MANCHESTER - The Advisory Park and Recreation Commission at its meeting Thursday night declined to take a position on the town's re-entering the federal Community Development Block Grant program.

Robert Faucher, who is leading the move to re-enter the program, called o the committee to take a stand because he said the recreation department received substantial funding from the program. Faucher said "during the first four years, approximately $200,000 of CD money was allocated for recreational related projects. Without future participation and CD money, it will be parks and recreation that will suffer as this town struggles to maintain an affordable mill rate while being engulfed in runaway in-raising a "non-issue, a red hearing." "Rather than discuss the poor record of the state legislature, Mr. Glassman would rather jump on the bandwagon of a local issue -HUD in Manchester," Zinsser charged Friday.

MANCHESTER - The issue is whether it's an issue. Senatorial District, attacked his opponent's entry into the Community Development Block Grant controversy as

Abraham Glassman, the Democratic candidate seeking the seat of retiring Sen. David Barry, called yesterday for a meeting with the state's two senators, six congress and local legislators to clarify the intent and language of the federal Community Development Block Grant program. The move was Glassman's first statement concerning Manchester's controversial two-year moratorium which is coming to a close in January. Residents are voting again on Nov. 4 in an advisory referendum on whether to rejoin the program.

Glassan still says he's not entering the fray with regard to the most controversial aspects, the questions of whether the town's withdrawal was racially motivated and federal interference in local matters. But, Glassmar says there is an issue, which should be discussed in the Fourth Seantorial District, and the rest of the state, and possibly the nation.

"There's confusion on whether the program is voluntary or not," he said. "I think the legislation should be That Glassman says, Manchester's right to withdraw

By Catharine R. Stimpson Few social institutions are more misunderstood than the family, few social movements more misunderstood

Both the family and feminism are complex creatures of history, influenced by race and class, nationality and religion. One really should speak, not of "the family" and provoke opinions and passions that may obscure a clear picture of their relationship

For many, the relationship between feminism and the family is antagonistic. The family, like other social institutions, is inevitably changing, and feminism has frequently been the scapegoat for those who regret the changes. Opponents of "women's lib" often label it a destructive force that threatens the security and sanctity of traditional family roles. In a national poll in 1977, 40 percent of the respondents thought that the family was breaking down and that the women's movement was largely to blame.

Even a woman whose family life is miserable may recoil from her perception of feminism, based largely on negative stereotypes protrayed by the media. Even supporters of economic, legal, and political rights for women may stop short of supporting domestic changes.

Anti-family arguments

In turn, ever since the 19th century, many feminists philosopher John Stuart Mill, the home is a place in which men reveal their inability to live with women who are their equals. Laws that give husbands power over their and eggs?" The woman commented, "I looked back a wives reinforce this weakness, which masks itself as

For other feminists, shaped by Marxist and socialist thought, the capitalist world consists of two, interdependent spehres: one of public, productive work; one of private, reproductive work. The second both serves the first and helps to sustain its inequities.

For some radical feminists, the family began as a species going. But, in their view, the dependency of mothers and children upon fathers has had bad results.

For still others, who combine feminism and modern psychology, the family has harmed both men and women. As sons grow up, they tend to fear returning to a state of psychological infancy with needs that only their mothers

Since 1963, when Betty Friedan published "The eminine Mystique," feminists have documented such negative beliefs about the family in some detail. They have helped to expose the physical abuses — incest, wifebeating — that women suffer within the home. They have traced psychological patterns which show that many the participating newspapers and colleges. women find motherhood constricting rather than fulfilling, and that children need not be deprived if people other than their natural mothers care for them.

Studying women's work, feminists have shown how burdensome it can be. The jobs women hold in the labor force - such as clerical workers, who are often expected to wait on their male bosses - tend to be low-paying, onerous extensions of their domestic role. Even with outside jobs, women continue to do most housework as well. Despite such realities, feminists have not universally condemned the family. They recognize that many families have worked well for women, that many women have done well within families. For example, black and Hispanic families in America have often been flexible. supportive networks that were necessary for an individual's survival.

Nor are feminists alone when they analyze family stress, tension, and hostility. Freud, for example, cast the family drama as a human trauma. But Freud was no

It asks that we test families, in part, by what women do within them, by the rewards they receive for those efforts, and by the consequences of family life for women.

To be sure, feminists disagree about the family. Some other questions. They reason that women ought to claim their share of human freedom. They ought to be able to decide, without paying a social price, if and when they will become mothers. They ought to be able to choose, without penalty, if they will be heterosexual or not. Constructing a family ethic, the women's movement endorses the principle of equality. It assumes that adults 'feminism," but of families and feminisms. Both also who live together ought equitably to share pleasure and power, love and domestic duties, delight and drudgery. Paradoxically, more and more women who do not call themselves feminists are now acting on some feminist principles in their everyday lives. Over a third of all American women now hold full-time jobs. In both the public sphere of the outside world and the private sphere of the home, women are finding egalitarianism more at-

> Although most women still favor marriage, over half believe that being a parent is not essential for marital happiness. If women are raising children, they are more often blurring the traditional division of labor between girls' work, usually around the house, and boys' work, rarely around the house. In brief, history is apparently closing a gap between what many American women do and what man American feminists would like them to do. Not sur prisingly, American women are less suspicious eminism than they once were. In 1970, only 40 percent of them in a national survey approved of most of the efforts to change women's status. In 1979, 64 percent did.

In 1980, on a spring morning, a middle-aged woman attended a lecture about American women, their work have claimed that the family is a patriarchal form that and their families. When it ended, she spoke up. She had helps men and hurts women. For some, like the English gone back to school, she said, and had never been happier. Then one day her son had come home, sat in th kitchen, looked up and asked, "What about some bacon him, and I snapped. I told him to make them himself. He was grown up, and just because I had given birth to him. that didn't mean that I had to have a frying pan attached to my hand for the rest of my life."

She added, "He hasn't gotten over the shock yet." Feminism may be as shocking to many people as that mother was to her son. Both are firmly saying that we have asked too much of mothers, and given too little, that biological unit—father, mother, and child—that kept our our public and our private lives are undergoing, slowly, erratically, but irreversibly, an evolution if not a revolu-

But the better part of wisdom, they are saying, is to see, not to smear, that process and to realize that feminism is not a scapegoat, but a sympathetic, active witness to profound changes in the ways in which we grow up, toil, dream, and love.

15. TREK not tree. For "tree," there is no perticular reason for the clue's moughts to turn to Africa, as there is in the case of TREK.

16. DYES not dyer. To provide a fest service is not strictly a part of what to takes to be a good dyer, as such.

17. PINE not pink. The clue's somewhat grudging note better suits PINE, as being rather ordinary wood.

20. THRILLER not thrilled. If they are stready excited (i.e., thrilled readers), they are in no nosation to become excited.

23. NEEDY not seedy or weedy. The clue suggests a paternal condition which in some way rubs off on, or affects, the youngster (giving him something to "accept"); from this point of view, NEEDY is the most practically apt answer. CLUES DOWN:

TANNERY not cannery. One may feel that a cannery produces cannel food, etc. ("the product"), as a TANNERY makes or produces leather PLAY not clay. A clay figure may beer little resemblence to reality, but the clue's phrase "real life" (as opposed to dramatized events) suits thestrical PLAY better.

7. SLAVE not shave. "Six or seven days" suggests a long working seek, severing SLAVE (as also does the clue's suggestion of unwillingness).

8. REGARD not reward. As the clue implies, there are different ways in which an employer can REGARD mentals. Practically, however, he simply pays them what they agreed to work for, it's not that the employer has some sort of moral obligation to "reward them in the proper manner," which is an Ideal he "should" (but is free not to) meet.

10. FARE not tire. The clue call for score, say, or sheet, rather than "tire."

9. SAFE not sale. It would certainly be an "achievement" on the part of SAFE manufacturer greatly to improve his product; but an improve sale may arise from a lucky boom in the market.

Why Worry? How many hours of your life are spent in needless anxiety? No matter what you worry about, money, health or old age, it's a waste of time—time that could be spent in a far more pleasurable way.

Put your worries in God's hands. He is far more capable of dealing with them than we. You'll find many cares slipping away and you will begin to experience a peace of mind that you have never known before. Why worry, find God's way to peace of mind.

DEAR ABBY: What do you think is the hardest? Being the oldest child, the youngest child or the middle child?

DEAR CURIOUS: If you ask the eldest, he'll say, "The eldest, because you're expected to set a good example for the younger ones. And if a fight breaks out, I get blamed because I'm the oldest and should know better."

know better."

Ask the middle child, and he'll say, "Being the middle child is the hardest because you get none of the advantages of being the yangest or the oldest."

Ask the youngest child, and fie'll tell you that being the youngest is hardest because "your parents try to keep you 'a baby' as long as possible, and you're the one who has to wear all the hand-me-downs."

In other words, it all depends where you're coming from.

DEAR ABBY: Your recent column on statistics is a gold DEAR ABBY: Your recent column on statistics is a gold mine for those of us who campaign for causes.

The volunteers with Cincinnati's League for Animal Weifare want people to realize, as you pointed out, that 56,000 pets are turned over daily to the nation's animal shelters, where 36,986 are destroyed!

This year we are again supporting a former stray dog named Lady for president. She ran in 1976 and racked up 140 votes. Lady is campaigning to make the public aware that millions of unwanted animals have been imprisoned and dealt the death sentence without "due process." She is the pet of newspaperman C.E. "Stoney" Jackson of Tulahoma, Tenn.

Lady's party is PAWS (Political Action for the World's Strays). Her platform is LOVE (Loyalty, Obedience, Valor, Empathy). These are not merely empty campaign promises, but the true benefits of responsible pet ownership.

Lady's campaign slogan is, "It's better for a dog to go to the White House than for the White House to go to the dogs."

Go with Lady is 1966! Go with Lady in 1980! ELIZABETH LEMLICH, CAMPAIGN CHAIRHUMAN

DEAR ABBY: We hear and read so much about widows whose former friends have deserted them. Perhaps some of them should take a good look at themselves.

We have a friend, in her mid-60s, who has dyed her hair red, wears false eyelashes, tight, shiny pants and the highest heels she can find.

We don't like to include her because she looks like a freak. We love her and would like to see her look like the lovely person she is. How can we tell her without hurting her feelings?

DEAR FRIENDS: False eyelashes, red hair and high heels do not a freak make. Do include her, but let her know in advance that the "women" will be

EVENING HERALD, Sat., Oct. 18, 1980 - 19

Dridge

Oswald Jacoby and Alan Sontag

Systems, gadgets, devotion

Alan Soutag and Peter Welchsel play a special system of their own that they call "Power Precision." It has one similarity to precision. The one-club opening is a forcing bid and guarantees at least 16 high-card points.

Mike Becker and Ron Rubin, the second pair on the winning Spingold team, also use one club as their forcing opening but get right into relay bids from then on. As a result of these relays, it is possible (not probable) for them to reach a alam after several rounds of bidding without showing their real suit until the final bid.

Ron von Derporten and Kyle Larson, the third pair, play a standard American system plus gadgets, as do most expert pairs today.

Kyle says, "After playing against our partners, our opponents are so confused that they don't know what to do when I bid a spade to show spades and rebid in clubs to show clubs while Ron is hidding his own heart suit."

We don't intend to show these expert systems here. They are all so complicated that only people who are willing to devote almost their whole lives to studying bridge with just one or two special partners can get anywhere with them. some of them in the next few weeks. (NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.)
