangements" with the utilities.

"I don't have any (residents) whose service is going to be turned off. Nobody is having their gas or lights shut off," Ms. Mikoleit said today.

The threatened residents had included some East Hartford consumers, but most were Manchesterites.

Ms. Mikoleit said she believes the actual effect of the end of the moratorium won't be felt until the end of the month, when it can be learned whether poor customers actually fulfilled their payment arrangement.

In related energy business, today is the deadline for welfare clients to send the state energy assistance applications. The state will stop taking requests for the $10.3 million energy aid program at 4:30 p.m.

MIAMI (UPI) — National Guard troops with M-16 rifles diverted thousands of motorists driving to work today away from 50 square miles of heavily populated areas devastated by two days and nights of burning, looting and rioting that killed 19 people and injured hundreds.

It was the worst rioting since outbreaks in Los Angeles' Watts district and at Detroit in the 1960s and the first in the nation in the 1980s.

Over 460 people were arrested. Property damage was expected to run into the billions of dollars.

The acrid smell of burning buildings and debris hung in the humid air on the outskirts of the barred areas. A tower of black smoke plumed above Liberty City, a sprawling ghetto area of northwest Miami where blacks rioted at the 1988 Republican National Convention at Miami Beach.

Smoke from smoldering remains of three major night blazes served as visible reminders of the black protest that erupted Saturday. The rioting began after a Tampa, Fla., jury judged four white expolicemen from Dade County innocent in the beating death of a Arthur McDuffie, a black insurance agent from Miami.

Firemen, backed by police squads clearing the streets with teargas, however, managed to bring hundreds of blazes, including 40 to 50 major fires, under control in the pre-dawn hours.

Dade County Public Safety Director Bobby Jones, put in command by the governor of all police, 1,100 National Guard troops plus scores of state patrolmen and other officers, said the situation was stable.

Was the worst over, he was asked? "I would sure as hell hope that it is, but I'm very cautious when it comes to that kind of optimism," Jones replied.

Over, or not, he said, Miami has paid a terrible price.

He said the county medical examiner had confirmed 19 deaths as of 5:30 a.m., including a Miami city police lieutenant who died of a heart attack while escorting National Guard troops to their post.

More than 400 have been injured, he said. UPI's checks of police injury reports indicated at least 600 hurt, including more than 40 suffering gunshot wounds. Five were lawmen.

Jones said his daybreak tour of the riot areas left him "depressed by the number of businesses totally destroyed. Many of them are owned by blacks."

"The black community," he said, "has paid a price for this in terms of thousands of jobs, temporarily and perhaps permanently lost."

Jones said he most likely would impose the dusk-to-dawn curfew again tonight. "It's still too critical and too dangerous in there."

"We have to play it day by day and hour by hour," he said.

Schools were closed today and bus service was canceled.

It was early today before state troopers and local police were able to start quelling the burning, looting and sniping by armed blacks who broke into pawnshops and stripped them of rifles, shotguns and pistols. Officials had hoped an 8 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew imposed by Gov. Bob Graham would work.

It didn't, at least not until dawn was beginning to break over a city famous as a vacation mecca for millions, and more recently for the thousands of Cuban and Haitian refugees seeking freedom and a better life in the United States.

Although the McDuffie slaying and the acquittal of the policemen were the trigger, racial tensions had been mounting in Miami for over a year.

Related story and pictures on page 19.

The unemployment rate among blacks, officials estimate, is about 17 percent, twice as high as for whites and Latinos. Thirty-eight percent of the blacks, who compose 15 percent of the city's 1.5 million people, have incomes below the poverty level, state figures show.

Earlier this month, Dr. Johnny Jones, black superintendent of Dade County schools, was convicted of using public funds to try to buy $9,000 worth of luxury bathroom fixtures in the so-called "gold plumbing caper" trial. He was suspended when the charges were filed and fired when he was found guilty.

And last December, Dade County police with a search warrant for narcotics mistakenly broke into the home of black schoolteacher Nathaniel LeFleur and allegedly pistolwhipped him before realizing they were in the wrong home. He is suing the county.

The massive influx of Cuban and Haitian refugees into South Florida in the last month has also upset Miami's black community. A recent poll by the Miami Herald showed 87 percent of the blacks questioned believed the new immigrants would have a "largely negative" impact.

A city police spokesman confirmed just before dawn that "the curfew is working for us right now. I hope we can keep it that way."

A Miami fire operations dispatcher reported, "All the major fires are under control. They are rekindling and resetting some of them, but we're getting in to fight them."

Until 1 a.m., firefighters stood helplessly on the perimeter of the riot areas and watched hundreds of fires burn supermarkets, warehouses, and stores to the ground. Police were unable to provide protection from snipers and gangs of rock-and-bottle-throwing looters.

Police units clad in flak jackets and riot helmets began moving into the ravaged areas soon after the curfew. Among those arrested were 42 whites.

Lost man not lost

MANCHESTER — A Coventry man missing since Friday and the subject of a nationwide alert, was in custody at Manchester Police Headquarters over the weekend.

Police say George E. Walker, 20, of 151 Berry Ave., was reported missing by his mother who said she loaned him her car for a job interview in Windsor. When Walker failed to return Saturday, Coventry police issued an alert Sunday, saying the car had been found in East Hartford with a broken window.

However, Manchester police who were routinely patrolling the Bennet Junior High School area Friday say they saw a suspicious man who they later arrested after he apparently entered the school, was stopped by the principal there and broke away.

Police stopped Walker's car on I-94 shortly after the incident and charged him with criminal trespass. He was also charged with driving without a license and failure to carry an insurance card. He is being held on a $500 bond.

Police had no explanation for the communication problem or for the conflicting reports on the location of the car.

Cheney workers sign pact

MANCHESTER — A new three-year contract for Cheney Mill's workers has been reached.

Negotiations between the union, Amalgamated Textile and Clothing Workers' Union, Local 63 and the Cheney Mills owners, Gerli and Co. were termed satisfactory by both sides.

The contract includes 7.5 percent wage increases for each of the three years. The main contract changes were in the fringe benefits.

The union and the company agreed to insurance policy through Century 80. The insurance, according to Stanley Prachnack, union president, offers more complete coverage. An example Prachnack used was that employees would be insured for optional care.

Another aspect of the new contract was increases in the pension benefits. The first contract year the benefits increase by $7 and in the third year another dollar.

Presently, wages start at about $4 an hour at the mill and range up to $7 an hour. The contract apparently includes adjustments in the scales, according to Prachnack.

The plant will be advertising for more employees according to both Prachnack, and a statement released by Neale Belcourt, vice president of Gerli and Co., a New York based firm.

New rates will be set for some of the skilled labor such as loom fixers, finishing machine crew leaders, slasher operators, mechanics, electricians and other crafts.

"We have had trouble attracting people with good mechanical and technical ability, but now that we pay up to $7 per hour, that should change," Belcourt said in that statement.

The contract package, with the increased benefits will cost the company a quarter of a million dollars, Belcourt said.

He also said the Cheney Mills intends on remaining open. "Recently the Cheney Historical Society was given a state grant to map out and tell the town what the possibilities would be for use of the building if Cheney ever moved out."

"This is a lot of rhetoric as far as we are concerned because we have no intention of moving out."

Volcano blows its top off

VANCOUVER, Wash. (UPI) — Mount St. Helens blasted 1,300 feet of its top off Sunday in violent eruptions that sent hot mud, ash and gases raging down its slopes. Nine fatalities were confirmed from the volcanic fury and officials said that at least 21 others were missing.

Heavy ash boiling out of the mountain to elevations as high as 10 miles drifted eastward today, blotting out the sky and leaving gritty, slippery deposits on roads as far east as Montana and Wyoming, 500 miles away.

National Weather Service officials said because the finer particles of ash had been blown into the stratosphere by upper level winds, the dust could circle the globe for up to two years, possibly having an affect on world weather patterns.

Among the missing were David A. Johnston, a volcano expert for the U.S. Geological Survey, and Reid Blackburn, on assignment for National Geographic and the Vancouver Columbian. Both were at work on the mountain when the gigantic explosion occurred.

Highway and air traffic came to a standstill in most of eastern Washington and schools were closed as far away as Missoula, Mont.

Despite the new violence, Bob Christiansen, USGS geologist, said no lava had emerged from the mountain and that the volcano's history indicated any lava flow would be confined to the slopes of the mountain.

In addition to the nine bodies found Sunday, authorities said 21 people including stubborn 83-year-old Harry Truman who refused to leave his lodge on Spirit Lake on the mountain's north side were missing and feared dead.

An Air National Guard spokesman estimated between 30 and 50 injured people were airlifted from the Toutle River Valley northwest of the volcano. Mudflows sent walls of water up to 12 feet high crashing through the valley at speeds of 30 mph.

Mount St. Helens had been threatening a major explosion since March 27 when it roared to life after a 123-year slumber. The mightiest blast of all, heard 150 miles away, occurred without warning at 8:32 a.m. Sunday.

Minutes after the eruption, officials ordered the evacuation of about 2,000 people from the base of the mountain.

Jim Unterwegner of the U.S. Forest Service said the shock wave blew down all timber and vegetation in a fan shape extending 15 miles out to the north and west of the peak.

Homes in Spirit Lake, Wash. are flooded by waters of the Toutle River after the Mt. St. Helens volcano erupted Sunday, melting snow and ice. The resulting waters overflowed adding to other problems including poisonous volcanic gases which may have caused five deaths in the area. (UPI photo).

Students fight in Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (UPI) — Fifty thousand students and residents of a major city south of Seoul battled fully armed paratroopers with rocks and sticks for a second straight day today, defying the proclamation of full martial law and a ban on political activity.

There were numerous injuries, but no exact figure was immediately available. A witness likened the street clashes to "battlefield" scenes.

The reports said paratroopers charged into the demonstrators and clubbed those they could get with the butts of their M-16 rifles. On several occasions soldiers isolated from other troops were grabbed by protesters and beaten.

The afternoon battle followed a morning clash in which hundreds of students fought the soldiers some 400 yards from a scene one witness said was "just like a battlefield."

Refugees still coming

KEY WEST, Fla. (UPI) — Another 1,510 Cuban refugees arrived in Florida on 23 boats Sunday. By late Sunday, the total in the 28-day refugee sealfit had risen to 57,467.

The sale of two acres to East Hartford Welding was approved by the board in April, and according to Alan Lamson, town planner, the firm is prepared to begin construction.

However, in the published ordinance explaining the sale, technical errors were made. East Hartford Welding requested a new ordinance, which the board must approve.

The sale will be for the same parcel, and same conditions the board approved earlier.

PZC to consider M zone, motocross

MANCHESTER — Allowing lanes has been tabled pending language changes in the proposed ordinance. The ordinance would allow bowling alleys to serve liquor, even if they are within 1,000 feet of another outlet. This distance margin is required for all outlets except restaurants.

The PZC suggested that hours be set for serving liquor in the alleys. The PZC recommended hours of between 5 p.m. and 1 a.m. for liquor sales.

Also on the commission agenda is approving changes in the town's "M" zone. This zone regulates construction of group homes, stating that group homes may be built when there is a room for 150 cars at the site.

Although he noted there was one exit and entrance to the area, he approved the parking plan.

The commission will also consider the request of Brunswick Corp. to build its cocktail lounge in the Parkade to serve liquor.

Last weekend uncovered

In the latest memoir out of Washington, Warren L. Gullery's "Breaking Cover" tells tales on the likes of former president Lyndon Johnson, Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter.

But the best inside tidbit yet appears in this week's Newsweek. The former head of the White House Military Office tells about the last weekend at Camp David for two aides who got the ax after Watergate.

H.R. Haldean and John Ehrlichman, he says, ordered $10 pounds of stone crabs delivered by presidential jet from a Miami Beach restaurant.

Writes Gullery, "Figuring the price of jet fuel alone, the fish for their last supper cost the taxpayer $500 a pound."

Eva Marie snake

Local health authorities and food ordinance bureaucrats were contacted recently to approve the appearance of rock ghouls Alice Cooper's eight-foot boa constrictor Eva Marie Snake during filming of a scene from the upcoming rock 'n' roll picture "Roadie."

The segment features Alice, actress Kaki Hunter and the snake dining at Bruno's Italian Restaurant in Santa Monica, Calif.

"Legal, state and county clearances had to be obtained, even though the place was empty," says "Roadie" director Alan Rudolph.

The scene was shot at 4 a.m., long after Bruno's clientele had indigestion.

Comedy rap

Comedienne Nancy Walker, who was Rhode's mother in the long-running television series "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," harshly ridicules motion picture comedy following her film directing debut in "Can't Stop the Music."

"It's been downgraded for 4-year-olds," says Walker told an American Film Institute seminar. "If you have a dog, a little nasty child and a moronic parent, I guess that's bound to be a hit."

Futurist writer Arthur C. Clarke makes a prediction for book-lovers and entertainment buffs in the latest Omni magazine: "The great development in our near future is the portable electronic library—a library not only of books, but of films and music. It will be about the size of an average book and probably open the same way. In theory, such a device could have enough memory to hold all the books in the world."

Some mpg ratings aren't too accurate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress has an answer for motorists who wonder why their new cars fail to get the gasoline mileage the government lists in its well-publicized fuel economy reports.

For example, some cars rated at 27.5 miles per gallon really only get 19 mpg in actual driving conditions.

Consumers "are being misled," a highly television ads and auto show displays featuring extravagant gasoline mileage claims based on their government's own testing program," said the House Government Operations Committee in recommending development of a new mileage rating plan.

The panel recommended that EPA devise a new mileage rating system that would reflect conditions of use representative of tests, oils and lubricants during testing.

"American car owners and the entire U.S. economy will be losers if that situation is not remedied," the report warned.

Virginia's lines for gas because of low prices

By United Press International In the Falls 18 highway area of northern Virginia along Highway 50, Mike Fuller faces gas lines every day.

Fuller runs a Scott self service filling station that sells regular gasoline for $1.08 a gallon, unleaded for $1.12 and premium for $1.14. That's 10 cents or more per gallon below what most other dealers are selling in the Mid Atlantic states.

"There's usually a line when I open at 7 a.m.," said Fuller. "and it remains until I close." Fuller sells a daily quota and usually locks up the pumps about 11 a.m.

How does he do it? "I don't know. It has something to do with Alaskan oil," said Fuller.

Scott and BP, Inc. stations are subsidiaries of Standard Oil of Ohio, and receive a federal subsidy on Alaskan oil. The Energy Department recently proposed a change in the rules that would force customers of Sohio, BP and Scott to pay 10 cents more a gallon.

Meanwhile, J.W. Goss, president of Boston's Tiger Investors Mortgage Investment Corp., said lower mortgage rates during July, August and September, will lead to an upswing in the depressed housing market.

Soup bath raises $5,000

BRIDGEPORT (UPI) — Radio announcer Joe Thomas, having completed a soggy two-day stint in 700-gallon vat of hot chicken soup, says he may just try a wacky fundraiser again.

Thomas climbed out of the hot tub Sunday after logging 32 hours and three minutes, an apparent world record, in the 77-degree soup.

"You know what a sunburn feels like? It felt just like that," the WNAE announcer said. "For 20 minutes in your house it feels dynamic. But sitting or standing just from the waist down it drives you bananas."

Thomas estimated he had raised about $5,000 — about a third of the effort's original goal — by selling T-shirts and raffie tickets on the exact time he'd stay in the tub — which was guessed by one person.

But, Goss said, rates will go up again in the fourth quarter and "there will be another slowdown."

Reporting on a national survey of lenders, Goss said most buyers are putting 20 to 25 percent down and some are coming up with down payments of 35 to 40 percent in an effort to cut back monthly payments.

Soup bath raises $5,000

BRIDGEPORT (UPI) — Radio announcer Joe Thomas, having completed a soggy two-day stint in 700-gallon vat of hot chicken soup, says he may just try a wacky fundraiser again.

Thomas climbed out of the hot tub Sunday after logging 32 hours and three minutes, an apparent world record, in the 77-degree soup.

"You know what a sunburn feels like? It felt just like that," the WNAE announcer said. "For 20 minutes in your house it feels dynamic. But sitting or standing just from the waist down it drives you bananas."

Thomas estimated he had raised about $5,000 — about a third of the effort's original goal — by selling T-shirts and raffie tickets on the exact time he'd stay in the tub — which was guessed by one person.

Some mpg ratings aren't too accurate

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress has an answer for motorists who wonder why their new cars fail to get the gasoline mileage the government lists in its well-publicized fuel economy reports.

For example, some cars rated at 27.5 miles per gallon really only get 19 mpg in actual driving conditions.

Consumers "are being misled," a highly television ads and auto show displays featuring extravagant gasoline mileage claims based on their government's own testing program," said the House Government Operations Committee in recommending development of a new mileage rating plan.

The panel recommended that EPA devise a new mileage rating system that would reflect conditions of use representative of tests, oils and lubricants during testing.

"American car owners and the entire U.S. economy will be losers if that situation is not remedied," the report warned.

The panel recommended that EPA revise a new mileage rating system that would reflect conditions of use representative of tests, oils and lubricants during testing.

The fuel economy figures are based on Environmental Protection Agency and industry test results that do not take into consideration many variables affecting on-road fuel economy," the committee said, quoting from a report by the Subcommittee on Energy Conservation.

Railroad safety

Deteriorating roadbeds are a serious safety problem on American railroads, according to Rep. Dan Glickman (D-Kan) who called for a reversal of the condition in a statement read into the Congressional Record.

U.S. insensitivity tops list of family problems

By JEANNE LESEM, UPI Family Editor. A new American Revolution is brewing in homes across the land. People are talking back to government — federal, state and local — about injustices and insensitivities they see in laws affecting their families and their lifestyles. Preliminary testimony for the White House Conference on Families "rejects the idea that families are dead or dying," says attorney Jim Guy Tucker, "but they are under enormous pressures — social, economic and political." Tucker, a former Democratic congressman from Little Rock, Ark., is conference chairperson. In a recent speech to a church group in New York City, he said a Yanklovich study showed overwhelmingly that traditional family values still prevail — "and even when they don't, they (parents) want to pass the values on to their children." "The dominant form of existence in this country is still marriage and having children," he said. Tucker and conference executive director John L. Carr say government insensitivity to families in decision-making is the number one concern of the 2,000 persons who testified at seven regional and many state hearings held in 1979 and early this year. Those hearings set the stage for the conference's coming meetings in Baltimore, June 5-7, Minneapolis, June 19-21 and Los Angeles, July 10-12. "Twenty-one states still reduce welfare payments until the father leaves home," Carr said in a telephone interview from his Washington, D.C. office. Medicaid policies pay for institutional care for the elderly, he said, but not for help that would allow them to remain in their homes. In his New York speech, Tucker told of a Boston father with a $15,000 a year income whose wife had died after a long, costly illness. "Their children became truant and he became an alcoholic. Only then did the state of Massachusetts step in (to help)." The state put the children into foster homes because no help was available from the family's church or community, Tucker said. He said one Nashville, Tenn. couple who testified were parents of a 6-year-old with cerebral palsy. "Both work and they need a sitter with considerable expertise" to care for the child while they are at their jobs, Tucker said. Tucker, who attended all seven regional meetings and about 20 state hearings, said many women witnesses expressed a wish for their churches to establish child care facilities and to have family nights instead of men's, women's and youth nights. "Not a lot of attention is paid to the potential competition between work and families," Carr said, "or the bigger issue of flexible work schedules." He said both are sources of a lot of stress. "A lot of business and corporation people are trying to find out what led to declines in productivity. It's not just financial," a question of higher pay, he added. Family life education was eighth on the list of concerns, Carr said. People want more high school courses on marriage and the family. "Those who wanted more sex education said they want greater parental involvement in it. Some have parents on committees to develop sex education materials." "More frequently they talk about preparation for marriage, budgeting and psychology."

Educators hear warning of increasing regulation

WEST HARTFORD (UPI) — An educator turned media executive says higher education in the coming decade will have to fend off the intrusive regulations which accompanied federal programs instituted in the 1960s. Times Mirror Co. Chairman Franklin D. Murphy said Sunday governmental programs welcomed by higher education in the 1960s now pose an "unprecedented intrusion" into its right to self-governance. "From the beginning of the modern university in the 12th and 13th centuries, its most treasured possession was the right of self-governance and self-direction, albeit with a recognition of societal needs. Now there has developed a wholly unprecedented intrusion into the affairs of the academy which began mainly with the adoption of so-called Great Society programs in the 1960s," said Murphy. Murphy was one of six honorary degree recipients at the University of Hartford, sharing honors with TV producer Norman Lear, Canadian photographer Yusuf Karsh and Nobel Prize-winning physicist Roslyn S. Yalow. The veteran educator said the Great Society programs had been embraced by the academic world when they were enacted under the administration of the late President Lyndon Johnson. The intentions behind the programs were "proper enough" and the "outpouring of federal dollars" welcome by colleges and universities which "helped fashion the programs and eagerly accepted the largess," Murphy said. "Too late did they realize the fallacy of the 'free lunch' or remember that the road to hell is often paved with good intentions," he said. Murphy, who left a career as a university administrator to join Los Angeles-based Times Mirror. He said the problem with the Great Society programs came when "anonymous bureaucrats" began drawing up regulations which turned them into "pages of often unintelligible nit-picking and very often nonsense" which always involved "intrusion into internal affairs." Murphy also blamed Johnson — whom he referred to only as a president with "one foot in the New Deal and one foot on the Texas frontier" — for laying the groundwork for now rampant inflation threatening higher education. Murphy, former chancellor of the University of California at Los Angeles and University of Kansas, said inflation hit higher education harder than other segments of the population because universities were more labor-intensive. In addition to inflation and government regulation, Murphy said another major threat facing higher education was government efforts to make it tougher for people to make donations to colleges and universities. "Stripped of all technical verbiage, this movement is basically an ideological attack on voluntarism, and therefore on pluralism. It is, in fact, a significant push toward statism. "Without voluntarism over the years and in the future, this nation would not have had and cannot retain its rich and exciting mix of private and public institutions," he said.

Activist says firms boosting arms race

HARTFORD (UPI) — Nobel Prize winner and political activist Dr. George Wald says corporate America — not national security — is the driving force behind the billion-dollar arms race. Wald, addressing the annual meeting of the Caucus of Connecticut Democrats, also said Saturday it was up to the nation's young people to change the power structure and reverse the booming increase in defense spending. The winner of the 1967 Nobel Prize for medicine and physiology said all the talk of statesmanship and national security influencing the arms race was a facade. "What lies in the back of the arms race is a tremendous business, big business," he told about 40 members of the Democratic Party. He said corporations such as Exxon, General Motors and others on the Fortune 500 list made more money than many nations and shaped domestic and foreign policy. "Most Americans don't know what a really big corporation is. Those are major powers. Do they have military forces? Yes, they have our military forces," he said. "Do they have an intelligence network? Yes, I'm sad to say they have the FBI and the CIA. Yes, I'm sad to say they have our government," Wald said. He said all the nation's major corporations are on the list of big defense contractors.

Manson raps sentence rule

NEW HAVEN (UPI) — State Corrections Commissioner John Manson says Connecticut's new system of determinate sentencing won't deter crime but will reduce the prison and drive up costs. Manson also said in an interview broadcast Sunday he doubted Connecticut would execute someone this decade despite legislation to expand the list of crimes punishable by the death penalty. Manson said the new law which requires judges to impose fixed sentences, stiffens penalties and eliminates parole won't deter crime. The proposal, which replaces indefinite sentencing, takes effect July 1. "The sentencing structure under which an offender comes into court is probably the last thing on his mind when he's committing a crime. Uppermost in his mind is will he be not, get caught," Manson said. He said minimum mandatory sentencing doesn't reduce crime but "more often what it does is increase the prison population, and the costs of incarcerating people." Manson, a guest on the Connecticut Radio Network's weekly interview program "Dialogue 1980," estimated the sentencing bill will mean the addition of at least 500 persons to the prison system. "Yes, there will be prison population increases as a result and no, we would not have existing facilities to accommodate them," he said, adding a new $20 bed prison would cost $5 million to build and $7 million a year to operate. The commissioner said he didn't think a new law which makes rape, murder and multiple murder capital offenses would lead to an execution by 1990. "It would surprise me greatly and stagger me if it happened this decade," he said.

Thousands of students given degrees in state

By United Press International. Thousands of students at Connecticut colleges and universities were awarded degrees Sunday as rain, threatening skies drove all but one commencement ceremony indoors. The largest turnout was at the University of Connecticut in Storrs, where about 4,350 degrees were conferred on undergraduate and graduate students in the school's 97th annual commencement. Other commencements were held Sunday at Albertus Magnus College in New Haven, Eastern Connecticut State College in Willimantic and the University of Hartford in suburban West Hartford. Despite an annoying light rain, the University of Hartford awarded degrees to 1,600 students in an outdoor ceremony where television producer Norman Lear was among three recipients of honorary degrees. Lear, a Hartford native and producer of several television shows including "All in the Family," was honored for "carrying the things you learned here in Connecticut to the rest of the country and to the world." At UConn, the large number of students involved required a series of indoor ceremonies on the main campus at Storrs for commencement exercises, as well as a separate ceremony Saturday for law students. Degrees were conferred on 178 students at the Law School's first graduation held at its new campus in West Hartford, the former home of the Hartford Seminary Foundation. The students, who will soon be giving legal advice, received some in an address by U.S. District Court Judge Justice Ellen B. Burns. She urged the graduates to be honest with their future clients, to be well-prepared for trials and to respect those with whom they work in the courtroom. In Willimantic, 580 graduating students joined the ranks of 7,500 alumni who have graduated from Eastern Connecticut State College since its founding in 1889. The school, smallest of the four in the state college system, moved ceremonies indoors because of the weather as did Albertus Magnus College in New Haven, which conferred 118 degrees at St. Mary's Church. Although graduation ceremonies were still to be held at Yale University, two members of the school's faculty were busy Sunday speaking at other commencements. Phyllis Curtin, master of Yale's Branford College, spoke at Albertus Magnus while Jaroslav Pelikan, Sterling professor of history, addressed UConn undergraduates at two ceremonies. In Danbury, 800 Western Connecticut State College graduates received degrees. T.T.B. Koh, the Republic of Singapore's ambassador to the United Nations, was the commencement speaker.

Those hearings set the stage for the conference's coming meetings in Baltimore, June 5-7, Minneapolis, June 19-21 and Los Angeles, July 10-12.

U.S. insensitivity tops list of family problems

By JEANNE LEMSE
UPI Family Editor

A new American Revolution is brewing in homes across the land. People are talking back to government — federal, state and local — about injustices and insensitivities they see in laws affecting their families and their lifestyles.

Preliminary testimony for the White House Conference on Families "rejects the idea that families are dead or dying," says attorney Jim Gay Tucker, "but they are under enormous pressures — social, economic and political."

Tucker, a former Democratic congressman from Little Rock, Ark., is conference chairperson.

In a recent speech to a church group in New York City, he said a Yankelovich study showed overwhelmingly that traditional family values still prevail — "and even when they don't, they (parents) want to pass the values on to their children."

He said economic issues raised at preliminary meetings ranged from the obvious ones of unemployment and inflation to taxes and social security policies.

Those and other economic pressures placed second on a list of 25 greatest concerns. The list was compiled by the committee after the last preliminary hearing and state meeting ended, Carr said.

The third concern involved support for specific family structures; housewives saying they are tired of having their role run down by media and government.

Single parent families are tired of reading a lot of negative things about their status.

Child care was fourth.

"Clearly there is a need for child care outside the home," Carr said.

"A range of choices, community groups, relatives, neighbors and government. There's a lot of interest in child care at the workplace, and a lot of concern about cost."

The fifth concern is education, Carr said, both quality and the relationships between parents and teachers.

Health care placed sixth, with questions raised about cost and quality, about maternity and infant care, the availability of supportive services to poor families and the need for good nutrition and health care before and during pregnancy.

Seventh: The impact on family life of growing numbers of women in the work force and the need to adapt sick leave and maternity leave policies to the realities of that change.

One witness at a hearing said he could get sick leave for his own illness but not if he were needed at home because family members were acutely ill.

"Not a lot of attention is paid to the potential competition between work and families," Carr said, "or the bigger issue of flexible work schedules." He said both are sources of a lot of stress.

"A lot of business and corporation people are trying to find out what led to declines in productivity. It's not just financial," a question of higher pay, he added.

Family life education was eighth on the list of concerns, Carr said. People want more high school courses on marriage and the family.

Those who wanted more sex education said they want greater parental involvement in it. Some have parents on committees to develop sex education materials.

"More frequently they talk about preparation for marriage, budgeting and psychology."

Educators hear warning of increasing regulation

WEST HARTFORD (UPI) — An educator turned media executive says higher education in the coming decade will have to fend off the intrusive regulations which accompanied federal programs instituted in the 1960s.

The Rev. Malcolm McDowell of St. Paul's Church and the Rev. Joseph Kugler of St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Willimantic, celebrated the nuptial mass and performed the double-ring ceremony. Mrs. K. Moorhead of Willimantic was organist and Patrick Mills of Coventry, soloist.

Activist says firms boosting arms race

HARTFORD (UPI) — Nobel Prize winner and political activist Dr. George Wald says corporate America — not national security — is the driving force behind the billion-dollar arms race.

Wald, addressing the annual meeting of the Caucus of Connecticut Democrats, also said Saturday it was up to the nation's young people to change the power structure and reverse the booming increase in defense spending.

The winner of the 1967 Nobel Prize for medicine and physiology said all the talk of state-mandated and national security influencing the arms race was a facade.

"What lies in the back of the arms race is a tremendous business, big business," he told about 40 members of the liberal wing of the state's Democratic Party.

He said corporations such as Exxon, General Motors and others on the Fortune 500 list made more money than many nations and shaped domestic and foreign policy.

"Most Americans don't know what a really big corporation is. Those are major powers. Do they have military forces? Yes, they have our military forces," he said.

"Do they have an intelligence network? Yes, I'm glad to say they have the FBI and the CIA. Yes, I'm glad to say they have our government," Wald said.

He said all the nation's major corporations are on the list of big defense contracts.

Manson raps sentence rule

NEW HAVEN (UPI) — State Corrections Commissioner John Manson says Connecticut's new system of determinate sentencing will not deter crime but will increase the prison and drive up costs.

Manson also said in an interview broadcast Sunday he doubted Connecticut would execute someone this decade despite legislation to expand the list of crimes punishable by the death penalty.

Manson said the new law which requires judges to impose fixed sentences, stiffens penalties and eliminates parole won't deter crime.

"The sentencing structure under which an offender comes into court is probably the last thing on his mind when he's committing a crime. Upfront in his mind it will be, or will be not, get caught," Manson said.

He said minimum mandatory sentencing doesn't reduce crime but "more often what it does is increase the prison population, and the costs of incarcerating people."

Manson, a guest on the Connecticut Radio Network's weekly interview program "Dialogue 1980," estimated the sentencing bill will mean the addition of at least 500 persons to the prison system.

"Yes, there will be prison population increases as a result and no, we would not have existing facilities to accommodate them," he said, adding a new $200 million prison would cost $25 million to build and $7 million a year to operate.

The commissioner said he didn't think a new law which makes rape murder and multiple murder capital offenses would lead to an execution by 1990.

Thousands of students given degrees in state

By United Press International

Thousands of students at Connecticut colleges and universities were awarded degrees Sunday as rainy, threatening skies drove all but one commencement ceremony indoors.

The largest turnout was at the University of Connecticut in Storrs, where about 4,350 degrees were conferred on undergraduate and graduate students in the school's 97th annual commencement.

Other commencements were held Sunday at Albertus Magnus College in West Hartford, the former home of the Hartford Seminary Foundation.

The students, who will soon be giving legal advice, received some in an address by U.S. District Court Judge Justice Ellen B. Burns.

She urged the graduates to be honest with their future clients, to be well-prepared for trials and to respect those with whom they work in the courtroom.

In Willimantic, 580 graduating students joined the ranks of 7,500 alumni who have graduated from Eastern Connecticut State College since its founding in 1899.

The school, smallest of the four in the state college system, moved ceremonies indoors because of the weather as did Albertus Magnus College in New Haven, which conferred 118 degrees at St. Mary's Church.

Although graduation ceremonies were still to be held at Yale University, two members of the school's faculty were busy Sunday speaking at other commencements.

Phyllis Curtin, master of Yale's Branford College, spoke at Albertus Magnus while Jaroslav Pelikan, Sterling professor of history, addressed UConn undergraduates at two ceremonies.

In Danbury, 800 Western Connecticut State College graduates received degrees. T.T.B. Koh, the Republic of Singapore's ambassador to the United Nations, was the commencement speaker.

Polluted water symptom of industrial age

By JACQUELINE HUARD
HARTFORD (UPI) — Chemically contaminated water supplies are the high price Connecticut will pay for years to come for free-wheeling hazardous waste dumping, a state water official says.

Richard Woodhull, chief of water supplies in the Department of Health Services, said no one even knew the chemicals were there until equipment was manufactured to detect them in minute amounts.

He can sympathize with people who are suddenly told not to drink their water.

"I was horrified three years ago when people started talking about this," Woodhull said in an interview. "I thought, 'this is awful, this is scary.' But now that I know more about it, I've readjusted my thinking.

"This is a symptom of the age we're living in. We're now attacking the problem. Three years ago, we didn't even know we had it."

Almost weekly, new reports are issued about chemically polluted drinking water. Some of the contaminants are harmless, but others have been proven to cause cancer in animals.

The chemical trichloroethylene, or TCE, which is used in vinyl-lined, cement-asbestos pipes, was found in water supplies in Simsbury, Leyard, Groton and East Lyme. TCE is an animal carcinogen and is commonly used in dry cleaning.

Woodhull said TCE is dangerous, but only in huge amounts. A person would have to drink more than two quarts of TCE-contaminated water each day for 70 years before exceeding safe levels set by the federal government.

But the word carcinogen alone is enough to drive anyone to bottled water.

"I think it's a fear of the unknown," he said. "Cancer is still a fear word."

Woodhull, a native of Wakefield, Mass., was hired as chief of the water supplies section 32 years ago, right after he received a master's degree in sanitary engineering from Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass.

At that time there were only two or three people in the division. But with the environmental awareness of the past two decades, the payroll ballooned to 28 employees.

Woodhull said the big push to check chemicals in drinking water came three years ago when the Legislature mandated that all public wells be tested. Until that time the state had concentrated on cleaning streams and rivers.

He said most of the chemicals that were found were from hazardous wastes dumped indiscriminately by industries in the past and even now. Ten years ago no one even needed a permit to dump chemicals loaded aggravate conditions of people suffering from high blood pressure.

Another big problem, Woodhull said, is unfiltered drinking water, especially in New Haven, Bridgeport, Stamford and Waterbury.

If the water is just chlorinated without filtration, he said, the "vegetation which colors the water, when chlorinated, produces chloroform—a known animal carcinogen."

Woodhull said he firmly believes the problem is at least as serious as TCE contamination. But "they (water companies) don't want to admit it's a problem because the filtration costs money," he said.

He isn't afraid of the water he drinks at home in Bloomfield, although he does add a little calcium carbonate to the six cups of tea he drinks each day because he said it makes it taste better.

"I also have this theory that it makes my reaction time faster at tennis," he said.

Hearings set on nuisances, fees

VERNON — Before the regular Town Council meeting tonight, the council will conduct two public hearings.

The first hearing is scheduled for 7 in the Memorial Building will be on a proposed ordinance concerning the abatement of nuisances in tenement houses.

The second hearing, scheduled for 7:30, will be on proposed ordinance establishing building permit and certificate of occupancy fees.

The ordinance concerning the tenements would give the building code enforcement officer some authority in carrying out matters in cases of building code violations.

But the police powers would be in the hands of the Vernon Police Department. The code officer, John Darcey has asked to appear before the council tonight to discuss the possibility of changes in the proposed ordinance to give him police power.

The ordinance concerning building permit and certificate of occupancy fees, calls for a $5 fee for permits amounting to up to $1,000 worth of construction and for $6 per $1,000 for any amounts over the $1,000. The certificate of occupancy fee will be $5.

The council will also discuss a proposed resolution for the amendment of the Community Development Block Grant and a letter from the Planning Commission recommending that the amendment be approved.

A letter from A. Richard Lombardi Associates Inc., relative to the relocation of sewer lines in the Interstate 88 area, will be discussed.

During the meeting the council will review a request received from Steven Breiner, vice president of the First Connecticut Small Business Investment Co. of Bridgeport, relative to the repurchase of a parcel of land on West Street, which was taken by the town for tax title. Breiner will present at the meeting to discuss its request.

The council will be asked to take action on a proposed resolution authorizing the mayor to sign an agreement with the U.S. Department of the Interior for the conducting of a historic survey in the Rockville section and also will be asked to take action on a resolution authorizing the mayor to execute and file a grant action request for the Summer Opportunity for Youth Program, sponsored by the federal government.

Raymond and Katherine Messier of 22 Pillsbury Hill will ask the council for permission to by a parcel of town-owned land that abuts their property. Also to be discussed is a request from John J. Carter, head of the Roosevelt Mills in town, relative to a proposed ordinance which would regulate trade in town.

Millstone is one to NU

WATERFORD (UPI) — The Millstone II nuclear power plant, which has been hit by seven unplanned shutdowns this year, will remain off line until early June while engineers reinspect all pipe support systems.

The largest of Connecticut's three nuclear power plants was shut down May 8 to allow for immediate modifications to 13 of its 7,000 pipe supports to comply with Nuclear Regulatory Commission standards.

At issue were pipe hangers in design to withstand an earthquake. Engineers will reinspect and evaluate pipe supports in other systems and make whatever modifications necessary to meet more stringent NRC standards.

Control asked on storage

WATERFORD (UPI) — The Planning and Zoning Commission should have some say over a proposed building to store low-level radioactive waste at the Millstone nuclear power complex, the panel's chairman says.

Commission Chairman John Stam said Sunday the local board must rule whether it has jurisdiction over the Northeast Utilities construction proposal, and if so, to what extent.

The commission was scheduled to meet tonight and take up the sticky issue, which has one state legislator charging the utility with violating the spirit of a state law banning the burial of nuclear wastes in Connecticut.

Northeast has said prior commission approval for construction of the Millstone nuclear power plants and accessory buildings allows construction of the concrete reinforced storage building without further approval.

But Stam said he didn't think the prior approvals gave the huge utility "carte blanche" and the commission should have some control over the storage facility.

"It's not something that would have been anticipated under the original approval," he said.

Northeast said the proposed building could store up to one year's supply of spent resin, a low level radioactive material produced by operating nuclear power plants.

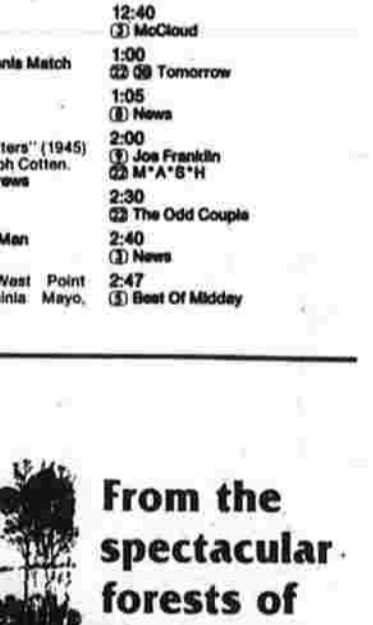

Northeast, which operates the Millstone I and II plants in Waterford and Connecticut Yankee plant in Haddam, filed applications with local officials for one temporary storage building in each town.
