Minority applicants still in the running

By Nancy Thompson
Herald Reporter

All 65 applicants for the police department who passed a written exam — including three minority members — will be invited to take an agility test and continue in the selection process, a town official said today.

The three minority applicants were slated to be dropped from consideration because their scores on the written test were not among the top 35 applicants. Personnel Director Steven R. Werber told the Human Relations Commission Tuesday.

But at the request of the commission and members of the black community present at the meeting, the agility test — the second step in meeting hiring requirements — will be offered to all the applicants who passed the written exam, Werber said today.

Black residents had worked with the town and community organizations to increase the number of black applicants for the police force in an effort to hire the town's first minority police officer.

"The black community is very proud of what we've done in generating the flow of candidates," said Frank Smith, a resident who worked to recruit black applicants.

Samples today

The Manchester Herald today continues its sampling program to bring copies of the newspaper to non-subscribers in Manchester.

"They passed the test — and that is what was asked of us," he said.

Town officials told the black members of the community, when asking for their help in recruiting, that, "If they pass the test, we can get them through the process," Smith said.

"There is no reason we can't proceed to process those candidates throughout the entire process," Thurman Rountree who also participated in the recruiting effort said. "We think it's about time to get some visibility and some models. Policemen have that visibility."

Rountree said he was "adamant" that the agility test should be given to those candidates who passed the written test because of the efforts the black community made to

Panel urges fresh affirmative action

By Nancy Thompson
Herald Reporter

If the town's affirmative action program is going to work, it will have to be completely revamped — from the wording of want ads to increased accountability for department heads.

That is the conclusion of a report by a subcommittee of the town's Human Relations Commission.

The report was released last night. Coincidentally the town announced Tuesday that some of the minority candidates who took the police examination had qualified to go on to the next testing step. (See related story.)

The report contains 14 recommendations for improvements in the town's hiring practices to increase the number of minority employees. Currently, the town has 20 minority employees on its 400-member payroll. Its affirmative action plan calls for 25 minority members and women to be hired by 1984.

The report examines the town's affirmative action program in three areas: administration, recruiting and selection.

"Selection seems to be our greatest problem," said Rubin Fisher, a member of the subcommittee. "If that's a problem that hinders us in making real affirmative action gains, we have to ask if our selection process is proper, and if not, what alternatives do we have?"

The main recommendation in the selection area is a decreased emphasis on written test scores in favor of a "whole person" approach. Tests are now used as a screening device and not as a measure of job-related knowledge, the report said.

"The written examination should be considered as part of the selection process and not as a device to limit interviews or other parts of the selection process," the report said.

"An acceptable or 'passing' cutoff score should be established for each examination and all those who meet this hurdle should be considered further."

The report criticizes the town's current recruiting methods as not vigorous enough. "There are limited efforts to develop employment sources for minority and female candidates," the report said.

Recommended improvements include:

- Revising job opening notices to make them more attractive and to encourage minority applicants;
- Advertising in minority media;
- Using employment agencies, community organizations and other specialty groups which can provide minority applicants on a continuing basis;
- Simplifying the application

Blacks say town being insensitive

Three black residents Tuesday charged that town officials showed insensitivity to blacks in their official response to a recent cross burning.

The residents also said black participants in a celebration of Human Rights week last year were badly treated and would be reluctant to take part in a similar event planned for this December.

Speaking during the public comment portion of the Human Relations Commission meeting Tuesday, blacks questioned the town's actions in response to a burned cross found in a wooded area near the town line.

Commission Chairman Richard W. Dyer said he spoke to the police and town manager's office about the incident and was satisfied that the police responded appropriately. The incident was investigated by the detective bureau, who unsuccessfully canvassed the neighborhood for clues, Dyer said.

In addition, the town manager issued a statement decrying the "senseless and vicious" act, Dyer noted.

Clarence Zachery, a black member of the Manchester Interracial Council, noted that the manager's response came six days after the incident was reported.

Thurman Rountree questioned the lack of response from local political leaders, noting that the manager offered the only official response.

"It is imperative that these people, politicians, pay just as much attention to this incident as to the black grant decision," he said, referring to last week's decision in a housing discrimination suit against the town. "It must not become the atmosphere for these things to become prevalent," he said.

In other comments, the blacks said that members of their community will be reluctant to take part in a celebration of Human Rights Week planned for December.

Zachery noted that program changes and scheduling switches were made without notifying the black participants.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Maj. Gen. Robert Schweitzer learned the hard way that good soldiers do not make potentially inflammatory remarks without their superior's knowledge — especially when their superior is at the White House.

White House officials said Schweitzer, until Tuesday a member of the National Security Council, was speaking for himself when he told a group of Army officers the Soviet Union is poised to strike against a vulnerable United States.

What's more, said White House spokesman David Gergen, "He understood it was off the record. People speak their personal feelings off the record."

Reagan to Mexico urging free market

CANCUN, Mexico (UPI) — President Reagan left Washington today for a Mexican island summit meeting to try to narrow the chasm between the world's rich and poor countries.

He warned the problems cannot be solved overnight, but can be eased by "economic freedom and individual incentive."

"Our message in Cancun will be clear," Reagan said as he left Washington for the Mexican resort island of Cancun. "The road to prosperity and human fulfillment is lighted by economic freedom and individual incentive."

Other leaders among the 22 invited to the meeting, representing 2.8 billion people, or 64 percent of the world's population, began arriving Tuesday at the international airport, many decked out in native dress such as Mao jackets and flowing African robes.

Reagan was to be joined by leaders of Japan, Great Britain, France, Canada, India, Venezuela, Sweden, Saudi Arabia, Brazil, Guyana and Bangladesh.

General's 'war' remarks disavowed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Maj. Gen. Robert Schweitzer learned the hard way that good soldiers do not make potentially inflammatory remarks without their superior's knowledge — especially when their superior is at the White House.

White House officials said Schweitzer, until Tuesday a member of the National Security Council, was speaking for himself when he told a group of Army officers the Soviet Union is poised to strike against a vulnerable United States.

What's more, said White House spokesman David Gergen, "He understood it was off the record. People speak their personal feelings off the record."

Schweitzer, a 28-year Army veteran with many decorations, had been the chief defense strategist for the NSC. His reassignment to the Department of the Army will take place over the next few days, a spokesman said.

Schweitzer's remarks were published in Tuesday's Washington Post. The general spoke of a "drift toward war," the Post reported, and added:

"The Soviet Union knows that for the first time they have superiority in every leg of the triad (land-based and submarine-based nuclear missiles and long-range bombers)."

The Soviets, he said, "are on the move, they are going to strike."

The United States, the general continued, is "in the greatest danger that the republic has ever faced since its founding days."

Schweitzer also said there is mounting evidence the Soviets plan to invade Poland and continue to prepare for an attempt to take over the Persian Gulf oil fields.

At an afternoon briefing Tuesday,

Allen said the NSC staff is not telling Reagan "we are drifting toward war." But he declined to comment "as to what information he (Schweitzer) based his remarks on."

Allen told reporters Schweitzer, 53, was "abjectly sorry for having undertaken to make the speech and was also sorry about the content."

Allen told Schweitzer Tuesday morning it would be best for him to leave the White House. The reason: the general broke the rule that all speeches by NSC staff members must be approved in advance by Allen.

Reagan concurred in the decision to transfer Schweitzer, but the president told reporters later in the day he considered Schweitzer to be "a fine soldier."

The president said he does not believe the United States is imperiled by the Soviet Union, but it could have been had the new administration not halted a trend toward unilateral U.S. disarmament.

While Allen regretted having to take the action because of his "high regard" for Schweitzer, the aide said, "He clearly violated the rules."

"It's fair to say it (Schweitzer's position) is more pessimistic in tone and substance than the president's own view is," Gergen told reporters.

Schweitzer's transfer has ample precedent. In 1977 Army Maj. Gen. John Singlaub was removed from command as U.S. chief of staff in South Korea by Jimmy Carter after criticizing the president's announced plans to withdraw ground troops, saying such a pullout would lead to war.

Carter said Singlaub was guilty of a "very serious breach of propriety that ought to exist among military officers after a policy has been made."

GNP down 0.6%

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The nation's gross national product fell 0.6 percent from July to September, the second consecutive quarter of reversal for the economy while inflation was rising again, the Commerce Department reported today.

Two consecutive quarters of falling GNP are a basic requirement for a period to be considered a recession — but not the only requirements. President Reagan last week acknowledged for the first time that the nation is in a mild recession.

The market value of the nation's goods and services increased $61.2 billion at a seasonally adjusted annual rate in the third quarter to $2,947 billion — $2.9 trillion — the department said today.

Inflation, measured by what the government calls the "implicit price deflator," went up 0.4 percent projected annually, well above the second quarter's 0.4 percent rate.

GNP fell in the second quarter by 1.6 percent and was up 0.6 percent in the first quarter. The 0.6 percent drop reported for the last quarter was somewhat better than many economic forecasters had expected and almost the same as the 0.5 percent decline estimated earlier this year in the government's "flash" report on GNP.

The latest GNP report is considered preliminary by the government, which will make two later revisions before arriving at the final figure.

The decline in the nation's real output was blamed on drops in both final sales and inventories. Final sales adjusted for inflation were down 0.5 percent, compared with a decrease of 4.7 percent in the second quarter.

The decline in final sales was in turn a reflection of declines in export sales, housing investment and government purchases. Personal spending increased for the quarter as a whole, the department said.

The larger increase in prices for the quarter was attributable largely to higher costs of foods and services.

OPINION / Commentary

A long distance call and the new Herald

My wife and I returned Sunday from a four-day conference held by the New England Newspaper Association in Bermuda. Forty-five of New England's 90 daily newspapers were represented, but some publishers like Judy Brown of the New Britain Herald, declined on the grounds that New England publishers should meet in New England - period.

Mrs. Brown has a good point because it rained for most of the time we were in Bermuda. Seriously, though, it seems like a long way to go for meetings but it does afford fellow publishers like Keith L. McGlade of the Hartford Courant and Lucy Crosbie of the Willimantic Chronicle a relaxed atmosphere in which to discuss mutual problems and trends, and it assures a larger turnout.

And it gave me the opportunity to share a few laughs, ideas and stories about Manchester with Jay Shaw, the former general manager of the Journal Inquirer, who is now the dynamic publisher of the Stamford Advocate and Greenwich Times, which, along with the Courant, are owned by the giant Times-Mirror Corporation of Los Angeles.

On Thursday, though, I was startled by a message that Dan Fitts, the Herald's editor, was trying to reach me. I've worked with Dan before and he seldom checks with me unless it's something really important - so to call me in Bermuda...my imagination ran wild until I got back to him.

The reason for his call, Federal Judge M. Joseph Blumenthal took 117 pages to explain his decision in the Justice Department-Town of Manchester lawsuit. "Should we," asked Fitts, "run the opinion in its entirety?"

"How many of our readers will actually read the opinion?" I asked, rapidly doing some mental calculations as to the costs involving in typing the decision and adding an

by Rick Diamond
Herald Publisher

extra four-page section to Friday's edition.

"Probably not many," conceded Fitts. "But someone should publish the decision, and no other newspaper was going to do it, and if we were truly THE Manchester newspaper then we should be the paper of record and provide that service."

Dan made a rather convincing argument and I, having determined that the added cost of printing the decision approximated the cost of a Bermuda trip, would have felt too guilty if I had turned down his request.

So we printed the decision in its entirety and I hope some of you bothered to read it. (and we have received much favorable comment from the community for having published the decision.)

But after ending my telephone conversation with Fitts, I had some second thoughts. Not about printing the entire decision, but about whether we were going to cover the story adequately - interview the parties involved in the court battle, get reactions from townspeople, analyze the substance of the decision and so on. Damn it, I said, I never even asked Fitts about all that - I was too wrapped up in trying to decide about printing the decision.

There was no need to have concerned myself. Fitts and his editorial staff did a first-rate job of covering the after-effects of the decision. In Thursday's newspaper alone there were seven stories, a chronology and an editorial on the lawsuit. The case was covered from all conceivable aspects, and it was one of the better jobs of reporting this newspaper has done in the past year.

It is no secret around town that the Herald has been rebuilding its editorial staff since Dan Fitts and I arrived earlier this year. Some of the old faces continue to play important roles in our new operation, such as Alex Girelli, our city editor; Doug Bevins, our newly promoted news editor; and Earl Yost, our sports editor, but nine members of our 18-person news staff have been with us a year or less.

We have added a dedicated group of young journalists with varying degrees of experience and our mission, under Dan Fitts, is to have them produce a high quality newspaper whose top priority is a concentration on Manchester news and events.

The Centennial issue we produced for Tuesday contained stories and biographies of a number of distinguished publishers and journalists who preceded us in the proud 100-year history of the Herald. It's a tough act to follow but we are determined to meet the challenge of being a newspaper worthy of Manchester.

Selling firehouse may not be wise

The Buckland firehouse should never have been built where it is while the legal possibility loomed that the town might not be permitted to use it to serve the area around it.

But it was built and the law decided that it cannot be used for the area in its immediate neighborhood.

What should the town do with it then? The easy answer is sell it to the Eighth Utilities District which does serve the area in which the firehouse stands. The town, according to this point of view, should sell it for a fair price, one that is not punitive to the seller or the buyer.

Maybe it should be sold to the district at a cost which does not punish the taxpayers of the Town of Manchester Fire District, who are supporting it, for having built it in the first place when they should not have done so. Nor should their cost punish the taxpayers of the Eighth Utilities District for having opposed the town's plan to build it to serve an area the town assumed it had an obligation to serve until the courts decided otherwise.

That might be the best solution in terms of using the firehouse to provide the best public safety to the greatest number of people. Or is it?

Is it the best way to serve the fire protection needs of the East Catholic High School and Cheney Technical School? Would the district be willing and able to take on that responsibility?

Would the sale of the firehouse to the district hasten the day when Manchester has a single fire department that has paid full-timers, as the one in the southern part of town does, and effectively uses volunteers as the one in the northern half of town does? That is where we should be headed.

Or is Mayor Stephen Penny right when he proposes that the district, instead, contract with the Town Fire Department to fight fires in the environs of the firehouse?

If Penny's figures are right, the firehouse is already serving about 75 percent of the structures it was intended to serve, and that includes some of the most sensitive places, like the two schools. That is kind of impressive and belies the image of the pretty new firehouse standing there on North Main Street with nothing to protect.

Those who are in the area now served by the Buckland firehouse pay the town's higher fire tax rate. They have a right to expect the degree of protection that comes from having a manned firehouse within reasonable response time.

If the town sold the firehouse, it might be abdicating a responsibility. That would be a further irony in this irony-filled situation.

The town fought through the courts to provide a firehouse for protection in an area where it had been collecting taxes. Should it now get rid of a firehouse that serves an area in which it is collecting taxes?

Her letter touched a chord

To the Editor:

In reference to Carolyn Egan's letter entitled "The Man Behind An Obituary" which appeared in your Oct. 14 Open Forum, I felt it was both very thoughtful of her and heart warming to me.

It brought back memories of both Mr. Lyons and Mr. Potter. Being in the same neighborhood, I also knew both these fine gentlemen, who were a grandfather image to my children. The only difference is that I didn't take the time to write such a considerate and charming letter. Carolyn Egan did!

Let us be thankful for young men and women, like Carolyn Egan, who have the right qualities which so often seem lacking in our society - love and consideration for one's fellowmen.

Time to end a bad trend

To the Editor:

I am very glad to see that Bonnie Clapp who advocates "back to basics" education is running for the Board of Education.

It is readily apparent that the trend of the last three decades toward liberal education has resulted in a drastic drop in the literacy rate. Concurrently, the stressing of the socialization of the child with its concentration on attitudes and emotions, and the questioning and evaluation of traditional values have not shown the results hoped for.

Rather, we see that social problems have worsened; teen pregnancy and drug use have risen dramatically and social attitudes reflect a gross lack of personal responsibility.

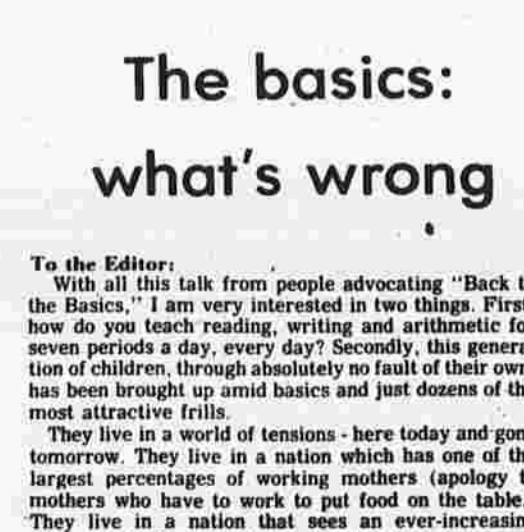

I urge that the school system get back to teaching how to read with comprehension, how to speak and write to effectively communicate their ideas, and how to compute facts and figures.

I urge that the teachers keep and excel in that role and leave the parenting and guiding to the parents. Granted, some parents don't fulfill their responsibilities, but then neither do some teachers. No matter how neglected a child is by his parents, the teacher cannot assume the role of parent. There are other agencies designed to give assistance in those areas.

Every citizen, whether a parent or not, pays for the school system by taxation. With Mrs. Clapp on the board those of us taxpayers who desire a return to basic education and academic excellence will again have representation with their taxation.

The basics: what's wrong

To the Editor:

With all this talk from people advocating "Back to the Basics," I am very interested in two things. First, how do you teach reading, writing and arithmetic for seven periods a day, every day? Secondly, this generation of children, through absolutely no fault of their own, has been brought up amid basics and just dozens of the most attractive frills.

They live in a world of tensions - here today and gone tomorrow. They live in a nation which has one of the largest percentages of working mothers (opology to mothers who have to work to put food on the table.) They live in a nation that sees an ever-increasing divorce rate. They live in a nation that throws away as fast as it buys.

Our idea of loving children seems to be to feast them on frills; so how on earth are we suddenly going to take away the frills from life in school?

Quite frankly I am darned pleased that our schools care about the whole child, because for everyone who has a caring parent there are probably two who don't. I

More on a major scandal

WASHINGTON—A scandal of extraordinary proportions involves Egypt's highest leaders and a group of former CIA and Pentagon officials in a backroom deal that gave a company with Palestinian connections the exclusive, multi-million dollar contract to ship U.S. arms to Egypt.

As I reported in a previous column, there is strong reason to suspect that corrupt Egyptian officials profited personally from the scheme, and that some of the arms shipments were diverted to Palestinian forces and other groups opposed to the late President Anwar Sadat.

My associates Dale Van Atta and Indy Badwar have conducted a major investigation into the affair. They interviewed knowledgeable Egyptian officials, military and intelligence sources and businessmen who were involved. They obtained dozens of secret cables and letters that confirm essential parts of the story.

Bakheesh and nepotism are nothing new in the Middle East, but it is rare indeed when corruption can be traced to the very highest levels of government. Yet the trail of evidence in the Egyptian arms deal points to the two most powerful men in Egypt today—the men who stood at either side of Sadat when he was assassinated, and who now effectively control the country.

The two are Sadat's successor, Hosni Mubarak, and Defense Minister Abu Ghazala.

On June 25, 1979, a few months after the secret arms shipping deal was cut, Mubarak was given a detailed report in the affair. The report included the information that the shipping firm, Tersam, was not qualified and was secretly controlled by a Palestinian businessman named Ali Shorafa, operating out of the United Arab Emirates, a hotbed of anti-Sadat Palestinian supporters.

Senate candidate hedges on endorsement of O'Neill

HARTFORD (UPI) — John Downey, an official candidate for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination, has hedged about whether he would endorse Gov. William O'Neill in 1982.

Downey said he never endorsed O'Neill and wasn't ready to do so now. However he said the governor, who took over from the late Gov. Ella Grasso 10 months ago, was "doing a good job" and would be "a strong candidate for reelection."

"I don't think there's any point in alienating others by racing out to endorse candidates in races that aren't your own," he said Tuesday in the fifth of six news conferences scheduled to formally kick off his campaign.

Downey most likely will be pitted against Rep. Toby Moffett, D-Conn., for the Democratic Senate nomination. Incumbent Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., faces several challengers within his own party for the GOP nomination.

Moffett, who is announcing his candidacy in the second or third week of November, will be a "very strong candidate," Downey said.

Moffett said in a brief statement issued by an aide that "Our party thrives on competition. I've admitted from it myself in the past."

Downey, a native of Wallingford and now a resident of New Haven, first gained national attention when the government plane in which he was traveling was shot down over mainland China in November 1982.

Primary set Nov. 3

NEW HAVEN (UPI) — West Haven must hold a court-ordered rerun of its disputed Democratic mayoral primary on Nov. 3 and delay the municipal election until Nov. 24, a judge has ruled.

Superior Court Judge Francis J. O'Brien issued his order Tuesday after reviewing oral and written arguments from attorneys for the city and the five men who want to be the next mayor.

West Haven Corporation Counsel Robert E. Reilly said the city would rush out absentee ballots for the primary on Nov. 3, the original date for the municipal election, to make sure everyone has an opportunity to vote.

"We'll do everything within our powers as a municipality to make sure nobody is disenfranchised in this election," said Reilly, who proposed the new schedule.

The state Supreme Court overturned West Haven's Sept. 8 Democratic mayoral primary, which was decided by eight votes, and ordered the city to conduct a second primary.

The Supreme Court ruling last week marked the second time the courts intervened in a disputed Democratic mayoral primary in Connecticut this fall.

Denying treatment defended

HARTFORD (UPI) — A Yale University professor says decisions on what medical treatment is given — or withheld — from an infant born with severe handicaps should be left to the family and doctors.

Dr. Raymond Duff said many people are willing to take extraordinary measures to prolong life despite all indications there is no hope because they are "captivated by the rescue sentiment."

However, treatment in such cases is more often a sentence for suffering, Duff, a physician and professor of pediatrics at the Yale School of Medicine, told a legislative subcommittee Tuesday.

"From time immemorial, the notion has been that quality of life must be taken into consideration. By tradition and by custom those decisions have rested with the families and their advisers," he said.

Duff testified before a subcommittee of the Legislature's Public Health Committee investigating reports some hospitals deny certain medical treatment to infants born with devastating handicaps.

Sen. Regina Smith, D-North Branford, leading the investigation, said state law should mandate that severely handicapped infants not be discriminated against when decisions about medical care are made.

Mrs. Smith, co-chairman of the Public Health Committee, said a newborn's right to every possible treatment — whether the child is handicapped or not — should be spelled out clearly in the statutes.

"The gut issue here is making a decision on whether to treat or not to treat on the basis of the potential of the child," she said after listening to testimony from three physicians in the latest of a succession of hearings.

The Legend of the Claddagh
Over 400 years ago, in Ireland, there was a village called Claddagh. Its men were fishermen often sailing way out into the Atlantic. On a particular voyage the Moorish pirates captured a fishing vessel and took the crew to Africa and sold them as slaves.
One of the crew, a young man who was to have been married, became a favorite of the Sultan, who had him taught the art of goldsmithing. The Sultan gave him permission to marry, but "he would hold his heart for the girl who would wait for him in the Claddagh village." He fashioned a gold ring with a crown atop a heart held gently in two hands. The crown meant loyalty, the hands friendship and the heart love.
He finally escaped and returned to Ireland where he married his true love and the ring he had made was her wedding ring.
To this day, the Claddagh ring represents loyalty, friendship and love.
