Now, 200 years later, all six New England states are engaged in an economic fight a judge in Maine says is exactly what the founding fathers didn't want to happen. Each state has either passed or is contemplating laws to tax out-of-state trucks carrying goods on its highways. The tax would increase revenues for hardpressed highway maintenance and construction funds while avoiding the political hazard of increasing taxes paid by the domestic population

HERE IS a summary of the new taxes: Vermont and Maine are levying $40 annual fees for out-of-state truckers. Maine expects that will produce $15 million in revenues, Vermont $7.6 million. In retaliation to Vermont and Maine, New Hampshire is charging a border-crossing fee for trucks

Saudis, Israelis trade attacks

NEW YORK (UPI) - The Israeli and Saudi foreign ministers traded condemnations in nearly simultaneous speeches to separate audiences, branding each other's nation a main threat to peace in the Middle East.

While Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal was telling the United Nations Monday that Israel is an aggressor, Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir was telling the Foreign Policy Association that Saudi Arabia is 'one of the major obstacles" to peace. "Israel is a heavy burden on the international community." Saud told the General Assembly, calling for an end to 'unlimited American support" for the Jewish state.

He said Israel "committed two criminal aggressions against Arab capitals" in one month - the June raid on Irag's nuclear plant and the bombing aimed at the Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in Beirut that aused hundreds of casualties.

UPI Sports Writer The Houston Astrodome may be climate-controlled but the heat should be unbearable when the Astros host the Los Angeles Dodgers in the opening game of the National League West playoffs tonight. Houston's Nolan Ryan, he of no-hit fame, and Los Angeles rookie Fernando Valenzuela, the young Mexican screwballer, are both capable of making the most feared hitters look like little-leaguers and each boasts one the best fastballs in the game. "As far as I can tell, nothing bothers that young

Ryan pitched complete-game victories in his last three starts, including the no-hitter against the Dodgers on Sept. 26, and led the league with a 1.71 ERA Valenzuela lost his last three starts cluding a 4-1 defeat at the Astrodome on Sept. 27, but led the league in shutouts, strikeouts, complete games and innings pitched.

The game is the first of a best-of-five series pitting the Dodgers, winners of the first half of the season, against the Astros, winners of the poststrike season. The first two games will be played in the Astrodome. The third is set for Dodger Stadium and the fourth and fifth, if necessary, also will be in Los Angeles. Houston hitters say patience at the plate is the only way to solve the craftyyoung lefthander.

"A lot of times you get too anxious at the plate against Valenzuela," said Astros' first basemar Cesar Cedeno. "Get too anxious and you got yourself a long, long night."

NHL rules must be changed

NEW YORK (UPI) - Phase 3 of the baseball season, or the part that really counts, starts Tuesday with the divisional playoffs, the mini ones, to be followed by the maxi ones, and adding to the general confusion, the National Hockey League opens its 65th season at the same time. Good God, has anyone here got a schedule?

With baseball just beginning to heat up and some people wondering whether they'll get all of the World Series in before November. the NHL swings into operation on five fronts Tuesday night with Toronto at Winnipeg Colorado at Vancouver, Pittsburgh at S Louis, Hartford at Quebec and the New York To many, professional hockey is associated with violence, an image the NHL is doing its best to play down, but two of the game's top ers during the past decade, Bobb Orr and Phil Esposito, who have watched the condition grow worse instead of better in tha period, have their own ideas as to what's ausing all the disorder "The rules have to be changed if those who run hockey are serious about wanting to get the violence out of the game," says Orr, superstar with the Boston Bruins for 10 seasons who scored more goals and more points than any other defenseman in NHL nistory before quitting with the Chicago Black Hawks two years ago.

"People are getting tired of all the long delays, the players swinging, grabbing and dancing with each other. They've got to eliminate the foolishness from hockey. I saw Boston and Minnesota in the final playoff game last season season. Boston couldn't skate with Minnesota and tried to get physical with the North Stars. There were so nany penalties and so many delays, the people simply walked out before the game was over. If the rules aren't changed putting a be in trouble. Serious trouble. It doesn't have

Jim Plunkett is the quarterback of the Super Bowl champion Oakland Raiders. A Heisman trophy winner at Stanford, he has played in the NFL for the Patriots (1971-75), 49ers (1976-77) and Raiders (1978-).

You've had a lot of ups and downs. How have you been able I don't really know. I'm a fairly easy-going guy and I try not to let things bother me. But, of course, my erratic career, the ups and downs that I've gone through, has been pretty difficult to deal with.

Sometimes I talked things over with friends who have known me for a long time. Getting a bit of encouragement from them every now and then during the bad times helped.

The good times? They're a little easier to take. But then there's the loss of privacy, the being in demand. Pressure is put on you in that regard. put on you in that regard. Sometimes it makes you wonder whether you want all the recognition or if you didn't like it a little bit better before, when things were quieter. But, when you get down to it, being recognized, being wanted, is by far preferred.

You seem to draw a lot of strength from your friends outside I think that's something that I've always had going for me. I've come into contact with some real fine people over the years who have been genuinely interested and care about what happens to me. That really showed through my down times when I was literally almost out of football. My friends stayed by me. And, sometimes, it was as much for them as for me that I stuck it out.

In your first year with the Raiders, did you agree with the ision to keep you out of action — to let you sit on the When I first signed with the Raiders, I was down about being let go by the 49ers. My initial thought was that I could help the Raiders.

One of the reasons they wanted me was because of Ken

One of the reasons they wanted me was because of heal Stabler's health. He had bad knees. The first two years I was there, he hardly ever got hurt at all and I played very little. My first year, my enthusiasm stayed up. But after a while, I started wondering if I should even be playing football. Last season, after you took over as a starter, did you ever get the feeling that both your job and coach Tom Flores' job were on the line — that you were playing as much for his job as your own?

I think initially there was no question about that. There was a lot of pressure. There were a lot of things being said about coaches being fired. We were 2-3 at that point.

If I had failed, I might have been out of pro football or relegated again to a back-up position. I know for myself I was battling to get back into professional football as a starting quarterback. as your own?

Did predictions of a poor season for the Raiders prior to 1988 have any effect on the team?

Maybe only from the standpoint of pride. When people say you can't do something, you make sure you can. It was a combination of pride and wanting to work hard that made us want to win when people said we couldn't. Did winning the Super Bowl make you feel vindicated personally?

I don't know. It gave me a lot of pleasure and satisfaction. After all these years and all the ups and downs, to finally have achieved a goal like getting into the Super Bowl and winning it is a good feeling.

It certainly would not have been the same feeling if we had lost. There's almost a stigma that hangs over a team that gets into the Super Bowl and loses. playoffs, a lot of people realized I can still play football and be a top-notch quarterback in the National Football League

Is the pressure off you now? No. The pressure is back this season, as always.

The tipoff:

Q. What is the record for the most strikeouts in a baseball game? — P.R., New Haven, Conn.

If you're talking about any game, it's 21, the number of Baltimore batters fanned by Tom Cheney of the Washington Senators (remember them?) in a 16-inning game on Sept. 12, 1962. But if you're going only by nine-inning contests, the record is 19 — held jointly by Steve Carlton (for the St. Louis Cardinals in 1969), Tom Seaver (New York Mets, 1970) and Nolan Ryan (California Angels, 1974). All three are noted fastball hurlers.

Edgar Kaiser of the Denver Broncos has already managed to put himself in the George Steinbrenner class as an owner-meddler. He's even down on the field before games, dressed in his "Orange Crush" shirt, exhorting the Broncos through calisthenics. And he didn't pay the publicized $42 million for the team — more like $30 million to get a Rocky Mountain high.

Just Ask

Murray Olderman

Q. Can you review for me the story of the midget who came to but just once in the major leagues? — R.G., Pittsburgh.

rga. His name was Eddie Gaedel, and be was recruited from a His name was Eddie Gaedel, and he was recruited from a Chicago theatrical agent by Bill Veeck when the owner's St. Louis Browns were languishing in last place late in the 1951 season. Gaedel stood 3 feet, 7 inches and weighed 67 pounds. Veeck brought him in for a double-header against the Detroit Tigers, who were in seventh place. And 18,000 fans were lured to Sportsman's Park, a huge crowd for the Browns. Between games, a make-believe cake was wheeled to home plate, and out popped Gaedel. In the first inning of the second game, he was announced as a lead-off pinch hitter for Frank Saucier. On the back of his uniform, Gaedel wore the number 1/8. Pitcher Bob Cain of the Tigers, rubbing his eyes, threw four straight balls to catcher Bob Swift. Gaedel trotted down to first base, patted pinch runner Jim Delsing on the rump and disappeared from baseball forever.

Q. Is Billy Ray Smith, the All-America defensive end candidate from Arkansas, related to the player of the same name who once played pro ball? — D.V., Springfield, Mo. He's his son — but, curiously, not his junior, although they both have exactly the same name. Young Billy Ray, a star for the Razorbacks, is almost a physical clone of his dad—at 6-foot-3½, 230 pounds. The older Smith starred at Arkanat 6-foot-3½, 230 pounds. The older Smith starred at Arkan-sas as a defensive lineman in 1954-56 and played 14 seasons in the NFL — with the Los Angeles Rams, the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Baltimore Colts (the last decade with the Colts). The current Billy Ray is a junior defensive end-line-backer. He was the only freshman ever to start at Arkansas for coach Lou Holtz. Last year, Smith made 17 tackles behind the line of scrimman.

Q. What is the situation on the domestic life of the Steve Garveys, who szed "Inside Sports" over an article that said they were having problems? What happened to the case? — J.M., Tacoma, Wash. The suit was withdrawn after the magazine agreed to pay part of the Garveys' legal fees. Since then, apparently, there has been trouble in paradise. Cindy Garvey, who is a morning TV star in Los Angeles, has been linked with composer Marvin Hamlisch in, as they say, a newsome twosome.

Q. How does Tony Dorsett pronounce his name now? I heard Roger Staubach on a telecast of the Cowboys' game put the accent on the first syllable, the way it used to be when he was in college. — S.M., Corpus Christi, Texas.

The former Pitt All-American created a bit of a furor when he first came into pro ball by insisting that his name be pronounced Dor-SETT. Now it doesn't seem to bother Tony how people mouth his surname. He's thinking of a new gig. "Maybe," he says, "I'll insist they call me Anthony." He smiles capriciously when he mentions it.

Q. Which player on the Oakland Raiders is taller, John Matuszak or Ted Hendricks? Are there any taller defensive men in the NFL? — S.K., Sacramento, Calif.

The Tooz, often described as bigger than life, shades The Stork by an inch. Matuszak is 6-foot-8; Hendricks is 6-7. Matuszak also outweighs Hendricks, 280 to 225. Ed "Too Tali" Jones of the Dallas Cowboys tops them both at 6-foot-9. The height, unless accompanied by quickness, isn't always an esset.

Parting shot:

I think all the specialization that's infesting professional football is taking away from the game as a spectacle. It's beginning to look more like a relay race between downs. Some limit on free substitution, like keeping the lineups intact for a series of downs, might be in order.

On ethnic eateries

I flew from California to New York yesterday. You have to figure it takes six hours. That's a long time to waste eating, drinking and watching a movie they've taken the dirty parts out of, so I always try to do some work.

Because I've been eating in restaurants a lot lately, it occurred to me that the popularity of certain kinds of restaurants comes and goes, and I made the following notes, if you can read them:

ITALIAN-Declining in popularity. Italian restaurants have the reputation of being big, sloppy, friendly and informal places where you can get a lot of food for a little money, but I don't go to one as much as I used to and I think I'm typical. There are only a dozen really firstclass Italian restaurants in the whole country. They still attract a crowd but the ordinary Italian restaurant doesn't get as many people as it used to. JAPANESE — The new popularity of Japanese restaurants is the unthere ever was. Places that serve suchi and chirashi are springing up in all the big cities and some of the smaller ones. Who'd have thought Americans would ever stand in line to eat raw fish and a bowl of rice with vinegar on it? This is not to say Japanese restaurants are more popular than Italian restaurants, but certainly they're more in fashion. FRENCH-There's no trend in French restaurants. Almost everywhere there are one or two of them that are the best and most expensive restaurants in town. It's always been that way and isn't likely to change. French food has changed a little and gotten somewhat lighter in the past few years, but the popularity of French restaurants for people willing to spend a bundle for dinner hasn't

CHINESE-It isn't as smart as it was 10 years ago for the smart set to go to a Chinese Restaurant. Chinese restaurants are really spreading across the country, and some smaller cities that never had one now have two or three, but in places like Chicago, San Francisco, New York and Los Angeles, they're barely staying even. I think it has something to do with monosodium glutamate. I personally still love Chinese food but I notice I don't eat as much of it as I used to. INDIAN - For years the lone Indian restaurant in any city got along with fewer customers in a month than the Italian restaurants served in a night. They're all doing better. I like the breads like poaratha, chupatti, puri and nann. GERMAN-In certain parts of the food is very good and they're right. (Only joking, Milwaukee.)

MEXICAN - I'm always suspicious of a restaurant that serves the same thing for dinner that it serves for lunch but charges more for dinner. Mexican restaurants do this. I like tacos and enchiladas but not twice a day. Mexican restaurants in America have very limited menus. They're moving in on the hot dog stands and the hamburg places, but there are of them are in Tucson. BRITISH-Some restaurants affect British names like Beefeater Tavern or The King's Arms but they serve American food. Even in London, 98 percent of the good

When I was picked up, after moving from place to place and from friend's home to friend's home, my parents sent me here (New Hope). When I left here, I never went back home. Actually, I was afraid to go back. I had hurt them. They had already gone through a similar hardship with one of my brothers, who is still in a drug program. Magazine covers: art for the people

NEW YORK (NEA) - The magazine business is a precarious one these days. A publisher recently reported that newsstand sales for slick magazines are down across-the-board, even for the normally strong skin mags. TV Guide's expanded monthly, Panorama, folded this spring after losing more than $10 million in 15 months. Newsweek's new sports monthly, Inside Sports, is still going, though it reportedly has lost even more Publishers cite rising mail and paper costs as the culprits; some monthlies are up to over the $2 mark.

They cite the competition from all of those general interest electronic magazines on TV, from "60 Minutes" out of the habit of reading magazines.

Yes, they cite a lot of reasons for the slumping magazine trade. They don't mention the covers. Maybe

A new exhibit at New York City's Cooper-Hewitt, the Smithsonian's National Museum of Design, recalls the glory days of magazine covers. Not coincidentally, we're also talking about the heydey of magazines themselves - roughly the period between 1890 and World The exhibit is called "Magazine Covers: Art for the People." Its thrust is two fold. First, it credits the general-interest magazine with bringing topo art to the average poerson for the first time. Previously only the privileged had access to art. But the cover of the June 1939 issue of Vogue consisted of an original surrealistic painting by Salvador Dali, commissioned by the magazine itself. The issue sold for Second, the exhibit also suggests that magazine cover art guided American behavior by defining roles, style, taste. People found out how they were supposed to look and act from the covers of the magazines

The image of the fair Victorian damsel, frail and chaste, is the image an artist like Maxfield Parrish saw and painted say for the July 1896 cover of Ladies Home Journal. ording to Pat Kery, guest curator for the exhibition, As World War I rubbed out the Victorian standards behavior, magazine covers set the tone. Two of the exhibit's covers from Ladies Home Journal reflect the change. The June 1918 issue shows two fair maidens in white standing on a bluff, waving to a naval officer coming home from the sea.

The October 1936 issue shows a tough, pretty blonde in a severe red hat and bears a caption "Warning to wives: Stay on top of the news the girl in the office speaks out."
