Holocaust monument: So others will never forget

By John F. Kirch Herald Reporter

"The visual evidence and the verbal testimony of starvation, cruelty and bestiality were so overpowering as to leave me a bit sick. In one room, where there were piled up 20 or 30 naked men killed by starvation, (Gen.) George Patton would not even enter. He said he would get sick if he did so."

Those are the words spoken by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower in April 1945, shortly after he witnessed the horrifying evidence of the Holocaust. It was a sight he and others would see many times over — and never forget.

This weekend, Temple Beth Sholom will try to make sure the younger generation does not forget either. And, no matter how painful it is, the temple will remind the older generation of that time in history when six million Jews perished at the hands of the Nazis.

The reminder will come Sunday, when the temple dedicates the Manchester Holocaust Memorial at 2 p.m. in the Beth Sholom Memorial Park on Autumn Street. The ceremony is open to the public and is free.

"It will be very emotional," said Louise Nathan, the wife of Jerome Nathan, who designed the memorial.

There is a fear among some Jewish leaders in town that the younger generation may forget what happened to their people. To do so, Wind said in a recent interview, would be to invite an even greater atrocity.

But if many are allowing the Holocaust to fade from their memories, the Manchester Holocaust Memorial will serve to remind them for a long time. It is made of black African granite, one of the world's hardest granites, and should withstand harsh weather.

"I should last longer than any other material," said Jerome Nathan, a retired designer and sculptor who frequently does work for Temple Beth Sholom.

"Those are some of the thoughts we had," Nathan said. "The symbols can be interpreted differently by different people."

Nathan drew up the design for the monument and sent it to Vermont. The flame he made himself, Nathan said, it took him three months to complete the sculpture of the fire, which is made of copper so that it looks real.

Along with Wind and Nathan, Mayor Barbara B. Weinberg, Monsignor Edward J. Heardon of St. James Church and Nancy Carr, executive director of the Manchester Area Conference of Churches, will attend the dedication.

A four-member committee made up of Nathan, Wind, Emanuel Hirth and Blanche Hochberg helped raise money for the memorial. Wind, who lost almost his entire family during the Holocaust, got the idea for the monument a number of years ago.

Under the governor's plan, Manchester would have received $414,000.

"The thing I like about it is that the towns have to agree to it," Zinsner said of the GOP plan. The governor's plan is mandated.

"I think it would help Manchester in terms of the reimbursement of the Board of Education. We'll get," said Leonard Seader, chairman of the Board of Education.

"We have achieved an excess of the minimum," Seader said. He thinks that the bill will be approved.

But the incentive plan includes merit qualifications and as such has met opposition.

"Teachers have traditionally been opposed to merit evaluation systems," Deakin said. "We hope that the two parties get together and give it to us."

Deakin said that the staff development money in the proposal will be most beneficial to the town.

With education bill in doubt, town could be short of cash

By John Mitchell Herald Reporter

A $97 million Republican teacher-pay package that won Senate approval is losing ground in the House, whose members are requesting that changes be made.

"There's a good chance we may get no education bill at all," Sen. Carl Zinsner, R-Manchester, said Friday.

Manchester has already put extra funds into its education budget. "We've built our budget on the expectation of assistance. Assistant School Superintendent Wilson Deakin said, "We're very hopeful that something will come out of it."

The GOP plan has met strong opposition from education groups and teachers' unions, which favor a $91 million reform program offered by Democratic Gov. William O'Neill.

House Bill 548, the Republican plan, would have the state pay 100 percent of the cost for cities and towns to set minimum teacher salaries ranging from $18,500 to $21,500, depending on the town's cost of living. It would also have the state pay from 10 to 95 percent of the cost of salary increases, with poorer towns getting more aid.

In Manchester, Zinsner said, it would provide $89,250 to upgrade the teachers to minimum salary. With collective bargaining the town would also get $688,540, an increase of $282,000 if the teachers' union approves the plan. The towns must raise the teachers' salaries to get the incentive, according to Zinsner.

Two embattled judgeship nominees pull out

By Mark A. Dupuis
United Press International

HARTFORD — Facing opposition from lawmakers, Superior Court Judge Paul J. Falsely and prosecutor Marcia Blank Smith had their nominations for judgeships withdrawn Friday from the Legislature.

Gov. William A. O'Neill, agreeing to requests from the two, withdrew the nominations of Falsely for reappointment to another eight-year term and Smith for appointment to an initial eight-year term.

Falsely, an 11-year veteran of the bench, was facing a tough time winning legislative approval for reappointment because of allegations his alcoholism had impaired his ability on the bench.

Smith, 55, now working as a prosecutor in Waterbury Superior Court, was under fire because of complaints by members of the legislative Judiciary Committee that she has inadequate experience in trial and civil case work.

Falsely can continue to serve until his current term ends July 1. Smith had not begun serving on the bench, having been nominated to take over July 1 for Judge Norman AMEWUZALD, whose reappointment was rejected by the House.

Falsely, 59, a New Haven resident now sitting in Waterbury Superior Court, was one of at least five judges who were said to be in jeopardy of winning legislative confirmation this year.

House Speaker R.E. Van Nor-strand, R-Darien, who had said he would vote against the reappointment, said Friday he believes Falsely made the right decision in withdrawing.

Van Norstrand repeated his criticism of O'Neill's decision to nominate all of the judges up for reappointment this year for new terms despite warnings some would be rejected by the Legislature.

"I am very disappointed that in some of these cases there had to be the public embarrassment and suffering," the speaker said. "The governor chose not to exercise leadership and that made it very difficult."

Rep. Richard D. Tulisano, D-Rocky Hill, ranking House Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, said he believed Falsely and Smith pulled out because rejection of their appointments appeared imminent.

"I think it was a recognition of what would have occurred here" in the full House, Tulisano said. "I think it already was a predetermined result."

He said he believed Smith would have made a good judge, but was told by GOP leaders from the outset that her nomination was in trouble.

Tulisano criticized the Legislature for the handling of Falsely's nomination, saying lawmakers should have done more to monitor and assist judges with alcohol or other problems.

"He acknowledges his alcoholism and you're supposed to go to the future," Tulisano said. "With that as a disease you can't look to the past, you have to look to the future."

Connecticut In Brief

Judge agrees to move Ross trial

NEW LONDON — Superior Court Judge Seymour L. Hendel ruled Friday that convicted double murderer Michael Ross who faces trial in four other deaths could not get a fair trial in New London County.

State's Attorney C. Robert Sattl said Hendel has hinted that the case could be moved to Fairfield County, however, that decision is not final.

Sattl says he could not comment further on the case.

Earlier this week, attorneys representing the 26-year-old Ross presented evidence including newspaper articles in their argument to get the trial moved to another location.

Ross, who is already serving a 120-year prison sentence for the murders of two women in Windham County, faces a possible death sentence on charges he murdered four women in New London County in 1983 and 1984.

Raw sewage spews into harbor

BRIDGEPORT — The city struggled Friday to control a break down at its troubled West Side sewage treatment plant, which sent millions of gallons of raw sewage spewing into Long Island Sound.

The plant clogged with grit and sludge Thursday and operators were forced to reduce the flow into the aged plant.

Untreated sewage poured into Black Rock Harbor near Captain's Cove Seaport, an area being developed as a tourist attraction, and Public Works Director Richard Gross termed the situation "a crisis."

The plant, which Department of Environmental Protection officials have termed one of the worst in the state, has a combination of problems which have forced Plant Superintendent Lou Renkavinsky to reduce flow of sewage into the plant.

Parade will honor POW-MIAs

BRIDGEPORT — About 30 veterans groups planned to hold a parade and ceremony Saturday to bring attention to the 39 Connecticut servicemen unaccounted for in Southeast Asia, coordinators say.

"If you're human you can't ignore it," said Mary Beauieu, state chairman of the National Forger-Me-Nots Association.

"It's been 15 or 20 years to get our men home who have been prisoners in Vietnam," she said Thursday. "The people involved are nothing more than criminals in my opinion."

The parade was scheduled to begin at noon Saturday and end at Captain's Cove Seaport at 1 p.m.

Officials including Rep. John G. Rowland, R-Conn., who recently visited Vietnam on a fact-finding tour, were expected to take part in the ceremony to bring attention to prisoners of war and those servicemen reported missing in action.

Union backs pregnant officer

MERIDEN — The Meriden police union has filed a grievance seeking to overturn last month's suspension of a pregnant officer who refused to work school crossing assignments because her physician told her not to stand for lengthy periods.

Police Chief Robert Koscienski said Thursday he thought the suspension of Officer Donna Baez was warranted.

The six-year police veteran was suspended April 21 for "insubordination and failure to obey an order" for failing to work scheduled school-crossing assignments April 8 and 9.

She was suspended for one day without pay.

John Thorp, head of the union, said the suspension will be appealed to Meriden's personnel director, Edward Papandrea.

Peroxide leak closes rest area

MIDDLETOWN — A rest area on I-91 was closed most of the day Friday as workers cleaned up hydrogen peroxide that had leaked from canisters on a tractor-trailer truck stopped at a weigh station, state police said.

No one was injured by the leaking chemical, which is a corrosive liquid that can burn skin and is harmful when its fumes are inhaled.

The leaking canisters, filled with a 50 percent solution of hydrogen peroxide, were discovered during a routine check of the truck when it stopped at the weigh station, police said.

The truck is operated by Portland Chemical Works Inc. of Middletown, which was charged with leaking a hazardous material during transport.

Legislature trying to catch up

HARTFORD — The state Legislature will convene at noon on Saturday and the Senate will go into session at 1 p.m. to catch up on some of the session's most important bills.

The House will consider a teacher pay raise bill, while Senate Majority Leader Reginald Smith, R-New Hartford, said his chamber "just wants to clean up the calendar."

The House generally meets once each session on a Saturday, but the Senate has not met on a Saturday in recent memory.

The Legislature faces a mandatory adjournment on Wednesday.

Prof's say deportation too broad

NEW HAVEN — A Reagan administration proposal to deport Libyan college students in the United States may be an overreaction to terrorist fears, some university professors in the state are saying.

Some faculty members and others at area colleges said this week that the government should not presume that Libyans who are studying here are all terrorists or even supporters of Libyan leader Col. Muammar Khadafy.

About 25 Libyan students live in Connecticut, according to the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service. Among the schools they attend are the University of New Haven and the University of Bridgeport.

UNH political science professor Franz B. Gross, adviser to the provost's office on international students, said the proposal for mass deportation is "going overboard." He said Libyan students should not be asked to leave unless there is intelligence information indicating they pose a threat.

Gross said he believes that most Libyan students in the United States oppose Khadafy, even those on scholarships from the Libyan government. Otherwise the Libyan students would attend universities closer to home in Italy or Britain, he said.

Group says growth poses threat to river

By Daniel Beegan
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Some Connecticut River basin towns could face increased pressure for services, or even lose their rural character, because of an influx of new residents expected in the next 14 years, a population awareness group said Friday.

Population-Environment Balance, a non-profit study group that aims to increase awareness of the link between population growth and the environment, said the basin will experience a 12 percent overall growth rate in the next 14 years. But some cities and towns will face substantially higher population increases, the group said.

"We are not calling population growth rates in this region a crisis yet," said Michele Frome, who directed a detailed study of population trends in the Connecticut River basin towns in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont. "We are sounding some early warning signals."

Frome said the study was designed to encourage the four states, as well as local governments, to plan for growth and to take steps that would discourage development where it was inappropriate, such as areas of prime farmland.

Frome told a news conference that 2 million in the basin was about 2 million in 1983 and an increase of 18 percent since 1960. Most of the population growth, she said, occurred during the 1960s, with growth of only 3 percent region-wide between 1970 and 1983.

But she said her study projected the growth rate would increase to 12 percent between 1983 and 2000 and that some towns would grow much faster than others.

Nearly half the towns in the region grew by more than 50 percent from 1960 to 1983, she said, and while total population growth was relatively slow, the growth in households and in houses and apartments was much steeper, primarily because of smaller families and more singles.

People moving into the region, rather than into the basin, was the biggest factor in population growth, she said, and that was especially true for faster-growing communities.

Some areas of the West Coast, Gray said, have required developers to pick up part of the cost of new roads and schools that would be required by people moving into a community.

GOP asks court to review open primary

By John Gustavson
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — The state Republican party is asking for reconsideration of a federal judge's delay of the date the party may open certain primaries to unaffiliated voters, a Capitol news conference, D'Amore said Friday.

D'Amore also said the party intends to go to the U.S. Supreme Court if it fails to convince the 2nd and U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to reverse the decision of one of its members that effectively barred independents from voting in any of this year's GOP primaries.

The chairman said he expected a decision on reversing Judge Irving R. Kaufman's April 23 decision within two or three weeks.

"If we are unsuccessful in that effort we fully intend to go to the Supreme Court, at which point we will be asking the Supreme Court to rescind that ruling," D'Amore told a Capitol news conference.

D'Amore said the party has "a full plate" of legal matters.

Foremost is whether the state's 600,000 unaffiliated voters will be allowed to take part in GOP primaries for U.S. Senate and House and for statewide offices including governor, attorney general and treasurer.

The party also is pursuing issues of campaign financing by Democratic Gov. William A. O'Neill. The Republicans allege he illegally used the resources of office to further his election campaign.

Central to the primary issue is a suit by the state pending before the nation's highest court. The state is contesting a lower court's affirmation of the Republican party's right to open its primaries.

The state and O'Neill argue that the General Assembly, not political parties, should formulate election practices.

The Supreme Court had refused to grant a speedy hearing in the case and settle it before the September primaries. Then Kaufman decided the Republicans could not open their primaries until the high court had resolved the state's challenge.

"I obviously think that it's going to benefit Republicans" to open primaries to independent voters, D'Amore said.

He said the party's lawyers say

A memorial for all time

When Manchester's Temple Beth Shalom dedicates its Holocaust Memorial on Sunday, the granite monument should serve as a reminder not only of the terrible fate that befell the Jewish people between 1933 and 1945, but also of the inhumanity that exists in the world today.

This is not to say that the abuses happening around the globe in 1986 can in any way compare with the systematic reign of terror and death imposed on the Jewish people under Adolf Hitler's rule. The Holocaust was the ultimate in inhuman behavior. Death trains, concentration camps and the gas chambers were built specifically for the annihilation of the Jews, and represent the darkest side of humanity. Certainly, Manchester's Holocaust Memorial should remind us first of that tragedy, which, if forgotten, will only be repeated.

But in a more subtle way, it should remind us that brutality and suffering continue today and are too widely tolerated. The fact that the abuses are on a lesser scale should not be misconstrued to mean they can't change for the worse.

The situation that comes immediately to mind is Indonesia, where President Reagan stopped earlier this week at part of his "Winds of Freedom" tour through east Asia.

Human rights abuses have taken place in that country for years, especially under the rule of President Suharto, a former military commander who seized power in a coup in 1965.

Journalists who have written unflattering remarks about his regime are serving long jail sentences, while many others have been tortured or murdered simply for displaying political dissent. Some reports estimate that the Suharto regime killed over half a million of the country's inhabitants in the first few years of his regime.

And in 1975, Suharto invaded the small island of East Timor, which is located approximately 1,000 miles from Indonesia. Since then, more than 100,000 natives have died.

The story does not stop there. Thousands upon thousands of Cambodians were murdered for being too educated under the brutal Khmer Rouge regime, which ruled Phnom Penh from 1975 until it was ousted by the Vietnamese in 1979. American journalists have reported seeing small children working in the fields with miniature gullies attached to their necks, ready to slit throats should they relax for any length of time.

Elsewhere, men, women and children suffer under dictatorships which think nothing of human life and seem immune to the scream of human pain. While most crimes against humanity pale when compared to those of the Third Reich, they are crimes nonetheless.

There's no question that Manchester's memorial is important primarily because it will stand as a constant reminder of the pain suffered by the 6 million Jews who perished at the hands of the Nazis. Denials must not be tolerated, and those who seek to diminish either the horror or the significance of the Holocaust must be made to understand.

But the memorial can do more. It can remind us of what has happened, what continues to happen today and what could happen in the future.

Free space and the kings of billboards

WASHINGTON — Campaign contributions and push junkies for Washington congressmen — courtesy of the powerful billboard industry — have been the subject of recent columns. Now, we've learned that at least one sign company has been discussing how to reward its friends and punish enemies at the local level as well.

Our associate Stewart Harris obtained a copy of tactics discussed by Naegele Outdoor Advertising Co., third-largest in the country, during a company seminar in Minneapolis four years ago. A Naegele spokesman insists that the ideas were presented only for "discussion purposes" and the Naegele doesn't use them.

Among the suggestions were to give the local mayor free billboard space for his favorite charity. "The mayor (being a politician) will recognize the value of being able to get credit for favors to various civic-minded persons," the agenda explained.

Critics accuse the industry of using variations of this tactic, as when a billboard company fighting a court suit in Des Moines, Iowa, erected a sign saying, "A Shriner never stands so tall as when the stoops to help a crippled child."

The judge presiding over the billboard suit was a Shriner in the neighborhood where the sign was posted, according to the Des Moines city attorney.

DURING THE NAEGELE SEMINAR, company executives discussed ways to oppose anti-billboard campaigns. The agenda included such things as the number of votes required on a city council, the mayor's and city attorney's ability to help — and a cryptic question: "Bribe suggested?"

The last was on the agenda as a "preventive measure," so company officials would know how to turn down a city official proposing a bribe, the spokesman said.

For the record, a two-year FBI investigation in North Carolina led to the 1985 conviction of a Naegele official there on charges that he ordered company employees to falsify their income tax forms to avoid taxes on bonuses they had passed along to local politicians as campaign contributions.

Until last fall, a media conglomerate called Ackley Communications had been a good friend to the American Heart Association. The company for years had given the association free billboard space for its public service announcements.

But then the Heart Association stepped over the line: It voiced its opposition to billboard advertising of cigarettes. The tobacco industry, along with the liquor and airline industries, is one of the major clients of billboard companies like Ackley.

IN A MEMO dated Nov. 14, 1985, a top Ackley official instructed the company's billboard, radio and television subsidiaries to cease further the donation of air time or billboard space to the Heart Association.

"Their position on cigarette advertising is not compatible with ours or the company," the memo explained. "Please consider this to be the same as the American Cancer (Society); we will no longer give either organization any support."

As it happened, Ackley resigned the memo so fast that the Heart Association never noticed any interruption in the posting of their public service announcements on airport billboards. And the company's attorney, Eric Rubin, said that the memo "does not reflect the company's policy — it never did."

NEW YORK — Six elated explorers announced in a message relayed to their base camp by a bush pilot Friday evening that they had reached the North Pole after a nearly two-month journey, their base-camp operator said.

"He was flying only 15 miles from Resolute and he heard the team trying to contact base camp, so he acted as the relay," said Jim Gasperini, who is running the expedition base camp in Resolute Bay, Northwest Territories. He said the message arrived at 6:50 p.m. EDT.

"We could hear that they were transmitting but we couldn't distinguish any words," he said, adding that the pilot reported that all six team members are fine.

School is lucky to have teachers

To the Editor: At Nathan Hale School we are fortunate to have teachers like Mrs. Hovey who put their whole heart into their jobs.

The third- and fourth-graders put on a play called "Connecticut Review." It was to celebrate Connecticut's 350th birthday. Mrs. Hovey researched the history of Connecticut and all of the famous people. She wrote the whole play and all the speaking parts. The music teacher, Mrs. Hilton, and Mrs. Hovey wrote a song about the history of Connecticut to open the play.

We, the third and fourth grade, would like to say "thanks" to all the Unit B teachers, Mrs. Hovey, Mrs. Carlson, Mrs. Kissell, Mrs. Wintzler, and Mrs. Marrota and the music teacher. "They did a great job!"

Wainberg should be embarrassed

To the Editor: We wholeheartedly agree with the police union's stand in regard to Mayor Wainberg's letter on behalf of Stephen Massaro, convicted in connection with a drug deal.

If Mrs. Wainberg was not embarrassed by her position and action, she well should have been. Any elected official who recommends that drug dealers be given leniency because they are "good business people" is way off base. No drug dealer is worthy of any consideration. Let them pay the penalty.

Our mayor should acquaint herself with the destruction drug abuse creates. It is a poison affecting many of our youth and their families.

All our support should be directed to the agency we have entrusted with law enforcement. These individuals are the ones who deserve a letter of praise for their efforts.

Squirrels give pleasure to some

To the Editor: To the lady who asked in a recent letter: "Is there any reason for the existence of squirrels?"

Yes, there is. They give pleasure to some people. It makes my day to go out the door and find my little pals waiting for their ration of peanuts in the shell. Or to see them chasing each other up and down a tree.

There is no greater joy than seeing the look of pleasure on my grandson's face as they take a peanut from his hand. Kids like squirrels and I vote for the little critters too.

Republican and Democratic leaders of Congress who was about to happen to Libya after our bombers had already taken off from England. But some congressmen insist that this wasn't enough: To them, to "consult" with Congress means involving it, somehow, in the decision-making process itself. It would be hard to imagine a more dangerous folly.

IN THE FIRST PLACE, little as Congress may like to hear this, it simply isn't secure enough. When Portugal was threatened with a communist election victory in 1975, a high-ranking American official told me that our government badly wanted to give secret financial aid to friendly parties there, but that under prevailing law two committees of Congress would have to be notified in advance, and in that case "every friend we have in Portugal would be dead or in jail by dawn."

In the second place, Congress has developed a bad habit of trying to influence or shape presidential policies by conditioning its approval of them, or its financial support for them, on the prior occurrence of certain events. What, do you suppose, would have happened to those American medical students in Grenada if Congress had conditioned our invasion on prior certification by the president that he had first tried unsuccessfully to negotiate with the communist government for their safety?

Congress has the right to declare wars, but lesser applications of U.S. military power belong where they are: in the president's hands.

contras. The War Powers Resolution of 1973 was an attempt by Congress to limit the extent of such military adventures without crippling presidents altogether. Its core provision specifies that a president cannot send American troops abroad for more than 60 days without express congressional approval. If such approval is not forthcoming, the troops must be withdrawn.

THAT IS NOT, it seems to me, an unreasonable attempt to prevent future "police actions" and "escalations" that, in effect, fess the constitutional provision that Congress alone can declare war. Unfortunately, the War Powers Resolution goes on to specify that the president must "consult" with Congress in advance "in every possible instance." It is this provision that certain critics are complaining Mr. Reagan has ignored, or at least not fully complied with.

Luckily the provision is so vague that it can be construed narrowly, and therefore safely — as Mr. Reagan demonstrated when he told the

Navy probes why sub ran aground

WASHINGTON — The Navy said Friday it is investigating why one of its newest nuclear-powered attack submarines ran aground earlier this week while passing through the Straits of Gibraltar.

The grounding of the USS Atlanta on Tuesday left the vessel with a pictured outer ballast tank and damage to the nose dome that covers its sonar gear. The submarine was able to rise to the surface and proceed under its own power to port in Gibraltar after the accident, the Navy said.

The incident was the second involving the grounding of a nuclear-powered submarine in less than a month. A Poseidon missile-carrying submarine, the USS Nathaniel Green, ran aground April 1 while operating in the Irish Sea.

NASA assesses Delta launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Technicians found no signs Friday of fuel leak that blocked blastoff of a Delta rocket and its weather satellite cargo, resetting the stage for NASA's first post-Challenger launch Saturday.

The launch had been scheduled for Thursday, but engineers conducting routine tests discovered about 1 1/2 ounces of RP-1 kerosene rocket propellant had leaked through fuel lines past the Delta first stage engine's main fuel valve. Launch tentatively was rescheduled for 6:18 p.m. EDT Saturday.

Although subsequent tests found no additional leakage, NASA was taking no chances in the wake of the Challenger disaster Jan. 28 and the April 18 failure of an Air Force Titan 34D rocket at Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif.

Losses heavy in Afghan battle

MOSCOW — Afghan and Soviet soldiers killed 2,000 rebels and wounded 4,000 in destroying a major guerrilla stronghold in southeastern Afghanistan, Soviet newspaper reports said.

The three-week battle at Zhawar, the Moslem guerrillas' largest base, ended in late April. Rebel sources in Pakistan have acknowledged heavy losses.

Two Soviet newspapers carried long articles Wednesday and Thursday about the battle. They were both unusual in their detail. But only one, the government newspaper Izvestia, mentioned Soviet involvement.

Vatican works to counter sects

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican on Friday exhorted Roman Catholic priests worldwide to work against the proliferation of religious sects and cults that keep and keep converts through brainwashing, sexual enticement and separation from family and society.

In its first comprehensive analysis on the subject, the Vatican said local Roman Catholic churches around the world view as a serious matter the inroads made by such groups, including some with Christian roots.

The 17-page study said sects and cults are "too diverse" to be defined simply and clearly.

But a Vatican official told The Associated Press that the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church and fundamentalist evangelical denominations active in the United States and Latin America are among those winning converts from Catholics.

More violence follows strike

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Police battled black demonstrators in the wake of a day-long general strike by millions of South Africans opposed to apartheid, and authorities said seven blacks were killed, including two policemen.

Police reported violence in 24 black townships Thursday night and said they had arrested more than 700 people.

The dead included four black men shot by riot police, two officers killed by black demonstrators, and a woman, accused of being a police informer, who was burned to death by other blacks.

Meanwhile, millions of black workers and students around the country returned to their jobs and schools. Commerce and industry were reported back to normal after the massive protest strike Thursday.

The strike was called to denounce apartheid, South Africa's official policy of race segregation, and to demand that May 1 — May Day — be declared a public holiday.

Bush: Soviet secrecy 'unconscionable'

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Vice President George Bush challenged the Soviet Union on Friday to share more information about health problems around the disaster "unconscionable."

Bush, leaving Andrews Air Force Base for Chicago after meeting with Cabinet officials to review the Chernobyl accident, said the Soviets have responded to some U.S. requests for information.

"I cannot go into the detail... but it is sparse at best," he said. "They have been less than forthcoming, and my strong conviction is that they ought to open up, even in that closed society."

Bush said the United States is not likely to be affected by the accident at the complex, 80 miles north of Kiev. But he added: "We're monitoring it very closely. We're using the best technology in the world to keep a close watch on it."

Bush said he could not say how many people had been killed in the accident. The Soviet government has said two people died and 18 others are in serious condition.

"Some health effects are delayed," Denton said at a briefing by a U.S. interagency task force monitoring the accident. "I would expect continuing health problems from people who've been exposed to lower levels."

Lee Thomas, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and head of the task force, said the group believes there were life-threatening doses of radiation up to three miles from the plant, and significant health effects up to seven miles from the site.

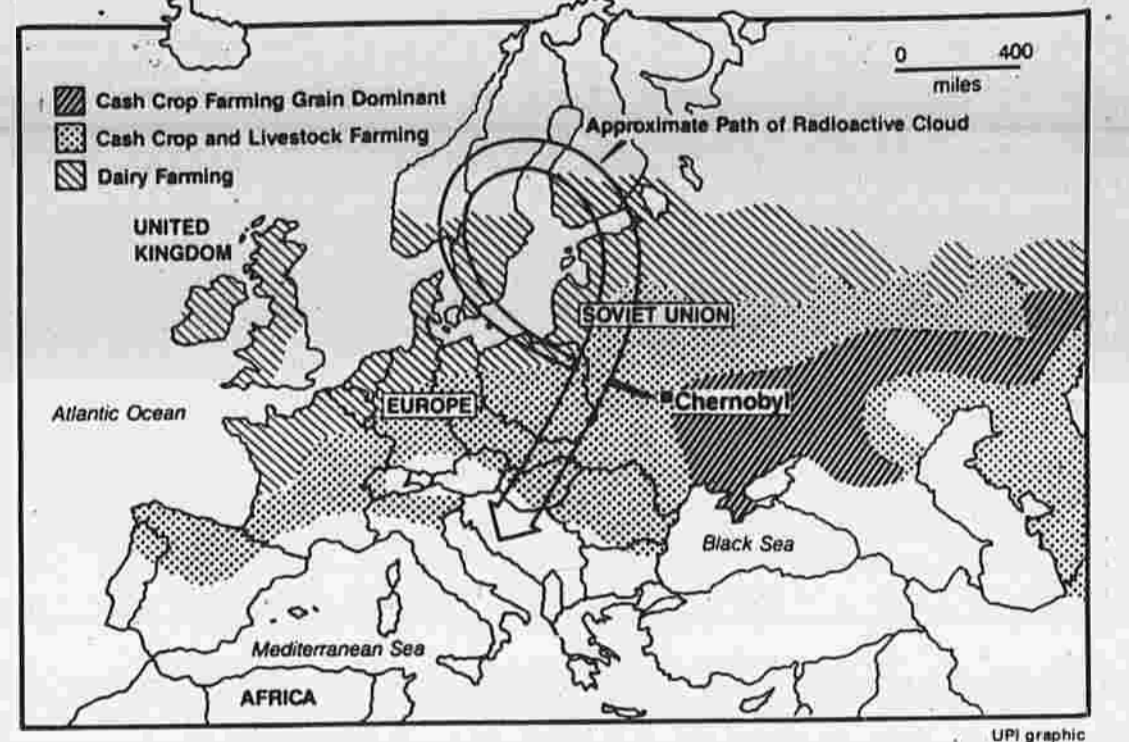

But Thomas added that "we have no information relating to what evacuation there may have been before the accident, while the incident itself. Therefore, you can't draw any kinds of conclusions about what exposure there might have been."

Thomas said officials think the reactor may still be burning, but at diminished levels. Denton said the most dangerous gases would have already been released.

The officials said any increased radiation from the accident that reaches the United States would not arrive for several more days, if at all. Other officials, like Bush, have insisted from the outset that there was no health threat to people in the United States.

The task force, created by President Reagan to monitor the impact of the accident, used data gathered by Swedish authorities to estimate how much radiation likely was released in a fire and meltdown at one of four reactors at the site.

The new calculations suggest that for the two-day period when most of the radiation probably was released, exposure levels to people in the area would have ranged from 20 rems to hundreds of rems over their whole bodies, the task

A week after the Soviet nuclear plant disaster, analysts predicted the impact on agriculture in the Soviet Union and nearby countries will be minimal, but they said the true consequences must be monitored over time. Nuclear and agricultural experts agreed that radiation damage to crops and animals would be dramatic only in the area immediately surrounding the Chernobyl plant.

The State Department, which has warned Americans to stay out of the Kiev area, recommended Friday that women of child-bearing age and children stay out of Poland. Spokesman Charles Redman said conditions throughout the region were being studied.

According to the task force, the United States is sending experts to "potentially affected areas" to gather information needed to safeguard the health of American citizens.

EPA spokesman Chris Rice said EPA and NRC officials have been dispatched to some U.S. embassies in eastern Europe to monitor the radiation situation.

The Cabinet-level panel headed by Bush is charged with reviewing the accident and the health and safety issues it has raised.

Pressure builds to ban Waldheim

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate pressure is unlikely to influence Attorney General Meese to bar Kurt Waldheim from the United States despite new evidence implicating the former U.S. secretary-general in Nazi war crimes, officials said Friday.

And as new revelations of Waldheim's World War II links to the Nazi regime were revealed in his personal diary, further information emerged showing the French government knew Waldheim had lied about his wartime activities as early as 1979, while he was still U.N. secretary-general.

A new document, showing that the French government checked Waldheim's wartime personnel record in West Berlin in 1979, did not, however, indicate why the check was made nor why its contents not made public.

Senators approved a resolution early Friday urging Meese to "carefully and expeditiously" review the mounting evidence against Waldheim and to "treat him appropriately" if he is found to have had a role in Nazi war crimes.

Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., who introduced the resolution, said it is imperative the Justice Department "act promptly on the question of Waldheim's admission to the United States on the basis of the documented evidence."

A Justice Department source, however, said it was unlikely the Senate action would force Meese to bar the former U.N. chief from the country.

If Meese banned Waldheim, it would mark the first time the United States has branded the head of state of a friendly nation as a suspected war criminal and an "undesirable alien" under U.S. law. The attorney general is in California and not expected to make a decision before the Austrian presidential election Sunday, which Waldheim is favored to win.

In Vienna, Waldheim's office issued a statement saying he had not seen the new documents but "the fact that Mr. Waldheim has known of his past activities has been admitted by him and this seems to be the old allegation."

Waldheim has denied charges he was involved in mass deportations of Jews from Greece, as well as in the brutal warfare against Yugoslav partisans while serving in the German Army.

Terrorism, nuclear safety on Tokyo agenda

TOKYO (UPI) — Japan, West Germany and Italy would Friday raise the issue of nuclear safety at the Tokyo summit despite concerns by the United States that the Soviet atomic disaster would overshadow terrorism at the meetings.

President Reagan, seeking to rally support for U.S. moves to isolate Libya, arrived in Tokyo from Indonesia Friday amid tight security aimed at preventing threatened attacks by leftist radicals.

He was the second world leader to arrive for the three-day meeting, which begins Sunday, between the United States, Japan, Britain, Canada, France, Italy and West Germany. Italian Prime Minister Bettino Craxi preceded Reagan into Tokyo by one day.

The annual summits began in 1975 as an economic forum but this year's session is taking place during a time of intense worldwide concern over terrorism and the Soviet nuclear plant disaster.

Japanese, Italian and West German leaders said they want the nuclear issue to be a major topic of discussion at the summit, but

Secretary of State George Shultz said he does not want the Chernobyl accident to dominate the talks.

"There has been a lot of diplomatic exchange with other allies on the nuclear accident," Shultz said before leaving Bali, Indonesia.

"Undoubtedly, the subject will get discussed at the summit meeting, although we have lots of other things to discuss at the summit meeting. We don't want to have it dominated by this accident."

False sense of security... By James Jacoby... Don't be so busy patting yourself on the back when you get to a good slam contract that you forget to play it in the best possible way... The bidding has some interest. South, the strong hand, made what sounded like a game-try when he bid three hearts, his second suit. Then, when North accepted by bidding four spades, South carried on to five spades. That bid denoted controls in both minors, since South could hardly expect North to have them, and asked North to simply evaluate his cards based on the bidding. Holding both major suit kings, North had no trouble deciding to go on to slam. Declarer was pleased when the dummy hit the table. He won the opening lead with his club ace and in a state of self-congratulatory euphoria, casually led a spade to dummy's king. When that was gobbled up by East's singleton ace, declarer had to lose another trump trick. The only danger is four trumps in one hand, but nothing can be done about four trumps to the A-10 in West's hand. Declarer's obligation in careful play is simply to protect against what he can. To guard against the admittedly slim possibility of the singleton ace with East, declarer should play a diamond to dummy's king at trick two and then play a low spade from dummy. When the ace pops up, all is well. Pull the wool... The expression "to pull the wool over one's eyes" comes from the time when gentlemen wore white wigs, usually made of wool. Highwaymen would pull a victim's wig down over his eyes before relieving him of his watch and wallet.

Amtrak suspends Montreal run... WASHINGTON — Beginning Monday, Amtrak will temporarily discontinue its service between Springfield, Mass., and Montreal. The route is usually served by the "Montrealer" that runs from Washington through New York and Hartford to Montreal. Amtrak announced the suspension Friday and said full service would resume when a strike against Guilford Transportation Industries is settled. That strike has resulted in a work stoppage on the Central Vermont Railway, whose tracks Amtrak uses for the Montrealer. Since April 23, Amtrak had been using substitute charter buses to carry passengers from Springfield to Montreal. Oil futures prices leap higher... In a late reaction to the nuclear disaster in the Soviet Union, oil futures prices leaped higher Friday, passing the $14-a-barrel psychological barrier. Some analysts say they now see crude oil floating up to the $18 or $19 level during the next few weeks. Grain and livestock prices declined, giving up some of the impressive gains they achieved on speculation that contaminated fallout from the nuclear accident could seriously damage agriculture in the region. Crude oil settled 79 cents to 92 cents higher with the contract for delivery in June at $14.73 a barrel, heating oil was unchanged to 2.49 cents higher with June at 43.05 cents a gallon; and leaded gasoline was 1.29 cents to 1.95 cents higher with June at 51.64 cents a gallon. Among the slumping commodities on the Chicago Board of Trade, corn and wheat futures were hardest hit. GM recalling 764,700 vehicles... DETROIT — General Motors Corp. announced the recall Friday of some 1983-85 Chevrolet Camaros and Pontiac Firebirds and 1985 Chevrolet Astro and GMC Safari vans because of possible seat belt and steering column defects. About 738,000 Camaros and Firebirds were being recalled because their front seat shoulder belts may not retract properly. GM said. Owners were being told to bring their cars to dealers to have the belt system checked and modified by installing new retaining spring clips or, if necessary, by replacing the retractors. About 26,700 Astro and Safari vans were being recalled because there is a chance that a part of the power steering gear housing could break, GM said. FHA can accept applications again... WASHINGTON — President Reagan signed emergency legislation Friday extending the depleted authority of two government agencies that are major sources of home mortgage credit, the White House said. The law enables the Federal Housing Administration, which hit its $57.4 billion credit ceiling on Tuesday, to again accept applications for government insured mortgages. The law raises the FHA's credit ceiling $17 billion and extends the agency's authority to insure mortgages to June 6. The FHA stopped accepting mortgage applications on Wednesday. Reagan signed the bill in Tokyo within hours after he arrived for this weekend's economic summit meeting. The bill's signing was announced here and in Tokyo. The bill was passed Tuesday night by the Senate and final action came Wednesday on a voice vote in the House. The law also enables the Government National Mortgage Association (Ginnie Mae) to guarantee the prompt payment of new securities backed by government-insured mortgages.

Mutual fund is a multiple investment

Investors' Guide... William A. Doyle... approximately $2,400 in a mutual fund on Dec. 5, 1985. At least, we thought she did. I was present that day, when the brokerage representative telephoned the order. On March 10, they called and said the fund in which my wife wanted to invest was "closed out." When we went to see them, they said my wife would have to put the money into a new mutual fund managed by the same organization. We don't mind that. But, shouldn't my wife be able to buy at the Dec. 5 price, the day the new fund was started, rather than the March 10 price, which was much higher? Because they admit they "gouged," they agreed not to charge commission on the March 10 purchase. They already charged commission on the December 5 purchase. My wife invested the market to get over the trauma. On Wednesday, the Dow Jones industrial average plunged a record 41.91 points. Its weekly loss of 69.89 points was exceeded only by the 82.26-point dive it took in the five trading sessions ended April 4. At the final bell, losers held a narrow lead over gainers in the overall tally of issues listed on the New York Stock Exchange. The NYSE composite index dipped 0.09 to 135.39. Volume on the Big Board contracted to 126.7 million shares from 146.44 million on Thursday. A sharp rebound in oil prices on commodities exchanges benefited oil stocks but hurt transportation issues. Phillips Petroleum was the volume leader and closed up 1/4 at 9 3/4. Chevron gained 1/4 to 39 1/4, Exxon rose 1/4 to 56, Mobil rose 1/4 to 29 1/4 and were all among the 15 most heavily traded stocks. The Dow Jones average of 20 transportation issues fell 5.39 to 786.56. Uncertainty over the economy's health and fears that interest rates will rebound left some investors reluctant to trade heavily. A Labor Department report that the civilian unemployment rate fell 0.1 percentage point to 7.1 percent in April indicated the economy got off to a sluggish start during the second quarter. A survey of businesses showed non-agricultural payroll employment rose by 200,000 in April to reach the 100 million mark for the first time ever. But the commissioner of labor statistics, Janet L. General Electric dipped 1/4 to 76 1/4 and American Telephone & Telegraph fell 1/4 to 24 1/4.

Stock market suffers another loss

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices pulled back in subdued trading Friday as the market suffered its fourth straight losing session. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials drifted at slightly higher levels during much of the day, but late selling dragged the index down and left the indicator 3.10 points lower at 1,774.88. "I think the market is going to be quite erratic after the damage that was sustained in Wednesday's sell-off," said Eugene Peroni, director of technical research for Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards Inc. New jobs offset smokestack unemployment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plunging interest rates and oil prices began showing up favorably in the job market last month, helping create 265,000 new jobs to offset the continuing ill health of smokestack industries and modestly reduce unemployment to 7.1 percent, the government reported Friday. Despite the loss of the 60,000 jobs in manufacturing and oil and gas industries, a housing boom triggered by the lowest mortgage rates this decade raised construction, real estate and finance employment by 130,000 in April, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said. With 8.3 million people still seeking work — about the same level as a year ago — officials said the one-tenth of a percentage point drop from the March civilian jobless rate of 7.2 percent represents little change in the overall labor market. But even that small dip helped relieve fears triggered up a large upsurge in joblessness two months earlier that the nearly 3 1/2-year-long recovery from the last recession had become stalled. "There was a weakening in the economy earlier in the year, (but) I think that's past us," BLS Commissioner Janet L. Norwood also are beginning to help put a force on the figures, with the labor force growing by only 29,000 people in April after rising a total 1.7 million the previous 12 months. However, a couple of what Ms. Norwood called "troubling aspects" — one new and the other with a long-term history — clouded the favorable developments. Nearly 1.1 million so-called "discouraged" workers have given up even looking for jobs. And the number of people working part-time, but not out of choice, shot up by 385,000 in April to 5.8 million, the highest level in more than two years.

Joel Quenneville, a Hartford Whaler defenseman, waves to fans from a pickup truck in Friday's parade honoring the team for its performance in the quest for the Stanley Cup. On the other side of the truck is Jenna Lee Liut, sitting on the lap of her father, Mike Liut, who turned in a stellar performance in goal during the playoffs.

Parade salutes winningest Whalers

By Kenneth R. Bozine

HARTFORD — The hockey season is over for them but that was not important to the thousands of fans who lined downtown streets Friday to praise the Hartford Whalers, who this week completed their winningest NHL season.

Following the parade, Whalers General Manager Emile "The Cat" Francis told a news conference he has never seen a team finish as strongly as his club did this season, while contending Connecticut's only major league professional team has matured.

Whalers players waved to screaming fans during the parade and a delegation of state and city officials were headed by Gov. William A. O'Neill, who declared the day "Whalers Day" in Connecticut.

There were plenty of balloons and Whalers' green displayed by loyal fans of the team, which excited the state with its Cinderella climb from Adam's Division cellar mat to Stanley Cup contenders.

"I have never seen a team through a two-month period give so much, and they had to give it," Francis said referring to the team's strong 12-3-2 record during March and April.

"I think they've matured and they picked up a lot of experience," he said.

Francis also praised the fans who stuck by the Whalers during six losing seasons prior to this year.

"I think maybe the team's eyes are open about this community," Francis said. "I'm not just proud of this team. I'm proud of this community, and I'm talking about Hartford."

Captain Ron Francis, whose five seasons in Hartford makes him the team's elder player, said it was a great year for the team and the fans.

"I've always thought Hartford could be a hockey town," Francis said.

Goalie Mike Liut was praised by "The Cat" as the team's top acquisition in the last two seasons. Francis made eight trades this season alone.

"From the time he came here, this team has played 500 hockey," Francis said. "I mean every deal we've done is for a purpose, but that (deal) was done for a reason... his leadership on and off the ice."

Francis, boasting the Adams Division is the toughest in the NHL, said the Whalers will have to improve to maintain their new-found status as a winning team.

"We've got to get better and we've got to improve," he said. "The team finished the regular season with a 40-36-4 record. The Whalers, who were defeated by the Montreal Canadiens in overtime of the seventh game of the Adams Division finals earlier this week, set 78 team and individual records this season."

The Whalers peaked this season with a three-game sweep of the Quebec Nordiques in the opening round of the NHL playoffs.

Francis said the high point of the season was the Whalers' 40 wins, which topped the previous record by 10, while the low point this year was the team's play during February when they lost seven consecutive games.

Budget writers say Reagan given signal

By Cliff Hoas
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Despite President Reagan's "serious reservations," budget writers said a bipartisan $1 trillion tax-and-spending plan the Senate passed early Friday sends a loud and clear signal about the need for revenue increases and restraint in Pentagon spending to trim federal red ink.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said he expected legislation to carry out such action "will find its way to the president's desk within the next 40 to 50 days."

Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee, welcomed the Senate's action — which came at about 1 a.m. Friday — and said his panel would begin drafting its version of the spending plan next week.

However, a statement issued by Gray's office did not indicate whether he would seek tax increases similar to those in the Senate package.

Democratic leaders had promised the House panel could produce its own budget 72 hours after the Senate finished work.

"Now it's up to the House to match its rhetoric with action," said Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.

Gray had said on Thursday, "The House position is that additional revenues are needed but that the House will not consider them until the president and the Republicans signal agreement."

But Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida, the senior Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee, said the Senate votes of 66-29 and 70-25 on the compromise spending plan for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 should clear the way for House Democrats to act.

On the final ballot, 38 Democrats and 22 Republicans voted in favor of the package while 19 Republicans and six Democrats opposed it.

"We have given to the (House) Democrats what they needed, and that's a budget that has a majority of the (Senate) Republicans supporting new tax increases," Chiles said.

"They can go forward now, they can put revenue in. I don't think they have to wait for the president to say, 'I'm going to take new taxes,'" Domenici said.

Domenici said the House and the White House should work closely by Senate votes as sentiment for action on a mix of tax increases, dogmatic spending restraint and relief for the Pentagon that Reagan requested.

"I believe the message is loud and clear and it couldn't be any stronger," he said.

Hagan was less than lukewarm about the package, praising only the fact that the Senate had taken action.

The Sept. 1985 plan calls for unspecified tax increases of about $13.2 billion next year, which is more than double what Reagan recommended in the budget proposals he sent to Congress on Feb. 5.

However, it is lower than the $17 billion in tax increases Domenici's budget committee had recommended.

On military spending authority, the president had requested $320 billion for next year, but the Senate package approved $301 billion. Still, that was $6 billion more than the committee recommended.

Cost-of-living increases for federal programs would be granted at the rate of inflation, which the budget anticipates at 2 percent.

Reagan had called for the elimination of the spending plan next week. However, a statement issued by Gray's office did not indicate whether he would seek tax increases similar to those in the Senate package.

Cheney tightens grip on COC's top rung

By Bob Popelt
Herold Sports Writer

Cheney Tech is Number One. Not that the Beavers' baseball team, undefeated in league play, has ever been anywhere else but on top of the Charter Oak Conference this year.

The Techmen merely solidified their contention — pun intended — Friday by nipping preseason prohibitive favorite Portland High, 4-3, on winning pitcher Rick Gonzalez's suicide squeeze bunt in the bottom of the seventh.

"It was important, but it's still too early in the season to call any a 'must win,'" said Cheney coach Bill Baccaro. "I didn't want to overemphasize it. We were almost overpsyched."

The Beavers are now 8-0 in the COC, while the second-place Highlanders slip to 5-2 in the conference. Cheney is 8-1 overall, the lone loss coming to Prince Tech, 15-6, back on April 17.

Portland, 6-2 overall, also lost a conference contest to Vinal Tech earlier in the campaign.

"I just want to say that Cheney is a very good team and they've shown a lot of improvement under Coach Baccaro," said Portland pitcher Charlie O'Connell.

The visiting Highlanders had called for two runs in the top of the seventh to tie it up at 3-3 against a tiring Gonzalez, who was not to be denied his seventh straight triumph.

Tech shortstop Tom Dowd led off the bottom half with his third single of the day off losing pitcher Jim Bastura. Bruce Carpenter laid down a sacrifice bunt, and was safe when Portland catcher Chuck Jacobucci misplayed the ball for an error.

With runners on first and second, cleanup batter-Ron Nese lofted a high fly to straight-away center, but the can of corn slipped through the glove of center fielder Dave Guild for the second successive error and Portland's sixth in the contest. Guild recovered his senses, and the ball, in time to prevent a tying run.

Without even leaving a note, and with runners on first and second, Cheney had Dowd at third and Nese on first with one out and No. 5 base coming to Prince Tech, 15-6, back on April 17.

"I just want to say that Cheney is a very good team and they've shown a lot of improvement under Coach Baccaro," said Portland pitcher Charlie O'Connell.

Dowd, sprinting home on the pitch, was already three-quarters of the way down the line when Gonzalez dropped his bunt. By the time Bastura fielded the ball and made an instinctive albeit worthless throw to first, it was over.

"This whole win has to start with Ricky Gonzalez," said Baccaro, of his ironman workhorse. "He laid down the perfect squeeze, and he pitched with a lot of guts."

Gonzalez worked out of jams with at least one runner in scoring position in four of the first six frames before Portland finally wore him down in the seventh. Bastura, who lined singles in his first three at bats, opened by striking out, but Greg Dinatale drew a free pass and then consecutive singles by Bob Buttram, Curt Benashski and Dave Guild — the latter two for RBIs — accounted for the equalizers.

Gonzalez, who scored 11 hits while fanning six, then issued his second base on balls, to designated hitter Brian Laplante, to lead the sacks. But the Cheney senior captain bore down and escaped from further damage.

The Beavers managed just six hits — three by Dowd, two by Nese and a pinch-hit triple by Chris Tibbo that resulted in their third tally — off Bastura, who suffered his first loss in three decisions. Tech took a 2-0 lead with single markers in the first and second. Nese delivered a clutch, two-out double — his first of two two-baggers — to supply the initial run.

Mark Pelletier's RBI grounder drove in the second in the second, after the Beavers were RBI down by back-to-back dropped pop-ups by Portland's wind-blown infielders.

"This ranks right up there," answered O'Connell, when asked if the game was the Highlanders' worst defensive effort of the year.

Portland finally cracked Gonzalez in the fifth when Bob Buttram's bad-hop runs-scoring single made it 2-1. Cheney got the run back in the sixth, when pinch-hitter Tibbo tripled and counted on a throwing error.

The Beavers hope to continue their roll on Tuesday, when they host RHAM at 3:15 p.m.

Yankees blanked, Andujar handles the Bosox

By United Press International

NEW YORK — Ed Correa, the youngest player in the major leagues, allowed three hits Friday night to lead the Texas Rangers to a 7-0 victory over the New York Yankees.

Correa, who turned 20 Tuesday, struck out nine and walked five in pitching his first major league start. The right-hander, obtained from the White Sox in the trade, had runners on second and third with two out, but Willie Randolph flied out to right fielder Pete Incaviglia to end the inning.

Texas scored twice in the second inning off losing Bob Shirley 6-2. Dan Slaughter led off with a single. Two outs later and Toby Harrah also walked. Scott Fletcher, who had two doubles and three RBI, doubled to center scoring both runners.

In the third, with one out, Shirley walked. Gary Met and Larry Parrish. Slaughter singled home. Ward After George Wright struck out. Steve Buechele singled home Parrish to make it 4-0.

Texas added two runs in the sixth. Shirley walked Buechele, who stole second and scored on Fletcher's double. Fletcher then scored on Pete O'Brien's double. Shirley lasted 52-3 innings giving up six hits and six earned runs, walking a career high nine and striking out five.

He was relieved by left-hander Tommy John, making his first Yankee appearance since Aug. 24, 1982. John lasted 2-1/3 innings and yielded Slaughter's sixth home run of the season.

A's 4, Red Sox 1
At Boston, rookie Jose Canseco, Dave Kingman and Bruce Bochte hit three home runs in a 4-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Andujar, 3-1, walked one and struck out three in recording his first American League complete game.

A's took a 2-0 lead in the fourth inning off loser Al Nipper. 2-3. Dwayne Murphy led off with a double down the left-field line and Canseco followed by smashing a 1-1 pitch into the right-field seats for his seventh homer of the season.

The Red Sox cut the lead to 2-1 in the bottom of the inning. Dwight Evans led off with a single and Wade Boggs walked. After Bill Buckner popped out, Jim Rice extended his hitting streak to nine games with a loop single to center.

Oakland added two runs in the sixth to increase the lead to 4-1. With two outs, Kingman smashed a 2-4 pitch over the left-field screen for his third homer. Bochte followed with a wind-blown drive into the right-field seats for his second homer of the year.

Kingman has hit 10 home runs in 15 games.

Twins 10, Tigers 1
At Detroit, Kirby Puckett had three hits, including his major league leading 10th home run, and Randy Bush added two-run triples Friday night to power the Minnesota Twins to an 10-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Mike Smithson, 3-2, struck out seven, walked one and limited Detroit to no more than one runner per inning until the seventh in pitching a six-hitter.

Indians 7, White Sox 5
At Chicago, Tony Bernazard and Chris Bando had run-scoring singles in the top of the 10th to give the Cleveland Indians a 7-5 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Brook Jacoby opened with a single off reliever Dave Schmidt, 4-1. Schmidt hit Pat Tabler with a pitch. One out later, Bernazard singled to right to score Jacoby and send Tabler to third. Bando singled in Tabler to make it 7-5.

Ernie Camacho, despite angling a run-scoring single in the bottom of the ninth to Jerry Hairston, won his first decision.

Brewers 5, Angels 4
At Milwaukee, Paul Molitor collected a single and triple and stole home Friday night to lead the Milwaukee Brewers to a 5-4 victory over the California Angels.

The triumph was the Brewers' fifth in their last seven games, while the Angels lost for only the second time in their last 11 games.

Juan Nieves, 1-1, a 21-year-old rookie left-hander, needed seventh inning relief help from Dan Plesac to earn his first major league victory. Nieves allowed nine hits and two walks in 6 2/3 innings.

Plesac pitched 2-1/3 innings to earn his first major league save.

Royals 5, Orioles 0
At Kansas City, George Brett and Frank White hit back-to-back home runs Friday night to back the 10-hit pitching of Bret Saberhagen and give the Kansas City Royals a 5-0 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

NBA playoff roundup
The Celtics edged their scoring around with Kevin McHale getting 25 points, Ainge 23 and Dennis Johnson 24.

Wilkins, who scored a total of only 32 points in his first two playoff outings against the Celtics, had 23 points at halftime when the Hawks trailed 64-60, but scored only three points — on a 24-foot jumper in the third quarter — before adding a dozen in the final stanza.

Mavs 110, Lakers 108
At Dallas, Derek Harper's three-point shot with three seconds remaining clinaxed a Dallas comeback Friday night that gave the Mavericks a 110-108 victory over Los Angeles and moved them within a game of the Lakers in their best-of-seven conference semifinal playoff series.

The Lakers will take a 2-1 advantage into Sunday's fourth game at Reunion Arena.

Boston's Steve Lyons (right) dives back to first base on an attempted pickoff Friday night at Fenway Park. A's first baseman Bruce Bochte makes the sweep tag. Oakland won, 4-1.

Mets hold off the Reds

At Cincinnati, reliever Roger McDowell singled home two runs in the eighth inning and Jesse Orosco registered a clutch relief performance Friday night, helping the New York Mets post an 8-7 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

The Reds had trimmed an 8-2 deficit with four runs in the eighth when Orosco entered the game with two on and Dave Parker at bat. Orosco struck Parker out looking, but then threw a wild pitch, permitting Eric Davis to score from Horner's grounder to shortstop Steve Jeter. Terry Harper walked and Andres Thomas doubled home Horner to make it 2-0. Carlton's wild pitch scored Harper.

The Mets held on to their last 13 games, while the Reds have lost six in a row and 10 of their last 11.

Sid Fernandez, 3-0, walked six and struck out six in 5-1/3 innings to earn the victory. Orosco picked up his fourth save. Reds' starting pitcher Bill Gullickson, 9-3, took the loss.

The Mets built an 8-2 lead on the strength of Keith Hernandez's two-run double and Ray Knight's RBI single in the first inning. RBI by George Foster and Ray Knight in the third, and Howard Johnson's run-scoring double and McDowell's two-run single in the eighth.

Atlanta made it 6-1 in the fifth. Ozzie Virgil singled and moved to third on two balks by reliever Dave Stewart and Glenn Hubbard's sacrifice fly.

Knepper, 5-0, worked six innings and extended his shutout streak to 15 innings before the Expos scored in the sixth. Knepper yielded four hits while walking three and striking out three. Dave Smith, the fourth Houston pitcher, got one out for his eighth save.

A crowd of 6,781, which sat through winds gusting to 50 mph, saw the Astros score in the first inning off Floyd Youmans, 0-3.

Famous sandwich cookie turns 75

By Cotton Timmerlake
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — You can split the chocolate wafers and scrape off the sugary filling with your front teeth, or you can throw caution to the wind and munch them whole. You can dunk 'em in milk or smash 'em in your ice cream.

However it's done, it's done lots: Oreo chocolate sandwich cookies are the world's top selling cookies — more than 100 billion have been sold since they were introduced 75 years ago, according to the Guinness Book of World Records.

Noting the anniversary, Nabisco Brands Inc. is taking the opportunity to provide most of the information you could ever possibly want about the cookies.

One tidbit Nabisco omits, not surprisingly, is that the Hydrox cookie is older. Invented by an Englishman, Hydrox cookies were first sold in this country in 1908, says their maker, Sunshine Biscuits Inc.

In April, Sunshine Biscuits introduced Hydrox Doubles, which contain extra cream filling plus one of three flavors: mint, fudge and strawberry.

But if it's Oreo trivia you're after, Nabisco has trivia: More than 1 million Oreos are produced in an eight-hour shift at five bakeries. It takes an hour and 35 minutes for an Oreo to wind its way through the process.

Over the years, the size of the cookie has varied. The current, 20-year-old version is 1 1/4 inches across.

A standard Oreo contains 47 calories, the company says. The treats are most popular with 6- to 18-year-olds.

Another is that the name may be derived from the French word for gold, or the original label had the product name in gold, with gold scrollwork the company says.

In 1975, Nabisco introduced Double Stuf Oreos, which have a double dollop of cream in the middle. That cookie now is the fifth best-selling cookie in the country, the company says. Two years ago, a mint-flavored version was brought out.

Nabisco, based in Parsippany, N.J., declines to detail Oreo's sales trend in recent years. Sunshine Biscuits also won't provide such numbers. The American Bakers Association in Washington and the Milling and Baking News say they don't have the figures.

But competition has been heating up. In April, Sunshine Biscuits introduced Hydrox Doubles, which contain extra cream filling plus one of three flavors: mint, fudge and strawberry.

New strikeouts king, Clemens, doesn't plan them

By Frederick Waterman
United Press International

BOSTON — Strikeouts are not Roger Clemens' objective, they are only the byproduct of a power pitcher seeking a win.

The Boston Red Sox right-hander with the nickname "Rocket" struck out a record 20 batters in nine innings on the night of April 30. He threw his 96-mph fastball on 97 of 128 pitches in a 3-1 victory over Seattle.

"I don't try to strike everyone out. That's just the way I pitch — I pitch to win," said Clemens, 23.

His glove, cap shoes and the ball have been requested by the Hall of Fame.

"I'm in the Hall of Fame," said Clemens. "That's something no one can take away from me now."

In his three-hitter, he surrendered no walks to the Mariners, despite going to 3-0 on six hitters. In his first four starts this season, all six batters he pitched to were in the majors, walking 10 while striking out 39.

Not issuing walks is strongly emphasized by Red Sox pitching coach Bill Fischer, who has led the major-league mark of 84 1-3 innings without a walk.

For Fischer, Clemens' record-setting game was an emotional one.

"There were almost tears coming to my eyes. This was the best announcement to the Red Sox pitching staff. We're all going to Georgia to have our arms operated on."

Like most power pitchers, Clemens depends heavily upon his legs for his speed. After seven innings against Seattle, they began to cramp slightly, but when manager John McNamara heard that Clemens' arm was still fine, he replied, "Keep going."

"The last of the century, three major-leaguers have struck out a total of 19 in nine innings. All three, Nolan Ryan, Steve Carlton and Tom Seaver, possessed an exceptional fastball."

Boston catcher Rich Gedman said that Clemens' speed was so overwhelming the Mariners struggled to make any contact with the ball.

"They had so many swings, they weren't even able to foul balls off. They weren't even touching him," said Gedman.

On Sunday, Clemens will pitch against Oakland A's. If he gets 13 strikeouts, he will break the consecutive-game mark of 32 strikeouts, a record held jointly by Dwight Gooden and Luis Tiant.

In the 11th year of major league baseball, a pitcher finally arrived who could strike out 20 batters in nine innings. Boston's Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd says only one pitcher has the potential to do that.

"There is only guy who might break the record — Roger," said Boyd.

Great expectations accompanied the 6-foot-4, 215-pound Clemens to Boston. He won the 1983 NCAA championship game for the University of Texas and has averaged nearly a strikeout per inning throughout college and the pros, despite injury problems the last two seasons.

In his two years at Texas, Clemens had 241 strikeouts in 275 innings. After signing with the Red Sox in June 1983, he struck out 145 hitters in 127 2-3 innings in the minors. For Boston, he has 239 career strikeouts in 265 innings.

Clemens suffered from his right shoulder for much of last summer and underwent arthroscopic surgery Aug. 30 in Georgia. His recovery has obviously been a complete one.

"The bus leaves tomorrow at 7," Boston's Al Nipper said in a mock Hard-throwing right-hander Roger Clemens of the Red Sox, getting congratulations after setting Major League record for strikeouts with 20 in a nine-inning game, doesn't plan them. They just come.

To enter NBA draft

'Pearl', Bedford to come out early

By Joel Sherman
United Press International

A dazzling small man and an intimidating big man, Friday night announced their intentions Friday to leave school early and pursue professional basketball careers.

Syracuse junior guard Dwayne "Pearl" Washington and Memphis State junior center Williams "Bedford" Bedford are expected to be drafted in the first round of the NBA draft on June 17.

Non-seniors wishing to become eligible for the NBA draft on June 17 must send a letter to Commissioner David Stern postmarked no later than May 3.

North Carolina State center Chris Washburn, Louisiana State forward John Williams, both sophomores — and Virginia junior center Olden Polynice, previously considered a senior — were forfeiting their eligibility.

The NBA draft lottery to decide the order of the top seven selections will be held May 11. The teams with a shot at the top pick are Boston (from Seattle), Philadelphia (from the Clippers), Dallas (from Cleveland), New York, Phoenix, Golden State and Indiana.

Heading on the lottery should be the young and the restless," said Tom Newell, the Pacers' director of player personnel. "All of a sudden with these players the lottery becomes an exciting extravaganza. There's some talent packed there."

"RBA management personnel generally said Bedford, Polynice, Washburn and Williams are the top 15, but not in the lottery."

Henderson, 20, led Georgia in scoring (15.5 points per game) and rebounding (7.1 per game) during his lone season as a Bulldog, the 1984-85 campaign. Eligibility problems, stemming from a poor academic standing, were the key reasons the 6-foot-8½ forward left to play professional ball for Syracuse, Milan, of the Italian league this season.

New York's Rickey Henderson (left), says he's going to be a selective stealer, especially when the Yankees' big bats awake. The first base coach Henderson was talking to last year is Willie Horton.

Yanks' Henderson a selective stealer

Graham averaged 4.7 points and 4.6 rebounds a game as a freshman for Georgetown, adding his 4-9 muscle off the bench down the stretch to lead the Hoyas to the national title in 1984. The following year, Georgetown coach John Thompson told Graham he could not play until he improved his grades and Graham withdrew after the fall semester.

Washington, a 6-2 guard from Brooklyn, N.Y., said he would like to play for either the New Jersey Nets or New York Knicks. He averaged 11.3 points per game in a junior season that ended in a shocking NCAA Tournament second-round loss to Navy.

"He's a very talented player, who will be one of the first point guards taken," said Pat Williams, Philadelphia's vice president-general manager. "An exciting pro and a good addition to the NBA. I think he's a very good player with strength, who is colorful and a fine ball handler. His shot is improving."

Bedford led Memphis State this season in scoring (17.3 rebounding (8.3), field-goal percentage (58.4) and blocked shots (86). Memphis' coach Fred Hoopes said he would like to see Bedford in the NBA.

"My impression of all the 'true center,' said John Wetzel, a Phoenix Suns' assistant coach. "He has a big body, is active around the basket and his main attribute is he is a shot blocker. For a team that lacks someone to defend, he is a real asset. I think he's a very good player, who is colorful and a fine ball handler. His shot is improving."

In a 44-game N.C. State career, Washburn averaged 16.4 points and 6.6 rebounds per game. The 6-11 center was suspended from the team in his freshman season for stealing stereo equipment from another athlete's dormitory room and played just seven games.

The 6-11 Polynice, who, it was learned Friday, was arrested Wednesday for shoplifting, averaged 16.1 points and 8 rebounds a game as a junior.

John Williams, 6-9 and 19 years old, averaged 17.8 points and 8.5 rebounds per game as a sophomore, leading LSU to a surprising Final Four berth.

Henderson stole 176 home runs last season, the third most in the major leagues. Getting caught stealing with Don Mattingly or Dave Winfield at the plate can often mean the difference between a two-run homer and a solo shot.

Winfield and Mattingly, however, produced only one homer between them through the first 18 games of the season. The Yankees recently went six games without hitting a home run, forcing Henderson to create offense with his baserunning.

"My entire game is about getting in scoring position," says Henderson, who scored 146 runs last year — the most in the major leagues since Ted Williams scored 150 in 1949. "It doesn't matter if I get to second on a walk and a bunt or a single and steal."

Despite Henderson's protests, some would argue he has turned on the speed to protect his record from St. Louis' Vince Coleman, who stole 110 bases last year as a rookie and claimed during the off-season that 2003 this year would not be out of the question.

Group gets option to buy the Patriots

Sullivan incurred from his involvement in Michael Jackson's 1984 "Victory" tour. Sullivan is the son of team owner Billy Sullivan and brother of general manager Patrick Sullivan.

John Charlton, a senior vice president of Warner Cable Communications, is expected to be the top shareholder if the group exercises its option, even if other minority investors become involved.

"I currently hold controlling interest. He's the guy with the big money," said Lewis. "There's one in every group."

It is required by the NFL that one individual own at least a 30-percent interest in a franchise.

Supermarket Shopper

Manufacturers pay grocers who accept your coupon

By Martin Sloane
United Feature Syndicate

DEAR MARTIN: Many manufacturers' coupons are good on any size of a product, including the trial size. If I were to use a 50-cent coupon to purchase a trial package priced at 19 cents and the store took the coupon and gave me the product free, what would happen to the 11-cent difference?

P. GORDYLEE,
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO

DEAR P. GORDYLEE: The extra 11 cents would be paid by the manufacturer to the grocer who took your coupon. Many shoppers resent this apparent windfall for the grocer. It does seem unfair, especially for the Grocers' Clearing House of Houston for her $2 refund on Canadian R&R Whiskey, and she promptly deposited the check. Several days later the check was returned marked "insufficient funds" and Robert's bank charged her for the check.

"I don't know if you can do anything about this," she said, "but I thought it would interest you."

Bouncing refund checks certainly do interest me, and I called John Hobbs, president of "21" Brands Inc., importers of Canadian R&R, as well as more than a dozen other popular brands of whiskeys, liquors and wines.

"We have done business with Grocer's Coupon Clearing for more than four years," said Hobbs, "and it came as a complete surprise to us when the company was placed in receivership."

The financial failure of Grocer's Coupon Clearing resulted in the seizure of funds that "21 Brands" had given the clearinghouse to pay for the refunds on brands such as Bullant's, Emmets Irish, Liquore Amaretto, Wintergarten Schnapps, Polonari, Martin's VVO, Mohawk White Birch and Schnapps and Canadian R&R Whiskey. That's why the check the Roberts received bounced.

Hobbs says his initial investigation reveals that the bank returned similar checks to several thousand other consumers, along with the cash-register receipt with the purchase price circled and the Universal Product Code number.

"This situation is going to cost us time and financial resources," says Mr. Hobbs, "but the good will of our customers is of paramount importance to us. We will do what we can to make sure our customers receive their refunds, as well as compensation for reasonable service fees charged by their banks for the bounced checks."

"Partly as a result of some spectacular successes of modern medicine, an attitude has spread in many parts of the world that health is something the doctors provide for people, instead of something that a community and individuals achieve for themselves," Halldan said.

Halldan, a Dane, said people would have far less need to visit the doctor if they followed three healthy lifestyle principles — "exercise and sports, nutrition, and personal responsibility."

Physical exercise is vital at all stages of life, he said, be it simply walking or any leisure pursuit.

Eating habits must be adjusted to avoid "the menace of junk foods heavy in fat or drenched in sugar and which threaten the heart and the teeth."

Personal responsibility covers nutrition and the abuse of alcohol and drugs, with "smoking the most important single preventable cause of ill-health and premature death."

WHO produced a massive pile of documentation to support its "Healthy Living" slogan for 1986.

Europeans and Americans seem to be ahead of everyone else in their fondness for "fatly foods," it said.

"Thirty percent of what the average European eats today is fat." Its technical obesity figures for the United States and Britain "adds up to a recipe for possible illness and disease," it said. Money paid on reducing — $25 million in Britain in 1982 — would be better spent "on a different diet and exercise."

WHO had unkid words for junk food and its growing distribution in developing countries.

"Fast food chains with their risk of foods high in fat and low in fiber and the universal sweetened soft drink are popping up on many corner sites in Third World capitals," it said. "Cigarette billboards beckon everywhere. Alcohol use is spreading."

Countries in Africa, Latin America and Asia are drinking beer as such step rates of increase that per capita consumption is overtaking that in the West.

The massive increase in veer production in the Third World is worrying," WHO said. "The global increase in beer production in the last 20 years has been 124 percent, but it has shot up by 500 percent in Asia, 400 percent in Africa and 200 percent in Latin America."

News for Senior Citizens

One needn't be mother to attend

Editor's note: This column is prepared by the staff of the Manchester Senior Citizens' Center.

By Jeanette Cove Senior Center Director

The Mother's Day Tea will be held on Thursday, May 8. For entertainment, the Beethoven Singers will sing with songs of joy. One does not have to be a mother to attend. This is also the day there are prizes for the pleasure of being served by the men. Each lady who attends will receive a little token to take home on Friday.

Don't forget our big week activities. Everyone enjoys the suspense of the naming of Mr. and Mrs. Senior Citizen each year. The staff tries to select two individuals who play an important role in exemplifying the vitality and giving spirit of seniors. The choice is not easy, because there are so many deserving seniors who contribute to the well-being of the seniors.

This year we are adding a new feature, a riding tour of Manchester with a historian to guide you through the history of the different sections of town. Do sign up for this and all other events. For those who require tickets (the sports banquet) do get your tickets in advance so that we can prepare the proper amount of food. Don't forget to make your reservation for lunch no later than Tuesday noon if you have not already done so.

MRS. ESTHER RUBIN has started her classes on assertive training and is looking for more participants. The discussion groups are informal and supportive. Topics for discussion include: "How to Say No Without Feeling Guilty," "Maintaining Your Own Sense of Self," "Assertively Dealing with One's Own Errors." The group will meet Wednesdays at 9:30 a.m.

Golf lessons are available for a $9 fee May 14, 28, and June 11 from 9 a.m. to noon. Classes will be held at the Tallwood Golf Course. The ladies golf league will start May 20 at 8:30 a.m. at Red Rock Golf Course.

The story behind the story

By Josie

Q. I'd like to know a little about Edward Woodward of "The Equalizer." I think he's a wonderful actor. Barbara Blasford, Ft. Dix, N.J.

A. He's 55, from Croyden, England, and he originally wanted to become a journalist; he changed his mind after the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts offered him a scholarship when he was 16. He stayed a year and then went into the repertory system, winding up, years later, at the prestigious National Theater. In the '60s, he moved to New York where he appeared in two plays: "Rattle of a Simple Man" and the musical "High Spirits."

He then returned to England and his work since has been incredibly varied: from the dramatic films "Becket," "Young Winston," the Australian film "Breaker Morant" and "King David" to the TV productions "Winston Churchill: The Wilderness Years" and "A Christmas Carol" with George C. Scott to his musical variety specials and his albums.

He also starred in a British TV series called "Callan" in which he played a tough detective not unlike "The Equalizer." He's married to Michelle Dotrice and they have a 2-year-old daughter. He also has three grown children from an earlier marriage.

Q. I'd like to know what my favorite actor, Peter Falk, is doing right now. Theresa Matteson, Trenton, N.J.

A. He should be finishing up a run in the play "Glen Gary Glen Ross" in Chicago, after similar runs in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Boston, and may be on his way with it to Broadway. He also has a movie, "Happy New Year," due out in September.

Q. I would like to know more about Veronica Lake. How many movies did she make and is she still alive and acting? Joan Reilly, Upland, Calif.

A. No, she died of acute hepatitis on July 7, 1973 in Burlington, Vt.; she was 53. She made 26 films, such as "I Wanted Wings," "This Gun for Hire," "The Glass Key," "The Blue Dahlia" and "Sullivan's Travels," in a career that spanned about 10 years, from the early '40s to the early '50s.

After the roles stopped coming, she left Hollywood, drank heavily, as she later admitted, and worked for a time in a factory and as a barmaid. In her later years, she lived in Ipswich, England, and two years before she died, wrote her autobiography, "Veronica." ■

Veronica Lake

Nastassja Kinski

Q. I think Nastassja Kinski is very pretty and a good actress. Can you tell me about her? Rose Mats, Scranton, Pa.

A. She's 25, the daughter of actor Klaus Kinski and his former wife, writer Ruth Brigitte, who were both active members of the German artistic Bohemian scene when she was born in Berlin. This made for an interesting childhood, as did the world traveling that accompanied her father's movie roles.

From the traveling, she learned to speak English, French and Italian as well as her native German. Her parents separated when she was 8, and the next year she moved with her mother to Venezuela where an artist-boyfriend of her mother's was living, so she picked up a bit of Spanish as well.

A couple of years later, though, they returned to Germany, just as she was hitting adolescence, a stretch during which she describes herself as "an animal running wild, tasting all the honey..." apparently with her mother's permission. She also made her film debut then, at 14 in the film "The Wrong Move" after director Wim Wenders discovered her dancing in a Munich nightclub.

Other films such as "Passion Flower Hotel" and "To the Devil a Daughter," which, she says, she'd rather forget, followed, as did "Stay As You Are" opposite Marcello Mastroianni. She didn't take herself seriously as an actress, though, until "Tess," director Roman Polanski's adaptation of the Thomas Hardy novel. (She began an affair with Polanski when she was 15; by this point, though, he was more her mentor than her lover.)

She made her American film debut in Francis Coppola's expensive flop, "One From the Heart," in 1982, followed by four other flops: "Cat People," "Exposed," "Unfaithfully Yours" and "The Hotel New Hampshire." More recently, she appeared in "Mara's Lovers," "Paris, Texas" and "Harem," co-starring Ben Kingsley, a movie that has been released in Europe but, according to her agent, probably won't be released over here.

Currently, she's on hiatus, having recently given birth to a daughter, Sonia. (She had been scheduled to start filming a TV movie, "Ingrid Bergman: My Story," when she became pregnant; Bergman's daughter, Isabella Rossellini, has taken over the role.) She and estranged, as we go to press, husband Ibrahim Moussa also have a 21-month-old son, Aljosha.

Q. Could you please fill me in on Vincent Price's background. I think we may be related. Melba N. Clark, Niles, Mich.

A. He's from St. Louis, a descendant of Peregrine White, the first colonial child born in Massachusetts, and of Jean-Pierre Desnoyers, the first treasurer of the state of Michigan. His parents were Vincent Leonard Price and Margaret Cobb Willcox Price. Hope that helps.

Q. Are David Keith and Patrick Swayze the same person? They look so much alike. Sandy Brandt, Green Bay, Wis.

A. They do look alike, you're right, but they are different people.

Q. What is George Jones doing now? Have any of his children followed him into show business? Mrs. Claire Crissie, St. John, N.B., Canada

A. Right now, he's on a tour that will take him throughout the Midwest and South, after starting with a few appearances in England, and run through June 29. In the midst of it, though, he's found time to open a restaurant called Possum Holler (his nickname is Possum) near Colmosneil, Texas, with his wife, Nancy, and is in the process of building a park in the same area called the George Jones Country Music park. It's set to open May 23.

Regarding his children, none seem to be following in his footsteps. According to an associate, "Bryan and Jeffrey are in the stadium concession business, Susan's mother and Georgette — his daughter with Tammy Wynette — sang with her mother onstage a couple of years ago, but I don't think she's doing any more singing. At least right now."

MSG is safe

The article "Fake food — why does Uncle Sam allow so many additives in all that we eat?" appearing in the March 29 issue of Weekend Plus has recently come to our attention. Of particular concern to us is the statement that monosodium glutamate (MSG) is a "questionable" additive... "designed to make food more appealing." Monosodium glutamate is the sodium salt of glutamic acid, an amino acid found in the plant and animal protein. It is effective in enhancing the natural flavor of foods. At the levels typically used in foods, MSG has no taste of its own.

MSG is one of the most thoroughly and exhaustively tested additives in use today. More than 600 appropriate studies and reviews by regulatory and scientific organizations worldwide (including the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the World Health Organization) in their totality, clearly affirm the safety of this popular flavor enhancer.

The Glutamate Association is an organization of manufacturers, national marketers and processed food users of glutamic acid and its salts, including monosodium glutamate.

Greener pastures

By Sarah Overstreet

Just about everyone my age with whom I'm really close is talking about greener pastures, bigger opportunities, better jobs. My list of friends is always having names marked off the top and added to the bottom.

The door of the newsroom revolves; my "best and brightest" leave. A young reporter I came to like and admire very much, who announced her intention to get out of the country from the day she came to work here, is working on a newspaper in Guam.

The young woman I used to run with every morning, whose transformation from talented college graduate to street-wise reporter fascinated me as we pounded the pavement and talked every day, moved to a better job in Albuquerque. She loves it — new work experiences, a warm, dry climate, a new ethnic heritage to explore.

A friend of 22 years with whom I was baptized by the big Baptist preacher we thought would surely drown us, with whom I shared every secret, including how we imagined it would feel to have a baby, has two babies and is off in Fort Worth rearing them. So much to do there, she says.

My best friend started this mass exodus in 1979, moving to another city several states away when the man she was dating did. When that relationship failed, she turned the move to her advantage and went to law school.

She worked her way through as a secretary, studying at night, and just started a job making more money than either of us dreamed there was 10 years ago. This is the woman who hadn't a clue what she was going to do when she earned a degree in speech and theater in 1974, and put every assignment off until the last minute if she thought she could scrape by with a B-.

My most recent loss is the friend I rented my parents' house to in that terrible year after my father died. She was the rock in the middle of my chaos that year, loving my parents' home as much as I did. She gave me a semblance of roots when my roots had been torn from me in two years' time, first by my mother's suicide and then my father's sudden death. She is in Italy now with her husband, waiting for him to finish his hitch in the Army.

Perhaps it's her loss I feel most deeply now, because my husband and I bought the house she kept in trust for me that year. The home and the land surrounding it are filled with her image.

The home is filled with images of others I have lost — more friends, my mother and father, the old dog with the white chest who used to lie for hours in the snow, stomach up. Sometimes I think it odd that none of them hears the birds with me this year or smells the fresh mint or feels the quiet sunset air settle on the cedars and thistles with me.

Part of me wants to go to those new places with the others, to feel the new excitements. Yet a much stronger part of me wants to hear, see and smell the familiar things, to feel the same evening air and see the others again, alive as long as I am here: my friend Joyce, heaving a stick past her gangly, gargantuan Weimarers; my father, pushing a wheelbarrow up the hill behind the house in his leather house slippers, ribbed undershirt and beat-up hat; my mother, catching crawdads in the nearby creek with her friend, both of them in their 60s, their jeans rolled up past their skinny ankles, squealing like little girls.

Does someone have to stay here to keep their images alive against the pink setting sun? Am I the keeper of the flame, the historian, the point in time where the ones I have loved come together? If no one stays here, do the legends die?

And more practically, does someone have to stay here so those who leave have a home to come home to? Sometimes I begin to feel like someone's grandma in the old farmhouse where everyone grew up, that when she dies everything falls apart and the children spend the rest of their lives with this unsettled, homeless feeling.

When someone asks me why I stay here, I have answers that sound reasonable, but I'm not sure if I believe them entirely. I eventually want to make a living writing humor, I tell them and me, and I don't think moving would necessarily make me any funnier.

I like the four seasons we have here, none of them too severe. The people are generally friendly, and the pace isn't too fast. Of all the places I've been, I've never found one I liked better, although I've been to several and liked them fine. There are some people still here I like better than anyone I've ever met.

Yet I still wonder why I'm not burning to experience what my friends are. I'm certainly no less ambitious than they; what I lacked in ambition a decade ago during the back-to-the-land years, I've made up for today by being fairly consumed by it.

But after I've worked, when

I've done all I can for a while to stoke my burning passion for success, I want to be home. I'd rather sit by a nice fire and play my banjo than get on a plane to Santa Fe. What is it about these same, ragged woods behind my house that I could walk over them 1,000 times and never be bored?

I think there may have been a time when I wouldn't have minded moving, and might have even relished the chance. It was immortal, but my parents were immortal, too. They would always be there at Thanksgiving or Christmas or whenever I deemed to get on a plane and come home. The 8mm family movies would be in their box in the hall closet, and the same china would be in the cupboard to get out and remember when each chip was put in.

You might think that when my parents died, I'd have even less reason to stay here. With all the things that kept my childhood intact gone, I could gracefully put out my roots somewhere else. But then, my husband's family is like my own now, more suited to me than any I could have handpicked myself.

One thing I know: I have no more illusions about immortality. And honestly, I don't know that I could stand the pain of waking up again and finding the people I love best in the world gone, gone before I could spend the time with them I was always planning to...

I ran down my road again today, past all the familiar things: past the neighbors' pond, the disinterested cows, the tiny, light-green grasses that have just started to grow. I watched the sky through the bushy cedars, which were themselves a new experience this year. In the winter, the green branches turned gold, and now they're chartreuse. ■

Craig Sylvia, 28, goes over his routine before going on stage at the Billy-Jack Cafe of Comedy. The comedy business is crazy, he says.

Just for laughs

The Saturday night crowd at Billy-Jack in Glastonbury is here to have a good time, and they're doing just that.

Halfway through his routine, Craig Sylvia, in character as "The Tora-Tora Truck Driver," goes on about the different breeds of highway vermin he won't tolerate. There are the Italians in Trans Ams, blue-haired old ladies who take up three lanes and Puerto Ricans in beat-up Chevies.

Then, to illustrate the full extent of his war with lousy drivers, Sylvia reaches into his brown bag of props. "When I really want to do damage," he says with a glint in his eyes, "I like to go downtown, because I can catch bad drivers out of their environment." As he finishes, Sylvia pulls out a samurai sword and waves it around in mock defiance. "I know I can get more points there!" The audience loves it.

The kamikaze warrior bit is all an act, but underneath the leather-clad caricature is a different sort of madman—Craig Sylvia, amateur comedian. By day, Sylvia, 28, is a truck driver who owns a small trucking company in East Hartford. But as the house lights dim, he stands alone under the harsh spotlights, waving his sabre of comedic insight at anyone who'll watch and listen. And, he hopes, laugh.

If any local comedian can claim success, much of the credit goes to Billy Pawlina, 49, and his brother, Jack, 53. The pair, who grew up in Glastonbury, began Billy-Jack Cafe of Comedy almost two years ago. "The area was really starved for some new entertainment," says Billy. After a slow start, Billy-Jack caught on. Word of mouth helped. So did the growing popularity of comedy clubs across America.

Billy-Jack is now managed by Pawlina's son. The club in the Fox Run Mall was formerly the Pumpernickel Pub, and retains much of the pub's decor. Neon beer signs and dark wooden beams line the walls. Customers sit in crushed red velvet booths and munch on ribs and lobster while the first show goes on.

Although there are now about five clubs offering various comedy acts in the area, Billy-Jack calls itself "Hartford's first and foremost comedy nightspot."

"There's been a lot of imitators because they've seen us and how well we've done," Pawlina says.

Pawlina started the Wednesday open mike nights because he wanted to give local hopefuls a chance. "There were a lot of talented people in this area who wanted an outlet," he says. Pawlina estimates that he has a stable of about 10 local comedians who come in faithfully and work on their material. Six of them have warmed the crowds up as emcees, or served as back-up for the professional shows on the weekend.

"These guys, even though they still have their day jobs, are starting to make a dent in the comedy scene," Pawlina says.

For any would-be funnyman thinking about performing to a live audience and getting immediate feedback, Billy-Jack amateur night is the only place in central Connecticut where the chance is offered. For Craig Sylvia, who found himself a face in the crowd less than a year ago, Billy-Jack was simply too good to pass up.

Continued ...

Sylvia slowly reveals his full regalia as "the Tora-Tora Truck Driver," a character who wages a war against rotten drivers.

... Continued

Sylvia started his performing career playing the base guitar.

"The first time I got in front of a crowd, I was 14 or 15, and that was it," Sylvia says. "There was nothing like it."

About the time that music started getting him nowhere, Billy-Jack offered an alternative. "I had heard about it, I always wanted to see it," he says. "I came down here in November and I fell in love with it."

Sylvia started coming every weekend. When he found out about open-mike night, he went with a girlfriend and spent most of the evening telling her how much better he was than the unfunny souls they watched. She dared him to try. Two weeks later he was on stage.

Sylvia's first stand-up exposure was a night that he says has become somewhat of a Billy-Jack legend. It was made so when Sylvia brought in about 60 acquaintances, who yelled and hooted their encouragement, giving him the confidence to continue. Sylvia says he chose to wing it, rather than perform any material he'd prepared ahead.

"I made Pryor and Murphy look like a couple of saints," he recalls. His third trip up, primed and ready but lacking audience support, he bombed.

"There's no lonelier feeling," Sylvia says.

Getting involved with an improvisation class that Pawlina offered helped Sylvia learn to think on his feet. "I'm very hard on myself," he says. "If I say it went good, it means it went real good."

His truck driver character evolved from his first few comedic bits about truck driving, a subject he knows well. He enhanced his act using black leather gloves, a headband and a T-shirt replete with Japanese flag. Sylvia says the zany character he plays on stage isn't entirely fanciful. "I'm more me on stage than I am anywhere else," he says.

Glastonbury resident Mark Petrucci, 25, works at Pratt & Whitney when he's not working for laughs. He's a friend of Sylvia's and the two often bounce their routines off one another.

The two have traveled to open-mike shows in cities such as Boston, Westfield and Westport, hoping to perform with up to 20 other beginning comics.

Petrucci says Sylvia has some strong imagery and characterization, but the local humor has to go if Sylvia wants to make the big time. "He's got the stage presence," Petrucci says. "Once you've got that, the material will come."

He's right. Joey Novik, the club's producer, likes what he's seen of Sylvia and has considered using him in other clubs he helps book. "He's really come a long way on stage," Novik says.

Though some gigs are starting to pay, success has yet to be monetary. Sylvia says money isn't a concern at this point.

Sylvia says he eventually hopes to play the comedy circuit, touring as headliner at comedy clubs throughout the United States. One of the differences between opening shows and headlining is about 30 minutes of extra material, which Sylvia hasn't developed yet. Ultimately, he'd like to write a movie screenplay or write a one-man show on Broadway based on his truck driver character.

One thing is certain. "I don't want to have to give up my business," he says. The truck driver's life on the open road offers him a different sort of release, he says.

What is uncertain is his chances of success in the difficult market. Paul Barclay, owner of the Comedy Connection in Boston, estimates that, of 100 would-be comics vying for stage time in the city, 40 manage to regularly get onstage. Barclay says that he gets 35 to 50 requests to do five minutes on Tuesday's amateur night. Of those, he chooses only nine to perform.

The comedy club scene is saturated. To get noticed means a lot. "Someone has to be really special and on the ball. There is no minor league in comedy."

Barclay says. For now, Sylvia is happy where he is.

"This is good turf. We're breaking in here. We're getting gigs around here. It will work out," he says.

His set is over. In an alcove away from the main room, Sylvia paces the floor and chain-smokes Winston Lights. People shake his hand and tell him how much they enjoyed the show. But the praise isn't good enough. He nervously asks more than one person how he did.

But anyone looking close enough can see the satisfied look of a gung-ho warrior after battle who still isn't ready to put his weapon away. ■

"When I really want to do damage, I like to go downtown," says Sylvia, acting as the Tora-Tora Truck Driver."

Masturbation worries heart patient

Look for signs of physical exertion if you are concerned

By Dr. June Reinsch

DEAR DR. REINSCH: I have been a widow for many years and have practiced masturbation. Last year I had congestive heart failure and was in the hospital. Now I'm feeling fine but I haven't yet masturbated even though I have the urge.

Do you think it will be all right to start again? Would having an orgasm be too much for my heart?

DEAR READER: In general, the cardiac stress involved in intercourse and orgasm is thought to be equal to that caused by briskly climbing two flights of stairs.

However, a recent study has shown that the cardiac cost (heart rate) accompanying masturbation is substantially lower than for coitus.

If your physician has told you that your condition has stabilized and if you are not prohibited from modest physical activity, masturbation to orgasm probably would not exceed your physical capacity.

Also, many physicians point out that heart patients can monitor their physiological condition during sex just as they monitor their condition during other activities. For example, if extreme breathlessness, pain or disturbing heart rhythms appear, you should stop activity at that point and consult your physician about repeating the activity in the future.

Hormones needed

DEAR DR. REINSCH: I am 76 and had a complete hysterectomy when I was 41. Since that time I've never taken any hormones. Is it too late now to take hormones?

What happens to a woman's body when her ovaries are removed and those hormones aren't replaced?

DEAR READER: The effects of oophorectomy (surgical removal of the ovaries) vary greatly. The major physical effects associated with a low level of estrogen are loss of bone mass (osteoporosis) and atrophy (thinning and shrinking) of the genital tissues, causing irritation, infection and other problems with the urinary tract and the vagina.

Call the nearest medical center and ask for an appointment with a physician who specializes in treating postmenopausal women. Have a complete examination, including a pelvic exam and a measurement of your bone mass or strength.

If these tests reveal conditions that should be treated with replacement hormones, then it's certainly not too late to begin taking them.

Not all women develop these problems, however, so there would be no reason to begin taking hormones if your health is good. Apparently, some women's adrenal glands or body fat produce a form of estrogen that adequately replaces the lost ovarian estrogen, and these women do not require replacement hormones.

Anal sex

DEAR DR. REINSCH: My wife and I are in our 50s, have been married for 35 years and enjoy a good sex life. I have always wanted to try anal sex, and we've read some sex books which say it's OK as long as it is gentle and sanitary precautions are taken.

But now we are afraid to try this, because we've heard that anal sex causes AIDS. That's hard to understand, since I thought the activity had existed for centuries, while AIDS is a new disease.

Will my wife and I get AIDS if we try this once?

"Also, many physicians point out that heart patients can monitor their physiological condition during sex just as they monitor their condition during other activities."

DEAR READER: No. From what is known about AIDS, anal contact will not "create" AIDS in one or both of you. You or your wife can contract AIDS only from a blood transfusion, sharing needles with someone with AIDS during intravenous drug use or engaging in sexual contact with a person with AIDS.

Following anal contact, it's important that the penis be thoroughly cleaned before any vaginal entry is done, to prevent vaginal infection. Also, because the rectum lacks natural lubrication, a water-soluble lubricant may be needed.

Genital warts

DEAR DR. REINSCH: I'm a 24-year-old woman who has had genital warts for two years. I've been to see a dermatologist, a gynecologist and my family doctor. I've tried medications until they're coming out of my ears. Nothing seems to cure this curse.

The dermatologist gave me phidopholin to apply when the warts appear. Applying this clears them up, but as soon as I have sex again, they reappear.

My family doctor tells me that there's no known cure for this virus. Is that true?

DEAR READER: There are various treatments that can successfully eradicate anogenital warts, but each patient is so different that it often takes several approaches before the warts can be called "cured."

I suspect the medication you have is podophyllin, an extract from the rhizome of a plant that grows in North America and the Himalayas. This drug is mixed with other chemicals, applied to warts, allowed to dry, dusted with talc and then washed off according to a physician's directions. This procedure is done once or twice a week until the warts completely disappear.

Podophyllin is a toxic substance, and if applied too generously or to large warts has been known to lead to severe, occasionally fatal, reactions. It should not be used on the cervix because some research has shown it may be linked to pre-cancerous changes there. Many experts state it should not be used during pregnancy because there have been some cases of fetal death. Less severe but common side effects include irritation of the skin around the wart.

For this reason, experts advise that only trained medical personnel apply podophyllin. The drug should also be "In general, the cardiac stress involved in intercourse and orgasm is thought to be equal to that caused by briskly climbing two flights of stairs."

discontinued if the warts remain after one month of treatment.

In one study of the effectiveness of podophyllin, only 43 percent of the women studied were permanently cured after one or two applications.

In your case, you should consider various surgical removal techniques. Consult a specialist in sexually transmitted diseases (most medical schools and large hospitals have a department or clinic you could call for an appointment). It's important to determine exactly what type of warts you have, whether you are not getting them cleared up each time, or whether you are being reinfected by a sexual partner (who must also be treated.)

That department or clinic can discuss the treatment options, available, depending on where your warts are located. It may take several visits before the warts are completely removed, and you may be asked to have a thorough follow-up examination four to six weeks after the warts disappear.

Dr. King K. Holmes, who is a professor at the University of Washington School of Medicine and one of the world's leading authorities on sexually transmitted diseases, said in his recent book: "Genital and anal warts are a nuisance to both patients and physicians. They are very common, particularly in venereal disease clinics, and the amount of time spent on their treatment throughout the world is enormous."

Severe cramps

DEAR DR. REINSCH: For a number of years, I have suffered severe cramping during ovulation. At times the pain is so bad that it wakes me from a sound sleep.

When I asked my doctor about this he said I must be releasing a pain-causing chemical when I release an egg, but he was not concerned.

Could you explain why this happens? Is this normal, or does it mean that something is wrong with my ovaries or Fallopian tubes? How is it treated?

DEAR READER: Pain or cramps in the lower abdomen or back during ovulation is normal for some women. Research has not yet determined what causes the pain, even though its existence is well-known and it bears the colorful name of "Mittelschmerz" (which means "middle pain" in German, presumably because it occurs in the middle of a woman's cycle, halfway between menstrual periods).

To date, Mittelschmerz has not been linked to any particular problems with the ovaries or other reproductive organs. Some women experience only a twinge of pain, while others report several hours of cramping so severe that it has occasionally been confused with appendicitis or ectopic (tubal) pregnancy.

Some experts have suggested using oral contraceptives to stop the process of ovulation, and hence the ovulation pain. Others consider Mittelschmerz to be one of the symptoms of premenstrual syndrome (PMS) or pelvic congestion syndrome; they suggest that progesterone (suppositories or injections) be used a couple of days before ovulation is expected. I found no reports evaluating either the short-term or long-term effectiveness of either treatment.

Pimply question

DEAR DR. REINSCH: I've been told that masturbating causes pimples. Is that true?

DEAR READER: No. ■

Answer the call of the wild

But if you are a tenderfoot, better start out slowly

By Joan Bauer

"I can't stand it anymore," said my husband, Evan, glaring out at the city view from our 23rd-floor apartment. "Our child is 13 months old. She has never seen a hummingbird, never run through a field of wildflowers, never splashed in a mountain stream." "She's a city kid," I reminded him. "She can eat a bagel with cream cheese; she is fearless in elevators. And there are plenty of flowers in the park."

"Those are dandelions. We're going to the mountains for a real family vacation to embrace the great outdoors together."

"I'd rather embrace Barbados."

Our city family is one of many who are opting for the mountains, hiking trails, backwoods and campgrounds with their toddler or baby in tow. Wilderness travel is growing at an estimated 10 percent per year, says the Sierra Club, and much of that growth is from newcomers.

Families are discovering the outdoors together, babies are being strapped into kiddie packs and back carriers, toddlers are sporting hiking shoes and munching trail mix, new parents are discovering that a vacation need not be lazy and Caribbean to be fun.

"To a child, a mile is 5,280 interesting little things to see."

says Marilyn Doan in "Starting Small in the Wilderness: The Sierra Club Outdoors Guide for Families" (Sierra Club Books, 1979). "Taking youngsters into the great outdoors is a slow, one-step-at-a-time process, but when adults tune into the wilderness world as a child perceives it, their own experiences become rich and full."

"Are you sure about this?" I asked my husband. "No deck chairs, no steel bands? No — I can hardly say it — room service?"

The kind of wilderness outing that's right for your family depends on your level of experience and on your child's personality. My husband will tell you that sharing the outdoors with a toddler is filled with magical moments.

He's partly right. If you have an easygoing, relaxed child, she will probably make a good traveler. But if your baby is restless, fitful and has difficulty adapting to new environments, chances are you'll have fewer magical moments, so start slowly.

Activities such as backpacking, camping, hiking and back-country bicycling, however, require varying degrees of expertise. If you are an experienced wildwoods enthusiast, the matter can be almost as simple as strapping your baby to your back and heading for the back country.

Almost, but not quite. It is one thing to carry a 45-pound pack up a mossy mountain trail and quite another to balance gear and a 22-pound wiggling, kicking toddler screaming for apple juice.

If you're a novice, learn adequate outdoor skills and proceed with caution. Don't attempt anything more difficult with your child than simple day hikes on well-marked trails. Go backpacking or camping without your baby first, familiarize yourself with the experience and then hit the trail as a family.

After considering my husband's wilderness prowess, my outdoor inexperience, and baby Jean's personality, our family decided on a week of day hiking in the Colorado Rockies.

Continued ...

Tune into your child's view of nature

Continued

We chose the town of Estes Park, Colo., the gateway to the Rocky Mountain National Park, as our destination.

Through research we had discovered that it offered the flexibility we needed — well-marked hiking trails, stunning scenery, convenient access to groceries and other shopping, family restaurants and cabins. (No tents, I insisted. I needed somewhere to plug my hair dryer.)

It's essential to learn about an area before you visit it. Guidebooks, trail maps, data books and outdoors newsletters are good resources. Parks, lodges, campgrounds, ranger stations, trail associations, state agencies and local land managers can provide current and seasonal information.

Of course, getting anywhere with a baby involves work, but the ordinary frustrations of lugging your child to the supermarket pale when faced with suitcases, dirty diapers, rent-a-cars, crowded airline terminals and long automobile trips.

Jean, who usually responds to new situations with hilarious enthusiasm, was sullen when our plane landed in Denver.

"Look," Evan said, "this vacation is going to work. We are reasonable adults, and Jean is a terrific baby."

Of course Jean is a terrific baby, but she'd been on an airplane all morning and was now strapped into an unfamiliar car seat careening up a steep, two-lane Rocky Mountains highway.

"Want a cracker, sweetheart?" I cooed lovingly. Her shrieks echoed through the mountain pass. "Maybe we should stop the car."

We pulled off the road at the first sign of widening highway, just as she unleashed the largest amount of vomit ever discharged from a 17-pound child.

We dipped her and the car seat into a previously clear mountain stream, rolled down the windows and headed back up the highway with the parent's golden rule of vacation travel etched forever in our minds: Always carry a big roll of paper towels for those special moments. Ah, wilderness.

We kept physical exertion to a minimum the first day, eating lightly until we were acclimated to Colorado's higher altitude. Once we were unpacked, our plans to climb the small hills behind our cabin were thwarted when Jean spotted two chipmunks. She watched them from every angle, transfixed.

"Jean," Evan droned, "there are chipmunks in Chicago."

Jean left the chipmunks and found a beetle. Within an hour we had covered six square inches of ground.

"I'm going to take up crocheting," I announced. "At this pace I could make two afghans before the week is over."

But gradually we learned — everything out-of-doors with small children takes longer than you expect, so slow down, relax, and enjoy your child. You won't make it to the top of Mount Everest, you might not make it much past your front door the first day, but you will see every chipmunk, hummingbird and butterfly in eyeshot. (Remember what it was like when you were small?)

By the middle of the week, however, Jean was walking a half mile on the trail unassisted — figure one-half mile for every year of age.

And so we hiked leisurely up mountain trails, ate light lunches by scenic streams, changed diapers on quaint footbridges, slathered on bug repellent in grassy glades and lost the yen for city life altogether. (We also lost three bottles, two socks, Jean's favorite book and Chirp, a furry chicken that jingled.)

We kept her food simple and familiar; she responded by eating nothing for three days. Young appetites can take time to adjust cold, wetness, wind and exhaustion.

Ask your pediatrician to recommend an effective sunscreen and bug repellent for your baby (lotions or solids are safer and easier to use than sprays); carry a broad-brimmed hat to shade her from the sun's harmful rays. Mosquito netting can be hung from the hat for further protection.

Sunglasses, goggles and even a black umbrella attached to your baby back carrier will provide additional protection. While all of this might make you and your child look like a camel and tiny rider crossing the Sahara, the right combination of these items can keep your baby safe and comfortable.

If your youngster is at the finger-food stage, take lots of healthy snacks along on your hiking trips. In cold weather kids eat more, so plan accordingly; in warm weather encourage them to drink more fluids.

Carry water for overnight trips; always boil or purify water you find on the trail since even clear stagnant water can cause diarrhea. Juices in boxes are convenient thirst quenchers. Bring a first-aid kit with antiseptic, moleskin for blisters, soap, adhesive tape and bandages, children's aspirin or acetaminophen, ointment and calamine lotion (for poison ivy, sunburn and other skin irritations), an antihistamine (for colds, allergy and insect bites) and a flashlight.

Schedule frequent meals, diaper changes and rest stops along the way. A toddler can walk only so far, and a young baby will enjoy stretching her legs and exploring outside the carrier.

Some experienced (and hardy) outdoors families carry only a few cloth diapers, wash them out as needed and hang them from their backpacks to dry. We stuck with our disposable brand, storing the dirty ones in plastic bags. Wilderness etiquette (and just simple consideration) requires that you leave the outdoors as you found it.

Rain gear for small children and babies is scarce but necessary. If you're handy, you can fashion a tiny poncho and rain pants out of a colorful vinyl-coated fabric.

Hypothermia, which occurs when body heat is lost beyond the body's ability to generate new warmth, is the leading cause of injuries among outdoor recreationists. It is aggravated by part of your regular routine. Build stamina by walking a few miles per day and climbing stairs before going on your outdoors vacation.

Take one-third of the time to get to your destination and leave two-thirds to get back. We hiked too far one day, thinking Jean wouldn't notice. She did — loudly; so did every hiker within earshot as we sheepishly climbed down from five miles of steep, craggy trail.

Always prepare for inclement weather. Layered clothing is the best defense against the cold. Two thin sweaters add more warmth than one heavy one.

Anticipate the cold for your child. Small children often don't know they're cold until they're freezing; they lose body heat more rapidly than adults. Avoid any outdoors trip if severe cold, heat or rain is expected.

When should a child get her own scaled-down backpack? "As soon as she can walk," advises Joan Cashin of the Appalachian Trail Conference. Obviously, a child's pack should be kept light.

Don't hike for long stretches if walking and hiking are not

“ With babies strapped into carriers and toddlers sporting hiking shoes, young families head for the hills. ”

A movie within a movie

By Bob Thomas

Movies about the making of a movie have been rare. "Day for Night" was a gem, reflecting Francois Truffaut's lifelong love affair with the cinema. "The Stunt Man," highlighted by Peter O'Toole's demonic portrayal of an auteur director, captured the frenetic energy of a film location. Now comes "Sweet Liberty," written, directed by and starring Alan Alda.

The setting is a small college town in North Carolina. Professor Michael Burgess (Alda) has written a serious, realistic book about the Revolutionary War which becomes a best seller and is bought by a Hollywood studio. A film company invades the town to shoot the movie.

Alda soon learns the lesson of authors from time immemorial:

Bob Thomas reviews movies for The Associated Press.

Cinema Review

that Hollywood can make a mishmash of his book.

The director (Saul Rubinek) explains that since 80 percent of today's film audience is between the ages of 10 and 22, films must defy authority, destroy property and take off people's clothes.

Joining forces with the overbearing screenwriter (Bob Hoskins), Alda strives to rescue his creation by midnight rewrites of the script. He induces the stars, Michael Caine and Michelle Pfeiffer, to join the conspiracy.

Meanwhile, romance flourishes. Alda, who has been urging another teacher (Lise Hilboldt) to live with him, falls in bed with Pfeiffer. Caine makes a play for the teacher, the college president's wife and other available women — until his wife arrives on the location.

"Sweet Liberty" may sound like a merry romp, but alas, Alda is a talented farceur, but he has shortchanged himself and his fellow actors as writer and director. Alda and Hilboldt bicker tediously until the film company arrives in a flurry of cliches. The dynamic Bob Hoskins becomes the epitome of the devious, slick-talking screenwriter, and Saul Rubinek is repellent as the director.

Alda has added an extraneous subplot about his eccentric and unfunny mother, with Lillian Gish in a brave attempt at the role trademarked by Ruth Gordon.

The stars of the movie-within-the-movie come off best. Michael Caine is perfectly cast as the airy rake, and Michelle Pfeiffer has unquestionable star quality as the blonde temptress.

The rating of "Sweet Liberty" is PG, with mild swearing and bare male bottoms. Produced by Martin Bregman and released by Universal Pictures. Running time: 107 minutes. ■

'Lullaby' an international feat

By Bogdan Turek

WARSAW — "Lullaby" may or may not be a great film, but it is doubtless the only one ever made through Jewish and Egyptian collaboration in communist Poland with West German, Saudi Arabian and Syrian money.

Based on three novels about the Nazi destruction of Jews in Eastern Europe, the movie "is the first... cooperation of this kind," said writer-producer Ephraim Sevela in an interview. Sevela, a Soviet Jew who emigrated to Israel in 1971, teamed with Egyptian producer Hany Hasn to make "Lullaby." The film was financed by West German Jews and Arab businessmen in Saudi Arabia and Syria and shooting was completed in eight months.

Sevela said his work with Hasn was "a fruit of the spirit of the Camp David agreement" between Israel, Egypt and the United States.

The film's location was even more remarkable.

Poland broke diplomatic relations with Israel in 1967. After nearly 20 years of hostility, the two countries have begun to establish cultural contacts.

An Israeli ballet was performed in Warsaw in March and Polish artists have held showings in Tel Aviv. A collection of Jewish jokes sold out quickly in Warsaw bookshops.

Under the changing climate, "there was no problem to get permission to make the film," Sevela said. The state-run film company Film Polski "read the script and liked it" — and even paid some 10 million zloties ($58,000) to broadcast it on state-run Polish TV after it shows at the prestigious Cannes Film Festival in France.

Sevela said the idea for "Lullaby" came when he met Polish producer Jerzy Hoffman at a West Berlin film festival.

"Hoffman liked the idea of making such a film in Poland," said Sevela. While the movie chronicles the experiences of Jews "somewhere in Eastern Europe," the producer said the landscapes, townships and clothes are unmistakably Polish.

Unlike other Holocaust movies, Sevela said, "Lullaby" is a poetic film about wonderful people. It is a romantic, poetic song about the spiritual greatness and beauty of man and his unbroken dignity."

The film's international character extends to its cast — Poland's Ludwik Benoit, Bulgarian Vincenty Pavlov

(who holds a British passport) and Leonid Hassim of West Berlin, who left the Soviet Union as a child. The movie is in English and Poland's Slawa Przybylska sings one lullaby in the movie in Yiddish.

Sevela's own story reads like a movie plot.

He wrote the screenplays for eight movies in the Soviet Union and published 13 novels — including "Legends from Invalid Street" — in the West. In 1971, he and 23 other Russian Jews staged a sit-in at Moscow's Supreme Soviet building demanding the right to emigrate to Israel.

Sevela and 18 others were allowed to leave.

The filmmaker, who now lives in the United States, is already looking ahead to his next production — an American-Russian movie made in West Germany and financed in the United States, with its author, director, cameraman and soundmen all Soviet Jewish emigres who are now American citizens. ■

Film capsules

Critters (PG-13) — Dee Wallace Stone, Billy Green Bush, Scott Grimes, Terrence Mann. (Sci-Fi Thriller) They are fuzzy little creatures with razor-sharp teeth and poisonous quills. And they're hungry. When they escape from a maximum security prison in outer space and land on Earth, these critters decide to quench their appetites by eating everything — and everyone — in sight. Stephen Herek has directed with precise pacing: There are chills, but also thrills and laughs. And it's all done without the viciousness Spielberg infused in "Gremlins." Grade: B-plus.

Ginger and Fred (PG-13) — Giulietta Masina, Marcello Mastroianni, Franco Fabrizi. (Comedy-Drama) This is a terrific satire of television and the power it has to make — and break — the human spirit. It is also a homage to the '30s era epitomized by Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. And, like a faded high-school yearbook, it reeks of romance, willed passion and broken promises as a World War II dance team is reunited for a TV special. This may not be Fellini's finest film, but the Italian master proves he hasn't lost his touch. Augusto Padoer is superb as an overzealous transvestite. Grade: B.

Gung Ho (PG-13) — Michael Keaton, Gedde Watanabe, George Wendt, Mimi Rogers. (Comedy) Actor/director Ron Howard comes out of the sea ("Splash") and sky ("Cocoon") to tackle turf. Or, to be more precise, to tackle the problems that occur when a Japanese company invades a small-town auto factory in Pennsylvania. To be even more precise, Howard doesn't tackle the topic; he fumbles it. "Gung Ho" is not a potent social comedy, but a lighthearted romp that manages to be half-entertaining all the time. Rubber-faced Keaton is fun to watch, even after the film runs out of gas. Grade: B.

Just Between Friends (PG-13) — Mary Tyler Moore, Christine Lahti, Ted Danson, Sam Waterston. (Comedy-Drama) A woman (Lahti) discovers that her new best friend (Moore) is married to the man she's been having an affair with. A comedy of errors ensues, then the film takes a more serious turn when a genuine tragedy strikes. Director Alan Burns keeps both the comedy and the tragedy a little too tightly under control, but there are plenty of good moments. All four stars turn in first-rate performances, but Lahti is the standout. Grade: B.

Legend (PG) — Tom Cruise, Mia Sara, Tim Curry. (Fantasy) This one is for undemanding fantasy fans only. The forces of good (represented by Cruise and Sara) take on the forces of evil and darkness (represented by Curry). The story is as predictable as they come, and the creatures of darkness are so grotesque that they're often painful to look at. Curry shows an occasional spark as Darkness, and Sara is lovely to look at, but this flick has little else to recommend it. Grade: C-minus.

Lucas (PG) — Corey Haim, Karl Green, Charlie Sheen. (Comedy-Drama) In which some clean-cut 16-year-old jock learns a lesson about dedication and bravery from an underdeveloped 14-year-old genius. Haim plays Lucas with verve; and reheaded Green as Maggie, the girl Lucas loves and loses, evokes a gentle warmth. Sheen (another sibling from the Martin Sheen acting stable) is the jock who befriends Lucas and then wins the love of Maggie. The film is somewhat more than a television "Afternoon Special" but somewhat less than a fulfilling adult drama. But it's a great flick for the under-16 crowd. Take the kids! Grade: B.

The Money Pit (PG) — Tom Hanks, Shelley Long, Alexander Godunov. (Comedy) The minute this romantic couple moves into a dream house, its starts to self-destruct. Slime emerges from the pipes, small electrical fires erupt almost every time a try to have the house repaired, they discover that local workers have to be bribed with outrageous sums to even come and take a look at the place. "Money Pit" has its amusing moments, but none of the gags are original, and watching the house fall apart is sometimes positively painful. Grade: C-plus.

On Valentine's Day (PG) — Halle Fouts, William Converse-Roberts, Michael Higgins, Steven Hill, Matthew Broderick. (Drama) Horton Foote ("Tender Mercies," "The Trip to Bountiful") writes lyrical screenplays extolling the virtues of the human spirit. Foote's work is deeply rooted in tradition; Robert Duvall calls it "rural Chekhov." Here, the characters and conflicts of a small Texas town are given some time to work out their problems and work through their imaginations. This is a gentle and slow-moving film that occasionally sags but never wits. Grade: B-minus.

Harvey Korman returns in 'Leo & Liz' for CBS

By Frank Sanello

HOLLYWOOD — Family-oriented sitcoms are making a big comeback on television this season and Harvey Korman hopes to cash in on their popularity.

His new half-hour TV series, "Leo & Liz in Beverly Hills," is on CBS for a six-week run and a possible return in the fall.

Korman plays Leo Greene, a nouveau riche bra manufacturer from New Jersey who has moved to California with his wife (Valerie Perrine). While dealing with their own massive inferiority complex, Leo and Liz cope with eccentric servants and a daughter who has married into a snobbish family.

Steve Martin directed and wrote the story for their opening episode.

Although the story line sounds a lot like "Down and Out in Beverly Hills" without the bum, Korman says the Paul Mazursky film didn't inspire "Leo & Liz." The TV characters originally appeared on a segment of "The George Burns Comedy Week" long before the hit film's release.

"We didn't steal it from Mazursky," Korman says, "stabbing his breakfast eggs at a Bel Air hotel to make sure they aren't overcooked." Mazursky stole the idea from a French film.

"The French stole it from the Germans, who stole it from the Yugoslavians. You can probably trace it back to ancient Greece, when it was called 'Leo & Liz in Carthage.'"

Korman, 59, has enjoyed a successful TV and film career playing second bananas, first on the "Danny Kaye Show" in the early '60s, then as Carol Burnett's comic nemesis on her long-running variety show. Korman has also banged heads with Mel Brooks in classic film farces like "Blazing Saddles" and "High Anxiety."

Laurence Olivier has always been my idol. I was mostly influenced by British actors like Gielgud, Guinness and Richardson."

Except for the short-lived 1977 comedy series "The Harvey Korman Show," "Leo & Liz" is the first series in which Korman plays the lead. Even so, the Chicago-born comedian insists he's feeling no pressure.

"If the show flops," he says, "my kids will starve. My older children will be yanked out of college. The younger ones will never go. I also get suicidal over failure, so there will be huge psychiatric bills and possibly a car going over a cliff. Aside from all that, there's no pressure."

If the actor has any worries, it's that the TV audience won't be able to relate to a family with a Beverly Hills mansion and a Rolls Royce. "But they'll see we are really like the guy who lives next door with the same problems and anxieties," he says.

Well, maybe not exactly the same problems. In the opening episode, for example, Leo and Liz are desperate to find a celebrity to turn their first party into an "A-list" event. But when Leo bumps into Liberace at the supermarket, he finds himself too starstruck to speak.

Just the kind of anxiety that permeates Peoria and Dubuque. Although comedy has made him rich and fairly famous, Korman insists he prefers dramatic roles. In his 20s, he studied and performed at Chicago's prestigious Goodman School of Drama.

"Laurence Olivier has always been my idol," he says. "I was mostly influenced by British actors like Gielgud, Guinness and Richardson."

Despite good reviews playing Bud Abbott in a TV movie about the tragic personal lives of comedians Abbott and Costello, Korman says he has been unable to find any other dramatic roles.

In person, Korman fits his TV image as a non-stop joker. He says he met his present wife Debbie at the library where she worked. "I used to cruise the bookshelves looking for intellectual sluts," he says.

Korman has only one regret about his new show. He wishes the title was just "Leo & Liz" — without the "Beverly Hills."

"Short little titles work well on TV," he says. "Like 'Cagney & Lacey,' 'Hardcastle & McCormick' and 'Remington & Steele.'"

NBC in last place two weeks in a row

NEW YORK (UPI) — Now that the 1985-86 television season has ended and the off-season repeats have begun in earnest, NBC has come in last for two weeks in a row.

CBS was the winner last week, as it was the week before, getting an extra boost from its third-place Hallmark Hall of Fame "Resting Place." ABC came in second, aided by the General Foods Showcase "Alex: Life of a Child," which placed sixth in the ratings. The ratings for the week ending April 27, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co., gave CBS a 14.3 rating and a 24 percent share of the audience, while ABC had a 12.9 rating and a 22 share and NBC had a 12.3 rating and a 21 share.

The NBC slump was not a reflection of trouble at the top — "The Cosby Show" and "Family Ties" led the ratings chart as they have all season, and "Cheers" and "Golden Girls" also were in the top 10.

The problem was at the bottom of the list, where the peacock network's tail was dragging, pulled down by some low-rated specials, including its White Paper on Japan, the AFI Salute to Billy Wilder, "TV Bloopers and Practical Jokes" and the TV Academy's Hall of Fame. "Handsome Harry's" in 64th place and "Punky Brewster" in 65rd out of a list of 64 shows didn't help either. As for last place, that went to "The Fall Guy" (ABC).

"CBS Evening News with Dan Rather" once again was in first place among evening news shows with a 12.0 rating and a 23 share. "NBC Nightly News with Tom Brokaw" came in second with an 11.7 rating and 23 share and "ABC World News Tonight with Peter Jennings" had an 11.1 rating and 21 share.

The top 10 prime time shows for the week ending April 27, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co., were:

1. The Cosby Show (NBC)
2. Family Ties (NBC)
3. Hallmark Hall of Fame "Resting Place" (CBS)
4. 60 Minutes (CBS)
5. Murder, She Wrote (CBS)
6. Alex: Life of a Child (ABC)
7. Cheers (NBC)
8. Who's the Boss? (ABC)
9. Perfect Strangers (ABC)
10. Golden Girls (NBC)

21 Music

Joe Cocker's video is tops

By Ethlie Ann Vare

The two best new music videos, oddly, are also the most commercially exploitative. One was made by a TV commercial director, the other is a commercial for a movie. Here are my latest ratings:

Joe Cocker, "Shelter Mr" — A road-weary Joe Cocker, his pipes as delightfully rusty as ever, sings into the camera in glorious black and white, serving only to frame the sound footage that makes the clip so appealing. Also black and white, the interstitial shots are parts of a documentary — about two black street musicians — made by the director of those moody Levi 501 jeans commercials. What begins in a somber tone — not unlike James Agee's famed Dust Bowl pictorials — ends up with a note of happiness and hope. There is some lovely photography and a fine vocal performance. Grade: B.

Katrina and the Waves, "Is That It?" — The Canadian-British-American fluff band rocks a little harder here, with a song that could be mistaken for a lost Sam and Dave cut. The clip would be mistaken for a lost episode of the Monkees. But Katrina Leskanich can never be mistaken for an "MTV chick" — thank goodness. Grade: B.

Bob Dylan and Tom Petty, "Band of the Hand" — This is a promo for the movie of the same name, a film produced by the makers of "Miami Vice" and directed (as was the clip) by ex-"Starkey and Hutch" star Paul Michael Glaser. Visually, it's brilliant: The stop-action solarization process used so effectively will probably become the next rock-video cliché, like A-Ha's charcoal animation. It's fitting that the people who so successfully integrated rock video and series TV should do the same for rock video and film promotion. The clip loses points because it's all style and no substance. Grade: A-minus.

Simple Minds, "All the Things She Said" — Jim Kerr usually ensures that his band's videos are as boring as its rhythm section. This time, some vibrant images and fascinating multi-layer editing — like a "what's wrong with this picture?" puzzle — create a clip that actually invites watching — more than once. It's hard to say the same about listening to the song, however. Grade: B.

The Firm, "Live in Peace" — The instant supergroup is just about to win over the discriminating viewer with its melodic tune and positive message, when they throw in a fashion model wearing an animal-skin bikini to present Brazilian tribespeople. Still, "Why can't we live in peace?" is a better theme than "Why can't I have you tonight?" and Jimmy Page plays some fine guitar. Grade: B-minus.

Dream Academy, "Love Paradise" — If Katrina and the Waves' clip stepped off the Monkees' last train to Clarksville, Dream Academy's latest tumbled from the Jefferson Airplane while it was eight miles high. You're talking major psychedelia here, a light show in videotape and Super-8. It's really quite pretty, if directionless, but the song is so far inferior to Dream Academy's earlier "This World" or "Life in a Northern Town" that it's still a major disappointment. Grade: C.

Bronski Beat, "Hi That Perfect Beat" — The controversial gay band has replaced its controversial gay singer with a platinum blond named John-John, and the first release under the new lineup to dance number that could have come off the last Dead or Alive LP. The video is nothing to look at, and the lyrics are nothing to listen to, but the track is a killer to dance to. So who's worried about a video clip that's intended to be wallpaper for a discotheque? Grade: C.

Falco, "Vienna Calling" — This has to be the absolute nadir of synth-pop schlock. Austria's Falco is becoming a new wave Wayne Newton. His only saving grace is that you can't understand a word he's saying — unless you speak German. Grade: D-minus.

Former star of Styx charts his own course

By Larry McShane

NEW YORK — Quick now: Dennis DeYoung. Who is he? "Dennis DeYoung? Oh, yeah, yeah, that guy," said Dennis DeYoung, aping the slightly puzzled look of the average music fan. "That 'Desert Moon,' it's really nice."

DeYoung shakes his head and laughs. The former member of the late multi-platinum band, Styx, has just released his second solo record, "Back to the World," the follow-up to his successful debut, "Desert Moon," and its Top 10 title cut.

Styx ripped off a dozen chart hits from 1975 until 1983; DeYoung's contributions included "Babe," "Lady," "Come Sail Away" and "Don't Let It End."

But the band broke up and he headed into the studio to make a record alone. The album's title song was a smash and its video became an MTV fixture.

"I found out yes, people really knew that voice; no, they didn't know his name, and they had no idea what he looked like," said DeYoung, whose band was once characterized as "faceless" in a Rolling Stone cover story.

The blond singer moved away from the large-scale theatrics which had marked such Styx efforts as "The Grand Illusion" and "Kilroy Was Here." Instead, the Chicago-born rocker focused on more introspective, one-to-one songs.

On his new album he adds his voice to those calling for better treatment of Vietnam veterans with the song "Black Wall."

"I didn't go, and I could have. I was I-A in '67, passed my physical, and dumb, stupid luck — I have no idea why I didn't get called, it was one of those lucky things," he said. "In my own way, this is me saying, 'Hey, it could have been me, man.' Yeah, it could have been me."

The first person to hear the finished song, which refers to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, was DeYoung's brother-in-law, a veteran who was wounded in Vietnam.

"I desperately wanted him to approve of this," he recalled. "Well, he really loved it a lot, which made me happy because this is a very important issue in this guy's life and the wrong word or line — you know?"

DeYoung, based in Chicago and an avid White Sox fan, doesn't think New York and Los Angeles should dominate the music industry. "Los Angeles and New York are unlike any other place in the country. They are unique unto themselves and from the country," he said. "That's, however, where most of the information and ideas and images of this country come from."

DeYoung credits artists such as Bruce Springsteen and John Cougar Mellencamp for helping change that.

Arbitrators cure car headaches

If you've got a lemon, here's good news for you

By Cheryl and Christopher Jensen

Unresolved car repair problems can be frustrating. Last year in Ohio, for example, automobile-related problems continued to top the attorney general's complaint list. About 6,800 complaints, or 28 percent of those received, were written by car owners so desperately unhappy that they wanted the state's chief law-enforcement officer to tackle the perceived scoundrels.

But there is some good news for consumers. Automobile manufacturers are increasingly providing channels aimed at resolving automotive complaints. The devices are arbitration panels, programs designed to use unbiased arbitrators to settle disputes that have reached an impasse between unhappy consumers and automobile manufacturers or dealers. When you, the consumer, go before such a panel, you tell your side, the manufacturer or dealer tells his side, and an arbitrator hands down a decision.

While some manufacturers have had arbitration panels in test areas for several years, in many cases they are now becoming nationwide programs. And, due to a recent out-of-court settlement between General Motors (GM) and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), GM has greatly expanded and modified its program. Consumers have the chance to get an estimated $100 million in refunds from GM as a result of this settlement, according to several FTC officials.

As more and more consumers are learning about them, they are taking advantage of arbitration as an alternative to costly legal action against auto companies. Consumers resort to arbitration for any number of reasons, as illustrated by the stories below. These include problems with service or with the performance of the car in general, including the legendary lemon.

● Mrs. Kathleen Del Regno of Cleveland, Ohio, had a new Volkswagen that constantly pulled to the left. In one year, the car had nine front-end alignments and the problem was still not solved when her warranty expired.

● Minka Goldstein of Bethesda, Md., visited her Chevrolet dealer 35 times. Out of the 11 months that they had their new car, it was in the shop for three. Problems included a transmission that gave out during a snowstorm and a persistent oil leak. "We had five problems that GM could not fix. And if GM cannot fix a problem...the bottom line is that they should buy that car back," she said.

● Teri Phinney of Bakersfield, Calif., bought a 1979 Chevy one-half-ton pick-up in 1980. The engine blew up at 13,000 miles after one year. Her dealer told her it was out of warranty, which was 12,000 miles or 12 months. She had no choice but to pay to have the engine replaced.

● Edgar J. Bany of Albuquerque, N.M., bought a 1982 Volkswagen Vanagon diesel camper. It was his fifth Volkswagen van, but first diesel. He could never get it to go over 55 miles per hour, sometimes necessary when merging onto busy highways. He couldn't convince anyone that the car was grossly underpowered. When he talked to the field representative, he was told, rather unsympathetically, "I can't help what a salesman tells you."

It's incidents such as these that drive car owners, who already have love-hate relationships with their cars, crazy. They are also the kinds of incidents that drive them into the arms of other auto manufacturers. It's this deflection that auto manufacturers are trying to prevent with auto arbitration programs.

Research done for the White House Office of Consumer Affairs showed that car owners who had their problems resolved were much more likely to buy the same brand again, says Marc Grainger, an official with the Technical Assistance Research Programs Inc. (TARP), a Washington, D.C.-based market research company.

"Other research also showed that a happy customer would probably tell eight other people about his pleasant experience compared with someone who was disgruntled and would find time to tell 16 people," Grainger says. "It pays to be responsive to the customer. In general it costs much more to get a new customer through big advertising campaigns than it does to keep one."

Auto company officials agree that keeping customers happy is the reason they started arbitration programs. "Satisfied customers keep buying our cars, and we feel the arbitration boards we have in place provide a fast, inexpensive, impartial way to

Continued ...

Resolve auto disputes

resolve customer complaints. It saves the customers' money and the corporation money because you're not tied up in court or litigation for years," says Larry Lash, manager of service and parts public relations, and Chrysler Corporation's spokesman on arbitration boards.

"It's a free, fast and fair mechanism," says Richard Wagner, a Ford-Nissan-Peugeot dealer in Simsbury, Conn., and the National Automobile Dealers Association's (NADA) consumer affairs committee chairman. NADA sponsors one of the arbitration boards, the Automotive Consumer Action Program (AUTOCAP).

"We want our customers to be satisfied because we hope they will continue to think favorably about the Ford Motor Company and will repurchase another vehicle," says Louis R. Plummer, Ford Motor Company's owner relations operations manager.

Here's how such programs generally work, including suggestions from consumer advocates about how to settle disputes with dealers and manufacturers.

● First, try to work out the problem with the dealer and local representative of the manufacturer, usually known as the "zone representative." Zone representatives are often listed in the telephone book or the owner's manual that comes with your car.

● If that doesn't work, ask the zone representative or the local Better Business Bureau (BBB) office if there is an arbitration program that can help you.

● These programs, such as the BBB's Autoline, will send the consumer forms to fill out describing the problem. Then, an attempt is made to negotiate a settlement through what is called "mediation," an informal discussion of the problem with the parties involved. Most cases — as high as 80 to 90 percent — are resolved in mediation, according to the officials.

● If the problem cannot be worked out through mediation, the consumer's final step is arbitration, a last-ditch effort to solve a problem without going to court.

● Under arbitration, there is usually a hearing in which the consumer's complaint is represented to the arbitrator — either in person or in writing, depending upon the program's guidelines. Both the consumer's side and the auto manufacturer or dealer's side are heard. The arbitrator then makes a decision.

● Consumer advocates suggest the consumer bring items such as repair bills to document the problems with the car and service records, which show that the car was maintained in accordance with the manufacturer's recommendations (usually found in the owner's manual).

The idea is to show that the consumer did his part to maintain the car properly. In most programs, a consumer could even produce witnesses such as the mechanic who worked on the car to testify about the problem and what may have caused it.

● The panel's makeup varies from program to program, but it is generally composed of auto-industry representatives and/or members of the general public trained to be arbitrators. In some programs, consumers are able to choose some of the panel; in others they aren't.

● Arbitrators' decisions vary widely. Mrs. Del Regno was awarded the original purchase price of her car. A woman from Manassas, Va., was awarded only $200 of a $1,500 repair bill.

● Under the major programs surveyed, the arbitrator's decision is legally binding on the manufacturer or dealer, but not on the consumer. This means if the decision goes against the consumer, he or she may still take the case to court. The one exception is NADA's AUTOCAP program. It is only voluntarily binding upon the dealer or manufacturer.

When it became clear that AUTOCAP was not legally binding upon the dealer or manufacturers involved, "I withdrew my support from the AUTOCAP program," says Virginia H. Knauer, special adviser to the president for consumer affairs and director of the United States Office of Consumer Affairs. She is a supporter of the arbitration concept.

"Fortunately, there are other adequate programs available to consumers that are binding on auto dealers, such as the Better Business Bureau's programs."

"The downside is that these programs have not been in effect long enough for us to have a good sense of how fairly consumers are treated," says Jack Gillis, speaking for the Center for Auto Safety, a nationally known, non-profit consumer group in Washington, D.C.

"On the surface, though, the new arbitration programs are a tremendous opportunity for consumers because they provide access to a legal process without having to obtain a lawyer and go through what can be an intimidating courtroom experience."

The statistics about who wins and loses in the arbitration process don't look that good for the consumer, he says. (The cases resolved in the consumer's favor range from 33 percent to 60 percent, according to a poll of arbitration program officials.)

These programs help

MAJOR ARBITRATION PROGRAMS AND CONSUMER AIDS
Most auto manufacturers have arbitration programs of some type, although what each covers and how each works varies.

Generally, the local contact for such programs can be found through a dealer or in your car's owner's manual. These are the major programs:

Autoline: Sponsored by the Better Business Bureau, participating manufacturers include GM, Nissan (Datsun), Volkswagen, Porsche and Audi. Covered are all complaints relating to repairs or the product (not sales). Local BBB offices are listed in the telephone book. The national headquarters for the Council of Better Business Bureaus is 1515 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, Va., 22209; (703) 276-0100.

AUTOCAP (Automotive Consumer Action Program): Sponsored by the National Automobile Dealers Association (NADA), industry participants include AMC/Renault, most foreign car manufacturers and the majority of new-car dealers. Any complaints about sales or service practices in a participating (new or used) car dealership are considered. Contact your local dealer or the NADA national office located at 8400 Westpark Dr., McLean, Va. 22201; (703) 821-7144.

(Chrysler) Customer Satisfaction Board: Sponsored by Chrysler Corporation and dealers. Covered are service-related disputes involving Chrysler Corporation's limited warranty or a Chrysler Mopar part limited warranty. Contact Chrysler's Owner Relations Department at (313) 956-5970.

OTHER HELP FOR THE CONSUMER:
The Car Book, part of which discusses arbitration and gives tips on the procedure, is available from the Center for Auto Safety, 2001 S St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20009 for $8.95.

LemonAid is an organization formed to help consumers undertaking arbitration and offers a helpful book to lead consumers by the hand through the procedure. Write LemonAid, 9307 Linden Ave., Bethesda, Md. 20814 and enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

THE GM-FTC SETTLEMENT

In its largest consumer automobile-related case ever, the FTC alleged that GM knew, or should have known, there were defects in its cars and should be found guilty of unfair trade practices because it failed to tell consumers. GM officials denied any wrongdoing, but agreed to expand and modify its arbitration program with the national BBB.

As a result of the out-of-court settlement, consumers can participate in the arbitration program even though their cars are out of warranty or have been sold. Under the program, the decision of the arbitrator is binding only on GM.

The GM settlement contains special provisions for consumers who have had problems with one or more of these component parts:

● Failures of the THM 200 automatic transmission used in many of GM's rear-wheel-drive cars manufactured from 1975 through April 1983. At least five million cars have those transmissions.

For more information, contact your local BBB or regional FTC office. To locate your regional FTC office, look in the telephone book or contact national headquarters at 6th and Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, D.C. 20580; (202) 523-3598. ■

Discover how others perceive your voice

By Jodi Vernon

Yesterday as a saleswoman called my home, selling an introductory offer to an out-of-town newspaper. I listened to her short and happy speech and within minutes I bought the paper. Later I realized it was her voice that made the sale. Her upbeat delivery conveyed good feelings about what she was selling.

For the most part it's true that how you say something is as important as what you say. People tend to tune out an unpleasant voice and are quick to judge your performance on the basis of your voice. If your speech is sloppy, others start to wonder if your work and product are, too.

Before you can appreciate your voice and what it can do for you, it's wise to have a clear understanding of your vocal apparatus.

Says Oleda Baker, author of "How to Renovate Yourself from Head to Toe," "Your lungs provide air. Your vocal chords act as the vibrator, your throat and mouth act as a pipe. When all the parts are working in harmony, the voice is really music to the ear — soft, soothing, persuasive. But when they're not, it's like an instrument that needs tuning."

Women, especially women in sales, need to avoid using a "little me" voice. "If you talk like a little girl," says Lillian Glass, a speech pathologist and communications specialist in California, "you'll be treated like one."

Some people don't take the time to enunciate all sounds, such as "gimmie" for "give me."

If you notice this problem in your own speech, slow down and put the missing sounds back into your sentences. If your family and community used sloppy speech, it's almost impossible not to pick up on those same bad habits, but bad speech patterns can be overcome.

Says Dorothy Sarnoff, a New York speech consultant, "Six hours of concentrated instruction is enough to remedy almost any speech problem."

One excellent way to spot bad speech habits is to read aloud into a tape recorder, then play it back to identify the way you abuse words. Whenever you read aloud, you should feel a vibration in your voice box. If you don't, you probably have a whispery, little-child voice.

Veins and chords in your neck shouldn't stand out when you speak. If they do, you're straining and probably speak in a high pitch.

People do tend to talk in a higher pitch when they're nervous. A high-pitched voice is a clue to tense throat and jaw muscles. Try this to lower your voice:

Place your hand over your chest and lower your voice a half tone each time you say, "I think it is not going to snow." When you feel uncomfortable at a certain tone, go back up one tone. This is the level you want to use when you speak.

Don't strive for a lower voice than is comfortable or you may find yourself with chronic hoarseness instead. In fact, the sticker craze enjoyed by children across the country can also benefit you. Put small stickers on the telephone, door, business materials, wherever, to remind you to relax and lower your voice.

If you deliver the same speech day after day, you might tend to slip into a mechanical voice. Mumbles and monotonies are deadly speech problems. Monotonies don't use their facial muscles when they speak — they chew their words.

The best remedy for that is to sing, sing, sing — in the shower, anywhere. Don't worry about how you sound. Singing forces your breath outward and increases the range of sounds. If your voice doesn't project outward, shallow breathing is the problem. The following exercise will increase your breath control.

Stand straight with your arms at your sides. As you inhale, raise your outstretched arms to your shoulders. Make one voiceless "ha" sound as you lower your arms. Do this all slowly on the count of 20.

According to the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association in Rockville, Md., the 10 best speaking voices in the world in 1983 were: Julie Andrews, Sean Connery, James Earl Jones, Gregory Peck, Paul Harvey, John Chancellor, Casey Kasem and the late Jessica Savitch, Orson Welles and Richard Burton.

Take time to listen to these people and others. Hear their voice energy, lack of hesitations, high and low ranges and how well they project self-confidence and authority. You can learn this, too. It may take some time, but anything of value is worth the effort. The question is, do you sound as good as you are? ■

Suits dull? | This spring there's plenty of good news for those who are bored by their wardrobe

By Sandi Hastings

QUESTION: I have just bought two suits for spring and summer. Both are bright colors. One's fuchsia and the other is a royal-blue plaid. I need to buy shoes and want to know if I should buy bright pumps to match the suits.

ANSWER: It's difficult for me to answer your question without any job information. If you have an executive position with a conservative industry, I suggest you soften the impact of your bright suits with neutral accessories. I would wear black, blue, or taupe shoes with your suits, and I'd also choose blouses in neutral colors. If you hold a lower-level position, the bright, matching shoes will probably be acceptable. Remember, it's best to mirror the dress of individuals one level higher than your own if you have career aspirations.

QUESTION: I'm an executive

"If you hold a lower-level position, the bright, matching shoes will probably be acceptable."

who's tired of gray, navy, and tan suits, especially in the spring and summer. I would like to add a new color to my wardrobe this season without negatively affecting my professional image. Do you have any suggestions?

QUESTION: The best color choice depends on the colors in your wardrobe. Although pink has been considered "too feminine" to be included in a professional wardrobe, it is a color that works well with the corporate colors of gray, navy and tan. In fact, some people are describing pink as the "new neutral" so you might want to incorporate pink in your color scheme. You can also change a boring suit by adding a bright blouse, such as red, fuchsia, or teal blue. Choose a blouse with a simple scoop neckline to further update your professional wardrobe. Finally, you also might consider wearing a bright blazer over a neutral silk dress to add variety to your wardrobe.

QUESTION: Many women are wearing large, chunky costume jewelry with their suits, but I didn't know how to update my classic wardrobe with accessories. If it's appropriate to wear costume jewelry, could you suggest some basic pieces?

ANSWER: Accessories for the working woman's wardrobe have changed drastically in the past two years. Previously, the most appropriate jewelry choices were gold and pearls. However, quality costume jewelry has become popular because it's an affordable way to update your business look. Silver accessories also enjoy renewed popularity. Since the most important accessories are earrings, I suggest you purchase some updated earrings. The most significant difference in accessories is size, so buy earrings a bit larger and bolder than you would normally wear. Choose good quality costume jewelry or silver to maximize the impact. The second most important jewelry piece this year is either a necklace or a bracelet. To ensure you make an appropriate selection I recommend browsing through catalog to familiarize yourself with necklaces and bracelets worn with suits and career dresses. If you are reluctant to choose accessories relying on your memory carry a page of the catalog with you. Remember to make adjustments for your body type. A short person will look overpowered by jewelry designed for the larger woman while the larger woman needs to avoid delicate, small pieces of jewelry. ■

How to pick the number one newspaper in a multiple paper town.

In a town like Manchester, you might as well start with readership. In a most recent survey conducted by First Market Research of Boston, the Manchester Herald holds the overall local readership lead. According to the study, the Manchester Herald is the leader for local news, local happenings and local sports, with three quarters of the readers saying the coverage is the most extensive.

Next, the number one newspaper should provide readers with a depth of information needed to make valued and reasonable decisions regarding key local issues that may impact on their lives today, or in the future. Well that same study shows that the Manchester Herald is rated quite highly in terms of space devoted to selected issues in its Opinion pages. Nearly eight in ten readers find that the space devoted to viewpoints on local issues to be more than sufficient in explaining the issues.

The number one newspaper should also provide a service to its subscribers. The Manchester Herald is found to be a good community newspaper by over nine in ten readers, with over one third rating it as very good. The Manchester Herald is also a very effective advertising tool for reaching the Manchester Area public and it is preferred over most other forms of printed advertising.

Caring about its readers should also be a priority with the number one newspaper. The Manchester Herald feels it is their responsibility to listen to what residents in Manchester have to say. They want to hear about readers views on the news — what they think is important, what should go into the paper and what shouldn't. They're especially interested in hearing any comments you may have about the service you get from the Herald. They guarantee prompt delivery and courteous, efficient service on all billing matters. If you're not satisfied, they want to know about it.

If you're still trying to figure out which is the number one newspaper in Manchester, the facts are obvious. Your choice will be the same paper more and more readers in Manchester choose every day. The Manchester Herald — your voice in Manchester.

Beef fat is in many processed foods

Most restaurants prefer to use animal lards in cooking

By Sonja Heinze

How are those of us who want to avoid beef fat, beef tallow, lard or any other meat-based shortening going to convince the cookie, cracker and cupcake makers to stop adding these ingredients? It has gotten to be like hunting for buried treasure to find a cracker that's pure vegetable oil.

Is meat shortening so cheap? I wish you would convey my feelings to the food companies like Nabisco, Keebler and Pillsbury. Even cake mixes all seem to have beef tallow or lard in them, too. Naomi Spigle, Mishawaka, Ind.

Perhaps your feelings will be conveyed through this column. Beef tallow is the rendered fat of cattle, and lard is the rendered fat of the hog. Rendered means the fat is extracted by melting it down.

Health experts are advising us to cut down on the consumption of animal fats because they contain, generally, a high proportion of saturated fatty acids, which we're supposed to avoid, whereas most vegetable fats (with the exception of coconut and palm oils) contain unsaturated fatty acids, which are beneficial. Additionally, all animal fats contain cholesterol.

"Burger King's Specialty Chicken Sandwich is deep-fried in shortening that's approximately 93 percent beef tallow and 7 percent vegetable oil."

Since so much beef fat is readily available, it would be reasonable to assume that it's economical and practical for the baking industry to utilize it.

Animal fats are not only found in many processed foods but also, according to Jane Brody's "Nutrition Book," "most restaurants use animal fats or saturated vegetable fats to prepare their foods."

According to the Nutrition Action Health Letter published by the Center for Science in the Public Interest, the chicken for Chicken McNuggets is soaked with a frying fat made largely of beef tallow, and one serving has the equivalent of five pats of butter, or roughly twice what you get in a regular McDonald's hamburger.

In addition, Burger King's Specialty Chicken Sandwich is deep-fried in shortening that's approximately 93 percent beef tallow and 7 percent vegetable oil.

COUPON CLUB
Is there such a thing as a "coupon club" where you can pay a minimal fee and have access to more coupons? I clip coupons at every opportunity, but I never seem to be able to get the ones I really need.

I'm not aware of any such club, but if any readers know otherwise, please write and tell us about it. Some supermarkets have boxes at the entrance where customers can drop off unwanted coupons and then pick over those in the box they may want.

Your inability to get the coupons you "really need" may be because, according to the Environmental Nutrition newsletter, manufacturers issue most coupons for packaged goods that are often new, temporary or impulse purchases.

Staple items and unprocessed foods, such as flour, fruits, vegetables, milk and meat are rarely couponed because they do not provide a high profit margin and often have predictable sales.

"While coupons seem like a bargain," states the newsletter, "you can actually spend more money by using them if you're not careful. Good advice is to use coupons only for those products you were going to purchase anyway. Saving 20 cents on an item you normally don't buy is no bargain. Also, compare prices; another brand may be cheaper even without a coupon."

Manufacturers spend about $2 billion a year offering these coupons but only one in 20 is ever redeemed. Coffee, detergents, dog food and cereals are redeemed the most often. Even though 80 percent of households redeem coupons, only 5.5 percent of the coupons printed make it to the register. ■

Ted Danson:

His wife's stroke taught this star the power of love

By Jane Ardmore

He's best known, of course, as Sam Malone, the narcissistic, skirt-chasing bartender of NBC's "Cheers."

He's also attracted attention in such films as "War Games," "Something About Amelia," "The Big Chill" and "Just Between Friends" (currently in release). And coming up in May is Blake Edwards' "A Fine Mess," in which, as a sexy con man, he's on the lam from a couple of Mafia-like characters whom he's caught slipping speed to a horse.

Behind these varied characters — literally the opposite of Sam Malone — is the sensitive, literate Ted Danson, a devoted husband, whose life changed radically on Christmas Eve '79 when his wife, Casey, suffered a debilitating stroke while giving birth to their daughter, Kate.

"I was right there. I was with her. I had the awesome experience of watching birth and a few moments later was told that my wife would never walk again and very likely would never be able to use her left arm. Wham! I became almost at once an efficient father. Emotionally I slammed doors that I didn't open again for years.

"There was a lot to cope with. Usually, after a stroke, there is some sign of motion. Casey had no movement at all. And she is a woman of intrinsic strength, a woman with a baby she nursed to hold.

"The nurses were wonderful. There are all sorts of rules for the safety and health of babies. Usually they want them out of the hospital as soon as possible, but they kept Kate as long as they could. They kept her in intensive care part of the time; they'd smuggle her in so Casey could see her. I spent a couple of nights on the floor in Casey's room so we could all three be together."

He reflects, "The terribly important thing was to know that there is no such thing as finality. Years ago, they thought that whatever return of motion you had after 90 days, that's what you'd live with. They've discovered that that's not true. How sad to put a limit on someone and they believe it and it becomes their limit.

"Let me tell you that in those weeks — months, years — I got in touch with the power of love. My wife is a hell of a lady. She knocks your socks off. We took the baby back to the hospital to see her, but we had to take Kate home after three weeks. Casey didn't come home for three and a half months.

"Knowing I loved her helped. I could absolutely see the effect of loving her some days as opposed to coming in other days, not loving. I could see the physical result of love, the power of it."

He was just about to start a film, "The Women's Room," with Lee Remick. In a fitting room one day all of a sudden Danson slipped into another world. The people about him were saying, "Are you OK? Ted, are all right?"

"And I just stood there, with one arm in the sleeve of a shirt, spaced out. I don't know how long. That evening I found that this was at exactly the same moment that Casey moved her foot for the first time. That's how close we were."

He shakes his head, remembering. "Her progress was terribly slow. You have to have something wonderful going for you or you'd die."

"That was wonderful for Casey when she came home — she had to come home, she was becoming more ill in the hospital. It was like boot camp. Once she came home, she was a different being, she started loving life again. We were a family and life had gotten much larger."

What helped him was the baby. He was changing diapers and feeding her from day one. He remembers, "Being with the baby was wonderful, very easy and quiet. Unlike the situation with most parents who are putting all their angst into the first baby, in my case, all the angst was going toward the baby's mother. Kate was my relaxation. You picked her up and there was this sense of stillness and simplicity."

Ted Danson, as Sam Malone, stands behind the bar on NBC's popular series, "Cheers." Real life has brought him more than the usual challenges.

He had help. His parents had come from Arizona to be there when the baby was born, and they just stayed on. Casey's family came too. "And our friends were great. We were bathed in friends. They would come in and behave as if nothing had happened."

He continues, "It wasn't easy. Her arm was in a brace. Her foot was in a brace, so we're talking about a very long time when her big exercise was to walk to the kitchen and back. I remember her working each finger, moving her arm back and forth with beads of sweat breaking out on her forehead.

"She described her condition vividly. She felt like a canary who'd suddenly awakened with the body of an elephant and no concept of how to move because the brain cells that used to move her fingers were dead and gone and the brain cells next door had to learn that task. The experience put an enormous value on our marriage."

Together and separately, they had faced three years of challenge when they were faced with a new one. Casey was just getting used to her new body when Danson was cast in "Cheers" and the series whisked him into a different, high-powered level of show business.

"It was big confrontation for the limelight to be thrown our way after we'd kind of been licking our wounds for three years together in our own quiet way," he says thoughtfully. "That was tricky. We'd had a lot of emotional problems on the back burner."

"A quick-change situation like this is difficult for people who are well and working. But here was a case of a woman who had been successful in her own right — Casey was an environmental designer, a space planner when we married. When she came West with me, we worked together, organized the Actors' Institute — I taught, she managed."

"But at the point when 'Cheers' started, 90 percent of her life was devoted still to getting her body together and working at being a mother. My situation seemed threatening."

The Dansons went into

Continued ...

'Her progress was terribly slow'

therapy with a bright lady who was able to translate what they were trying to say to each other because, with the best intentions, their communication had "gone funny." To have the man you love on the verge of becoming a star would be difficult for any lady. Casey wanted him to succeed of course, but what would that success do to her?

Well, the therapy worked. Ted Danson may spell s-e-x-y r-o-g-u-e to his TV audience, but his love for her is strong and sure and his life is rooted in his family. Casey is a well person. She still works out and her life is different than it was, but it's no longer a tragedy.

"It is," he says, "a triumph. She was just about ready to get back into a career outside the house when we decided to have another baby, Alexis, now a year and a half old. This time we adopted. Not to put us and not to put her body through any further trauma."

"So now Casey has another child to care for plus the job of virtually rebuilding our lovely old Spanish house that dates back to about '37. It is a huge 10-month job, all to Casey's design. She's very very talented, has good understanding of space, and is powerful about getting things done. There is an indoor swimming pool coming into being, a 40-foot dance studio, both of which will be used by all of us."

Ted is a humble sort of guy and he's a little embarrassed about the indoor swimming pool, which is really a must for Casey and will be wonderful for all of them.

Ditto the dance and exercise room. At Carnegie Tech where he trained for acting, he had classes in movement and dance and where he finds that basketball, which he played at prep school, is no longer his sport, dancing is great for an actor who needs to have ease of motion.

Besides, why shouldn't his family have the advantages? "Cheers" is steady work, the ratings are high, the contract is firm and the series is being sold for syndication. Once it's over, he would like to have choices.

He loves filming movies. He loves acting. "It's like business and art. You complain about their bumping heads, business and art, but when you can walk that line successfully, it's a great challenge to be in Tinseltown, have all the trappings and still walk a straight line. Not that I don't fall on my face frequently. But it's still a great challenge.

"The one who doesn't fall on her face is Casey. She gets clear about what's needed and it all starts materializing around her. I run around. She gets things done mystically. Like a producer. She's not only doing the house."

"Also, a friend of ours, Dan Fossy, and his wife and Casey and I have started a producing company. I know that in the beginning, she was feeling that she wanted to have something all her own; but this is her own."

"My career is definitely hers. I am who I am and where I am largely because of her. Absolutely and literally. Which doesn't take anything away from me. It's just that she clarified and kept me on the line, on the track. I'm pretty good at that now; but there were times..."

The marvelous Danson face glows as he talks about his wife. The man has bones and his eyes are brilliant. They met during est (motivational workshops founded by Werner Erhard).

He says, "I remember thinking that if I were to be hit by a truck, right now, my last thought would be, 'Damn it! I haven't done it. What am I waiting for?' And then, at this seminar, I met Casey. One night I asked her to have coffee afterwards and we were never apart from then on. Nine months later we were married."

"It was the first time I can consciously remember choosing to do something and knowing it was right, that it would work out."

He and Casey were married in '78 and came to Los Angeles. Six months later, he landed the part of the murdered cop in the film, "The Onion Field," an experience that decided him definitely on acting as a career.

The boy who'd grown up in Ponderosa country outside Flagstaff, Ariz. (his dad was director of the Museum and Research Center), who'd played cowboys and Indians with the real Indians who were his friends, had had many career fantasies.

"At Stanford, it was strictly major of the week. One week I'd think about being a political scientist, the next week a Latin American economist. I also thought of being a diplomat. I guess I was aiming in the right direction... diplomat/actor. They have something in common."

In his sophomore year, he took part in a Bertolt Brecht play which piqued his interest enough so that he did consider acting. As a star, he had his teeth fixed. "As a kid I had teeth that looked as if I'd swallowed a hand grenade. They were every whichway but loose."

Ted Danson of "Cheers" stands with actress Shelley Long. She plays a teaching assistant on the show.

Then I decided to transfer to Carnegie Tech where they had a renowned drama department, and then I thought, 'I'll go to L.A. and do a TV series and movies.'"

He gives you a winning grin. From the moment "Cheers" hit the tube and he and Shelley Long started their romantic sparring, Ted Danson has been a sex symbol. That was something he hadn't planned. It was a major surprise. "That's not me, that's the part," he explains.

"That's how Sam Malone is written. If the public thinks I'm sexy, that's a compliment to my acting. I've also played some misunderstood, misguided, unpleasant characters. The actor's job is to have compassion for everyone. That's what's great about acting to me, it's kind of a right course for learning a lot. I love actors."

"Celebrity is another thing. My wife has pointed out that celebrities are no different from other people unless they can do something with that 'celebrityness' that is worthwhile. You have to use all that energy that's coming your way to do something purposeful."

With his own mantle of differentness, Ted Danson is going to work to keep oil wells from being drilled in the Palisades area of Los Angeles and hopefully all along the California coast.

He's also on the board of Futures for Children which works with American Indian kids. "It's a good group. A national non-profit organization," he explains,

"that works with American Indian children in New Mexico and Arizona as well as in Bolivia and Columbia. You can sponsor children for $300 a year. All but 8 percent of that money goes for books, shoes, clothing, whatever is needed to stay in school."

He continues, "One of the best aspects of the program is that they go into a community and ask them, 'What is it you think you need? We'll show you how to do it.' For the most part, those making those decisions are Indians who have been educated and now have gone back to the reservation."

"In Bolivia and Columbia, the problem is more immediate: getting food on the table. In this country the problem is learning to live in two worlds."

He explains, "Their families have lived on these lands for thousands of years. They have traditional and cultural ties; but in order to obtain an education they used to have to send their kids to Flagstaff or Winslow, some anglo town which meant not living with their families and not being connected to their religion. So there was a feeling of insecurity, of being transplanted."

"A friend of mine with whom I used to play grew up to be on the Hopi Tribal Council; he got me in touch with these people, so for me it is a wonderful full circle. These were my buddies; it's a treat to work with them."

Ted Danson is obviously much more than a TV star. He's a man with compassion and depth. ■

Oh, nuts!

The peanut is just starting to emerge from its shell

By Bonnie Mandoe

I use nuts lavishly in my cooking and baking — for protein, for flavor and for the unique crunch they provide. Anyone who has eaten pesto or marzipan or a nut torte can testify to another important attribute of nuts — they're rich. The best nuts to eat, nutritionally speaking, are almonds. Their oil content is proportionately lower than that of Brazil nuts, or coconut, for example, and they are rich in calcium, phosphorus and iron.

Because all nuts tend to be rich in oil, it is essential to store them properly to prevent rancidity. Nuts keep best in their shells. Once shelled, they are best stored airtight in the refrigerator or freezer, where they will last one or two years.

Walnuts are an all-time American favorite. They're delicious mixed in equal proportion with raisins and eaten as a snack, and they are also fabulous sautéed in butter and sprinkled over vegetables, grains, chicken and omelets.

Peanuts — which, of course, are not really nuts — are much more than half the filling in peanut-butter-and-jelly sandwiches. The growing popularity of Indonesian and Thai cuisine is bringing the peanut out of its shell into international fame. Just try the Peanut Sauce, below, over vegetables.

Cashews, the only variety of nut that does not add crunch to baked goods (they become soft), are nonetheless wonderful when roasted. To roast nuts, place them in a single layer on a baking sheet, and bake about 20 minutes at 325F. You may bake them longer, but do check frequently. They become crunchy when cool.

See how the recipes below use nuts at breakfast and dinner as well as at dessert time. You'll be surprised at the meatiness of the Walnut Squares, and pleased to find how easily you can candy nuts. Nicely wrapped, Candied Walnuts make a beautiful gift.

WALNUT SQUARES
1 cup cooked brown rice

2 cups grated Cheddar cheese
1/2 cup wheat germ
1/2 cup bread crumbs
1 cup finely chopped walnuts
1 cup chopped mushrooms
1 chopped onion
1/2 cup grated carrot
1/2 cup minced green pepper
5 beaten eggs
2 tablespoons soy sauce
2 tablespoons Dijon-type mustard
1/2 teaspoon black pepper
1/2 teaspoon sage
1/2 teaspoon marjoram or basil
1/2 teaspoon thyme

Combine first nine ingredients in mixing bowl. Add remaining ingredients and mix well. Press the mixture into a buttered 9-inch square baking pan. Bake 55 minutes in a preheated 350F oven. When done, smother with sautéed mushrooms and serve immediately.
Serves 9.

FETTUCCHINE AL PESTO

1/2 cup melted butter or olive oil
2 cloves garlic
3 cups fresh basil leaves
1/2 cup Parmesan cheese
1/2 cup pine nuts
4 quarts salted water, boiling
8 ounces fettuccine noodles
1/2 cup half and half
Parmesan cheese to pass at table

Make the pesto by blenderizing melted butter or olive oil, garlic, basil and the 1/2 cup of Parmesan. When smooth, add the pine nuts and blenderize again. Set aside.

Bring the salted water to a boil and add noodles. Cook until pasta is al dente, tender yet firm. Drain through a colander and cover pasta while you quickly heat the half and half in a wok or large flameproof bowl.

Whisk the pesto into the half and half, then add the cooked pasta. Toss well and serve immediately with the Parmesan.
Serves 4-6.

These nut and butter cookies make a delicious lunchbox dessert.

NUTMILK

To make nutmilk, blenderize 1 cup shelled nuts with 3 1/2 cups water for about three minutes, then strain. Return the nutmilk to a clean blender and add a dash of salt and/or a dab of honey. This milk may be used to replace dairy milk in recipes or for table use.
Makes about 1 quart.

NUTWOG

2 cups milk or nutmilk
1/2 cup raw, unsalted cashew nuts
1/4 cup honey
1 egg
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
1 tablespoon rum (optional)

Blenderize all ingredients thoroughly. Serve cold.

PEANUT SAUCE

4 tablespoons peanut butter (creamy)
1/4 cup salad oil
2 tablespoons soy sauce
2 tablespoons honey
4 teaspoons white vinegar
1 teaspoon sesame oil (optional)
2 tablespoons minced green onion (optional)
1/2 teaspoon cayenne (or to taste)

Combine peanut butter and salad oil with wooden spoon until creamy, then add the remaining ingredients. Serve the sauce at room temperature over hot vegetables, rice or chicken. Sprinkle everything with roasted peanuts, if desired.

Serves 4.

CANDIED WALNUTS

1 cup firmly packed brown sugar
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 teaspoon grated lemon peel
3 cups walnut halves

In a medium pan, combine the sugar, salt, cinnamon and milk. Stir to blend, then cook, stirring occasionally, until the mixture reaches 236 degrees on a candy thermometer.

Remove from heat and stir in the vanilla, lemon peel and walnuts. Stir until the mixture begins to lose its gloss and a coating forms on the nuts. Now, turn the mixture out onto brown paper and separate the nuts using two forks. Cool completely. Store airtight.
Makes 3 cups.

NUT AND BUTTER COOKIES

1/2 cup butter, at room temperature
2 tablespoons honey

1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1/4 cup whole-wheat pastry flour
1/2 cup ground walnuts
1 teaspoon no-aluminum baking powder
strawberry preserves

Cream the butter and honey together and add the vanilla. Combine dry ingredients and add to creamed mixture. Mix the dough well and form small balls of it.

Flatten the balls slightly and make an indentation in the center of each. Bake 12-15 minutes at 400 degrees on ungreased cookie sheets; then remove from oven and fill the indentations with the strawberry preserves while the cookies are still warm. Cool on a rack.
Makes 3 dozen.

Chiang Jiang

By Sondra Astor Stave

There have been Chinese restaurants in Manchester for as long as I can remember, but the food, in general, has been more representative of Canton, Conn., or Ohio than the Canton in China. However, I am delighted to report, this is no longer the case. The new Chiang Jiang restaurant, (the name means long river) at 822-824 Main St., serves food that is thoroughly authentic and thoroughly enjoyable.

There is a large counter for takeout orders as one enters. Behind it is the gleaming stainless-steel kitchen. Only restaurants with nothing to hide can afford to be so public. The dining room is divided into front and rear areas, avoiding a cavernous look. The decor is stereotypical Chinese, with lantern fixtures and classical paintings on the wall.

But the feeling most evident is one of newness and cleanliness. Especially gratifying is the attention of the serving staff, including the female maitre d' who checked almost everything coming from the kitchen to assure that it was being presented properly.

The menu is an eclectic one, offering some dishes from the north and some from the south, some from Canton. There are also some of the spicier offerings that first appeared in Szechuan province. Hot and sour soup from the latter region is a good way to begin. The well-seasoned broth holds an assortment of vegetables and is not burdened by an excess of cornstarch thickener. A bit more vinegar, however, would have made it even better.

Dumplings are the pride of the Beijing and the fried ones served here are a fair representation. The accompanying sauce added tiny pieces of ginger to the soy and pepper-oil mix, and this addition was most pleasant.

Even better were the shao-my, here called dim sum. The basket-shaped dough was thin and light and the ground pork filling was well seasoned.

Hot and spicy pork was an excellent entrée selection. The pork slices were expertly prepared so that the meat achieved that particular tenderness found only in Chinese preparations or French haute cuisine. The accompanying vegetables maintained their crunch. Again, the cook showed restraint with the thickener.

Chicken with hot garlic sauce was red starred to denote hot and spicy. While it was piquant, it was hardly incendiary. But this should not be taken as criticism of the fine blending of spices bestowed on the chicken pieces, yet another example of the chef's skill in preparing sauces.

The house special duck is roasted to a crisp. Rather than being served over lettuce as the menu suggested, it came atop a melange of vegetables including baby ears of corn, discs of waterchestnut and florets of broccoli. The duck skin was indeed as crisp as one could wish and the flesh near fatless.

However, this led to a bit of dryness in the meat, making the dish somewhat less enjoyable than it might have been. The menu is quite wide and includes Cantonese, Mandarin and Szechuan specialties as well as chow meins, lo meins and curried dishes. Meals may be ordered by the dish or as family dinners or combination plates.

Appetizers range from $1.50 to $5, with a pupu platter costing $10.50. Main dishes begin at $6 and top off at $10. Combination platters are in the $4 to $6 range. Family dinners cost between $6 and $9 per person. The restaurant's liquor license is pending. In the meantime, one may bring wine or beer from home.

It is evident that everyone connected with Chiang Jiang is determined that the restaurant succeed. To this end, the staff has made carefully prepared food and caring service. From the steady stream of customers I saw coming and going on a recent Sunday, that success seems assured. ■

CHRISTA'S CHALLENGE

Christa McAuliffe: teacher, astronaut, American hero. Something wonderful glowed deep within her.

She was a dreamer whose passion was to reach for the stars. Her imagination knew no boundaries.

Today, our future dreams can be found in America's classrooms. It was in the classroom that Christa taught and where she hoped her achievements would one day inspire her students to return — as teachers.

That is why the American Federation of Teachers has established a special fund entitled "Christa's Challenge."

This education and scholarship fund will help encourage more of our nation's brightest students to dedicate their lives to the challenge Christa loved most — teaching.

All contributions to this fund will go directly for scholarships and grants.

Help keep Christa's dream alive. Send your tax-deductible contribution to Christa's Challenge at the address on the coupon at right.
