Medicalization of American society

Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of 15 articles exploring "The Nation's Health." In this article, science writer Joann Ellison Rodgers discusses how we have come to expect medicine to solve our personal and social problems as well as health problems. This series, written for Courses by Newspaper, a program of University Extension. University of California, San Diego, was funded by a grant from the National Endowment for the

By Joann Ellison Rodgers

After World War II, stunning scientific and technological advances - from penicillin and tranquilizers to brain scanners and heart-lung machines - gave physicians unprecedented ability to detect and treat disease. Impressed by these successes, patients and the public inevitably came to expect the medical professign to rescue them from an ever-expanding list of personal, social, and behavioral problems

By the 1980s, this process had produced a unique, broadened definition of "health" that encompassed not just the absence of illness but, as the World Health Organization interprets it, "a state of complete physical, mental, and social well-being."

At first glance, this new trend may seem eminently worthy. Who is not in favor of healthier people? But in fact, reliance on medicine to solve our personal and social problems in addition to our physical illnesses has had some negative consequences.

Defining medical problems

'Goals once considered the exclusive province of parents, clergy, teachers, judges, lawmakers, and social workers now are declared targets for the health care system. Indeed, it is hard to think of any condition that people believe cannot be cured, or at least eased, by the medical system. In more extreme forms, this 'medicalization' of American society assumes that there are no "bad" people, only "sick" ones; no neglect the social, environmental, and personal factors

Demedicalization represents a turn-away from what many perceive as technological medical care. It is fueled by a growing belief that people have a right to privacy, a fight to decide how they live and die, and a right to be in endent of armies of experts who would probe and evaluate their mental competence and functional ability Although demedicalization is, at the moment, David icing Goliath, it represents a viable means of changing the course of health care history. This will require that redefine unrealistic expectations for medical care and begin to reform unhealthy social and personal attitudes and behaviors, which are outside the scope of doc fors and hospitals.

At will mean, also, that we as a society begin to recognize that our health is far too precious to surrender to the control of others.

Our third "R" for all seasons is 'Rejoice!" Too often some Christians feel that "enjoyment" is not their lot — and so go around with a sad countenance, feeling thereby to win God's favor. Perhaps at this point it might be well to remind such of Jesus' words in the Sermon on the Mannel.

Ski notes

While on a three-day trip I touched on skiing four areas. The first stop was Haystack. If you get there early enough you are allowed a run or two before purchasing a ticket. One run was enough for me as I found it icy, scratchy, patchy and windblown on my favorite trail my favorite trail. Next stop, Mt. Snow. Here it was different. I asked around about conditions as I boarded the gondola with my guide. At the summit it was hard packed with few icy spots, so I decided to come down Deer Run where they had snow making. Deer Run is protected by trees with few exceptions where it was windblown. The snow on Sundance was near perfect as the rotary tiller had the area in good condition. Next stop was Stratton, my favorite area. Here they have good snow with a few icy patches. Here I found a busload of skiers from Illing and Bennet Junior High Schools having a ball. They were under the supervision of Torn Russo and Dave Nordling. Russo told me he enjoyed Sun Bowl best. There was a large crowd as the waiting time at the base was 16 to 19 minutes. Big stories draw some directors 🅦

By VERNON SCOTT HOLLYWOOD (UPI) - By chance or design, some directors (like some actors) are drawn to sweeping stories painted on large canvases - and one of the best in the movie business is director Franklin Schaffner. His landmark movies are "Patton," "Papillon,

'Nicholas and Alexandra' and "The Boys From Brazil. The intimate love story, the tightly shot mystery do not a appear to be his metier. No more so than Charlton leston's would appear to be businessman roles in three-Indeed, the broad canvas tends to bring the same sort movies, "The Warlord" and "Planet of The Apes." Schaffner has attempted more modest canvases -"The Best Man" and "The Stripper" - which did not succeed as well as his large-scale films. Another curious element of Schaffner's career, not by design, is the fact that all of his movies have been taken from books or plays. He's never directed a film from an original screenplay. Schaffner is an unusual man by Hollywood standards. He lacks flamboyance, bombast and the stultified ego to become an auteur. He lives quietly in Beverly Hills with his wife Jean and two daughters. Schaffner is highly respected in the industry for contributing his time and knowledge to a variety of professional activities in addition to his directing He is an analytical man who confessed that he's only directed films based on books and plays by pure chance "I presume there are advantages to making pictures from novels," he said, "because audiences are fascinated to see the transition. Readers have a preconceived notion of what the characters and places look like. "For instance, my reaction to "The Godfather' was good because it surpassed my expectations. It was con siderably more imaginatively produced than I had pictured it as I read the novel. "But there are disadvantages to shooting a picture from a popular book as well. You are always dealing with the ghost of the novel, which is not true of an original screenplay for which you are not second-guessed "When you're filming a 400-page book, you're reducing 400 pages of story to two hours of screen time. Obviously there is a great deal of cutting involved. "The worst problem is that in any popular novel there are certain moments that are absolutely high points in the minds of the readers. Those points often aren't necessary or helpful or are perhaps too difficult to cope with in the film and you're forced to leave them out 'When you do retain the high points from a reader' standpoint, you often must present them in different forms or use a departure of some kind. The audiences object to the liberties taken.

DEAR ABBY: My husband says I am an attractive woman. We are very happy and seldom have an argument. I work in a large office with a dozen other women. My

I work in a large office with a dozen other women. My boas, who is manly and attractive, propositioned me. Of course I turned him down, but he isn't the type to be easily discouraged. I understand he has done this to others and those who refused were fired.

My husband's solution; "Tell him your husband will be out of town for a few days, then invite him over for the evening. On that evening, invite his wife over and let her hide (with me) in another room. Wear something 'comfortable,' and lead him on a little. Then when he starts shedding his clothes, his wife and I will appear!"

I think this should take care of the situation. What do you I think this should take care of the situation. What do you

DEAR WILLOW: Why be a party to entrapment? There's a more legitimate solution. Inform your boss that the new Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has put into effect rules making sexual harassment a violation of the 1984 Civil Rights Act.

"Harassment occurs," the EEOC says, "when submission to it becomes a condition of employment, when submission or rejection becomes a factor in promotions or raises, or when the conduct interferes with work performance, or creates an intimidating, hostile or offensive working environment." Furthermore, any employer who violates these rules is liable to censure, to say nothing of a lawsuit. That should o censure, to say nothing of a lawsuit. That should

One 190-pound man had to be litted to bed, to wheelchair, to toilet. This "helpless" old gent, age 93, would pinch and f you print my letter, use anything but my real name. I'm

DEAR ABBY: I am an average reader of your column and enjoy it very much. I simply cannot believe a statement that a very dear friend of mine made, so I am writing to you for from a reliable source. It doesn't make any difference to me either way. I still continue to read and enjoy your column, but I would like to know the truth.

HAZEL IN EUGENE, ORE.

DEAR HAZEL: Tell your friend that Abby says she is a woman. And for verification she has the word of a) her husband and b) her gynecologist.

CONFIDENTIAL TO CRISPINA: Yes, Yetta, age 68, accepted the Caribbean cruise invitation from longtime friend, Ira, age 70. They shared a twinbedded stateroom, and no hanky-panky took place.

Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple, "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (28 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.
