Good chance today

Today: Warm and humid with a 60 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms. High in the mid-80s. Tonight: Continued warm and humid with a 60 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms, low near 70. Sunday: Mostly cloudy and not as warm with a 40 percent chance of showers. High near 80. Today's weather picture was drawn by Julie Meiser of Carriage Drive, who attends Martin School.

Heat wave and drought continue to plague South

By Deborah Zobenko
The Associated Press

An Agriculture Department hot line for drought-plagued farmers was flooded with calls on its first day of operation Friday and more hay headed south to feed starving livestock, but one state agriculture official said federal programs are only a "band-aid." Parts of South Carolina, Virginia and Florida have been declared disaster areas because of the weeks-long drought, and a dozen Tennessee counties have asked for federal aid. More than a million chickens have died in the Southern heat. Some market officials linked the drought to a rise in poultry prices.

Damage estimates from the sizzling weather exceed $1.6 billion and heat has been blamed for 44 deaths since July 1: 19 in Georgia; four each in North Carolina, Missouri, Indiana and Illinois; two each in Alabama, Kentucky and South Carolina and one each in Virginia, Louisiana and Michigan.

Voluntary hay donations continued throughout the South, with shipments arriving in Georgia and the Florida Panhandle. One bale had a special meaning for Henry Sewell.

Connecticut forecast

West Coastal and East Coastal: Warm and humid today with a 60 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms. High 80 to 85. Continued warm and humid tonight with a 60 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms. Low near 70. Mostly cloudy Sunday with a 50 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms. High in the lower 80s.

Northwest Hills: Warm and humid today with a 60 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms. High in the mid-80s. Continued warm and humid tonight with a 60 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms. Low 65 to 70. Mostly cloudy and not as warm Sunday with a 40 percent chance of showers. High 75 to 80.

Across the Nation

A cold front brought strong thunderstorms to parts of the Great Lakes on Friday, while scattered showers and thunderstorms rained on sections of the Southeast.

Heavy thunderstorms occurred over southwest lower Michigan, northern Indiana and southern Lake Michigan.

Traverse City, Mich., received nearly 2 inches of rain in a six-hour period.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms, some heavy, were found across portions of the Carolinas, the Dakotas, Georgia, Florida and the lower Gulf Coast region. A few showers and thunderstorms also occurred from the Great Basin into the northern Rockies, and across sections of western Kansas, the Northeast and the Middle Atlantic states.

Fair weather was reported from the western Great Lakes across the upper Mississippi Valley into the northern Plains, and from Oklahoma and Arkansas across the southern Plains, the Southwest and southern California.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 53 degrees at Crescent City, Calif., to 105 degrees at Wichita Falls, Texas. The nation's morning low was 47 degrees at Gannon, Colo. The forecast for Saturday called for scattered showers and thunderstorms from New England and New York across Pennsylvania, the lower Great Lakes, the Ohio Valley, the Middle Atlantic states and the eastern Tennessee Valley through the Southeast and Florida. A few showers and thunderstorms should also occur from the northern half of the Mississippi Valley and the Plains across the central and northern Rockies through the northern intermountain region.

Today in history

In 1964, Teamsters president Jimmy Hoffa was convicted along with six others of fraud and conspiracy in the handling of a union pension fund.

Almanac

Today is Saturday, July 26th, the 207th day of 1986. There are 158 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: On July 26th, 1986, U.S. Attorney General Charles J. Bonaparte issued an order creating an investigative agency within the Department of Justice. The agency later became known as the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

On this date: In 1775, Benjamin Franklin became postmaster-general. In 1788, New York became the eleventh state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

In 1856, playwright George Bernard Shaw was born. In 1947, President Harry Truman signed the National Security Act, which consolidated the Defense Department and created the National Security Council.

In 1952, Argentina's first lady, Eva Peron, died of cancer at the age of 33.

In 1953, Fidel Castro began his revolution against Fulgencio Batista with an unsuccessful attack on an army barracks in eastern Cuba. (Castro finally succeeded in ousting Batista in 1959.)

In 1958, Britain's Queen Elizabeth proclaimed her son, Charles, the Prince of Wales. In 1964, Teamsters president Jimmy Hoffa and six others were accused of fraud and conspiracy in the handling of a union pension fund. Ten years ago: In a break with tradition, Republican presidential candidate Ronald Reagan announced his choice of a running-mate: Sen. Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania, a liberal Republican.

Five years ago: CIA Director William Casey asked the Senate Intelligence Committee to allow him to appear at a committee hearing as soon as possible to try to dispel controversy over his tenure.

One year ago: With the United States and Britain abstaining, the U.N. Security Council adopted a resolution calling for worldwide voluntary sanctions to force South Africa to dismantle apartheid.

Today's Birthdays: Actor Jason Robards Junior is 64. Movie director Blake Edwards is 64. Movie director Stanley Kubrick is 58. Rock star Mick Jagger is 43. Actress Susan George is 36. Tennis player Vitas Gerulaitis is 32.

A thought for the day: In his farewell address, President Dwight D. Eisenhower said, "We must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists..."

North Elm plan wins backing of building panel

By John Mitchell
Herald Reporter

The town Building Committee Friday approved preliminary plans for a $1.3 million housing complex for elderly people on North Elm Street, putting the question of town bonding before the Board of Directors.

The plans for the 24 apartments are expected to be considered at the directors' August meeting for possible inclusion on the November ballot in the form of a referendum question.

Although each member of the Building Committee has voiced concerns about problems involved in undertaking the project, Friday's vote to approve the outline was unanimous.

"After we accept it, and it goes out to bid, then we're going to get involved with it," said Paul Phillips, the committee chairman.

The plans that he (architect Alan Larson) submitted are well thought-out," said Frank Pitts, a committee member. "The layout they're getting is good for the neighborhood."

Specifications call for six one-story buildings on the 1.8-acre site. The wood-framed apartments, to be set on concrete slabs, would feature gas-fired warm-air heating with ducts in the attic spaces.

If the proposal is put on the ballot, final planning for the project — intended to add to the town's stock of unsubsidized housing especially for the elderly — could begin three months after the approval.

"We want to have control of the whole thing," Building Committee member Robert Samuelson said at Friday's special meeting. "That's the thing."

Samuelson has openly criticized the proposal in the past. He is opposed to specifications that would make most bathrooms and kitchens interior rooms, saying that the design could eventually bring mildew and would also make repairing pipes more difficult.

Phillips said that by voting on the plan, the committee wasn't tying itself down to anything. "We can change anything we want," he said.

"We can address the plans once the issue of the referendum is settled," said Joel Mrosek, who recently joined the panel. He said that the work could be done for the allotted amount, and added that he wanted to find out what the rent on the apartments was going to be.

"We shouldn't be looking at the building without looking at the cost," he said.

Members agreed that the price would enable them to better determine what needed amenities and room sizes.

The rental costs have not yet been made public by town Director Peter DeLuca, who is overseeing the project for the Board of Directors.

Located on North Elm Street was given to the town by the estate of Wilfred Crockett with the stipulation that it either be used for a housing project like the one under study or for a park.

The land becomes the property of the American Cancer Society if neither of those venues is taken.

Committee to 'clerk' IOH pool

The chairman of the Manchester Building Committee said Friday that the group plans to help supervise the building of a special pool for the handicapped at Manchester High School.

Committee Chairman Paul Phillips said committee members will serve as a "clerk of the works" for the project, taking on the responsibility of seeing that the general contractor follows the specifics of the design.

Construction could begin before school starts in September, officials have said.

The plans for the project — which is expected to cost $350,000 — were approved by the committee at a special meeting Friday evening.

"I feel confident with what they're doing," said committee member Robert Samuelson. "The plans make a lot of sense."

The 24-by-42-foot pool, which will be about one-third the size of the high school's existing pool, will be used as a wading pool to teach handicapped people to swim.

Instructors of the Handicapped, the non-profit organization in charge of the project, has been raising money and making plans to build the pool for almost 20 years.

Eight contractors were sent invitations to bid.

Manchester delegates recall '82, take in convention

By George Lovins
Herald Reporter

HARTFORD — The Republican Party's 1982 state convention is on the minds of many party members attending the one this year at the Hartford Civic Center, a number of Manchester delegates said Friday night.

In that year, front-runner Richard Bozuto lost out when one of his opponents — Gerald Labriola, who, like Bozuto is running again this year — threw his support to Lewis Rome in exchange for the sixth spot on the Rome ticket.

Bozuto is again considered the front-runner this year, and Manchester delegate Jonathan Mercer said many Bozuto backers still have hard feelings toward Labriola. If the convention extends beyond the first and second ballots Saturday and Bozuto delegates begin to switch their support, they will flock to Julie Belaga — not Labriola, he said.

Mercer, a Belaga supporter, countered most predictions, saying Belaga may not just get the support of enough delegates to force a September primary, but could take the nomination by the time the convention ends.

Police Roundup

A Hartford man was hit by a car late Friday morning as he was crossing Hartford Road near Pine Street, police reported.

Ronald Campbell, 50, of 39 Deerfield Ave., Hartford, was brought to Manchester Memorial Hospital after the accident, where he was treated for a leg fracture and contusions before being discharged to Manchester.

According to police, Campbell was struck by a 1984 Chevrolet driven by Ashok Kumar, 39, of 39 Deepwood Dr., Manchester at about 11:12 a.m. Friday.

Police said Kumar stopped to make sure Campbell was OK after the accident. They had no further details.

A Manchester man was arrested Friday on a warrant charging him in connection with injuries a 6-year-old sustained on July 4, police said.

Senkow bargaining 'on hold'

By John F. Kirch
Herald Reporter

The town administration and the union that represents former Town Engineer Walter Senkow are "very close" to resolving the controversy surrounding the May 13 firing of the engineer, Assistant Town Manager Steven R. Werber said Friday.

Werber said the town and union have been negotiating all week and could have a written agreement by early next week.

"The parties are talking a settlement that will be beneficial to both," Werber said.

He said the negotiations started Monday, when the town and officials of Civil Service Employees Affiliates Inc., the union that represents Senkow and about 60 lower-management town employees, met with Cathy Foley, assistant labor agent for the State Board of Labor Relations.

Foley had called the meeting to gather information on two complaints filed with the labor board by CSEA. Discussions at that meeting prompted the negotiations, Werber said.

When asked if Senkow would get his job back, Werber said he had no further details. CSEA officials could not be reached for comment.

The union has been fighting for Senkow's reinstatement with back pay ever since the engineer was fired. Senkow, who was the town's chief engineer for 18 years, was discharged for sexually harassing a female co-worker, officials said.

Police records show that Senkow admitted to placing pornographic material on the woman's desk, but said he did so only to cheer her up. He eventually paid a fine after being charged with an infraction for creating a public disturbance.

To challenge Senkow's firing, the union was following a three-step grievance procedure that is outlined in a labor contract with the town. In June, CSEA took the final step of that procedure by asking the state Board of Mediation and Arbitration to hear the case.

The town, which has claimed that the grievance procedure did not apply because the contract does not cover employee termination or discipline, sought an injunction in Hartford Superior Court to block the arbitration board from hearing the case.

The court had scheduled a hearing for Thursday, but canceled it in light of the negotiations. "All legal and administrative action that can take place are on hold," Werber said.

Working for royalty

The American who seated Queen Elizabeth at the royal wedding reception of Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson in London wasn't a guest; he was waiting on tables.

Steve Nolan, a 29-year-old DePaul University junior in London on a student program, was working as a caterer at Claridge's Hotel on Wednesday for the reception honoring the newlywed Duke and Duchess of York.

"It was just like a wedding reception back home, except I guess there were a lot of famous names you could drop," he said Thursday.

Nolan said he served the Queen Mother's table, held Queen Elizabeth's chair as she was seated, and served several rounds of drinks. First lady Nancy Reagan said hello when she learned he was an American, he said.

Asked if he had been impressed with the array of royalty, Nolan said: "No, not really."

Sedlak had been an admirer of Mandlikova for eight years and frequently followed her on the women's tennis circuit.

The official CTK news agency said Mandlikova opted to practice for Saturday's Federation Cup semifinals match against Argentina instead of attending the wedding banquet.

Hana Mandlikova, the world's third-ranked woman tennis player, took a break from training in Prague, Czechoslovakia, Friday to marry a longtime admirer in a brief ceremony at Prague's old town hall.

The marriage of Mandlikova, 24, and Jan Sedlak surprised everybody. "They suddenly decided to do it," said the bride's father, Vilem Mandlik, who said he learned of their plans Thursday.

Sedlak left Czechoslovakia at age 15 in 1968 to live with his mother in Australia and resides in the Netherlands, where Mandlikova trains with Betty Stove, the former Dutch star.

The official CTK news agency said Mandlikova opted to practice for Saturday's Federation Cup semifinals match against Argentina instead of attending the wedding banquet.

Busting JFK

John F. Kennedy Jr. announced the start of a nationwide search Friday for an artist to make a memorial to his late father to stand on the grounds of the Statehouse.

"My family is deeply honored by this interest," Kennedy, 26, told a news conference on the building's western staircase, near where the JFK memorial will stand.

Artists may submit slides of recent works Sept. 9, and 10 to 15 semifinalists will be asked to submit proposals. Three finalists will be chosen by February to make scale models of their proposals.

The project could cost up to $500,000, to be raised by private donations, and the commission hopes to unveil the winning piece May 29, 1987, which would have been the slain president's 70th birthday.

Hope headlines Penn

Comedian Bob Hope headlined Penn State's "Century of Excellence" in intercollegiate football, quipping that Coach Joe Paterno didn't enjoy his honeymoon until he studied the film.

Hope was joined by former All-American tackle Mike Reid, who gave up pro football with the Cincinnati Bengals to concentrate on music and won a Grammy award in 1983 for writing the Ronnie Millsap hit "Stranger In My House."

REHEARSAL TIME

Fourteen-year-old violinist Mi Dori and conductor Leonard Bernstein rehearse this week at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., for a concert tonight.

Police used several types of vehicles to search for the Seubert children — including helicopters, motorcycles, and these three-wheeled dirt bikes, which made the tough terrain easier to maneuver through.

Manchester Police Capt. Robert Guliano, who was in charge of the operation, talks with the media during a news conference Friday.

State troopers from New Hampshire and Kentucky who happened to be training for canine patrol in Connecticut offered their services and bloodhounds for the manhunt, then had to rest Friday.

After the search ended happily, Linda Seubert held her daughter, Lisa-Marie, 2, while son John, 5, stood with his father, Jerry Seubert. "It's unbelievable how people pull together," the relieved mother said. She called her son "tough."

A tough search produces results

When 5-year-old John Seubert called out from the thick underbrush to Michael Derewianka late Friday morning, he put an end to what police Capt. Robert Guliano called the largest search he has seen in his 20 years with the Manchester Police Department.

John and his 2-year-old sister, Lisa Marie, had been missing since Thursday afternoon, when they went into the woods behind their aunt's house on Kimberly Drive. The two, along with their mother, Linda, were visiting from Elizabeth, N.J.

By nightfall, between 400 and 500 volunteers from 14 different towns helped look for the two children. With sticks, off-road vehicles and flashlights, they tramped through the dense woods near Case Mountain in southeastern Manchester. Police used bloodhounds, horses, divers, motorcycles and helicopters in their effort to reunite the children with their mother and father. The two had been missing for nearly 24 hours when they were discovered by Derewianka about a mile from their aunt's home, just off Tonica Springs Trail.

The news of their discovery brought tears to the eyes of many of the searchers — including police.

One of the many volunteer search parties makes its way down Sharon Street Thursday evening. Police estimated that about 450 people offered help in the search for the children.

Volunteer Larry Mirabile of East Hartford takes a break Friday morning during the long wait to get the search started again. The children were found safely around 11:30 a.m.

Reagan administration trims economic predictions for '86

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, in a preliminary review of the economy at mid-year, has trimmed its growth estimate for 1986 but substantially boosted projections for economic activity next year, officials said Friday.

The administration's forecast, which will be revised before being issued, has reduced its projection for growth this year, as measured by the gross national product, to 2.6 percent, down from a 3.4 percent forecast last month. The obvious reason they are doing this is to make the budget numbers look better."

Evans said he was forecasting the economy in 1987 would grow at a rate of just 1.7 percent. Evans said his projection, which is close to those of many other private analysts, would add around $45 billion to the 1987 budget deficit above the administration's figures.

The administration's estimates, first reported in The New York Times, are only preliminary and were made before the government released its new GNP estimate on Tuesday, officials at the Office of Management and Budget said.

One official, who spoke on condition that she not be named, said the new GNP data, which showed the economy growing at a 1.1 percent rate from April through June, likely will force changes in percentage terms, will be formally released in early August.

But private economists said the administration probably will use the weaker April-June GNP figure to bolster its case that growth, in percentage terms, will be stronger in the months ahead because the economy is starting from a lower base.

OMB Director James Miller has used that line of reasoning in recent comments in which he has said the administration's August review of the budget would show a record deficit for this year, perhaps as high as $20 billion, but faster economic growth in the future.

Miller has said the administration intends to hit the deficit target established in the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law, which calls for a deficit of $144 billion in the 1987 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

Home sales drop in June

WASHINGTON — The sales pace of existing homes dropped slightly last month while the median price of a single-family home declined $900, the National Association of Realtors said Friday.

The trade group blamed a slight increase in mortgage interest rates for the 1.2 percent decline in the seasonally adjusted annual rate of home sales to 3.41 million units. That compared to 3.45 million units in May.

The actual number of single-family homes sold last month — 339,000 — was slightly higher than the 330,000 sold in May. But the increase was not enough to produce a higher rate after being adjusted for traditional seasonal variations, the Realtors said.

The slower sales pace was accompanied by a $900 decrease — to $82,300 — in the median price of an existing home between May and June.

Association economists said the drop was a market correction following the $3,000 jump between April and May to $83,200. The economists noted that the June median price was 7.6 percent higher than the $76,500 median recorded in June, 1985.

The annualized sales rate for June was 1.1 percent higher than the pace recorded in June, 1985. The figure projects how many homes would be sold in the year if the monthly pace, adjusted for seasonal up and downs, continued for 12 months.

Average interest rates for completed home sales increased from 10.15 percent in May to 10.21 percent in June, according to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Despite the June drop, home sales were up 12.5 percent during the first six months of the year.

Female poverty a myth

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — The popular beliefs that women make up an increasing proportion of the nation's poor and that most poor children are in female-headed households are myths, an economist studying Census Bureau figures said Friday.

After a surge of women fell below the poverty level in the 1960s, the percentage of women among the poor has remained fairly constant at around 63 percent from 1969 to 1984, according to Victor Fuchs of Stanford University.

"Between 1979 and 1984, poverty rates rose for both women and men, but they rose relatively more rapidly for men. So the percentage of the adult poor who are women actually went down," Fuchs said.

He attributed the recent trend to better working conditions for women, including a sharp rise in the ratio of hourly earnings for women compared with men, and a smaller increase in unemployment for women than for men.

The rise in overall poverty rates occurred for both blacks and whites but the percentage of adult poor who are women is much higher for blacks than for whites, and has been for a long time, he said.

Previously, he served seven years as a volunteer with the Town Fire Department. That experience gives him a special perspective on the current political dispute between the town and the district that could lead to the merger of both departments.

Boland spoke against consolidation at two public meetings held earlier this year and is optimistic that the district — which has provided fire protection and sewer service for almost 100 years — can keep its independence.

For his part, Flaherty said he keeps out of politics.

Yet, Flaherty has little to enjoy volunteering.

"You got a little bit more freedom," said Boland.

For the Record

Raymond Soma, a Bolton Fire Department captain, made the remarks attributed to Fire Chief James Preece in a Herald story Friday.

The comments, in a story concerning the search for two children in Manchester, were incorrectly attributed to Preece because of a reporting error.

Legion breezes to an easy win

There have not been too many easy games for the pumice Manchester American Legion baseball team this summer, with an outside chance still of retaining its Zone Eight championship. The chance, however, is remote inasmuch as East Hartford and South Windsor have the inside track, each ahead of Manchester.

Manchester, 18-14-2 overall, winds up its regular season Monday against South Windsor at Larry Duprey Field at 6 p.m.

"This was the first breeze we've had in ages," said fifth-year coach Steve Armstrong. "We got all but one (on the 15-man roster) into the game," he added.

Key blows for Manchester in its big inning were a bases-clearing triple by Jon Roe to right center field and RBI singles by Jim Fogarty and Chris Ogden.

Dan Bontempo singled home one run in a two-run fifth inning and a double by seldom-used Karl Noone and RBI single from Rob Stanford capped the scoring for Manchester in the sixth stanza.

The game was called after six innings because of darkness.

Chris Helin was beneficiary of the hitting attack by Manchester.

He scattered six hits, struck out three and issued three walks. Fogarty and Ogden each had two hits for the locals.

"The first inning we had the same baserunning mistakes we had against Windsor (3-2 loss). We had two picked off and I was thinking 'here we go again.' But in the second inning we got things rolling," Armstrong cited.

Twins hold off Yankees in slugfest

NEW YORK — Gary Gaetti drove in five runs with two home runs, backing Neal Heaton to his first victory with Minnesota as the Twins beat New York 9-5 Friday night, ending the Yankees' three-game winning streak.

Minnesota sent 11 men to the plate in the second inning, scoring six runs. Gaetti hit a three-run home run and Kirby Puckett a two-run homer in the inning. Gaetti added a two-run home run in the seventh, giving him 21 hits this season.

Heaton, 4-9, held the Yankees scoreless until the sixth inning when they got two runs and chased the Twins lefty. Don Mattingly hit a solo homer in the ninth.

Heaton, who lost his first three decisions after being traded from Cleveland on June 29, gave up four hits, walked four and did not strike out a batter in 5-2 innings, leaving with a mildly strained neck. Keith Atherton finished for his ninth save, yielding three runs, including Dave Winfield's 15th homer.

The Twins got their big inning started with consecutive singles by Tom Brunansky and Randy Bush of rookie Scott Nielsen. On the second followed with a three-run home run left. Two outs later, Greg Gagne reached on a throwing error by shortstop Dale Berra.

Puckett then hit a two-run homer, also his 20th, and a single by Roy Smalley chased Nielsen. Consecutive singles off Berra by Kent Hrbek and Brunansky scored the sixth run of the inning.

Nielsen gave up six runs, three unearned, on five hits in his 2-3 innings. Nielsen, called up from the minors on July 4, had a 2-9 record and 1.69 ERA after pitching two starts. Over his last two starts, he has a 12-26 ERA.

The Twins added a run in the sixth on Smalley's sacrifice fly. At the bottom of the inning, the Yankees made it 7-2 on Mattingly's homer off the facing of Gaetti. Gaetti decked in right field and an RBI single by Butch Wynegar.

With one out in the Twins seventh, Mickey Hatcher singled and Gaetti homered for a 9-2 lead. The Yankees came back with another pair in the bottom of the inning on RBI singles by Winfield and pinch-hitter Dan Pasqua.

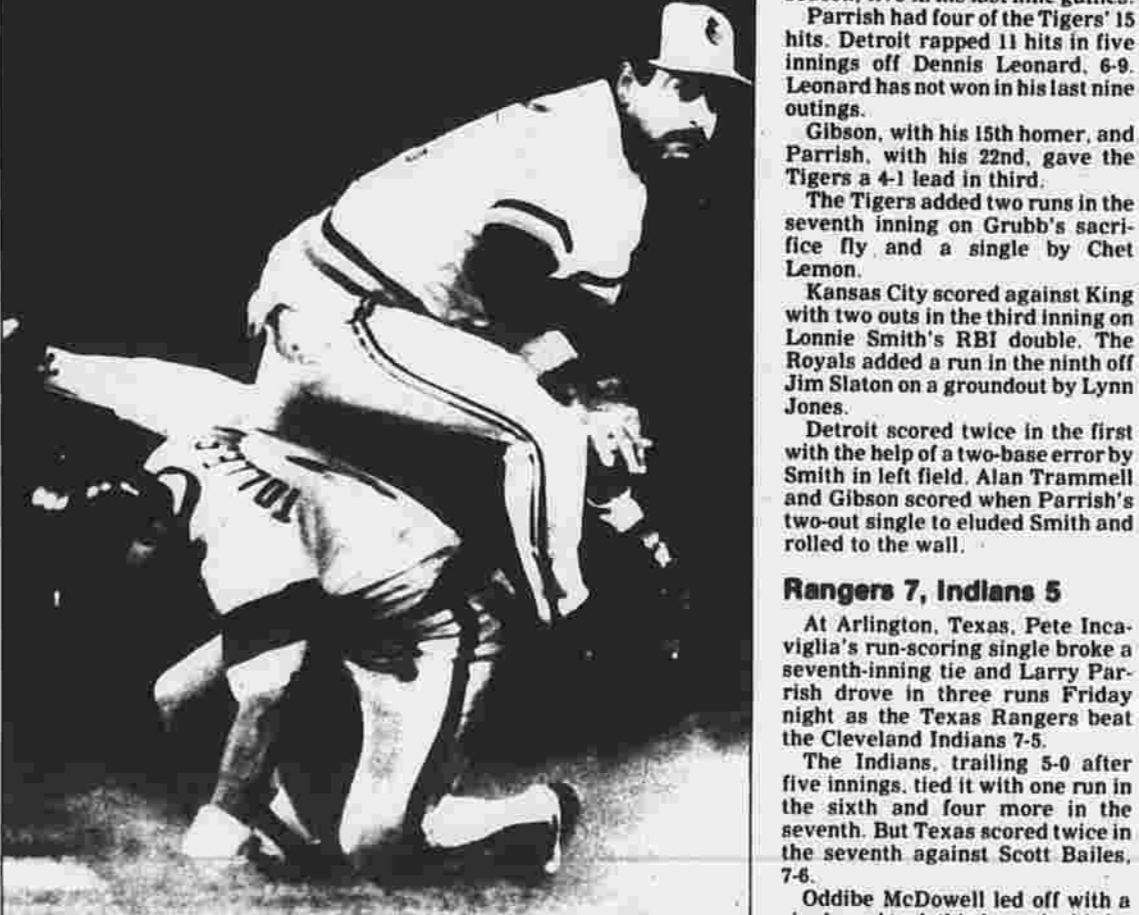

Winfield homered in the ninth.

Orioles 6, White Sox 2

At Baltimore, Fred Lynn and Rick Dempsey hit solo home runs Friday night as the Baltimore Orioles beat Chicago 6-2 and sent the White Sox to their fifth straight loss.

Mike Boddicker, 13-5, allowed one run on six hits in seven innings. Don Anse finished up for his major league-leading 20th and 21st wins.

Lynn broke a 1-1 tie in the sixth with his 17th home run of the season. Lynn connected on a 2-2 delivery from Allen. On the previous pitch, Lynn checked his swing and after an appeal by the White Sox, third base umpire Durwood Merrill ruled that Lynn had stepped in time.

Allen led the game after apparently pulling a muscle while warming up for the seventh inning.

Baltimore broke the game open with four runs in the eighth against Bob James. Dempsey led off the inning with his 11th homer. Ripken hit an RBI double, pinch-hitter Juan Beniquez singled home a run and Larry Sheets hit a sacrifice fly.

Gooden admits he has doubts

NEW YORK (AP) — After two months of lackluster performances and criticism, New York Mets pitcher Dwight Gooden appears to be believing his doubters.

"When they get a man on base in the first inning, I start thinking 'Oh no, not again,'" Gooden said in an interview published in Friday's editions of New York Newsday.

"I'm not embarrassed I don't feel like I let them (his teammates) down," Gooden said. "I've got a good record my ERA is under three. But I'm not happy with the way I pitched."

Gooden was scheduled to start against the Braves in Atlanta Friday night.

Last year, Gooden won the Cy Young award while leading the National League in wins with a 24-4 record, earned run average (1.53) strikeouts (283) and innings pitched (276 2/3).

He began this season with a 5-0 record and a 1.04 ERA but in his last 15 starts since May 6, Gooden has a record of 5-4 and an ERA of 4.03.

The numbers are not devastatingly bad, but uncharacteristic of his first two seasons.

The 21-year-old right-hander said neither he nor Manager Davey Johnson or pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre can determine the problem.

"I'm doing the same things now than I'm doing then (in the beginning of the season)," Gooden said. "And the results are the same."

"I know they (Johnson and Stottlemyre) are worried," Gooden said. "They can't figure it out either."

Davis, Bell star as Reds triumph

CINCINNATI — Eric Davis homered and scored three runs and Buddy Bell hit a three-run homer to lead the Cincinnati Reds to a 9-3 triumph over the Dodgers.

Keith Moreland had four hits, scored two runs and knocked in another to help the Cubs snap the Dodgers' four-game winning streak on Friday night, ending the Reds' five-game losing streak.

Davis had three hits in the game. His 15th home run of the year, in which he doubled in Cincinnati's three-run fourth as the Reds took a 4-2 lead. Eddie Milner led off the fourth with a home run.

Davis also grounded out in the eighth inning and drove in Cincinnati's run off Vance Law, who was making his third pitching appearance of the season.

Davis has now hit in 17 consecutive games, the longest current streak in the National League. It tied the previous season mark set by the Expos' Tim Lincecum.

Denny, 7-9, walked one batter and struck out four.

Wayne Krenchicki singled and Tim Wallach hit a home run in the second inning his 15th, giving the Expos a 2-0 lead.

Davis opened the second with a homer to left-center.

Phillies 4, Astros 2

At Philadelphia, Mike Schmidt hit his 22nd home run of the year and Charles Hudson allowed only one unearned run over six innings as the Philadelphia Phillies edged the Astros' seven-game winning streak with a 4-2 victory over Houston Friday night.

Schmidt leads the National League with 74 RBIs, and is now tied with Cincinnati's Dave Parker for the home run lead.

Cubs 8, Dodgers 3

At Chicago, Steve Trout limited Los Angeles to five hits over six innings and Jody Davis hit a two-run homer Friday, leading the Chicago Cubs to an 8-3 triumph over the Dodgers.

Keith Moreland had four hits, scored two runs and knocked in another to help the Cubs snap the Dodgers' four-game winning streak on Friday night, ending the Reds' five-game losing streak.

Trout, 4-3, won his first game since June 8 by not allowing a run while striking out four and walking two.

Giants 7, Pirates 3

At Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh first baseman Sid Bream committed two run-scoring errors during San Francisco's four-run third inning and Dan Gladden hit a two-run double in the fifth as the Giants defeated the Pirates 7-3 Friday night.

The victory snapped a three-game Giants' losing streak and was Pittsburgh's fourth straight loss.

Mets, Braves ppd.

At Atlanta, Friday night's National League game between the New York Mets and the Atlanta Braves was postponed by rain following a two-hour, 35-minute rain delay with New York leading 2-0 in the first inning.

The game will be made up Saturday as part of a two-night doubleheader beginning at 5:40 p.m. EDT.

Cardinals 3, Padres 2

At St. Louis, Bob Forsch scattered six hits while pitching into the eighth inning and Vince Coleman and Ozzie Smith singled home runs in the second as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the San Diego Padres 3-2 Friday night for their fourth straight victory.

Bombings, protests show racism is alive in Philly

WASHINGTON — The city that calls itself the birthplace of American liberty recently has found itself embroiled in racial violence, and one city official says the incidents prove "racism is still very much alive."

This week blacks have been forced from their homes after firebombings and threats. Korean immigrants have been the targets of angry protests because a group erected neighborhood signs in both Korean and English. Defense and prosecution lawyers reported that a white judge made racial comments about a black defendant.

The incidents come as the nation prepares to celebrate here next year the 200th anniversary of the U.S. Constitution, which guarantees equal treatment under the law for all.

"I think that these incidents provide sufficient evidence for us to understand that racism is still very much alive," Leah Gaskin White, executive director of the city's Human Relations Commission, said Friday.

"And although we're getting ready to celebrate the bicentennial of the Constitution, and we just had a glorious Statue of Liberty party, the reality is there are still people in this country who believe that human worth is determined by the color of one's skin."

Ironically, this city of 1.7 million people, the nation's fifth-largest, has a black mayor. Blacks also serve as City Council president, school superintendent, U.S. Attorney and head of the local FBI.

Mayor W. Wilson Goode has denounced the racist activity, which has prompted city and state investigations by federal, state and local officials.

In November, a state of emergency was declared in one southern Philadelphia neighborhood after noisy crowds of whites gathered outside homes where blacks had just moved in. One of the houses was firebombed.

"This city administration will not tolerate a demonstration of this kind without some swift response," White said.

Earlier this year, three young men were convicted on federal charges of setting fire to the house of a black family wanted to buy a house for five years. His home was destroyed Thursday by a firebomb.

"They will not make me move," said Griffiths, who told police he saw a white man running away from the house. "If I go somewhere else, I might run into the same thing."

Lottery fortune turns into nightmare for family

CHICAGO (AP) — Winning a $2.3 million lottery jackpot may sound like a dream come true, but it has become more like a nightmare for one family.

"What you have is a family that apparently had love and affection for each other and then all of a sudden comes something none of them expected in their wildest dreams to ruin it money," Cook County Judge Roger Kiley said Friday.

One day earlier, Kiley had denied a request from Julio Shelby to freeze the $115,000 lottery installment to be paid to his father, William Shelby Jr., on Aug. 20.

When William Shelby won the Illinois State Lottery Lotto grand prize three years earlier, it was worth $2.3 million paid out in 20 annual installments.

Julio Shelby, 29, contended in a lawsuit filed in April that he selected the winning numbers, and with his brother, sister and mother entered into an agreement with William Shelby to share the winnings, an agreement Julio Shelby says was not kept.

But Kiley admitted he couldn't quite contain himself during Thursday's hearing, calling out to family members after the decision.

"Throw the money away and get back the love you had before," Kiley said Friday. "He said it in Latin, but it's the same in any language."

Howser to undergo radiation treatment

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals said Friday that Manager Dick Howser will undergo about five weeks of radiation treatments for the cancerous tumor found in his brain earlier this week, but declined to provide detailed results of pathological tests.

The club released a statement saying that Dr. Charles Clough, the neurosurgeon who operated on Howser Tuesday at St. Luke's Hospital, reported the pathology studies confirmed findings of a malignant tumor in right field, glioma in the left frontal lobe of the brain.

Clough said after Tuesday's three-hour operation that only part of the golf-ball sized tumor could be removed, and doctors were awaiting test results before making a decision on treating the 50-year-old manager.

Dean Vogelgar, the team's vice president for public relations, said that details of what the pathology tests showed about the nature and severity of the tumor are "between Dr. Clough and the Howser family."

The team's statement said, however, that Clough "remains optimistic about Howser's response to treatment."

Radiation treatment to destroy the cancer cells will begin the first of next week, the Royals said. They said there will be treatments five times a week for approximately five weeks.

Howser's condition was upgraded Friday from fair to satisfactory, and the Royals said he was expected to be released from the hospital in about a week. He will continue the radiation treatments at St. Luke's as an outpatient.

The Royals said Howser and his family appreciated the tremendous support and prayers from people throughout the country. Vogelgar said that Howser, who led Kansas City to the World Series championship last year, has been receiving about 500 cards and letters a day all week.

Howser was moved from intensive care to a private room on Wednesday night and has been visiting with his wife, Nancy, and a few immediate family members and friends.

Vogelgar said he is very alert, has a positive attitude and has been following the team on its current road trip.

Mike Ferraro, who had been the team's third base coach, was named as interim manager for the rest of the year after Howser's brain tumor was discovered a week ago. Ferraro, who had a cancerous kidney removed in 1980 while he was manager of the Cleveland Indians, said he had not since about mid-May that Howser had become more quiet and less prone to kid around with the players.

In the two weeks before last week's All-Star game at Houston, where Howser managed the American League to a 3-2 victory over the National League, he had complained of headaches and a stiff neck. Associates also noticed occasional memory lapses and confusion.

Moodiness, memory loss, confusion

Trouble for Howser evident

Doug Tucker
The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nobody thought much about it at first, the quiet moodiness, the memory slips, the confusion.

After all, Dick Howser had his hands full with baseball. Not only was he the world champion Kansas City Royals in fourth place in the American League West, there was an All-Star Game approaching and he was the AL's manager.

But it wasn't the demands of the job or his disappointment with the team.

It was a brain tumor, growing silently and steadily to the size of a golf ball.

Doctors who operated on the 50-year-old Howser last Tuesday found it rooted in the left frontal lobe which controls memory and personality. They also found it to be malignant.

MIKE FERRARO, THE ROYALS' third base coach who has since been named interim manager, was probably the first person on the team to notice the change in his friend — one of the most popular figures in baseball.

"About the middle of May, I thought he was starting to be a little quiet," Ferraro said. "I didn't think too much about it then. But he wasn't kidding around with guys so much."

Then center fielder Willie Wilson noticed something, too.

"I thought it was funny that he started calling guys by name in situations when he didn't used to do that," he said. "If you got a hit or scored or something, he would always say, 'Good going' or 'Way to hustle,' or something like that. But then he started saying, 'Good going, Willie.' He was trying to memorize your name."

DOCTORS SAY THE TUMOR must have been there "for some time," though no one is sure exactly how long.

It may have been there last October during the tense days and nights of the Royals' seven-game conquests of Toronto and St. Louis in the playoffs and World Series. The night before the final two home runs and a double to beat the Blue Jays. The moment umpire Don Denkinger called Jorge Orta safe at first in the sixth game against the Cardinals.

About two weeks before the July 15 All-Star Game, Howser suffered persistent headaches and a "kink in the neck" to Ferraro.

"I told him, 'Dick, kinks in your neck don't last two weeks.'"

Kansas City Royals manager Dick Howser rubs his chin as he talks to reporters during the All-Star Game in Houston. There were signs at the All-Star Game of the brain tumor that has had its effect on Howser.

recalled Ferraro, who lost a kidney three years ago when a malignant tumor was discovered.

The Saturday before the All-Star Game, Howser told hitting coach Lee May the Royals would not take batting practice the next day.

"And then after the game he told the fellows, 'If you want to hit tomorrow, it will be at 11:30.'"

Ferraro said. "Lee said, 'Dick, you said we're not hitting tomorrow.' Dick said, 'Did I say that?' He was forgetting what he was saying."

AS THE PACE PICKED UP in Houston during All-Star activities, Dick Howser's confusion.

Gene Fox, a sportscaster with KCTV in Kansas City, spoke with Howser a few minutes before he was to announce the starting lineup at a news conference on July 14.

"He couldn't remember names," Fox recalled. "He said, 'I can't remember who's on the team. I just can't remember.'"

"I offered him my media guide and he took it and grinned and said, 'You're having trouble remembering who's on the team, too.'"

A few moments later, at that same news conference, Howser referred to Detroit second baseman Lou Whitaker as a left fielder and said Bob Boyd when he meant Boston pitcher Dennis "Oil Can" Kelly.

He said, "I'm going home." "I'll see you tomorrow."

On Friday, Dr. Paul Meyer, the team physician, pointed to Schuerholz at a news conference and gave a startling example of Howser's memory loss.

"We pointed at this man and asked him who it was and he didn't know."

Exactly one week after the All-Star Game, during a 3½-hour operation, doctors found out why.

INDIANAPOLIS — From the major leagues to Little League, the pressure to win often overrides the fun of competing, sports counselors and consultants say.

And the inability to handle such pressure, they add, is what frequently leads to alcohol and drug abuse.

"The American sports culture is win, win, win. That's the bottom line," said Thomas A. Crawford, a performance consultant at Riley Hospital for Children. "If we're going to make winning everything, then let's at least give our kids the tools they need to handle it all."

Crawford, who works at the hospital's Youth Sports Fitness and Health Clinic, said the pressure begins very early.

Dr. Michael H. McClay, a sports psychologist at St. Vincent West's Hospital for Children, said that setting goals is one of the most important things an athlete can do.

"For the most part, research shows that young athletes, especially pre-adolescent and junior high school kids, have mostly social goals. But oftentimes the parents and coaches are the ones talking pros and Olympics while the kids just want to have a good time," McClay said.

For example, one out of 300 to 400 high school football players will play the sport in college, he said. But just 2 percent will play in the National Football League.

"So the chance of making it to the pros is minuscule," McClay said. "But there's another purpose in sports besides winning and going professional. There's team-work, learning to work under pressure and work hard to learn how to set goals for yourself."

As part of his drug abuse workshop for athletes, Carr recently conducted a program for fifth graders.

"It's really scary. These little kids know all the street names of these drugs. And these kids are looking at the high school quarterback as a role model. If they hear about how drunk he got the night before, they think, 'That must be what you do if you're a quarterback.'"

"That's why we have to start educating them young," Carr said. "Because the best way to quit (drugs) is to never start."

Carr said he tries to emphasize to students that there are other ways of dealing with stress than turning to drugs.

"Accepting that winning and losing are part of life has to be a normal process for kids," he said.

Pressure to win leads to abuses

By Lisa Perlman
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — From the major leagues to Little League, the pressure to win often overrides the fun of competing, sports counselors and consultants say.

And the inability to handle such pressure, they add, is what frequently leads to alcohol and drug abuse.

"The American sports culture is win, win, win. That's the bottom line," said Thomas A. Crawford, a performance consultant at Riley Hospital for Children. "If we're going to make winning everything, then let's at least give our kids the tools they need to handle it all."

Crawford, who works at the hospital's Youth Sports Fitness and Health Clinic, said the pressure begins very early.

Dr. Michael H. McClay, a sports psychologist at St. Vincent West's Hospital for Children, said that setting goals is one of the most important things an athlete can do.

"For the most part, research shows that young athletes, especially pre-adolescent and junior high school kids, have mostly social goals. But oftentimes the parents and coaches are the ones talking pros and Olympics while the kids just want to have a good time," McClay said.

For example, one out of 300 to 400 high school football players will play the sport in college, he said. But just 2 percent will play in the National Football League.

"So the chance of making it to the pros is minuscule," McClay said. "But there's another purpose in sports besides winning and going professional. There's team-work, learning to work under pressure and work hard to learn how to set goals for yourself."

As part of his drug abuse workshop for athletes, Carr recently conducted a program for fifth graders.

"It's really scary. These little kids know all the street names of these drugs. And these kids are looking at the high school quarterback as a role model. If they hear about how drunk he got the night before, they think, 'That must be what you do if you're a quarterback.'"

Weddings

Mrs. Steven Horne

Horne-Meyers

Gail Brotherton Meyers, daughter of the late Harry and Catherine Brotherton, married Steven James Horne, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. James Horne, on Sunday, July 27, at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, South Windsor. The couple will live in Manchester.

The Rev. Sara J. Chandler officiated. Pat Bourret was organist and Chris and Heather Lunn were soloists. The bride was given in marriage by Andre Baracco, a friend.

Holly J. Daigle was maid of honor for her sister, the bride's daughter, Meredith J. Meyers, and the bridegroom's daughter, Kimberly Anne Horne, were bridesmaids. The bridegroom's niece, Rebecca Nye, was flower girl.

James V. Nye served as best man for his brother-in-law. Ushers were Philip S. Horne and Erik S. Meyers.

After a dinner in the parish hall of the church, the couple left for Newport, R.I.

The bride is a graduate of Hartford College for Women and the University of Connecticut. She is an advisory industrial specialist in engineering applications at IBM Corp.

The bridegroom received his bachelor's and master's degrees from Central Connecticut State University. He is a teacher at Timothy Edwards Middle School in South Windsor. He also is owner of Enhance Your Home, a home improvement business.

"These kids' peers who have high expectations of them athletically also have high expectations of them socially. So it's not unlikely to find that often your biggest partyers are your biggest athletes," said Carr, who played football four years at Wabash College.

He also linked stress to media attention, especially in high school.

"All of their successes and failures are written up in the local paper or are on TV. They get to be the ones in the news. They have pep sessions for it. They're the role models," he said.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael C. Musson

Musson-Trabitz

Susan Elizabeth Trabitz, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Barry Trabitz of 318 Ferguson Road, and Michael Charles Musson of Clitheroe, England, were married recently in a garden wedding at the home of the bride's parents.

The Rev. Sara J. Chandler officiated. Pat Bourret was organist and Chris and Heather Lunn were soloists. The bride was given in marriage by Andre Baracco, a friend.

Holly J. Daigle was maid of honor for her sister, the bride's daughter, Meredith J. Meyers, and the bridegroom's daughter, Kimberly Anne Horne, were bridesmaids. The bridegroom's niece, Rebecca Nye, was flower girl.

Mrs. Joseph D. Dufresne

Dufresne-Manning

Laurie Anne Manning, daughter of Anne M. Manning of 33 Watrous Road, Bolton, and the late Ernest B. Manning, married Joseph Daniel Dufresne, son of Mr. and Mrs. Florian Dufresne of East Hartford, on June 28 at St. Rose Church in East Hartford.

The Rev. Peter S. Dargan officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her mother.

Karen A. Manning was maid of honor for her sister, Marcia J. Manning and Diane R. Manning, also sisters of the bride, were bridesmaids.

Paul St. Amant served as best man for his cousin, Dean Sig Amant, cousin of the bridegroom, and Gary Dufresne, the bridegroom's brother, were ushers.

After a reception at the Italian-American Club in East Hartford, the couple left for Florida. They will live in Coventry.

The bride is a 1980 graduate of Bolton High School and a 1982 graduate of Bay Path Junior College. She is a secretary at Hartford Insurance Group.

The bridegroom is a 1980 graduate of East Hartford High School and a 1983 graduate of Porter & Chester Institute. He is a draftsman at Scan-Optics Inc.

Advice

Dad's hang-up about doctors could hang up baby's health

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I hope you can help me. I have been married for 10 months and am pregnant. This baby is wanted by both of us. The problem is my husband has forbidden me to go to a doctor. I have already gone twice. Tomorrow will be my third visit. I was only able to because I lied to my husband about where I was going.

DEAR ABBY: I need your advice about a situation that arose a few days ago. My husband was married to a woman who had a 5-year-old son by a previous marriage. When the boy was 8, my husband adopted him. This adopted son died a few days ago. In the obituary of our local paper, my husband's ex-wife stated that she had a long relationship with my husband on a certain date and in a specified city. (It was four years before my husband had even met this woman.) What was even more bizarre, my husband was not listed as one of the survivors.

important to your husband to publicly set the record straight. It might be wiser to let it go. But do consult a lawyer for a legal opinion.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are expecting our second child in September. My adoptive mother, who was unable to have children, has asked to be an observer in the delivery room. She has promised not to interfere in any way. She wants only to be present and share in our joy. She told me she has always felt a little cheated in not having experienced a new life coming into the world. I could tell by her eyes how important this is to her.

I would love to have her there. It's the least I can do for the woman who gave me everything but life itself. My husband feels the birth of a child is a private moment between a husband and wife, and he doesn't want to share it with anyone.

DEAR DAUGHTER: Since the deciding vote is mine, I'm casting it in favor of allowing your mother to be present in the delivery room. I fail to see how inviting her to share that private moment could diminish your husband's joy.

DEAR MOTHER'S DAUGHTER: Since the deciding vote is mine, I'm casting it in favor of allowing your mother to be present in the delivery room. I fail to see how inviting her to share that private moment could diminish your husband's joy.

Colors are a feast at the Saturday farmers' market

Editor's note: This column is prepared by the staff of the Manchester Area Conference of Churches.

By Nancy Carr MACC Director

I love the farmers' market. Even on a gray Saturday morning like last Saturday the colors are a feast in themselves. The first two rows of red and orange tomatoes, the rich red of new beets (50 cents a bunch), slashes of rhubarb stalks, yellow summer squash and bright orange carrots. And greens, still dewy lettuce, spinach, Swiss chard (did you know there is a red Swiss chard that you can cook like spinach and eat stalk and all?) Both the farmer and the customer buying a bunch for 50 cents assured me the red Swiss chard is delicious. There's also huge heads of cabbage, the dark green of broccoli and sweet basil and shiny peppers and corn! Fresh picked, in everybody's favorite) and fresh green beans (alas and alack already gone by the time I arrived at quarter to 10) and baskets and baskets of plump purple blueberries. I brought home three boxes, one of which a pack of older sons removed from my hands for sampling before I even got into the yellow (temporarily leaving me with the rest of the packages). And early apples, Lodi apples, which Joanne Coykendall, MACC staffer tells me make a delicious apple pie. And new red potatoes just harvested and believe it or not, globe artichokes which farmeress Mary Latta started during the winter. Mary has a "just for you" corner on one end of her table with a tempting bowl of dip and a big container of fresh sliced green and yellow squash, broccoli, carrots and celery for customers to sample her produce. Umm - delicious idea, Mary. And flowers - baskets of pink, white and bright red impatiens, geraniums and begonias, ferns and bleeding hearts and bouquets in rainbow colors. All the fresh cut flowers were already sold except some stalks of gladioli in brilliant yellow, salmon, mauve and white. There were still bouquets of dried straw flowers for sale (it still have mine from last year).

AND FARMERS OF THE SEA. John and Stella McDonald, were there with tables full of shell items at unbelievable prices. I have my eye on an adorable tiny bird bath and a beautiful fantasy sea garden with a small statue of Christ. You'll just have to come down and take a look. Next to them the country accents table with folk art by Carol Donze and Carol Ann Prince. There are dried apple designs and baskets and delicately trimmed little hats to hang on the wall and an enchanting wooden old-fashioned puppy with his paws over his nose. And at the very end the dedicated Stevens have set up their SERV table full of items made by our three world neighbors. There are some beautifully carved animals from Kenya, lions, leopards, graceful giraffes, elephants and an impressively horned rhinoceros. Long lasting gifts to children and grandchildren. As well as baskets, brass candlesticks and trays, lovely native costumed dolls and jewelry. Come and see. And enjoy meeting all the neighbors and friends you haven't seen for months: Ed Bushnell, Phyllis Pierson, the Bests, (Stan and Elizabeth) Marge Cole and her daughter, and all the others.

AND COME EARLY - the bouquets and green beans go early. The MACC-sponsored farmers' market is held every Saturday morning, rain or shine, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., under the trees on Main Street in front of St. James Church. Opening Saturday was unfortunately a rainy, rainy day but still five of our local farmers were there. They tell me once the produce is ready for picking, it must be picked and once picked they have to sell. So the farmers will be there rain or shine and so will MACC. Our thanks to volunteer Edith Dooley who covered the market for us last Saturday, wonderful Dave Brannick, MACC coordinator, and the volunteers who make the farmer's market possible: Helen Dutton, John Dutton, Dick Ouellette, Doris Coughlin, Velma Peila, Tina DePumpo.

This is South's week

These events are scheduled at South United Methodist Church this week: Sunday - 10 a.m., worship service, Rev. Lawrence S. Staples preaching "Mountains of the Bible." Tuesday - 7:30 p.m., women's prayer and study, 337 W. Middle Turnpike. Wednesday - 9 a.m., fair workshop. Friday - 10 a.m., AI-Anon.

Joey of living course starts

Sister Marie Alice LaCave will teach a joy of living course for five consecutive days, Sunday through Friday, from 10 a.m. to noon and from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at St. Bridget Church hall. The course will teach relaxation, prayer leading to self-mastery and peace of mind through Christian yoga stretching exercises, proper nutrition, and contemplation. To register, call 649-9742.

Concordia events few

The only event scheduled for Concordia Lutheran Church this week is the agoraphobic group, which will meet at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday.

Question of Jesus' burial site

By George W. Cornell The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Location of the site where Jesus was crucified and buried has been a matter of controversy for a century, but recent archaeological explorations seem to have settled the case.

The dispute over it had earmarks of old-time denominational rivalry, with Protestants favoring the Garden Tomb, Roman Catholics and Eastern Orthodox members backed the Church of the Holy Sepulchre.

Countless Christian pilgrims flock to both places, preferences still tingling along the denominational lines, but without the past sharp competitiveness about it.

In the present layout of Jerusalem, the Garden Tomb outside the walls of the Old City seemed best to match the Scriptural evidence. But excavations now give the nod to the ancient church inside the walled Old City.

The conclusions were presented in a series of reports in the Biblical Archaeology Review published in Washington.

Its editor, Hershel Shanks, says explorations show the Garden Tomb had been used 600 years before the Garden Tomb, ruling it out as his grave since the gospel records say he was "buried in a new tomb."

As for the aged, domed church, Shanks says, excavations show the site "in Jesus' time was a garden cemetery" - as described in Scripture.

The gospel of John says the place, called Golgotha, was "near the city" outside its walls, adding:

"Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden, and in the garden a new tomb where no one had ever been laid. There had, however, the tomb was near at hand ... they laid him."

From the surface view nowadays, that seems to match the Garden Tomb, a burial cave on a peaceful hillside just north of the Damascus gate in a serene garden of flowers beyond the city's bustle.

On the other hand, the crumbling stone church, jammed among other buildings in the Christian quarter of the walled Old City, seems on appearance an unlikely spot from the Scriptural descriptions.

However, the explorations reveal that what appears the spot now didn't fit the picture in Scripture.

Stretchmark causes varied

DEAR DR. GOTT: Is it true that stretch marks on a woman's breasts are a sign that she's had an abortion?

Dr. Gott Peter Gott, M.D.

DEAR READER: Absolutely not. Stretchmarks on breasts, abdomen or thighs indicate that the skin had been stretched; they do not reflect the cause of the stretching. Stretch marks can result from rapid growth in adolescence, weight loss in people who are (or who have been) obese, and of course - pregnancy. There is no way of looking at a woman and being able to judge whether or not she has had an abortion.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Is there some kind of treatment other than surgery for a child with lazy eye? Would video games help?

DEAR READER: Special prism glasses can help children who have "lazy eye," the condition in which one eye doesn't always focus along with the other. Surgery to repair the eye muscles is sometimes needed, depending on the severity of the affliction. Children may outgrow this common disorder, and prism glasses may help them.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I sound as if you have enough problems without adding castration, too. Small testicles are ordinarily no disadvantage, as long as they produce enough hormone to permit normal growth and manufacture enough sperm to allow conception.

I am concerned that your testicles are painful, however. Most men have surgical consultant-urologists. I think you should make every effort to be examined by a urologist. I doubt that castration is an appropriate option, because, depending on your age, the operation can have far-reaching consequences, such as loss of sex drive and sexual ability, and alterations in your appearance.

DEAR DR. GOTT: At age 10, my granddaughter had what the doctor said were shingles, which destroyed her antibodies. She's now 23. I've very easily, has had half a lung removed, and gets colds and pneumonias a lot. Will she get her antibodies back? What can she expect from life?

DEAR READER: I doubt that shingles, a form of herpes nerve infection, affected your granddaughter's antibodies. More likely, she got shingles because her immune system was deficient. This seems to be borne out by her tendency to get repeated infections.

I believe that the cause of her immune deficiency should be investigated, if possible by an immunologist - a doctor who specializes in problems of antibody production. You may wish to avoid a referral to a university hospital center. The trip may be inconvenient, but it can be well worth the effort if the child can be helped. Immune deficiency can be very dangerous, because the defenses against infections are seriously compromised.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Both my testicles are small, bird-egg size and painful. The prison doctor says nothing can be done. What can I do, or should I just have them removed? What effect would castration have on me?

The story behind the story

By Josie

Kim Novak

Q. Could you tell me about Kim Novak? I'd like to know how she got started in movies and what she's doing now. Donna Mayzlik, Austin, Minn.

A. Marilyn Pauline Novak is 53, from Chicago, the daughter of Joseph Novak, an employee of the Chicago-Milwaukee Railroad and his wife, Blanche, a history teacher. She was tall, thin, gawky and shy as a child and had few friends, a situation she tried to remedy by joining a social club for teens when she was 11. The club sponsored fashion shows from time to time and since she had the right figure for it, she began to model in them. She acquired so much poise in the process that she soon won a scholarship to a modeling school and modeled part-time after high school. In 1953, she was hired by an appliance company as one of four models to travel with a washing machine/refrigerator exhibit cross country, ending in San Francisco.

She and her model friends had their tickets home re-routed through Los Angeles, but she never used the return portion. She registered with a modeling agency there and within two weeks was cast as an extra in a movie called "The French Line."

An executive at Columbia Pictures noticed her, had her screen-tested, changed her first name to Kim and cast her in her first featured role, as a gun moll in the 1954 movie "Pushover." Over the next few years, she took over the starring or co-starring role in other movies: "Pfft," "The Man with the Golden Arm," "Pal Joey," "Picnic," "The Eddy Duchin Story," "Bell, Book and Candle," "Vertigo" and others.

In the '60's, she made fewer films, among them a remake of "Of Human Bondage," "The Legend of Lylah Clare" and "The Great Train Robbery" before retiring to her ranch in Carmel, Calif., to raise llamas and enjoy a peaceful life.

She later married (and is still married to) Dr. Robert Malloy, a local veterinarian, and assisted him in his practice. In 1980, though, she returned to films in "The Mirror Crack'd" opposite Elizabeth Taylor, then did a few TV projects, such as the TV movie "Malibu."

Currently, she's filming her debut episodes for this season's "Falcon Crest" in which she plays a "mystery woman who enters into an unholy alliance with the David Selby character against Jane Wyman," according to her agent. She's also writing her autobiography, "Through My Eyes," which is scheduled for publication in the fall of 1987.

Q. I have been a B.J. Thomas fan for some time. Could you tell me what he's doing now? Roy L. Foster, Baton Rouge, La.

A. Touring. "He's going to be on the road the entire summer; it's a real busy time," according to an associate. He's currently in Saskatchewan, Canada; then Memphis; Dracut, Mass.; Bangor, Me.; Boston; Wheeling, W. Va.; Denver; Philipsburg, Kan., and on and on through the Midwest.

B.J. Thomas

Q. Please tell me about Nick Mancuso from "Stingray." Where is he from and how old is he? Mona Graham, Opelika, Al.; Pat Meyers, Borden, Ind.

A. He's 38, was born in Mammola, Italy, but moved with his family to Toronto when he was 7. He began acting in high school, after a drama teacher asked him to read from "Julius Caesar" in class and then praised his delivery. He was soon performing with local experimental theaters. After a year at the University of Toronto and then the University of Guelph (also in Canada), he returned to Toronto to try his luck in theater professionally.

After moving to Vancouver and working with the Vancouver Playhouse, he finally made some inroads. While working with the prestigious company at the Stratford Festival in Stratford, Ontario, he got his big break; he was spotted by ABC executives who cast him in a TV movie, "Dr. Scorpion," for the network. He moved to Los Angeles in 1978 and acted in two suspense films, "Nightwing" and "Deathship."

He followed those with a role in the miniseries "Scruples," a TV movie, "Desperate Intruder," Charlton Heston's movie "Mother Lode" and the critically praised movie "Ticket to Heaven."

Now, with "Stingray," he seems to have found steady work — although the show isn't on NBC's fall schedule, it will continue in production as a midseason replacement. He can also be seen this week in an HBO drama called "Half of a Lifetime," Keith Carradine and Gary Busey co-star.

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write to Josie, King Features Syndicate, 235 E. 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Q. What is the latest on Jim Backus's physical condition? He had been diagnosed as having a basal ganglion, I remember, which mimics Parkinson's disease. Was the cure effective? Is he all right? Mrs. M.S., South Bend, Ind.

A. We spoke to his wife, Henny, and she confirmed that he's coming along well and working hard on his next book, "Jim Backus as Told to Henny Backus." "It's part autobiography," she explains, "and part nitty gritty about what goes on in this town, Hollywood." As for his acting career, he hasn't given up on it. "As soon as he's completely well, he'll go back," she says.

Jim Backus

Q. Please answer a question about Isabella Rossellini: Is she one of a set of twins? K.S., Maui, Hawaii

A. She is, indeed. Her twin sister, Ingrid, "the brain in the family," according to Isabella, is studying Italian literature at Columbia University's graduate school in New York. Isabella is the only one of Ingrid Bergman's four children to follow their mother into acting; her next projects are the movie "Blue Velvet" due out in September and the TV movie "Ingrid Bergman: My Story," in which she's set to portray her mother. Filming starts soon. ■

An ode to small gadgets that have come and gone

By Sarah Overstreet

I buried my hot-air popcorn popper last week, with no regrets. In fact, its two-year tenure is tribute more to guilt than loyalty. I hated the popcorn it made from the first dry, tough morsel it spewed out at me, but it's hard for me to quickly abandon something I paid $19.95 for.

I bought the darn thing because I thought it would give me popcorn without grease, thereby saving several hundred calories per bowl. After I popped the first batch — the infernal, whining machine hurling red-hot unpopped corn all over the kitchen — I discovered why grease is so important to popcorn. Grease is what keeps popcorn from tasting like the little polystyrene bubbles that come in packing crates. For $19.95, I had a bowl of polystyrene bubbles.

This is not the first run-in I've had with small electrical appliances, the sole purpose of which, I've decided, is to provide unimaginative gift-givers with wedding and Christmas gifts. At my own wedding eight years ago, I received a group of such appliances, which I tried my best to use.

First, there was the small Teflon-coated hamburger fryer that fried one hamburger patty at a time, spat grease all over the counter and became increasingly caked with grease because it couldn't be immersed. My husband has not eaten just one hamburger since he was 3 years old, and a nice skillet with a lid will fry four at a time without spitting grease anywhere.

But space-age technology thought I needed an electric, single-hamburger fryer, so some gullible wedding-gifter gladly pulled out a 10-spot for it.

Next was the small, Teflon-coated deep-fryer that fried one tiny batch of french fries at a time, would fry nothing that had been coated in batter and spat even more grease than the hamburger fryer.

It couldn't be immersed in dishwasher to be washed, either. It formed an excellent, scunge-covered complement to the hamburger fryer. Since I'd also always had excellent success frying potatoes with the above-mentioned skillet, I stuck both appliances in plastic bags and stored them beneath the sink. I kept out the skillet.

Last, but not least, was a food grinder that flung serrated carrots and cabbage all over the kitchen, and which refused to release its deathgrip on the exchangeable blades when it was time to wash them. One day when it was particularly stubborn, I applied all my strength to the task, and when the latch finally gave up, drove the blade a half-inch into the cabinet.

Since my experience with the popper, fryers and grinder, I've been fascinated with the silly products manufacturers devise to win our hard-earned dollars. Over the years of perusing hardware and gourmet shops for them, I've collected this appalling list of electronic gewgaws:

- a little machine that does nothing but dispense hot water into cups
- a Teflon-coated donut maker that makes two donuts at a time
- an electric grill that does nothing but cook hot dogs
- an electric egg-cooker that does nothing but cook eggs
- an electric grill that does nothing but shish shish kabobs
- a machine that boils water electrically so you can steam your face over it
- a wok-type electric device that cooks nothing but pizza
- a machine that does nothing but spit out cookie and canape dough

- a hand-held vibrating nail filer/buffer, which for $12 does the work of a three-cent emery board

- a small, enclosed fan in which you stick a hand for nail-drying

- a machine that peels vegetables after you spend a while adjusting the blades to the exact size of the vegetable

- a tiny, $450 machine which deep fries, poaches, makes candy and sauces, steams, roasts and simmers all in a single glass container on your counter.

I can understand why manufacturers make these things. They are in the business of making money and paying good dividends to the stockholders. What I can't understand is why there is a market for them.

Most of those things received as gifts are used only a few times, and a large percentage of those bought for personal use meet the same fate. They usually require more time to set up and clean than they save, and a year or so after purchase, they show up at garage sales.

Yet like Charlie Brown believing Lucy is finally going to hold the football while he kicks it, we keep buying these new appliances as soon as they hit the market. Why do we think, in the heat of gourmet-shop passion, that the answer to all our cooking problems is a cookie-dough spitter?

I can only guess. Perhaps it's the same innate drive that makes us think a new velvet-covered curling iron will make our hair do what we want, where bonnets, pistols, mist rollers and hot wands have failed miserably in the past.

At $9.95 or $15.95, we always think we can give the manufacturers another try. And they're happily failing all the way to the bank.

At $9.95 or $15.95, we always think we can give the manufacturers another try. And they're happily failing all the way to the bank. ■

Hot dog!

Story by
Rhea Stewart

David Rocha

Ryan Chenette works at his cart. He's only 14 years old, but he already expects that his hot-dog selling will put him through high school.

Cutting the mustard as a vendor

Paul Rosetto, left, and Andrew Ansaldi line up at Carol's Cart, which is manned by Carol Kamm. They've been customers for many years.

Before there was a Big Mac, before there was a hunt for Herb, before Coca-Cola ever dreamed up a man named Max Headroom, already there was fast food. You saw a bright umbrella over a little cart. You pulled your car off the road, and a real live person handed you your lunch.

In spite of modern science and modern promotion, this sort of lunching is still possible in Manchester. The lunch cart, often called hot-dog wagon after its leading commodity, is so popular that running one even strikes young people as a promising career field.

The dean of Manchester hot-dog vendors is probably Carol Kamm. For five years, she's operated Carol's Cart in an open space just opposite the Manchester Racquet Club on West Center Street. For five years earlier than that, she stood at the intersection of Hartford Road and West Center Street, where Lynch Toyota-Pontiac now stands.

Kamm was inspired by her grandfather, Santo Cassarino, who operated a similar cart in East Hartford, close to the Wonder Bakery for many years. Her father loaned her the money to buy her own cart. The money was paid back long ago. Today Kamm has her own following.

"That's my picnic area," she said, pointing to two folding chairs protected from the sun by a second umbrella. A low table sits between them. Customers may eat their hot dogs in luxury there, if they wish. Kamm sells about 100 dogs a day, she says, and not nearly as much kielbasa, "but enough."

Kielbasa is the modern addition to the hot-dog stand menu. Many carts have it on hand, but kielbasa runs a remote second to the frankfurter. No longer are mustard and catsup sufficient for garnish. Most carts have special sauce and chili.

Since the cart is strictly a summertime occupation.

Continued . . .

Clifton Hemmingway of Hartford receives his change from Carol Kamm. He says he stops by her hot-dog stand two or three times a week.

. . . Continued

Kamm tends bar and waits tables during cold weather. Last winter she was a waitress at Air One at the Brainard Airport in Hartford.

A newcomer to the ranks is Ryan Chenette, 14, who is established on Spencer Street just past the line that divides Manchester from East Hartford. He graduated with several awards this year from East Hartford Middle School. He already expects hot dogs to put him through college.

Ryan's father, John Chenette, works just up the road at Reliable Refuse. He put his son in the business and is proud that his son has already paid back the cost of the second-hand cart. "At 14, the only employment you can get legally is farm work," said the elder Chenette.

Ryan and his father worked hard to develop a menu, trying three brands of frankfurters before they settled on a Manchester brand — Bogner's.

Another newcomer to vending this season is Jackie Mailhot. She got tired of waiting tables after 12 years and started looking around for a second-hand lunch cart to buy. "I had a hard time finding one. They are mostly sold out of New York," she said. But she managed to buy a cart which needed cleaning up, and since the beginning of summer she has been selling on Hartford Road on the grounds of Krause Florist.

She is glad she made the change. She likes the work better, finds it good to be outdoors, and on occasions when her son Matthew, 7, has had to stay home from school, Mailhot has taken him along to the cart. By the end of this season, the cart will have paid back the investment.

Mid-day is the only time for hot-dog vendors. Their hours run from 11 or 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 or 3. Chenette and Kamm are on hand six days a week, because they draw trade from the shoppers at K-Mart and Shop-Rite Plazas. For those whose customers come from nearby businesses, five days are enough.

At closing time Mailhot has to move a cart weighing more than she does, hook it up to her automobile, and drive away to her garage. "It's no big deal," she says.

Vendors need a car to haul their carts to and from work. They also need a permit from the town where they sell, and a trailer license for the cart. They also need permission of the owner of the land where they stand.

A cart also needs a name. "Top Dog" is the Chenette name. Mailhot has chosen "Hot-Diggety-Dog." The most pretentious name in the area belongs to a much larger lunch wagon, a real van, which does business on the South Windsor side of the Bissell Bridge under the name "The Roadside Gourmet."

"Scottie's" is the name under the umbrellas on Parker Street in

Continued . . .

Carol Kamm prepares yet another hot dog. She sells more than 100 a day.

'He has the best sauerkraut in the world'

a clearing opposite Ostrinsky Scrap Dealer. Scottie is Irving Scott, a retired man with a bright face and a lively patter. During a recent visit he had a steady stream of steady customers. "He has the best sauerkraut in the world," said one woman, who refused to give her name.

After she had gone, Larry Baker pulled up. A truck driver for Al's Seafood of Waterbury, he praised Scottie's, too. "He has the best hot dogs in the world," he said. Pressed as to what makes those hot dogs the best, Baker gazed at his mustard-anointed dog as if seeking an answer there, and then said, "It's his personality."

Scottie has personality galore as he shares the story of his life with all customers. He also provides them with a picnic area, and an account, delivered without an ounce of self-pity, of his 28 years as a dispatcher with a steel company, how he got hurt and how he had to retire. "I just had this hand rebuilt. I guess I wasn't strong enough for that work all those years."

So he decided a lunch cart would bring some income to supplement the salary of his wife, Patricia, who has worked for G. Fox & Co. for 20 years and loves it. "I like this. I have no problems. It gives me something to do. This is my second year. I enjoy people. I like to listen to other people."

"And I have been cooking since I was 6 years old, because my mother was ill. I made my sons Michael and James learn to cook. They help me. And they cater on the side."

"Scottie's" really deserves the name "The Roadside Gourmet" for its specialties. That admired sauerkraut is bought ready-made, but the Scott men blanch it and otherwise give it their special touch. And they make a green pepper and onion garnish for the special sausages that are their answer to kielbasa.

Since Progress Park is nearby with all its industries, "Scottie's" is the setting for many lunch breaks. And it is on a truck route. A truck rolls by, it honks, and Irving Scott waves back. No sale today, but a satisfied customer. ■

Paul Pavano eats in the shade of an umbrella near Carol Kamm's cart. Most customers don't have the time to stop.

Asians are the new target

By Richard DeAtley

LOS ANGELES — Even racism has its trends, and right now, Asians seem to be the target of choice.

In the movie "Sixteen Candles," appearances by a character named Long Duk Dong were accompanied by a gong. What if the character was black and a banjo plucked a few bars from "Gone With the Wind"?

In "Year of the Dragon," New York's Chinese community was displayed as cowardly and gang-dominated. A beautiful Asian television journalist falls in love with a white cop who doesn't even pretend to hide his contempt for Orientals. A Chinese-American cop can't seem to figure out how to drive a car.

Both movies were made in the enlightened 1980s.

So when the Los Angeles-based Japanese Citizens League heard that "Gung Ho," the Paramount Pictures movie about a Japanese car company opening an American plant, was aiming for a much broader audience as a television series, they insisted on looking over the producer's shoulders.

Paramount Television agreed and hired the Los Angeles consulting firm of Hirano, Hokoyama & Associates to review the pilot's script, checking it for correctness of detail and any possibly offensive passages.

"I was not critical of the portrayal of Asians in the movie," said Irene Hirano, a partner of the consulting firm along with J.D. Hokoyama, director of Asian Pacific American Student Services at University of Southern California.

The firm normally serves a number of corporations doing business in Asia.

"The movie made the executive from Japan seem very human," Ms. Hirano said, and it "tried to look at some of the human problems that come with American workers having to deal with Japanese who come here to open car plants."

The television pilot was bought by ABC, according to Paramount Television, but the network will make several revisions on characters and concept before the first show is broadcast in January. One decision will be whether to retain the services of Ms. Hirano's firm.

The consulting job was significant for a medium that has in the past gone with the flow of racial attitudes. There are a long string of characters from television's past to haunt minority groups.

"Amos 'n' Andy" remains the most glaring example, but there are characters within other shows that now cause viewers to squirm, such as Pepino, the hat-in-hand Mexican farm worker in "The Real McCoys."

Richard DeAtley writes on entertainment for the Associated Press.

Jareth, (David Bowie), tells Sarah, (Jennifer Connelly), that she has only 13 hours to rescue her baby brother in "Labyrinth," a Tri-Star Pictures film.

Film capsules

Back to School (PG-13) — Rodney Dangerfield, Keith Gordon, Burt Young, Sally Kellerman. (Comedy) If Dangerfield didn't get any respect before, he certainly won't get any now. The actor plays self-made millionaire Thornton Melon, who buys his way into college. But any attempt to spoof academia is lost; Dangerfield's trademarks — eye-rolling, cheek-puffing, sweaty-faced antics — become his crutch. And though it's great to see Kellerman back on the big screen, looking more radiant than ever, she has a thankless role. This one flunks, unless you love sophomoric humor. Grade: C.

At Close Range (R) — Sean Penn, Christopher Walken, Mary Stuart Masterson. (Drama) Sean Penn lives in the rural South with his tired grandmother, broken-down mother and foolish brother. Then one day, dad comes back to town — with money, flashy cars and the promise of success. But there is one small problem: Dad is a thief. Walken infuses his role with a delicious evil, and Penn, who must make some rather brutal decisions, has never been better. The last 20 minutes are devastating. Not for the entire family. Grade: B.

Ferris Bueller's Day Off (PG-13) — Matthew Broderick, Mia Sara, Alan Ruck. (Comedy) Every high school senior thinks he can conquer the world. Ferris Bueller does — and makes it look easy. Ferris convinces his parents he's sick, gets his girl out of class and borrows a Ferrari from his best friend's dad. His principal is on the trail but is no match for the quick-witted charmer. Ruck, who finally steps out of Ferris's shadow, is endearing. If you take a day off to see this clever escape, prepare to be envious; Ferris makes better use of his time. Grade: B-plus.

The Karate Kid Part II (PG-13) — Ralph Macchio, Noriyuki "Pat" Morita, Danny Kamekura, Yui Okumoto. (Drama) A heart-warming, exciting adventure the first time around has become a plumb. Enigmatic karate master Miyagi and his student go to Okinawa to visit Miyagi's dying father. From the moment they're on terra firma, the mess — er, plot — becomes muddled: Feuds are rekindled, women are accosted, relationships are ruined, karate blows are doled out. All compete with inane dialogue, Macchio's mindless mumbling, and during the climactic finale, a torrential windstorm. Grade: D.

Labyrinth (PG) — David Bowie, Jennifer Connelly, Toby Froud, Shelley Thompson. (Fantasy) Every child's nightmare is to be swooped up by demons; this terrific film is a variation on that terror. Sarah resents caring for her brother and wishes goblins would take him away. They do. Jim Henson's creatures populate this nifty film — and they're not Bert and Ernie. Henson (with help from executive producer George Lucas) advances puppetry to an awesome level. The creatures — not Bowie and certainly not Connelly — are the real stars. Grade: B-plus.

Legal Eagles (PG) — Robert Redford, Debra Winger, Daryl Hannah. (Comedy-Thriller) This movie accomplishes everything that it sets out to, nothing more, nothing less — which means that you'll be entertained. Debra Winger and Robert Redford are lawyers whose client, Daryl Hannah, is involved in a complex case. There's something for everyone, laughs, stunts, scares; all set with the New York art scene as a backdrop. Winger and Redford are a winning comedic combination, with Redford at his best in years. A great way to cool off for two hours. Grade: A.

Mona Lisa (R) — Bob Hoskins, Cathy Tyson, Michael Caine. (Drama) George is certainly not your typical ladies' man. He's short, fat, balding and badly dressed. But after an 18-year stay in jail, George ends up as chauffeur to Simone, a young, black and costly call girl. Then he falls in love. Their relationship, filled with vitriol and valentines, takes them through London's sordid underworld as they search for Simone's drug-addict friend. Violence, bloodshed and sexual perversities fill the page of this haunting, heartfelt gangster story. Tyson is as beautiful as she is talented. Grade: B.

Aussie groups butt out

By Ethlie Ann Vare

Corporate sponsorship of rock music has become such an accepted way to raise money for concert tours that the revolt by some of Australia's top bands is a breath of fresh air.

The artists — including Midnight Oil, the Hoodoo Gurus, the Divynyls and Hunters & Collectors — took out a full-page ad in Australia's National Times, protesting the involvement of cigarette manufacturers in the rock concert business.

The Philip Morris tobacco company had been using extensive concert and club support for some time as a way to market its products — until the newspaper ad appeared with the bold headline "Hands Off!" The ad went on to say, "We will not support corporate sponsorship of the Australian music industry by cigarette companies," and was signed by members of 22 popular groups.

"We're not anti-sponsorship," said a representative of Hunters & Collectors. "But it must be the band's decision as to what sponsorship is accepted. Sponsorship by a cigarette company is totally despicable."

Sting has released a live album of his "Bring on the Night"/"Dream of the Blue Turtles" tour — in fact, he's released a double-disc live LP. But, unhappily for American fans, it's been released only in Europe.

Although A&M Records will want to distribute the album domestically, Sting's manager, Miles Copeland, refused, saying that it would put too much pressure on Sting to go around promoting it.

(Coincidentally, Miles Copeland's own record label, IRS, recently severed its association with A&M, and moved house to the MCA lot.)

The album will be available in America as an import, and Copeland has confirmed that Sting will reunite with the Police. The group was to return to by August.

Dave Stewart of Eurhythmic is producing the solo debut for Bob Geldof, former frontman of the Boomtown Rats and instigator of every-kind-of-AID.

And remember, even though Geldof was finally knighted for his humanitarian efforts, you can't call him Sir Bob. As an Irish citizen, he has to be referred to as Mr. Geldof, KBE (Knight of the British Empire).

How can you tell if she's faking?

This man's question on orgasm raises another question

By Dr. June Reinisch

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I have a question I know a lot of men would like to know the answer to: Is there any way a man can tell if a woman has faked an orgasm? Is there some reaction that tells him for sure that she hasn't faked an orgasm?

DEAR READER: No. There is no way to be certain if orgasm has actually occurred, short of having the woman wired to a huge array of physiological-measurement instruments to monitor blood pressure, heart rate, vaginal contractions, and all other aspects of arousal and orgasm (and having the information checked by experts who have reviewed many such records.)

In addition, not all orgasms are alike (even for the same woman, let alone from one woman to the next). Therefore, it would not be very useful to provide you with a list of the physical signs that occur at orgasm for some women some of the time.

The real question is: Why are you worried about this? And if you were to discover that a woman was faking orgasm, then what?

Clinicians say that many of the women who admit to faking orgasms — or who lie and say they had an orgasm — do it because they don't want to hurt the man's feelings. Many men take pride in thinking of themselves as good lovers, and some become upset if the woman doesn't have an orgasm. Remember that a man doesn't "give" a partner an orgasm or "make her" have one. However, he should be aware of what increases a particular partner's sexual arousal (as well as what decreases it), so that he enhances those factors which make it more likely that she will have an orgasm.

Communication between partners, by word or action, is very important in helping each partner understand what the other partner likes and dislikes. These are complex issues and are best discussed with a sex therapist or counselor if they interfere with either partner's sexual satisfaction.

Reduced fertility is also listed as a possible side effect. The information comes from studies of rodents given high doses of this drug and from menstrual irregularities noted in humans. Moreover, Haldol carries warnings with regard to long-term use: these stipulate that patients should take the smallest dosage that provides satisfactory control.

This drug might effect your chances of getting pregnant, and might carry some fetal risk if you do become pregnant. Therefore, it is important that you discuss your plans for a pregnancy with your psychiatrist. Do not alter the amount of this drug without first consulting a qualified psychiatrist or physician.

Peeping Toms

DEAR DR. REINISCH: It is very important that I learn about the sexual disorder called "peeping Tom" masturbation. Does it lead to other sexual disorders, such as child molestation or rape?

DEAR READER: According to our current understanding of the voyeur or "peeping Tom," it's extremely rare for a person with this disorder, or paraphilia, to also have another disorder like pedophilia (love of children or to commit rape. Para— outside, philia— love, so the word means a type of sexual practice that is socially prohibited and different from usual behavior.) Nature appears to afflict an individual with only one sexual syndrome or disorder at a time, according to Dr. John Money of Johns Hopkins University, the world's leading authority on paraphilias. He notes that one disorder rarely progresses to overlap with another.

I know it's not wise to take drugs during pregnancy, but I am afraid to stop the Haldol. Is there any information on the effects of Haldol on a fetus?

DEAR READER: Ask your pharmacist for the package insert for Haldol. If one is not available, go to the public library and ask a librarian to show you how to look up Haldol in prescription-drug reference books.

As yet, there are no large, well-controlled studies of the effects of this drug on babies born to women who take it during pregnancy, but there are reports of a few cases of fetal malformation, although it was not clear whether these were caused by Haldol. The manufacturer recommends that Haldol be used during pregnancy only if the benefit to the mother outweighs a potential risk to the fetus.

This requirement either to peep or to recall a peeping incident in order to function sexually determines if the behavior is paraphilic or not.

If a rapist peers into windows looking for victims and is apprehended at that point, he is likely to be labeled a peeping Tom instead of a rapist. The peeping Tom does his peeping over and over again, without committing rape, and usually without entering a dwelling.

Clinicians who work with peeping Toms suggest that it's important to determine the content of their erotic fantasies. If the peeper thinks of violence or sexual partners while peeping, the peeping may be accompanied by disorders of sexual aggression or sexual contact with children.

“ Remember that a man doesn't 'give' a partner an orgasm or 'make her' have one. However, he should be aware of what increases a particular partner's sexual arousal. ”

Treatment for men in legal trouble because of peeping requires combined hormonal and counseling therapy. The hormone is Depo-Provera (medroxyprogesterone acetate). This drug reduces or eliminates the patient's sexual desire, and thus the compulsion to peep, so that counseling can proceed. Counseling is more effective if there is a partner who joins in couple therapy.

Triplets

DEAR DR. REINISCH: Two years ago I became the great-grandmother of identical triplet girls. What are the odds of this happening? You discussed the odds of having twins in an earlier column.

DEAR READER: The predicted rate of triplet births is approximately one in 10,000 births, which is about 100 times more rare than twin births. Actual data from a single year of birth records might not match the expected overall rate, however.

For example, in 1981 — the latest year for which figures are available — there were 3,629,238 live births in the United States, 1,385 of which were multiple births of three or more.

Multiple-birth rates are known to vary somewhat by age. For example, mothers aged 35 to 39 are about four times more likely to have triplets than are mothers aged 15 to 19.

The use of fertility drugs also greatly increases the risk of multiple fetuses, with the rate as high as 40 percent following use of some fertility drugs. For example, the chance of having triplets increases to five in 1,000.

Male cycle?

DEAR DR. REINISCH: Is there such a thing as a male hormonal cycle? I think there are times when I feel much more interested in sex than I do at other times. Sometimes I think my interest level matches my wife's hormonal and menstrual cycles. Is that possible?

DEAR READER: Someday scientists probably will discover some process whereby changes in female hormone levels influence the level of sexual interest in males.

Studies of married couples show that coital frequency does follow a pattern that matches the wife's menstrual cycle. One study measured husbands' level of testosterone — a hormone produced in higher amounts by males than by females and thought to be related to sex drive. This study found that a husband's testosterone level was highest when his wife was at the ovulation stage of her monthly cycle.

Other periodic cycles noted for males are that testosterone levels are higher in the morning than at any other point in a 24-hour period. On a longer cycle, one study has noted that testosterone levels in human males are highest in October.

The mating instincts of many non-human animals are governed by natural events, such as the lengthening of daylight hours in the spring. Other environmental triggers include specific smells, certain colors, temperature changes and even the arrival of a particular food in the diet.

Humans have been manipulating and controlling their environment for several generations. Therefore, it may be that only very subtle cyclic variations in sexual desire related to female reproductive cycles or to seasons remain in our evolutionary makeup.

Send questions to Dr. Reinisch in care of The Kinsey Report, P.O. Box 48, Bloomington, Ind. 47402. Volume of mail prohibits personal replies, but questions of general interest may be discussed in future columns.

Architect Alan Wiedie stands in the bright, airy contemporary kitchen he designed and built at his home on South Road in Bolton.

David Rocha/Manchester Herald

Designer's dream

Work took Wiedie three years

By Susan Plese

There's an old expression about the shoemaker's children going barefoot. Evidently the phrase doesn't apply to architects' families, at least not one family on South Road in Bolton.

Alan C. Wiedie, a self-employed architect, has transformed his small 1950s ranch into a designer's dream. The last project was the kitchen, added as a new 12-by-15-foot wing off the east end of the home. The old kitchen is now a small breakfast room.

The job took Wiedie three years. "From the moment I started digging the hole in the ground," Wiedie says. "I dug the foundation, rented concrete forms and poured the foundation and put the floor deck on the first fall. Then it sat through the winter."

"In the spring I framed the walls and roof, and by the second fall it was all enclosed," he says. He then knocked out the existing kitchen wall separating the rest of the house from the new addition. During the second winter, he concentrated on cabinet work and plumbing.

Wiedie manages to sound matter-of-fact about major renovation. "I don't know whether you'd call it a hobby," he says. "I've just always done it. It's fun."

Earlier renovations to the house included a second-floor dormer that added two bedrooms, a bath and small study; a deck; a rebuilt bath; and most recently, a new living room with cathedral ceiling. The former six-room house now boasts 11.

He denies ever feeling over his head. "I just keep plodding. One step follows the other," he says with a shrug.

"It (the kitchen) took a lot longer than I thought, though," he admits. "In a kitchen all appliances have their own requirements, electrical and plumbing. There's a lot of coordination."

The Wiedies, for instance, wanted a gas stove. "There's no gas in Bolton so we put a propane tank in for the stove," Wiedie says. The gas is supplemented with an eye-level microwave in one corner of the room as well as a conventional oven.

The patient care Wiedie has taken is evident. His workmanship in finishing details such as white oak cabinet doors, drawers and white laminate countertops is beautiful. He had help in only two areas — in order to "move the project along," he hired a carpenter to construct the insides of the cabinets, and had another lay the hardwood floor.

The finished U-shaped kitchen is airy and efficient. The cathedral ceiling rises to a peak in the middle, and is accented with a bank of "ridge skylights" that line each side of the peak.

"They're not a purchased item," Wiedie explains. "I just bought the glass — it's insulated glass — and fabricated the frames and flashed them into the roof."

The room, in fact, is both roofed and surrounded by glass. "We knew we wanted a nice, bright room," he says.

Wiedie originally planned to install an exhaust system at the roof's peak, anticipating a build-up of heat in the summer. "But it hasn't happened. With the trees and ventilation it stays nice and cool," he says.

Wiedie admits that the kitchen doesn't have much wall space. "It's a trade-off, really," Wiedie says. "We had a heck of a time trying to find a place to put the paper towels, but we wanted the room as light and airy as we could get. It isn't a big deal." □ □ □

One unexpected dividend is the position of the room. "I eat lunch here every day," he says, pointing to a stool under a counter facing the kitchen's front window, which looks out onto pachysandra-lined brick walks.

In the summer, when the sun is high in the sky, a roof overhang prevents hot rays from entering the window. "But in the winter, the sun comes in and hits you right in the chest. That was a coincidence, but it sure is nice," Wiedie says with a grin.

The kitchen is lit with small ceiling-mounted spotlights and track lighting. "It's a semi-success, I guess," Wiedie says. "I've got to experiment with some (other) fixtures because they give off a little bit of a glare."

A few green plants, some baskets and tinware add interest to the kitchen. Particularly attractive is a center maple butcher-block island with drawers for storage.

"Eventually the island will have a small work sink," Wiedie says. "But when we first put it in, it looked so nice I didn't know whether I wanted to put a hole in it for a sink." That project is temporarily on hold.

Wiedie is currently the architect for dental offices housing doctors Hebert, Stephens, Macary and Hebert in a remodeled Cheney house built about 1911 on Center Street. He was the architect for the new Bolton fire station and a medical building at 18 Haynes St. several years ago.

Although most of his work is commercial, he has designed other kitchens, solar rooms and complete homes. "Last year, with the interest rates dropping, there were a tremendous number of calls for additions and remodeling," Wiedie says. ■

Auctions aren't
just for the pros

By Phyllis Zauner

The auctioneer steps out on the podium, looks out across the crowded room, bangs down his gavel and starts his banter, wheeling and whipping a crowd of 150 into a buying frame of mind. Each sale is a little drama, and the silver-tongued auctioneer, who needs the touch of an actor, will go through 100 or so items in an hour.

The scene is repeated thousands of times every day across the country. The auction business is growing tremendously, says the president of the National Association of Auctioneers. And they're selling everything from handyman's tools to luxury cars. "People are in the mood right now where they are looking for bargains," he says. "Auctions pretty well dictate that."

While the growing number of auction-goers has made those bargains harder to come by, buying at auction can be profitable, especially for the knowledgeable. Art collector Frank Getlein, for instance, picked up three lithographs by Carl Bodmer, one of the first artists to explore the American West, for $10. He judges them to be worth over $4,000. When tales of such lucky finds percolate around the showroom, auction-going turns into an addictive hobby.

But auctions can also be great spectator sports, watching coveted prizes won or lost in a matter of minutes.

Should the arena be Sotheby's or Christie's, the two giants of the international auction business, the audience can include millionaires, museum curators, dealers, quality collectors. And when the "object of virtue" (as they say in the trade) is a rare Gutenberg Bible or a Rubens painting, the excitement is intense.

The auctioneer chants in polished prose; invisible bids fly from every part of the salesroom. Necks crane to watch the duel between combatants. The pace is hectic; in minutes the gavel goes down on the word "Sold!" Said one woman bidding on a minor item, "After it was over it took me an hour to recover from the sheer intoxication."

And the beauty part is that you can watch and enjoy the most posh auction without bidding. The doors are open to you, without money, without credentials.

But for the novice with a yen to join in the bidding, such top-of-the-line salesrooms would scarcely be the place to start. A smaller, local auction is wiser for the fledgling bidder.

Auctions are everywhere. Once confined to back-road tents and barns in rural America, they have now proliferated into urban areas and offer an astonishing assortment of merchandise. Government agencies sell their old office machines. Customs offices dispose of confiscated goods. Post offices rid themselves of unclaimed packages. Police departments put up unclaimed recovered stolen bikes.

Well-heeled buyers chase bargains in auctions of expensive cars, condominiums and business computers. There's even an auction of smugglers' boats confiscated in drug busts, with average winning bids that run 39 percent of appraised value.

On the more glamorous side of the auction business is Rick Cole, a 32-year-old auctioneer who has become one of the nation's largest sellers of classic and celebrity autos in California.

In 13 years, Cole has auctioned everything from the Batmobile of television's "Batman" program to a dozen psychedelic Rolls-Royce sedans formerly owned by departed guru Bhagwan Rajneesh.

In short, auctions are no longer for private collectors only. Buying at auction has become fashionable. And selling at auction has evolved into big business, reaching to levels of top corporations looking to turn idle assets into quick cash.

But newcomers to the auction scene would do well to attend a few sales "just for fun," says auction organizer Verlon Webb. "They'll get a feel for what's involved in becoming a good buyer, they'll learn the terminology and sharpen their instinct for prices."

They may also discover how capricious a crowd can be. At an auction, an item is worth what someone wants to pay for it, no matter how ridiculous that figure may be.

Saundra McGowan, an auctioneer's assistant who helps run auctions in northern California, says she's seen people pay unbelievable prices for junk. "I once watched two stubborn women trying to outbid one another for a rusty, antique egg beater. They finally drove the price up to $45."

"But I've also watched wonderful things go for a song. I myself missed out on the bargain of a lifetime when I was bidding on a baby grand piano a year ago. I gave up too soon. The piano was knocked down for $1,300 and it was probably worth $25,000. That one still hurts."

McGowan's tip for success in bidding: Pray for rain. The valiant few who drag themselves to a sale on a bad day often end up with bargains simply because nobody came.

It's common wisdom that unrecognized treasures are getting more and more difficult to find. Still, every sale has at least one good story. And gossip about extraordinary bargains, as well as disappointments over what got away, is almost routine in every auction crowd.

One type of sale where bargains can still be had is the auction for charity (a political fundraiser, for instance), because those attending are more likely to be interested in the cause than in the merchandise. Bidding is seldom heavy, the atmosphere is unhurried, the quality of offerings high.

Another sale pursued by auction-hounds is the country auction, often held in small towns or on farms. About 90 percent of the offerings fall into the category of usable second-hand things.

But there are treasures, too, for those with an eye for the rare find. Recently, a workable player piano, desperately in need of tuning, went for $315, about half the usual price.

But as McGowan points out, urban dwellers don't often have the opportunity to either locate or attend country auctions. Listings can be found in small-town weekly newspapers.

No one, though, will have trouble finding antiques auctions. For the antiques trade, auctions are life's blood, attended by retail bidder and dealer alike.

Although the average dealer would like customers to think he finds all his treasures in the attics of sleepy New England farmsteads, the truth is that goods bought at auction constitute a large portion of most dealers' stock.

As a practical matter, bidding against a dealer works out well. He can't afford to pay full market price since he must leave room for his markup; that means that going one bid beyond puts the price just above wholesale level.

One of the most fabulous of antiques auctions occurs in Richmond, Ind. (population 42,000), at Webb's Auction House, where a mall of 270 antiques shops funnels wares into the bi-weekly events. Its fame in the Midwest is such that one couple from Michigan drove 1,500 miles to bid on an ornate, heavily carved Oriental desk and chair. Bidding was hot, but they won out at $6,000. "We considered it a bargain," the wife reported, "we had set our top limit at $10,000."

Cynthia Parrish, an antiques dealer who sometimes helps run the auctions at Webb's, offers some advice to those who would like to get in on the fun and profit of auction buying.

• If you're a collector, be informed. Read special articles and comprehensive books and pamphlets which will fully describe the qualities that will either depreciate or increase the value of a piece. Become an expert, however modest, about those things you want to buy. The more you know, the better you'll be at judging quality and spotting fakes.

• Always attend previews and thoroughly examine the articles you're interested in. Bring a flashlight and a magnifying glass. Peek into corners. Look for cracks or repairs in china. Never bid on anything you haven't inspected. Read the conditions of sale for items you want; "as is" condition may apply, and you'll have no recourse when you discover flaws later.

• While registering to bid, inform the company what you collect, so you can be put on future mailing lists for that kind of item. ■

Wok wary: Can metal residue pose any danger?

By Sonja Heinze

Is it possible to purchase a wok that will not rust? I follow the manufacturer's instructions for seasoning my wok but still have trouble. After washing and before seasoning, my dish towels pick up a terrible metallic residue. Is that residue harmful to my family's health? Are cast iron woks available? What do Chinese restaurants use?

Phyllis Dodd, Avalon, N.J.

Woks are made in various metals from thin iron to stainless steel, copper, brass and aluminum. Irene Kuo, in "The Key to Chinese Cooking," advises that the thin iron is the best to buy. I'm assuming that this is the one you bought, so keep it.

Rust is not harmful to your family's health, but to prevent its unsightly occurrence Kuo recommends the following: "A new wok should be seasoned with oil before using it to prevent food from sticking and the metal from rusting. It should be heated over very low heat, brushed lightly all over with oil, then tilted and rotated while resting on the rim collar so that the oil coats all of the interior. Wipe it clean with paper towels."

"Oil and clean twice: then rinse it well and dry it thoroughly with a towel or over direct heat. A wok that is well seasoned by repeated use doesn't rust. But it should be oil treated before storage if you don't use it often, especially when it is new and the metal is still 'raw.'"

Cast iron woks are generally not used in this country, although I am told they are used in China where wok cooking is a continuing all-day process for large families. With cast iron the rust would be even more of a problem, but again, not harmful to one's health.

SHRINKING AMOUNTS OF POTATO CHIPS

For years we have been buying Lay's sour cream and onion potato chips. The price seems to remain the same — $1.47 per package. But the net weight has changed. Originally it was 7½ ounces, then it went to 7 ounces, and recently to 6½ ounces. We consumers should be aware of these practices. Lawrence Boisvert, Long Beach, Calif.

We're all aware of the candy bar that has been shrinking over the years, but we're less inclined to notice a difference in the weight of a product. Thank you for pointing this out.

Another reader wrote having observed that Del Monte's cans of whole peeled tomatoes and stewed tomatoes were smaller, having decreased from a 16-ounce size can to a 14½-ounce size. And while the 7-ounce size of tuna cans used to be standard, they are slowly being replaced by 6½-ounce size cans.

Another sales method is to decrease the size of a can and label the product a "gourmet" item, as cat food manufacturers have done recently.

Readers who have noticed size and weight reduction of products, with no commensurate lowering of price, please pass the information along so we can all keep abreast of what seems to be a trend in marketing.

DIFFERENCE IN BLEACHES

Can you tell me if it is worth spending the extra money for a well-known bleach (Clorox), compared to house or store brands? The difference is quite a bit of money. John Offermann, Kingston, N.Y.

Liquid bleach is liquid bleach. Buy the cheapest you can get. There is little difference from brand to brand, all having about the same amount of active ingredient.

Of all the bleaches now on the market, including liquid and powder, chlorine and non-chlorine, liquid chlorine bleach is the most effective and the least expensive.

The only problem with chlorine bleach is that if you use a lot of it and you have a septic tank, you may have to have the bleach tends to slow down the decomposition process.

UPDATE: BEEF TALLOW

In a recent column concerning beef fat, or tallow, and how widespread its use is in packaged food and for deep-frying in restaurants, I stated that Burger King's chicken sandwich is deep-fried in shortening that's approximately 93 percent beef tallow and 7 percent vegetable oil.

Since then I have received information from Kate Holcomb, director of community relations with the Burger King enterprise in Florida advising us that this company now uses 100 percent pure vegetable oil to cook its fish and chicken products. Additionally, the National Heart Savers Association recently endorsed Burger King's new Chicken Tenders as a heart-healthy fast-service food.

Thank you, Burger King. But what about the french fries?

READER FEEDBACK: SAP ON CARS

Peter Kurowski, Pulaski, Wis.: "This is in regard to a question from a reader who wanted to know how to remove sap safely from auto finishes. Having parked my auto under trees for many years, the easiest and safest solution for the removal of tree sap is to dab it with gasoline until the sap dissolves, then lightly wipe the spot dry. Make certain to repolish the spot."

M. Pearce, Portland, Ore.: "I have successfully used a product called GOOP for removal of pitch, road tar, black marks from rubber, etc. This cleaner liquefies at body temperature and dissolves these hard-to-remove substances almost instantly with no rubbing."

Joyce Jameson, Lincoln, Neb.: "We solved the problem

by using No. 7 Tar and Bug Remover by DuPont. Tar is similar to remove. Do it as soon as possible because the sap discolors the paint."

Mrs. E. H. Hovey, Clearwater, Fla.: "Use mineral spirits. Put some on a very small rag or Q-Tip and rub on the spot. It will not hurt the finish. But do remove it — it will eat through the finish eventually if you don't."

Harrison Balthasar, Honesdale, Pa.: "Rubbing alcohol is the answer. I've been using it for years. It will cause a white-colored film after use, but this can be removed with auto polish." ■

"A wok that is well seasoned by repeated use doesn't rust. But it should be oil treated before storage if you don't use it often, especially when it is new and the metal is still 'raw.'"

Peaches:

Dear 'Dolly Parton' no delicate dandy

By Ted Larsen

Americans seem to have a love affair that even Freud would have trouble understanding. You might even call the obsession truly fruity. This romance is with the peach, of all things. If you doubt me, just think of a few everyday expressions.

"Everything worked out peachy!" "You're a peach." Peaches-and-cream complexion." For some reason Americans have linked perfection with the skin and flesh of the peach. Its seed also enters this bizarre relationship. As in, "This place is the pits!" Well, every romance has its downside, doesn't it?

To come to the nation's defense, I don't think this love affair is as weird as it may seem. After the rigors of winter and all the uncertainties of spring, the peach is the first crop that truly heralds the arrival of summer in a grand and proud way.

This is no delicate dandy like the strawberry or aspiring ingenue, asparagus. The peach is a full-bodied Southern vamp, complete with moist, sweet and velvety flesh. You might call them the Dolly Partons of the produce world. Imagine how much worse things would be today if Eve had used a peach. This is getting to be pretty racy stuff, so I'll rest my case.

The first peaches of the season originate in North Florida and Georgia. If grower estimates are accurate, 1986 should be an amazing year for peach production all through the South with two and a half times the yield of last year. It's hoped this will mean considerably lower prices for the shopper. Even though Georgia is synonymous with peach production, it's the second most raised fruit in the U.S., behind apples.

I don't care which ice cream brand is "in," the most American of desserts is best when made at home. This recipe is the finest I've found. A real "peach."

PEACH ICE CREAM
2 cups fresh peaches
1 1/2 cups sugar
1 teaspoon almond extract
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons flour
2 eggs, slightly beaten
1 1/2 cups milk
2 teaspoons vanilla

extract
2 cups heavy cream

Peel and put the peaches, saving the flesh, skin and stones. Place the peach flesh in a blender or food processor and add 1/2 cup sugar and almond extract. Process until peach flesh is crushed, but not pureed.

Combine the rest of the sugar, salt and flour in a 2-quart saucepan. Add the eggs and beat with 1/4 cup of milk. Now add the peach skin and pits. Add remaining milk and cook over low heat until mixture thickens and coats a spoon. Stir constantly and do not allow to boil. Remove from heat after thickening, strain out skin and pits and allow to cool.

When tepid, add cream and vanilla. Pour into the 2-quart can of your favorite ice cream maker and follow directions. When half frozen, add the crushed peaches. When finished, thoroughly harden in freezer before serving.

HINTS

From years of sometimes difficult experience I have found the best way to cook an ice cream base is in a microwave oven. It may not be traditional, but it's nearly impossible to scorch or curdle the egg-based sauce.

It may seem crazy to cook the peach skin and pits, but it adds a tremendous amount of fruit flavor.

If you don't own an ice cream freezer, get one! Arm-wrenching cranking is no longer necessary because freezers with electric motors can be had for $30 or less and they do an excellent job.

Named by the master chef Escoffier for opera star Nellie Melba, this has been a classic dessert since its birth in Victorian London's Savoy Hotel.

PEACH MELBA
3 fresh ripe peaches
2 quarts hot water
1 pint raspberries, fresh or frozen (thawed)
1/2 cup red currant jelly
1 1/2 teaspoons cornstarch
1 teaspoon cold water
vanilla ice cream

Peel peaches, cut in half and remove pits. Bring water to a boil in 3-quart saucepan. Drop peach halves in boiling water and reduce heat to a simmer. Poach peaches 2-4 minutes until tender but not mushy. Remove, drain and set aside. Place raspberries in a blender or food processor and add jelly. Process until very smooth. Strain seeds, if desired.

Gather some peaches and make peach ice cream.

Mix cornstarch with cold water and add to berry/jelly mixture. In a 2-quart saucepan bring these to a boil and stir until thickened. Reduce heat and simmer 5 minutes. Remove and cool. To serve, place a peach half in a small dessert dish and fill with softened vanilla ice cream. Pour cooled raspberry sauce over top. Serves 6.

HINTS

While not the traditional way to serve this dish, there is no reason why you can't substitute strawberries for raspberries or pears for the peaches. Cooking directions remain the same except strawberries may require more cooking to thicken their sauce.

For a beautiful touch, coat peaches with sauce before filling with ice cream. Pour sauce over the top.

You might like a sprinkling of toasted almond slivers over the top. It's a tasty variation.

This unusual and delicious Italian recipe is a magnificent combination of flavors and it can easily be done ahead of time. Perfect for casual summer dining.

ALMOND-STUFFED PEACHES

4 fresh peaches
1/2 cup slivered almonds
1/2 cup sugar
2 medium egg yolks
1/2 cup amaretti (Italian macaroons)
2 tablespoons unsalted butter vegetable oil, for greasing
1/2 cup Marsala wine

Preheat oven to 375F.

Coarsely chop amaretti in a food processor and set aside. Peel the peaches. Cut in half and remove pit. Scoop about 1 tablespoon of peach pulp from each center and place in processor. Add half of the almonds to the processor bowl and chop until the nuts are small crumbs. Add half of the sugar, the egg yolks and the amaretti to the almond/peach mixture and process, on and off, 3 times.

Grease a large baking dish with vegetable oil and arrange the peach halves. Fill peach halves with almond mixture and sprinkle remaining almonds and sugar over the top. Place a small piece of butter on top of each peach and drizzle the Marsala wine over each.

Bake 30 minutes or until topping is golden brown and crusty. Baste occasionally with more wine to avoid drying. Peaches should cook for at least 1/2 hour before serving. Serves 8. ■

The Gallery

By Sondra Astor Slave

The "fern bar" restaurant originated several years ago in California, spread to New York, and then, like a spreading vine, wound its way north, south and west. Connecticut has its share, and for those who want to see the concept at its best, a visit to The Gallery at 141 New London Turnpike, Glastonbury, is heartily recommended.

The decor is green and woody. But this is the real thing: substantial oak tables and caned oak chairs, and bright green walls with tastefully framed posters. It all comes together as sprightly and cheerful.

The menu is small but everything sounds good and, from our sampling, tastes wonderful as well. Most unusual of the appetizers was a small wheel of brie baked with butter and a topping of almonds and served with an assortment of fruit. What makes or breaks this type of presentation is the freshness of the ingredients and we felt that nothing we ate had overstayed its welcome in the kitchen.

Both cantelope and honeydew wedges were perfectly ripe, orange segments had just been peeled, pineapple was at that point of sugar sweetness. The brie ran at just the right speed. In total, a faultless plate.

Five potato skins were topped with Monterey Jack and Cheddar and you could define the two semi-melted cheeses and taste the bacon pieces. Pepperoni is an option to the bacon and chived sour cream, while unnecessary, was good.

Buffalo wings were not hot as described on the menu but good nonetheless. The accompanying blue cheese dressing, also available for salads, was both chunky and creamy.

The Gallery's breadbasket contained gently warmed pumpernickel rolls studded with raisins. If the rest of the food were not so good, one could easily fill up on them.

The garden salad continued the theme of freshness, with its mix of lettuce, tomato and cucumber. The house dressing, creamy parmesan, sprinkled the cheese under the dressing. To our delight, this was not the powdery stuff generally served but small nuggets of real cheese with a delicate taste.

We were hard pressed to decide which of our main dishes we liked best. A duck half was well roasted with little fat and a crisp skin. The raspberry liqueur sauce might have been faulted for excessive sweetness if it were not so good. The rice pilaf on which it sat benefitted from chunks of onion and from the sauce that seeped onto its edges.

A steak, even when marinated in a teriyaki sauce, is no better than the quality of the meat itself. The Gallery's top sirloin was top of the line. It combined beef taste with tenderness and a good soy sauce highlight. Even the baked potato, happily without an extraneous foil covering, seemed special.

A small steak, mated with stuffed sole, a stuffed shrimp and a family of scallops were baked in a sumptuous butter sauce as a special of the day. Steamers were also to be included and our very pleasant waiter apologized profusely for their absence. With a baked potato, the portion seemed more than generous so we were indeed surprised to find him return with a shrimp cocktail as a substitute. Perhaps because it was unexpected, or perhaps because it was without cost, his arrangement of eight very large shrimp, still in their shell, were more delicious than any shrimp cocktail in our memory. Again, freshness was the key.

Desserts, while satisfactory, were not up to the pleasures of the rest of the meal. Midnight chocolate layer cake separated four layers of cake with three of frosting and topped it all with a wafer of pure chocolate for a result that was adequate but not exciting.

with raspberry jam. The texture was halfway between crisp and tender. Perhaps, it would have been more interesting if it were one or the other.

Marble cheesecake worked best. The cheese and chocolate were both rich and creamy, yet not excessively heavy. Coffee, a French blend, was delicious.

Appetizers at $3 to $4 and main dishes from $9 to $14 are fairly priced considering quality. The Gallery also has an active bar and facilities for banquets. I was skeptical of its abilities with so wide a range of offerings, but from our lovely dinner, it would seem the greater the choices, the greater the possibilities for enjoyment. ■

How to pick the number one newspaper in a multiple paper town.

In a town like Manchester, you might as well start with readership. In a most recent survey conducted by First Market Research of Boston, the Manchester Herald holds the overall local readership lead. According to the study, the Manchester Herald is the leader for local news, local happenings and local sports, with three quarters of the readers saying the coverage is the most extensive.

Next, the number one newspaper should provide readers with a depth of information needed to make valued and reasonable decisions regarding key local issues that may impact on their lives today, or in the future. Well that same study shows that the Manchester Herald is rated quite highly in terms of space devoted to selected issues in its Opinion pages. Nearly eight in ten readers find that the space devoted to viewpoints on local issues to be more than sufficient in explaining the issues.

The number one newspaper should also provide a service to its subscribers. The Manchester Herald is found to be a good community newspaper by over nine in ten readers, with over one third rating it as very good. The Manchester Herald is also a very effective advertising tool for reaching the Manchester Area public and it is preferred over most other forms of printed advertising.

Caring about its readers should also be a priority with the number one newspaper. The Manchester Herald feels it is their responsibility to listen to what residents in Manchester have to say. They want to hear about readers views on the news — what they think is important, what should go into the paper and what shouldn't. They're especially interested in hearing any comments you may have about the service you get from the Herald. They guarantee prompt delivery and courteous, efficient service on all billing matters. If you're not satisfied, they want to know about it.

If you're still trying to figure out which is the number one newspaper in Manchester, the facts are obvious. Your choice will be the same paper more and more readers in Manchester choose every day. The Manchester Herald — your voice in Manchester.

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A bomb exploded in a densely populated area of Beirut during morning hours today, killing at least 140 and wounding 140 others in blazing fires, officials said.

Firefighters used ladders to the upper floors of apartment houses as fire by the blast, and more than 30 women and children were rescued. Tenants shouted from upper balconies as they fled.

Rescuers hunted for seven people feared buried in debris toppled by the explosion.

"My brothers, my brothers!" screamed a woman as rescuers pulled her from the rubble of a collapsed building owned by her brothers.

Many victims were beyond recognition.

"It was a mad scene," said Ghattas, an east Beirut resident. "Motorists honking their horns, ambulance sirens wailing."

There was no sign of responsibility for the explosion, the seventh in the east Beirut this year.

A huge black cloud hung over the area after a 6-foot-deep crater was formed in a street near the Star Line neighborhood.
