Hay fever

This is the worst time of the year for hay fever, an allergic reaction to pollen that comes, primarily, from ragweed plants. Ragweed is prolific in North America, grows as fast as most other weeds that invade your garden and is often confused with goldenrod, another abundant plant that grows nearby. Ragweed is also all-American and, since it is rarely found on other continents, the plants provides hay fever sufferers with an excellent excuse for an extended vacation abroad. Ragweed is sparse in far northern Maine, southern Florida and much of the west beyond the Rockies Ironically, irrigation has contributed to an explosion of the weed in many western locales, and those who have gone west to escape the pollen now find themselves sneezing while they pay the mortgage on their desert hideout.

Wet springs and early summers contribute to ragweed population explosions that can be devastating from late August until the first frost with the peak occurring during the first weeks of September. Symptoms include itchy-eyes and throat, nasal congestion and sneezing spells that would put any snuff box to shame. Pollen also elicits a general malaise or irritability in some individuals. Pollen counts are disseinated by some media, but usually indicate how it was rather than what one might expect. Taken during the morning when microscopic pollen grains are emitted from plants, the area. King was the first governor in the nation to lose this year and Dukakis called the defeat "a message going to the country against Reaganomics."

"The people are facing some of the most serious economic problems of our lifetimes," he said, citing the nation's 9.8 percent unemployment rate. "I don't think the Republican Party has anything to offer people." At the same time, Dukakis appealed to King for support in his bid to defeat Republican John Sears, a veteran Boston politician and scion of 17th Century Massachusetts Bay-Colony Gov. John Winthrop, who won Tuesday's three-way GOP gubernatorial race.

He said he would "love to have" the governor's endorsement, but added, 'That's a decision only he can make. Dukakis refused to support King after the 1978 primary. There was no immediate word from

Longest sought 'most wanted' fugitive nabbed

NEW YORK (UPI) — Police expecting to make a drug bust arrested the longest-sought fugitive on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted List at Penn Station and found three silencer-equipped submachine guns in his luggage,

The arresting-officers did not know Joseph McDonald, 65, was on the Most Wanted List and held him for eight hours before he calmly announced "Hey, fellas, I'm wanted by the FBI." McDonald was captured at 10:45 a.m. Wednesday as he got off a train from Hollywood, Fla., police said.

The FBI said McDonald, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., has been on the 10 Most Wanted List since April 1976 on charges of interstate transportation of stolen property and criminal conspiracy. Investigators said they also had not ruled out McDonald had links with international terrorism. An FBI spokesman in New York said McDonald had been the longest sought of the current 10 on the list. An FBI spokesman in Washington said he was wanted for the St. Patrick's Day 1971 armed robbery in Boston of "a large amount of extremely valuable collectors"

A witness in the case was found shot to death Jan. 13. 1976, just before he was to give testimony against those involved in handling the stolen stamp collection, the spokesman said. He said McDonald was considered armed and dangerous because of a previous history of violent crimes, including armed robbery and assault against a police officer.

New York Police Capt. Thomas Jennings said members of the city Street Enforcement Unit's narcotics squad went to Penn Station after receiving an outof-state phone call that a man with drugs would be on the train from Florida. Police stopped McDonald, and a Customs Service dog with the five arresting officers indicated he was carrying something in his luggage, Jennings said.

McDonald and the bags were then taken to 23rd Precinct . At 7 p.m., investigators received a search warrant. Inside the bags, police said they found three silencer-equipped submachine guns, three loaded clips, three unloaded clips and a box of ammunition. "We were expecting dope and we got better," Jen-

"This guy could start a war by himself," he added. McDonald was held on a state charge of weapons Jennings said McDonald had no tickets for other destinations and New York "seemed to be his terminal The captain said McDonald appeared to be a "a nice fashionable right now for Democrats here to complain that they lack the kind of alternative programs to use as political fodder in confronting President Reagan and the Republicans.

But what this sounds like is a rationalization in advance if the Democrats fail to make the kind of gains in the House, Senate and gubernatorial campaigns that they originally expected to make. They are genuinely running scared - spooked, in fact.

And what spooks them is, of course, the remarkable ability President Reagan has shown to set the agenda for the national debate. Unlike many of his recent predecessors - and most certainly unlike Jimmy Carter -Reagan has made his goals unmistakably clear to the voters.

THAT SUCCESS is strikingly obvious in the understanding voters display about Reagan's attempts to reduce the role of the federal government in social programs and his determination in mid-term elections are more to increase spending on national often a reaction to circumstances percent, business failures at a record post-Depression level and farm prices disastrously low, the Democrats have the raw material for impressive gains even if not those of landslide proportions. The failures of Reaganomics, at least to this point, are written large across the political landscape despite the recent gains in the stock market and reduction in interest

Moreover, the Democrats still enjoy a pronounced advantage from the perception of this administration as one that favors the rich at the expense of the poor and middle-class. Brain control Rooney's way

Every three or four years it occurs to me that my heart has been beating away about 70 times a minute night and day, day after day but most of the time I don't pay any attention to my heart. It's the same with breathing. If you start getting conscious of the fact that you're taking air in and pushing it out again 28,000 times a day, it can be disconcerting.

I got to thinking about my heart and all our hearts the other day when I read a story about pacemakers. A Senate study found that doctors and pacemaker makers may have overcharged patients a billion dollars a year for putting the device in their hearts. Some 150,000 people are having them put in every year and they are charged as much as $10,000 each. Medicare pays most of that cost, and the average American's attitude is that if Medicare pays for it, it's free. If it's free to the patient he or she doesn't care much what it costs Medicare

Most of us are so naive it wouldn't occur to us that there was any hanky-panky going on between the manufacturers of this really wonderful little device and the doctors who put it in. It's really disheartening to hear that while we're thinking about our hearts, som doctors and pacemaker businessmen are thinking abou money. There's no reason they shouldn't think about noney, I guess. It's just that the rest of us like to think the world is nicer than that. Now that I know how aggressive these pacemake salesmen are in selling their product to doctors, I'v thought of a couple of new ways for them to get rich. They can have this idea free. There ought to be a huge market for pacemakers tha control the speed at which other parts of our bodies operate. My heart is pumping away in perfectly atisfactory condition and it doesn't give me any trou ble but I could sure use a pacemaker for my brain. I these pacemaker people could come up with a little device they could implant in some inconspicuous place to control the speed at which I think, I'd be mighty pleased. Maybe they could get one in my earlobe, i which case I might take two. One brain pacemaker would control the right side of my brain, the other the I'd want a dial on my brain pacemaker so I'd be in control of it. Sometimes I want to think faster than other times. When I sit down to write, I'd turn it up to full speed so my brain would be thinking its very fastest in the evening, when I'm home watching television, I'd urn it down to slow. There's no sense having your brain hinking very fast when you're watching "The Dukes of Hazzard" or "Love Boat." As I understand the heart pacemaker, it provides a small, regular electrical impulse that controls the speed of the heartbeat. Is there anyone alive who wouldn't like one of these for his or her brain 4 If I went to a big party where there were a lot of people I should know, I'd set someone whose name I should know but couldn't remember, I'd simply pinch my earlobe and turn my brain control up a few notches. "Hey! If it isn't my old friend George Forbisher! How you been, fella! How's Grace? And the kids, George Junior, Marybeth, Sarah and Walter?" I don't want to get too clinical, but there are a lot of parts of my body I'd like to have a pacemaker for. Some parts work too fast and some don't work fast enough and I'd like to be in control.
