Song in composer's head can't find its way to paper

DEAR ABBY: I am a composer of music — but I don't know the first thing about writing down what I have in my head. I compose the most beautiful songs in my head, but they're lost to the world because I can't get them down on paper.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

I am not a kook. I am a talented musician who never learned how to write music.

Do you know a composer I could call on the telephone and sing these songs to? I am not a great singer, but I whistle very well. Thank you for any help you can offer.

MUSIC IN MY HEAD

DEAR MUSIC: Sorry, I don't know any composers, but there's a school of music in your area, perhaps you could enroll in a course and learn how to translate what's in your head onto paper. Or perhaps someone there could write it down while you whistle. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: My career is in jeopardy, and I need advice fast. I am a sales representative for a giftware distributor, and I attend many trade shows. Lots of hanky-panky goes on among my colleagues, but I don't express my outrage because it's so accepted.

Recently, Mr. X, my company's biggest account, made a pass at me, and when I refused, he

DEAR RICHARD: Finally! For months I've been on a wild (spruce) goose chase trying to locate the elusive spruce gum. I just phoned L.L. Bean in Maine, and I was assured that it was available; so interested parties may phone and put it on their credit cards.

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Ashamed in Amherst," who left her husband and children for a married man. She soon realized she had made a terrible mistake and wanted to die.

Please, please don't despair. I, too, discarded a fine husband and two beautiful children for a man I thought I loved. When life with him became unbearable, I divorced him. I knew I couldn't gain the trust and respect of others until I could respect myself, so I started on that long and lonely road back to self-respect.

I had to change, and change I did, from a selfish, egotistical brat to a mature, responsible woman.

DEAR ABBY: In reading your column in the Pawtucket Evening Times, I see where a man in Portland, Ore., wants to know where he can purchase spruce gum. He said when he played softball about 20 years ago he used to chew spruce gum to keep his mouth from getting dry. He said it came in little round balls and was sold in boxes and was a lot cleaner than chewing tobacco.

Well, there's a store in Freeport, Maine, that sells it. It's open 365 days a year, 24 hours a day. It's L.L. Bean Inc., Freeport, Maine 04032; phone (207) 865-3111.

I hope this helps.
RICHARD COLA, PAWTUCKET, R.I.

DEAR LILIAN: Tell Mr. X to go to H, then file a complaint against him for sexual harassment with your local Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Don't worry about losing your job. Firing a person who files a complaint is against the law, and a company that does so can be charged for retaliation.

Those who take in the Cheney Homestead tour and antique show today can admire the homestead's new exterior paint. The finished job, top, is a far cry from the chipped and peeling paint that Mak Painting Co. workers found when they started the job last fall.

Left, Milton Prentiss nails claphboards to the house. Below, this is the way the house looked when paint was stripped and before a primer coat was applied. The job cost about $8,000. The homestead is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. today.

Doctor goes aboard plane to tend pilot

Israeli actions won't alter Amal position

By David Cowell
United Press International

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A doctor was summoned aboard a hijacked TWA jet today to examine the pilot, who hijackers said was suffering "terrible" stomach pain.

A hijacker demanded an executive jet to fly home to visit friends.

Israel, meanwhile, released 31 of the 784 Lebanese prisoners the hijackers have demanded be freed in exchange for 40 Americans held hostage since the plane was commandeered June 14.

A leader of the Shiite Muslim Amal militia, which has taken charge of negotiating an exchange, said no Americans would be released until all the Lebanese prisoners were freed.

He said the Americans were "having fun" and enjoying "a very, very rich experience."

The Amal official confirmed that Syria, which backs the Amal, has been in contact with Washington to discuss the hostage situation.

A well-placed Arab source in Iran said Syria would ask Iran to help reach an agreement on release of the hostages. Contacted by telephone in the Iranian capital of Teheran, the source said Syrian President Hafiz Assad was expected to make the request during talks in Damascus with the speaker of the Iranian parliament, who arrived in Damascus Sunday.

"The request will never be made public because Iran denies any connection with the hijackers of the TWA plane," the source said.

He said Syria wished to "cool" the situation because it feared the United States and Israel might attack either Lebanon or Syria.

The hijackers are believed to be associated with Hezbollah, a radical Moslem group with close ties to Iran.

A hijacker sought help for Capt. John Testrake, saying the pilot had "terrible" stomach pains. But the doctor asked for an escort before agreeing to go aboard the plane at Beirut Airport.

Members of the Shiite Muslim Amal militia then accompanied Dr. Alfred Zebouni to the red-and-white Boeing 727 in an airport car.

Speaking by radio, the hijacker warned Zebouni not to speak to journalists about Testrake's condition and said if he had anything with him besides medicine he and Testrake would be executed, air traffic controllers reported.

The doctor, chief medical officer for Middle East Airlines, boarded the plane, stayed for a time, then left. He returned a short time later for another visit.

He said nothing to reporters, refusing to comment on speculation that Testrake's stomach pains might be from tension.

One hijacker, apparently deciding that he needed a furlough, asked for an executive jet to fly home to the Bekaa valley, 50 miles east of Beirut.

"I'm thinking of going to the Bekaa to see some friends and relations," the hijacker said.

"Do you have an airport in the Bekaa?" asked the controller. "Yes," answered the hijacker.

Searchers comb sea for survivors

By Daniela Iacono
United Press International

CORK, Ireland — Searchers combing the Atlantic off western Ireland recovered one man today from the air India jet with 329 people aboard that "fell out of the sky" in a suspected terrorist bomb attack.

A total of 121 bodies have been recovered in the 26 hours since the Boeing 747 suddenly vanished off radar screens, plunging nearly 6 miles before crashing into the sea without ever issuing a distress call.

Rescue officials said there was no hope any of the 307 passengers of seven crew members survived.

After daylight broke, four Sea King helicopters from the British Royal Air Force began sweeping a 26-mile-wide area some 120 miles southwest of Ireland for bodies.

They discovered the 131st body but found no signs of life.

"The wreckage is now spread out over 20 miles. There's a lot of debris from the plane, but we saw no bodies," said Flight Lt. Jim Woodburn.

"There are no bodies out there now," affirmed Flight Lt. Ian McFarlane. "Bodies usually float for a day then sink for about three days. The chances of finding anyone alive are extremely remote. But we were just trying to get the head count."

"The bodies are pretty intact. They show high-speed impact with the water," he said.

Most of the 307 passengers and 22 crew aboard Air-India Flight 182, en route from Toronto and Montreal to New Delhi and Bombay, India, were Indians or Canadians. At least eight lived in the United States.

In New Delhi, Air-India Managing Director Dhruba Bose told reporters the airline would fly

Bose said sabotage may have caused the crash but defended security precautions taken prior to the flight.

Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald traveled to Cork to inspect the search-and-rescue operation. He visited Cork Regional Hospital where pathologists began an examination of more than 80 bodies brought there.

"Their work involves the examination of the possibility of criminal action. It will be meticulous and will take some time. That possibility cannot be ignored..." FitzGerald said.

Can sex become addiction?

DEAR DR. GOTT: Please don't think this is a silly question. A friend showed me an article that claimed people can get addicted to sex. Is this true? I love sex and I'm worried. Any advice?

Dr. Gott

Peter Gott, M.D.

DEAR READER: "Addiction" is a poor term to use in explaining people's desire for sexual gratification. The word implies a physical dependency that, by and large, more properly describes a person's need for a chemical compound.

I think a better expression would be "compulsion." This refers to repetitive behavioral patterns that people engage in trying to meet inner needs.

Doctors have traditionally believed that only they and the church are valid determiners of what is "normal" sexual behavior.

If the Kinsey Report and the work by Masters and Johnson had cultural value, it was surely the revelation that "normal" sexual activity encompasses an astounding variety of responses. I doubt that many practicing physicians today would have the nerve to define sexuality in narrow terms.

However, some points are worth emphasizing. Sex that exploits another person is not good sex, nor is sex that is dangerous or harmful to others. If people "use" sex, that attitude can be counterproductive. Sometimes people use orgasmic release as a way to cope with anxiety. Such anxiety is more appropriately handled by addressing its cause, rather than using sex as a temporary respite.

If I were you, I would stop worrying about sex. That worry itself may add to your level of apprehension. Masturbating three times a day won't physically harm you, unless your genitals become sore and irritated. However, I wonder if your time might be spent in more useful and productive activity.

You may have begun to suspect that your masturbation is taking on the qualities of a compulsion. If so, you might consider whether you want to be a victim of your behavior. I suspect that you would feel better about yourself if you expended more energy in growth-promoting activities at work, at school or with your friends. If that fails, try cold showers.

DEAR READER: Most, but not all, diuretics cause potassium depletion. Your doctor or pharmacist can advise you if the one you are taking is a potassium-waster.

Depending on the amount of diuretic you use, high-potassium foods may supply enough of the mineral to satisfy your needs.

Kids with rare birth defect need padlocked refrigerators

WINDSOR LOCKS (UPI) — Padlocking the refrigerator is the standard recourse for parents of children who because of a rare birth defect never feel full no matter how much they eat, experts say.

There is no cure in sight for those suffering from Prader-Willi Syndrome, and without the padlock, parents and professionals working at the University of Connecticut Health Center. "Parents get stuck on the idea that the only way to help is to restrict their child's food," Stranaki said.

The syndrome was first described by three Swiss physicians in 1956, but specialists said identifying Prader-Willi victims among other mentally retarded patients remains difficult.

Babies born with the condition are weak, have trouble suckling and parents spend the first few months struggling to feed their infant.

"Feeding becomes a reward," explained Dr. Suzanne Cassidy, an assistant professor of pediatrics at the University of Connecticut Health Center. "Parents get stuck on the idea that the only way to help is to restrict their child's food," Stranaki said.

By adolescence, too much eating becomes the problem, Cassidy said. While the parents try to keep food away, neighbors or visiting relatives slip the child extra food.

"It's hard to say no to a little cute fat kid," Cassidy said.

While experts said rigid dietary control is the only way to improve the lives of the victims, they acknowledge it is difficult to achieve because in addition to an inability to stop eating, victims are mentally retarded and often throw tantrums when frustrated.

Exactly what causes the condition is unknown.

Researchers are looking for a drug to control eating, but none has been found.

Meanwhile, parents talk about stronger padlocks and ways to hide food.

Paul Stranaki of Woodstock recalled his son Brian was snatching food out of the refrigerator, out of the garbage, and took extra food at the school cafeteria as a teenager.

Brian soon reached 300 pounds, his father said, adding, "Who else would eat a bowl full of cold corn or cold string beans? He ate everything."

The Stranakis eventually put a padlock on the refrigerator and locks on the cabinets.

"We wrestled with the idea for a couple of years," Stranaki said.

Wife's whereabouts unknown Sakharov kin sees new hunger strike

By Jim Rattray
United Press International
CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov has been readmitted to a Gorky hospital after resuming a hunger strike, but the whereabouts of his wife, Yelena Bonner, is unknown, the Nobel Peace Prize winner's stepdaughter says.

The stepdaughter, Tatyana Yankelevich, addressing the national conference of Amnesty International at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Sunday, also said Soviet authorities had resumed force-feeding the "nuclear physicist at Semashko Hospital."

Yankelevich said the letter had been translated before she received it, and certain words had been deleted. She said she expects to get the original letter soon.

The letter said Sakharov was first admitted to the hospital on May 7, 1984. Four days later, officials began force-feeding the dissident, first with intravenous and then through a nose tube, the letter said.

Festival features variety

A shuttle vehicle carried passengers from the Cheney Hall area to the Ribbon Mill and back to Cheney Hall, center of the day's activities.

Members of the Little Theater of Manchester, in period costumes, gave tours of Cheney Hall, which is being renovated to serve as it did in the heyday of the Cheney family, as the center of community activities.

As she walked down the center of the hall, one woman said, "I was in a play here for the Gamewire Girls."

James McLoughlin of Strickland Street said that in 1923 he played a part in a Cheney Hall presentation of "The Gypsy Queen," with Sock and Buskin, the dramatic group of what was then South Manchester High School. A friend, Marjorie McMenemy, said she too had performed at the hall when she was a Campfire Girl.

Some who came to see the Buster Keaton film out of historic curiosity ended up being genuinely entertained and impressed. The plot involves a trail chase with some deadpan slapstick incidents along the route.

The train chase involves the coupling and uncoupling of cars, bumping of cars to sidetracks, and defeating of railroad switches, the devices that have served movie makers admirably since the 1927 film.

It was difficult for at least this viewer to take his mind off the film to pay attention to the piano accompaniment by Miller, probably a tribute to Miller's subtle skill.

But it was obvious that when an axe struck three times against the roof of a railroad car, three arresting tones came from the piano in perfect synchronization with the blows.

A number of viewers shook hands with Miller after the 3 p.m. performance and thanked him. The film was donated by William White of Willimantic.

Historian tells of Cheneys

John Sutherland, director of the Institute of Local History at Manchester Community College, sought to dispel the myths about the Cheneys on Saturday.

He discussed Cheney Brothers Inc. as a textile empire that the Cheneys as a family when he gave a slide show presentation as part of the Cheney Historic District festival.

Sutherland gave the presentation three times in an improvised theater in what will become the lobby of the Ribbon Mill Apartments on Pine Street.

Sutherland told his audiences that many people have approached him and said they worked for Cheney Bros. But unless someone worked at the mill before 1935, Sutherland said, he did not really work for Cheney.

It was in 1935 that the Cheney family sold the mill operation. Less than a year later, that employment had plunged from 2,800 to 600.

Sutherland said that while the Cheney family's widely discussed benevolence was motivated in part by concern for its workers, it was also motivated by self-interest. He said competition for labor in textiles was stiff and that Cheney's textile plant was in competition with silk mills in Paterson, N.J.

Old records show evidence that the Manchester and Paterson companies came close to pirating each other's help.

Sutherland also said the Cheneys' benevolence in establishing schools, community centers and utilities did not extend to the North End, which had to provide for itself. He said that was a historic development that is echoed by today's cross-town tensions.

Sutherland said that Cheney Bros. hired hundreds of workers who had nothing to do directly with the production of textiles — loom fixers, machinists, electricians and utility workers.

Because the railroad ran through town in the North End instead of the southern part of town, where the Cheney facilities were located, the company established what was called the smallest private railroad in the country, one that ran from the North End to the mill area.

He said immigrants came from various European countries to work at Cheney Bros. He said, for example, the Kerry Street, off Union Street, is named for County Kerry in Ireland.

Sutherland said a descendant of the Cheney's who had lived in one of the Cheney mansions told him that as a child in bed she could tell from the kind of music she heard and the smell of the food which ethnic group had rented Cheney Hall for an evening.

Court to hear libel case

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court agreed today to consider whether a newspaper bears the burden of proof in a libel suit brought by a private figure.

The court will hear arguments next term in a case brought by Philadelphia Newspapers Inc., which publishes the Philadelphia Inquirer. Operators of a beer and beverage company claimed the paper libeled them in articles that alleged the operators had links to organized crime.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, which recently won Pulitzer Prizes for photography and investigative reporting, has been the target of many libel suits, including separate actions filed by state Supreme Court Justices James McDermott and Rolf Larsen.

Central in the beverage distributors case is the question of who bears the burden of proof in libel suits by private figures. The Philadelphia Inquirer states out the burden of proof on the publishers, while some jurisdictions place the burden on the person bringing the suit. In some areas there has been no legal decision either way.

In contrast, a person deemed to be a public figure, such as a politician or entertainer, has a much more difficult task in bringing a libel suit. Not only must they prove a publication false, but that the false material was published with malice, or published with the knowledge it was false.

Madonna to marry Penn?

NEW YORK — Rock star Madonna plans to marry movie star Sean Penn in August, the New York Daily News reported today.

The report, by entertainment columnist "Suzie," noted the couple has been "an item for months" and said the wedding is planned for August, as soon as Penn finishes shooting his new picture, "At Close Range," in Atlanta.

No comment from Penn or Madonna was immediately available.

The report said Madonna, born Madonna Louise Ciccone, and Penn, both 24, also plan to star in a movie, "Pipeline," set in the Alaskan oil fields.

Lawmakers want justice out

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — At least two state lawmakers believe Rhode Island should have a new state Supreme Court chief justice.

The report, by Senate Minority Leader Jonathan Farnum, R-Coventry, and Sen. Robert Motherway, R-North Kingstown, this weekend called for the resignation of Chief Justice Joseph Bevilacqua after he was censured and agreed to a four-month leave of absence for fraternizing with underworld figures.

Bevilacqua was publicly censured Friday for judicial misconduct and compromising the integrity of the court for refusing to sever ties with criminals and reputed members of organized crime. As part of a compromise with the Commission on Judicial Tenure and Discipline, Bevilacqua accepted a four-month leave of absence without pay, beginning July 1.

Pentagon examines policy

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon is studying a proposal by the Joint Chiefs of Staff to expand the military's role in combating the production and export of drugs from Latin America, officials say.

Adm. James Watkins, chief of naval operations, told a Navy seminar in Newport, R.I., Wednesday that the Pentagon is studying a recommendation to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger to undertake a "massive new program" in which the Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps would help fight drug trafficking.

A letter by Watkins said Latin American naval officials have linked the drug trade to the financing of terrorism and insurgencies in their countries, including Colombia, Venezuela and Peru. Pentagon officials said. The letter was written last month to the State Department's director of the Office for Terrorism and Emergency Planning, Robert Oakley, the officials said. It followed the 12th Inter-American Naval Conference in Norfolk, Va.

Watkins said the "primary focus" of the Latin American naval officers at the conference was "narcotics and other illicit trafficking." The relationship this trafficking has to terrorism, insurgency and the deleterious effect these activities have on the moral and socio-economic fabric of our American societies.

The military has been aiding federal and local law enforcement agencies for more than a year in spotting and tracking drug traffickers who try to enter the southern areas of the United States by plane and boat. But the military is prohibited by law from seizing the drugs and making arrests.

Communists endorse candidate

ROME — The Communist Party today endorsed Christian Democrat Francesco Cossiga for president, virtually assuring Cossiga of a first-ballot victory in voting by members of Parliament and regional representatives.

The vote was scheduled for late afternoon with Cossiga assured of the two-thirds majority — 674 votes — needed to become the first presidential candidate in 40 years to win on the first ballot. At 56, he would be Italy's youngest president.

Cossiga, a two-time prime minister and now president of the Senate, earlier had promised of support from all five parties in Socialist Prime Minister Bettino Craxi's five-party coalition.

Communist Party officials added their endorsement after a morning caucus of senators, deputies and regional representatives among the 1,011 "Grand Electors" eligible to vote.

Judge fails to post bond

DARLINGTON, Wis. — Unable to post a $200,000 cash bond, a Wisconsin judge is spending time in the jail where he sent many of the offenders who appeared before him.

Lafayette County Circuit Judge Daniel McDonald, 43, was charged Saturday with first-degree murder in the stabbing of Darlington attorney James Klein, 31, at the law offices of the judge's political foe, William Johnston.

Johnston defeated McDonald in a judicial election earlier this year after a bitter campaign. McDonald's current term was scheduled to end July 31.

Crying in his own courtroom and claiming he was being set up, McDonald burst out: "For God's sake, I can't stay in that jail."

Circuit Judge Frans Brand of Green County set bail for McDonald at $200,000 and scheduled a preliminary hearing for July 3.

NASA hails latest Discovery mission

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (UPI) — Discovery's international crew swooped to a smooth sunrise landing in the desert today to cap a textbook week in space that ranks as the smoothest mission yet in the shuttle program.

With skipper Daniel Brandenstein at the controls, the winged spaceship touched down at 9:12 a.m. EDT on runway 23 at the legendary Air Force base, kicking up a cloud of dust as it raced down the dry lakebed strip at more than 200 mph.

The landing, the 13th at Edwards in 15 flights, wrapped up a highly successful flight that saw the launch of three communications satellites, the first test of a "Star Wars" laser system and the launch of an astronomy satellite that was later retrieved after studying what may be a black hole at the center of the Milky Way.

On board were Brandenstein, co-pilot John Creighton, Shannon Luck, Steven Nagel, John Fabian, Frenchman Patrick Baudry and Prince Sultan Salman Al-Saud, a nephew of King Fahd of Saudi Arabia.

"Nice job Dan, welcome home," said Dick Richards in mission control in Houston after Discovery rolled to a dusty stop.

Ten Saudi princes were on hand to welcome their countryman home from space.

Brandenstein and Creighton fired Discovery's big double sonic boom of the shuttle just after it came into view above Edwards, the morning sun glinting off its wings as it banked and lined up for final approach and landing.

"We're very happy and very satisfied with the performance of the vehicle, the performance of the crew and the accomplishments of the flight," flight director Larry Bourgeois said Sunday.

Communications satellites owned by Mexico, the Arab League and American Telephone & Telegraph Co. were successfully delivered to orbit and an astronomy satellite was deployed and retrieved after studying what may be a ravenous black hole in the heart of the Milky Way.

Baudry was on board to carry out French medical experiments and Saud came as a representative of the Arab Satellite Communications Organization, a 21-nation consortium that includes the Palestine Liberation Organization.

During an orbital news conference Sunday, Saud was told the Beirut hostage crisis was still going on 200 miles below. "The trouble all over the world, not just the Middle East, looks very strange as you see the boundaries and border lines disappearing," he said.

"I think lots of people who are involved in causing most of these problems ought to come up here and take a look," said Saud, a nephew of King Fahd of Saudi Arabia who took off last Monday on the 18th shuttle mission.

Saudi Arabia.

Before the news conference, he took a long-distance call from his uncle, who thanked NASA and the American public for carrying the first Arab into orbit.

"It is a great achievement," Fahd said. "I wish to send through you my best wishes to his excellency President Reagan and the friendly American nation. I hope to see you soon."

A communications foul-up prevented Baudry from making a planned call to the French minister of science and technology.

Baudry, an acknowledged wine connoisseur, said at the news conference he carried a bottle of "very good" wine on Discovery but that he planned to wait until he was on Earth before sampling it.

"I hope in the future that on board the shuttle the American crews and other crews will be able to bring wine and cognac... for the good humor and the good quality of the work."

Officials hint link between airline blasts

By Mark Kurumitsu
United Press International

TOKYO — Japanese officials suspect a connection between the Tokyo airport blast that killed two people and the Indian jet that plunged into the sea about an hour later with 323 people aboard, but a Canadian airline spokesman denies the link was possible.

Police sources said the National Police Agency today planned to ask Interpol, the international police network, for help in determining if Sunday's blast at Narita airport was tied in with the crash of Air-India Flight 162.

On airliner luggage container blew up at Narita, killing two baggage handlers and injuring four others, less than 30 minutes after 200 passengers and crew arrived aboard a Canadian Pacific jetliner from Vancouver.

Just under an hour after the Tokyo explosion, an Air-India Boeing 747 jet crashed into the sea off Ireland. Officials suspect a bomb was responsible.

Sources in the National Police Agency said Japanese investigators were interested in a theory that the two incidents were related.

CP Air officials at Narita said more than half the baggage aboard the CP Air Flight 003 had been sent to Vancouver, British Columbia, from Toronto. Later, CP officials in Tokyo could not confirm this but said there would have been time to transfer baggage to Flight 003 at Vancouver from a connecting flight originating in Toronto.

Toronto and Montreal were the two originating points for the Air-India flight for its trip to Bombay and New Delhi, India.

In Toronto, CP Air spokesman Mike Dukelow denied any link was possible. He said the airline had two flights to Tokyo that left Canada Saturday: Flight 003, which originated in Vancouver, and Flight 001, which originated in Toronto and stopped in Vancouver en route to Tokyo and Hong Kong.

Five passengers from Flight 001 switched to 003 in Vancouver, but their baggage remained on the original flight, he said.

"There is no conceivable way that their baggage was switched," Dukelow said. "If any baggage or containers had been changed from one flight to the other, we'd have a record of that. But there is no such indication or record."

Japanese police said the explosion blew apart one of the 10 luggage containers unloaded from the Canadian jumbo jetliner, ripping water pipes off a 25-foot-high ceiling and scattering debris more than 65 feet.

Co-workers said the blast killed cargo handlers Hideohara Koki, 24, and Hideo Anano, 25, as they were wearing items just prior to placing them on a conveyor belt to the crowded airport public baggage claim area.

In Canada, Canadian Pacific Airways said the incident was being investigated and security had been stepped up throughout the airline's system.

Britons monitor and harass U.S. cruise missile convoys

By Carol Rose
United Press International

NEWBURY, England — In the cold stillness of a winter night, the small winged cruise missiles can be seen being swung open and a five-truck cruise missile convoy, escorted by heavily armed police, rumbled into the English countryside.

The convoy set off a warning network and within moments, "We're here to show that cruise will not 'melt into the countryside,'" as (British Minister of Defense) Michael Heseltine puts it, "said English teacher Polly Woolley.

"If just a bunch of ordinary people with primitive methods can track them with 100 per cent success rate against the British police, the army, and the U.S. Air Force, God only knows what a potential enemy can do."

There were similar attempts to block convoys in the towns of Hungerford, Marlborough and Devizes. Such things happen each time the convoys come out.

"When the cruise first came to our town we didn't really know what to do," Woolley said. "People felt helpless in the face of the military. But we decided to go out and see what we could do."

WODLEY AND A HANDFUL of other Britons formed telephone networks and round-the-clock CB radio links to monitor and harass the missile convoys, said named the "CruiseWatch."

The group's 500-plus members claim to have successfully tracked and delayed 12 convoys leaving Greenham Common. Woolley expects the group to grow when more convoys are moved into Molesworth, a missile base 50 miles from London.

No one has ever been convicted for trespassing on military land, according to DI McDonald, a CruiseWatch member who was arrested in February for driving around a police barricade guard-

"We're not against the military, and we're not against the Americans. We're just against world rearmament."

David Griffiths, protester

cruise and Pershing-2 missiles in Western Europe. The small winged cruise missiles can be carried by trucks roaming the countryside, invulnerable to surprise attack, CruiseWatch has other ideas.

"I used to be on the edge of the peace movement," said local villager, Tess Badcock. "But seeing what happens when cruise is here and what it's done to my community, I had to take action."

Badcock and four others, including her 13-year-old daughter, were arrested last November on a public footpath near the Longmoor missile base.

"We were held in a mud pit, surrounded by barbed wire, with floodlights and car exhaust pouring in on us," Badcock said. "During the arrest I thought, 'This isn't England. This can't be happening in a democratic country.'"

Badcock and 80 other arrested protesters were released after a few hours of detention with no charges filed against them, as often happens in Britain.

The National Council of Civil Liberties, British counterpart of the American Civil Liberties Union, has recommended that Badcock and others use the Ministry of Defense and local police for unlawful arrest and false imprisonment, NCCIL spokeswoman Barbara Cohen said.

Bush sees pope

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Vice President George Bush had a private audience with Pope John Paul II today at the outset of a seven-nation European tour to discuss terrorism, trade and arms control with allied leaders.

Later today Bush was to meet Prime Minister Bettino Craxi and Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti before flying to Bonn, West Germany, in the evening.

As is customary with private audiences, the Vatican gave no details of the pope's conversation with Bush. But John Paul indicated world peace was the dominant topic.

"I hope we will be able to work together for peace," the pope told Bush while he posed with the American delegation for a photograph at the end of the meeting.

Pool reporters allowed into the papal apartment during the traditional exchange of gifts and photo session said the atmosphere appeared "very cordial."

The vice president, accompanied by his wife Barbara and several aides, arrived at the Vatican for the audience in a 27-car motorcade, most of which contained police.

Before his meeting with the pope, Bush spent 30 minutes with Italian President Sandro Pertini at the presidential Quirinal palace.

Pertini, an 80-year-old socialist, is expected to be replaced as head of state by Senate President Francesco Cossiga in an election by a joint session of parliament today, according to political commentators.

Bush also was accompanied by his wife at the meeting with Pertini, a popular head of state well known in President Reagan and his administration.

No details of the meeting were released.

Bush arrived in Rome Sunday night, the first stop of his seven-nation mission for President Reagan that has taken on new urgency because of the resurgence of international terrorism.

EPA tells town to find pollution

Federal environmental authorities have ordered Manchester to submit a plan by Aug. 18 for finding the source of pollution of sewage that periodically enters the town's treatment plant.

The pollutant enters the treatment plant at the Hockanum River does not meet pollutant limits. So far efforts to identify the pollutant or trace its source have failed.

Robert Young, superintendent of the town's water and sewer operations, received the order from the federal Environmental Protection Agency this morning. The state Department of Environmental Protection received a copy of the order last week, but DEP officials had declined to comment on it in detail until it was received by the town.

The detailed order calls on the town to have a plan by a certified engineer for finding the source of the pollution. Young said the job can probably be done by staff and may not require an outside consultant.

The EPA order said the state DEP has declined to initiate appropriate enforcement action against the town.

In mid-May the EPA sent the town a notice that it was in violation of its sewage permit and ordered the DEP to take enforcement action within 30 days.

The town responded in late May that it was working with the DEP to find the source of the pollution. Robert Norwood, a DEP official, said last week he saw no point in issuing an order to the town to do what it was already doing.

Young said this morning he was told by Norwood that the DEP may appeal the EPA's order.

Young said the town will have to establish, for its own records, that the occasional violations of permitted standards in treated sewage are due to a pollutant in untreated sewage and not to some deficiency in the plant or its operation.

He said he plans to discuss the matter with the DEP to see what can be done by the town and what must be done by the DEP.

Officials suspect bomb downed jet

One report from the ships, helicopters and planes searching a 5-square-mile area about 120 miles southwest of the Irish coast says the area "looked like the site of a battle, with loads of bodies in the sea."

If all the passengers and crew are confirmed dead, the incident would be the third-worst aviation disaster and the worst plane crash at sea. If the cause is proved to be sabotage, it would be the deadliest terrorist attack.

A British aviation expert said a bomb blast caused the "Kanshika" named for a 1st century Indian emperor — to disappear from radar at Shannon airport an hour and 40 minutes before it was due at London's Heathrow airport.

Tokyo airport blast may be linked to crash — story on page 5

The whole situation screams at you that it was a bomb," said transatlantic pilot David Leap, most air transport editor of Flight International magazine. He said a bomb "answers why the crew didn't have time to radio a distress signal. It answers the question why the wreckage is spread so widely."

In Montreal, another aviation official also said he suspected a bomb explosion caused the airliner to vanish nearly 6 miles above the Atlantic and plunge into the ocean off the southwestern coast of Ireland.

Administration expects deadlock over budget

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House, faced with a tug-of-war in Congress over spending priorities, turned pessimistic today on the outlook for agreement by week's end on a plan to attack $200 billion-plus federal budget deficits.

"In our view, the prospects are not good," White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters. With House and Senate negotiators at loggerheads as their discussions entered a third week, Speakes said President Reagan and his cabinet "remain hopeful that an agreement can be struck on how to cut projected spending next year."

The House-Senate negotiations have been marked by fundamental disagreement over two major issues — Social Security benefits and defense spending — and chances are rated as slim that a package can be hammered out by Friday, when Congress recesses.

"The outlook," Speakes said, "is not good."

The conferees, attempting to resolve differences between separate budgets passed by the House and Senate, met for seven days can't land unless it is a civil airport," replied the controller. "The airport in the Bekaa is a military installation used by the Lebanese air force."

The hijackers also asked for pineapple and 17 lunches and "food that is good for them (the Americans) like they like."

Akef Haidar, the No. 3 leader of the Amal militia, ruled out any compromise on the demand for the release of Lebanese prisoners from Israel, but said Amal would "carefully" consider demands from the United States, Syria or the Red Cross to break the 11-day standoff.

"It's not a question of compromise," Haidar said. "The American hostages have the right to be released. We have to find an equitable solution, not a compromise."

"Any proposal from President Reagan we are ready to study it carefully. I don't know what he is proposing. Maybe he is proposing an atomic bomb on our heads," he said.

Haidar said he believed Reagan's pledge not to mount a rescue mission, but added: "If he does, they (the Americans) will die in shipping before us."

He denied reports Amal leader Nabih Berri planned to meet Assad in Damascus but confirmed that Syria had been in contact with Washington about the hostages.

Patrone leaps into Relays spotlight

By Bob Pappell
Herald Sports Writer

A 6-4, 170-pound stringbean named Joe Patrone transformed Saturday afternoon at Manchester High's Pete Wigren Track.

Patrone, a 22-year-old high jumper from South Woodstock, was either Elongated Man, Plastic Man or Mr. Fantastic (depending on one's literary preference).

Each do-gooder possesses the awesome ability to stretch his ultra-rubbery limbs far beyond normal human capacity.

At the 19th annual MCC New England Relays Saturday, Joe Patrone was a super-hero. He floated to a record-shattering 7-foot, 8 1/2-inch high jump mark to take home the gold and win the Chambers Award as the meet's outstanding athlete.

Patrone's jump was the best ever by a Connecticut native in state competition. It destroyed last year's meet high, set by Kym Orr, by 5 1/2 inches.

"I figured I'd set the meet record, but I didn't think I'd set a personal record," said Patrone, who first cleared 7-6 in January while a senior at the University of Rhode Island.

"Two years ago, I won the event here with a 7-foot, one-half inch jump and that was a record then."

Patrone missed last year's Relays in favor of the 1984 Olympic Trials. "I'm shooting for '88," he noted.

While Patrone's heroics were the highlight of the meet, other notable achievements were taking place throughout the day. A new national champion of the 56-pound weight throw was crowned, with Mike Fritchman of Bakerfield, California pitching the ball 44-feet, 4-inches. Fritchman, 24, had the three best preliminary tosses while qualifying for the final six.

But he was disappointed with the American record than for the "I've only thrown it three times in my life," he admitted.

Fritchman, like virtually all other competitors in the obscure event, is primarily a hammer thrower. The Cal State Iron pumper set a national collegiate record for the 38-pound weight throw. "It'll be back here next year," he said.

An interesting and eye-popping first-time event was the women's mile race walk, won by Clinton's Marianne Torallas. The pretty 26-year-old St. John's University graduate availed past rival Susan Liera at the end of the final turn and held the edge at the tape by 18 seconds. Torallas, who set an American record in the 10,000-meter walk at the Indianapolis national TAC championships a week ago, clocked a winning gain of 7:28.23 Saturday.

Two traits separate race walkers from jogging competitors must maintain contact with the track and the knee has to be straightened as it crosses under the body.

How does one become a race walker? "I was a runner before, in high school (Richmond Hill High in Queens, N.Y.) and college," said Torallas, who was has been ambulating briskly for three years. "I had a foot injury in college and I couldn't run because of the pounding, so I started walking."

In the men's open division, Peter Anthony of South Windsor took first in both the 800 and 1500, while Eloise Evans duplicated the double in the women's open division. Both were the outstanding athletes in their respective classes.

Evans, a former Division III national champion in the 800 while at Newport, R.I.'s Salve Regina College, trailed Donna Bogues throughout the 800 before taking the lead for good after the final turn. "I'm staying, this guy really knows his stuff," exclaimed Ward, 23, who lets out a Tartan scream when firing the spear. A heavily wrapped elbow hinted that the yells were not solely for psychic purposes.

"It's hurting," said Ward of his arm. "Instead of relaxing and letting things happen, I'm trying to muscle it. I'm just tired, it's been a very long season and it's not over yet."

Despite his busy schedule, Ward still finds time for the MCC New England Relays, where he is now a six-time winner.

"It's right next door, all my friends are here," he noted.

Manchester High sophomore Brian Brophy, the state open discus champ, captured a narrow victory over Trumbull rival Dan Duncavage. Brophy zinged a hurl of 47.34 meters, 64 meters better than Duncavage, who was also runner-up in the State Open.

Breagy, Baxter breeze to easy 10K victories

By Len Auster

It was more like a walk than a run to the finish at defending champion Charles Breagy, a member of the vaunted "Irish Connection," and Susan Baxter of Seymour easily ran away with the Men's and Women's Open divisions at Sunday's MCC New England Relays 10K Road Race at the MCC campus.

Breagy, runner-up two years ago and winner 38 seconds in '84, was a runaway winner with the native of Ireland crossing the tape in 31:48 with Mark Whitehouse of Glastonbury, representing Georgetown University, way back in second place in 33:18.

The 36-year-old, 5-11, 150-pound Breagy, a 1984 graduate of Providence College, won the Charlie McCormick Mile Saturday at Manchester High's Pete Wigren Track with a 4:18.47 clocking.

Baxter, was runner-up a year ago in the 10K to Alison Quelch, who did not defend her title. Quelch reportedly was suffering from a scratched cornea and hasn't been running under the advisement of her doctor. Baxter, who formerly ran at the University of Tennessee before taking a year off, turned in a 32:16 clocking to win by over two minutes. Noel Arnold of Wethersfield was second in 37:37.

Breagy's clocking was 50 seconds slower than a year ago when he turned in a 30:35 winning time. The weather, cloudy and muggy with temperatures in the mid 70s, forced the slower pace on this day. Baxter, surprisingly, was three seconds faster this year in winning than when she trailed Quelch by 66 seconds. Baxter was 23rd overall in a field of 292 finishers.

Breagy was not surprised by his victory either. He relaxed for the first mile, following early leaders Christopher Moulton and Emanuel Papakanakis. After they hit the mile mark Breagy took a glance at his watch and took off. "The pace was so slow," he explained. "I was planning to wait for a mile but the pace wasn't so slow, I couldn't run much slower, no offense to anyone."

"This is a good course, a challenging course. A lot of runners shy away. It's a pity there's not more competition," he added.

Whitehouse widened his lead by the two-mile marker at which he had a 21-second advantage. By the time he turned onto Bush Hill Road, his edge had gone to approximately 55 seconds.

"Whitehouse knew he couldn't touch the likes of Breagy, a world-class runner. 'I just ran the race to see what kind of shape I'm in,'" the 18-year-old youngster said. "I started out around seventh place. I had no intention of running with him (Breagy)."

"What does a runner think when he's going against the likes of Breagy? You think about running your time, you think about your splits," he answered.

Whitehouse took control of second place at about the five-mile mark. "The humidity got to a lot of people," he said.

Peter Anthony of South Windsor, a recent graduate of Bolso State in Idaho and representing the Manchester Community College, was runner-up in the 10K.

Supermarket Shopper

Look for the triple play

By Martin Sloane
United Feature Syndicate

Double plays? Triple plays? Readers who see these terms used in this column often wonder where they came from. When I first began teaching the art of smart shopping, I wanted to emphasize that the really big savings are achieved by combining several discounts on the same item. What better way to emphasize this than to coin terms that would describe combining two and three discount opportunities? But coming up with appropriate terms wasn't easy.

I tried dozens of word combinations, but none seemed to have the excitement of the baseball terms "double play" and "triple play." It's why not use them? Smart shopping is also a game, and making a "double play" in the supermarket can be just as much fun as making one on the baseball diamond.

You can make a double play by using any two discounts on one item. For instance, getting a single coupon doubled, combining a coupon with an advertised low price or using a coupon and then sending in for a refund offer are all double plays.

Allita Levine of Babylon, N.Y., saw a supermarket advertisement offering Heinz Thick & Zesty Barbecue Sauce on sale for $1.18. She made her double play by using two Heinz 70-cent coupons, and the barbecue sauce only cost her 48 cents a jar, a saving of almost two-thirds off the regular price.

The goal of every avid refunder is a triple play, which is made by combining three discounts on one item. A triple play will usually save you about 80 percent. Ah, the pleasure of a Kraft Mayonnaise triple play that gets you a jar for less than half a dollar. I find it makes my sandwiches and salads even tastier.

Joan Burmaster of Nampa, Idaho, gives a good example of a recent triple play. "Our local grocery store recently ran a coupon special for 7-Up, at only 50 cents for six-packs. The regular price is $1.49. I had two coupons, each good for 25 cents off on a six-pack, and when the store doubled them, the 7-Up six-packs only cost me 49 cents each."

Once a person starts making these money-saving double and triple discounts on a regular basis, the question arises: Why not stock up on these big bargains? If you can save 50 to 80 percent on a container of frozen orange juice, why not make these same big savings on six containers? Why not?

Donna Irey from Marion, Ohio, is an accomplished refunder, and her use of a wheelchair hasn't prevented her from stocking her pantry with triple plays. She recently found frozen brown potatoes on sale for just 44 cents a package. She had nine 20-cent coupons which she store doubled, so she received the nine boxes of potatoes free and got 94 cents change.

Twins graduate at top of class

HARTFORD (UPI) — Their name may be Malenfant, which means bad child in French, but they are good in reality. Sue Ann and Frances Malenfant, 18, will become the first twins in the history of Hartford Public High School to graduate as valedictorian and salutatorian.

Their teachers said the two 18-year-olds are hardworking, unpretentious and sweet. And their principal said they are part of a small group of "intrinsically motivated kids."

At a time when Hartford's public schools are under attack in the wake of highly publicized cases of parents sending their children across town lines to Bloomfield schools, Fran Malenfant said, "If you want something out of school, you've got to put something into it."

Like many inner-city students, the twins come from large families and their parents did not go to college. Their father, Maynard Malenfant, a store clerk, came from the family of 15 children. He finished high school, but their mother, a nurse's aide, who came from a family of 18 children, was one credit shy of getting her high school diploma.

Church in Greenville, Tennessee give us a good insight into the nature of humility in the following words: "Humility does not consist of self-accusation, or self-effacement, or wallowing in feelings of inadequacy and worthlessness. That is humiliation, not humility. True humility, as Judean shepherds and Wise Men revealed, means bowing in the presence of the Power that makes our own powers seem weak by comparison, and kneeling in the presence of the Holy that makes our own goodness seem shabby as a stable. Pride comes from comparing ourselves with our worst neighbor. Humility comes from comparing ourselves with Christ. In another's presence we feel how big we are. In Christ's presence we sense our smallness. Even when Christ was but a Bethlehem baby, shepherds and Wise Men looked upon him, then at themselves, and then knit in utter humility.

PLATTER PUSHER RALPH KAFFEL keeps other-age jazz alive

Record reissues keep heritage of jazz alive

Thumb through the jazz bins in your favorite record store — if it has jazz bins — and you are likely to find it peppered with discounted albums from days gone by.

Some executives see them as a bonus at a time when jazz remains a minuscule portion of the record sales industry.

It's a matter of pure economics. Those companies with enormous catalogs see they can put out just a little cost involved. It's a tough area of the business, with new artists left to the independents.

Fantasy's perennial best seller is the "Montkron," recorded in the late 1950s by Thelonious Monk and John Coltrane. Kaffel said other reissues most in demand are pianist Bill Evans, guitarist Wes Montgomery, and trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie.

White House mulls tactics to end crisis

By David Cowell United Press International

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Shlita Moslem militia chief Nabih Berri met with the British ambassador to discuss the hostage crisis today as President Reagan weighed proposals to put pressure on the captors of the 40 American hostages.

Three members of the Class of 1985 at Howell Cheney Regional Vocational Technical School share a happy moment before graduation exercises Monday night at the school. From left they are Carleen Lazaru, a graduate of the machine tool program, and Kathleen Kerrigan and June Bowler, both graduates of the machine drafting program.

Against a backdrop of intensified diplomatic activity, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said today that the White House was considering a number of proposals submitted by its national security advisers Monday.

Speakes told reporters Reagan was considering a number of proposals submitted by its national security advisers Monday. "We will be prepared to take whatever pressures are necessary to bring these pressures to bear," he said.

Berri met today with British Ambassador David Miles — Britain's ambassador to Iran six years ago when 52 Americans were taken hostage by Moslem fundamentalists in Tehran.

Cheney Tech graduates get sendoff

By Alex Girelli Herald Reporter

The 125 members of the Class of 1985 at Howell Cheney Regional Vocational Technical School drove to graduation exercises Monday night in spasmodic downpours. But the sun broke through just before the start of ceremonies in the field behind the school and shone throughout the hour-long commencement exercise.

Document offers 'Earth-protection'
The environmental leaders said public awareness is the key to survival, and proposed courses of action for nations and governments, people and industries.

"The general public and decision-makers need to understand the true costs of their own actions and those of government and private sector and how to weigh the long-term, far-reaching benefits against localized costs or risks," they wrote.

Participating in the call for action were representatives of The Friends of the Earth, The Wilderness Society, National Parks and Conservation Association, National Audubon Society, Sierra Club, The Inak Walk League of America, Environmental Defense Fund, National Wildlife Federation, Environmental Policy Institute and the Natural Resources Defense Council.

The 10 environmental leaders offered a plan of action on several fronts:

- Nuclear War: A mutual and verifiable moratorium on production of nuclear weapons by the United States, the Soviet Union and other nuclear nations. Those countries should also re-evaluate arms production policies for their "effect on health and the environment."
- Population control: "To advance the goal of zero population growth, population organizations should spread the word about the problems and possible remedies. The Agency for International Development 'should incorporate family planning in all economic assistance programs' and the World Bank and other global funding institutions 'should give increased priority to population stabilization."
