GOP leader says Marcos must resign

Panel chief puts heat on president

WASHINGTON (AP) - The chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee urged President Reagan on Friday to try to persuade Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos to step down.

Sen. David Durenberger added his voice to a rising crescendo of congressional criticism following widespread reports of fraud in the Feb. 7 balloting. "By all independent estimates, Mr. Marcos clearly lost the election," said Durenberger. "Nevertheless, by use of fraud on a scale that would scandalize a Chicago ward heeler, he has claimed a tainted 'victory' over opposition candidate Corason Aquino."

New revelations continue to unfold in the various investigations concerning the shuttle Challenger disaster. This photo, taken about 1 1/2 seconds after liftoff Jan. 28, appears to show dark smoke in the area of the right solid rocket booster. Experts say the smoke may indicate the seals began to burn through immediately.

Report says tests detailed weather risk

By Harry F. Rosenholz The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - NASA went ahead with the launch of Challenger even though its tests a year ago showed that weather conditions relating to pre-launch activities by Morton Thiokol, which makes the boosters, and from NASA.

The magazine said engineers believe this situation set up a deadly sequence of events, starting from overnight cold, that eventually caused the Challenger's right solid rocket booster to break loose from the fuel tank. The solid rocket booster apparently cracked into the wing, the magazine said, illustrating its article with photographs.

Naugatuck man gets year term

WATERBURY (AP) - A Naugatuck man was sentenced Friday to a year in prison for participating in a 1984 gang rape of a Naugatuck social club. John Lang, 27, received a total sentence of five years, suspended after one year, and three years' probation on a charge of first-degree sexual assault and conspiracy to commit sexual assault.

The case was tried in the papers and I don't think I could have gotten a fair trial," Lang said. According to testimony at an earlier trial, the 31-year-old victim accompanied two men to the club, formerly known as the Dead Babies Motorcycle Club, on June 2, 1984. As soon as she was inside, she was surrounded by about 25 men, she said.

Connecticut In Brief

O'Neill would give panel more power

HARTFORD — Gov. William A. O'Neill said Friday he would sign into law a bill giving more power to the Judicial Review Council to scrutinize the appointment of judges. If the measure reaches his desk.

The bill, backed by Judiciary Committee Co-Chairman William L. Wollenberg, R-Farmington, and ranking committee Democrat Richard D. Tulisano, would allow the council to initiate investigations if it had reason to believe a judge's performance was suffering.

Currently, the council can only act if it gets a written complaint.

The Judiciary Committee this week began the process of questioning more than 70 judges that are up for reappointment this year. Those close to the process have said privately that as many as a dozen judges may be in trouble, and they may not be reappointed.

O'Neill said he had asked Chief Court Administrator Aaron Ment and other officials about whether there were any of those judges whose terms expire this year whom he should not submit for reappointment.

"They saw no reason for any of the judges not to go forward," O'Neill said.

The governor's ready agreement to sign the proposed bill was unusual. His posture generally on bills working their way through the legislature has been that he would wait until they reach his desk before deciding whether to sign them.

Stolen radioactive gauge found

NEW HAVEN — A missing "low-level radioactive density gauge" was found intact early Friday atop a snowbank in Branford about 24 hours after it was reported stolen from a New Haven construction trailer, police said.

Authorities had been concerned that the gauge would pose a threat of radiation sickness to anyone who tampered with it. The device, valued at about $5,000, is used in the construction industry to measure the density of concrete.

New Haven Police Sgt. James Sorrentino said Friday that a motorist spotted the bright orange box that held the apparatus at the corner of Leetes Island Road and Gould Lane in Branford at about 2 a.m. The unidentified man notified police, Sorrentino said.

Police said there was no evidence the box had been opened or tampered with.

According to police spokesman Maj. Walter Connor, one or more persons broke into a construction trailer owned by MacFarlane and Johnson Engineering sometime late Wednesday night or early Thursday morning.

Teen girl faces arson charge

MADISON — A 17-year-old girl was arrested and charged with first-degree arson Friday in connection with a December fire that caused an estimated $1 million worth of damage in Madison.

Police said Kelly Holt of Madison was arrested and released to her parents on a written promise to appear in West Haven Court on March 3.

Police said the charges stem from a December 28 fire that destroyed two buildings, which housed five businesses and two apartments.

Police reported that the fire also injured several firemen.

Director at Mansfield wants out

HARTFORD — The director of the Mansfield Training School wants to leave his post after only five months on the job and a search is on for a replacement, according to the Commissioner of the Department of Mental Retardation.

Commissioner Brian R. Lensink says he expects to name a successor to George Moore within two months. He said he began the search for a new director when he learned of Moore's desire for reassignment several weeks ago.

Moore, director at the training school since September, confirmed Thursday that he wanted to leave to resume working in a community-based program.

Deputy Sheriff gets the ax

VERNON — Deputy Sheriff Arthur Garafolo has been fired one week after announcing plans to challenge his boss, Tolland County Sheriff Francis H. Curran, for the Democratic nomination for sheriff.

"I'm not going to have a person working for me who's not supporting me," Curran said Friday.

Garafolo, 53, was fired Thursday by Curran, and then hours later received the unanimous endorsement of the Democratic Town Committee. Garafolo, deputy sheriff for 11 years, said he decided to run because he does not believe Curran has even a slim chance to win re-election.

"It was really a dirty trick... because he took away my only source of income," Garafolo said.

In 1982, Curran fired Somers Democrat Frank Guadagnino, a special deputy sheriff, shortly after Guadagnino announced his own candidacy for Tolland County sheriff. The challenge came up short, and Curran went on to win another four-year term.

New housing permits dip in January

HARTFORD — New housing permits issued in January dropped by more than 33 percent from the number of permits issued in December.

According to a preliminary report by the Connecticut Department of Housing, there were 1,215 new housing permits issued in January, compared with 1,836 the month before. But state Housing Commissioner Joseph Canale said last month's figures are up more than four percent from January 1985.

Hartford County led the state with 356 permits issued, followed by New Haven with 352.

Most of the state's new housing permits were for single family housing.

Committee agrees to air tax-cut bills

By Judd Everhart
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — The General Assembly's Finance Committee agreed Friday to hold hearings on bills that could result in millions of dollars of tax cuts in this election year.

But the co-chairmen of the committee both said that the size of tax cuts will depend on how much the governor's proposed $4.2 billion budget can be cut. The budget represents an 11 percent increase in spending over the current year. Republicans, who control the General Assembly, say they hope to keep the increase to more than 7 percent or 8 percent.

Bills approved for a public hearing March 3 would repeal the taxes on, among other things, machinery parts, garment material and diabetic supplies.

Senate Republicans want to cut taxes by $100 million this year. Their House counterparts say they're willing to consider some tax cuts, but have not yet agreed on any amount.

Sen. James H. McLaughlin,

His co-chairwoman, Rep. Linda N. Emmons, R-Madison, said she doubted bills calling for the outright repeal of certain taxes, such as the tax on interest income, would get very far "because you're talking about hundreds of millions of dollars."

"But in deference to the people who sponsored them... we're just going to hear all of them," she said.

Mrs. Emmons said she was informally polling Republican committee members "to get a sense of what taxes they are interested in reducing."

A House Republican caucus is planned next week to discuss budget and tax cuts.

Last year, the Republican-controlled legislature passed more than $15 million in tax cuts.

Asbestos suit filed by EPA

NEW HAVEN (AP) — Four companies have been charged in a federal lawsuit with improperly handling asbestos materials that resulted in visible emissions of asbestos at a Stratford plant.

Named in the suit filed this week by the U.S. Department of Justice on behalf of the Environmental Protection Agency were Raymark Industries Inc., Raymark Corp., Echlin Inc. and Brake Systems Inc.

The EPA is seeking fines of as much as $25,000 a day against each defendant for each violation, as well as court costs.

"Unless restrained by order of this court, the defendants will continue to discharge visible emissions to the outside air from operations at the Stratford plant," the suit said.

Raymark Industries Inc. is a subsidiary of Raymark Corp. of Trumbull. Brake Systems Inc. is a subsidiary of Branford-based Echlin Inc. Echlin-BSI subsidiary of Branford-based Echlin Inc. is in space leased at the Stratford plant.

Raymark attorney Harry Day denied the allegations Thursday.

"I don't want the public to feel they have to worry about that," Day said. "It's my firm belief that we're not endangering anyone."

Echlin attorney David Spiller agreed. "We are not doing what they allege here," he said.

EPA officials in Washington, D.C., said they could not comment yet on whether emissions were continuing at the plant or if there is any danger to either workers or area residents.

The suit — which does not state that anyone is at risk — cites nine separate violations discovered during seven separate visits to the plant. Emissions into the air were said to have occurred in 1983 on Feb. 9, June 3, Aug. 24 and Aug. 26, and on March 7, 1984.

The government is also seeking a court order to prevent the defendants from continuing to "deposit asbestos-containing waste material at improper waste disposal sites."

Three violations were cited on Dec. 11, 1985. The other violation stemmed from an Oct. 4, 1984 incident, when a bag containing asbestos material fell out of a truck onto a city street.

Spiller said only one of the Dec. 11 violations was made against Echlin's Brake Systems division.

Threat from New York

Spot checks continue for avian flu

HARTFORD (UPI) — State inspectors and police will continue spot checks of poultry trucks despite negative test results for avian flu, which is deadly to birds but harmless to humans, officials said Friday.

The state Department of Agriculture reassigned inspectors from its dairy and marketing divisions to bolster field checks after a case of avian flu was confirmed last week at a small poultry shop in Bridgeport.

"The tests keep coming back negative," said spokeswoman Christine Richardson, "but we are having our inspectors ride along with state police and that will continue. We're taking it day by day."

The threat has not passed despite negative tests at markets and farms in Connecticut since the outbreak was first confirmed in Connecticut, officials said.

The Bridgeport avian flu outbreak was the first ever confirmed in Connecticut, officials said.

Agricultural Commissioner Kenneth Anderson ordered the 40 infected chickens destroyed, incinerated and buried, and closed the store for a month after ordering the owner to clean and disinfect the shop.

The state's 221 commercial poultry farms and other markets have so far been free of the highly contagious disease, Richardson said.

As of early this week, the latest outbreak had wiped out at least 500,000 birds elsewhere on the East Coast, she said.

The disease first appeared in Pennsylvania two years ago and checked for proper paperwork and cleanliness. "We've turned back a few," Richardson said. "We're also having poultry farmers tell us when they are having deliveries and we send out inspectors."

The Bridgeport avian flu outbreak was the first ever confirmed in Connecticut, officials said.

Agricultural Commissioner Kenneth Anderson ordered the 40 infected chickens destroyed, incinerated and buried, and closed the store for a month after ordering the owner to clean and disinfect the shop.

The disease produces coughing, sneezing and choking in birds, and hemorrhages on the birds' faces, heads and legs. The virus can spread rapidly by manure on trucks, crates, clothing shoes and by files.

Avian flu is harmless to humans, even if the meat or eggs of infected birds are eaten, Richardson stressed.

Hispanics rap newspapers

NEW HAVEN (AP) — A demonstration against The Jackson Newspapers was planned for Saturday by local Puerto Rican groups protesting a recent special report in the New Haven Register.

Victor Medina, one of the organizers of the protest and the executive director of Junta for Progressive Action, Inc., said Friday that the Feb. 9 report, titled "Between Two Shores," did not fairly portray the New Haven Puerto Rican community or the island of Puerto Rico.

He said the special report highlighted poverty and other problems while ignoring the positive aspects of Puerto Rican life.

Donald W. Sharpe, editor of the Jackson Newspapers, which publishes the Register and The Journal-Courier, defended the 32-page report in a recent statement.

He said it was "a fair and accurate overview of the complex interactions involving people, politics, religion, jobs, the young and the old in both cities and suburbs."

"We regret that some were offended" by the report, Sharpe said.

Medina said he expected between 1,000 and 1,500 people to attend the 1 p.m. demonstration in front of the newspaper offices.

Car club salutes the '60s with a 'good times' dance

By Susan Vaughn Herald Reporter

Muscle cars and muscle skirts. Poodle skirts and ponytails. The limbo and the twist.

Friday night as more than 350 members and friends of the Swinging '60s Car Club packed the Army and Navy Club on Main Street.

Donna Fraser of Tolland sports a 1950s look at the Swinging '60s Car Club dance Friday night at the Army and Navy Club.

Criteria for membership is ownership of a driveable pre-1970 car. There are currently 43 members from several central Connecticut towns.

Club members are not interested in show cars or contests, said Sharon Shurkus, Ron's wife. The people who own the cars have them because they enjoy driving them, said Ron Shurkus.

As many as 800 people show up with their vintage cars for the "cruising nights" that the club holds in parking lots, Ron Shurkus said.

"Muscle cars," such as Chevies, Dodge Super Bs and Camaros, are the most popular among the '60s car fanatics, said Shurkus.

Ron and Sharon Shurkus own cars from the '60s - a 1966 Chevy Nova wagon, a 1964 Oldsmobile Cutlass and a 1964 Pontiac Tempest.

Fraser, dressed in a powder-blue poodle skirt and wearing her boyfriend's class ring, said she inherited several cars and a 1950s vintage Chevy pickup from her father, who was a collector.

Many people at the dinner-dance wore '50s-style outfits, appropriate for the twist and limbo contests which were held at the dance. Music was provided by Vintage, an area band which plays - what else - '50s and '60s tunes.

NASA tests detailed weather risks

Continued from page 1 inspections. The team checking Challenger read temperatures of 7.9 degrees Fahrenheit on the lower right booster. The booster apparently never got to the shuttle launch manor.

In 15 Utah, Morton Thiokol official said a NASA inspector read a temperature of minus 8 degrees at a lower strut which connects the right booster to the orbiter.

In Congress, meanwhile, several Democrats called for Senate hearings beginning next week with testimony from acting NASA administrator William Graham and three officials involved in the booster rocket program.

A redesign of the booster seals was considered almost certain to be recommended by the commission, which holds open hearings next Tuesday and Wednesday here. Such changes could ground shuttles for 18 to 24 months, if new rocket forgings are required.

Europe hails launch of Ariane rocket

KOUROU, French Guiana (UPI) - Europe's Ariane rocket blasted off Friday night and successfully sent two satellites into orbit in the first Western space mission since the shuttle Challenger disaster.

The unmanned, disposable Ariane soared into the night sky, trailing a huge tongue of fire that illuminated the jungles surrounding France's space center in the South American nation of French Guiana.

French space officials said the Ariane launch might be difficult because it will be the first time Ariane has been fired toward the north. The deployment of the two satellites will also be a sensitive procedure, they said.

The SPOT, a French acronym for Satellite for Observation of the Earth, must separate from the Viking and be placed in polar orbit about 520 miles above the earth. After reaching the proper orbit, it must unfold its solar-panel energy system within five minutes or its batteries will burn out, leaving the satellite useless.

The Ariane carried into orbit France's first observation satellite, the $250 million SPOT, and Sweden's first satellite, the $20 million Viking, which is designed to study the Northern Lights.

Officials at the French National Center for Space Studies said each of Ariane's three stages performed properly and called the launch "a great success."

The launch of the Ariane was the first Western space mission since the space shuttle Challenger blew up Jan. 28. The Soviet Union sent a space station into orbit Thursday.

The last launch of the three-stage disposable launch rocket, the European competitor to the U.S. space shuttle, was aborted 10 minutes after takeoff Sept. 12 when a hydrogen leak sent the rocket flying out of control.

Records said in his 1865 edition Izuami's 120 years were "the greatest authenticated age with which any human has lived." The book has listed him as the world's oldest human since he was 114.

Izuami was married in 1912 and his wife died in 1956, when he was 91. He recently said he had not given much thought to remarriage.

Izuami, whose life spanned two world wars, said he did not believe a man had walked on the moon.

Izuami said he watched television and often said the secret to long life is "not to worry."

World's oldest man is dead at age 120

TOKYO (UPI) - The oldest known man in the world - 120-year-old Japanese farmer who quit smoking at age 116 but said he would rather die than give up drinking - died Friday of heart failure.

Shigechiro Izuami, a bald, frail-looking man with a wispy white beard, died at 9:15 p.m. in his home in Aso on the southern coral island of Tokunoshima where he was born.

His diet consisted mainly of the vegetables he could grow in his garden - potatoes, beans, tomatoes, spinach and cabbage.

As a youth he was a local amateur wrestling champion and his sturdy physique, he said, came from hard work in the garden and his daily walks.

The Guinness Book of World Records said in its 1865 edition Izuami's 120 years were "the greatest authenticated age with which any human has lived." The book has listed him as the world's oldest human since he was 114.

His doctor advised him to kick the habit. He took up drinking only at the age of 70, when he found that he enjoyed a glass of shochu every day.

His doctor advised him to give that up, too, but he said he would rather die than give up drinking.

He was totally opposed to giving up smoking. He said he had developed into pneumonia. Heart failure was listed as the cause of death.

Born on June 29, 1865, Izuami lived a simple life as a small farmer on Tokunoshima and attributed his good health to sipping a daily glass of shochu - a liquor made from unrefined sugar - and frequent walks, sometimes with his dog.

While Izuami tended his garden, Japan emerged from a traditional agricultural economy closed to curious foreign eyes into one of the world's leading industrial nations - from a country that worshipped emperors to a modern democracy. Izuami said he smoked three or four cigarettes a day while he was

Manchester boys are tourney-bound

By Bob Popetti Herald Sports Writer

The Indians are in. The Manchester High boys' basketball team qualified for the state Class LL tournament with a surprisingly easy, 55-39, CCC East win over visiting Rockville High at Clarke Arena Friday night.

The win was the fourth in a row for the ever-improving Indians who evened their overall record to 8-8 for the season. The eight triumphs guarantee MHS at least a 40 percent victory rating, which is the minimum CIAC requirement.

To properly gauge how far Manchester has come, consider the last time Friday's opponents locked horns. The home-state Rams destroyed the Indians by 20 points, 77-55, on Jan. 17. Plagued by a lineup littered with injuries, Manchester proceeded to drop two more decisions and by the end of the season, the record stood at a dismal 3-7.

Manchester was a mess. Then a gang of confident, team-oriented hoopers stole the Indians' uniforms and went out on the hardwood floor to win five out of six.

"It's worked out well," said smiling Manchester coach Frank Kinel. "A lot of it is confidence. That's what comes with a few wins."

The win Friday was a must. The Indians' final four games of the regular season include the top three clubs in the CCC East. Manchester travels to Hartford Public High on Monday for a 7:30 tilt.

"Now I don't have to worry," said a relieved Kinel. "Now we can get into getting us out of that bottom spot in the tournament."

Inspired Manchester, which led from buzzer to buzzer, is now 5-6 in the division. Rockville slips to 4-8 in the CCC East, and 5-11 overall.

Bruce Rosenberg paced another balanced scoring assault by pumping in 15 points. Michael Lata contributed 11. Troy Peters added 10, and Brian Arnold had 9.

Scott Van Oudenhoove netted a team-high 12 for the Rams. Joe Carnemolla dipped in with 11. "I walked off the court and asked the boys how they did with 20 the last time," said Kinel.

The explanation was no mystery to Rams' coach Dave Geisser. "The difference, obviously, is that Manchester has really improved," he said. "Frank has done an excellent job in turning these kids around."

Bruce Rosenberg, the game-high scorer and rebounder for Manchester High in Friday night's 55-39 win over visiting Rockville High at Clarke Arena, releases a jump shot in traffic. The Rams' Dave and rejected five shots. At times, the hosts' stingy zone and the visitors' cold hands combined for a stark illustration of just how lopsided the game truly was. Rockville was held to just 6 points in the first quarter and later scored one single basket in the third.

Manchester was familiar with statistics like those in the first half of the season, only from the other side.

Others that contributed to the defensive scheme were Lata and Vaughn. A heady 6-foot sophomore, Kinel had nothing but praise for Vaughn, a heady 6-foot sophomore.

The Weekend

Tourney push for hockey teams

The tournament drive for the Manchester High and East Catholic High hockey teams is here. Both teams are pursuing the mandatory 500 records required to qualify for post-season play.

MHS, with an 8-8 record, takes on Glastonbury High tonight at 9:45 at the Hartford Arena in South Windsor. With three games remaining, the Indians can only afford one more loss.

It's less complicated for East, which sports an 8-1 overall record, but only 7-1 as far as the CIAC is concerned. East needs to win its last two games, including tonight at 7:15 against visiting Cheshire High at the Bolton Ice Palace.

East girls in hoop action

The East Catholic High 6-13 girls' basketball team winds up its 1985-86 regular season tonight at 7 against host Aquinas High in New Britain. The Eagles move on to the ACC Tournament, starting Monday, at a site to be announced.

The Huskies, who lost Wednesday to Seton Hall in their first game without leading scorer Earl Kelley, are 3-9 in the Big East and 12-11 overall. The Friars, coming off a 76-67 win over Pittsburgh, are 4-9 in the Big East and 12-12 overall.

Whalers at home Sunday afternoon

The Hartford Whalers continue their playoff drive with a Sunday matinee contest at 2:05 against the St. Louis Blues at the Civic Center.

The 25-21 Whalers finally snapped out of three-week, 9-9-1 winless skid with back-to-back victories over Vancouver and Buffalo last week. Hartford visits Adams Division co-leading Montreal Canadiens tonight. The Whalers have never won in the Montreal Forum in seven seasons, going 0-15-5, including a pair of playoff losses in 1980.

Celtics in Hartford Sunday night

The Boston Celtics, with the best record in the NBA, visit the Civic Center Sunday night at 8 to meet the Indiana Pacers.

CHENEY THUMPED - The Beltingers, 7-5 in the COC and 10-5 overall, had a tenuous 43-37 lead after three periods. But they quickly took control in the closing eight minutes. "I went from six to 16 quickly and then they hit some foul shots and some fast break baskets to move it to eventually the final score," said Cheney coach Aaron Silvia.

The loss drops the Beavers to 4-10 in the conference, 5-11 overall. Cheney, which has four games left beginning with Tuesday night's game at 7 at Coventry High, must win three of the four to qualify for the state tournament. "They were in the one-and-one at the start of the fourth quarter and there were a lot of fouls," Silvia said. "There were a lot of touch fouls. It wasn't a matter of getting the ball, just getting called for aggressive play."

Spinks, Holmes set for rematch April 19

NEW YORK (UPI) - Michael Spinks will defend his International Boxing Federation heavyweight title against former champ Larry Holmes, April 19 in Las Vegas, Nev.

Spinks, who defeated Holmes for the title in September, will be making his first defense. The 15-round fight, to be co-promoted by Don King and Butch Lewis, will be televised by Home Box Office. It is the second of a seven-fight series to decide the heavyweight title.

Spinks is 28-0 with 10 knockouts while Holmes, who is 36 in seven years, has more than Spinks. Holmes is 48-1 with 34 KOs.

Pinkton Thomas will put his title on the line March 22 in Las Vegas against Trevor Berbick. Negotiations for the Spinks-Holmes fight were completed Wednesday.

Spinks, who became the first light heavyweight to ever take the heavyweight crown, beat Holmes in a 15-round unanimous decision, preventing Holmes from tying Rocky Marciano's 48-0 record.

Mets victors in arbitration

By Mike Tully
United Press International

American League batting champion Wade Boggs made his pitch Friday for an unprecedented arbitration award and the New York Mets scored another salary victory. Boggs, who earned $1 million in arbitration last year and then celebrated with 240 hits and a batting title had his case heard in New York. He was asking $1.8 million. The Red Sox were offering $1.3 million. Even if the arbitrator finds in favor of the club, Boggs's $1.3 million award would exceed the highest salary ever awarded in arbitration, last year's $1.2 million decision in favor of Montreal's Tim Lincecum.

The Mets won their case against second baseman Tim Lincecum, raising their record in arbitration to 3-1. With the hearings completed and only Friday's results to come, the clubs have won 18 cases and the players 15. Boggs' case was heard a full year after the other three big league seasons, he asked for and won $1 million in arbitration. This year, armed with two batting titles to come, the club's arbitration record is 1-0.

The Mets have posted the best arbitration record in baseball this year, winning three cases, losing one and avoiding the process with Cy Young Award winner Dwight Gooden. They signed him to a one-year contract at $1.32 million. Teufel, who came in a winter trade with the Minnesota Twins after making $15,000 in 1985, will make the club's offer of $200,000.

The Phillies began camp with big questions. The Philadelphia Phillies opened spring training Friday at Clearwater, Fla., facing big questions about their pitching and catching. The trading of John Denny to the Cincinnati Reds and the uncertainty surrounding the status of Steve Carlton means the Phillies have only three starting pitchers — Kevin Gross, Shane Rawley and the inconsistent Charles Hudson. Having traded Ozzie Virgil to Atlanta, the Phillies are hoping Jim Busby, who has not caught in two years, and Darren Daulton can do the job behind the plate. "There's no question we have a lot of major questions we need answered this spring," manager John Felske said. "In time, we think they will be answered. But there's no question we have a lot of work to do. And it is going to be a struggle."

Carlton's career is in jeopardy because of a sore left shoulder that bothered him all last season. He was the focal point of the season Friday, throwing for 10 minutes as the 17 Phillies pitchers and six catchers worked out for more than two hours in humid weather at the Carpenter Complex. pitchers and catchers. Among players who were to report Friday, only pitcher Odel Jones was missing. At Tampa, Fla., the Cincinnati Reds opened their 1986 training camp with six catchers and 20 pitchers in uniform, but not free agent reliever Rollie Fingers. The former Cy Young Award winner was invited as a non-roster player, but refused to shave off his trademark handlebar mustache to comply with the club's rule against facial hair. At Fort Lauderdale, Fla., catcher Juan Espino and pitcher Alfonso Pulido, neither of whom are expected to make the club, were the only players missing when the New York Yankees had their first spring training workout. Besides pitchers and catchers, American League MVP Don Mattingly, who underwent minor hand surgery over the winter, infielders Bobby Meacham (wrist) and Andre Robertson (knee), are in camp for early rehabilitation purposes. At Bradenton, Fla., pitchers Ceciliano Guante and Rick Rhoden, who has made no secret of his desire to be traded, were absent when spring workouts for pitchers and catchers opened for the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Some baseball players are very civic-minded

By Joe Illuzzi
United Press International

NEW YORK — Major league baseball hands out numerous awards for outstanding performance on the field. Baseball also recognizes player performance off the field.

Long after all the major awards — the Cy Young, Most Valuable Player, Rookie of the Year — are given out, another honor, often overlooked, is bestowed upon a major leaguer. It is the Roberto Clemente Award. The Clemente Award, named for the late Hall of Fame outfielder, is based on sportsmanship, character, community involvement, humanitarianism, playing ability and an ability to contribute to his team and baseball.

The winner of the 16th Clemente Award will be announced at this year's All-Star Game in Houston.

After a year marred by the drug trials in Pittsburgh, player image has deteriorated somewhat in the eyes of the fans. Some players are seen as millionaires.

But there are other players whose lives don't begin and end at the ballpark. Many give of themselves to their communities, whether it be their time, name or money.

Roberto Clemente was one of those players. The Pittsburgh Pirates' outfielder cared about people and he gave his life for them. On Dec. 31, 1972, Clemente died in an airplane crash while on a mercy mission to earthquake-stricken Nicaragua. He is remembered as much today for his humanitarian efforts as for his accomplishments on the field.

Current players have followed in Clemente's footsteps, trying to help the less fortunate.

Gary Carter, the catcher for the New York Mets, last spring was named the first honorary sports chairman of the Leukemia Society of America. He has raised funds for the society's programs of worldwide research, patient assistance, public awareness, education, and community service.

Carter's battymate, pitcher Ron Darling, recently became involved in a drug awareness program for youngsters. Mets force effects or violate rhythmic integrity.

George Foster funds the George Foster Home for Children in Dayton, Ohio. New York's first baseman, the Yankees, also boasts some dedicated community servants. Dave Winfield established the Dave Winfield Foundation, which has helped youngsters, people in old age homes and awareness about C.P. and what it does to children. Many major leaguers have gotten involved. I'm especially proud of the fact that all 16 teams have '65 Roses' Clubs, which give baseball a special role in fighting the illness."

Yankees pitcher Ron Guidry, a former Clemente Award recipient, is involved with Special Olympics for the retarded and handicapped. Phil Niekro, the 1980 Clemente winner, and his brother Joe work with the Spina Bifida Association, which benefits those with open spine disease. Phillies outfielder Gary Maddox helps the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic for emotionally troubled children and their families. Atlanta Braves outfielder Dale Murphy is the honorary chairman for the Huntington's Disease Foundation and for the American Cancer Society in Georgia. California Angels third baseman Doug DeCinces hosts a golf tournament for the March of Dimes, the largest fund raiser for the organization.

"When I first started, not too many people knew very much about Cystic Fibrosis," Baylor said. "I have helped them gain an awareness about C.P. and what it does to children. FOCUS

The Emerson String Quartet dazzled the audience this week at University of Hartford, concluding its sixth season at the university's Hartt School of Music. For this talented foursome, the sum of all the parts is less than the whole.

Musicians avoid star billing to keep the act a foursome

Center Stage
Renee Taylor

Totally awesome is a trendy teenage hype phrase. In conventional parlance with no hype intended, the term describes the phenomenal Emerson String Quartet.

Tuesday evening Emerson concluded its sixth season at the University of Hartford's Hartt School of Music. Would the group repeat the excellent impression it made at the season's opening in October? Yes! Philip Setzer and Eugene Drucker alternate first violin roles. Lawrence Dutton on viola and David Fincke on cello support them. But they're not concerned with star billing. Each is a consummate musician.

Emerson delights the mind and stirs the senses with a rare level of intuitive cooperation and intense focus. Never do members force effects or violate rhythmic integrity.

So confident are members of the group that they successfully blend romantic style with a portamento technique — sliding between notes. Drucker ably demonstrated this in the last piece, Emerson often paces itself with the rubato technique — dwelling and prolonging prominent melody choruses and tones — for an arresting effect.

Local boy makes good. That must be why local programs feature the works of Connecticut composer Charles Ives (1874-1954). For 40 years, this insurance executive wrote highly dissonant music full of personal symbolism. Emerson mistakenly opened the concert with Elvis' boring Quartet

Supermarket Shopper

Grocery stores take time planning promotion offers

By Martin Stone
United Feature Syndicate

Promotion offers are not cooked up overnight. The promotional staff must simmer long and the stirring must be almost continuous if the promotional offer is to succeed. Take the "Free Prego" offer that will appear in 47 million newspaper inserts this coming weekend, for example.

A free 32-ounce jar of Prego spaghetti sauce is the prize anyone can win by sending in six proofs of purchase — two from Prego, two from Kraft Grated Parmesan and two from pasta.

"It is an attractive offer," says Jerry Caughlin, a marketing executive of Kraft, "because these are products that everyone uses. In fact, consumers probably have some of them sitting in their kitchens right now."

It took more than a year to bring this refund offer to a complicated one. In fact, three different manufacturers are involved: Campbell's for the Prego, Kraft for the Parmesan cheese and Borden for the pasta brands (Cremette, Luxury and Ronco) that are included in most of the offers. Most, because there is no one pasta maker or brand that has full nationwide distribution and in much of the Northeast and San Francisco, where a Borden-brand pasta is not sold, consumers can win in two proofs from any brand of pasta.

"February is one of the strongest pasta months of the year, and the purpose of the offer is to encourage consumers to plan their menus using these three products," says Caughlin. "Each of the three brands are also offering retailers lower prices so they can put our products on sale and pass these savings along to consumers."

When you read the "Free Prego" advertisement in the Sunday coupon insert, there is some good news and some bad news, but the bad news is not really bad. The good news comes in the form of a 15-cent coupon on Kraft Grated Parmesan to start off your savings. The bad news is the notice that consumers should look for the official multi-form on "Free Prego" displays at their local grocers.

"We know that not every grocer will put up the display, and we have provided an address for consumers who want to write in and obtain the form," says Caughlin. The address is Free Prego Offer Form, P.O. Box 4794, Monticello, MN 55365. The offer expires on Aug. 31, 1986. The offer is also appearing on the backs of 15 million Cremette, Luxury and Ronco pasta packages.

How many consumers are expected to send in their "Free Prego" offer? "We are expecting as many as half a million requests for free Prego," said David Tittle, an advertising and promotion specialist who put the promotion together for the three manufacturers.

Although Prego is a relatively new brand, it is now the No. 2 spaghetti sauce in the nation, behind front-runner Ragu, and consumer promotion offers like "Free Prego" are an important reason for the brand's success.

The story behind the story

By Josie

Q. I would like some information on Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio. She was quite good in the miniseries "Mussolini." Anthony Mastrantuone, Waterbury, Conn.
A. She's 26, from Oak Brook, Ill., the fifth of six daughters of a bronze-foundry worker. She had a clear, strong soprano voice, even as a child, and was steered toward studying opera; she entered the University of Illinois as a music major. During the summer, though, she worked at Opryland U.S.A. in Nashville and preferred the atmosphere there to her classical training. After her sophomore year, she dropped out of college and worked at Opryland for two years. She returned to Chicago to audition for the road company of the musical "Carnegie" won a part in the chorus and then went to New York as a replacement for the Maria role in "West Side Story."
 Two short-lived shows, "Copperfield" and "Oh, Brother," followed, as did a stretch understudying Amy Irving in "Amadeus" when she was cast in her first film, "Scarface," as Al Pacino's sister. That led her back to the New York stage in "The Human Comedy" and recently "The Marriage of Figaro."
 Currently, she's filming "The Color of Money," the sequel to "The Hustler," directed by Martin Scorsese and starring Paul Newman and Tom Cruise. ■

Q. Please tell me where Peter Weller is from and what he's doing now. E.V., Atlantic City, N.J.
A. He was born in Stevens Point, Wis., but his father was in the Air Force, so he grew up in Germany and all over the U.S. Currently, he's filming a movie for HBO called "Apology" with Lesley Ann Warren. ■

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write to: Josie, Between the Lines, King Features Syndicate, 235 E. 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Robert Duvall

Q. Since my husband and I have the same last name as actor Robert Duvall, we'd like to know a bit about him. Mrs. Ray Duvall, Galisburg, Ill.
A. He's 55, was born in San Diego and raised in Annapolis, Md., one of three sons of a naval officer who retired at the rank of rear admiral. Young Bobby loved going to movies and while in college, at Principia College in Illinois, started acting.
 After graduation, he went into the Army for two years; following his discharge, he enrolled at New York's Neighborhood Playhouse, alongside such later notables as Dustin Hoffman, Gene Hackman and James Caan.
 While there, he was spotted by two writers who would further his career tremendously: Horton Foote, who suggested

Telly Savalas

Q. What has Telly Savalas been up to lately? A.V.P., Pleasantville, N.J.
A. Waiting for Universal to decide when to start shooting another "Kojak" TV movie. Several are planned for each season, and it looks like the next one will go into production next month.
 In the meantime, scripts for two other projects are being finished: "Zaharoff," a miniseries based on the life of Basil Zaharoff, a European arms dealer who surfaced earlier as an important character in the PBS miniseries "Reilly: Ace of Spies," and "The Day They Stole the Mona Lisa," a TV movie about the Brazilian marquis who masterminded the theft. ■

Johnny Carson

Q. What has happened to Johnny Carson? Is he ill? Why is he not appearing on "The Tonight Show"? Donna Kendall, Ontario, Calif.
A. It's no secret that over the last few years, Carson has been getting tired of the weekly grind of the show; he came close to quitting in 1979. But what you've noticed is that he takes a lot of time off — his contract only calls for him to put in 37 four-day weeks a year. That contract was recently renewed and should carry him through his 25th anniversary in 1987. After that, he could bow out altogether. ■

Richard Anderson

Q. I think Richard Dean Anderson of "MacGyver" is adorable. Please tell me about him and what other shows he's been in. L. Cumming, Fredericton, N.B., Canada
A. He's 35, a strapping, 6'2" athlete who tested his physical stamina by bicycling to Alaska and back home to Minneapolis when he was 17. This followed his recovery from two broken arms, injuries sustained while playing varsity hockey.
 After the broken arms episode, he decided to give up the idea of going into professional hockey. He studied drama at St. Cloud State College and Ohio University and then went to Los Angeles to pursue a career. He worked as a street mime, a department-store salesman and a stage manager until he started to get acting jobs: a role in the play "Superman in the Bones" at the Mark Taper Forum, a stint writing, producing and appearing in productions at Marineland. Finally, he got a regular job, as Dr. Jeff Webber in "General Hospital," which led to other series: "Today's FBI," "Emerald Point" and "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers."
 "MacGyver," which hasn't been doing too well in its timeslots, has just been given another one: the lead-in to "Dynasty" which is expected to help its showing...and his prospects of regular employment. ■ that he be cast in the film version of his "To Kill a Mockingbird." Duvall's film debut, and Arthur Miller, who suggested him for his play, "A View from the Bridge," Duvall's first major Broadway success.

 In the 25 years that he's been acting, though, the roles and successes have been numerous: onstage in "Wait Until Dark" and "American Buffalo," on film in "The Godfather," "Network," "The Seven Percent Solution," "The Great Santini," "M.A.S.H.," "True Confessions," "Apocalypse Now" and "Tender Mercies," for which he won the Oscar as Best Actor.
 Currently, he's in a film called "The Lightstrip" and has a number of upcoming projects: He just finished a film called "Let's Get Harry," in which he plays a mercenary ("He had a lot of fun with that," explains an associate) who accompanies a group of plumbers to South America to rescue a fellow plumber who's been kidnapped. In January, he started shooting "Hotel Colonial," co-starring his brother-in-law, John Savage.

 After that, he plans to shoot a film called "Luck," and then he plans to direct and star in a film he's written called "The Apostle E.F. Holt." He also has a film that he co-produced, "Acadian Waltz," on the boards for release.
 He was divorced from his first wife, Barbara, in 1975 and was involved thereafter with actress Lindsay Crouse, who left him to marry playwright David Mamet. He married John Savage's sister, Gail Youngs, in 1982. ■

Great leap forward

Unaccustomed as I am to writing letters to the editor, I feel the publication of your new Saturday magazine section deserves some comment.
 I was astonished and pleased to find a high quality, interesting, and well-written magazine section suddenly appear in our "home town" newspaper. It's a great leap forward and I hope many other readers enjoyed it as much as I did.
 As Mark Twain once said, "Always do right. This will gratify some people ... and astonish the rest."

Here's how one decorator prescribes for M.D.'s offices

By Susan Plese

The last time you sat in the doctor's office you were probably thinking more about your flu symptoms than the office decor.

But interior design for commercial accounts — doctors, lawyers, even funeral directors — is done to achieve specific effects, says Rebecca Jones, an independent interior designer with a business in Manchester.

The average homeowner could do well to take a second look at some of these techniques when decorating their own homes.

Jones was recently hired to design offices for three clients in the newly renovated Watkins Building on Main Street. They include a pediatrician, an oncologist (a cancer specialist) and an acupuncturist. Taking the doctors' own tastes into account, their office spaces and their budgets, she came up with three completely different designs.

"Some people are very contemporary," she says. "They want chrome furniture. Some want the warmth of wood. It's not so much different than decorating for a home."

"But there are other things to be taken into consideration, such as fire codes. The carpet has to meet standards of flammability, as do wallcoverings."

Even more important than the doctor's personal tastes, however, may be his or her concern for the comfort of the patients. Who are they and why are they there?

Dr. Nassem Deen, the pediatrician, wanted an office space that would visually stimulate her young patients.

Wallcoverings were chosen in bright, primary colors. A play alcove in her waiting room, for instance, is papered in tiny blue teddy bears and birds. But a wide border design of giant bears leaning on picket fences was used at the base of each wall, rather than at ceiling height, where decorative borders are customarily seen. The reason: children are attracted to bold designs at their eye level.

Using that same logic, one of the examining rooms was papered in a design featuring a child's building blocks. The bold border, this time, was used at ceiling level, so children lying on the examining table would have something interesting to look up at. Parents planning a child's bedroom or playroom could easily consider the same devices.

Many of Dr. Deen's patients are in for routine physicals. Others, however, are ill and need comfort rather than stimulation. A "quiet room" was designed in light pastels to accommodate these children.

The office carpet is a heavy-duty commercial type in a brown tweed. It is certainly practical for a room where children gather. Unpapered walls are painted white and punctuated with wall hangings, including a bright, stretched-canvas graphic in red, blue and green.

ON ANOTHER LEVEL of the Watkins Building, Jones found herself with another set of considerations. Her client, Dr. Anthony Postero Jr., treats cancer patients. He and three other doctors who share the office wanted a soothing rather than stimulating environment.

"They wanted it quiet and calm and hopeful," Jones says. "They wanted lots of plants, but one of the doctors felt that plants could be disease-bearing, so they opted for silk, the use of natural materials, wood, colors of soft seafoam, and peach."

When a visitor walks in the door of the office, in fact, the impression is one of being enveloped in warm water. Chair upholstery, wallcoverings, paint and even laminate counters are in the same soft blues, greens and grays. Chairs are oak-framed. Silk plants in wood planters decorate corners, and prints are muted.

The oncologist deliberately stayed away from earth tones. While earthtones continue to enjoy popularity in home decorating, "there is a viewpoint that earthtones in a doctor's office can be

Learning to get along takes a while

By Fred Rogers with Barry Head

The room was crowded, but in the crowd there was one standout: a 4-year-old who was marching around the edges with a scowl, chanting, "Too much pee-pull! Too much pee-pull!" Do you know the feeling?

From the time we're born, babies tend to find other human beings a stimulating sight. Some babies, by nature, are more sensitive to faces than others, but few babies greet a face with no reaction at all.

That's not surprising; as babies we're completely dependent on what other people do to and for us. Most of what we are learning then about ourselves and our world comes through other people, and part of what we have to learn as we go is how to adapt to these people while still remaining the individuals we are.

The way that process unfolds in our earliest years will have a lot to do with how it continues during the rest of our lives, and that process can't be hurried.

There's a common occurrence among babies that suggests how little sense (if any) they have of individuality: If two babies are in the same room together and one begins to cry, the other will often start howling, too. It's hard to know why this happens. The second baby may be feeling a general sense of alarm or may even feel an actual part of the first baby's crying as though he or she were the one doing it.

It must seem to little babies that they are part of everything and everything a part of them. At that age, there's no way a baby can either think or even feel something like: "There's someone else who's uncomfortable and crying, but I'm fine and don't need to cry."

For a tiny baby, there's just no such thing as someone else.

The understanding that "You're someone else and I'm someone else" unfolds slowly in the first years of life, and for each child it moves on a different timetable. By toddlerhood, though, the sight of a someone else you love is usually already exciting and pleasurable. It may cause a sudden rush across a room to hug a knee, along with laughter and babbling. Many parents have seen how arousing the sight of another toddler can be — the sight of a someone else like me. To parents' alarm, that can lead to a loss of self-control and a rush across a store or street as though the rest of the world had ceased to exist.

Have you noticed how frequently these impulsive approaches to strange children end up in the two of them staying some distance apart and staring intently at one another? That stare can be similar to the one toddlers may give themselves in a mirror. It's as if they're trying to work out how much of a someone else they're dealing with.

Toddler's excitement and curiosity about themselves and one another, though, suggests that most small children are prepared to be sociable. That may be one reason that parents can become concerned when their preschoolers appear to be loners instead, unwilling to play with other children. It just doesn't seem natural.

It may, however, be both natural and necessary. Until a child has developed a reasonable secure sense of self, playing with other children can quickly become overstimulating. Time alone or in the company of loved and trusted caregivers is where this self-confidence grows best, because it's through their early closeness with these caregivers that children develop the capacity to be social.

As a child feels ready, he or she may be able to play contentedly alongside another child... then with another child... and then, by 4 or 5 or so, with a small group of children.

These steps in growth and development don't, of course, occur in a neat and tidy sequence or at predictable intervals. What parents are most likely to notice are signs of unreadiness for certain kinds of sociability. Those signs — tantrums, fights or a chant of "too much pee-pull!" — don't have to mean a child is anti-social. What they're most likely to be are a child's way of saying, "What I need instead of a lot of someone elses right now is more time to get to know me."

Alice Trattner invites you to 'puppygarten'

Alice Trattner takes a moment to play with Pudge, a Lhasa apso owned by Nancy Fournier of Manchester.

By Adele Angle

It's hard to tell who's Pudge and who's Brandon. The two puppies are one ball of fur as they roll over and over in some strange imitation of the latest disco craze.

At the other side of the room, Lady, a beautiful poodle, is doing her best to sniff Patch, a sheltie mix. Tramp, Lady's roommate, a Labrador retriever, joins in the introductions.

No, this isn't some strange canine singles' bar. It's puppy kindergarten, which takes place once a week after office hours in the foyer of Bolton Veterinary Hospital. And the pups are doing exactly what their instructor, Alice Trattner, wants them to do. They're socializing.

"If puppies are weaned early, they often have no experience with their litter mates. They grow up being afraid of other dogs," says Trattner. She stands in the midst of the confusion. Half a dozen dog owners ring the room, watching their puppies scrambling about.

Trattner is amazingly calm. And she's as gentle with the people as she is with the pups. "My aim is to make a better dog-owner bond and a better pet," she explains.

She has only conducted the puppy kindergarten for about a year but she has had years of experience working with dogs. She has taught dog obedience classes and she has worked as a research assistant in the bio-behavioral sciences graduate program at the University of Connecticut.

And, for the last three years, she's counseled the owners of "problem" dogs — dogs who have developed pesky behavior such as biting or chewing. She does so on a referral-only basis from local veterinarians.

The emphasis at puppy kindergarten is on praise, not punishment. The class operates on dog treats and lots of enthusiastic encouragement.

"Puppies don't respond to negative training at all," Trattner says. "They're too happy-go-lucky."

Trattner didn't invent the term "puppy kindergarten." "The term is used for a lot of different things. I'm not sure many people do what I do. A lot of times it's just a way of Continued ...

According to Trattner

The biggest mistake people make with dogs:

"Not trying to put themselves in the dog's place and seeing the situation the way the dog does. If they're having trouble training the dog to do something, they're not good at saying, 'Now what is the dog really responding to here?'"

Antivivisectionists:

"I'm all for eliminating any kind of suffering whenever possible. I try to let that guide me in my own dealings with animals. But I feel there's a higher calling in a lot of cases and science needs to progress. And, despite what a lot of these people would have you believe, a lot of these experiments are vital. I'd find it extremely difficult to do some of the drug testing and cosmetic testing myself. But I'd never forbid anyone from doing it."

Biting:

"It's a very serious problem with dogs. Once they have learned how effective it is, you can never really be completely assured that they won't try it again. The best thing to do is to make sure they never learn. The best way to do that is to never leave them tied outside unattended. This is a major cause of dog biting."

Barbara Woodhouse:

"I think that she is an interesting show woman, and has had a successful TV career because she does put people down. This makes for good TV viewing."

Guard dogs:

"Dogs naturally protect their home by giving a warning. The best function a dog can have is to bark, to give a warning. After that, the owner should let the dog know that he makes the decision after that."

Guard dog owners:

"There are an awful lot of people now who get dogs for protection. They want the dog to protect the house but they don't have a very good idea of what that means. ... You never want to encourage a dog to be hostile to strangers. A dog will do enough of that on his own. You never want to encourage him. You'll end up with a dog who is a big problem."

House breaking:

"It's politely called house training. That's a misnomer, too. I don't think there's a lot of training involved. Dogs have a strong natural tendency to keep their home environment clean. ... All the owner really does is shape the behavior a bit. Directing the dog outside, for instance."

Chewing:

"This is usually caused by some sort of frustration. A dog should always have something to chew, especially young dogs. If it goes further than that, look to his environment, particularly if he's alone too much."

Owners who say, "He deliberately wet in the living room":

"Dogs tend to not wet in areas they frequent, and to want to wet in places they've never been before. If you shut them out of the rest of the house — say out of the living room — if they get into the living room, they'll consider that the perfect place. That's why people will say, 'It looks like he did it deliberately.' They're right. He did. For the dog, it's the perfect place. It's nice and absorbent and he's hardly ever in there."

The secret of house breaking:

"The trick is to keep the dog in a small area, but teach him to ask to go out. As you begin to let him expand his territory, you must do it only when you can carefully watch him. So if he looks like he wants to go out, you can let him out. Go and at least rattle the knob and ask him if he wants to go out. That way he learns that if he ever goes near that door, you go and open it."

No bones about it — puppygarten is a treat starting obedience training early for competitive dogs. But I do it mostly for the new dog owner," she says.

Puppy kindergarten is not to be confused with obedience class. That is a type of instruction for older dogs, 6 months and up. Much of what is taught is for show dogs, who must learn to perform certain exercises such as retrieving and jumping.

At puppy kindergarten, the emphasis is on getting used to new sights and sounds, and starting to work on basic skills, such as coming when called and sitting down and staying.

Just moments earlier, Trattner starts the ball, er, dogs, rolling.

Al Tarquinio/Manchester Herald

Class members sit in a circle and pass puppies. The exercise gets the pups used to being handled by strangers.

"When I say 'go,' release them!" she instructs.

Those who sign up for Trattner's class say it's a fun night out for both owner and pup.

Anette Smith, the owner of Patch, the sheltie mix, watched her dog play. "She's learning the basic stuff — sit down and stay. She's done well. And it's been a lot of fun," says Smith.

She looks at the scene around her and starts to laugh. "Total chaos. For an hour," she says.

Mary Griffin comes to class with Sandra LeBrun and her mother, Gail LeBrun of 127 Birch St. Brandon, a Pekingese, sticks close to them, but he's not afraid when other dogs approach.

"The first night he sat under here and wouldn't come out," says Griffin.

Nancy Fournier of 93 Ashworth St. watches as Pudge walks around the room.

"We've gotten so much out of it," she says. She has always had cats as pets before. "I wasn't sure what to do after 20 years of having cats," she says. Classes, she says, are a combination of fun and instruction. "It's not ordering the dog around. It's teaching with play."

Her dog, she says, enjoys the class as much as she does.

"They like to come here. It's like their friends are here."

The dogs make friends for

According to Trattner

A favorite breed?

"I have strong attractions to some types of dogs but you can't own them all. I like Dobermans. I like their responsiveness. That makes them very easy to train." (What about their reputation as a mean dog?) "They do have that reputation, but that's not entirely just. Because they're so sensitive, they get frightened easily. They're never a dog that you just tie in the back yard and just forget about. They're not a laid-back breed."

Dog food:

"In general, you should look for something that doesn't have dye, something that has a natural color and not a red color. Most dog food is designed to be attractive to humans and not to dogs. Some types are loaded with sugar. I'd say avoid things that are excessively advertised because you're just paying for the advertising. Look at the ingredients and particularly to the first four ingredients. They're the majority of what is in the food. The other things are very small amounts. Think about the fact that some food has a lot more water than others and you're just buying water — something you can always add."

Veterinarians:

"I don't think they're any different than doctors and dentists. There are some good ones and some bad ones."

Table scraps:

"They're fine as long as they're considered part of the daily diet and not something extra. As long as people can eat it, dogs can eat it. The major problem with this type of thing is people overfeed their dogs."

Castration:

"It's something particularly that males don't want to do to their male dogs, but, in fact, it makes for a much better pet in the long run. It cuts down on the production of new dogs, which is an enormous problem in this country."

Grief brought on by loss of a pet:

"I haven't had anybody call me to help them with this problem. I've been through it myself. And I've talked to people who have been through it. I always feel that the best solution is to get another puppy within a month or so. There's nothing like a little puppy to cheer you up. ... But the new puppy should not be brought home with the idea that it is just a replacement for the old. You should probably get a new breed."

Getting a dog to come when called:

"Make it worth his while. Use food, praise. Avoid any authoritative attitude until the dog is thoroughly trained outside. That's because you actually have no authority when the dog is loose. You don't ever want him to find that out. It's very important that you don't take him off lead too early. To a naive pet owner, that's very hard to describe. Their idea of early is eons before an experienced trainer's idea of early. If there's any chance the dog is going to refuse to come to you, he shouldn't be off lead. The first time he refuses to come, he finds out there's nothing you can do about it."

The three-to-one theory:

"If your dog associates coming with good things, at least on a three-to-one basis with bad things, that's essential. For every time you call the dog and say, 'Now we're going in,' call him three other times, and say, 'That's a good dog,' and let him go."

A pretend visit to the vet is part of 'school' seven weeks, one hour at a time. The entire course costs $25.

After the first 15 minutes or so, Trattner sits the dog owners and their puppies in a circle on the floor. Dogs are then passed from owner to owner.

The idea, Trattner says, is simply to get the dogs used to handling by strangers.

Class members coax the dogs to sit in their laps by offering them a dog treat. "As soon as you get rid of a puppy, turn and take another puppy," Trattner says.

"Don't let them get too wild. Give them the treat and then make them behave," she instructs. "When you pass a puppy, pass the leash first so the other person has control."

"What we're doing here is getting them used to being handled by someone other than their owner," Trattner says.

At one point, owners bring their puppies up to a table, one by one. The pups stand on the table, and Trattner gently tugs at their legs and then blows in their ears.

The experience, she explains, is a little unpleasant, and will make them more used to being at the veterinarian's office or the dog groomer's. The dogs quiet as the class proceeds. And, considering that all of them are so young, it's a minor miracle that only one dog has an "accident."

That's been one surprise for Trattner. Puppies seldom mess during class.

"My first class, I was all set with newspapers," Trattner says, laughing. ■

Adele Angle, editor of Weekend Plus Magazine, owns a cat.

According to Trattner

Abandoning animals:

"There's this common attitude that if you have a dog you want to get rid of, take it out into the country and let it go. This is decidedly wrong. The dog has no chance out there. He is going to be attracted to people. He's not going to go out into the wild. His attraction to people will get him shot or run over. Or he'll die a horrible death of starvation... which can take quite a while. The best thing to do is take the dog to a pound or a shelter or the dog warden. If he is not adopted, he has a humane death, which is extremely important, in my view."

Dogs who live in apartments:

"It's not impossible. It makes life a little more difficult unless it's a really small dog. There are people who live in houses who never let their dogs out. It's fair as long as it is consistent. If you keep a dog in, it never knows what it's missing. If you give it a taste of the outdoors and then decide you have to keep it in, that's when it's hard on the dog."

Barking:

"If it's alarm barking, when somebody comes to the door, that's one thing, but if the dog is just sitting all day long barking, it's because it's alone. There's little you can do but change his environment. Being alone is not a natural thing for a dog. Some take to being alone all right but some can never handle it. Dogs are pack animals and they never expect to be alone."

Can you do it yourself? Sure you can!

By Richard Harris

Can you repair your own car? If your response is something like, "I can check the radiator, add oil and change a flat tire, but I don't know how to do anything complicated like replace a water pump," this story is for you.

It's told by Larry Owens, author of "How to Keep Your Subaru Alive" (coming in May from John Muir Publications):

"In the '60s and early '70s, Wilbur Kleenex, Billy J. Trucker and I owned and operated an independent Volkswagen garage in Santa Fe, N.M., called The Grease Pit."

"In 1969, John Muir started hanging around the garage and said he was writing a VW repair manual for people with no mechanical experience ("How to Keep Your Volkswagen Alive"). We wondered how anyone could work on their own car without having first read all the hot-rod and custom-car books of the '50s!

"Anyway... We soon had a steady stream of transient flower children (and a few lawyers, housewives, musicians, outlaws, etc.) wanting to do their own VW repair work in the Grease Pit parking lot. At first, we were quite skeptical. But in the spirit of those times, we wanted to help our fellow man, so we gave them a spot in the lot and let 'em go for it.

"It didn't take long to convince us that...any man, woman or adolescent who could read could rebuild an engine, could do a brake job, and could do almost everything necessary to keep their cars in safe, dependable working order.

"Some of the parking-lot people enjoyed working on their cars so much that they ended up working with us at The Grease Pit. We made a lot of good friends, had a lot of fun, and were usually rewarded with a couple of dollars for the use of the parking lot and an occasional tool. In all that time, we were never ripped off!

"The times they haven't changed, but people haven't. There are still friendly people in garages who will help if you get stuck with a broken bolt or crossed wire. In fact, most mechanics and automotive machinists are impressed by mechanically inexperienced people who have the ambition and guts to work on their own cars."

Saving money is one reason to do it yourself. When you work on your car, you learn firsthand what's going on under the hood. That knowledge can be worth a lot the next time you have mechanical problems far from home. You'll never have to worry about your car and pocketbook falling prey to a dishonest repair-shop operator. And the good feeling you'll get from proving to yourself that you can do it is worth even more than the money you'll save. Besides, once you're over the "but I don't know how" self-doubts, you may discover that working on cars can be fun. (Many people do it as a hobby.)

Don't forget — a friendly, helpful mechanic is your best source of help and advice. When you find one, always let him know he's appreciated. (An occasional six-pack, according to Larry Owens, might work fine.) ■

First, though, you'll need accurate "how-to" information. Since John Muir's parking-lot days, "simple" car-repair manuals have proliferated. Some of them are worth their weight in gold. Others are useless (or worse). General books covering all cars won't tell you what you need to know to work on your car. Mass-market, photo-illustrated repair manuals, written for experienced mechanics, don't give you the basic information and safety precautions non-mechanics should know before they start.

Ask whether a simplified repair manual on your car is available at your library or bookstore. Then, before buying one, call your mechanic and ask whether he would recommend the book for do-it-yourselfers.

Do it yourself? Sure! But don't forget — a friendly, helpful mechanic is your best source of help and advice. When you find one, always let him know he's appreciated. (An occasional six-pack, according to Larry Owens, might work fine.) ■

Disease can make insertion difficult

Many are too embarrassed to talk about Peyronie's disease

By Dr. June M. Reinsch

DEAR DR. REINSCH: I'm 60 and enjoyed sex with my wife until lately. It's difficult to explain my problem, but it's no joke. My penis looks normal when it's relaxed, but during erection it curls toward my body. The bend is gradually getting worse and it's difficult to insert into the vagina.

Can anything be done about this?

DEAR READER: Make an appointment to see a urologist. When you call, ask if that doctor specializes in diagnosing and treating Peyronie's disease. If he or she doesn't, ask for the name of a specialist who does.

During adulthood, development of a bend in the penis during erections can be a sign of Peyronie's disease, which is caused by the growth of a fibrous area in the penis.

The severity of the bend and effective treatments vary from one man to the next, so you should be examined by someone who's familiar with this condition and the current treatments available.

That specialist can also discuss possible sexual techniques that you and your wife could try so you could continue to enjoy sex while the condition is being evaluated. Don't hesitate to ask the doctor about these techniques if he or she doesn't mention them. Unfortunately, some physicians believe they shouldn't risk embarrassing a patient by raising this topic, so they depend on the patient to do so.

If talking about sexual activity is as difficult for you as it is for most people, hand the physician a copy of this column and say you and your wife want the kind of help discussed, either from the doctor or a therapist the doctor recommends.

Masturbation

DEAR DR. REINSCH: I'm a single male, 26, and don't have a sex partner. I masturbate, sometimes several times a week. I've heard this isn't healthy. What kinds of problems can masturbation cause?

DEAR READER: With the exception of rare instances of genital injury resulting from overly rough stimulation, masturbation is not known to cause any physical problem. If, however, masturbation makes you feel anxious or guilty, you might want to consider counseling to discuss your psychological conflicts. Research reveals that masturbation is practiced by more than 90 percent of males and approximately 75 percent of females.

Circumcision

DEAR DR. REINSCH: We're expecting our first child. If it's a boy, should he be circumcised? We understand there is no medical reason for circumcision, but is there an effect on sexuality?

We've heard two views: That circumcision removes sensitive penile nerve endings that would make sex more enjoyable for both the man and his partner, and the opposite — that circumcised men have hardened glands that minimize premature ejaculation. Which is true?

DEAR READER: There's no conclusive comparative research on circumcised vs. uncircumcised sexual functioning. This lack of information should be understandable: Few men have functioned both ways as adults.

The few men studied who were circumcised as adults report that the skin on the head of the penis gradually becomes less sensitive, as it is no longer protected by the foreskin from routine contact with clothing. Some of the circumcised men also reported being able to have coitus longer before reaching orgasm, theoretically because of the decreased sensitivity of the glands.

But because sexual functioning to some extent a learned behavior, each man can gradually acquire the sexual skills and techniques that contribute to adequate functioning with his particular partner — whether he has foreskin or not.

Some parents worry that if their son is not circumcised he'll face ridicule by his circumcised peers. Although the fear of being "different" may trouble some young men, these concerns may be resolved with counseling.

You might be interested to know that the American Academy of Pediatrics (in 1971 and again in 1975) and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists have re-evaluated the health value of routine circumcision for newborns and do not recommend the practice. The U.S. rate of circumcision has been dropping. Today, more than half the baby boys in the United States are still being circumcised, but this rate is much lower than the 80 percent to 90 percent during the 1970s.

Only 1 percent to 2 percent of the boys are born with a medical problem requiring circumcision as a treatment, although some religions and cultures mandate circumcision at either birth or puberty. With those valid exceptions, however, circumcision is not now seen as necessary for genital hygiene.

Medical recommendations for care of the uncircumcised penis have also changed from the earlier emphasis on regular retraction of the foreskin to remove secretions. It is now recognized that before birth the top of the penis and the foreskin are a single tissue. Full separation of the foreskin from the penis is very gradual, sometimes taking five to 10 years after birth. Production of adult smegma (an oily secretion from glands under the foreskin) does not begin until puberty.

Good hygiene for boys doesn't involve forcible retraction of the foreskin. Daily washing of the external penile surface with soap and water is all that is necessary. The foreskin will eventually retract naturally and older boys can be taught the importance of retracting the foreskin and cleaning beneath it as a part of the daily bath or shower.

This is a decision that parents should make based on their personal feelings. But circumcision is no longer thought to be medically or hygienically necessary. For a brochure on this topic, write to The American Academy of Pediatrics, P.O. Box 927, Elk Grove Village, IL 60007.

HELP!

DEAR DR. REINSCH: What's the address for HELP (Herpetics Engaged in Living Productively)? Do you know of any other organizations that help people cope with herpes?

DEAR READER: The Herpes Resource Center, P.O. Box 100,

Palo Alto, Calif., 94302, can send you the address of the HELP chapter nearest you. This is a service of the American Social Health Association, which also provides information about the treatment and management of herpes and about various other groups that may be available in your area.

Uterus enlarged

DEAR DR. REINSCH: After viewing ultrasound pictures of my uterus, my doctor referred me to a gynecologist. My uterus is enlarged with fibroid tumors. He said I was sterile because of the tumors and should have a hysterectomy.

I'm single and have no children. Isn't there some way to remove the tumors without removing my uterus? Will this operation end my periods? Should I also have my ovaries removed?

DEAR READER: You didn't mention your age or whether it's important to you to maintain your option to have children. Both factors should be taken into consideration regarding a possible hysterectomy (surgical removal of the uterus).

It's estimated that about 20 percent of all women develop fibroid tumors in the uterus by age 35, and that uterine fibroids are the No. 1 reason for removal of the uterus.

Fibroid tumors are nearly always benign (non-cancerous) and require surgery only if they become so large that they cause pain or heavy bleeding, or cause bladder or rectal problems because they press on those areas.

Fibroid growth rates are affected by estrogen. Growth will often slow if hormonal birth-control pills are stopped or menopause is reached.

Uterine fibroids can reduce fertility but don't necessarily make a woman "sterile." If you wish to preserve your uterus, you should ask about a surgical procedure called myomectomy, which removes tumors from the wall of the uterus but leaves the uterus intact. This more-limited surgery is successfully done when only a small amount of uterine wall is involved. But after a myomectomy, most pregnancies require a Caesarean delivery, and in about 10 percent of cases, the fibroids recur.

Fibroid tumors don't usually affect the ovaries, so even if you decide to have a hysterectomy, you shouldn't automatically approve an oophorectomy (surgical removal of the ovaries) unless there's medical evidence of ovarian involvement.

Even though menstruation stops with a hysterectomy (there's no longer a uterus from which a lining is shed each month) as does reproductive capacity, research has now established that estrogen is an important ingredient in protecting the bones against osteoporosis. Therefore, if your ovaries (which produce estrogen) are removed, taking replacement hormones is an important health consideration not directly related to fertility.

Hysterectomy is major surgery. You should always have a second opinion before undergoing major surgery. If you want to consider having a myomectomy or other options instead of a hysterectomy, consult a fertility specialist or a fertility clinic.

While you investigate your options, be alert to any changes in your condition. If it seems the tumor is growing rapidly or you experience abnormal bleeding, you should report that to your personal physician immediately.

Rarely serious

DEAR DR. REINSCH: Could you please tell me why sperm should have a dark reddish-brown color?

DEAR READER: Assuming your question is about the fluid ejaculated at orgasm, (usually a whitish color) a dark brown or red color could be blood in the ejaculate (called hematospermia). Any sudden change in the color of the ejaculate should always be reported promptly to a physician.

This rarely is a serious problem in itself. Some men have hematospermia for years. But this could be a sign of an infection or other problem with the prostate or urinary tract.

Make an appointment with a urologist. The doctor will examine your genitals and test to determine if you have a condition requiring treatment.

Exactly what makes a good teacher?

By Shirley Yaskin

Since I can no longer read papers comfortably without holding them at arm's length, I just went shopping for glasses. I am convinced the optician cajoled me into purchasing an expensive pair of Christian Dior frames simply because he told me the others made me look too much like a teacher.

And what is a teacher supposed to look like?

I once asked my students to create a descriptive picture of a teacher. Invariably, teachers were portrayed as perennial wearers of chalk dust on their posteriors. One student described a teacher running to the bank with her first paycheck after taking an oath of poverty from the School of Education upon graduation. (Her mother is a teacher.)

I tease my students that all teachers retreat to the privacy of homes decorated in Early American, pre-Ichabod Crane furnishings. We sit down to grade papers every night while wearing long-lasting night shirts, sipping tea, adjusting our glasses and cackling — hoping to ruin someone's grade-point average. Unfortunately, I think my students believe my description.

Beyond this stereotypical image of a teacher, there remains this question: What makes a good teacher? Opinions vary.

One principal told his faculty that he measured a good teacher by how many papers he kept. Teachers, he said, should write in the same ink color, preferably black.

I guess I fail his test because I can never find the right pen at the right time. I have a teacher friend who has the audacity to use colored magic markers with varying odors to suit his moods — and I though he was a great teacher!

Being a good teacher is the sum total of many intangibles, but I place importance on the ability to build character.

Instead of telling my students that grades will be based solely on tests, quizzes and homework assignments, I'll let them know that character will also be figured into the grade equation.

The whiz kids in my class, well-equipped with their fancy calculators and acrylic clipboards and armed with erasable pens and white-out, will certainly rebel against these grade requirements. How will they ever be able to factor in character to figure out their grade-point averages?

After all, this is the Me Generation and, according to rock star Madonna, we're living in a material world. I often wonder what today's teens are committed to. The biggest concern for some teens is what jeans to wear and where they are going to park in the overcrowded school parking lot.

Of course, there are those who do have a commitment. Betsy talked about joining the Peace Corps, although many of her friends had no idea what she was talking about.

David said he wanted to go to the Naval Academy and serve his country; Steve asked him how much money he would be making. Jill wrote an editorial in the school newspaper chastising students for applying to what she calls the University of Prestige only to impress their friends. And then there are those who call petty materialism, now shops at secondhand stores for her clothes and wears black nail polish and Daddy's ties in her dare-to-be-different campaign. Ralph says he wants to quit school because Boris Becker did and Boris is getting rich playing tennis.

Finally, there's Barry. He told me he's going to join a service club this year to make his record look good for college. "You've got to play the game," he told me.

"I think I'll teach Robert Frost again this year. It's time we got this Me Generation on the road not taken, the road less traveled," I told him. He looked at me with bewilderment.

"I don't mean which expressway to take on the way to corporate headquarters," I told him. "I'm talking about commitment."

We teachers have a lot of character-building to do. But first we must consider what to do to look stereotypically marvelous and pedagogically wonderful. What should we wear? A real smile, a sense of humor, a feeling of commitment and the challenge of influencing a young person for the rest of his life. ■

Few surprises in 'Power'

By Bob Thomas

Sidney Lumet's career as a director began in television. After making some of the finest dramas of TV's Golden Age, he made a smooth transition to films, starting with "12 Angry Men."

Ten years ago, Lumet excoriated the failed promise of television with Paddy Chayefsky's "Network."

In his latest film, "Power," Lumet attacks the manipulation of the political process by media consultants. It's a worthy target, though not exactly new: Michael Ritchie and Robert Redford skillfully covered the subject in 1972 with "The Candidate."

"Power" fails, not because it is badly done; Lumet and an exceptional cast do their best to bring it to life. But they are ultimately defeated by an overplotted script that offers few surprises and no real revelations about today's politics.

Richard Gere is a atom-powered media adviser whose clients range from a Latin-American dictator to U.S.

candidates for governor and senator. He instructs them how to talk, act, even think. He believes in no one but himself and his early mentor, a senator from Ohio named Hastings (E.G. Marshall).

But now Gere's ex-wife, a British journalist (Julie Christie), is on the prowl for the real reason Hastings is suddenly retiring.

"That's just one of the story threads. Gere is also managing the campaigns of candidates in New Mexico (Fritz Weaver), the state of Washington (Michael Learned) and Ohio (J.T. Walsh).

In two of the campaigns he combats his boozy old partner, Gene Hackman. Lurking in the background is a Washington manipulator (Denzel Washington) capable of drastic deeds on behalf of his Arab oil clients. Gere speeds around in his private jet, his manic pace emphasized as he beats out Gene Krupa drum solos to the classic swing record of "Sing Sing Sing." Symbolism?

The only humanity in the "Power" gallery is contributed by Hackman, who is welcome every time he appears on the screen. Alas, he is not there often enough. Instead, we have Richard Gere, transformed into a Madison Avenue marvel with high-tech offices, tailored suits, suspenders and a mustache. You might buy a used car from this man, but a political candidate?

"Power" ends with the camera panning a massive assemblage of electronic gear as the sound track trumpets "The Stars and Stripes Forever" — just to make sure you got the message.

Rated R, mostly because of language. ■

An intense role for McNichol

By Bob Thomas

LOS ANGELES — Kristy McNichol, the sweet tomboy from television's highly acclaimed "Family," has emerged in her most dramatic role ever.

The film is MGM's "Dream Lover," and it's directed by Alan J. Pakula, a good-luck token for actresses. He helped land Oscar nominations for Liza Minnelli in "The Sterile Cuckoo," Jane Alexander in "All the President's Men" and Jill Clayburgh and Candice Bergen in "Starting Over."

His Oscar winners have included Jane Fonda in "Kluge" and Meryl Streep in "Sophie's Choice." That's impressive company for the slender 23-year-old who first won America's favor as Buddy Lawrence in the critically-acclaimed "Family."

"It is by far the most dramatic, the most intense, the most challenging role I've ever had," Miss McNichol said. "He pulled things out of me that I didn't know were there. It was the most intellectual, educational and emotional experience of my career. It has spoiled me for other ones."

"Dream Lover" is not an easy movie to describe. Miss McNichol plays a 21-year-old who suffers a traumatic experience while living alone in Greenwich Village, then relives the event as well as other frightening things from her own psyche as she dreams.

"Dream Lover" also is not an easy movie to sell. Filmed a year ago, it has remained unreleased as MGM plotted marketing strategy. A release finally was planned for Feb. 21 in Los Angeles and throughout Texas. The company will wait for reaction before further release.

An earlier film, "I Won't Dance," also had a rocky release. In December 1982, filming on the $16 million movie was suspended in the French Alps because of Miss McNichol's illness. The film was later released as "Just the Way You Are," receiving poor reviews.

MGM-UA announced that filming had been suspended because the star was suffering a "chemical imbalance." That led to speculation that Miss McNichol was having drug problems.

During a recent interview she was asked if that had been the case.

"No, I have not had a 'drug problem,'" she replied with faint exasperation. "What happened was that I was emotionally drained. ... I had been growing up fast, and my body couldn't keep up with it.

Nobody realized that was happening. When you grow up, your chemicals can get out of balance, and that can lead to tremendous mood swings. ... I went back and finished the picture, and I've been working since."

Miss McNichol began "Family" at age 12, and the series ran five years. Her movie career since then includes "The End," as Burt Reynolds' daughter; "Only When I Laugh," as Marsha Mason's daughter; and "Little Darlings," with Tatum O'Neal.

The actress now finds she can enjoy herself when she isn't working.

"Lately I've been spending more time on the celebrity tennis circuit," raising money for charity, she said.

"My tennis? It's not bad. I've played some tournaments and once I rallied with John McEnroe for 25 minutes. He said I was pretty good, too." ■

Film capsules

The Best of Times (PG-13) — Robin Williams, Kurt Russell, Pamela Reed. (Comedy) Jack Dundee blew the biggest moment his life. After 13 years watching replays of himself miffing the biggest football game in his high school's history, he arranges a rematch. Many sequences are genuinely amusing. Russell and Reed turn in fine performances, but Williams appears more like a cartoon character than flesh and blood. Besides, 1972 isn't that far back! The characters should be about 30, yet they look more like 45. Grade: C-plus.

Down and Out in Beverly Hills (R) — Nick Nolte, Bette Midler, Richard Dreyfuss, Little Richard. (Comedy) This is a grapefruit: full of juicy pulp, sometimes tart, usually acidic — never satisfying. Loosely based on Renoir's classic 1932 film "Boudu Saved From Drowning," this flick ridicules the bourgeoisie: What happens when a bored, rich family saves a bum from drowning? Renoir made it work; Paul Mazursky doesn't. His direction is laden. And Midler — playing a guru-guided princess — refines the word ham. Grade: C.

The Color Purple (PG) — Whoopi Goldberg, Danny Glover. (Drama) Based on Alice Walker's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, this is the story of a spiritually impoverished black woman in the South at the turn of the century. Her simultaneous attempts to evoke a spiritual reawakening and bring about a reunion with her sister create the plot. This is technically a superb film — the photography, editing and music are done well — but the characters' actions are not believable. Grade: B.

Iron Eagle (PG-13) — Louis Gossett Jr., Jason Gedrick, David Suchet. (Action drama) Hockey is the only word for the first half of this film, in which an Air Force pilot is shot down over a Middle Eastern nation and his son (Jason Gedrick) realizes the bureaucrats running the show aren't about to lift a finger. Being a red-blooded American boy, he decides to take action, and things start to pick up. The climax — Gedrick's one-man battle with the entire air force of the outlaw nation — is good stirring fun. But who taught the filmmakers geography? Somewhere along the line, they got the idea that you can fly from the United States to the Middle East in the time it takes most of us to walk around the block. Grade: C-plus.

Murphy's Romance (PG-13) — Betty Field, James Garner, Conroy Helm. (Drama) This movie, directed by Martin Ritt (and more appropriately titled "Places in the Stable") has no heart. Or soul. Miss Field plays Emma Moriarty, a bitter, frustrated single mom who packs her bags, leaves her womanizing husband (wonderfully played by Brian Kerwin) and heads for a small Arizona town, where she sets up a horse boarding ranch. She has a 12-year-old son who hates school. He pouts, she pouts. We pout. Miss Field tries to fill Emma with spunk and drive, but both fall flat on their hard-working back. Garner is fine as the widower who refuses to reveal his age and — you got it — falls in love with Emma. Sorry Sally, we don't like you! We don't like you! Grade: C.

Out of Africa (PG) — Meryl Streep, Robert Redford, Klaus Maria Brandauer. (Drama) There is a magnificent lush love story here; unfortunately, director Sydney Pollack has smothered it in lush portraits of Africa. Miss Streep portrays Karen Blixen (who, in real life, wrote as Isak Dinesen), a materialistic woman living in Kenya. She marries a Swedish baron — who was also her cousin — though she was actually in love with the baron's brother. Enter another love interest, bon vivant Denys. Exit the baron. Enter syphilis and assorted other plagues. Exit the audience. "Out of Africa" could have been more than an overstated version of National Geographic. Miss Streep seems to speak in at least three different Danish accents, and Redford, though still good-looking, looks lost. Grade: D.

Power (R) — Richard Gere, Julie Christie, Gene Hackman, Beaulieu Straight. (Drama) What a cast! What a premise! What a bore! Sidney Lumet tries to make a powerful social-political satire — Gere is an energetic media consultant who, by manipulation and marketing, guarantees political success. But somewhere in the first 30 minutes, the film becomes convoluted, annoying and tiresome. Christie's role as a spineless reporter is thankless, but Straight is marvelous as a Capitol Hill wife bordering on a breakdown. Our vote: Forget it. Grade: C.

Chamberlain stars

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Richard Chamberlain, king of TV miniseries, stars in yet another longform show, 'Dream West,' as American adventurer John Charles Fremont.

The seven-hour series, based on the best-selling historical novel by David Nevin, will be broadcast by CBS in three parts April 13 to 15. Co-starring with Chamberlain will be Alice Krige, F. Murray Abraham and Rene Enriquez.

Chamberlain's previous miniseries include 'The Thorn Birds,' 'Shogun,' 'Centennial' and 'Wallenberg: A Hero's Story.'

'Science' renewed

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — NBC-TV has given the green light to the producers of 'Misfits of Science' for another four episodes to be broadcast by the network this season.

The go-ahead for the additional shows brings to 15 the number of episodes to be produced this year for the low-rated series.

'Misfits of Science' stars Dean Paul Martin, Kevin Peter Hall, Courteney Cox and Thomas Miller. They play a group of young people with special powers who are called upon to combat injustices.

Nostalgia

By Paul Eile

'Like "The Saint," "Secret Agent" and a number of other "60s series, ABC's "It Takes a Thief" featured a slick operative who practiced top-secret espionage as he romanced his way across Europe. The twist to "Thief," which aired from 1968 to 1970, was that SIA agent Alexander Mundy was a convicted criminal. He had struck a deal with the U.S. government — he lent them his skill and cunning, and they gave him his freedom.

But Mundy, played by Robert Wagner, wasn't completely free. When not on assignment, he was subject to house confinement — a rule that was dropped for the series' second season. Later Wagner was part of two TV detective duos — on "Switch," with Eddie Albert, and on "Hart to Hart," with Stefanie Powers. And on the recently canceled "Lime Street," he worked with British actor John Standing.

In the second season of "Thief," Wagner was joined by a legendary film star, who played his father. Question: Who was he?

Answer: Fred Astaire

TV's February sweeps conclude this week

By Andrew J. Edelstein

TV's February sweeps conclude in the final week of this month.

In the head-to-head ratings competition during the first week of February, "Sins," CBS's trashy Joan Collins miniseries, outpointed NBC's historical epic, "Peter the Great."

Now there's another battle — this time between CBS's "Blood & Orchids" and ABC's "Crossings."

"Blood & Orchids" (airing Sunday and Monday) is a cut above the standard miniseries fare, offering a tightly woven plot and some fine performances. The drama, which is set in Hawaii of the 1930s, portrays the corruption and prejudice of the island's white establishment. Four Hawaiian youths are accused of raping and beating a Naval officer's wife. Kris Kristofferson stars as a Honolulu detective investigating the crime. Sean Young ("Blade Runner") plays the alleged rape victim, and Jane Alexander plays her mother, a wealthy socialite.

ABC takes up three consecutive nights (beginning Monday) with "Crossings," a six-hour mini based on Danielle Steel's best-seller. The basic story involves an affair between a French ambassador's wife (Cheryl Ladd) and an industrialist (Lee Horsley) set against the backdrop of World War II. Aaron Spelling ("Dynasty," "Hotel.") produced the miniseries, so the lust-and-sex quotient is expected to be high. Christopher Plummer and Jane Seymour (rapidly becoming the "queen of the miniseries") play the lead roles, respectively.

Mark Knopfler of the Scottish band Dire Straits received eight nominations to lead the field at this year's Grammy Awards. And 1985 was quite a year for Dire Straits, whose LP, "Brothers in Arms," propelled one of the most dramatic comebacks in music history. CBS airs the Grammy ceremonies live on Tuesday from the Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles.

The nominees in the prestigious Record of the Year category included: "Born in the USA" (Bruce Springsteen); "The Boys of Summer" (Don Henley); "Money for Nothing" (Dire Straits); "The Power of Love" (Huey Lewis and the News); and "We Are the World" (USA for Africa).

Say goodbye to "Mary" — at least for awhile. Mary Tyler Moore's comeback sitcom — in which she played a consumer columnist for a Chicago tabloid — has been the victim of weak scripts and even weaker ratings. After the episode airing Wednesday, "Mary" will go on hiatus; translation: New writers will be brought in to juice up those poor story lines. When "Mary" returns, it will air on Tuesday nights, beginning March 3.

"Foley Square," the CBS sitcom about a young Manhattan assistant d.a., followed "Mary" on Wednesday and it will also go on hiatus and return on March 25.

Valerie Harper, Miss Moore's colleague from the beloved "Mary Tyler Moore" show, will star in her own sitcom. Perhaps "Valerie," which debuts Saturday, March 1, on NBC as a "sneak preview," will have better luck than "Mary." Miss Harper plays Valerie Hogan, a suburban housewife and mother of three sons. Her husband is an airline pilot who's often away on the job, so it's up to her to run the house. The show moves into its regular time slot on Monday, March 3.

Scorecard for the Grammys

By Ethlie Ann Vare

Video Beat

As usual, the competition for the Grammy Awards (Tuesday on CBS-TV) reflects the taste of an organization whose bottom line is the bottom line.

To be nominated by their "peers" (usually old enough to be their parents) in the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences, rockers generally have to be a commercial success and take care not to offend anyone.

Years later, the contributions of the truly daring will be recognized. Then everyone will scratch his head and say "Why has this person never won a Grammy?"

Here's your scorecard for the Grammy ceremony, with a few irreverent comments:

Rock category

Best Performance, Male: Don Henley, "Boys of Summer"; John Fogerty, "Centerfield"; Mick Jagger, "Just Another Night"; Bryan Adams, "Reckless"; John Cougar Mellencamp, "Scarecrow."

what's Melba Moore doing in this category? Has NARAS ever heard of Annie Lennox, Chrissie Hynde, Marisa McKee, Martha Davis? We could go on and on. Let's give it to Nona, for her integrity.

Best Performance by a Duo or Group: Heart, "Heart"; Tina Turner & Bryan Adams, "It's Only Love"; Dire Straits, "Money for Nothing"; Starship, "We Built This City"; Eurythmics, "Would I Lie to You?"

The only rock category with two decent contenders: Eurythmics and Dire Straits. Video Beat's coin tips for Straits.

General category

Record of the Year: "Born in the USA," Bruce Springsteen; "The Boys of Summer," Don Henley; "Money for Nothing," Dire Straits; "The Power of Love," Huey Lewis and the News; "We Are the World," USA for Africa.

It should never have been nominated (rather, it should have had a separate award all to itself), but you can't help but give it to "We Are the World."

Album of the Year: "Brothers in Arms," Dire Straits; "Dream of the Blue Turtles," Sting; "No Jacket Required," Phil Collins; "We Are the World," USA for Africa; "Whitney Houston," Whitney Houston.

Excuse our heartlessness, but "We Are the World" wasn't really an album at all. Otherwise, this category is wimps, wimps, wimps and Dire Straits. Too bad Dire Straits doesn't have a snowball's chance of winning.

Song of the Year: "The Boys of Summer," "Every Time You Go Away," "I Want to Know What Love Is," "Money for Nothing," "We Are the World."

This is a songwriter's award, and the craftsmanship of all these tunes is, actually, marvelous. This is also Video Beat's favorite category; we like them all.

Best New Artist: A-Ha, Freddie Jackson, Katrina and the Waves, Julian Lennon, Sade.

This is a controversial category. NARAS got into a big fight with Arista Records as to whether Whitney Houston should be eligible to compete. We want to know: How come the Hooters didn't get to compete? Or 'til Tuesday, or Lone Justice, or Dream Academy, or 10,000 Maniacs, or Fishbone... Actually, they got the chance to compete; it's just that not enough oversiders voted for them. Of the choices available, Video Beat gives it to Julian Lennon, but only for his father's sake.

Ethlie Ann Vare tunes into rock for Newspaper Enterprise Association.

Stretch and get slim while relaxing

By Shirley J. McGowan

Are you unable to open your eyes in the morning until after coffee and cigarette? And wish to heaven you could stop smoking? You can. Lose weight? Yes. Do tension and nervousness, as well as insomnia, dog your days? You can alleviate these problems. Kick excessive weight and inches out the door. Reapportion your figure. Find power-packed vitality.

No equipment is necessary. You won't make your muscles sore or stiff. What you will do is feed them the oxygen they demand. You will relieve muscle tension and fill yourself to overflowing with vigor and grace.

Exercise like a cat. You need not climb trees. All you need to do is s-t-r-e-t-c-h a lot — standing, sitting or lying down — just as you unconsciously do after a meal or sitting too long. It gives you energy, feels wonderful and relaxes you. Do it often. Do it now, a long, satisfying upward pull from the rib cage. Now stretch with clasped hands behind your neck. Notice the delicious pull on your muscles.

Would you like to feel even more alive than that all over? Of course. Unlike exercises that you force yourself to do, usually on again, off again, stretching showers you with energy, feels heavenly and relaxes you. Also, you can stretch every muscle in your body in less time than it takes to spot-exercise repetitiously two body problem areas, let alone the entire figure.

Total body stretch, in addition to slenderizing and relaxing you, invigorates you. As often as you wish each day, you stretch each area, slowly, thoroughly, and find relaxation of body and mind.

Certainly, stretching neither grates on your nerves nor bores you. Quite the contrary, it is the only good narcotic. The more you stretch, the more you want; you have the added plus of being able to stretch almost anytime. Depending upon your need, stretching can bring you wide awake or put you to sleep. Here's how:

When the alarm jerks you awake, stretch your opposite arm to turn it off. That sleepy stretch begins an automatic reflex of eye-opening stretching. Once you start with one muscle, all your other muscles clamor for more.

If you are lying on your stomach, hunch arms and shoulders forward, drawing the abdomen in and upward. Accumulated tension from lying in one position too long leaves you. Repeat this stretch as often as you wish or need to.

Even you night-owls will be wide awake by this time. And you won't need to smoke. Your body is crying out for more oxygen; all this stretching drives you to breathe more deeply.

From head to toe, every part of your body pleads for oxygen.

Not only do all muscles need oxygen, but also your brain, in particular, thinks more clearly when it receives sufficient oxygen. Apart from that, your muscles shriek to be flexed, to stretch, releasing fatigue toxins and enjoying the feeling stretching induces.

Now roll onto your back. From either top down or bottom up — or both simultaneously — stretch. Again, twisting to each side in turn. Harder.

You leave bed loaded with energy. Next comes the standing cat-stretch. Step forward with one foot, stretching from the ribs up; then the other foot stretching from the waist down. Tighten those buttocks. Clasp hands behind your head. Lean back slightly. Stretch. Next bring your arms straight behind you — palms up — and upward behind you. Those muscles love you for that. At bedtime reverse the stretching procedure.

That's it — if you want it to be. But you won't. Stretching is a habit that creates further demand; it feels so good. ■

Self-sabotage can derail your life

Just when you're ready to splash, something always happens

By Jodi Vernon

Jill's publisher asked for one last rewrite on her book before it went to press. He gave her a detailed outline of the changes and a deadline date. Quite unexpectedly, Jill developed severe bronchial asthma and was hospitalized. She missed the deadline. To date, her book hasn't been published.

Jill also finds it extremely difficult to maintain rewarding romantic relationships. Her last three boyfriends have been married. She avoids singles groups or other activities where she is likely to meet eligible males. She complains, "I'm attracted only to people I can't have. I never like the guys who like me."

Jill doesn't understand her self-sabotaging behavior. She only knows that each time she starts winning, something catastrophic happens. Her life is a series of succeeding and failing, losing on the verge of winning.

Everyone knows someone like Jill. Just when a person is ready to set the world on fire, she develops a serious illness, finds a way to make a bad business deal or ruins her marriage.

The experts agree that the fear of success affects work, relationships, leisure time, sports, anything that could be even remotely construed as a way to lose, reveals California psychologist Dr. Allan Mallinger.

According to Dr. Mallinger, a success-inhibitor might destroy her love relationships in one or more of the following ways:

- Avoid situations where she is like to meet eligible partners.
- Withdraw when someone "comes on" sexually.
- Engage in "more important" activities.
- Set unrealistically high standards for her lovers.
- Make herself unattractive in some way.
- Involve herself in unavailable relationships. If she is able to establish a relationship, she will undermine it. For instance, she might unconsciously act obnoxiously, become frigid or suddenly develop several outside relationships to avoid intimacy with the one.

At work, the phenomenon manifests itself in similar behavior. If there is the possibility of promotion, she might get passed over because she was "unaware" that the position was available. If she accepts advancement, she is usually very uncomfortable and experiences a great deal of anxiety, depression and physical distress.

She thinks her peers are envious and hostile, and she may lean over backward in an attempt to show them she is no better than they are.

Self-employed persons will engage in similar self-destruction just when they are doing especially well in their business.

The success-inhibited student will have problems studying, taking tests, concentrating, remembering and completing projects. Likewise, the self-sabotager performs well below her capacity in games, sports and other competitive activities. For the most part, these individuals cultivate friendships with non-competitive persons.

The underlying cause of self-sabotaging behavior, according to some experts, is guilt — yet guilt can be generated in a variety of ways. Dr. Larry Snow, a Pennsylvania psychiatrist, and his colleague, Barry Schwartz, M.D., conducted a five-year study on failure and found eight failure-prone styles. They pinpointed these failure roles:

Princess. This is the person who, throughout her life, was told she is just marvelous and entitled to success. She wants to have it all without working. If she works and succeeds, she isn't a princess anymore.

Peasant. This individual comes from a disadvantaged home and is angry that so many others had it so much easier. This anger gets in the way of success.

Caretaker. This person proves her worth by taking care of others. She becomes so involved in caretaking, she is unable to pursue her own goals.

Daddy's Son (Mommy's Daughter) and Heir. This person was taught to live her life according to what her parents wanted. She has bottled-up rage because she is trying to be someone she isn't.

Individual. Raised by untrustworthy and unreliable parents, this person is filled with rebellion and hostility.

Outcome Controller. This failure-prone individual is insecure, must bat a thousand all the time, and maintains her strength by always being in charge. She "what ifs" every decision, which immobilizes her.

Psychotic. This person gets by when not under close scrutiny, but crumbles under pressure. She is, in fact, mentally ill.

Peter Pan. This is the individual who is too dependent on her parents and doesn't want to grow up or take responsibility. "If you didn't have a little bit of Peter Pan, life would be grim," says Dr. Snow. "But if you make a career out of it, you can't function."

"Basically what we are trying to say," Dr. Snow explains, "is that people fail because they are busy punishing themselves." All of these character types are angry. Anger produces guilt, and then guilt produces the desire to punish yourself to alleviate the guilt. One way to punish yourself is to quietly not be able to do anything."

For those who care to delve more deeply into the motives that drive human activity, the classic psychoanalytic theories of Freud — in particular, the Oedipus Complex — may provide one explanation for success problems, according to Dr. Mallinger.

In a myth of Ancient Greece, Oedipus was a king of Thebes who unknowingly killed his father and married his mother. In psychiatry, the term Oedipus Complex (when referring to women, it is called the Electra Complex) was first coined by Sigmund Freud. He believed that little boys and little girls (between 2 and 6 years of age) prefer to establish an exclusive relationship with the opposite-sex parent and want to eliminate the same-sex parent.

Further, Freud was convinced that the Oedipal years are an innate and biological stage of psychosexual development, during which the child wants to have a sexual relationship with the opposite-sex parent.

"Classical analysts believe this is a perfectly normal phenomenon, and that everyone goes through the Oedipus Complex," explains Dr. Mallinger.

According to the theory, these competitive, murderous and sexual feelings create unbearable guilt for the youngster, and if the conflict isn't resolved, the person grows up with a great need to be punished.

"So one explanation of sabotaging one's own success is yielding to feelings of guilt over these murderous or competitive feelings," observes Dr. Mallinger. "Such a person will never quite measure up to her talents and capabilities, and that is sad."

Martha Friedman confirms the Oedipal connection in her book, "Overcoming the Fear of Success." "Success means getting the parent you're not supposed to get, getting what you really are not supposed to have," she writes. "The fear of success is not getting what you really want because you unconsciously think you don't deserve it."

Because Oedipal fear lies in the unconscious, people do not understand how they sabotage their own efforts. Dr. Snow says, "By and large, the person who comes to see me is a person who is saying, 'Hey, I'm doing the best I can, but it seems like it is raining every day.' Then we look at how he is viewing the world."

Because Oedipal fear lies in the unconscious, people do not understand how they sabotage their own efforts. "The contribution Freud made was to remind people that there are (mental) processes that go on that we are not aware of," explains Dr. Snow.

By and large, the person who comes to see me is a person who is saying, 'Hey, I'm doing the best I can, but it seems like it is raining every day. Then we look at how he is viewing the world.'"

The common fear among Oedipal self-destroyers is the belief that success will bring some hurtful consequence, such as punishment, abandonment and isolation from others.

Says Dr. Mallinger, "The person starts to think, 'If I excel over this other person, I will be in danger in some way. She might not like me anymore, or she might feel aggressive toward me and want to hurt me.'"

This is how you felt with a parent at one time, and you transfer the feelings to other things — school, business, relationships — just at the point when you are doing well.

Failure roles familiar

"I want to stress," Dr. Mallinger hastens to add, "that Oedipal fear of success is only one type of fear of success. There are many different kinds."

According to some experts, one of the most serious success problems is... simply being a woman.

The fear of success syndrome has received a good deal of attention since Martina Horner conducted a study at the University of Michigan in 1968. Until that time, women were notoriously absent from almost all achievement-oriented studies.

Horner asked 90 undergraduate women and 88 undergraduate men to complete a story about either John or Anne.

The first part of the story was already written; it read: "After the first-term finals, John (Anne) finds himself (herself) at the top of his (her) medical school class."

The female students completed the story about Anne and the males completed the story about John. There seemed to be grave differences in how males and females viewed success, however. One female wrote, "It was luck that Anne came out on top because she didn't want to go to medical school anyway."

In comparison, a male student wrote, "John has worked hard, and his long hours of study have paid off. He will go on in medical school and be successful in the long run."

"The most frequent Anne story reflected strong fears of social rejection as a result of success," writes Martina Horner in Psychology Today. "The girls in this group showed anxiety about becoming unpopular, unmarriageable and lonely."

"Just being a woman in this society can predispose some females to success problems," Dr. Mallinger says.

Whatever its roots, many experts believe the fear of success can be overcome or at least altered. "The first thing to do is to acknowledge the problem and then to take a look at it," says Dr. Mallinger. "My hunch is a person might

Are you at risk?

If you don't know if you suffer from the fear of success, ask yourself the following questions. A "yes" to any of them puts you at high risk.

1. I do less than my best so no one feels threatened.
2. I worry that if I become too knowledgeable, others won't like me.
3. When I do well, I fear that someone will undermine my success.
4. When someone notices I'm doing well, I feel awkward and self-conscious.
5. I allow persuasive people to influence my ideas.

6. My mind goes blank during intellectual conversations.

7. Just when I start winning (at cards, games, sports, etc.), I start thinking of other things.

8. I doubt I have what it takes to be a success.

9. I feel uncomfortable asking others for favors.

10. I feel uptight telling a person in authority that I deserve a better deal.

11. I daydream during lectures and meetings and realize I haven't heard a word that was said.

12. I ask others about my ideas before making a final decision.

13. I try not to get too excited about something I really want.

14. I don't act like myself when I'm around strangers.

15. I'm uptight when people make a fuss over me.

16. I feel I've lost out when someone I know succeeds.

17. I downplay my competence so others won't think I'm bragging.

18. I feel uncomfortable being promoted. ■ need some professional help for a short term if the problem is too diffuse." He believes that the way to resolve the Oedipal complex is to stop competing with your same-sex parent and start identifying with that parent. Dr. Snow says one of the best strategies is to be honest with yourself. "Emotional maturity can be equated with emotional honesty. Emotional honesty simply means being straight with yourself. If something makes you mad, then all right, it makes you mad. Now you can figure out what to do about it. There can be a lot of things you can do about it other than mess up."

It is generally helpful if people can look at themselves as observers rather than critics, adds Dr. Snow. "If you look at yourself as an observer and say, 'Whenever I get in this kind of situation, I mess up; then look at yourself without criticism and you don't have to defend your behavior. You can change it.'"

"I'm not saying were not responsible for what we do," continues Dr. Snow. "Most people don't consciously set out to mess themselves up. What I'm saying is look at yourself as observationally as you can. Be prepared to take credit for the stuff that is good. Be prepared to take credit for the stuff that is not so good. The big thing is to look observationally, not critically."

When losers become winners, they enjoy what life has to offer. "Success," says Martha Friedman, "is getting to do what you really want to do in your work life and in your love life, doing it very well and feeling very good about yourself doing it." ■

Boot those boots out of the office

By Sandi Hastings

QUESTION: In the winter I often wear boots to work and do not change into pumps when I get to work. Is this OK?

ANSWER: There will be days in the winter when it's necessary to wear boots to work. However, you should never wear them all day in the office. Boots worn with suits or dresses do not project a professional image, so wear your boots in non-working hours only. In addition, wearing boots all day may make your feet swell and can cause foot odor. Remember to carry your shoes to work in your briefcase or a tote bag unless you choose to leave your pumps at the office.

QUESTION: I am a woman in my late 40s. I took 16 years off from my career to raise two children. I have been back in the workforce for three years, but I doubt I'll be promoted to middle management because the company sees me as too old. How can I effectively counter that stereotype?

ANSWER: Your problem is typical for women in your age bracket. Although there is plenty of prejudice against older men, the prejudice against older women is greater. Women are still chosen for positions based on youth and attractiveness. Since women don't necessarily begin careers at an early age, this prejudice is extremely damaging. You must foster the image of someone with a wealth of information gained through experience. Others must see you as a dynamic, enthusiastic individual, not a has-been. To achieve this image, you must do several things.

First of all, you must show others that work is a challenge for you. You must impress people with your interest in developing new products or new systems. Never say "That's the way we've always done it." Do not foster the impression of a defeated, disillusioned old person. Instead, demonstrate how the knowledge and understanding you've gained has energized you, adding to your wealth of information. Be positive and receptive to new ideas and new situations.

Build relationships with people in different age groups. Don't react to prejudice by withdrawing. It's critical for you to interact positively with those younger than you as well as those older than you. Your clothing can signal an "old-fashioned" woman so be sure to dress with a contemporary flair—including a stylish hairstyle.

Last, be certain to stress your interest in today and the future. Don't refer to your arthritis or your new bifocals. Instead emphasize your desire to accomplish even more than you already have.

QUESTION: I can't believe how conservative your answers are. Not all of us work in conservative industries such as insurance and banking. I work in an ad agency and carry a purse and an attache case. I can't believe my choice to bend this rule will influence my future career successes.

ANSWER: All that one does affects career success to some degree. Certainly, those working in creative industries such as advertising are expected to dress differently than those in banking. The dress code for conservative industries (written or unwritten) conveys an image of solid trustworthiness. On the other hand, someone in advertising must convey the image of one who is on the cutting edge of what's fashionable and new.

The images are distinctly different, but equally effective in the proper context. Since most of the questions I receive are written by people employed in conservative business, my answers reflect that bias. I would still recommend advertising executives carry only a briefcase, but that briefcase doesn't need to be conservative in style or color. If your image is finely tuned and you choose to carry both a handbag and an attache case, I doubt your image will suffer to any great degree. I do believe, however, that your image would be further enhanced if you followed all of the rules. ■

Various income tax items merit scrutiny

By Commerce Clearing House

Awareness of a few simple federal income tax rules can pay off for the average taxpayer. Commerce Clearing House points out:

The following tax items could have a beneficial effect on your 1985 taxes and should not be overlooked.

For example, you have the opportunity to "average" income for tax purposes if you experienced a big jump in income in 1985, including income from personal services, capital gains, wagering, gifts or inheritances. In doing so, you can cut your tax bill.

You may elect to income average if your 1985 taxable income is more than $3,000 greater than 140 percent of your average income for the preceding three years (i.e., 1982-1984). If your average income for 1982-1984 is $18,000, taxable income of at least $28,201 in 1985 would be needed to qualify for averaging benefits. (140 percent of $18,000, plus $3,001.)

In the area of medical and dental expense deductions, don't overlook the fact that the costs of medical and dental care, including medical insurance premiums, for you, your spouse and dependents, may be deducted if these costs exceed 5 percent of adjusted gross income.

In making such calculation, the cost of prescription medicines and drugs and insulin qualifies as medical expense. Transportation expenses essential for medical care, such as the cost of taxi, bus and train fares, gasoline and oil, parking fees, etc., also are deductible.

Instead of taking actual operating expenses, you may opt for a standard mileage rate of 9 cents for each mile plus toll and parking fees.

In addition, lodging expenses, but not meals, paid while away from home to receive medical care in a hospital or a medical care facility that is related to a hospital may be deducted up to $50 a night for each person.

If your income-producing spouse is saddled with enormous medical expenses for the year, you may consider filing separate returns in order to reach the 5 percent adjusted gross income limitation much sooner.

If you're a homeowner, you may claim an income tax credit for energy-conservation costs for your principal residence that is located in the United States and that was substantially completed prior to April 20, 1977. Items such as the purchase of insulation, fuel-efficient furnace replacement burners, storm or thermal windows or doors, automatic set-back thermostats and caulking or weatherstripping qualify for this credit.

The credit is 15 percent of the first $2,000 of qualifying expenses (maximum credit $300). A credit of 40 percent of the first $10,000 in expenses incurred for renewable energy source items, which include solar, wind and geothermal energy items that heat or cool your principal residence or provide hot water or electricity for it, also may be taken (maximum credit $4,000). The residential energy credit is computed on Form 5695. Unused credits may be carried over to the following tax year. Although the residential energy credit is scheduled to expire for any expenditures made after 1985, any unused credit may be carried over to tax years ending before 1988.

Another item worth checking is the timing of loss deductions. Casualty losses by fire, storm, shipwreck, etc., usually are deductible only in the year of occurrence.

In contrast, a loss by theft generally is deductible in the year of discovery. If a loss occurs on account of a disaster in an area designated by the president of the United States as a disaster area, you may elect to deduct the loss in that year or the immediately preceding year.

after the date of sale of the old residence, will have to recognize gain only so far as the adjusted sales price of the old home exceeds the cost of the new one. Thus, if the old home's adjusted sales price is equal to or less than the cost of the new home, no gain will be recognized on the sale. Any gain postponed under these rules must be added to the tax basis of the new home.

In addition, individuals who are 55 years of age or older prior to the time their old home is sold or exchanged may elect to exclude from gross income up to $125,000 ($62,500 each for married persons filing separate returns) of the gain realized on the sale of their principal residence, provided they owned and used the home as their principal residence for at least three years within the five-year period ending on the date of sale. This exclusion election, however, may be made only once in a taxpayer's lifetime.

An individual who does not itemize personal deductions is allowed to deduct from adjusted gross income 50 percent of his or her charitable contributions made during the year. However, the total amount of deductions may not exceed 50 percent of the individual's adjusted gross income.

Deductions are available for two-earner married couples to help mitigate the "marriage tax penalty." A two-earner married couple filing a joint return will receive tax relief in the form of a deduction from gross income in an amount equal to 10 percent of the lesser of (1) $30,000 or (2) the amount of the lower-earning spouse's earned income. Thus, the maximum deduction on a joint return for 1985 is $3,000 (10 percent of $30,000).

Plastic soda bottles aren't harmful

By Sonja Heinze

Is soda in plastic bottles harmful to the body? People are telling me that this is so. Rose Wilson, Scranton, Pa.

The Society of the Plastics Industry has a section called the Plastic Bottle Information Bureau, and Terry Yaona, its representative, claims that plastic soft drink bottles, constructed from a material called polyethylene terephthalate, otherwise known as PET, have been determined by the Food and Drug Administration to be safe for use in packaging foods and carbonated and alcoholic beverages. This material is also used for heart valves and artificial blood vessels.

The plastics industry further claims that plastic materials are becoming so widespread because this is what consumers want.

If you walk into a supermarket, however, and find all the glass bottles suddenly replaced with plastic bottles, this doesn't necessarily mean that's how you want your soda contained. It simply means you have no choice in the matter.

Elizabeth Davenport, a spokesperson for Environmental Action, a Washington-based conservation group, asserts that "profits are usually the overriding factor in companies' decisions on materials."

Plastic is cheaper packaging than paper or glass. By replacing aluminum soft-drink cans with PET, a project in the works, manufacturers will be able to increase their profits by 15 percent.

The major problem with all this plastic is that it does not rot. Long after you and I have turned to dust, an empty Mazola bottle will nestle on a sandy beach for eternity.

Furthermore, although the plastics industry maintains that, properly incinerated, these

The major problem with all this plastic is that it does not rot.

ARE GREEN POTATOES SAFE? I have heard that green potatoes are not good for you and should not be eaten. Green potatoes are in the bags of potatoes that you buy in the supermarket. You have no way of knowing if you are eating green potatoes in a restaurant. What can be done about this? Mary Solek, Tuckerton, N.J.

When a potato is green, it means that it has been exposed to light for an excessive period of time. Potatoes then develop in the vegetable as a natural defense against insects, fungi and bacteria. If you eat them, you won't die but you could get sick.

There's no way, of course, of knowing what color the potato was that you ate in a restaurant, but I would optimistically assume that the chef would reject green potatoes not only because they're slightly bitter, but also because sick customers are not good business.

If you can help it, don't buy potatoes in the bag. Buy them one by one, and when you get them home, keep them in the dark, preferably in a cool bin as opposed to the refrigerator.

DOES HAIR REMOVER WORK? I saw an ad in a magazine for an instrument called Perma Tweez which claims to "remove hair forever" at home with electrolysis. Is it safe to use and does it really destroy the hair root? It costs $16.95. S.B. Kosub, San Antonio, Texas

Although the Food and Drug Administration was unable to supply information on this particular product, the agency believes that in general high frequency electronic tweezers are no better than non-electrified household tweezers, and that there is no method of hair removal that is completely risk-free.

Since the ad contained a Good Housekeeping Seal, I asked the magazine for information about this product, and George Wham, vice president and technical director, replied:

"Our experience with this product indicates that the most satisfied customers are those who have someone else perform the hair removal operation. This device is one that takes some manual dexterity and patience in order to master the technique needed to place the stylus in the pore to remove the unwanted hair. Additionally, this device comes with a money-back warranty and any dissatisfied customer who writes to Good Housekeeping can be assured of a refund."

Broccoli: a tough survivor

Deep in the heart of those frail shoots lies a cabbage's soul

By Ted Larsen

Mark Twain said that cauliflower is nothing more than a cabbage with a college education; he could have written the very same characterization of broccoli. You see, no matter how much you disguise them with rich, green, velvety plumage, deep in the heart of those frail-looking shoots lies the soul of a rough and ready cabbage. Don't let appearances fool you; broccoli is a pretty tough customer.

Like all relatives in the cabbage clan, broccoli is a member of a remarkable plant species, "Brassica oleracea," which has its roots in the wild cabbage of the Mediterranean coast. Common to all of these plants are thick stalks and succulent leaves that can store water easily and weather the worst conditions, from desert heat to New England winters. If you've ever put out a late crop of broccoli, you've probably snipped your last harvest from under a blanket of early snow in December.

Membership in the family also allows broccoli to share some of cabbage's isothiocyanates, a shopping list of foul-smelling chemicals. Unlike onions, odoriferous at room temperature, cabbages don't come alive until cooking, when they give off plumes of hydrogen sulphide (the "stink" of rotten eggs) ammonia and methyl sulphide.

Unlike most vegetables, these strong flavors grow more intense, not weaker, with prolonged cooking. This explains why broccoli tastes best when cooked least.

The history of broccoli is also that of a survivor which won't quit. The vegetable was developed around Rome, the word from the Italian, "brocco," for "sprout." It worked its way from Naples to London about 1720, and by 1775 was growing in Williamsburg, Va. One colonial writer noted, "The stems will eat like asparagus and the heads like cauliflower," still rather accurate.

Broccoli flourished in home gardens until the turn of the 19th century, when for no clear reason its popularity vanished, except in the Italian community. In 1920 broccoli was reincarnated.

A group of enterprising Italian growers in California sent a few ice-packed crates to Boston. It was an immediate hit and broccoli's new fame rapidly spread nationwide. Even in the days before modern refrigerated produce shipping, broccoli proved it could travel well, out of season. As I said, a survivor.

Broccoli is a nutritional warehouse, filled with vitamins and minerals, but not calories. A cup of cooked broccoli has about 40 calories and is a good source of the following nutrients: fiber, vitamins A, B, C, E, potassium, calcium, and iron.

Despite all these benefits, average Americans eat less than two pounds of broccoli a year, while wolfing down 120 pounds of potatoes. Maybe that will change in the future. Broccoli certainly can take the wait.

This unusual combination is a lovely contrast of flavors and textures that's very simple to make.

BROCCOLI MACADAMIA SALAD

1/2 cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon sugar
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
1 large broccoli head, trimmed and washed
1 medium onion
1 cup macadamia nuts, coarsely chopped
5 slices bacon, cooked and crumbled

Whisk together mayonnaise, sugar and vinegar. Coarsely chop broccoli. Finely chop onion. Add these to dressing mixture along with nuts. Mix until well coated. Refrigerate, covered, for at least 8 hours or ideally overnight. Stir occasionally. Before serving, garnish with bacon pieces.

HINTS

Try substituting honey for the sugar in the dressing. If you are concerned about a budget, use 1 cup coarsely chopped walnuts.

This can be served as individual salads by placing scoops of the broccoli mixture on beds of lettuce. Garnish with additional nuts and bacon pieces.

This impressive recipe is perfect for a formal dinner. Despite its complexity, all of the flavors stand firmly on their own.

ELEGANT BROCCOLI PROVENCAL

1 large broccoli bunch, washed
1/4 cup fresh lemon juice
2 tablespoons olive oil
5 fresh tomatoes, sliced 1/2 inch thick
1 tablespoon parsley, chopped
1/2 teaspoon basil, dried

Sauce

3 egg yolks
salt
pepper
1 tablespoon white wine
1 tablespoon heavy cream
1/4 cup unsalted butter, very cold, cut into small pieces
1/2 teaspoon parsley, chopped

1/2 teaspoon chives, chopped
1/2 teaspoon marjoram, chopped
pinch thyme

Trim broccoli, leaving about 2 inches of stem. Steam for 10 minutes or until just tender. Sprinkle with lemon juice and reserve in a warm place. Heat olive oil in a saute pan and quickly cook the tomatoes on each side. Do not allow to become mushy. Put tomatoes on a serving plate and sprinkle with herbs. Reserve.

In the top of a double broiler mix together the egg yolks, salt and pepper, wine and cream. Bring water to a boil and reduce to a simmer. Cook egg mixture, whisking constantly until thickened.

Now whisk in cold butter, piece by piece, beating constantly. Finish sauce by whisking in herbs. Sauce can be kept over warm, not hot, water. To serve, place cooked broccoli over prepared tomato slices and top dish with sauce. Serve immediately.

HINTS

This recipe uses an egg-thickened sauce. It should never be allowed to cook at a high temperature because it can easily curdle. If this occurs, whisk in a little water and adjust seasonings.

Try this dish and cauliflower as a mixture of half-broccoli, half cauliflower. Same directions apply.

White vermouth is my favorite substitute for white wine.

This creamy, cheesy combination makes a hearty supper or brunch dish. It also reheats very well, especially in a microwave oven.

BROCCOLI FLAN

1 1/2 cups broccoli, chopped
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1/2 cup onions, chopped
1/2 teaspoon garlic, minced
1/2 cup mozzarella cheese, grated
1/2 cup Parmesan cheese, grated
1/2 cup heavy cream
4 eggs
salt
pepper

Preheat oven to 375F. Steam broccoli for 3-5 minutes or until cooked but still crunchy.

Reserve. Melt butter in a saute pan and cook onions until golden. Add garlic and cook for another minute. Combine with the broccoli, cheeses, and cream. Beat the eggs well and add to the broccoli/cream mixture.

Pour into a well-buttered, 10" pie plate. Set in a larger pan and add water until it comes halfway up the side of the pie plate. Place in oven and bake for 10 minutes. Lower temperature to 350F and bake 45-50 minutes. Flan is done when cake-tester inserted into middle of dish comes out clean.

After removing from oven, allow to stand 20 minutes. To unmold, run knife under edge to loosen. Place larger plate over top of flan and turn both upside down. On counter, carefully remove pie plate. To serve, place another plate over flan and invert again. Flan can be cut into wedges for serving.

HINTS

This recipe works equally well with cauliflower. Follow same directions.

Experiment with different cheeses such as smoked gouda or cheddar.

To impart an interesting texture, add 1/4 cup finely chopped water chestnuts to uncooked custard mixture. ■

It's easy to have a feast at Feast

By Sondra Astor Stave

On first impression, prices at Feast seem rather high. The small restaurant located on Hartford Road looks more like a luncheonette than a gourmet restaurant. As you enter, there is a long counter, more used at lunch than at dinner. In the rear are three booths and half a dozen tables. The menu is on the wall, with some items changing frequently and others being familiar standbys.

However, once you begin your meal you are aware that a real chef is in charge of the kitchen, and some serious cooking is taking place in a seemingly small alcove just off the dining area.

First to appear is a basket of homemade bread, a slightly sweet whole-wheat tasting of honey, and a white studded with raisins. A small dish of horseradish-flavored cottage cheese offers a change from butter, but the breads and the accompanying crackers can easily stand alone.

Seven appetizers and three soups vied for position as starters. Although tempting, crab Louie, chicken wings, stuffed mushrooms and potato skins are among those we shall have to try on subsequent visits.

Our choices of sausage and peppers and chicken livers with bacon were thoroughly satisfying. The former was a melange of sauteed peppers and Italian sausage in a sauce with appropriate Mediterranean herbs and enough bite to maintain interest to the last forkful.

The livers and bacon could have been dull if not properly prepared, but these livers were moist and pink in the middle, with bacon that was crisp and devoid of grease.

On previous visits, soup has been a high point at Feast, and perhaps the turkey rice and cream of broccoli were up to the usual standards. Unfortunately, the onion soup was not, and it was the only low note of an otherwise totally pleasing meal. The broth tasted watery, the onions lacked character, and even the cheese topping could not rescue this unfortunate effort.

Salads are a mix of greens and seasonal vegetables. Interesting dressing choices are provided, such as honey mustard and herb garlic, as well as the more usual blue cheese. We liked all three.

Of the main dishes, chopped beef and pollack, sounded the least interesting, so we chose to try one shellfish, one veal and one chicken dish. We were delighted in our selections.

Those who are hungriest would do well to pick the fettuccine with seafood. A large portion of pasta, cooked al dente and including a generous amount of scallops and shrimp in a sauce both rich and briny, it lightly perfumed the air with garlic.

Chicken limone is an example of the heights to which a chicken breast can be raised in the right hands. The meat was moist and encouraged to maintain all of its succulent juiciness, and was enhanced with a sauce that combined lemon essence with other discreet flavors to produce a delightful blend of tastes. Stuffed veal tasted of prosciutto and cheese, and also showed off the chef's deft hand.

If one needed an excuse to clean one's plate, any of the desserts sampled would have filled the bill. Dump cake included bits of cherries and pineapple, topped with whipped cream for a lush finish.

Chocolate mousse-cake featured layers of chocolate cake interspersed with layers of chocolate mousse, and the whole thing was topped with whipped cream. While each was tasty separately, it was the perfect example of the sum being greater than the parts.

Amaretto cheesecake, by now a cliché, was refreshed by the superb combination of creamy cake, bits of nuts and a counterpoint of liqueur. Cups of full-bodied coffee completed a thoroughly satisfying experience.

For those contemplating lunch at Feast, salads, sandwiches, burgers with various toppings and a quiche of the day are available. A two-course lunch can be assembled for less than five dollars.

A full dinner for two, with appetizers ranging from $2.50 to $4.95 and main dishes costing between $8 and $13, will round up to $35, including a few of those excellent desserts. A small, but well-chosen wine list is available.

Feast offers well-prepared food in a relaxed setting and delivers all that it promises. It's well worth trying for your next restaurant feast. ■
