Rogers is 150

Firm maintains tradition of changing products to meet demand

Editor's note: Rogers Corp. a Killingly-based international manufacturing concern, began in Manchester in 1832. The company now has four plants in Connecticut, and nine more elsewhere in the U.S. and abroad. On Sept. 11 the Connecticut plant, including the one on Elm Street in Manchester, will sponsor open houses to celebrate the company's 150th anniversary. To publicize the event, company officials invited Manchester Herald Reporter Raymond T. DeMeo and photographer Al Tarquinio to tour the Manchester plant, where fiber-reinforced plastic is manufactured. DeMeo also interviewed company president Norman L. Greenman on the condition and future prospects of the company.

ROGERS HAS changed considerably in 150 years. Greenman breaks down the company's development into three distinct phases. It was founded in 1832 as the Rogers Paper Manufacturing Co., a producer of paperboard for New England's then-thriving textile business. Around 1900, when the textile industry fell into decline, Rogers started looking for new markets. It began combining the fibers used for paperboard with resins, to create what's now commonly known as plastic. The material was used for electrical insulation and the manufacturing of gaskets.

In 1936, the company moved its headquarters and some of its operations to Killingly, where it had purchased a former Goodyear tire factory. Richard Sanders, the company's communications director, says the move was made for space reasons. "It isn't that we didn't like Manchester. We had just outgrown our facility there." Greenman says the third, and current, phase of the company's development got underway just after World War II. At that time, when Rogers' annual sales were in the neighborhood of $3 million, company officials authorized a major new thrust in polymer chemistry research and development. The aim, once again, was to break into new markets; "at the time, we didn't have much to sell besides transformer insulation," Greenman says. "We spent a lot of money on R & D, a lot more than seemed justified for a company of that size," he says. Greenman himself joined the company as an engineer in 1948.

By the 1950's, Rogers' products were being used in everything from oil filter gaskets to football helmet padding. In 1960 the company made its big break into the high technology electronics field, by developing a key component, for International Business Machines' first transistorized computer. Rogers spent $4 million on research and development last year, and Greenman predicts it will spend 15 percent more in 1982. "We're not backing off on experimentation in the face of the recession," he says.

NEVERTHELESS, certain of the company's markets have suffered badly during the current economic slump. The automobile industry is probably the largest single casualty. Consequently, Greenman says, Rogers has made a strong effort to cut down on its inventories, a process that's required periodic shut-downs across its 13-plant network. Last year, Rogers sold off its Servtex division, a textile industry supplier, for about $1 million. In doing so, the company divested itself of a losing venture; "The textile business doesn't seem to be going anywhere," says Greenman. Meanwhile, Rogers has sunk "millions of dollars" into capital improvements that will allow it to introduce new, high technology product lines. At the Manchester molding materials plant alone the company plans to spend $1 million in renovations this year, Greenman says.

THE MANCHESTER plant employs 134 people on three shifts. Company-wide employment is 2,300, in plants spread over five states and three European countries. Greenman says he favors scattered sites over large, consolidated operations. "A small operation provides a better environment for people," he says. Rogers Corporation has seen its share of changes in its first 150 years. Chances are it will see a lot more. Says Greenman: "It's the new products, the new markets, that keep it going for us."

"High tech electronics is the industry of the future. That's where we're placing our bets."

Norman L. Greenman, Rogers Corp. president

By Raymond T. DeMeo
Herald Reporter

In this recession-bound economy, you might assume that the president of a company that chucked up a $2.7-million profit on $100 million in sales last year would be feeling pretty good right now.

Not so Norman L. Greenman, the 59-year-old president of Rogers Corp., a diversified manufacturing firm that got its start in Manchester 150 years ago.

Greenman winces when the subject of earnings comes up. "We could do better. We should do better," he says.

And Rogers will do better, Greenman hopes, as it continues restructuring its market toward manufacturing almost exclusively for the growing electronics industry.

"High tech electronics is the industry of the future. That's where we're placing our bets," says Greenman.

THE MARKETING shift is evident in comparing Rogers' 1971 sales by market with those of 1981. In the former year, only 20 percent of the company's sales were to the electronics industry. In 1981, the figure was up to 67 percent. Greenman expects the percentage will go even higher, to 75 percent and beyond, as coming technological innovations are translated into new product lines.

The new thrust didn't pay off right away. Two years ago, for example, Rogers' two Arizona plants were "plagued with manufacturing problems," caused by the introduction of new product lines and production processes. The problems, which Greenman says have since been resolved, contributed to a disappointing 1980 earnings tally of $207,000.

Last year, however, earnings were up considerably. Greenman says 1982 is also shaping up well, with sales of $55 million and earnings of $642,000 reported for the first half of the fiscal year.

Best week ever Stocks soar as policy shift seen

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Dow Jones industrial average soared 30.72 points on a near-record $5.8 billion share Friday as Wall Street closed out its best week ever on indications the government is warring on high interest rates.

Mexico gets debt break

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mexico, maneuvering to avoid technical bankruptcy, Friday was given a three-month postponement by foreign bankers on principal payments on up to $60 billion of its massive foreign debt.

Mexican Finance Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog said the agreement reached after a two-hour meeting with representatives of 100 international banks provided that interest payments on its short and long-term debt would continue to be made.

At the closed-door meeting at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, U.S. and foreign bankers agreed in principle to the Mexican proposal to delay principal payments and established an advisory group of 14 bankers to decide what would happen after the 90-day period. The group is scheduled to meet again in mid-September.

HARTFORD (UPI) — The investigation of the state Transportation Department has resulted in arrest warrants for two employees and a former employee of the department's concession office, officials said Friday.

President Reagan backed to cut the budget deficit and keep interest rates down. And many banks lowered their prime lending rate a half point to 13 1/4 percent, a rate not seen in nearly two years.

The Dow Jones average of 30 of the blue chip chips, up to its seventh best daily gain, scored a record $1.24 points for the week — including a record 38.81 points Tuesday. This capped the busiest and most profitable five days in Wall Street's 100-year history.

The paper value of all NYSE stocks increased by $31.2 billion for the day and $76.5 billion for the week.

At the final bell, New York Stock Exchange volume totaled $5,800,000 shares, second to the $22,000,000 shares traded just Wednesday. That brought the weekly total to a record $55 million shares, which included 78,270,000 traded Thursday. Blue-chip leaders on the trading floor included Alcoa, Eastman Kodak, General Electric, General Motors, IBM, International Paper, Merck, Owens Illinois, Procter & Gamble, Union Carbide, and Westinghouse Electric, up a point to three points.

Sears Roebuck, Cities Service and Pacific Gas & Electric were the most active issues in that order; each had a substantial gain.

The New York Stock Exchange index jumped 2.08 to 64.65 and the price of an average share increased 85 cents. Standard & Poor's 500 stock index climbed 3.88 to 112.02. Advances routed declines 1,355-292 among 1,934 issues traded at 4 p.m. EDT.

Traders had bought heavily from the outset because of President Reagan's success in persuading Congress to pass the package.

The buying pace picked up when federal funds rates banks charge one another for loans dropped and more aggressively when Chase Manhattan and others lowered their prime rate.

Local banks may cut rates

THE SAVINGS Bank of Manchester, for example, pays just under 11.5 percent on its 6-month certificates of deposit; a month ago the rate was 13.72. On 2 1/2 year certificates the bank is paying 12.75 percent; on July 20, the rate was 14.55 percent.

Nevertheless Richard Carter, SHM's assistant vice president for installment loans, says the bank will wait to see whether interest rates are down for keeps.

Joseph S. Hachey, head of Heritage Savings and Loan Association's newly-formed commercial loan department, said rates on short-term commercial loans have declined steadily since the middle of July, coinciding with the decline in the prime lending rate.

The reason banks are willing to cut their rates is that their cost of money, based on the rates they pay customers on fixed-term certificates, has declined sharply over the past month.

He predicted interest rates will continue to slide until the congressional election in November, and then start heading upward again. Eventually, Lozier said, rates will level off again, probably stabilizing around their current level.

MORTGAGE RATES probably won't be affected by the current slide, Lozier said, because of their long-term nature. Banks don't want to lock into a one-year fixed variable rate, as is currently standard, when interest rates change from month to month.

No dogs allowed at this flea mart

RENO, Nev. (UPI) — Only a paltry $4 million crossed palms Friday at the "world's most exclusive flea market," its promoter said. There were no takers on the Caribbean island or gambling casinos, and key — the Ponderosa Ranch was still on the block.

About 100 businessmen paid $5,000 each to attend the first Sales, Trade and Purchase International for a chance to buy or swap such things as the uninhabited Caribbean island, gambling casinos, trailer courts, jet planes, and office buildings.

Marine deployment is tenth since World War II

By United Press International

Since World War II, the Marines have carried out nine evacuation-type or rescue operations, landing in trouble spots around the globe primarily to aid U.S. citizens in distress.

The force of 800 Marines to be sent to Lebanon next week in the 10th such operation will supervise the evacuation of more than 7,000 Palestinian guerrillas from West Beirut where they have been trapped by Israeli troops.

President Reagan said they would stay less than 30 days and leave the country if they were fired upon.

The expedition in Lebanon will be the second to that country by the Marines since World War II.

From July to October 1958 approximately 10,000 U.S. troops, half of them Marines, landed in Lebanon to "preserve the peace."

The other Marine operations were:

- December 1948: North China. A battalion landing team was sent to Shanghai to assist in the evacuation of American nationals.
- February 1950: Tacloban Islands, off China. Marines with the 7th Fleet evacuated civilians from the islands to Taiwan.
- October-November 1956: Suez Canal. Battalion landing team with 6th Fleet evacuated U.S. nationals and other noncombatants from the area.
- April-June 1965: Dominican Republic. A battalion landing team and a provisional aircraft group which grew into the 4th Marine Expeditionary Brigade evacuated U.S. nationals. Nine marines killed, 30 wounded.
- July 1974: Cyprus. The 34th Marine Amphibious Unit evacuated U.S. and third country nationals.
- April 1975: Phnom Penh, Cambodia. The 31st Marine Amphibious Group, evacuated American citizens.
- April 1975: Saigon. The 9th Marine Amphibious Brigade evacuated U.S. and foreign nationals.
- May 1975: A Cambodian gunboat fired on and seized the U.S. merchant ship Mayaguez off the Cambodian coast. Two days later U.S. Marines stormed ashore on Tang Island believing the Mayaguez crew was held there. In fact all 59 had been released.

Begin: Decades of peace

TEL AVIV, Israel (UPI) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin, in remarks published Friday, said the Middle East may now be on the brink of decades of peace now that the threat of aggression from the Arab states has been eradicated.

"There is no other country around us that is capable of attacking us," he said, forecasting a biblical 40 years during which "the land shall be still."

Begin made his remarks in an address to a graduating class at the National Defense College on Aug. 8 but they were released only for this weekend's editions of Israeli newspapers. No reason was given for the delay. The ceremony at which Begin's speech was delivered was closed to the foreign press.

Begin also said Israel could have avoided starting the war in Lebanon.

He said there had been no choice but to go to war when Israel's independence was declared in 1948 and when Egypt and Syria attacked in the Yom Kippur War of 1973.

But he said other campaigns such

Approval of arms freeze question for ballot expected

The Board of Directors is expected to vote next Tuesday in favor of placing a nuclear arms freeze referendum question on November's ballot.

Democratic Deputy Mayor Barbara B. Weinberg said Friday night that she has not heard of any directors changing their positions on the freeze.

"I haven't heard that," she said. "That doesn't mean some people might not be having second thoughts, but I have not heard there was any problem with the referendum."

The board already has approved, after considerable debate, a resolution supporting a bilateral freeze on the production, testing and deployment of nuclear weapons.

That resolution was approved by a 5-2 vote. The four directors voting no or abstaining argued that the board should not involve itself in national issues, because it lacks the time and expertise to consider them properly.

"I agree with (Democratic Mayor) Steve Penny that we cannot get into national issues on the board," said Mrs. Weinberg. "Yes, I don't see any problem with letting the people have a say about how they feel on the issue."

Mrs. Weinberg noted that the referendum won't cost any additional money, since a regular election is scheduled for November anyway.

Even several of the directors who voted against the freeze resolution or abstained indicated at the time that they might support putting the question on the ballot.

Christine Joyner, a coordinator of the Manchester Area Arms Freeze Coalition, predicted that the voters would pass a freeze referendum.

FORMER VERMONT SEN. GEORGE AIKEN was "close" to former President Richard Nixon.

Aiken gets call from president on 90th birthday

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — Former Sen. George Aiken, R-Vt., whose advice to his colleagues during the Watergate era was to either impeach Richard Nixon "or get off his back," kicked off his 90th birthday Friday with a call from the former president, then went for a haircut.

"He got me out of bed this morning. He was the first one to call," said the 34-year veteran of the Senate and former governor who is no stranger to presidential birthday calls.

Ronald Reagan called him on his 89th birthday.

"Somebody put him up to it. I've only met Reagan once or twice," Aiken recalled. But he said he was "close" to Nixon.

"Well, yes, somebody had to be... I knew them all," said Aiken in a phone interview from his Putney home. He retired from the Senate in 1974.

It was Aiken, who in 1973, chided the Senate for its treatment of Nixon, saying it should "impeach him, or get off his back."

Aiken remarked that since Nixon's resignation his "status has gone up because people are beginning to realize what a good job he did with China."

"They all do some good," he added. "Eisenhower was an excellent president."

Lola Aiken, his wife of 15 years — who served as his administrative aide during his entire Senate career — said Friday she was "always fond of" Nixon. "He's a Yankee fan for one," she said, adding that Nixon told her New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner likes him to show up at games because the last four times he has, the Yankees triumphed.

"There's only two days I don't like," Aiken said. "Birthdays and funerals."

Mrs. Aiken said the senator's plans for his birthday involved getting a haircut in time for a family gathering Saturday that will attract his three daughters, a daughter-in-law, and about 45 grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

"I hope to get some work out of them," Aiken said, adding that his garden needs weeding.

Aiken grew up on his family's farm in Dunsmuirton, then built up a successful fruit and flower nursery before running for the state Legislature in 1922, his only political defeat.

"If it hadn't been for the garden, I would never have gone in politics and I got stuck," he said.

"I sold a lot of things to a lot of people and finally I got money enough so that somebody ran me in politics and I got stuck," he said.

During his years in the Senate, Aiken helped shepherd the food stamp and post-World War II food stamp programs, and helped set up the Farmers Home Administration and the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation.

Pauline Maneggia is full of surprises Island-hopping grandma meets Mr. TV

By Susan Piese Herald Reporter

Pauline Maneggia of 55 Steele Crossing Road in Bolton wasn't prepared for the zinger that awaited her on her last night on Nantucket Island this month.

"I thought I was going to go to a 1979 student march on Washington," she said. "I wear them on the beach. So I decided I'd fix them. So that night, my last night, I got into my jeans and sneakers and Lonesome Coyotes T-shirt."

"THEN I LOST my nerve to go out in front of my landlady like that so I put a blue shirt over it. Then I went to a marine shop and bought a bandanna and tied it around my head, and I wore my sunglasses and walked a little differently, you know, with my hand in my back pocket."

Then she sauntered over to the Rose and Crown, her favorite island haunt, to hear the band Lonesome Coyotes perform.

"Don't let the name fool 'ya," she says with a laugh. "There are six of them from Tennessee, and they are very good," she says.

"We got quite chummy. They have an album out, and I bought one of their T-shirts. I had it on the night I met Walter."

No, Walter wasn't a summer flake. Mr. Maneggia has nothing to worry about from his fancy-free wife. She was reduced to speechlessness when Walter made his appearance. But that's a long story.

"You see," Mrs. Maneggia begins, "my generation, when we went out, we wore a dressy dress and a jacket. But we got to kidding a bit one time — the band said 'you always dress up. Bet you don't have any jeans."

"Yes I do," she said. "I wear them on the beach. So I decided I'd fix them. So that night, my last night, I got into my jeans and sneakers and Lonesome Coyotes T-shirt."

"THEN I LOST my nerve to go out in front of my landlady like that so I put a blue shirt over it. Then I went to a marine shop and bought a bandanna and tied it around my head, and I wore my sunglasses and walked a little differently, you know, with my hand in my back pocket."

No, Walter wasn't a summer flake. Mr. Maneggia has nothing to worry about from his fancy-free wife. She was reduced to speechlessness when Walter made his appearance. But that's a long story.

"You see," Mrs. Maneggia begins, "my generation, when we went out, we wore a dressy dress and a jacket. But we got to kidding a bit one time — the band said 'you me. 'Are you the gray cougar?'"

"How would he know about that?" Mrs. Maneggia says. As it happened, Cronkite was with a man she had met the second night of her trip. That man, a swimming coach at Central Connecticut State College, had recognized her — and her nickname — from a 1979 student march on Washington.

"SO I SAID, very truthfully, 'Yes I am,'" Mrs. Maneggia says. "He was still smiling and I thought I must keep this distinguished man so I pushed up my bandanna and my hair was sticking up and I said, 'See, I have gray hair like yours,' and he laughed."

"Well, gray cougar, enjoy yourself," he said. And he left.

"Then it came like a delayed reaction," Mrs. Maneggia says. "Why didn't I knock that lady right off the stool next to me and say 'Sit down, Mr. Cronkite,' or 'Mr. Cronkite, why don't you come to our college?' All those things you think of afterwards."

"It was just a little spirit of adventure," she says, of her yearly jaunts, latest included. She explains that in 1980 she gave herself a graduation present of a trip to Nantucket Island. And she's repeated those adventures each year.

"I love the ocean, and (knew) I wouldn't get back to the water unless I did something myself." So she climbed aboard a Bonanza and headed for the Cape and the Nantucket ferry.

Now Mrs. Maneggia's family didn't part with her easily. "Father will say 'Call me every night,'" she says. And her daughter had a heart-to-heart talk with her before she took off.

"Promise me four things," her daughter said. "Don't swim out too far, don't run around late at night on the cobblestones, don't talk to strangers, and rest."

"Did you keep any of the promises?" the young woman asked on her mother's return.

"I kept two," Mrs. Maneggia answered. "I didn't swim out too far and I rested every day."

"Then you ran around late at night on the cobblestones and you talked to strangers," the daughter charged.

"A little," Mrs. Maneggia said.

The week on Nantucket Island is over, at least for another year. Mr. Maneggia has his wife back, and the children have their mother.

Walter Cronkite is back globe-trotting, presumably, and Mrs. Maneggia is back working — minus bandanna — as a foster grandparent at Mansfield Training School. And that's the way it is.

Last half of August is worst time of year

This is the worst time of year. The last two weeks of August are the driest of the 52. If I had to drop two weeks out of the year, I'd drop these.

Everything about the end of August is depressing. There's that foreboding of the death of a season in the air. There are reminders all around us that this is the end of something good, and none of us likes to see a good thing end.

From the middle of August on, the threat of Labor Day looms big in our minds. We know it's coming. We count the days. The summer is dwindling down to nothing. The grass is turning brown and the plants and flowers are just holding on. They are no longer blooming. Blooming suggests robust good health, and flowers are no longer like that.

The little streams and creeks that are so attractive when they're running their merry way downhill are all but dried up at this time of year. And the rocks in the bottom of the stream bed that like to be covered with water are baking in the hot sun. They're nowhere near as attractive as they are when magnified by a foot of water running over them.

There is no other time of year when we all become so aware of how quickly time passes and how soon the seasons go. At New Year's we cover the passing of time with false gaiety on New Year's Eve, but at the end of August, with school and work and winter facing us, we can't hide from the fact that it's the clear end to another time in our lives. It is very same feeling about the end of August since I was 8 years old and could not believe summer had passed so quickly.

President Reagan had a bad August. This is one he won't forget. The economy's gone from bad to worse, he's having all kinds of trouble with Congress, and he had to give up most of that vacation he had planned in California. Spending the month in Washington, D.C., with the kind of problems he's had could turn a man against August for life.

It's tough on all of us, though. Getting up in the morning is even harder. During June and July, the sun shines in the bedroom window and you can jump out of bed with some enthusiasm for life. In August we begin to drag a little. It's been hot for too long. It's a little darker out because the sun isn't really up yet and we're more apt to lie in bed thinking bad thoughts or to turn over and go back to sleep after the clock radio goes off. The birds aren't chirping the way they were earlier in the summer and all of nature seems to be tired. The birds have all found nests. They've made their nests, hatched their eggs and flown the coop. The plants and the birds and the bees and the bugs all know that Labor Day's coming, too, and they don't like the prospects either. They

You? On a diet?

My friend Betsy is on a diet. She told me so. At least 10 pounds, she said. And this time, she said, she's serious.

She looked at me when she said that with the same expression one uses when announcing to one's friends that one has just gone and joined a Trappist monastery.

I know that expression well. I've used it all my life when I've decided the bathroom scale is plotting against me.

It's an expression which women know. It's designed to serve as a defense against those who invariably want to tell you that there is absolutely no reason why you should be on a diet.

Those who think you shouldn't be on a diet invariably are those who weigh more than you do. They hunkered the Special K Pinch Test years ago.

"You? A diet? You're crazy," they say, and then they make a grab for your arm or your waistline, to let you see the utter foolishness of your quest after carrot sticks and nutria toast.

Then you have to defend your faith.

"I HAVE TO bring up subjects which are probably best brought up. Your fat thighs, for instance. I have found myself defending my fat thighs on several occasions."

The old saw "The best offense is a good defense" holds true in this situation. So does "There's no business like show business."

On several occasions I have pointed dramatically to my closet, or even pulled out a few pairs of slacks. "See these? Bought them last spring. And I can't get into a single one of them."

The other often-effective method is mentioning that I've just been to the doctor.

"His scale doesn't lie," I say. "He couldn't believe I'd gained so much weight in a single year."

Having the weight of the entire American Medical Association behind me sometimes isn't enough.

ESPECIALLY IF defending fat thighs against close relatives. Mothers, for instance. Mothers invariably believe that daughters are on the brink of malnutrition and starvation. The old slacks and I've been to the doctor routine seldom works with them.

Then it's time to bring out the big guns.

"How much did you weigh when you were up in the morning? Even bring on the cottage cheese. Bring on the diet bread. Bring on the salads with lemon, no oil or salad dressing, please."

Out with the Sara Lee legend brownies. Out with the frozen french fry suppers and the M & M coffee breaks and the Heinen lunches.

I have reformed. I am going straight. And this time, I'M SERIOUS.

By the way, Betsy, I think you're crazy. You don't need to be on a diet.

Birthday girl gets surprise but no gift from her date

DEAR ABBY: Last Saturday, Mac, a guy I've been dating, called and asked me to go shopping with him. He knew it was my birthday, so I got all dressed up, expecting an exciting day. (Mac is 46 and I'm 42.)

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

He took me to two stores — both men's stores — where he went on a shopping spree, buying himself shirts, pants, socks, ties, etc. From there he took me to an appliance store. He instead he bought a TV set for his mother.

From there he took me to Joe's Place — his favorite hangout — saying there was something going on there. I thought he had a little surprise party planned for me, but I was wrong.

What's his question? Here's my question: Will you please advise if this is an old Chinese custom or is my son being taken over by the burlesque? I know kissing and petting and going all the way are involved, but I would like to know exactly what each base means.

to meet us, so our first meeting will be at the wedding ceremony.

We are a white, upper-middle-class family. The bride-to-be has convinced my son that according to Chinese tradition the groom must pay for the entire wedding. This includes the ceremony, dinner and reception. I have never heard of this "tradition," nor has anyone else I mentioned it to — including several Oriental people.

Psalm 139 speaks in magnificent terms of God's presence in our lives: Where could I go to escape from you? Where could I get away from your presence? If I say down in the world of the dead, you would be there.

It would be healthy if you say no to mom some time

DEAR DR. BLAKER: I have been doing everything for my mother for more than 30 years. She is a good person and does deserve to be treated well but I have to begin living my own life.

There were many skeptics last year when I announced the First National Supermarket Shopper Poetry Competition. "Who would want to write poetry about shopping in a supermarket?" they chorused.
