SNET pact talks down to the wire

By Susan Okulo The Associated Press

NEW HAVEN — Negotiators for Southern New England Telecommunications Corp. and the Connecticut Union of Telephone Workers were considering each other's proposals Friday as talks for a contract for 9,500 workers moved toward deadline.

Workers have authorized union leaders to call a strike at 12:01 a.m. Sunday. CUTW represents operators, customer service representatives, technicians, secretaries and repair personnel.

Union spokesman Enrico Melita said each side had exchanged offers. A union telephone message recorded for members Friday morning said CUTW had reviewed the company's "amended offer" and was planning to present a counter-proposal.

Melita and SNET spokesman Mike McCann both said the talks would extend into Saturday, the last day of the old contract.

McCann said customers using direct-dial services would notice no change in service in the event of a strike. However, he said customers that needed an operator or the services of directory information would face delays.

Customers seeking the installation of telephone service or the repair of equipment would also find longer than usual waits if a strike was called, McCann said.

He said about 4,000 SNET management employees would temporarily move into operator and technical jobs in the event of a job action.

The union and the company have agreed to not speak publicly about the specific issues under discussion at the bargaining table.

When it announced the May 16 start of negotiations, the union said its primary goal was to resist any company attempt to win concessions from the previous contract.

The union also said it would seek better employment security and improved pension and wages.

The union and company would both be seeking ways to reduce health care costs, the union said.

Renn's Tavern is reopening; customers turn bartenders

By George Loyne Herald Reporter

Renn's Tavern is back in business. The Cooper Street tavern, a watering hole for Manchester residents for more than 50 years, has been closed this summer because of a change in ownership.

However, the tavern will reopen Monday, said Mary Baldyga, who, along with her husband, Richard, is buying the tavern. The Baldygas, who live on Birch Mountain Road, met each other at Renn's two years ago.

The neighborhood has supported this tavern for a long time," Baldyga said Friday. Baldyga described Renn's as "a blue-collar bar" that attracts a variety of people, such as those who live nearby, town employees, and construction workers. The two decided not to change the name, although they have made other changes, she said. Most noticeable is probably the rear wooden bar, which has had its dark stain scrubbed off and replaced with a lighter shade, she said.

The familiar coin toss, in which customers pitch their change into cups above the bar, will remain. Instead of nickels, though, patrons will have to throw quarters. Baldyga said the money will continue to go to the pediatric unit of Manchester Memorial Hospital.

Anyone tossing a quarter into the cup will win a beer. The pinball and bowling machines will remain, as will the jukebox, she said. Customers will be able to listen to a wide range of songs, from Glenn Miller, to rock

Reagan faces hospital tests

By Terence Hunt The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, who has experienced urinary tract problems dating back two decades, will go to a Navy hospital Saturday for urological tests, his spokesman announced Friday.

A local anesthesia will be used for the procedures, to be done on an out-patient basis at Bethesda Naval Medical Center.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said doctors would be "looking for some abnormality in the urinary tract of the bladder to see if there's a growth, a discoloration or stone or whatever there is. He said he did not know whether the president had been experiencing any pain or symptoms of problems."

"I'm not aware of anything and he told us he feels fine," Speakes said. Scrapping plans for a weekend trip to Camp David, Reagan remained at the White House Friday and planned to deliver his midday radio address on Saturday from the Oval Office.

After the five-minute speech, he will fly by helicopter to the hospital in a nearby Maryland suburb. The president is expected back at the White House the same day, Speakes said.

Reagan's physician, Dr. T. Burton Smith, a urologist, will supervise the tests. Although such tests often follow signs such as blood in the urine or difficulty urinating, Dr. Eduardo Farcon, a urologist at the New York University Medical Center, said they might well be recommended without such symptoms in a man of the president's age — 75 — who has had colon cancer or a history of urinary tract infections.

According to the White House, Reagan's most recent urological problem was a urinary tract inflammation in 1982, discovered after Reagan experienced "slight discomfort." The president took antibiotics and the problem cleared up within several days, the White House said.

His problems date back as far as 1967 when Reagan was governor of California. At the time, Smith performed a "transurethral prostaticectomy" to correct an anatomical abnormality of a portion of Reagan's urinary bladder called the "neck" and to remove about 30 "seed-like" prostatic stones.

The procedure is commonly used to clear an obstruction in the prostate region when cancer is not suspected. "So this has been a history with the president," said Speakes. "It's something they keep an eye on and test for."

He said the last examination was during the 1982 flareup. Speakes stressed that Saturday's tests are not related to Reagan's bout with cancer a year ago, when a malignant tumor was removed from his colon.

The tests Saturday will include an intravenous urogram and a bladder cystoscopic examination. The program involves the injection of a dye into the arm, and an examination of it by X-ray. The other test involves the insertion of a device, through the penis, that can relay pictures of the bladder.

Speakes' announcement ended five hours of confusion and mystery in the White House about Reagan's health. Early in the day, Peter Rousset, another spokesman, left open the possibility that Reagan would undergo medical tests over the weekend but refused to provide any details.

Any discussion of health matters pertaining to the president is considered extremely sensitive among Reagan's staff because of Nancy Reagan's unhappiness about coverage of the president's surgery last year.

Speakes said Reagan's doctors recommended that he have a test "at a convenient time" and Reagan decided last Monday to cancel his regular weekend trip to the Maryland mountain retreat. Speakes said Reagan decided to have the tests done Saturday because of "the heavy schedule anticipated for the fall."

While at the hospital, Reagan also will undergo a urinalysis test for drugs, part of his campaign to set an example in the war against drug and alcohol abuse. The White House said the urinalysis was moved up from Monday because medication given in connection with the urological exam "could cause an inaccurate result" in the drug test.

Let's proceed with care in battling drugs

Since the drug-related deaths of two popular and promising athletes earlier this summer, the issue of drug use in our society has received a great deal of attention.

Although it has long been recognized as a problem, drug abuse only recently acquired what seems to be a sense of national urgency. The increasing popularity of "crack," a highly addictive form of cocaine, and the cocaine-related deaths of University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias and Cleveland Browns' defensive back Don Rogers elevated drug abuse from a well-known but widely tolerated problem to a national emergency that has a host of people calling for an all-out offensive against drugs.

President Reagan, whose wife has been carrying on a quiet crusade against drugs for years, released a six-point plan this week aimed at creating a drug-free generation of Americans. Following a televised speech in which Reagan outlined his program, several other politicians were quick to publicize their own plans for eliminating drugs.

In Connecticut Thursday, GOP gubernatorial candidates Richard Bozuto and Gerald Labriola held news conferences within an hour of each other to proclaim that they would submit to drug testing and urge members of their administrations to do the same. Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., quickly called on the schools to devote a full day this year to educating all students about drugs.

Such plans can only be viewed skeptically. Instead of generating an intelligent, forthright and national examination of the drug problem, politicians have turned the issue into a charade by vying for air time and headlines with their plans for eliminating drugs.

Their ramblings might be humorous were it not for the unsettling implications of some of the plans they propose.

The politicians seem to have found a stance they can all agree on, and one that is popular. Opposing drugs is about as safe as opposing AIDS — few people are going to stand up and argue that drugs are good and should be promoted.

It is this popularity that makes the issue cry out for temperance. In their haste to rid the country of drugs, the nation's policy-makers may very well endorse plans that could deprive many Americans of their rights and do little to stem the use of illegal drugs.

Drug testing, for instance, could soon become a condition of employment for many jobs — a condition that would certainly cause some non-drug users to lose their jobs. Besides not being 100 percent accurate, drug tests also reveal not only what substances a person might have ingested while on the job, but also things that he or she consumed several days prior to the test.

Cries for better enforcement of drug laws might also lead to overzealousness on the part of law enforcement officers and courts. The drive to create a drug-free society could easily wind up a witch hunt in which innocent people are hurt and "guilty" ones fail to get the help they need.

Developing a drug-free generation is a worthy goal, but it should be pursued carefully.

Death squads still active in Latin America

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's victory in the fight for $100 million in aid to the Nicaraguan contras is bad news for Marxist regimes in Angola, Mozambique, Ethiopia, Afghanistan, Laos and Cambodia.

Why? It "unleashes" the privately collected resources of the World Anti-Communist League, which had been the financial mainstay of the anti-Sandinista forces during the two-year period when U.S. aid money was suspended by Congress.

Unfortunately, their activities have not disappeared in Latin America. Our associate Jon Lee Anderson, who delved into the league for us two years ago, has recently co-authored (with his brother, Scott) a book on the subject, "Inside the League."

In Mexico, the Tecos — a neo-Nazi secret society that had the league's affiliate since the 1970s — were exposed as fascists and anti-Semites in 1984 and were purged by clearly embarrassed World Anti-Communist League officials, who had intimate knowledge of the Tecos' tendencies for years.

The extra time and the extra back-up to make sure that the residents and staff were safe is deeply appreciated by all. So from New Hope Manor to our fire department, a sincere thank you.

about what may be going on behind the scenes in Peking these days.

DENG XIAOPING is indeed "on top" for the time being, and has set Communist China on the road to friendly relations with the United States, including free-market principles into the mainland economy, and even permitted the partial relaxation of various "security" regulations.

But it would appear that, in the interval between Burns' initial detention at Zhenba and his release, the Peking airport was being prepared for the arrival of the Peking airport as he was preparing to leave for Hong Kong, somebody high in official circles in Peking decided to embarrass Deng by making a major fuss over Burns' conduct.

Matters would, of course, have been infinitely worse if the authorities had found serious evidence of espionage on Burns' person at Zhenba or in his Peking apartment. Such a blow to Deng's policy of friendship with Washington might well have resulted in Deng ending up in a cell next to Burns.

So the situation in Peking may be more fluid, and more precarious, than the unlucky John Burns supposed. Meanwhile, if you must visit Peking, make sure you obey the traffic lights and don't spit on the sidewalk.

No valid interest in speed limit law

To the Editor:

Within the past few months the issue of 55 mph in America has been more hotly debated than ever before. There is good reason for this: The law no longer serves a valid public interest.

Even among safety advocates, there is disagreement concerning the actual number of lives saved by 55 mph. If any at all. In fact, there is now general agreement that in open western states, 55 mph may contribute to the causes of accidents, since it forces drivers to speed so many extra hours getting to their destinations. 55 mph may be altogether appropriate for most roads in this state, but to have the national government impose it on Kansas or Nevada is totally inappropriate. Nearly two hundred members of the Connecticut Chapter of the Citizens Coalition for Rational Traffic Laws believe that each state should be free to set limits based on sound engineering criteria, matched to local conditions. We are actively lobbying Congress for a change in the law.

Of the industrialized nations of the world, only the United States has such a low speed limit. Our neighbors to the north and south post 100 kph (62 mph) limits. Is it really so outrageous to suggest a 60 mph limit for Connecticut, or a 70 mph limit for western states?

Fire department helped New Hope

To the Editor:

I want to publicly thank the South End Manchester Fire Department for their cooperation, vigilance and care that they showed toward New Hope when we were experiencing difficulty with our fire alarm and sprinkler systems.

What's behind the 'open door' in China?

The Travel section of the New York Times for July 20 (which was printed well in advance of the news sections), contained a long article by the paper's Peking correspondent John Burns. Under the headline "Through China's Newly Opened Doors," Burns told readers that "China has opened up once more to exploration."

"Like virtually everything else that has brought tolerance to the patterns of life here," Burns bubbled, "the relaxation of travel restrictions has been the work of the 81-year-old Communist Party leader, Deng Xiaoping." As a matter of fact, he went on, the mood nowadays is so relaxed that "since petitioning the China International Travel Service is fraught with disappointment, a growing number of travelers have been journeying into restricted areas without permission."

It is unlikely, however, that any Times readers packed their bags and departed forthwith for Peking to enjoy the new atmosphere for themselves. For two days earlier, the Times had reported that John Burns was being held in a cell at the Pao Zhu detention center in Peking, on suspicion of "entering an area forbidden to foreigners, gathering intelligence information and espionage."

IT SEEMS THAT BURNS and two male companions had indeed entered forbidden areas during a motorcycle trip through central China, and had been arrested at the little town of Zhenba. After being held for two days and required to write long "self-criticisms," they were released and permitted to return to Peking.

William Rusher

But subsequently, as Burns was preparing to fly to Hong Kong on vacation, he was taken into custody at the Peking airport and questioned there for 15 hours, then taken to his apartment in Peking, which was searched by "10 security men with videotape camera." Two hours later he found himself in a "padded cell" at the detention center, watched by guards around the clock.

There he languished for more than five days. Finally, on July 23, three days after "Through China's Newly Opened Doors" appeared in the Times's Travel section, Peking publicly accused Burns of "spying and intelligence gathering," declared that only the desire for friendly relations with the United States had prevented his prosecution, and formally expelled him from China.

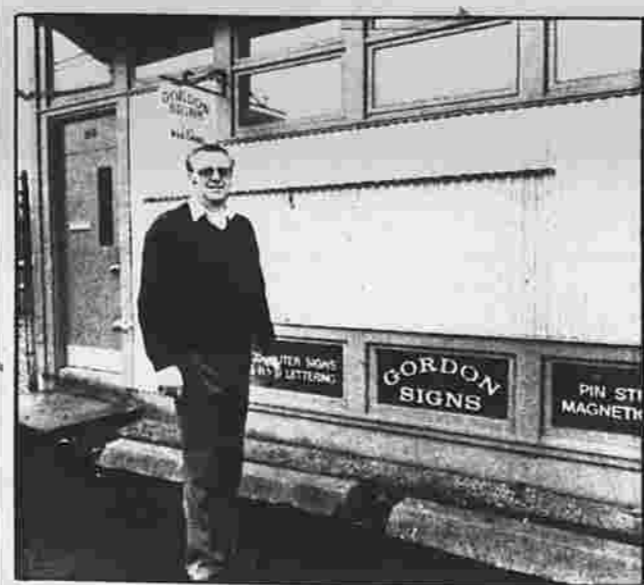

It should be added that, throughout, Burns denied that he had engaged in any sort of espionage or intelligence gathering, and there is no good reason to doubt this. But the chronology of the whole affair suggests some fascinating things

Astrograph

August 10, 1986

A more active social life is in store for you during the year ahead. This will be due primarily to a dynamic new friend who knows all the right people.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 23) There is someone with whom you should be getting in touch over an important matter. If you fail to do so today, he or she will be difficult to reach...

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Someone who likes you a great deal may impulsively offer you something valuable today. This person's feelings will be hurt if you refuse.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) An enterprise that you are eager to promote can be successfully launched today. Don't be afraid to use bold measures.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) A profitable idea that you have been keeping to yourself should be pursued in earnest today. Conditions are right for you to pull it off.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) People with whom you associate today might merely wish for things to happen. You, on the other hand, will be actively working to turn dreams into reality.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll function best today if there is a bit of pressure on you. Challenge bring out your better qualities and make you drive.

Bridge

Little things can mean a lot

By James Jacoby
Little things can mean a lot, not only to lovers but to bridge players. And a careless little discard from a seemingly inconsequential holding can mean quite a lot.

What's the lesson here? West surely knows from the opening no-trump bid that South has the ace of hearts. And West does not really expect that declarer is going to give him a second club trick. So he should let a spade go.

U.S./World In Brief

Second Baby Bell settles contract

NEW YORK — BellSouth Corp. reached tentative contract agreement with the communications workers union Friday, but five other regional Bell telephone companies prepared for possible strikes as the year's biggest labor talks headed toward a Saturday midnight deadline.

Nuclear weapons tests to continue

WASHINGTON — The State Department, rejecting appeals from Congress and six European and Third World leaders, said Friday that U.S. nuclear weapons must be tested to counter a massive Soviet buildup and to maintain international security.

Porsche lovers compete, socialize

PORTLAND, Maine — Porsches are not just for the privileged, insist lovers of the German-made sports car who have gathered in Portland from all 50 states and Europe this week for their annual convention.

Bank robber flees with hostages

HELSINKI, Finland — A man carrying a shotgun and explosives took 11 hostages during an attempted bank robbery Friday and then fled in a getaway car with three of his captives and a suitcase full of money.

Soviet officials visit Chernobyl

MOSCOW — Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov and KGB chief Viktor M. Chebrikov inspected the Chernobyl nuclear plant Friday and urged the managers of the cleanup operation to use their resources more effectively, the official Tass news agency reported.

Soldiers detain apartheid critics

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Two of South Africa's most prominent critics of apartheid, black activist Winnie Mandela and white Parliament member, Helen Suzman, were detained briefly by soldiers Friday while visiting a Soweto school.

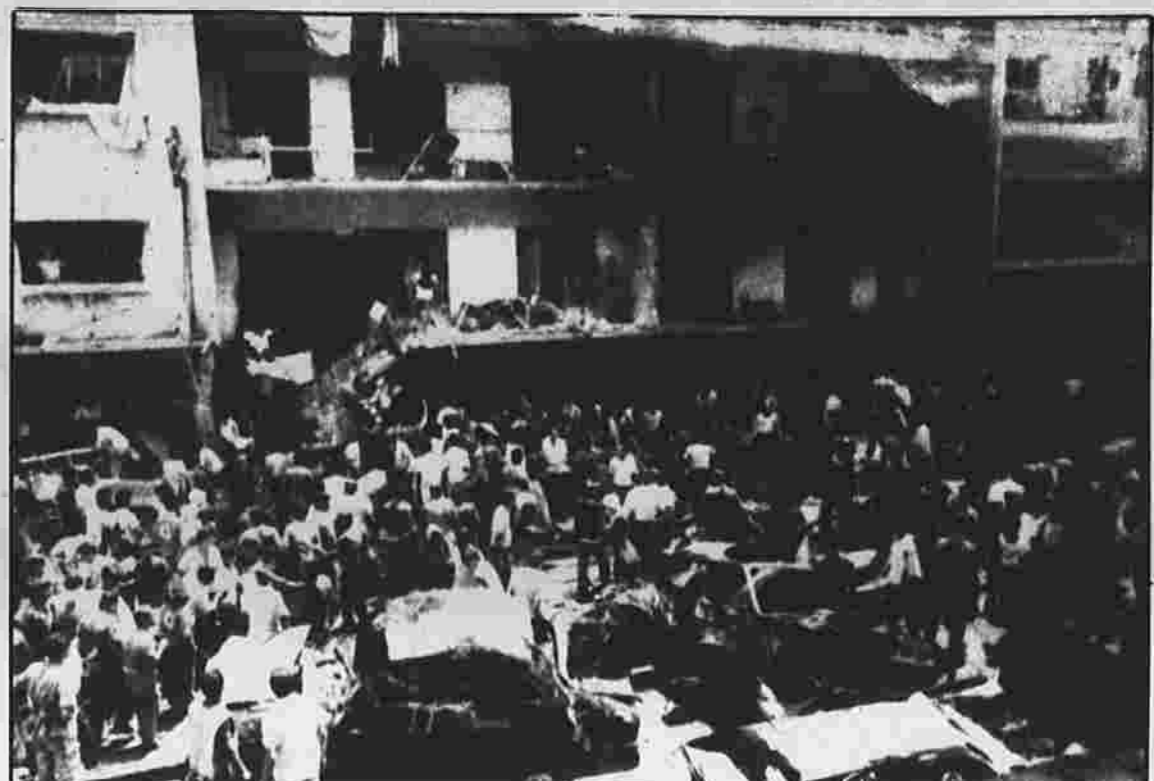

Another tornado hits Rhody

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The third tornado in two days struck near Rhode Island's capital city Friday, tearing a two-mile swath of destruction as it tore down trees and power lines.

Providence was reported from the twister, which hit North Smithfield, about 15 miles from Providence, shortly after 11 a.m.

Third car bombing in 12 days kills 17 in busy Beirut block

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An explosives-laden car, abandoned by a young blonde woman who quickly disappeared, blew up Friday on a busy shopping block in Moslem west Beirut, killing 17 people and wounding 84, police said.

Civilians, militiamen, Red Cross volunteers and rescue workers crowd the scene of the car-bombing in West Beirut Friday. The midday blast, the third of its kind in 12 days, killed 17 people.

Drought aid is going to non-drought areas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Of the $1 billion announced by the Reagan administration as part of a relief package for the drought-stricken Southeast, less than 4 percent will actually go to the parched region, according to congressional figures.

Atlantic states with counties so far designated as agricultural disaster areas.

The largest chunk of the payments — $143 million — will go to farmers in Iowa, which has had well above normal levels of rainfall and is near harvesting a bumper corn crop.

Figures worked out by the Democratic-controlled House Agriculture Committee show that of the $1 billion in additional advance payments, about $32 million will go to farmers of eight Southeastern and Mid-

Mourning customs get new emphasis

NEW YORK — When death strikes in a Jewish family, traditional mourning follows a somber pattern — no work, no entertaining, garments torn, praying three days, and unrestrained tears.

Judaism in an educational campaign on appropriate family practices at death and other special occasions. "There is a growing emphasis on traditional practices," says Rabbi Akiba Lubow...

After the funeral, friends are expected to prepare a meal for the bereaved family — the food traditionally circular such as bagels or hard-boiled eggs, signifying that life goes on.

At the start, on the funeral day, those left behind the "avelim," rip or cut some upper garment — blouse, shirt or tie — symbolizing rending grief. Sometimes a black torn ribbon is substituted.

While the rules aren't specific on when to return to work, the guidelines say the usual practice is to return to work as soon as possible, with a tombstone not dedicated until toward the end of a year.

Goodins mark 40th

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Goodin celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary July 26 at the home of her brother, Donald MacNeil, in Middletown.

Killer bees kill student

MIAMI (AP) — A University of Miami graduate student was attacked by a swarm of killer bees in a Costa Rican jungle and crawled into a cave and wedged himself under a rock overhang in a futile effort to escape the fatal stings.

Inn-Siang Ooi, a 24-year-old Malaysian who was working on his doctorate in biology, died July 3 during a field trip with 11 other students about 100 miles northwest of San Jose.

The Miami Herald on Friday quoted Schnell as saying Ooi had been out ahead of the rest of the students as they hiked along a steep trail.

"The others saw a swarm of bees around his head, a cloud," Schnell said. "At first they climbed toward him, trying to help, but they were attacked, too, and had to back off."

An hour after the initial attack, two of his companions reached Ooi, still covered with bees and unconscious, wedged between rocks just inside a small cave. They tried but failed to inject adrenaline, which might have kept Ooi alive, Schnell said.

Their efforts left two — Claudette Mo, of the University of Wisconsin, and Peter Smallwood, a rock-climbing expert from the University of Arizona — covered with hundreds of bee stings, Schnell said.

After sunset, when the bees calmed down, four Costa Rican guards tucked Ooi's body from the rocks. His remains were returned to his family in Malaysia.

LEGAL NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

In accordance with the provisions of Section 128, Title 23, U.S. Code, as prescribed in the Federal-Aid Highway Program Manual, Volume 7, Chapter 7, Section 5, dated December 30, 1974, from the Federal Highway Administration, the Town of Manchester, with the assistance of the Connecticut Department of Transportation, will hold a design public hearing for State Project No. 76-129, Federal Project No. IXDM-2252(1), "The Reconstruction of Tolland Turnpike," on Wednesday, September 17, 1986, at 7:30 P.M. on the first floor of the Senior Citizens Center, located at 549 Middle Turnpike East, Manchester, Connecticut.

This hearing will be conducted with the Town's recommended plans for the reconstruction of Tolland Turnpike between North Main Street and Deming Road.

The project begins approximately 600 feet east of the intersection of Tolland Turnpike with Buckland Street and Adams Street and terminates at the intersection of Tolland Turnpike and Deming Road.

Approximately 10,000 linear feet of Tolland Turnpike and 400 feet of North Main Street will be reconstructed, along with the realignment of the intersection of Tolland Turnpike and North Main Street.

Tolland Turnpike, beginning at the intersection with North Main Street, is proposed to be a uniform 22-foot wide pavement within a proposed 60' right of way. An eight-foot bituminous concrete bikeway is being proposed along the north side of the proposed roadway and will run the entire length of the project. A five-foot concrete sidewalk is proposed along the south side of the roadway, beginning at North Main Street and ending in the vicinity of the Jester's Court. Tolland Turnpike between the intersection of Adams and Buckland Streets, including a section of North Main Street, is being proposed as a uniform 52-foot wide roadway.

This project is being funded under the Federal-Aid Interstate Trade-In Program, a Federal, State and local cooperative effort to improve traffic circulation and roadway safety in urban areas.

It is anticipated that this project will have no significant social, economic, or environmental impacts, in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Administration/Urban Mass Transportation Administration environmental regulations, 23 CFR, Part 771.115, and, as such, will be recommended by the Connecticut Department of Transportation to the Federal Highway Administration as a categorical exclusion.

Tentative schedules for the right-of-way acquisition and the construction of this project will be discussed at the public hearing. The relocation assistance program will also be discussed at the hearing.

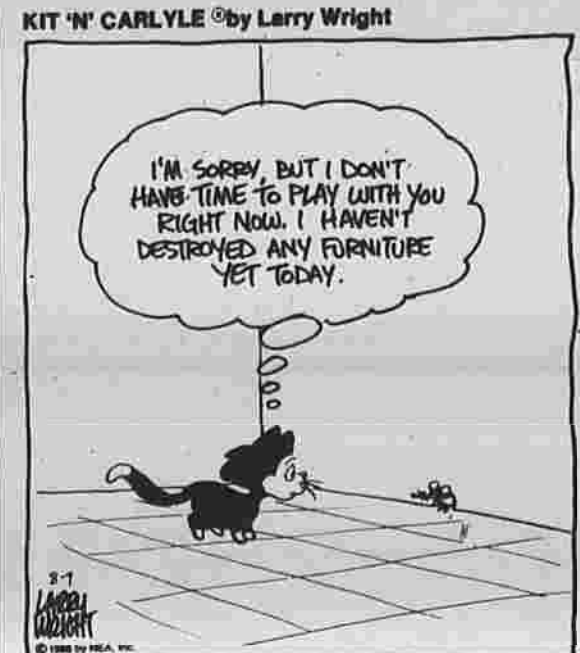

Plans showing the recommended proposal are available for public inspection in the following locations:

Town Clerk's Office
Manchester Town Hall
41 Center Street
Manchester, Connecticut 06040
Monday-Friday, 8:30 A.M. - 4:30 P.M.

Engineering Office
160 Pascoene Place, Room 414
Newington, Connecticut 06111
Monday-Friday, 8:30 A.M. - 4:00 P.M.

Written statements and exhibits in place of, or in addition to, oral statements made at the hearing may be mailed or delivered to the office of the Manchester Town Clerk at the above address no later than 4:30 P.M., October 1, 1986.

All persons interested in this matter are welcome to attend the public hearing.

The story behind the story

By Josie

Rip Torn

Q. Who is Rip Torn? What is his real name and what movies has he been in? K. Kipp, Visalia, Calif.

A. His real name is Elmore Torn, Jr., son of Elmore (who nicknamed him Rip) and Thelma Spacek Torn (his cousin, on his mother's side, is Sissy Spacek) from Temple, Taylor and Longview, Texas. His list of credits could go on forever since he's regarded as one of the best character actors in the business. But here's a brief sampling:

Movies: "Time Limit," "Pork Chop Hill," "Sweet Bird of Youth," "King of Kings," "Critic's Choice," "The Cincinnati Kid," "Tropic of Cancer," "Payday," "Heartland," "The Man Who Fell to Earth," "Coma," "Jinxed," "Cross Creek," "Flashpoint," "Songwriter" and "City Heat." He's currently wrapping "Extreme Prejudice" with Nick Nolte; it's due for release in December.

On TV, you may have seen him in "Johnny Belinda," "Sophia" (as Loren's husband, Carlo Ponti), "Blind Ambition" (as Richard Nixon), "The Atlanta Child Murders," and the recent "Dream West." He has a movie-of-the-week, "Destination America," due on NBC next season. And onstage, he's played roles in and/or directed everything from Shakespeare to Tennessee Williams to Eugene O'Neill to Strindberg. ■

Q. Please tell me all about Robert Redford. L. Showalter, Fresno, Calif.

A. Charles Robert Redford Jr. is 48 (49 on August 18), was born in Santa Monica, Calif., to Charles Redford, a milkman, and his wife, Martha. After World War II, his father became an accountant for Standard Oil and the family moved to Van Nuys where the teen-ager often got into trouble — stealing hubcaps was a favorite diversion.

He was bored with school but good at sports. After graduation from Van Nuys High School in 1955, he went to the University of Colorado at Boulder on a baseball scholarship. Again, at college, academic studies bored him and he didn't like the one-dimensional life of a jock either, so he began to skip classes and baseball practice and to start drinking, all of which combined to lose him his scholarship and get him thrown out of school.

While at college, he had become interested in art and had been told by a friend that he should study painting in Paris. He worked in the California oilfields to earn the money to go, and several months later, set out on a freighter bound for France.

Once there, he drifted from country to country, hitchhiking and sleeping in hotels. Ultimately he wound up in Florence, Italy, where he began to study painting. After being admonished by his teacher for not progressing quickly enough, however, he decided to chuck in his studies and return to the U.S.

Again, he hitchhiked from state to state, eventually winding up back in California, with no idea of what to do with his life and a worse drinking problem than he'd had in college. Things seemed to straighten out when he met Lola van Wagenen, a Utah native living in his apartment building in Los Angeles. She encouraged him to continue his studies and after they were married, they moved to New York so he could study at Brooklyn's Pratt Institute.

He soon switched his attention to set design and was advised to take acting classes so that he would understand the set's interaction with the actors. He enrolled at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York.

At the academy, he had the immediate success he'd never found anywhere else. After two years, one of his teachers arranged for him to be cast in a Broadway play, "Tall Story." He moved next to one called "The Highest Tree" and then went back to Hollywood, where within six months, he had a number of TV acting jobs. Back in New York, he did two other plays, "Little Moon of Alban" and "Sunday in New York," in which he had his first lead role.

He made his movie debut shortly afterward, in "War Hunt" and did a lot of TV: "Route 66," "Twilight Zone," "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" and a TV drama, "The Voice of Charlie Pont." Director Mike Nichols saw him in it and immediately cast him in what would be a major Broadway hit, "Barefoot in the Park."

Doing eight performances a week, though, bored him as all routine seems to bore him, and after a year, he left the show and returned to Hollywood to do four forgettable films: "Situation

Robert Redford

"Hopeless But Not Serious," "Inside Daisy Clover," "The Chase" and "This Property Is Condemned."

Disillusioned, he moved his family briefly to Spain and Crete, but returned to Hollywood to repeat his role in the film of "Barefoot in the Park." "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" was next, and it made him a star.

Other films followed quickly: "Downhill Racer," "Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here," "Little Fauss and Big Halsey," "The Hot Rock," "The Candidate," "Jeremiah Johnson," "The Way We Were," "The Sting," "The Great Gatsby," "The Great Waldo Pepper," "Three Days of the Condor," "All the President's Men," "A Bridge Too Far," "The Electric Horseman" and "Brubaker."

In 1980, he switched to directing with "Ordinary People" (and won an Oscar for it) and began to retreat from acting. His next film was "The Natural" four years later, followed by "Out of Africa" last year. His newest is the recently released "Legal Eagles."

This month, he starts directing "The Milagro Beanfield War" in New Mexico. After that, several movies have been mentioned as possibilities, including "Springs," in which he would play Raymond Chandler's detective Philip Marlowe and a sequel to "The Way We Were."

He and wife Lola are separated. They have three children: Shauna, Amy and David. ■

Q. Please settle a long-standing argument. When I saw the movie "The Champ" in 1979, I thought Faye Dunaway looked a little heavy. My sister says she was pregnant during the filming. I thought her son was born in 1980. Who's right? Mary Turnbull (and sister) Scranton, Pa.

A. You are. Her son, Liam, was born in 1980. She had gained a little extra weight at the time and that's what you saw. Reportedly, she was so sensitive about it then that she chose to do few publicity pictures until she slimmed down. ■

Fat busters!

Grand Lake isn't for the lazy

A stout woman in a tent dress and running shoes walks rapidly along a country road in eastern Connecticut. Her fingers are closed into fists and her elbows are bent as though she's ready for a fight. She punctuates each step of her three-mile course by punching the air before her.

As she walks, she talks about sons (she has five) and daughters-in-law (she has three). She talks about life in New Jersey, where she is a town politician. Her new-found companion is a school principal several towns away.

A young woman with a figure and costume like Daisy Mae of Dogpatch overtakes the women, her blond ponytail bouncing as she walks to the beat heard through her radio earphones.

The pair of women, both in their 40s, show the other no jealousy.

"You know, I am truly impressed with my own stamina," the stout woman tells her companion. "I never could have done this a week ago. It's all thanks to this place."

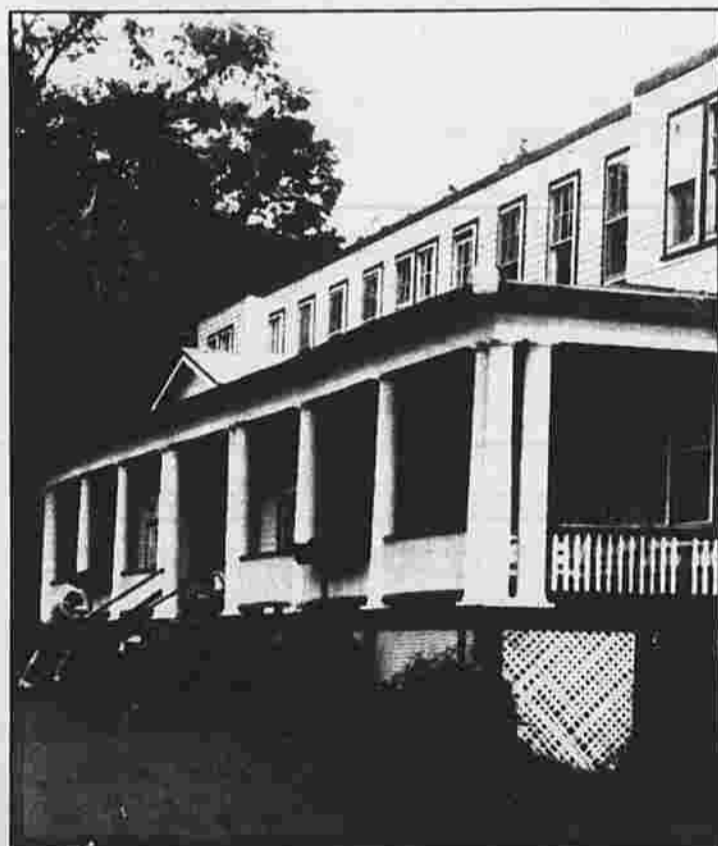

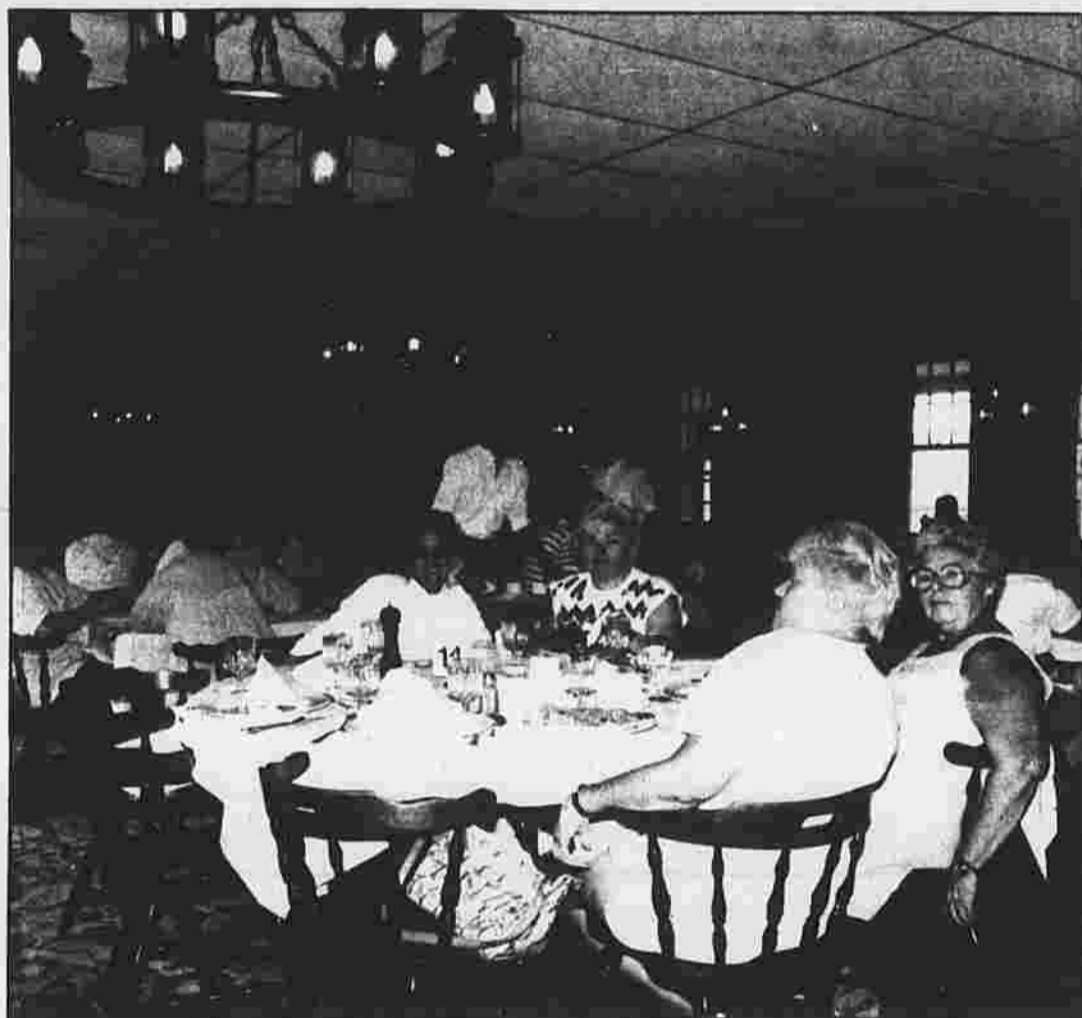

Her steps quicken as she heads downhill for the home stretch of her walk. The morning fog is just burning off Lake Williams as she turns the corner onto Route 207, and "this place" comes into view. It is Grand Lake Spa Hotel, a diet and fitness resort in Lebanon. It overlooks Lake Williams, about 20 miles southeast of Manchester.

With tennis and swimming classes, brisk walks and evening hay rides, the spa has been compared to an overnight camp for adults. But it's a camp where the folks, ages 18 to 80, fork over $700 each for their seven days of fun, and hope to drop at least seven pounds by the end of the week.

There are neither windows nor sparkling floor-to-ceiling mirrors in the basement exercise room.

It looks very much as though

someone had nailed up paneling, added some carpet and recessed ceiling lights, and called the place a recreation room. In fact, that's exactly what occurred when the present owners, Natalie Skolnik and Elie Mechaly, took over the 85-room hotel about 18 months ago. The lower floor of one lodge became a catacomb of massage rooms and saunas; the basement of another became an exercise salon.

The women in the afternoon exercise class compensate for the lack of luminescence. Their costumes light up the room.

Effie Bishoff, for example, a blonde in her late 60s, drove up from Washington, D.C. with her husband, Fred. Her generously-applied eye makeup looks particularly startling since her hair is yanked back into a wispy bun for this class. But the eye shadow coordinates with the shimmering electric-blue ensemble that encases her body from painted toenails to rounded shoulders.

Bishoff's chatter does not cease, even during the exercises. Hers is the only voice which joins that of the instructor.

"You know, I have a problem," she tells no one in particular, as nine women walk on their tiptoes around the room, then stoop into a Groucho Marx-style stance. "I stopped smoking and I gained 15 pounds. I used to come to places like this just for the fun of it. Now for once, I'm actually here to lose weight."

Another bright light is Fay Inkeles, an 80-year-old resident of the Greenwich Village section of Manhattan. She checked into the spa for her second full summer. Dressed in a flowered bathing suit, black stockings and backless sandals with 1 1/2-inch heels, she marches around the room and tries the warmup stretches with the rest of the class.

After about 10 minutes of this, she takes a seat on a folding chair, catches her breath and then heads for the door. As the instructor's cheerful cries of "Breathe! Smile! Relax! Don't forget to breathe!" ring through the hall, Inkeles comments on her status as a drop-out.

"I don't do a lot of the things that they do here because I'm a little older than they are. It just wouldn't be wise," she says, nodding a head covered with poodle-permed gray hair. "But I've designed my own regimen."

That regimen includes walking around the grounds of the spa, swimming 12 laps daily in the indoor pool, and participating in portions of exercise classes. "The rest of the time, I'm just here having a good time," she says. "I talk to people, I read outdoors under the trees. It's great to be out of New York in the summer, away from the tourists and the trash. When I leave here after Labor Day, New York will be back to normal. I always try to get out of New York for the summer, but it's great to have a place like this to come to."

Confessions of a hungry spa guest

As I park my car in front of the Grand Lake Spa Hotel in Lebanon, I notice my heart beats quite a bit faster than usual. Why am I nervous about enjoying a free weekend of rest and resuscitation? I have no idea.

My curiosity about "life at the top" certainly includes a fascination with what will go on at a spa, where I imagine that the rich cavort with the famous. At $500 to $800 per person per week, it seems expensive to me — although I've been assured that most similar facilities charge at least three times that much.

As I'm shown to the room I'll occupy during my stay, I experience a momentary pang of disappointment. The bedroom is spacious, furnished with mottled-brown formica-topped furniture and three unmatching lamps that look like they were bought at a motel close-out sale. The deep turquoise walls seem dark, and are an odd combination with the red-and-cobalt-blue bedspreads and curtains.

Ah well! Never mind! I'm not planning to spend much time in the room, anyway.

A half-hour after check-in, it's time to see the camp — er, I mean, the spa nurse. Actually, Nancy Calvert of Hebron has been a camp nurse every other summer at the 4-H camp in Hebron. "I really miss it," she says. "But this is just like a camp, only it's for big people. And their boobos are just the same, only a little bigger."

Before you can say "impossibly overweight," Calvert has weighed and measured me, and asked about the history of my weight gain.

It seems that mine has been typical of a female's climb up the ladder of poundage: There is a standard 10 pounds that's put on during the freshman year of college, six pounds which remain after each pregnancy, and between one half and one full pound that creep on every year after the age of 33.

Now we talk about my general exercise and activities. How embarrassing to find that I have to fib a little, even to qualify for the "light daily" activity level. Doesn't pushing a grocery cart and chasing a two-year-old count for anything?

Soon this shameful information has been fed into a computer, and I'm lying on a bed, hooked up to a couple of electrodes which pass a mild electric current the dining room at the Grand Lake Spa. At the round tables draped in pink linens, where 200-calorie meals are arranged on expensive china to look like dinners at New York's Four Seasons, guests swap tales of hunger and weight loss, fables of exercise and muscle tone.

Over a plate of sole stuffed with spinach — an entire entree which contains fewer calories than two unbuttered slices of French bread — Nan Tamraz of Yonkers, N.Y., says she's glad that there's "a place like this" where she can lose weight in a controlled, supportive environment. By the end of a week, she has lost 11 pounds, and announces that she's thrilled with these results.

Vivian Scott of Valley Stream, Long Island, says she thinks it's amusing that "a place like this" does such a thorough job of convincing clients that they can, indeed, lose weight. "They're very sophisticated. They do a really good job of brainwashing you," she says.

Ann Burns, from Baldwin, Long Island, is surprised that there's "a vacation place like this" where a woman can arrive alone, and immediately form meaningful friendships. "I was apprehensive, but I'm having a wonderful time," she says after two days.

And Morris and Edith Schwartz, a couple from Morristown, N.J., are delighted that there's "a place like this," where one can spend a weekend and eat only food that's been prepared without salt, egg yolks, additives or preservatives.

That very phrase comes up in conversation with owner Natalie Skolnik, a blond dynamo in a jazzy pantsuit who seems to be equal parts gracious hostess and strict school disciplinarian, diet guru and enthusiastic cheerleader.

For the past 17 years Skolnik, who holds a nutrition degree from New York University, has operated three diet clinics in New York City. "My diets seem to work for people. They were very happy with my counseling," she explains, in a gravelly Carol Channing voice. "For years, my clients had been saying that we should open a place like this, a place where they could get away from New York and eat all the right foods and get thinner."

She knew she didn't want a "fat farm" of the old school. But the idea of a relatively secluded spa, with a severely-restricted diet and an active daily schedule of classes, grew increasingly from my hand to my foot. The speed with which the electric current passes through my body helps the computer to determine how much of my body is fat, how much is muscle and how much water.

It's not terribly surprising to hear that there's "a lot more fat on me than on my ideal counterpart." The computer analysis, officially called your Body Composition Profile, is a three-page report for you to save as a souvenir of your visit to Grand Lake Spa. It is also a useful tool, since it plots the weight loss you may expect, should you choose to stick with a strict diet and exercise regimen after you leave Lebanon.

I, for example, am supposed to achieve my ideal weight in 136 days, give or take a few hours. If I bicycle at 9.4 miles per hour for 30 minutes, three times a week, and stick with my appropriate caloric intake.

I guess I'm the skeptical sort. I've not yet planned the celebration party for Dec. 2. But it was with firm resolve to exercise more vigorously that I set out for the afternoon tone-and-firm exercise class. From there, it was time for a sauna, a 30-minute massage, a shower and dinner.

My first introduction to meals at Grand Lake Spa was somewhat overwhelming. The others at your table greet me by name, ask how many calories I'll be consuming in their presence, and how much weight I'm planning to lose.

Those few people who check themselves in for a fitness regime, or to reduce stress and lower their blood pressure, may be assigned a diet that's twice as generous as the basic weight-loss plan. It's apparently bad form to eat your extra goodies (sometimes only an extra apple or slice of toast) with great relish in front of those who are whittling their waistlines.

It's also my first introduction to my "fellow travelers." These are not the members of the leisure class that I'd anticipated. Instead, I meet school teachers and principals, a travel agent and two secretaries, the proprietor of a fried clam shack on the south shore of Long Island and a mail carrier.

During the after-dinner hay ride around the Lebanon Green, I also meet a middle-aged college student and her classical musician husband. They are both slim, and have come for a taste of "country life," attracted by such things as long walks on tree-lined roads and a horse-drawn ride in a mound of sweet-smelling hay.

According to Skolnik, the cheating problem was the main reason that she stopped offering field trips to Capriland's Herb Farms in Coventry. "The people would make purchases, supposedly to bring back home," said Skolnik.

It sounds ridiculous, but I sympathize. After a breakfast allowance of a half-cup of sliced strawberries and a half-cup of bran flakes barely moistened with a third of a cup of skim milk, I was ready to hit the powdered hot chocolate mix that was still in my car from a camping trip.

Fortunately, I resisted this and other similar temptations. Forty-eight hours after check-in, I had dropped three and a half pounds. Two weeks later — after my share of transgressions — we're at seven pounds and counting.

attractive. "My clients were traveling to The Golden Door and The Ashram in California, or Maine Chance in Phoenix. There was nothing like that here in the Northeast."

With her fiancé, Elie Mechaly, an experienced innkeeper from Europe, Skolnik began looking for the right spot about three years ago. "My clientele was largely in New York, so I guess it would have been logical to look in the Catskills," she says. "But I really preferred Connecticut. It just felt more wholesome."

When her real estate broker told her about a 73-acre camp for sale in Lebanon, her reaction was to joke with friends. "I'm talking about getting out of New York, but I'm not quite ready for the Middle East."

On her first tour of the facility with Mechaly, she was appalled. The place was filthy and the buildings badly deteriorated, she recalls. "The place really looked its age," she says.

The large white hotel with maroon trim and porches was built in 1909 as Luger's Hotel. Guests came to enjoy the views from the front rooms, looking out on Lake Williams and the back rooms, which command a view of gardens and woods. In 1955, the hotel changed to a family resort, serving kosher food and offering an intergenerational camp-type atmosphere. Additional buildings, swimming pools, tennis courts and other facilities were added. But 20 years later, a fire brought an end to a fairly successful vacation spot. After an auction in 1977, the place changed hands several times, finally winding up as a camp operated by a branch of Weight Watchers. Skolnik and Mechaly bought the camp in 1984.

Since then, the renovation schedule has been relentless. Skolnik says. Heat and air conditioning systems, plumbing and roofs, all needed replacement. On one recent weekend, guests found bits of black silt in their drinking water one morning, and were without hot water for showers on the following morning.

"The work is constant, and it's the one part of this place that I really dislike," she admits. "I dread answering the phone and hearing about building troubles. But I love the people, and I love the diet, the food end of things. That's why I'll stick with it, at least for a few more years."

It's that diet — not the exercise classes or the brisk country walks — which brings guests from hundreds of miles away. The plan allows only 650 calories daily, and very few of the starchy carbohydrates — bread, potatoes, pasta, unsweetened cereals — that health experts believe to be vital for longevity and good health.

By contrast, most weight-loss regimens for women, such as those published recently by Jane Fonda, Jane Brodie and others, recommend at least 1,000 calories daily, and a heavy proportion of carbohydrates.

Skolnik realizes that some of her diet recommendations fly in the face of conventional wisdom. "But people want to come here and lose the maximum amount of weight in the briefest possible amount of time," she says. "We have found this to be an effective way to do just that."

Skolnik claims that she's never had a guest who became ill because of the foods she serves at her spa. There is a nurse on duty at all times, to help people understand the diet and to monitor blood pressure and cholesterol levels of those who are at risk.

But during one recent weekend, several guests complained of feeling constantly light-headed on the restricted diet; others mentioned nausea and several said they were experiencing severe constipation.

"A certain amount of that is normal, when you are altering your body's fuel so drastically," says Gerry Sinopoli, the nurse who lives on the premises. "But if it gets too severe, I would hope people would come in here and talk to me."

And what happens when the guests head for home? Will they gain back all of the weight they've lost?

Those with previous spa experiences say no. Mary Stucchi finds that she can maintain her weight losses at her home near Boston; Janet Lombardi of Worcester, Mass., continued to lose — albeit more slowly — when she left the spa the first time.

But even the spa's own staff members express concern about the transition from retreat to real life. Nancy Calvert, a registered nurse from Hebron who works part-time at the spa, gives this explanation to guests: "Whenever you make a sudden change, and go on a very restricted diet, your body goes into a conservation mode," she says. "It thinks it's starving, so your metabolism slows way down. This makes it harder for you to lose weight in the future."

She helps guests plan a slow increase of calories, from the 650-calorie daily allotment served at the spa, to between 900 and 1200 per day on the home front.

Another problem is that people visiting the spa take too many exercise classes, says Carol Glaude, the spa's fitness director. This is a mistake, she says, even for those who do not experience stiff, sore muscles.

"People here are in a really artificial environment. They may be doing four or five hours of vigorous exercise each day they're here, and they are eating only 650 calories," Glaude says.

"Then they go home and they go back up to 1,000 or 1,200 calories, and they're exercising maybe twice a week. And the weight goes on incredibly fast because their metabolism has come to expect that higher level of exercising. So we tell them to back off, and let themselves relax a little."

Even with these drawbacks — typical of most weight-loss spas — the Grand Lake Spa gets a good deal of return business. In the early fall, for example, there are "table reunions" for groups who enjoy one-another's company the first time around.

Other guests, like a housewife from Margate, N.J., set aside at least a week each summer for rest and resuscitation at a spa or similar resort. "This is my time," says Bobbi Grant. "I send my kids to camp in Litchfield, and I come here. Now that I've found Grand Lake, this is my spot."

'Aliens' action non-stop

By Bob Thomas

Nothing much happens in the first hour of the new 20th Century-Fox "Aliens": rescue of a survivor of an ill-fated space flight, preparations for another mission, plenty of U.S. Marine macho — male and female.

The last 75 minutes of the film, though, are non-stop.

Sigourney Weaver and her cat were the only survivors of a space mission that encountered unspeakable horror: otherworld creatures that invade human bodies.

She is rescued and agrees to lead another expedition to investigate the loss of a colony on a far-off planet. She is assigned a group of Marines who seem to have the capability and the weapons to handle any enemy.

They arrive at the beleaguered planet and find no survivors except a scared little girl (Carrie Henn). But the innards of the space colony are Bob Thomas reviews movies for The Associated Press.

Cinema Review

like a ticking bomb.

James Cameron, who directed his own script (based on the story he wrote with David Giler and Walter Hill), has crafted a near-perfect structure of suspense. Just when you think the survivors have reached safety, he springs another horrific surprise. Credit must also go to his producer-wife Gale Anne Hurd, effects creator Stan Winston and cinematographer Adrian Biddle.

Sigourney Weaver is merely terrific. Her strong presence and firm resolve keep the mission together against insuperable odds. When she straps on her armament to do battle with the aliens, she makes Sylvester Stallone look like a pipsqueak.

The supporting cast is largely unknown, but not for long:

Carrie Henn, a great screamer as the lost girl; Michael Biehn as Weaver's principal aide; Lance Henriksen as the quirky scientist; the insidious civilian Paul Reiser; the Marine leader William Hope; the private, Jenette Goldstein.

The rating is R, and with good reason. Young children (and not a few adults) will be terrified by the slimy beasts. Also, the dialogue is peppered with obscenities, overly so. Running time: 137 minutes.

Rating guide

Motion Picture Association of America rating definitions:

G — General audiences. All ages admitted.

PG — Parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.

PG-13 — Special parental guidance strongly suggested for children under 13. Some material may be inappropriate for young children.

R — Restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

X — No one under 17 admitted. Some states may have higher age restrictions.

Tom Hanks makes a deal

By Bob Thomas

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — These days you can find Tom Hanks behind a desk in a spacious office at the Burbank Studio. He has achieved that symbol of a star's eminence: the development deal.

Quite a milestone for an actor who only a few years ago was appearing in such epics as "He Knows You're Alone" and "Mazes and Monsters."

What is a development deal? That's when a studio says to an actor or director: "Let's get together. Move into our building and we'll pay you to look for properties and develop scripts. If we like what comes out, we'll back the movie. If we don't, you can take it to another studio."

Hanks made his deal with Columbia Pictures, which had a similar contract with Sally Field, resulting in "Murphy's Romance." Hanks has no sure-fire project after a year, but he's still developing.

"Splash!" is the movie that made Tom Hanks a hot ticket. Since then he has had four releases with varying results, mostly bad.

"Bachelor Party" did OK. "The actor said in an interview. "The Man With One Red Shoe" came and went fast. "Volunteers" was a disappointment. "The Money Pit" did better than it should have."

That's not exactly a sterling record, but Hanks pointed out the perils of making comedies, which is his field of endeavor. "You can make a dramatic movie, and even if it's nothing great, you don't get any adverse reaction. Show an audience a comedy and if they don't laugh, you're dead. There's nothing you can do about it. The word gets around, and people stay away."

"You can do interviews until you're blue in the face, you can take ads on the Goodyear blimp. Nothing you do is going to change the results," he said.

"But does that mean that the picture is a failure? Look at 'The Treasure of the Sierra Madre.' It lost money when it was first released," he said. "The Wizard of Oz" wasn't a moneymaker at first. Some of my pictures are getting a second life, so I don't feel so bad about them."

The latest Tom Hanks movie is Tri-Star Pictures' "Nothing in Common" with a cast including Jackie Gleason, Eva Marie Saint, Hector Elizondo and Bess Armstrong. Hanks plays a Chicago advertising whiz whose life is disrupted when his parents separate. The director is Garry Marshall ("Young Doctors in Love," "The Flamingo Kid").

"Nothing in Common," said Hanks, required "my biggest investment as a human being of any role I've played so far." The film also allowed him to observe first-hand the legendary Gleason.

"There's no doubt that he is one of a kind, an idol in the literal sense as well as an idol of mine," said Hanks. "He represents not only his body of work but the whole history of television."

"Going in, I naturally wondered, 'Can I hold my own?' The intimidation factor was immense. But I found that Jackie — or I should say 'Mr. Gleason' — is not at all competitive. His only consideration is, 'What does this need? How can we give it a spark?' Let's try to maximize this scene." His way of working comes from his confidence, and it rubs off on you.

"He is not the kind of actor who can articulate the way he operates. I'm sure if he had to face 15,000 students at a university and advise them on acting, he'd say, 'Just go out there and learn it.'"

Tom Hanks' education in comedy came early. "I first realized I was funny when I was 6 and I stood in line for handball," he said. "I took the stuff my older brother said and repeated it for my friends. They roared with laughter. My brother was very shy. I was never shy."

Film capsules

About Last Night ... (R) — Rob Lowe, Demi Moore, James Belushi, Elizabeth Perkins. (Drama) What seems like a one-night stand — two Yuppies meet in a bar, then race home to display their ample sexual gymnastics — is actually a poignant tale. This couple wants to be in love, despite interference by friends who insist commitment is a '80s faux pas. Ed Zwick has made a self-assured feature film debut, but what makes the film real is the acting. Lowe sheds in his Brat Packer image and turns in an unabashed performance, but Demi Moore steals the film. Baring her soul (when not baring her breasts), Moore proves that the talents she exhibited in "St. Elmo's Fire" were not fluke. Grade: B.

At Close Range (R) — Sean Penn, Christopher Walken, Mary Stuart Masterson. (Drama) Sean Penn lives in the rural South with his tired grandmother, broken-down mother and foolish brother. Then one day, dad comes back to town — with money, flashy cars and the promise of success. But there is one small problem: Dad is a thief. Walken infuses his role with a delicious evil, and Penn, who must make some rather brutal decisions, has never been better. The last 20 minutes are devastating. Not for the entire family. Grade: B.

Big Trouble in Little China (PG-13) — Kurt Russell, Kim Cattrall, Dennis Dun, James Hong, Victor Wong. (Comedy Adventure) Twentieth Century-Fox bills this as a "mystical action adventure comedy kung-fu monster ghost story." Sounds like trouble? You bet. Russell plays pig salesman Jack Burton who, caught among underworld Chinatown ghosts, battles creatures with such foreboding names as The Sewer Monster, One Ear and Needles. There are special effects, inane dialogue and more special effects. John Carpenter has too much to work with here; he compensates by directing with a manic pace. If there was more focus — and less frenzy — "Big Trouble" would have been a big, fun film. Grade: C.

Club Paradise (PG-13) — Robin Williams, Peter On'otoo, Rick Moranis, Jimmy Cill. (Comedy) This is a Club Med for the big boys: Dope, drink, women donning and doffing their bikinis. This is also bad comedy. Director Harold Ramis ("Caddyshack") fails to ignite this tale of Chicago fireman Jack Moniker who, suffering from burnout, invests his pension and disability money into rejuvenating a tacky island colony into a Garden of Eden. What could have been a funny movie is simply a bland stretch of amusing one-liners and many unfunny moments. Williams' vapid character forces him to act manic, and '80s icon Twiggy graces the landscape in a thankless role. Grade: C.

Ferris Bueller's Day Off (PG-13) — Matthew Broderick, Mia Sara, Alan Ruck. (Comedy) Every high-school senior thinks he can conquer the world. Ferris Bueller does — and makes it look easy. Ferris convinces his parents he's sick, gets his girl out of class and borrows a Ferrari from his best friend's dad. His principal is on the trail but he is no match for the quick-witted charmer. Ruck, who finally steps out of Ferris' shadow, is endearing. If you take a day off to see this clever escape, prepare to be envious; Ferris makes better use of his time. Grade: B-plus.

Labyrinth (PG) — David Bowie, Jennifer Connelly, Toby Froud, Shelly Thompson. (Fantasy) Every child's nightmare is to be swooped up by demons; this terrific film is a variation on that terror. Sarah resents caring for her brother and wishes goblins would take him away. They do. Jim Henson's creatures populate this nifty film — and they're not Bert and Ernie. Henson (with help from executive producer George Lucas) advances puppetry to an awesome level. The creatures — not Bowie and certainly not Connelly — are the real stars. Grade: B-plus.

Running Scared (R) — Billy Crystal, Gregory Hines, Steven Bauer, Joe Pantoliano. (Comedy-Adventure) You've seen it before — in better movies. Two Chicago detectives bungle a case and are asked to take a vacation (thus the obligatory Key West sequence). But wait! — they ain't down yet. The audience is bombarded with shoot-em-ups, blaring "Miami Vice"-style music, sexual escapades and endless car chases. One mistake was to pilfer from "Beverly Hills Cop" and "48 HRS.," but the major problem is lack of chemistry between Crystal and Hines. Grade: C.

MTV's ratings are up

By Ethlie Ann Vare

MTV has tied with USA Network and CNN for first place in the cable television Nielsen ratings, pulling itself up a tenth of a percentage point since the disputed ratings for the last quarter of 1985.

In the second quarter of 1986, MTV (as well as WTBS and USA, two basic-cable program nets) earned a 0.7 rating — which is chicken feed compared to the broadcast networks, but many millions of advertising dollars for a cable operation.

MTV statisticians claim that a reduction in the number of teenagers included in Nielsen's previous sampling threw off the music channel's numbers. The new numbers indicate that MTV regularly reaches about 2 million homes.

And although he didn't do anything for last quarter's ratings, let's still give a hand to second-generation iconoclast Dweezil Zappa, whose stint as a guest VJ brought a much-needed lilt of freshness to MTV's broadcast day.

A little more spontaneity and fun in front of the cameras might do a world of good for next quarter's Nielsen report, guys.

Ah, the Beach Boys, epitome of clean-cut all-American. Their spotless image has been tarnished considerably in the last decades, what with Brian Wilson's mental state and Dennis Wilson's death.

Now, a new blow has been dealt them by a Washington, D.C., attorney.

Frederick W. Schwartz Jr., a lawyer acting as a private citizen, has filed a suit against the band, claiming that they ... well, they broke their promises, to take it out of legal jargon.

Remember those controversial Fourth of July concerts at the Capitol Mall, the ones then-Interior Secretary James Watt thought were an unsuitable venue for a rock 'n' roll band? The Beach Boys played at the foot of the Washington Monument — in 1980, '85 and '86. According to the Schwartz suit, they also flim-flamed the public when they did so.

The lawsuit, filed under an obscure law called the False Claims Act, claims: The Beach Boys promised to make no profit from the 1980 concert, and yet later accepted revenues from Home Box Office for broadcast rights. The band also allegedly promised to donate the proceeds from their 1985 and '86 shows to charity, which Schwartz says they did not. And, to top it all off, the band is accused of renegeing on a promise to give the National Park Service $100,000 to help pay security and clean-up costs for the Mall.

Schwartz hopes the government will join him in his suit, but he is moving ahead on his own. What happens to the Beach Boys if he wins? They have to make nice-nice and keep their word.

More lawsuits: Remember when Noel Love, the former manager of the Jon Butcher Axis, sued the band's new management for $20 million, charging the music-business equivalent of "alienation of affection"?

The plot thickened recently when Jon Butcher and Derek Blevins of the Axis countersued Love for $2.4 million.

The dollar figure may be lower, but the charges are juicier.

According to Butcher and Blevins: Love misappropriated some $800,000 of the band's money, keeping for himself their true incomes and paying them a measly $200-a-week salary. He allegedly ordered goods in the band's name, and then refused to pay for them. And he allegedly sent "menacing hoodlums" around to coerce the bandmates into extending their management contract.

Aretha Franklin has re-recorded the classic Stones' tune "Jumpin' Jack Flash" for Whoopi Goldberg's movie of the same name. Keith Richards produced the new version, and contributed some guitar licks to the track. ■

No replacement

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Florence Halop, who died recently of cancer, will not be replaced in her role as bailiff Florence Kleiner on NBC's "Night Court."

The show, which began production for the fall season this past week, will try some guest characters to see if they work, according to executive producer Reinhold Weege.

Miss Halop joined the show at the beginning of last season as the replacement for Selma Diamond, who had also died of cancer. She previously had been on NBC's "St. Elsewhere" as the lovably cantankerous hospital patient, Mrs. Hufnagle.

NBC wins rights

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Donna Ashlock received a heart transplant from her friend, Felipe Garza Jr., who died at age 14, a lot of producers sensed a potential television movie.

It will become a movie for NBC. Group W and Stonehenge Productions won the film rights over 20 other production companies with a six-figure bid that will be split equally by the two Patterson, Calif., families.

"Interest in the production community was unprecedented," said Renee Wayne Golden, an attorney who helped negotiate for the producers.

Video games have medical benefits

By Richard R. Grayson, M.D., and June Grayson, R.N.

Remember several years ago when the doomsayers predicted that video games would ruin our children? Now some medical doctors extol video games as helpful diagnostic and treating tools. Brain-damaged patients at Rusk Institute of Rehabilitation Medicine in New York play video games to regain coordination of their muscles, with the difficulties of the games increasing as the players' skills increase.

Dr. Craig Ewart, Johns Hopkins School of Public Health, uses video games to identify children who are most apt to develop dangerous hypertension as they grow older. He hopes that such children can begin to watch their weight and diet to prevent hypertension from developing.

Dr. Harry Panjwani says that video games have other benefits:

- They introduce children to computer technology.
- Children can be active participants in video games rather than passive viewers of television.

- Players develop hand coordination, strategic thinking and logic from playing the games.

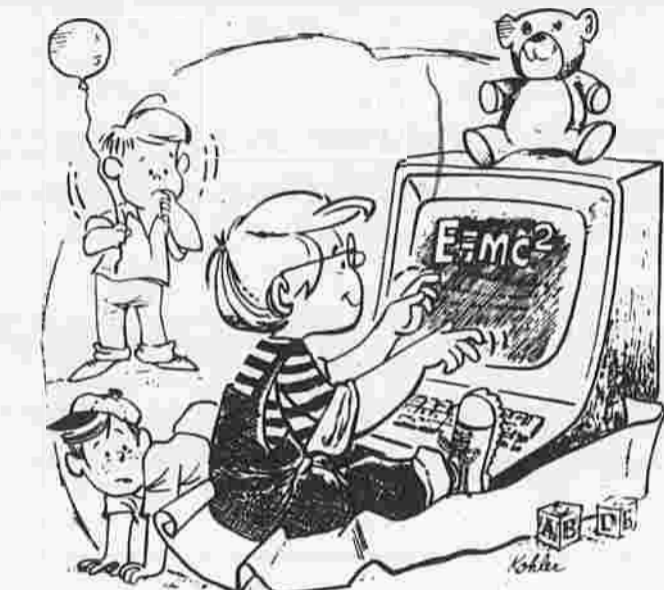

- The games provide relaxation and inexpensive, self-controlled psychotherapy.

- Children undergoing chemotherapy for cancer can actively reduce the upsetting side effects such as nausea by concentrating on video games. (New Medical Science, June 1986)

COMMERCIAL HAIR ANALYSIS

Commercial hair analysis as performed in most commercial laboratories is "unscientific, economically wasteful and probably illegal," according to Stephen Barrett, M.D.

Dr. Barrett took hair samples from two healthy teen-agers and sent the same samples under assumed names to 13 different commercial laboratories for hair analysis. The laboratories did not agree on their results or on the supposed normal and abnormal range of minerals reported. Six of the 13 laboratories recommended food supplements but they did not agree on what supplements or what dosages were recommended.

In addition, the laboratories sent back lengthy reports with bizarre medical suggestions and conclusions that could be very frightening to patients.

Hair analysis can be used in some cases to screen for heavy metal exposure, but it is not considered reliable for nutritional evaluation.

The Federal Trade Commission has secured a permanent injunction against one laboratory that made false claims about its testing services. This may reduce further misleading advertising by other laboratories. (Journal of the American Medical Association, Vol. 254, No. 8)

Comment: Since normal ranges of minerals in hair have not yet been established, don't waste your money on hair analysis.

SUCTION LIPECTOMY

Suction lipectomy should not be used for weight reduction, according to Dr. Dieran Goulian, director of plastic and reconstructive surgery, New York Hospital. The procedure should be reserved for people who have large localized fat deposits that can't be reduced by diet or exercise, such as the so-called "riding breeches deformity" — excess fat deposits on the outer sides of the thighs.

The fat is removed with a blunt-tipped needle attached to a suction pump. One or two cups of fat can be removed from each site. Then the area is pressure-banded for a week.

Young people are the best candidates for suction lipectomy because their skin is firm and more apt to return to normal dimensions after surgery. This is not a minor procedure, however; infection, bleeding into the area and even shock and abdominal perforation can occur under some circumstances. (Patient Care, May 15, 1986)

Loving your kids equally is impossible

By Fred Rogers with Barry Head

We heard a story from a friend, co-worker and fine teacher (who, like many fine teachers, often taught through stories), and it went like this: As a topic for his thesis, a student once chose The Universe. His professor read the thesis...and failed the student for not sticking to the subject. Deciding to write about Love may run the same risks, but a note from a correspondent set off a sudden train of thought that we felt compelled to try to catch in words. "It isn't possible," our correspondent wrote, "for parents to love their children equally, and they should not feel guilty when they come to that realization."

The problem, of course, is:

What is love? We can't hope to answer that here, but perhaps these thoughts will help find answers of your own and put the problem of "equal love" in a slightly different light.

Love, whatever it is, is essential nourishment for human beings' healthy emotional growth. That nourishment has many ingredients.

Given the countless combinations of ingredients and intensities, it is inevitable that we feel differently about any two people that we say we love. As our correspondent clearly knew, no parents ever feel the same way about any two of their children...and no child ever felt the same way about both parents.

As children, most of us wrestled at one time or another with which parent we loved the most. We probably jumped to the conclusion that the parent we felt we needed more right then was the parent we loved the most, and that had to mean we loved the other less, and so we felt guilty.

As parents, we can feel once again those old pangs of guilt when we wonder whether we love one of our children more than another. ■

Thinking of a sex-change operation?

The process takes many months but facial surgery isn't part of it

By Dr. June Reinisch

DEAR READERS: Here are some often-asked questions about female-to-male transsexualism:

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I'm a woman who wants a man's body and doesn't know how to get it. I've talked on the phone with several different doctors, nurses and specialists across Canada, and none have provided satisfying information. How do I find a gender-dysphoria specialist?

ANSWER: For referrals to specialists nearest you in Canada, write to FACT (Box 291, Station A, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada L8N-3C8) or to Gender Identity Clinic (Clarke Institute of Psychiatry, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T-1R8). In the United States, write to J2CP Information Services (P.O. Box 184, San Juan Capistrano, Calif. 92693).

QUESTION: Who pays for the procedure and how much does it cost?

ANSWER: Because the full evaluation, testing and various treatment steps take several years, the costs can be quite high. A few insurance companies have been known to cover some drug or surgical expenses, but it is usually up to each client either to pay expenses or to arrange payment by an insurance company or government agency.

QUESTION: During a sex change, will they make my face look like whoever I want?

ANSWER: Facial surgery is not a standard step in the female-to-male procedure. The primary alteration in facial appearance is the growth of male-pattern facial hair, which is a result of using testosterone drugs for several months.

QUESTION: How long will I be in the hospital?

ANSWER: Depending upon

The Kinsey Report

which surgical steps you qualify for and choose to have, you will be in and out of the hospital several times. For example, the first surgical step is to remove the breasts and reposition the nipples. This usually is not done until after the female has successfully lived as a man for at least a year and has taken male hormones, which change body contours, grow facial hair and enlarge the clitoris. The patient is in the hospital about three days, but must avoid lifting or doing manual labor for two to three months.

A second operation can be done to remove the uterus, ovaries and Fallopian tubes; this requires another stay of several days, plus several months of healing. No one has yet devised an adequate way of creating a functioning phallus, but some patients choose to have a series of operations that create a phallus-like flap of skin from an area of the lower abdomen, fuse the labia into a simulated scrotum and insert artificial testicles. This procedure has a high rate of complications.

QUESTION: Will I have to speak with a psychiatrist first?

ANSWER: You most definitely will have to be evaluated by one or more psychiatrist, plus several other types of specialists, before being accepted by a reputable center. Psychological evaluations will be carried out at all phases of the lengthy procedure.

An initial evaluation also includes thorough medical tests to determine a prospective patient's chromosomal and hormonal status, as well as general health. Many clinics also insist on interviews with family members, sexual partners and friends.

If you are accepted into a transsexual program, the first step is usually to live and work successfully as a member of the opposite sex for one year, and then to continue a successful lifestyle while being on hormone therapy for another year — all before ever being evaluated for surgical alteration of the reproductive organs. The full procedure takes several years.

As you can see, changing one's sexual anatomy to fit an opposite-gender identity is a prolonged, complicated process. If you decide to pursue this, you must be prepared to spend a great deal of time (and perhaps money) working with specialists. This process cannot be conducted by telephone or mail, so do not be disappointed that the specialists you called gave little information over the phone.

Each case is so different that specific answers to your questions cannot be given until after complete evaluation and completion of the trial-living stages of the process.

No sex

DEAR DR. REINISCH: My wife was told by our doctor that she could not have sex after her operation for removal of her uterus. Is that correct?

DEAR READER: Not on a permanent basis. Women usually are told not to have sex until healing is complete (about six to eight weeks after surgery) and they've been back to be checked to make sure everything is OK.

After that, it might be necessary to avoid deep penetration until the vagina is gradually restretched. If the ovaries were also removed, there may be a lack of natural lubrication, which can be remedied by taking replacement hormones or using a water-soluble lubricant like K-Y Jelly.

You do not say why she needed her uterus removed; however, unless the condition also required extensive surgery on the vagina or external labia, her sexual functioning should not be diminished. Even if the vagina was shortened, surgery rarely affects the clitoris, so sexual arousal and orgasm would still be possible with manual or oral stimulation.

Perhaps your wife was so distressed when she spoke with the doctor that she misunderstood. Hysterectomy does permanently halt some things; it ends menstrual periods and “ Depending on which surgical steps you qualify for and choose to have, you will be in and out of the hospital several times. For example, the first surgical step is to remove the breasts and reposition the nipples. ” childbearing. However, sexual activity is not usually stopped permanently.

Experts recommend that a hysterectomy patient's sexual partner accompany her to physicians' appointments, since this offers a better chance of getting correct information and the partner's question can be answered directly.

Call your physician and inquire about your wife's condition. If you are also told that sexual activity will be impossible, ask why. If none of it makes any sense to you, make an appointment — for both of you — with another gynecologist, so you can get a second opinion.

It is not unusual for a woman to be depressed after a hysterectomy, viewing the loss of the uterus as an end to her "womanhood." There are many myths that a woman will become masculinized and sexually unattractive. If medical consultants determine that your wife is in good physical condition, ask for the name of a psychotherapist experienced in helping women cope with emotional aspects of postsurgical adjustment.

Sex painful

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I hope you can help me with a problem I find difficult to discuss with a strange doctor. My husband and I are in our 50s and have had many happy years and five children together. I guess I thought our sex life could go on and on.

Not so. I find it too painful, to the point of tearing and bleeding. Before he died, our doctor of 26 years recommended K-Y Jelly and hormone creams. Nothing helps. My husband doesn't complain, but I know he is as lonely as I am.

I read about folks in their 70s and 80s and ask myself, "How do they do it?" Is there a solution, even a surgical procedure, to help me?

DEAR READER: You must find a new physician, preferably a gynecologist with a special interest in menopause. Most gynecologists are familiar with this type of genital problem, which affects many women as the level of estrogen drops around the menopause.

Using a water-soluble lubricant or an estrogen cream helps some women. Others are relieved by taking estrogen and progesterone replacement hormones in a monthly cycle in amounts carefully adjusted to their individual needs.

In some cases, the thinning of the vaginal tissues and shrinking of the external genitals leads to vaginal infections and urinary-tract infections, which must be treated with appropriate medications before the replacement hormones result in much improvement.

This problem will not go away by itself. You need an examination, and probably some medical tests. If you are unable to discuss it, call and get an appointment for a pelvic examination. When the physician enters the office, hand him or her this column. ■

Send questions to Dr. Reinisch in care of The Kinsey Report, P.O. Box 48, Bloomington, Ind. 47402. Volume of mail prohibits personal replies, but questions of general interest may be discussed in future columns.

Getting zapped by the microwave

High-level exposure can cause temporary sterility

By Sonja Heinze

Some bulk sausage meat is labeled "whole hog." Does this mean every part of the animal is ground up and used? It sounds repulsive and I don't buy it. Adell Gerity, Ormond Beach, Fla.

The term "whole hog" describing the contents of a package of sausage is unfortunate because it sounds as if it means exactly what you conclude — that every part of the pig is included. However, this is not the case. "As with other sausage products," says Donald Houston, administrator of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service, "whole hog sausage does not include animal parts that are normally considered inedible."

The product is made from muscle meat, fresh or frozen, from swine in such proportions as are normal to a single animal, and must not contain more than 50 percent fat nor more than 3 percent water.

CONCERNED ABOUT MICROWAVES

Could you tell me if standing in front of an operating microwave oven can cause sterility? Also, will it harm my cats, who sometimes sit on the counter while the oven is in use? I'm concerned and would appreciate an answer. Jeant Hall, Pompano Beach, Fla.

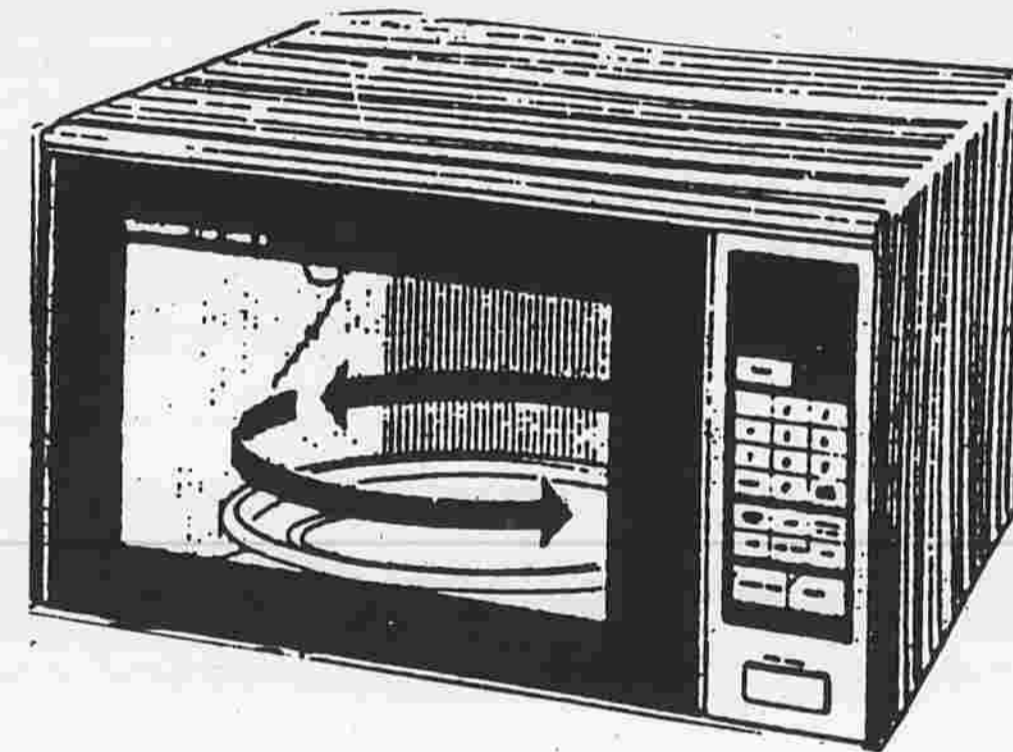

In material published by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services entitled "Microwave Oven Radiation," accidental exposure to high levels of microwave energy can alter or kill sperm, producing temporary sterility.

Large amounts of microwave energy can also cause burns and cataracts because the lens of the eye is particularly sensitive to changes in temperature, as are male testes. Microwave energy, after all, can heat body tissue the same way it heats food.

But we're talking here about large amounts of radiation, much more than what can leak from a microwave oven. And if your oven is operating properly — that is, if the door closes firmly and is not bent, warped or damaged, and if the surrounding seal is clean and intact, there should be no leakage.

Don't stand directly against an oven, and don't allow children to do this for long periods of time while the oven is operating.

Much less is known about animals. There are differences in the way animals and humans absorb microwaves. Some animals," the literature states, "display an avoidance reaction

If the microwave door is working properly, there should be no leakage.

when exposed to low levels of microwaves — that is, they try to get away from the microwaves."

Apparently you didn't return the "winning number," if there is such a thing.

Consumers should take all letters notifying them that they are getting something for nothing and toss them in the wastebasket. Don't give them a moment of your precious time.

BLACK BEANS

What kind of beans are used for black bean soup? I have looked in vain for black beans in all the stores and there is no such bean. H.J. Linden, Royal Oak, Mich.

Yes, there is such a bean. They are called frijoles negros and when they are dry, they are large, narrow and kidney-shaped.

You can buy them already cooked and canned. My cooking expert advises us that Conchita Brand is the best known for Cuban-style black bean soup.

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING? In December I received a letter from Sundancer Fashions, Inc. with the notification that I had won $5,000. I sent the information they requested to receive my money. I sent a letter in February asking where my money is, but I have not heard from them. I'm enclosing a copy of the letter the company sent me. I am at my wit's end as to what to do. Peggy Leetch, Oregon City, Ore.

Probably everyone in the United States has by this time received a letter from some company informing the recipient to send something or other to the company in order to win a car, some money, a diamond ring or even 10 acres of land.

In this case the letter, from the "Office of the Corporate Treasurer," starts out: "This is your personal notification that if you return the winning number one week from Tuesday we will pay you $5,000."

What this company really wanted you to do is send in an order for a bathing suit.

They can be found in Latin, West Indian or specialty markets. If you still can't find them, write for sources of distribution: Conchita Food, Inc., Miami, Fla. 33129.

Some health-food stores and specialty markets also carry dry frijoles negros. Sometimes black beans are fermented and used for bean sauces. For making soup, be sure to buy the non-fermented beans.

READER'S SUGGESTION: IODINE IN SHRIMP

Jean DeTullio, Millville, N.J.: "One of your readers wrote to ask you about the iodine taste in shrimp. I always soak my shrimp in milk for half an hour to one hour previous to preparation. This removes all fishy taste and smell. You can also do this for fish that has been frozen to make it taste 'ocean fresh.'"

If you have a consumer-oriented question, send it to Sonja Heinze, King Features Syndicate, 235 East 45th St., New York, N.Y., 10017.

Mushrooms:

Savory plants once had poor image

By Ted Larsen

You'd never know it from the current fancy mushroom craze, but mushrooms have been equated with some unsavory types through history. It took the common table variety centuries to gain respectability. It's really the story of honest virtue struggling to overcome unwarranted prejudice. And you thought mushrooms were just unexciting little fungi that lived in pastel paper trays, under a cozy blanket of cellophane!

Mushrooms are among the oldest foods of man, with evidence of puffballs found in Stone Age settlements. The Greeks and Romans considered mushrooms to be delicacies, with the men of Caesar's time often cooking them during dinner parties as special treats. However, in keeping with their shady connections, mushrooms also attracted some people who probably wouldn't want to know.

The notorious Theodoric, king of the bloodthirsty Ostrogoths, was crazy about mushrooms (as well as just crazy) and don't forget Catherine de Medici's fungal love. Henry II's queen was equally at ease feeding both poison varieties and the more nutritious types to members of the French court, depending upon her mood and their politics.

It was also common to grind lethal field mushroom with sugar or honey, making a very attractive fly killer. Through much of history, mushroom interest centered on poison, rather than pleasure.

Early settlers found the New World dotted with thousands of wild mushroom varieties, but thoughts of Theodoric, Catherine and dead flies quickly killed the appetite for wild fungus.

That prejudice continues today, with most Americans having no interest in field mushrooms, favoring instead the cultivated white and brown types, a creation of Golden Age decadence.

Louis XIVth's agricultural wizard, Oliver de Serres, first cultivated white mushrooms, which immediately became the darling of the food-crazed French court. Under Napoleon, sales boomed and mushroom "farms" prospered in quarry tunnels, near Paris. America's mushroom boom was not far away.

By the end of the 19th century, Britain was sending the U.S. significant quantities of mushrooms, Lewis Downing was one of their most interested customers. He propagated these new types himself and in 1926 spawned the American mushroom industry in Downingtown, Pa., still a significant growing center.

American mushroom tastes appear to be in the midst of a dramatic change, with more and more exotic varieties on the market. Even major chains are selling rare types such as shiitake and enoki. They are selling, even at prices considerably higher than your basic white "Agaricus bispora." Isn't it your turn to strike a blow against fungi prejudice? Take a chanterelle to lunch tomorrow.

A hearty mushroom soup is on my all-time food hit parade because it's both nourishing and satisfying. Here is one of the simplest quality recipes I've ever used.

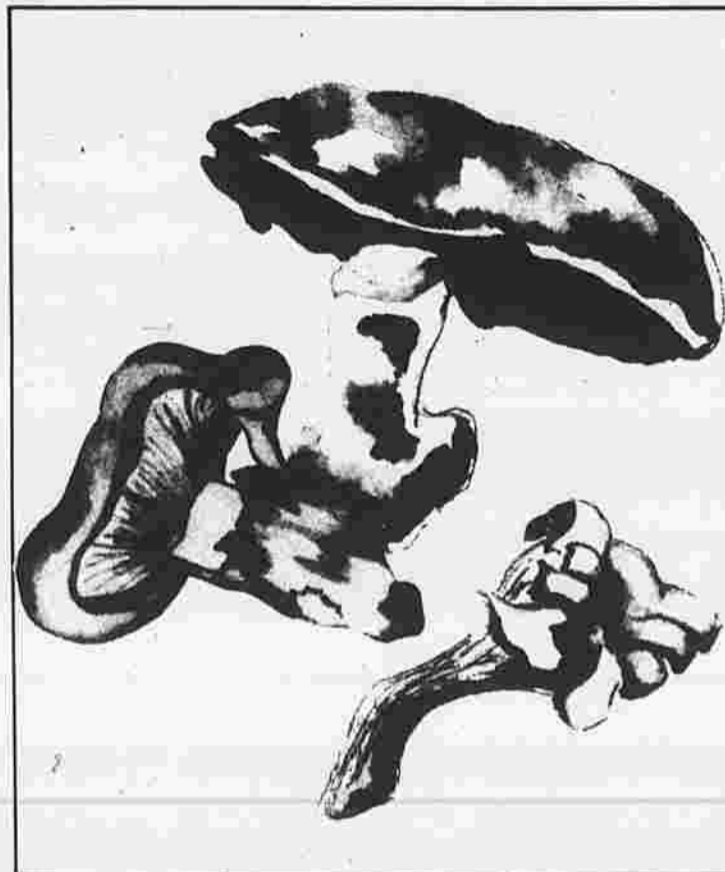

CREAMY MUSHROOM SOUP

1 pound of white or brown mushrooms, sliced
 1/2 fresh lemon
 3 tablespoons unsalted butter
 1 large shallot, minced
 1 clove garlic, minced
 1 tablespoon flour
 2 cups chicken stock, fresh or canned
 1 cup heavy cream

Place mushrooms in a bowl and sprinkle with fresh lemon juice. Toss and allow to sit for 30 minutes. Melt 1 tablespoon butter in a saute pan and cook shallots with garlic over medium heat, until tender. Do not brown.

Add remaining butter and add mushroom slices. Cook 2 minutes, then add flour, stirring constantly. When flour is well distributed, cook 2 minutes longer. Gradually stir in stock and allow mixture to simmer 10 minutes, covered.

When done, pour into a blender and process until mixture is a smooth puree. Return to pan and add cream gradually, until desired consistency is reached. Reheat (do not boil), adjust salt and pepper to taste. Serve.

Despite their current fancy craze, mushrooms have been equated with some unsavory types through history.

HINTS

I like this soup seasoned with a bit of freshly grated nutmeg, but be careful, do not overdo!

For a heartier soup, substitute beef stock. Chicken or beef bouillon are also acceptable substitutions.

If you don't want a perfectly smooth soup, just stop the blending sooner.

I'm not crazy about tofu because of its intrinsic lack of character. However, its chameleon quality to pick up other flavors makes it perfect for this elegant salad.

MUSHROOM CASHEW SALAD WITH TOFU

1 pound white or brown mushrooms, sliced
 3 tablespoons olive oil
 1 clove garlic, crushed
 4 tablespoons cashews
 1/2 cake soft tofu, cut in cubes
 1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice salt
 pepper
 4 scallions, sliced lengthwise
 1 head Boston lettuce, washed and torn apart

The night before serving, place garlic clove in olive oil and set aside. To assemble salad, toast cashew under a hot broiler for 3 minutes without burning. Chop them coarsely. In a bowl, mix tofu cubes with lemon juice. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

Stir tofu/lemon mixture into mushroom slices. Add chopped cashews. Arrange a bed of lettuce leaves on salad plates and divide equal portions of mushroom mixture. Garnish with scallion strips. Serve.

Serves 4-6.

HINTS

This salad is also excellent with toasted walnuts or hazelnuts.

For an excellent flavor enhancement, use oils that reinforce the nuts you have added, such as walnut or hazelnut oil.

Here is a great supper dish. It's hearty, flavorful and totally meatless.

MUSHROOM EGGPLANT WITH TOMATO WINE SAUCE

2 large eggplants
 3 tablespoons olive oil
 3 medium onions, chopped
 3 cloves garlic, minced
 1/2 pound mushrooms, diced
 1 stalk celery, chopped
 1 tablespoon tomato paste
 1 tablespoon fresh parsley, chopped salt
 pepper
 1 bay leaf
 1 1/2 pounds canned tomatoes, drained
 1/2 cup red wine

Fill a large pan half full of water and bring to a boil. Add whole eggplants, reduce to a simmer and cook for 10 minutes. Remove from water, slice in half lengthwise and allow to cool. Scoop out centers, leaving a shell that can be stuffed. Chop eggplant pulp finely.

Heat oil in a saute pan and cook onions until transparent. Do not brown. Add garlic, mushrooms and celery. Cook, covered, 10 minutes. Pour two-thirds of this mixture into a bowl and add tomato paste, parsley and salt and pepper, to taste. Reserve for stuffing.

Preheat oven to 350F. To the mixture remaining in the saute pan, add tomatoes, bay leaf and red wine. Cover and cook 30 minutes, stirring occasionally, until you have a smooth sauce.

Place cooled eggplant halves in an oven dish and fill with stuffing. Top with half the sauce and bake, covered, for 15 minutes. Remove covering and cook 5 minutes longer. Serve additional sauce on the side.

HINTS

To make this a more luxurious dish, add 1/2 pound of cooked, drained cocktail shrimp to filling just before stuffing eggplants.

You can top this dish with grated cheese and place under hot broiler during the last 5 minutes of cooking.

If you can find excellent fresh tomatoes, use them after removing peels and seeds. ■

Kien Giang

By Sondra Astor Stave

I was very pleased, early in the spring, to learn that Kien Giang, a Vietnamese restaurant, had opened at 7 Walnut St. However, a visit during the restaurant's first week was disappointing. Nothing was terribly wrong, but the food was not up to the spirit of hospitality of the staff.

A rave review by Mrs. J. Nathan, a Weekend Plus reader, and an equally positive report from a friend encouraged a return visit, and I am now pleased to heartily recommend a delightful eating experience.

While the food proves to be consistently Oriental, the atmosphere was a potpourri. Red tablecloths are covered with protective glass tops which were then surrounded by blond wooden chairs that looked distinctly American colonial. Pressed tin decorates the ceiling. The Oriental notes are provided by Chinese scrolls, and Hong Kong style popular music plays softly.

The menu includes extensive descriptions of the various dishes, and while they are accurate, the emphasis is sometimes different from where I would have put it. A case in point is vegetable soup. One of six soups on the menu, this excellent and rich broth contained only a half dozen slices of mushroom and a few broccoli florets. I would have emphasized the superior stock, but whatever you called it, it is delicious.

Just as the Chinese cook relies heavily on soy sauce for flavor, the Vietnamese chef uses nuoc nam, a distillation of anchovies and salt. Frequently, this is combined with garlic, chili peppers, lime and sugar to form a sauce called nuoc cham which is used in the kitchen as an ingredient or directly at the table instead of salt. Either way, it has the unique property of submerging itself in the flavors of other ingredients so that each preparation is distinctly different and alluring. The Kien Giang chef has full mastery of his recipes.

The three appetizers that we tried were equally enjoyable. Cha gio, Vietnamese eggrolls, are tightly packed with a savory mixture of pork, mushrooms, carrots and cabbage. The skin is delightfully thin and crisp and the accompanying nuoc cham sauce was spicy and well flavored.

Bo nuong toi is beef marinated in a garlic sauce, charcoal broiled and served with pickled leeks. The meat is tender and also goes well with the nuoc cham.

Chicken with grapefruit is called goi ga and this preparation also includes carrots, cabbage, onions and a topping of sesame seeds. Although many ingredients are repeated from one dish to another, the chef's skill with the sauces assures each a unique and pleasing taste.

Banh Xeo is translated as happy pancake and any pancake would be proud to be so crisp on the outside while tender within. This rice batter crepe is stuffed with a mixture that includes pork, chicken and shrimp, mushrooms, onions and beansprouts; complete with its own unique sauce.

Vit quay, or laque duck, sounds as if it would have a lacquered skin but such is not the case at Kien Giang. Rather the half duck is marinated in a five-spiced garlic sauce, roasted almost crisp and then served on a slightly sour orange sauce.

Scallops xao nam adds straw mushrooms to an assortment of vegetables. While the sauce is pleasant enough, it was the only one we did not finish with a spoon.

Gao xoi mo does not suffer from this problem. This whole cornish hen, cut into serving pieces, was perfectly roasted and boasted an excellent tamarind flavored sauce. All dishes are served with rice and replenished as needed.

We were disappointed that a dessert of coconut and vanilla, called blossoms, which was highly recommended by our correspondent, was unavailable. Our waiter apologized that it took a long time to prepare and that the kitchen had been very busy that day. He suggested the flan which, while not exciting, was indeed pleasant.

Prices at Kien Giang are moderate with soups at $1.50 and $1.95, appetizers ranging from $2.25 to $3.75 and main dishes $7.50 to $9.50; main dishes are less expensive at lunch.

When our check arrived, our waiter indicated that since they did not have the blossoms, we would not be charged for the flan. That made it all even a lesser disappointment, especially since we have every intention of making a return trip and hope to try it then. ■
