Secrecy shrouds deaths

DETROIT (UPI) — Military officials are refusing to discuss the deaths of 17 U.S. soldiers, but deny they were members of a secret Army helicopter unit that flew missions over hostile territory in Central America.

The unit reportedly entered into hostile territory in Central America in 1982 and 1983 to aid rebels, relatives of the soldiers said in interviews published Sunday in the Detroit Free Press. One father said his son flew missions in Nicaragua.

In Washington, a Pentagon spokesman, Lt. John Shields, denied that U.S. troops had aided rightist rebels in Nicaragua.

"No U.S. military forces have participated in any military operation against the Sandinista government, therefore the allegations in the Detroit Free Press article are not true," he said.

Michael Burch, assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, said: "We just don't talk about the unit. To my knowledge the unit has never deployed to Central America."

Members of the 160th Task Force of the 11st Airborne Division stationed in Fort Campbell, Ky., wore civilian clothes during the secret missions and were told to expect no official acknowledgment or intervention if captured, the relatives told the Detroit Free Press.

Unit members were instructed to blow up their CH-53 Chinook and UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters if they were captured or became disabled in enemy territory, the relatives said.

Members of the unit carried thousands of dollars in hard money and major credit cards to buy airfare back to the United States, the relatives said.

The Free Press interviewed widows, parents and friends of 16 of the task force members killed in accidents in 1983. Relatives also discussed a 17th member killed by small-arms fire in the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada in Oct. 1983. Many of the relatives said they had not been told the full story about how the soldiers died.

But the newspaper said it found no evidence to support charges by the relatives that the fatalities were linked to clandestine missions in Central America.

William Alvey of Morganfield, Ky., father of Warrant Officer Donald Alvey, 26, said his son was involved in a series of missions in Nicaragua. The Army said Alvey died March 20, 1983, when a helicopter he was piloting crashed 23 miles off Norfolk, Va.

"Don flew a bunch of trips into Nicaragua," before his crash, the elder Alvey said. "He was kind of vague about the missions. He'd go somewhere and pick up a group of people in a clearing in the jungle — armed troops, speaking Spanish — and take them to another clearing in the jungle somewhere."

Passengers usually would be picked up in Honduras and dropped off in Nicaragua, Alvey said. His son's Chinook helicopter then would return to Honduras until it was time to pick up the passengers in Nicaragua.

A Central American mission in support of the Salvadoran government's war with leftist guerrillas could be a violation of the War Powers Act.

Zinsser wants citizen group to control child abuse fund

By Alex Girelli Herald Reporter

State Sen. Carl Zinsser, R-Manchester, has introduced a bill that would take control of the Children's Trust Fund out of the hands of the state Department of Children and Youth Services and put it under control of a 15-member citizens' committee.

The bill is one of three Zinsser said he has introduced or soon will introduce for the session of the General Assembly that begins in January.

During the last session, Zinsser introduced legislation creating the fund, which was established to educate teachers and others who deal with children about the problems of child abuse. But he has been critical of the way it has been administered by DCYS.

Zinsser said Friday that $10,000 of the $50,000 set aside for the fund has been earmarked as seed money to stimulate private donations. But so far, donations have totaled only $588, he said.

Zinsser criticized the handling of the fund during his campaign this year for election to a third term representing 4th Senatorial District, and pledged to seek improvements in its operation.

Under Zinsser's bill, the 15-member committee would be set up with power to administer the fund. Five of its members would be from child advocacy groups, five from the business community, and five from the state government.

The government members would be one each from DCYS, the Department of Education, the Department of Income Maintenance, the Department of Health and the Department of Human Services.

Zinsser said his bill would also set up separate financing for the fund, setting aside a percentage of the state's gaming revenues.

Zinsser said today he also plans to introduce a fair campaign practices bill that would make "candidates and public groups like unions accountable for what they say in election campaigns."

He said that during the recent campaign there were attacks on incumbents from both political parties that he feels were unfair. He said they misrepresented the incumbent's record or told half the story.

During his campaign against Democrat Stephen T. Cassano,

Zinsser charged that the Connecticut Citizen Action Group, which endorsed Cassano, misled people about Zinsser's vote on bills the CACG said would keep electric bills lower.

Zinsser said he voted in favor of the bills in their final form. The CACG said he voted in committee against versions the CACG said were stronger.

Zinsser said California has a law that holds people accountable for what they say in campaigns but does not specify any penalty for violating it. New York passed a fair campaign law in 1975 and amended it after parts of it were declared unconstitutional in court, he said.

Zinsser said he is studying the private, non-profit agency that holds people accountable for what they say in campaigns but does not specify any penalty for violating it. New York passed a fair campaign law in 1975 and amended it after parts of it were declared unconstitutional in court, he said.

Zinsser said he will also introduce a bill to require the state treasurer to seek competitive bids for the sale of short-term bonds. Competitive bidding is now required for long-term bonds, but short-term bonds can be sold in negotiated sales.

Zinsser said the state auditors also recommend the competitive bidding requirement for short-term bonds.

Bid war squeezed General Dynamics

Editor's note: This is the first of a five-part series on the controversy surrounding the navy's largest defense contractor.

By Gregory Gordon and Andrew Gallagher United Press International

WASHINGTON — Joseph Pierce balked when his bosses at General Dynamics Corp. ordered him in 1973 to slash nearly $100 million from his estimate of costs to build 11 Navy missile submarines, present and former company officials recall.

The 2.5 percent cut — amounting to a high-risk gamble — would have substantially enhanced General Dynamics' chances of winning the contract but left it slim hopes of carrying a profit, these officials have told congressional investigators.

According to their account, Pierce, general manager of the company's huge Groton, Conn., shipyard, finally succumbed to the pressure and lowered by $60 million his bid. He said he was carefully researched bid price.

General Dynamics edged a competitor for the $769 million contract, fueling its rise to become the nation's largest defense contractor with 1983 sales of $7.1 billion.

Company spokesmen flatly deny this version of how the company won the bid, asserting chairman David Lewis directed a $60-million hour, 5 percent reduction. They say the Navy later shaved another 100,000 man hours per ship.

The conflicting accounts appear to be at the heart of a sweeping controversy that has enmeshed the company in eight investigations, including a new federal grand jury inquiry in Hartford, and joined the military-industrial establishment.

P. Takis Veliotis, a fugitive Bond-scamming division, alleged the bid reduction amounted to a "buy-in" on the contract to put a

Police smash 2nd protest in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Riot police battered 5,000 people from laying flowers at the grave of a man killed in a police clash and used water cannons and tear gas to break up a similar protest by Solidarity supporters led by Lech Walesa, reports said today.

No injuries were reported in Sunday's clashes in the southwestern city of Wroclaw and the Baltic port of Gdansk but members of the Zamo, or riot police, arrested an undisclosed number of marchers in Gdansk, including underground Solidarity leader Grzegorz Polko and Andrzej Gucmanski.

"We were all in a line, walking arm in arm carrying flowers to the monument when we hit a wall of Zamos," Gwiazda's wife, Joanna, said. "Many Zamos jumped out of police vans parked on the right and grabbed Andrzej."

A man who identified himself only as Zdzislaw told United Press International that some 5,000 people tried to march to the cemetery in Wroclaw where Kazimierz Michalzyk is buried.

A wall of Zamo riot police backed by police vans pushed and shoved the crowd away from the cemetery. No water cannon, tear gas or clubs were used. Zdzislaw and other residents said police evacuated the cemetery and closed it to the public Sunday, he said.

Michalzyk, a young worker from Wroclaw, was killed in an anti-government demonstration in the industrial city in 1982.

In another development, some 400 students who occupied a school in southern Poland for two weeks, abandoned their sit-in without getting permission to replace curricula which had been removed from classroom walls, a church spokesman said.

It was a unilateral decision on the part of the students," said Jerzy Stepien, a spokesman for the Kielce diocese, in which the school is located.

"There was no compromise with the authorities," he said.

The students left the vocational school in Wloclawa, 120 miles south of Warsaw, on Sunday morning after a visit from the Rev. Mieczyslaw Jankowski, the auxiliary bishop of Kielce.

In the Gdansk clash, police sprayed water from cannons and used tear gas to disperse the marchers, who chanted "solidarity, justice, killers, killers" and "there is no freedom without Solidarity," referring to the trade union Walesa founded in 1980.

Grant helps nurses move their quarters

By Sarah E. Hall Herald Reporter

Visiting Nurse and Home Care of Manchester will probably move into the building that used to house the Highland Park School before winter is over as the result of a $76,195 grant from the Hartford Foundation for Public Giving.

The Hartford Foundation for Public Giving is a pool of gifts and bequests, which are held in trust with the income donated annually to charitable organizations in the Capital Region.

The town has allocated four large rooms for the visiting nurses staff at Highland Park. In addition, the school cafeteria and other space will be available for meetings and child health clinics.

Lewis predicted that the move will enable the VNA to save money on rent and move into various programs since the town will charge no rent other than utilities and maintenance costs.

The nursing agency will share the school with the town recreation department and a town-run day treatment center for emotionally troubled teenagers. "We're delighted to be moving in there," Lewis said. "It will be nice to be in with the Recreation Department, so we can all keep fit."

Political junkies fuel rumors on Cuomo's trip

By Joseph Monowony
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Taken in the context of future presidential politics, New York Gov. Mario Cuomo's trip to the nation's capital last week was fascinating — giving the chance to a seasoned statesman with one potential rival and trash another at the same time.

Granted, talk about a campaign for the White House four years from now is highly speculative. But to Cuomo watchers and those who can't seem to get enough of political games, it was intriguing to see how the Democrat treated two possible Republican adversaries.

The governor purportedly came to Washington with a single objective: to fight plans that would eliminate the federal deduction for state and local taxes. What he went back to New York with was some interesting political mileage and not a whole lot of substance.

Take, for example, his major move of the two-day visit — a brief session with new Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole. Cuomo had to know that Dole would remain non-committal about the tax deduction and the most substantive thing that could be gained was a friendly word or two from the Kansas Republican.

But what was also to be won was a photo opportunity that much of the media could not pass up. After all, here were two men often mentioned as potential rivals in the 1988 presidential race standing side-by-side exchanging pleasantries.

Not a word was uttered about an incident only four months ago when, in the midst of political convention season, Dole stood on the Senate floor and unleashed a rare attack on Cuomo's commitment to "fairness."

Instead, the two men smiled, said nice things about each other, posed for pictures and passed up questions about the potential of them running against each other. But then an odd thing happened. As he left Dole's office, the statesman Cuomo disappeared and the acerbic Cuomo look-alike, without prompting, the governor went on the offensive against New York Rep. Jack Kemp, another potential GOP presidential contender.

Cuomo stayed on the tax issue, but used it to take shots at what is often considered a vulnerable point for Kemp — the lack of it, that he spends with the folks back home.

That might not be a bad tack to take. Kemp, as many students of New York politics believe, has never been thrilled about jumping into a contest he might lose.

Dole, on the other hand, is a different type of political animal — one who not only loves a good fight, but is extremely tough to beat.

He has his enemies, but you would be hard-pressed to find somebody in Washington who thinks he's a pushover.

State firm on tech contract

The state is unlikely to alter its position on a proposed contract with state vocational education teachers that the teachers rejected on Thursday, a state education official said today.

Angelo Tedesco, associate state commissioner of education, said he thought the proposed two-year contract was fair.

"We gave them a very good offer for their bargaining unit accepted," Tedesco said. "I don't see us changing our position."

Members of the State Vocational Federation of Teachers, including 33 of the 42 eligible from Howell Cheney Regional Vocational Technical School, rejected the proposed pact Thursday by a vote of 566 to 126.

The contract offered pay increases of 11 percent over two years. It also included changes in the way personal time would have been calculated and eliminated some break and preparation time in exchange for money.

Leaders of the federation cited the so-called "buybacks" in the contract and the state's attitude as the main reasons for rejection of the contract. Some teachers have accused the state of dragging its feet during negotiations, a claim Tedesco firmly denied.

"How can you drag your feet when both sides are at the bargaining table and you're talking?" he asked.

The union is scheduled to meet Jan. 10 to select a new negotiating team to begin renewed talks with state negotiators.

Federation President Pasquale Elias said today that the teachers, who have been without a contract since September, could take job actions to put pressure on the state.

He cited as examples refusing to participate in extracurricular activities or carrying out administrative orders slowly.

"It depends on how frustrated and angry they are," Elias said. "Any action the teachers' union takes would have to be agreeable to most members, he said."

Tedesco said he hoped the delay in reaching a settlement would not affect the quality of vocational education or lead to job actions by the teachers.

"The students are not part of this and they shouldn't be," he said.

Drug raids net six arrests

Raids Saturday night on two Spruce Street apartments netted six arrests, including two charged with possession of LSD, cocaine and marijuana, police said today.

Steven S. Hayes and Marta C. Hermosillo were both held over the weekend on $2,000 bonds and were scheduled for arraignment today in Manchester Superior Court.

The raids turned up small amounts of suspected LSD and cocaine and more than a pound of marijuana from Hayes's apartment at 140 Spruce St., police said.

Police said they found both Hayes, 28, and Hermosillo, 21, in the apartment when they raided it at about 8 p.m. Saturday.

A month-long investigation yielded enough information to get a search warrant, police said.

Hayes and Hermosillo, a South Windsor resident, were charged with possession of LSD and marijuana with intent to sell, possession of marijuana with intent to sell, possession of drug paraphernalia, operating a drug factory and cultivating marijuana.

Police said while they were searching the apartment, Laura J. Genovese, 26, of Rector St., came by to buy marijuana and was arrested.

Genovese was charged with possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. She was later released on a $500 non-surety bond and ordered to appear Wednesday in court.

Police said when they went to Elm and Pine streets. The indictment will probably cut into the land to the north of the Hartford Road.

Foundations members discussed but came to no conclusion on how to proceed near the hall and elsewhere in the historic district.

Lamson questioned whether brick walls would be historically accurate. Mary Blah wondered if brick would be effective in an area where virtually all the buildings are also brick.

Lamson reported during the meeting that Malmfeldt Associates of Glastonbury, the architectural firm that designed the renovation of the exterior of the hall, had been selected for the interior design work.

The foundation also re-elected its officers. Stevenson as chairman, Donald Kuehl as vice chairman, Mark Pellegrini as secretary, and Gloria Della Vera as treasurer.

Shelter idea called unclear

Whether the town will agree to assume ownership of a shelter for the homeless — or whether the Board of Directors will even consider the issue — is still unclear. The proposal submitted to a Shelter Study Committee meeting Friday that the church consortium will need more help from the town if it is ever to secure and maintain a permanent shelter building. The Manchester Area Conference of Churches, which runs the shelter, had tried to secure the Gammons Houghland building on Main Street last month but lost out to another buyer.

"I would not be willing to consider a proposal without specifics," Weinberg said today. "We cannot expect that the board is going to endorse a proposal that is not there to endorse — you cannot work in a blind vacuum."

Walter Johnson, a MACC representative, told the shelter committee Friday that the church consortium will need more help from the town if it is ever to secure and maintain a permanent shelter building. The Manchester Area Conference of Churches, which runs the shelter, had tried to secure the Gammons Houghland building on Main Street last month but lost out to another buyer.

Johnson said he planned to talk to General Manager Robert H. Weiss about drawing up a proposal for greater town involvement. Weiss said today that no meeting has been arranged. But he agreed the matter would be a legitimate issue for the town directors to discuss.

"Certainly, it's the kind of thing that deserves consideration and study," Weiss said. He said that while it would be possible to form an operational standpoint for the town to own a shelter, the issue of town involvement will need to be considered.

DEP seeks action from Lydall

Lydall Inc. says it has answered a lawsuit filed by the state Department of Environmental Protection ordering the company to remove solid waste from a lagoon adjoining its plant in Manchester.

Lydall has complied with the original order to find a way to remove the non-toxic small fiber material called Fines, which is generated by the manufacture of fiber board for boxes, and the company feels the suit will be resolved, according to Carl Butens, manager of corporate relations.

The DEP issued the original order to Lydall to clean up the polluted lagoon on May 20. Butens said the company complied with that order in June by hiring an outside engineering firm to do a study on the waste problem. The original order stated that the company had to find a way to remove the waste without polluting the water. Butens said.

Butens said today that another engineering firm has been hired by Lydall and is doing a second study to see if Lydall is resolving the problem in the best way possible. Wesley Winterbottom, a DEP sanitary engineer, said the DEP filed the lawsuit "to get the matter resolved as quickly as possible."

Winterbottom said the DEP believes Lydall has taken some steps to clean out the lagoon, but that the company still needs to develop a long-term plan to deal with the problem if it continues to use the lagoon. Lydall also needs to apply for a groundwater discharge permit, Winterbottom said.

The compliance order was to have been met at the end of July, according to Winterbottom. But he said a recent quarterly inspection showed that the lagoon was still on the surface of the sludge. He said there is concern that there could be leeching into Lydall Brook.

Equipment division head concentrates on maintenance

By Alex Girelli
Herald Reporter

The windows of Keith Chapman's office at the town highway garage on Olect Street do not give him the best of views.

To the north in his view is the landfill building that houses salt for road work during the winter, and beyond it the high hill that defines one edge of the town's sanitary landfill. To the west is the landfill transfer station where housekeepers dump their trash.

But Chapman's office is strategically located on a balcony over storage bays in which mechanics work on town vehicles, maintaining them and trying to minimize the need for future repairs.

For more than a year, Chapman has been the town's fleet manager, setting up a program of preventive maintenance on motor vehicles and moving toward centralization of motor vehicle repair. He is the first official to occupy the position heading the newly created Equipment and Supplies Division in the Public Works Department.

THE NOTION OF PREVENTIVE MAINTENANCE has been known detractors in town, but the centralization did not win universal acclaim when it was first proposed.

The administration has strongly backed it and so have most members of the town Board of Directors. But within the municipal work force, there has been some resistance.

That may be one reason Chapman has tended to keep a low profile.

But more than that, Chapman says, the reason is his goal of getting the preventive maintenance program operating as well as possible before his division takes on a commitment to maintain more vehicles.

The ominous "urgent" marked on this laboratory form is there to tell the town something is wrong with the engine of a fire truck. The sample bottle contains crankcase oil.

Now the equipment division, created just before Chapman was hired, maintains and repairs vehicles for the Highway Division, the biggest user of heavy and varied road equipment, and for the town Fire Department. It also takes care of the cars used by various employees working out of the Municipal Building and Lincoln Center.

But the Parks and Cemetery Division does its own repair work, as does the Police Department. The Water and Sewer Division has been contracting out for vehicle maintenance.

While the result justified Chapman's faith in the lab checks, he would have been happier if the test had come out differently. It's impossible to tell, he said, whether some damage was done to the engine before it's crankcase oil was tested and the problem repaired.

NORMALLY, CHAPMAN EXPECTS less dramatic results, and that is what he has normally gotten.

At budget time, Chapman told the town directors that oil changes at arbitrary periods are costly. Different vehicles under different uses need different oil change schedules, he explained. And since the laboratory oil checks have been in use, Chapman said the periods between oil changes for a number of vehicles have been made longer.

Another tool the division uses is a computer printout giving data about gas consumption for various vehicles. Chapman said this is especially helpful for vehicles that have not had lab oil checks.

Data from the printout can tell the division when some preventive work is advisable, he said.

ONE OF THE TOOLS of preventive maintenance used by the division is laboratory checks of vehicle crankcase oil. That procedure won a dramatic victory recently when a lab check on a fire truck revealed that fuel was leaking through pistons at a dangerous rate.

Laboratory of Disten, the company that does the checks, phoned Chapman and told him to put the fire apparatus out of service immediately. The leak was repaired and the truck is back in use.

But if the leak had gone unnoticed, the entire engine could have been ruined.

While the result justified Chapman's faith in the lab checks, he would have been happier if the test had come out differently. It's impossible to tell, he said, whether some damage was done to the engine before it's crankcase oil was tested and the problem repaired.

Some of the data on the form goes into computer storage, to build a history of the vehicle and provide basic statistics for future guidance.

In priorities for jobs, emergency vehicles come first, Chapman said.

Chapman admits that in the process of enforcing priorities, he has probably made some supervisors feel their work is not as high on the list as it should be. But on the whole, he said, there has been no problem in the process of enforcing priorities. He attributes that to the attitude of the mechanics.

Manchester In Brief

Lois Lewis honored

Lois Lewis, director of Visiting Nurse and Home Care of Manchester, has been listed in Who's Who in American Nursing.

Selection was based on professional accomplishments that have an impact on health care services and the enhancement of nursing, according to 21 news releases from the nurses' agency.

Lewis has been director of the agency for nine years. She has a master's degree in nursing and is a certified nurse administrator by the American Nurses Association.

She is Region I Director of the National Association for Home Care. Lewis is a recipient of the YWCA Women Recognition Award and is a member of Sigma Theta Tau, a national honor society for nurses.

Elderly outreach moves

The town's Elderly Outreach department has moved to two rooms upstairs on the north side of Lincoln Center, coordinator Diane Wicks said Friday.

Until Thursday, elderly outreach workers shared space with the town Human Services Department downstairs in the municipal building. The move was made "one, so that we could have more space and more privacy for our clients, and also so Human Services could have more space," Wicks said.

There is a ramp and an elevator for clients who cannot climb the stairs, Wicks said. The department is using space vacated by the Park Department, which has moved to its new garage on Charter Oak Street.

The address and phone number of the Elderly Outreach department will remain the same. For more information, call 647-3994.

Safe Rides group gets first call

The new Safe Rides program in Manchester gave a free, confidential ride to its first caller Saturday night, organizer Greg Kane said today.

"We're in business," he said this morning. "Our procedure worked fantastically." Kane explained that the radios, codes and other systems devised by the group proved workable.

Safe Rides, which operates out of the Moriarty Brothers car dealership on Center Street, received no calls during its first three nights of operation on Dec. 7, 8 and 14. But Kane said that he was confident that calls would start coming in soon.

Late last week, the Student Senate at Manchester Community College endorsed Safe Rides and donated $300 to the program. The Board of Education, Manchester Memorial Hospital, the Rotary Club and other groups have also

Envoy wants direct talks

AMMAN, Jordan - Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy dismissed King Hussein's proposal for a U.N.-sponsored Middle East conference and suggested instead that Jordan hold direct talks with Israel.

Murphy made the remarks at a meeting with Foreign Minister Taher Masri during a 24-hour visit to Jordan Sunday. He left Amman early today for Tel Aviv, a U.S. embassy official said.

"It is obvious that we have differing positions on how to achieve peace in the Middle East, Masri said after meeting with Murphy.

He said the U.S. envoy dismissed Hussein's call for a conference to be attended by all parties in the Middle East conflict, including the Palestine Liberation Organization, Israel and the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council.

Bhopal residents return

BHOPAL, India - Thousands of people streamed home today while technicians at a Union Carbide plant neutralized the gas that killed more than 2,500 people two weeks ago in the worst chemical disaster in history.

With 10,000 gas masks on hand in case of emergency, workers at the U.S.-owned 70-acre Union Carbide complex sought to turn another 4 tons of methyl isocyanate gas into pesticide, using the same process they employed Sunday to convert 3 tons.

By the end of the day, they planned to have 7 of the 162 tons converted, putting them 1 1/2 days ahead of schedule.

Schroeder's spirits sink

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - Artificial heart recipient Bill Schroeder is recovering physically from a stroke but doctors are concerned that the man, who once craved milkshakes and beer and kidded the staff he lost the zest so crucial for healing.

Schroeder got out of bed with assistance Sunday and sat in a chair for the first time since he suffered the stroke Thursday, said George Atkins, a spokesman for Humana Hospital Audubon where Schroeder received his artificial heart Nov. 25.

But while he was "very conversant" during a visit with his wife, six children and some grandchildren, he was not as talkative as he was before the stroke, Schroeder, 52, was propped up in the chair by pillows and managed to give a "thumbs up" sign after prompting by a nurse.

Dr. Allan Lansing, chief medical spokesman for Humana Heart Institute, said earlier Sunday Schroeder was "withdrawn," and Lansing said he was concerned Schroeder had lost his appetite for life.

Mitterand opposes weapons

PARIS - President Francois Mitterand, saying he opposes President Reagan's "Star Wars" anti-missile system, is urging the superpowers to limit to the militarization of space.

Mitterand also called for improved relations between France and the Soviet Union during an hour-long television interview Sunday on foreign policy issues.

"I view President Reagan's position, which consists of putting a sort of shield the length of the United States to prevent missiles from entering, as over-arming," the Socialist president said.

Mitterand, one of Europe's biggest defenders of the deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Western Europe to counter Soviet SS-20s, said France favored construction of an inhabited space station.

But as for the militarization of space, no. It is better to begin now a dialogue between the two superpowers," he said.

Schools reopen in Chicago

CHICAGO (UPI) - Approval of a new contract by the policy-making board of the Chicago Teachers Union cleared the way today for the opening of schools in the nation's third largest system for the first time in two weeks.

Members of the CTU's House of Delegates Sunday voted 605-59 in favor of the one-year agreement, which calls for a 4.5 percent pay increase and a 2.5 percent one-time bonus for teachers.

"We are pleased to tell the students and the parents and the citizens of Chicago that the strike is suspended, and that our classes can resume on Monday," CTU President Jacqueline Vaughn said following the vote.

Rank-and-file members of the teachers union will vote on the pact Thursday.

Reagan faces tough year-end decisions

By Norman D. Sander
United Press International

WASHINGTON - The holiday spirit so evident at the White House these days belies simmering divisions within the administration over two issues that will consume President Reagan's attention as the new year begins.

With official Washington easing into a traditional end-of-the-year lull, Reagan still faces crucial decisions on how to proceed toward his top domestic and foreign policy objectives: a deficit-reduction agreement with Congress and arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Both will be the subject of meetings at the White House this week. And both pit various factions within the administration against one another, with Reagan predisposed so far to serve as listener rather than referee - the final arbiter.

Reagan has taken issue with the widespread reports of division and disagreement within his administration, blaming them on news leaks that "are without solid foundation."

But in private, his own aides make no secret of the difficulty the president and his advisers have encountered in developing proposals to present to Congress on the fiscal 1985 budget and to the Kremlin on arms control.

Late last week, Reagan appeared headed for a clash with Congress over military spending as White House officials hinted he may side with Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and resist sharp cutbacks in the Pentagon budget for the next three years.

Such a move would run counter to the advice of budget director David Stockman, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and others in the administration, as well as the counsel of Republicans on Capitol Hill, who have put Reagan on notice that his ambitious plan to cut $200 deficits in half by 1988 will go nowhere if he does not demonstrate up front that the Pentagon will share the burden of fiscal restraint.

One official said Reagan, committed to continue the pace of his military buildup, is inclined to side with Weinberger's plan for $1.1 trillion in spending over the next three years - down just $19 billion from his original request, compared to $121 billion in reductions proposed by Stockman.

The Pentagon similarly has dug in its heels in deliberations on what the United States will - or should - offer the Soviet Union during the upcoming meeting between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and any subsequent revival of formal arms control negotiations.

Administration sources said the Pentagon and State Department have been at odds over negotiating strategy. The extent to which the United States will

Residents take up search for slayer

GERONIMO, Okla. (UPI) - With four of their neighbors shot to death on the floor of the bank, the citizens of Geronimo are frightened and angry and arm themselves.

"Everybody's really upset and wanting to get the guy," said Ronnie Dye. He said people in the quiet southwest Oklahoma hamlet are bolting their doors, fearing the man is still around.

"Even the paperboys are carrying guns," Dye said. Christmas lights were turned off in mourning for the victims of the robbery Friday.

Funeral services for three of the four slain are scheduled for today. The fourth is to be buried Tuesday.

Law enforcement officials said they have no idea which way the bandit fled. FBI spokesman Gene Pogue said no vehicles have been reported stolen in the area since the killings, nor had officers found the car the suspect was driving. He said the search was being confined to the state's southwest corner, particularly Comanche County, though Texas authorities had been alerted to be on the lookout for the car and the suspect.

Officers were checking out many calls from citizens, Pogue said.

"We're following up every lead we can get ahold of," said a dispatcher for the Comanche County sheriff's department.

Two national guard helicopters and an airplane from the highway patrol were used in the search Sunday, Pogue said.

Tony Daniels, special agent in charge at the Lawton FBI office, said they did not plan on using the aircraft today unless a new lead came to light.

Heavy rain hampered search efforts Saturday, but skies cleared Sunday and about 100 law enforcement officers continued their hunt.

Disturbing possibilities along the border

By Tom Tiede

MOORE'S, N.Y. — Members of the U.S. Border Patrol were given a sobering surprise not long ago when they stopped a motorist who was trying to sneak across the border from Canada. The motorist was Christina Burster, a convicted member of Germany's notorious Bader-Meinhold terrorist organization.

She said she just wanted to visit friends in America.

The woman was quickly deported. But the incident hangs on as a truly disturbing reminder of a generally unpublicized national dilemma. The U.S. boundary is as porous in the north as it is in the south, and more and more people are seeping into the country from Canada as well as from Mexico.

In fact, the situation here is in some ways worse than it is on the Rio Grande. At least in terms of potential risks. Most of the millions who cross the border illegally from Mexico are only looking for jobs; many of the thousands who come from Canada, however, are said to be criminals or worse.

CHRISTINA BURSTER IS AN EXAMPLE. The Border Patrol authorities say the Bader-Meinhold gang has been linked with dozens of politically inspired and often brutal acts of terrorism, including kidnapping and assassination; they say Miss Burster is probably one of the most dangerous women in the world.

They also say she's one of the most careful. And that may be why she tried to get into the country from the north. The border authorities admit that the line that runs between the United States and Canada is so thoroughly secured and so tightly guarded, that in most places it doesn't exist as a barrier at all.

The reason is its size. The boundary stretches from 5,325 miles, from Maine to Alaska, from Nova Scotia to the Yukon. The line crosses the Great Lakes, the impenetrable forests and the empty wilderness areas, and there has never been a way to, say, plant a fence across the whole of North America.

There's never been a will to do it, either. The United States and Canada are among the most historically friendly and interlinked nations on earth. The border has never been sealed for any reason, and it has not been patrolled by troops since the two nations fought a few uneventful battles in the War of 1812.

TODAY MORE THAN 30 MILLION PEOPLE cross the line annually. Most of them with little more than a wave. The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service does maintain 127 official entry stations, where visitors may be stopped briefly for questioning, but normally it's just a formality.

And even that formality can be avoided. Because the single officer on duty goes home when the sun disappears. Travelers do not even have to slow down; they can negotiate the lonely road that crosses the border and be lost in the United States in a few short minutes.

Most people may not choose to do that, of course. Particularly the law-abiding travelers. There is a notice at the Moore's crossing that directs late night visitors to the nearest 24-hour entry station, and the border patrol says that it maintains technical equipment that can tell if the notice is obeyed.

FOR ONE THING, the authorities have seeded the road at Moore's with traffic sensors that signal the direction of every car that passes the line. They have also installed low light television at some junctions that are monitored by officials who can dispatch the police when necessary.

But the techniques have a limited effect. And many officials note that they are all but useless against criminal aliens. The redoubtable Miss Burster was nabbed when she drove into the country through a closed entry portal, but the main reason was that U.S. officers had advanced warning.

OTHERWISE MISS BURSTER might have made it. And that's a considerable concern for border officials. No one knows how many thugs are getting over the line free these days. But Stan McKinley, the regional INS director, says, "One is too many — we shouldn't take chances where terrorists are concerned."

McKinley says he would thus like to double the size of the border patrol force in his sector (there are only 100 officers to cover the line from New York state to the Atlantic Ocean). He says he would then be able to staff all of his entry stations around the clock and seven days a week.

He concedes it's just a dream, however. Money is tight, and the INS has been thinking about cutting back rather than expanding the northern watch. So the risks here will continue. The next time Christina Burster tries to get into the United States from Canada, she may succeed; who knows, perhaps she's already here.

Roaches and our lawmakers

WASHINGTON — Capitol Hill is overrun with pests — and they're not all lobbyists, noisy reporters or demanding constituents.

Cockroaches infest the Capitol and the House and Senate office buildings — even the newer ones.

It's not that Congress has ignored the problem. It has contracted with exterminators for years. But in the peculiar, penny-pinching way of people with billions to spend, the honorable members are too cheap to pay for a proper job.

The current contract, with Entech Inc., pays $2,000 a month for supposedly keeping roaches out of the hundreds of offices, suites and hideaways in the nine buildings and surrounding grounds that comprise the steadily growing Capitol complex.

Gene Budowski, president of Entech, told my reporter Scott Barrett that a more realistic figure would be $5,000 to $6,200 a month, and other exterminators familiar with the job agree.

LIKE ABE LINCOLN'S legendary hero being ridden out of town on a rail, Budowski indicated that if it weren't for the honor of the thing, he'd just as soon skip it. Though acknowledging that the Capitol job was a "prestige account," he said he wouldn't bid on it again — not at Congress's prices, anyway.

There are other problems besides congressional stinginess that are peculiar to the job. For one thing, Budowski's crews are only allowed to spray for vermin by request — instead of doing so on a more effective, regular basis.

For another thing, Budowski, like his predecessors, has found that many members of Congress and their staffs are uncooperative. Maybe they realize how little Entech is being paid, and figure that any company that gets only about $15 an hour can't have much clout.

At any rate, few congressional employees are willing or able to authorize the exterminators to move books and papers so they can spray the cracks and crannies where the little six-legged rascals lurk. "It's very frustrating because it's so simple," Budowski said.

Furthermore, Budowski claims — and this may shock some of you who've read about fancy, three-Campari lunches in Washington — that many congressional staffers eat lunch at their desks and keep snacks in their desk drawers for emergencies. Crumbs and forgotten leftovers are the meat and potatoes of the cockroach community.

ANOTHER HEADACHE stems from the fact that the buildings' cafeterias and kitchens are in the jurisdiction of another exterminating firm, and there's no coordination between the two assault teams. As one former contractor explained, food carts being wheeled through the corridors to catered events pick up roaches in the kitchens, and the nervous little hitchhikers peel off along the way in search of new fields to conquer.

It's barely possible that help will arrive with the new Congress next month. Rep.-elect Tom DeLay, R-Texas, is an exterminator by trade, and was understandably appalled at the number of roaches he saw slithering around the office he's using temporarily in the 31-year-old Longworth Building.

"There were no roaches in the Texas Capitol," he said.

Before he learned the financial realities of life as a congressional exterminator, DeLay cracked to a reporter, "I could make a fortune here if it wasn't a conflict of interest." But when told what the job pays, he hedged: "I'd have to survey the situation before I would do it for $2,000 (a month)."

Will he, then, try to remedy the roach problem by raising the ante? No doubt remembering the conservative constituents who sent him to Washington, DeLay said, "I can't say I'm going to work for more (appropriations) money." That he explained, is "a typical government solution: Throw money at the problem."

Disunited Way

Americans in 1984, for the first time, will have donated more than $2 billion to less fortunate citizens through the United Way, according to projections.

The nation's leading charitable organization has come a long way since 1887 when two ministers, a priest and a rabbi plotted their efforts in Denver, Colo., to care for sick, impoverished gold miners. Charitable giving has declined only once since then during the Great Depression.

If tax proposals announced by Treasury Secretary Donald Regan become law, however, the impact on charitable giving could be, in the words of a United Way official, "devastating."

The proposals would eliminate deductions to non-itemizers — the same people who donate most of the money to the 2,200 local United Ways," said Steve Deffin of United Way. "Under the new tax structure, 80 percent of Americans will be non-itemizers with no tax incentive to give."

The federal government has made significant cuts in many social welfare programs, and has asked us to take up the slack," Deffin said. "They'll make it hard for us to do so if these proposals become law."

Creche display

For the first time in 12 years, a nativity scene has been added to the federal government's Christmas display on the Ellipse behind the White House. But not without protest.

"We think it is bad public policy," said David Gordis, executive vice president of the American Jewish Committee. He said it is an "ominous" sign, another "crossing of the line" separating church and state.

Gordis, whose views were echoed by Lutheran, Episcopal and Unitarian officials, said the display of the creche portrays America as a Christian nation and "makes non-Christians feel like outsiders."

A nativity scene had been part of the government display until 1973, when a U.S. court ruled that it violated First Amendment guarantees against government establishment of religion. The Supreme Court, however, cleared the way for the creche by ruling last March that a Pawtucket, R.I., display could include a nativity scene.

Meanwhile, as Washington's religious community was warring over the display, all was calm and bright across the street. Among other holiday decorations in the East Room of the White House is an 18th century Italian creche.

Don't tax me

"We're not being taxed too little, we're spending too much."

So says J. Peter Grace, the nation's leading crusader against government waste, who also opposes the Treasury's tax plan. Grace's sentiment may apply to a lot of others, but not to his own company, W.R. Grace.

According to the New Republic, W.R. Grace has paid no taxes for the past two years, despite profits of $340 million. "In fact, the company said $53 million of unneeded tax credits in 1982, and had $25 million saved up against future taxes at the end of last year," the magazine said.

Grace's strong opposition to new taxes is reminiscent of a ditty heard in Washington: "Don't tax me, don't tax thee, tax the man behind the tree."

Is Tip O'Neill cooling off?

By Robert Shepard

WASHINGTON — It would be overstating things to suggest that House Speaker Thomas O'Neill is mellowing, but some of his recent comments show he recognizes the changing political currents flowing through Congress and is prepared to work with them.

It may also be that the 72-year-old O'Neill would like to see his final term in Congress marked by party unity rather than by the ideological battles that have bedeviled the Democrats since Ronald Reagan swept into the White House four years ago.

O'Neill's attitude and approach became an issue last week as the House Democrats met to organize for the 99th Congress and Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, leader of the conservative "Boll Weevils" Democrats, threatened to run against O'Neill as leader.

Stenholm suggested the Democratic Party, under the leadership of traditional liberals such as O'Neill, had fallen into disfavor with the voters and that conservatives should have a greater voice in the party.

STENHOLM BOWED OUT of the race, however, after he met with O'Neill and the speaker agreed to give the conservatives more representation in the leadership councils.

O'Neill, talking with reporters later, acknowledged the conservatives have been somewhat ignored by the more liberal House leadership and that they represent a growing constituency.

"I recognize the fact that in our party there are four philosophies. There's a liberal, progressive, moderate and a conservative. The liberal has been shrinking every day," he said.

"As I read the Congress, the liberals have slipped to progressives, the progressives have slipped to moderates and moderates have slipped to conservatives and Americans are moving to the center," O'Neill said.

Asked if the House Democrats as a whole were becoming more conservative, O'Neill replied: "There's no question of it.... All America is moving toward the center. No question of it."

BUT O'NEILL SAID there is room in the Democratic Party for all the factions.

"All these factions came into our party under the days of Roosevelt. It's one big umbrella with conservatives, moderates, liberals, progressives under one tent and I don't want to have any of them leave the party."

Over the past four years many of the conservative "Boll Weevils" voted with the Republicans on key issues more often than with their fellow Democrats, and a few went so far as to formally switch to the GOP. O'Neill claimed not to mourn their departure, the defections were an embarrassment and probably not something he wants to see continued during his final term as Democratic leader.

IN HIS SPEECH to the caucus following his re-election as Democratic leader, O'Neill noted that Americans voted "overwhelmingly against" making a change in the White House and said the election revealed "many disturbing trends."

"Republican strength among young voters, Southern whites, blue collar workers and Hispanics poses a serious problem for our party," he said, adding, "We know we must find some new themes and some new directions for our party."

For his part, O'Neill pledged to "do all that I can to promote unity and consensus within the caucus."

"Our party is a party of many philosophies. Our diversity is our greatest strength but it is also the source of great tension," O'Neill said.

Adding a significant conciliatory note, he said those tensions "should not be the reason for closing the door on any group in our party whether it is on the right or the left. We need to listen to all our Democratic colleagues."

Manchester school funds could rise

Manchester's public schools could gain $469,461 more in state education aid next year, according to projections from the state Department of Education.

The increase in Guaranteed Tax Base funds is about what town officials expected, General Manager Robert B. Weiss said today. Under the projected GTB plan, Manchester's schools would receive $6,266,016 in 1985-86 — or $469,461 more than this year.

"I think we were kind of expecting something in that range," Weiss said. "We're very happy that it's not in the other direction, like it has for some other towns."

Hartford public schools would lose more than $3 million and Waterbury schools about a million, under the projected plan. State officials say the decline was mainly the result of fewer local tax dollars being spent on schools and a drop in the number of children qualifying for state welfare aid.

Andover, Coventry and Bolton would each receive a considerable GTB increase, according to projections. Education aid in these three towns is expected to be:

- Andover, $464,604, up $61,293.
- Bolton, $530,624, up $35,201.
- Coventry, $1,988,506, up $38,849.

The projections are based on the assumption that the state will pay 100 percent of the tax base formula. It currently pays only 95 percent. Other changes could result if the General Assembly votes to support the state Board of Education's plan to assume about half the education costs in Connecticut towns.

Soviet's attitude brings skepticism in London

By Arthur Herman
United Press International

LONDON — Soviet Politburo member Mikhail Gorbachev, fresh from "very friendly" conversations on arms control with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, met with British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe today.

The Times of London said the two men met for almost three hours. British officials called the talks "very friendly."

A British source said Gorbachev and Thatcher "talked at length about the whole of arms control negotiations."

They are as concerned as we are about preventing the arms race in space," he said. "Both expressed a clear interest in avoiding an arms race in space."

"Summit of Smiles," headlined the Daily Express.

But in its lead editorial, the Times said the cordial Soviet attitude was nothing but the time-worn technique of Soviet diplomacy, whose traditional tenet of foreign policy is to exploit real potential divisions within the Western alliance.

"The change of technique which we are now witnessing is merely a recognition of changed circumstances," the Times said.

A British source rejected suggestions that Thatcher was indirectly criticizing President Reagan's new space technology, which is known as "Star Wars" strategy. She supported the U.S. negotiating position while expressing concern over nuclear weapons in space.

The APC West was decided Saturday when Denver's 31-14 victory over Seattle made the Browns division champs and left the Seahawks to host the Raiders in the wild card game.

At Cincinnati, Ken Anderson fired three touchdown passes in the first half to spark the Bengals toward their ultimately meaningless win. The Bengals sealed the victory with a pair of last-quarter pass interceptions, runbacks for touchdowns. John Simmons had a 43-yarder and James Griffin a 52-yarder.

Buffalo finished with the NFL's worst record at 2-14.

At Tampa, Fla., Steve DeBerg threw for three TDs and James Wilder ran for two scores and set an NFL record with 407 carries in a season to help retiring Buc coach John McKay go out a winner. New York, 7-9, lost seven of its last eight.

At Atlanta, Dave Archer, a third-string quarterback, scored his touchdown and set another to help the Falcons, 4-12, end a nine-game losing streak. The Eagles, who learned they are not moving to Phoenix, Ariz., finished 6-9.

At San Diego, Bill Kenney threw for three touchdowns to help the Chiefs score the first 42 points. The Packers finished 3-13.

Bid war forced company to shave shipbuilding costs

The sources close to the House probe headed by Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., said investigators would look for any connection between Pierce's silence and the payment.

Velitius, whose stream of allegations have hit his former employer from his death charges, alleged that he first investigated in 1982. He said that he had left the company in 1982.

In suits seeking to recover the alleged kickback money, the company and the government froze more than $6.5 million of Velitius' assets.

While assisting prosecutors and an FBI agent since last spring, Velitius has taken the division if Pittsburgh lost.

"I feel drained," Bengals coach Sam Wyche said after a 17-10 victory. "It's a very empty feeling. I had thought Los Angeles would win, but Pittsburgh just shared in $2 million in kickbacks from a subcontractor while running the company's Quincy, Mass., shipyard in the 1970s. In suits seeking to recover the alleged kickback money, the company and the government froze more than $6.5 million of Velitius' assets.

While assisting prosecutors and an FBI agent since last spring, Velitius has taken the division if Pittsburgh lost.

"I feel drained," Bengals coach Sam Wyche said after a 17-10 victory. "It's a very empty feeling. I had thought Los Angeles would win, but Pittsburgh just shared in $2 million in kickbacks from a subcontractor while running the company's Quincy, Mass., shipyard in the 1970s. Velitius had left the company in 1982.
