Cost-efficient move

Direct mail earns its keep

ST. LOUIS — The owner of a luxury condominium complex on the Guif Coast plans to market its $290,000 homes with a 10-month direct mail campaign aimed at people with a minimum annual salary of $100,000. Hart Schaffner & Marx, which owns 250 clothing stores that traditionally appeal to older men and women, used a main reason one-third of the domestic es consciousness of college juniors and seniors going on their first job interviews and at the same time change their stores' stodgy image.

Why a direct mail campaign? In addition to being an effective form of advertising, today's direct mail advertising is cost-efficient because it advertising is cost-efficient because it allows a company to reach the people most likely to buy its product. Ad people turn to shopping malls

By Sarah Stiansen United Press International

NEW YORK — For some people, shopping malls mean fountains and Fanny Farmer candy stores, Spencer Gift shops and talking Christmas trees.

But for Joel Benson, president and founder of Shopping Center Network, malls have translated into millions, as the former reall director walls him. the former mall director sells his organized mail promotions to national Pitching products in indoor malls sn't exactly a new idea — car makers, boat sellers and orchid growers have been showing off for shoppers for years. But Benson, by forming a network of 1,700 mails around the country, makes it possible for major companies to sponsor mail events on a national scale rather than on a mall-by-mall basis. "Shopping mails are really the new Main Street of America," said Lance Westerlund, manager of marketing, westeriund, manager of marketing, special projects for Chevrolet, whose company spends about $2 million a year in shopping mall activities.

Shopping Center Network's clients run a gamut of consumer products and services companies, from Prudential Insurance Co. of America to James B. Bearn, Distilling Co. to Proceed & Beam Distilling Co. to Procter & Gamble, the largest national advertiser in the United States.

Most of those companies have multi- SCN cus million dollar advertising budgets, but alternative promotional plans — such as mall events — are finding increas-ingly large portions of advertising and "I take advertising, turn it into entertainment and the shoppers love it," Benson said. The themes of his promotions - sort of like old-fashioned sampling pavil-lions at County Fairs — are geared to various demographic groups for spe-cific advertisers. You," an event for women, a Food and Beverage Exposition, sports shows and children's promotions — even something called "A Salute to Mature Americans," which reached 5.5 million s last tour.

The sponsor companies pay a fee and provide Benson's staff with samples or literature to distribute to shoppers and Benson's Miami-based company designs the exhibits, arranges for truck-ing and staffs the booths.

OPINION

Richard M. Diamond, Publisher Douglas A. Bevins, Managing Editor James P. Sacks, City Editor

Weicker's name almost a no-no in Hartford

Maybe the old saying, "absence makes the heart grow fonder," works for young lovers. But where U.S. Sen. Lowell Weicker and many Republicans in the state Legislature were concerned this year, it was a lot of baloney. Weicker's absence during the General Assembly that adjourned last week was just fine with them. Conservatives, who are strong in the Legislature now, don't consider Weicker to be a real Republican in performance. Others who are jealous of their turf at the Capitol simply don't want him calling any of the shots there, even directly through GOP State Chairman Tom

The extent and depth of anti-Weicker feeling in GOP ranks has been one of the surprising but nmistakable developments of the year at the Capitol. It isn't likely to go away. Ironically, some Republicans see their chances for re-election next ear depending on Weicker's presence on the ballot. But at the moment, his name is almost a

The issue now is what this reaction to the state's ranking Republican will mean as the party hoping to retain its majority in Hartford moves toward

America must change course on Nicaragua

"No one should be deceived by the word 'nonmilitary."

That's what former National Security Adviser McGeorge Bundy had to say about the Senate's vote Friday to award $38 million in "non-military" aid to the Contras trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government.

Without such a restriction on the use of the funds, we don't think the aid measure would have gone far on Capitol Hill. And even with its inclusion, the plan should go no farther. As Bundy, writing in The New York Times, warned this week: "If the House should agree, this money will be used to pay for everything short of weapons and bullets, and the rest of the needed funds will be sought in places it would be embarrassing to explore.' Bundy, who was national security adviser to Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson, has reached the conclusion that the not-so-covert action the Reagan administration is sponsoring in Nicaragua "is doomed to failure." As one of the architects of the Bay of Pigs invasion and other CIA operations, he is in a position to know. It is long past time that the American people paused to think about whether conducting a naphazard, illegal military operation in Nicaragua is in our national interest. The time for introspection is now - before we blunder into a regional war or help install some CIA-created government to "derevolutionize" Nicaragua by whatever means it sees fit. The Senate vote on the aid measure, like most other recent actions by the U.S. toward Central America, falls into the "knee-jerk"

In part, it came as a shallow response to President Reagan's description of Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega as "the little dictator who went to Moscow in his fatigues." If the House unwisely approves the measure in a vote scheduled for today, it will encourage the administration to continue avoiding its responsibility to develop a coherent policy to deal with the situation in Central America. Paying a group of mercenaries for their deadly skills will do nothing to promote peace in that troubled region, which should be this country's foremost goal.

Should Nicaragua demonstrably become a base for Soviet destabilization in this hemisphere, the United States would be forced to seriously consider its options, ruling out none of them.

But as yet, the only thing emanating from Washington is a stream of unproven and emotional rhetoric against communism, which, as Bundy points out, actually drives the Sandinistas further toward "Marxism-

The rhetoric is reflected by a strategy that does nothing to promote pluralism or democracy in Nicaragua. The Contra aid measure would simply continue that trend. Whatever the fate of the $38 million in aid. roponents of continuing the covert campaign to overthrow the Sandinistas need to be subjected to some harsh questioning, particularly by their constituents.

Before there is no turning back, the administration and its legislative supporters must be forced to change their course. Rather than relying on CIA-sponsored violence, the United States should seek to formulate a viable plan to pressure the Nicaraguans toward a more open society, using the Contadora process and other legitimate means.

Weicker says he may seek the GOP nomination for president in 1988, but in the next breath concedes his changes are about zero. Capitol

MEANWHILE, THE DISENCHANTMENT with Weicker in the GOP raises a question of whether it is too late, no matter what he decides. Weicker has made it tougher on himself by refusing to leave any door open a crack.

He is too smart a politician to put himself in that kind of a bind, so we repeat our earlier observation that we don't always believe his every

Although he is having one of his best years in Washington, Weicker continues to say he loves Connecticut more. He keeps in constant touch with D'Amore and knows exactly what is happening here. Don't think for a moment that Weicker was an uninformed bystander when the moves to change officers at the top of the party were made - involving Betsee Osborn of Fairfield as vice chairman to replace Barbara Brown of Preston on

Still, the anti-Weicker crowd at the State Capitol dislikes him intensely. One demonstration of that feeling came on the next to last day of the session. At issue was a bill to raise registration fees for trucks and to ease the state tax on diesel fuel.

Notably, House Speaker R.E. Van Norstrand of Darien, who is cool on Weicker, and Majority eader Bob Jackle of Stratford voted against it. So a key to Weicker's status in his party and its outlook next year if he continues as leader or candiate lies in whether legislators who dislike nim reflect a changing attitude in most of the party, which he doubts, and much of the electorate. If they do, the party has problems.

Help educators fight for adequate funding

The following is an open letter to the Bolton Board of Education, the administrators, teachers, and other staff in all of Thanks for a job well done! Again this year you have managed to do so much, with

The Board of Education is presently charged with the responsibility of determining which programs it must cut within the school budget. It must make those cuts so that it can operate within the strict limits of the town budget mandate. That townwide budget was presented by the Board of Finance, and ratified in a townwide referendum on May 20. Each member of the Board of Education fought hard to keep the deep cuts, imposed by the Board of Finance, and the voters who ratified the reduced budget, from becoming a reality. That is

The fact that programs must, of necessity, be cut back brought out many parents and teachers to the Board of Education meeting on June 6. Every one of the programs being considered for cuts (Art, Foreign Language, Industrial Arts, Gifted Students, and others) have great merit, and will adversely affect many children, my children. To the parents and teachers whose children, programs, and in fact livelihoods will be affected by these cuts, I would say: Get angry, stay angry, but channel your anger into a positive force that will work towards raising public awareness, and influencing public opinion.

Strike out against the apathy that exists in this community towards adequate funding for schools at all grade levels in this town. Instead of fighting against the Board of Education on this issue, fight alongside them. Together we must all take responsibility for assuring that there will be adequate funding for the maintenance, and continued growth of the school system, for kindergarten through 12th grade.

that there is great value in a solid public educational system. If each of us accepts that responsibility, there will be no need to a meeting next year to protest program cuts. If we do not each accept that responsibility. no doubt there will need to be just such a

DOWN ON THE STRAWBERRY FARM

Greet the short-but-sweet strawberry season with a new version of everybody's favorite creamcheese pie. Topped with real-cream topping and crowned with plump fresh strawberries, the pie is layered with a blend of real-cream topping and cream cheese, and a "berry-red" strawberry pureed fruit mixture. It's an easy do-shead dessert. To assure that berries stay fresh, strawberry growers recommend that you wash, hull and slice as close to serving as possible. Berries are perishable and need to be handled gently. If farmers quote their prices in pounds, remember there are approximately 14 quarts in a pound of strawberries. So 60 cents per pound equals 40 cents per quart. Toward the end of the season, prices often drop another 10 cents per quart, as growers run what they refer to as "jam-makers specials." This is an effort to get the last of the large, somewhat over-ripe berries out of the fields. Make a few telephone calls during the first week of July to find your best deals. You will have to buy a minimum of 10 pounds in order to qualify for the

Pat Hurst, the owner of Hurst Berry Farm in Andover, acknowledges that, at 70 cents per quart, her berries are the highest-priced of the pick-your-owns. She says she has to charge more because this farm uses no chemical herbicides or Even at 70 cents per quart, you can buy two freshly-picked quarts for far less than you'd pend on one box of supermarket berries with te

And you'll probably enjoy the outing, as well. It's fun to get into the fields — as long as the day isn't a scorcher. Even an amateur can pick about 16 quarts in an hour, said Diane Zeppa Kuzmickas of Zeppa Farms on Birch Mountain Road. For the first 15 minutes or so, people generally eat almost as many berries as they put into their cartons; then the serious work begins.

Here's some fashion advice for first-time pickers: Wear a light-colored hat to keep the sun from sauteing your cranium. Don't wear your favorite, light-colored jogging shoes; it's nearly mpossible to get berry stains out of suede an nylon. Finally, be sure your children wear red slacks — not shorts. That way, the inevitable red stains on their knees will blend right in. All of the farms suggest that you call ahead for hours, and condition of the field.

Joel Reich, chairman of Manchester Memorial Hospital's emergency department, acquired his taste for Middle Eastern food and dined in the city's many ethnic Father's Favorite Chocolate Pie The first step in making this meal a success careful selection of the roast beef. If you choose i nicrowaved beef will be more tender and juicy than conventionally cooked.

Consult your butcher if you are a beginning cook. He will tell you from which cut of meat the roast was taken, and whether or not it is a good choice for the cooking method you have in mind

Tender beef is dry roasted or grilled on a browning utensil. Less tender beef should be microwave-braised or stewed to develop tenderness and flavor. wning occurs when fat rises to the surface and gets hot enough to carbonize or become partially burnt. In In microwave cooking, a fatty meat which is cooked longer than 10 minutes will develop browning. Large pieces like beef rib, leg of lamb, or turkey breast, wil appear similar to conventionally cooked meats, although their surfaces will not become as uniformly dry. If you wish to encourage more browning, brush the roast with a mixture of Bouquet sauce and melted butter, or Worcestershire, soy or teriyaki sauce. Shielding with foil is recommended for cuts which may overcook is some areas. You may also use foil shielding to protect spots which are browning too fast. While microwaving often reduces shrinkage and moisture losses, shielding can cut losses even more, especially on large, rolled roasts. As the ends of the roasts cook, they firm up and contract, causing the roast to bulge in the middle. Meat fibers separate so juices escape. When the ends are shielded for part of the cooking time, the middle firms up first, and the roast cooks more evenly throughout. Check your microwave cookbook for specific instructions about using alminum foil to shield

Anti-aging diets offer more than is delivered

WASHINGTON - Depending on the theory you subscribe to, it is possible to stretch your lifespan by exercising, avoiding stress, taking vitamin supplements, certain drugs or cutting down on food. These pills and techniques may make you feel better, if only temporarily, but there is n evidence they will add years t your life, said Edward Schneider eputy director of the National

South was right to take the first spade, even though it might not have occurred to East to shift to clubs should he hold the trick with the spade jack. But declarer should have thought it over a bit before rushing to the diamond finesse. This is a deal where a trick must be developed in the short suit first so that the dangerous hand will not have an entry when the spades are established. At trick two, South should play the heart jack or king from his hand. If West takes the ace and clears the spade suit, declarer will be able to safely lose the lead to East later. If West ducks the
