Analysts cautious on '83 earnings

If you're one of the more than 32 million investors who play the stock market, a word of warning: Wall Street analysts, who've been cutting their '82 earnings projections like crazy all year long, are now sharply cutting their '83 profit projections as well.

It means that a growing number of Wall Street pros based on strong, ongoing contacts with top corporate management — believe the '83 economic recovery will be considerably less robust than is generally expected. And if that's so, the peppy rebound in stock prices that a number of bulls are forecasting may simply be another one of those Wall Street pipe dreams.

And here's something equally significant from an investment standpoint: A just-completed study of the '82 cream of the brokerage community's profit forecasts and '83 earnings estimates of more than 1,000 analysts for the institutional fraternity for the past 10 years. from 66 brokerage firms (both the biggies and the In the latest IBES analysis - a tabulation of updated research boutiques) clearly indicates that Wall Street - '82 and '83 earnings projections as of mid-July - Wall despite the widespread paring of profits - is still way . ### Bank tries to redeem old loans

By Raymond T. DeMeo Herald Reporter

The Savings Bank of Manchester has hired a Philadelphia firm to encourage its low-interest mortgage holders to pay off their loans in full This week, Mortgage Planning Service of Philadelphia sent letters to about 5,000 SBM mortgage holders. The letters explain hor homeowners can reduce the amount and term of their mortgages if they pay them off now, make larger nonthly payments or send in an extra monthly payment.

The letter also offers mortgage olders the option of refinancing their loan at an interest rate highe than what they pay now, but lower than curent market rates. "TO MY KNOWLEDGE, we're the first bank in the area to do something of this nature," said

Robert F. DeMarchi, a vice president at SBM. Under the bank's plan, one homeowner with $35,000 to pay of on a mortgage could save $9,500 by ending $25,000 to the bank right away. The mortgage would then be considered paid in full. The purpose of the discounts is simple: to give SBM the cash it needs to loan money to homeowners at current interest rates. 'It's a matter of economics," the letter to mortgage holders says. "The interest rate on your current mortgage is . . . far below the prevailing rate today, and below the return we need to cover our costs

White House discounts forecast of big deficits

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The White House brands as "unduly pessimistic" a prediction by Congress' chief economist the federal deficit will swell to about $150

Congressional Budget Office Director Alice Rivlin said of chest pains and it was interrupted so he could obtain Tuesday the deficit may soar even if Congress passes the tax increases and spending cuts now under con

At the White House, deputy press secretary Larry pessimistic" about the economy and the impact of the inistration's recovery program.

pending-reduction measures" in Congress. Economist Leonard Lempert, whose North Egremonth, Mass., firm analyzes budget deficits puarterly, agreed with the White House criticism of Mrs. Rivlin as overly pessimistic.

Lempert said his data show the deficit growth actually peaked from January through March and is now decelerating on a quarterly basis, in part because corporate profits have begun to improve. But Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said if the president and Congress do not realize there is a need for a fundamental change in Reagan's economic policy, "then we are going to Hell in a handbasket."

In Chicago, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, who earlier said his projected 1983 deficit of $104 billion may climb by $10 billion, questioned the CBO estimate and defended administration economic policies.

"I have to find out the basis of her judgment on that—what does she think the legislative process is going to what does she think the legislative process is going to accomplish in the way of budget cuts?" he told a news conference before addressing the Nat onal Conference "Perhaps she is less sanguine than we are about the budget process working in Congress. But we think that with the budget cuts we have proposed and revenue increases that are now winding their way through Congress, these deficits can be held down and can be tracking down."

Mrs. Rivlin told the Senate Budget Committee the deficit may reach between $141 billion and $151 billion in 1963 and as high as $158 billion to $160 billion in 1964 and

"I think deficits of that magnitude are worrisome, the CBO director said. She said the larger projected deficits are not the fault of Congress, which she lauded for its budget-cutting, but "reflect the possible weakening of the economy."

Large deficits "will continue to be a problem for the foreseeable future," she said, adding new tax likes and spending reductions would be required next year to

Indeed, his critics claim he is more interested in his golf game and the perquisites of his office than he is in the problems of the nation's veterans.

HERE ARE SOME of the complaints that responsible observers have registered against Nimmo: . He has given subordinates the unmistakable impression that he is uncomfortable dealing with the handicapped, though they are the veterans most in need of help from the federal government.

· A source close to Nimmo told my associates Jack Mitchell and Dale Van Atta that the VA boss has privately referred to veterans who seek aid from the VA as "malingering welfare bums." . The same top-level source confided that Nimmo has shown more concern over his standing on the of ficial protocol list than over the proposed cuts in the VA's $20 billion budget. When he's in the Boston area, he buys anchovies that are packed in salt and cleans and fillets them himself. Next time he gets some he's going to try chopping them up in the clam sauce. "I haven't tried this myself yet but I think it sounds delicious," he says.

Another recipe he concocted is for barbecued chicken. This is done in two steps, first in the oven and then on the grill. "This should really be done on a grill that has a cover so if the chicken starts to burn the cover can be closed to quickly put out the fire," he explains.

Lunch at Lutece is still special

Many young, new restaurants these days seem very much of a kind. Menus don't vary all that much from one to another, except perhaps for some bizarre combination of fish with raspberries or something like that; the service is often wonky; and the decor is frequently rather catch-as-catch-

Frequently it's a pleasure to visit some of them — all that unbridled enthusiasm can result in some highly enjoyable meals. Still, there's nothing that mpare to dining in real style at a restaurant like Lutece.

Until my lunch there last week, I hadn't been to Lutece for quite some time, though I have had a long association with the restaurant. The building that Andre Surmain bought and transformed into Lutece once housed my first cooking school. Andre was a close friend, and we had many a discussion about his ideas for the restaurant before it opened.

about his ideas for the restaurant before it opened.
Naturally I was there for the opening and on many, many subsequent occasions before he sold the place to the very great Andre Soltner.
Soltner is, in my opinion, one of the truly great chefs working today. The Soltner touch is evident in all his classic dishes, and he has some wonderful new deviations. It was, therefore, with a great deal of anticipation that I walked into Luzece.

It has that real unmistakable feeling good It has that real, unmistakable feeling go restaurants have. You are instantly aware of the pleasures of fine linen and nicely set tables and an aura of friendliness all around you. There are plen ty of captains and waiters, and it's all so very welcoming and comfortable. Andre Soltner now has such a well-trained kitchen staff that he is able to spend more time in front of the house mingling with his customers. We chatted for a while, and he suggested a menu for us that turned out to be great fun.

WE STARTED with a great Burgundian specialty of ham cooked to a luscious tenderness, then broken up and molded with lots of parsley and jellied rich stock and a touch of wine vinegar. This is then cut in thin slices that are so beautifully varied they resemble pink marble. We had a tiny portion of that, just enough to get the taste. This was followed by a tiny cheese souffle that almost floated into the room. It was satiny, velvety, hot and pungently cheesy, and just right after the cold ham. It was served, very sensibly, with a wonderful invention called a "soft spoon."

This is a bit like a somewhat flattened desser spoon, and has a small cup so that you can take up a The Soltner declared that we must have a taste of something called a Smoked Salmon Napoleon, a creation of his which is as exciting a dish as I'd had in a long time. There were three layers of magnificently fresh and flaky golden-brown puff paste, interspersed with an exquisite mousse of smoked salmon, cream and no gelatin. It was ephemeral, and there was just enough for two bites, which made it even more enjoyable. The salmon was followed by tiny young chickens, roasted to order and brought to the table all tender and juice, with none of the dryness one usually encounters in most restaurants.

I finished with a tiny portion of a beautifully glazed tatin, the apples being of the correct tartness, the glaze being of a perfect crispness and the pastry being flaky and not soggy.

Andre was kind enough to give me the following the correct which I am sure you will revel in.

recipe, which I am sure you will revel in.

Cut a 2 %-pound chicken into eight pieces, removing the bone from the breast and the backbone from the legs. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Melt 1 ounce of butter in a heavy skillet. Saute chicken over medium heat until brown all over (starting skin-side down), which takes about 6 ninutes. Set aside.

In the same skillet, saute the bones about 6 minutes until light brown. Add 2 finely sliced shallots, and saute for 1 minute. Stir in 1 cup dry white wine and 1 cup water, and cook for 15 minutes. Then add 1 cup cream, the juice of half a lemon and the reserved chicken pieces. Cover and cook over medium heat for 10 minutes.

Heat 1 ounce butter in a heavy skillet. Add 12 peeled shallots (cook in salted water for 3 minutes to loosen skins), sprinkle with salt, pepper and 1 teaspoon sugar. Add 2 tablespoons water. Cook over high heat, shaking the pan, for about 8 minutes or until shallots are caramel-colored all over. Add 1 bunch scallions or green onions and cook for 2 more minutes. (Prepare them by trimming off the roots and all but two inches of the green leaves, then blanching in boiling salted water for 3 minutes. Reserve the green part of four; wash and slive very

Cook 8 ounces of noodles (preferably homemade) in boiling salted water until al dente, then turn them into a saucepan with 2 ounces butter, salt and freshly ground black pepper. Saute briefly, then put the noodles into the middle of an earthenware dish, with the chicken pieces all around.

Reduce sauce to two-thirds and taste for seasoning. Strain over the chicken. Add the shallots and scallions. Sprinkle chopped green scallions on top, serve very hot. Serves 2-3.

The Bible is history. As such it hasmuch to say to us concerning the mistakes of our forefathers. What a rich source of experience it provides from which can be minded lessons in life! The Bible is never out-of-date because it deals primarily with human nature.

The Bible is religious history to the extent that it intertwines the acts of God with the lives of people. someone has said, "The greatest lesson to be learned rom history is that we do not learn from history." Any father who has tried to teach his children from his own experience will testify what a frustrating task that car Elijah the prophet, sitting under the juniper tree, in deep depression mourns, "I am no better than my fathers before me." What a great lesson to learn even though late in life. Another lesson he learned at that time was that when we have reached the lowest point of our disillusionment with the entire human race God has not given up yet.

nominated by the Democrats to run for a third consecutive term as probate judge in the district that encompasses Bolton, Andover and Columbia. So it looks like this race will be similar to the prior two, because the Republicans have nominated Norman J. Preuss, a Bolton resident who held the job for about 12 years before Vinkels took it away from him eight Pruess also ran against Vinkels four years ago, and lost by only 24 votes. Vinkels was uncontested at the convention held Saturday, and was nominated by acclamation

Pruess in the last election won Bolton, lost by about 50 votes in Columbia, and lost his bid when Vinkels took his hometown by a relatively larger number. Republicans have said they will be trying to focus their attention on Andover for this seat, since a repeat in the vote there might be expected.

Andover former First Selectman Andrew Gasper gave the nominating speech, and Bolton Democratic Town Committee Chairman Aloysius J. Ahearn the seconding speech.

Zoners won't tell reasons for vote

BOLTON — The Zoning Commission doesn't have to publish its reasons for denying Lawrence F. Fiano's zone change request because keeping town zoning at the status quo legally needs no explanation, Chairman Philip G. Dooley said.

Dooley said this week he contacted Town Attorney Vincent L. Diana as a follow-up to the commission's meeting last Wednesday. He said Diana said state statute doesn't require zoning boards to give reasons for denving a zone-change request.

nembers asked for the legal opinion. Dooley said. "You don't need to give any reason for keeping things the way they are.' The lack of formally stated reasons for the denial is part of the grounds of Fiano's appeal to the courts for a reversal of the board's decision. At the last meeting, board members were prepared to give their reasons for the record as an addendum to the manimous denial, but held back because of possible "foot-in-the-mouth" problems when called to testify in

They said they would give the reasons if the law required it, but not if the town attorney said it wasn't

What's at the center of the issue is a 53-acre parcel Fiano owns on Route 44A and South Road, which the developer has said he wants to put up to 96 condominiums on. But in order to do so he needs a zone change from R-1 to R-2, which the board denied him. The denial came following a series of three long public hearings with a total attendance of about 600, and only one person not associated with Fiano spoke in favor of the change.

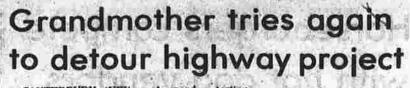

The board turned it down for several reasons, the members said, one of which was that the change conflicted with the comprehensive plan of development. Fiano's attorney has said he doesn't expect a decision from the judge inside of six months.

Rail work scheduled

HARTFORD (UPI) - Work is scheduled to begin Aug. 23 on rehabilitation of the rail freight line between Waterbury and Torrington, says Gov. William O'Neill. ### Protect yourself against mail-order firms

To the surprise of virtually no one, complaints against mail-order firms rank No. 1 of all gripes in the latest Council of Better Business Bureau's latest report — accounting for 20 percent of the 1.7 million complaints received by the BBB's 154 regional offices. Yet the mall-order industry is thriving as never before. And it will prosper even more as the Christmas season nears and an estimated record 10,000 companies selling products or services by mail send out millions of catalogs. Surely you can protect yourself not only against the fly-by-night, obvious crooks in the industry but also against the policies of honest firms that compelled an all-time high of 340,000 of you to take your complaints to

"Consumer education about how to buy from a mailorder company is the best protection against the com-mon problems," says Lillian Vernon Katz, head of the 31year-old Mount Vernon, N.Y., Lillian Vernon mailorder company. "Follow the basic rules. Don't send money through the mails. Fill out the order form correctiv. Know what to look for." And:

Dr. Land leaving Polaroid to devote time to research

CAMBRIDGE Mass. (UPI) - Dr. Edwin H. Land says he is leaving the Polaroid Corp., the instant photography company he founded, to devote more time "I look forward to a new period of creative freedom for myself and to a generation of industrial grandeur for Polaroid," he said Tuesday in announcing his resignation as director and chairman of the board. Land, 73, an inventor with a keen interest in the human eve, said he was ending his nearly 50-year profit institution designed to support 4basic scientific

Land will continue to serve as a consultant and his family and associates will retain more than 3 million shares, or about 10 percent, of Polaroid stock. Land's resignation didn't come as a surprise. He had announced his intention in 1979 to create the Rowland Institute for Science Inc., and reduce his activities at

Land said the institute was "dedicated to achieving deeper insights in fields ranging from physical "The research I have already been involved in at the institute seems so significant that I regard it as important not to delay further my move to this new
