Bridge

Rubber or duplicate?

By Oswald Jacoby and James Jacoby

Dyed-in-the-wool rubber bridge players usually dislike duplicate bridge. Maybe that is because they rather play for money. Or maybe it is because they would rather play to set contracts on defense, without worrying about the overtricks. The current deal illustrates this difference in philosophy.

West opens the bidding, North makes a two-club overcall and on the next round raises his partner's 11 no-trump to three. South wins the opening spade lead and plays a club, West winning the ace. Now South is in a bind. The instinctive play for West is to continue spades. If he does, declarer will make 10 tricks. The rubber bridge player sitting West will count-declarer's tricks and ask himself if there might be a way to set the contract. He will decide that his partner may hold the king of diamonds and will play a low diamond after winning the club. East wins the king and returns the diamond 10, making the defenders to take four diamond tricks and set three no-trumps.

What does the duplicate player do? He may very well make the same play. After all, if declarer had a full contract, he would not be in a bind. He might well have jumped right to three no-trumps. So why not lead a diamond and try to set the contract? The difference occurs when South has the diamond suit and now makes 11 tricks. The rubber bridge player shrugs his shoulders, but the hapless duplicate player gasps his teeth.

In 1982, California and Texas led the nation in motor vehicle deaths.

Nicholas Norton, who dropped his threatened primary challenge to Roberta Koontz Wednesday, stands outside the hall during the GOP convention in Colchester last Saturday following Mrs. Koontz's endorsement by the delegates.

With Nicholas Norton out of the race, Roberta Koontz of Coventry is gearing up her campaign against Democrat Samuel Giddens for the Second Congressional District election in November.

Norton, a former state Welfare Commissioner and current state treasurer for the Republican party, announced Wednesday morning he had dropped plans for a GOP primary with Mrs. Koontz in September.

Mrs. Koontz, a former Coventry Town Council chairman, scored a surprise victory Saturday over Norton in win endorsement at the District Republican convention. But Norton promised then to continue his fight for the GOP nod in a primary.

After Norton's announcement Wednesday, Mrs. Koontz said she was glad to be able to concentrate her efforts on the battle against Giddens and to have her party unified behind her. "It will be easier now," she said. "We're not going to be fighting each other."

REACHED AT HOME Wednesday evening, Mrs. Koontz said she and her staff are busy looking for places to set up campaign headquarters, arranging personal appearances in the district's 37 towns, and preparing more specific statements about her positions on issues.

Mrs. Koontz said she is eager to debate Giddens. She said she believes Giddens' biggest weaknesses as a candidate lie in the area of securing and protecting jobs for his constituency.

"In Williamst, they just closed down the (American Thread) mill," Mrs. Koontz said. "If I were Congressman, I'd have been there months ago talking to the management and the workers. As a congressman, we have to get involved in local problems."

Mrs. Koontz is likely to face an uphill battle against Giddens, NORTON ADMITTED WEDNESDAY that he had expected to win his party's endorsement at the convention. He praised Mrs. Koontz's endorsement and said he would run as an independent.

Primary possibilities are lessened

HARTFORD (UPI) - Party unity is prevailing to the point where it looks like there won't be primaries this year to choose nominees for the state's six seats in the U.S. House.

There had been the possibility of primaries in at least three districts earlier this year, but the challenges have died out and, including battles in both parties to choose nominees in the 6th District.

In announcing his decision not to force a primary with Mrs. Koontz, Norton cited the need for party unity in the uphill fight against Republican Roberta Koontz in the 2nd District.

In four other districts, nominees from both parties are unopposed while in the 4th District Democrats have yet to come up with even one candidate to take an veteran Republican Rep. Stewart B. McKinney.

By contrast, there were primaries in two districts two years ago, including battles in both parties to choose nominees in the 6th District.

Bolton zoning officials reject construction business on West St.

By Sarah Passell Herald Reporter

BOLTON - The Bolton Zoning Commission Wednesday rejected an East Hartford couple's request that it overrule the town zoning officials' opposition to allowing a small construction business in a residential zone on West Street.

James P. Loersch and his wife, Sue M. Oliver, had hoped to build a house on land now owned by Donald Tedford at 305 West Street and to store four pieces of heavy equipment on the property, as well as the equipment they proposed to store included a backhoe, trailer, bulldozer and pick-up truck.

The Commission told Loersch and Miss Oliver that there is no law prohibiting them from setting up the business. But members predicted that the proposal would result in inevitable violations of town zoning rules that govern the kinds of business people may operate from their home.

Any violations would give zoning officer H. Calvin Hutchinson the authority to make them get rid of their equipment, effectively shutting down their business.

COMMISSION MEMBERS POINTED to town zoning regulations that require a home business owner to keep his equipment inside his home - which can include a garage - and to take up no more than a third of that home for such storage.

Regulations also require that the business not pose a nuisance to neighbors. Hutchinson and Commission members predicted that if they granted the couple's request for special permission to run a business on the site, "You might as well throw this book away."

Vice Chairman Alan Wudde predicted that other Bolton residents have been given permission to run similar operations in residential sections.

Portland becomes home to funding aiding Asian refugees and others

By Carolyn Coprioglio Middletown Press Distributed by UPI

PORTLAND - Forty-two years ago, during World War II, Nobu Ann Kumeikawa was forced by government edict to quit her education during her senior year at the University of California at Berkeley and, with her family, to join thousands of other Japanese-Americans who were moved to internment camps away from the West Coast.

Today, Nobu Ann Hibino (she uses both names but is most widely known in this area as Ann Hibino), resident who graduated from high school this spring.

Ann and Cuong have never met, but the helping hand that was extended to her and the other students during those dark days of internment has in turn benefited Hibino's dream of becoming a doctor was given a nudge toward realizing this spring when he was named one of eight recipients of $500 Southeast Asian Refugee Scholarships.

The grant responsible for those scholarships is the Nisei Student Relocation Commemorative Fund Inc., the avenue by which 300 Japanese-Americans are saying "thank you" to an organization that took them out of the internment camps, enrolled them in universities around the country and, in many instances, provided scholarship aid.

Over a 30-month period, the National American Student Relocation Council helped 3,597 Nisei (second-generation Japanese-Americans) to complete their education. It was formed by religious and education leaders who opposed to the government's internment policy and concerned about the future for Nisei who were forced to leave West coast schools.

Nobu Kumeikawa was enrolled at Boston University and, with a $250 scholarship and participation in a work-study program, she finished her degree in psychology.

Ann Hibino speaks today about her family being uprooted by a government fearful of loyal Japanese-Americans leaving San Francisco at the same time and no one would buy his inventory. We sold a junk man for $35 just one hour before leaving for camp."

But while the injustice remains fresh in her mind, so does the hard work of the council. Her own drive to better the lives of others has since she and her husband helped form the NSRF fund in 1979, been directed in large part toward finding more of those 3,597 Nisei so they can repay the council by extending aid to a new generation.

"We're only found about 10 percent," she noted, a trace of frustration in her voice as she recalled the ads placed in Japanese language newspapers, the letters sent out and returned "addresses unknown," the search through old Christmas card lists, and the efforts to find teachers and internment camp counselors who might recall names.

The fund itself is an outgrowth of an ad that Hibino answered a year earlier about a National Nisei Retirement Conference in California. "I thought I could contribute in some way," Ann explained, that being her special field of expertise

As friendships formed and remembrances flowed, the idea took shape to somehow honor the council which had taken them from the internment camps to college. "We decided to recycle the aid we had been given to help the Vietnamese and other Southeast Asian refugees," Ann said. Her husband drew up the papers and the NSRF fund, an headquarters at their home in Portland, was born.

The fund has grown beyond New England, helping students and including representation on the West Coast. The Board of Directors, in addition to Hibino, includes Lillian Ota Dotsun, UConn faculty member; May Takayama, American Friends Service Committee; and Masaharu; Lafayette Noda, the chairman, professor emeritus at Dartmouth University; Robert Suzuki, dean of the graduate school at California State University at Los Angeles; and Kenji Murase, faculty member at San Francisco State University.

Loophole in pension law allows employers to drop plans

An utterly unanticipated pension issue has emerged and now threatens to explode over whether companies should continue to be allowed to terminate pension plans in order to strip off any cash surplus.

This involves all of us, employees and employers. Few, if any, employees realize that their employers can drop existing pension plans as long as employees meet certain criteria and leave enough funds in their plans to meet the plan's liabilities.

This option appeals to a mounting number of companies that see temporary fat surpluses in their pension funds that otherwise remain off-limits. Since 1980 alone, more than 200 pension fund terminations involving excess funds of more than $1 billion each have been approved, covering more than $2.2 billion in total assets. Right now, more than 90 new applications are pending before the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp.

Hundreds of thousands of you, as employees, already have been affected; hundreds of thousands more will be, as more plan terminations are approved. The appeal is clear: Overvalued plans have become extremely attractive to companies, which often view them as adjuncts to the corporate treasury — they could use these excess funds to pay off debts accrued in buying another company, to prevent a takeover or for another corporate goal.

The Employment Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), passed in 1979, prohibits companies from

When a company drops its plan, you, an employee, are unquestionably affected. Employees who terminate a plan must vest all employees — even those who in normal circumstances are still years away from vesting. In most cases, employees receive only the benefits they've earned to that date. Replacement might be another defined benefit plan that promises a fixed pension at retirement. Or replacement might be a defined contribution plan, such as stock ownership or profit-sharing, that does not guarantee a specific income later on. Or there might be no replacement at all.

And even if the company institutes an identical defined benefit plan the next day, you, an employee, might have to start accruing benefits all over again — depending on how the plan is written.

Employees who have already retired do not lose any current monthly income from their pensions. But employers have at times used surplus funds to add cost-of-living adjustments (COLAs). Stripping off the surplus means that these — at best — infrequent COLAs will cease. The irony is that the same inflationary pressures that bloated pension funds have eroded the value of many pensions.

To clarify procedures for terminating pension plans, the Labor Department, the Internal Revenue Service and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp. announced new guidelines in late May. The guidelines suggest you might as well use mirrors.

"The guidelines affirm that pension surplus belongs to employers," says Lawrence Margel, chief actuary of Towers, Perrin, Forster & Crosby, a benefits consulting firm. Employers said, "If we can't do this, we'll simply terminate plans and not substitute anything."

But critics — including many in Congress — argue that employers are legally stealing pension funds that belong to employees and, as Gordon accuses, "are reneging on an implied bargain."

Every aspect is ironic. This is inconsistent with the theory that pensions are deferred wages; it sneers at the recent comment of Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan that the private pension system is "the bedrock of retirement income and will exceed Social Security in importance."

Our nation is deliberately knocking down the social-welfare system it took us almost a full century to build. Are you aware of it?

As employees, you already have been affected; hundreds of thousands more will be, as more plan terminations are approved. The appeal is clear: Overvalued plans have become extremely attractive to companies, which often view them as adjuncts to the corporate treasury — they could use these excess funds to pay off debts accrued in buying another company, to prevent a takeover or for another corporate goal.

Business in Brief

Johnson elected to board
Savings Bank of Manchester President William R. Johnson has been elected to a two-year term on the board of directors of the National Council of Savings Institutions.

Johnson was also named to the asset and liability committee of the association. Charles L. Pike, SBA's vice president and commercial services officer, was appointed to the commercial loan committee.

The Washington, D.C.-based council is a national trade association for savings institutions.

Champion reports earnings
STAMFORD — Champion International Corp. reported an improvement of over 50 percent in second quarter earnings, attributed to strong results in its paper and packaging units.

Champion reported earnings of $40 million, or 65 cents per share, up 57 percent from the $25.6 million reported in the same quarter last year.

Thomas heads water group
Chester E. Thomas Jr. of Manchester has been named chief, Connecticut office, New England District, Water Resources Division, of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Thomas joined the Survey in 1961 in the water quality branch in the New York-New England District in Albany, N.Y. Since reassignment to Hartford, he has been responsible for a variety of interpretive and supervisory activities pertaining to hydrologic investigations in Connecticut.

In his tenure with the Survey, Thomas has authored or co-authored 14 hydrologic reports, had a two-month assignment in Brazil evaluating water-quality stations and has been on the advisory committee to the Institute of Water Resources, University of Connecticut, since 1979.

Thomas has a bachelor's degree in geology from Uppsala College and a master's degree in geology from Washington University.

The Connecticut office of the Survey has a staff of 30.

Money's Worth

Citizens' earnings increase
Citizens Bank of Glastonbury reported net income of $43,282 for the six months ended June 30, an increase of 21 percent over the previous year's figures.

Per-share earnings for the period were $2.30, compared with $2.63 the previous year. Total assets have increased to $84.5 million from $66.8 million in 1983.

Citizens Bank has offices in Glastonbury, South Glastonbury, Marlborough, Hebron and Columbia.

Worldwide revenues boost Emhart earnings
FARMINGTON (UPI) — Emhart Corporation said Wednesday an increase in worldwide revenues pushed second quarter earnings up by 23 percent.

Record net earnings for the second quarter were $22.2 million, equal to 88 cents per share, compared to net earnings of $18 million, or 72 cents per share in 1983.

Worldwide revenues for the period were $464.8, compared to $428.5 million in the same period two years ago.

For the first six months net earnings were $44.4 million, up 20 percent over 1983 earnings of $36.2 million. Per share earnings rose to $1.73 for the first six months, compared with $1.45 a year ago.

Worldwide revenues were $925.7 million, versus $847.2 million, for the 1984 and 1983 first-half periods. The company said operating income rose 32 percent in the second quarter and orders for the second quarter were $419 million, up 4 percent from the same period last year.

Railbus carries the hope of railroad's resurgence

where you would want to cut down on travel between train and bus stations," said Michael Dinning of the U.S. Department of Transportation. "I don't think it's an exaggeration at all to say this could do wonders for the American railroad."

European and Asian countries are already running a handful of Railbuses, or bus bodies mounted on railway vehicle undercarriages. The vehicle has become popular in Denmark, Ireland and Thailand because it is inexpensive and efficient to run, officials said.

The Railbus is the product of a six-year development venture by British Rail Engineering, Ltd. and Leyland Bus, who set out to spread the word of the transportation method widely used in their country.

"We are convinced that this exciting concept will catch on throughout the world," James Urquhart, chairman of British Rail, told about 50 business, transportation and government officials at Newport Casino.

"We have taken a means of transport that was already there and the tracks, which were also already there, and simply built upon that," Urquhart said.

Spending slowdown surprises economists

WASHINGTON — The nation's personal income grew by a moderate 0.8 percent in June but spending slowed down dramatically, increasing only 0.2 percent, the Commerce Department said today.

The increase in income was twice the revised 0.4 percent in May and the most since April's 1 percent gain, with June's increased factory employment a major contributing factor.

The month's increase was the same before income taxes were subtracted and after, a total known as disposable income.

But the spending figure, in today's report, prepared by the department's Bureau of Economic Analysis, was a surprise to analysts and directly contradicted another report a week ago on retail sales prepared by the department's Census Bureau.

May spending was up a strong 1.1 percent over April, when 1.5 percent more goods and services were purchased than in March.

Today's report said Americans spent less overall on automobiles, auto parts, large appliances and other durable goods in June but the retail sales report said there was a "sharp 2.1 percent increase in that category for the month."

The spending figure is a key ingredient in the government's official measure of economic growth in the second quarter, the gross national product measure to be published Monday.

The discrepancy between the two reports raises new questions about whether the government's tentative estimate of GNP growth, a surprisingly strong rate of 5.7 percent, will turn out to be too low, as many economists have been predicting, or too high.

Personal income climbed, at annual rates, by $23.9 billion in June to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $304 trillion.

Personal spending went up by $5.3 billion to $247.4 trillion.

Overall wages and salaries jumped at an annual rate of $12.6 billion in June, compared with $1.3 billion in May, on the strength of the large surge in employment in June that gave the month the lowest unemployment rate, 7.1 percent, in over four years.

Farm income also increased by $1.3 billion, after falling $2 billion in May.

With spending much slower and income continuing to increase nearly 1 percent the nation's savings rate improved slightly to 6.1 percent of disposable income in June from 5.6 percent in May.

Soviet hints it won't attend Vienna arms talks this fall

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union hints it will not come to Vienna in September to talk about anti-satellite warfare unless the United States comes up with specific proposals, a condition U.S. officials say will not be met.

The latest word came from a Soviet official, talking to United Press International on the basis of no further identification.

He expanded on a commentary that appeared in the Soviet newspaper Pravda Tuesday, which said the original Soviet proposal for the talks "presupposes an equally direct and constructive reply."

This meant, the official said Thursday, that the United States would be expected to come forward with specific proposals for a ban on anti-satellite weapons before the talks.

If there were no such ideas put forward, the official said, the Soviets would not attend.

A senior U.S. official said Tuesday at a White House briefing that the United States would be coming to Vienna with specific procedural ideas, which would not deal with the substance of an anti-satellite agreement.

The Soviet diplomat said he did not expect the talks would take place in Vienna as proposed for September.

The Soviets, in a June 29 letter to the United States, proposed meeting in Vienna Sept. 18 to discuss a ban on anti-satellite weapons.

The United States said it would send a delegation but wanted to discuss other issues as well, including the strategic and intermediate-range missile talks, which the Soviet Union broke off late last year.

The Soviets interpreted the U.S. counterproposal as a rejection of the Vienna invitation.

The Soviet diplomat said the Prava commentary was an authoritative statement of the Soviet position.

The comment, by an author identified as Yuri Orlov, said the American proposal to discuss weapons other than anti-satellite was "laying down of a precondition and a deliberately unacceptable condition at that."

The State Department has said the U.S. proposals to widen the agenda are not a precondition and the United States intends to be in Vienna — either in September or after the November election, if the Soviets prefer.

San Francisco — Walter Mondale, with a tough-talking Geraldine Ferraro as his Democratic running mate, sidestepped President Reagan while building his own presidential campaign around a "new realism" that tempers the party's traditional liberal philosophy.

Wasting American flags and shouting themselves hoarse, Democrats closed out a four-day 29th national convention Thursday night after securing a place in history by including a woman on their national ticket for the first time.

Both nominees make their triumphant returns home today, with Mondale going to Minnesota and Ms. Ferraro to California. The first woman vice presidential nominee of a major party — flying to New York.

The campaigns will begin soon, but for the time being, Mondale-Ferraro strategists will work out final battle plans.

"Four years ago, many of you voted for Mr. Reagan because he promised you'd be better off," Mondale said in an acceptance speech that referred to the 1980 Democratic race when he and Jimmy Carter were buried by history by including a woman on their national ticket for the first time.

And today, the rich are better off. But working Americans are worse off, and the middle class is standing on a trap door," he said in his acceptance speech.

The Democratic presidential standard-bearer bluntly declared that federal taxes would have to be raised to close the massive federal deficit.

"Taxes will go up," he said. "And anyone who says they won't is not telling the truth."

Mondale and Ms. Ferraro both cut into Reagan — with the new vice presidential candidate proudly proclaiming "Change is in the air."

With the band playing a medley of "America" and "Ragtime Band," Mondale and the Rev. Jesse Jackson (center) shake hands while Joan Mondale (right) applauds. In the foreground, vice presidential nominee Geraldine Ferraro smiles at Gary Hart.

Fourth of July group looks ahead to 1985

For Manchester fireworks aficionados it will be some time, same place next Fourth of July.

The Independence Day Celebration Committee met Thursday night to begin looking at 1985, following this year's fireworks display and celebration — the town's first in eight years — which drew an estimated 15,000 to 20,000 people to the grounds of Manchester Community College.

"We're moving on to year two with a very good taste in everyone's mouth," said committee Chairman Nathan G. Agostinelli.

Members reported few, if any, problems in their respective areas, and a representative from MCC said the college would be more than willing to host the event again next July 4.

The group hopes to start planning the event this year to draw an even bigger crowd at next year's celebration. The event is likely to closely resemble this year's, which featured a chicken barbecue, two band concerts and children's games.

Among the biggest complaints registered at this year's event were that the fireworks were launched in a location not visible to everyone and that the show was too short, committee members reported.

Agostinelli said that all displays are limited to 30 minutes, but that the committee could look into purchasing more fireworks. The display this year lasted 24 minutes and included $5,000 worth of fireworks, he said.

Committee member and town Director James F. Fogarty drew laughter when he explained that the problem of long lines at the barbecue pits was not the result of poor planning or the fault of the caterer.

"He doesn't know Manchester — if you say 6 to 7:30, everybody's there at 6," Fogarty said.

The group also reported minor problems with concessions. Traffic congestion, publicity and the method of collecting donations at the entrances to the college.

Talks continue to avert postal strike

WASHINGTON — Two of the nation's largest postal unions returned to the bargaining table today in the hopes of hammering out a labor contract for 500,000 postal workers.

The American Postal Workers Union and the National Association of Letter Carriers agreed to go back to the table after talks broke down earlier this week because their leaders maintained the Postal Service was unwilling to talk about economic issues.

"We have not been in contact with the Postal Service, but representatives of APWCs have assured us the Postal Service now is prepared to return to the bargaining table for the express purpose of discussing economic issues and wages," APWU spokesman Alan Madison said Thursday.

Today Madison called the resumption of negotiations "very, very significant."

Madison said union officials were hopeful they could reach an agreement in the 14 hours before the deadline.

A Postal Service spokesman had no information about today's planned return to the bargaining table.

Union leaders had said they would resume talks only when the Postal Service agreed to discuss money issues.

With a contract deadline of midnight today, APWU President Moe Bilser said the Postal Service has not yet put a viable economic package on the bargaining table.

Letter Carriers President Vincent Sombrotto said, "They put a bag of garbage on the table."

Union leaders said the Postal Service is seeking a three-year wage freeze, a two-tier pay scale with new workers receiving one-third less and outlays in other benefits.

"We are interested in negotiating a contract, but not on our knees with no givebacks," Bilser said. "The two postal unions and two other smaller unions, which represent about 100,000 workers, are in the middle of negotiations with the Postal Service Monday."

The Postal Service maintains that union proposals for wage and benefit increases and cost-of-living adjustments would cost $14.5 billion over three years and raise the cost of a first-class stamp to 28 cents.

The unions say those estimates are exaggerated and would cost Postmaster General William Bolger said, "The bottom line of all this is that we and union leaders simply cannot afford to just walk away from the bargaining table."

Federal workers are prohibited by law from striking. If no settlement is reached by the time the contract expires, the big unions must strike.

A Postal Service strike has not occurred since 1970, when President Richard Nixon called in federal troops to move the mail.

Local postal union rejects contract

EAST HARTFORD — The union which represents over 1,200 letter carriers in the Hartford area — including about 55 in Manchester — voted Thursday to reject a three-year contract offered by the U.S. Postal Service that includes reductions in wages and benefits.

Members of Merged Branch 86 of the National Association of Letter Carriers also voted to begin informational picketing if an agreement is not reached by the expiration of the current contract at midnight tonight.

Robert A. Jinks, president of Merged Branch 86, said the approximately 400 union members gathered at the International Association of Machinists Hall on Main Street Thursday were unanimous in their rejection of the contract, which includes a change in the way cost-of-living adjustments are paid. A new two-tier system would force new employees to start at any level 20 percent less than regular workers, reductions in sick and vacation leave, and a complete freeze on the terms of the three-year contract.

Jinks said the terms of the contract were unacceptable because they would reduce wages at a time when productivity in the post office is increasing.

"Productivity in the post office is higher than in the private sector," he said.

Jinks said retired postal workers would be particularly hurt by the change in cost-of-living adjustments. The terms of the contract, the adjustments would be paid in one lump sum instead of included in an employee's base salary.

"I don't think we can afford to have federal troops to move the mail," Jinks said.
