Across the nation

A tropical storm formed Friday off South Carolina, while sunny weather prevailed over much of the West.

Authorities said Tropical Storm Charley, the third named storm of the Atlantic hurricane season, posed no immediate threat to land, but warned skippers of small craft along the Carolina coasts to stay in port.

The National Hurricane Center said, in Charleston, S.C., the National Hurricane Center said it said conditions were favorable for the storm to strengthen.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from the Gulf Coast across Florida to the south Atlantic coast, and over the Ohio Valley, New York and Vermont. Scattered showers and thunderstorms also extended from the middle Mississippi Valley to the southern Plains.

Sunny skies prevailed from the Rockies to the Pacific Coast, with early afternoon temperatures in the 70s and 80s over much of the region and readings in the 90s over the desert Southwest. Temperatures were in the 50s and 60s along the Pacific Coast.

Sunshine was common from Minnesota and most of Iowa to the northern Plains, with temperatures in the 80s and lower 90s across the area.

In Durham, N.C., a 9-year-old girl died Friday of injuries sustained when she was hit by lightning, bringing to two the death toll from the Monday storm, officials said.

Temperatures at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 55 degrees at Arcata, Calif., to 104 degrees at Palm Springs, Calif. The morning low was 31 degrees at Gunnison, Colo.

Saturday's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms scattered from New England across the mid- and south Atlantic Coast states, the lower Great Lakes, and the Ohio and Tennessee valleys to the southern half of the Mississippi Valley and widely scattered showers and thunderstorms over the Upper Mississippi and eastern parts of the central and southern Plains and the Rockies.

Much of the nation should have highs in the 80s and 90s. Readings should be in the 70s over the Pacific Coast, the northern and mid-Atlantic Coast, and over northern Maine, above 100 degrees over the Rio Grande Valley and interior parts of central and Southern California and between 100 and 115 degrees over the desert Southwest.

PEOPLE

Long reign

Prince Franz Josef II of Liechtenstein, the world's second-longest-reigning head of state, celebrated his 80th birthday Friday.

Franz Josef's birthday is Saturday, but the public celebration was held Friday to coincide with a state holiday.

Thousands of Liechtensteiners attended an afternoon parade featuring pantomimes depicting important events in Franz Josef's life. The popular monarch also was honored at a festival.

The prince has reigned for 48 years. Japan's emperor Hirohito has reigned for 60 years.

Two years ago, Franz Josef handed over executive power to his oldest son, crown prince Hans Adam.

Liechtenstein, with a population of 26,000, is nestled between Austria and Switzerland. Since 1921, it has been linked to Switzerland by a customs union.

Good record

Zsa Zsa Gabor chose the captain of the Queen Mary to perform her eighth wedding because only 30 of the 3,000 couples he has married are divorced, her publicist said.

"When they were told about his track record, they decided he was the one for them," said Beth Herman. "I guess they are hoping it will stick."

Gabor, 58, wearing a lavender and white off-the-shoulder gown, wed Frederick von Anhalt of Munich, 45, Thursday evening in the living room of her home in suburban Bel-Air. Von Anhalt says he is a prince by adoption.

About 125 people attended the ceremony performed by Capt. John Gregory.

Guests included actor Paul Sorvino, actresses Constance Towers and Michelle Phillips, and comedian Red Buttons.

The only members of Gabor's family attending were her daughter, Francesca Hilton, and her sister, Magda Gabor. Her other sister, Eva, and mother, Jolie, bowed the ceremony.

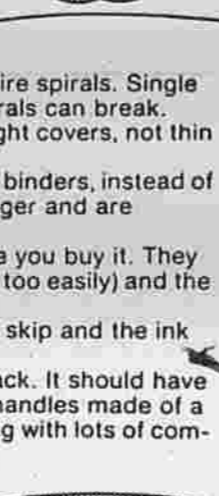

"I don't think they approved of the wedding, so they didn't show up," another publicist, Phil Paladino, said Friday.

Gabor had said she was planning a Roman Catholic ceremony in a New York horse barn, but Paladino said "it just didn't work out. You can blame it on logistics."

BACK TO SCHOOL

You spend a lot of money on school supplies at this time of year. Here are some tips to make the supplies — and your money — last longer.

1. Look for notebooks with double wire spirals. Single metal spirals can unwind. Plastic spirals can break.
2. Look for notebooks with heavyweight covers, not thin cardboard ones that will tear easily.
3. Buy old-fashioned blue canvas ring binders, instead of plastic ones. Canvas binders last longer and are cheaper.
4. Check the rings on a binder before you buy it. They should open and close easily (but not too easily) and the two halves of the rings should meet.
5. Avoid erasable pens. They tend to skip and the ink smears.
6. Get a sturdy school bag or backpack. It should have double sewn seams and straps and handles made of a heavy-duty fabric. Look for a large bag with lots of compartments that is machine washable.

Gorilla romance

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — A camera crew was shooting a promotional film at the North Carolina Zoological Park when it suddenly turned into a love story.

The crew captured footage of lowland gorillas involved in a bit of romance, a rare event, zoo officials say.

"It was just a matter of being there at the right time with a camera," general curator Les Schnobert said Wednesday.

Carlos, a male gorilla on loan from the Memphis, Tenn., zoo, appeared to be mating with female gorilla, said zoo spokeswoman "Elise" Gellan. The gorillas were matched by a computerized breeding service.

Ramar, the zoo's male gorilla, has shown no interest in Hope despite two years of efforts.

Naming the baby

ANNECY, France (AP) — A small-town entrepreneur thinks he's got just the thing for parents-to-be who can't think of a good name for their child: a computer that will do it for them.

Claude Bouvier, 28, says he and two associates spent two years developing a computer program that picks the most suitable names for babies, based on a questionnaire filled out by the parents.

The form asks for information such as the family name, the names of the parents, how long a first name is desired, whether it should rhyme with the last name, and preferred initials.

But the questions get even more customized. Should baby's name be old-fashioned or up-to-date; relating to a certain country, period in history, or region of France?

Bouvier says he's even conducted studies to determine which names are most associated with certain character traits and professions. Pierre, for instance, is a big name for businessmen in France.

After the parents have made up their minds, Bouvier feeds their answers into his computer, which returns a list of the 10 most suitable male and female names.

Costs come down at Manchester hospital under state plan

By George Lovig
Herald Reporter

People who require care at Manchester Memorial Hospital or other hospitals in Connecticut will not have to pay as much for treatment under a new state price-setting plan, according to hospital and insurance officials.

The state Commission on Hospital and Health Care Thursday set prices for various operations at 34 Manchester Memorial hospitals, including the treatment cost of the Manchester Memorial hospital.

It is to the hospital's advantage, then, to keep costs down, Stanley said. Ultimately, this will translate into lower costs for patients because they will not have to pay as much for medical insurance.

However, the benefits to consumers probably will not be felt until next year, according to Richard Holdt, director of corporate comunications for Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Connecticut, Holdt said Friday that because most policies are renewed on a yearly basis, the savings will not be translated into lower premiums until after the program has been in operation for a few months and medical insurance policies come up for renewal.

Under the plan, Medicaid and Medicare patients would not be covered, although a similar federal program has been in place for Medicare patients for the past few years.

The price scale set by the commission would limit the increase to less than that which has occurred last year, Stanley said. For instance, hospital costs rose 7.7 percent last year over the previous year, which is almost two to three times the inflation rate, she said.

In the previous two years, costs rose 6.9 percent and 9.5 percent, which were also higher than the inflation rate. Under the complex formula used to set the prices, the commission used the average inflation rate calculated for the last two years and the expected inflation rate for 1987.

The formula was also based on the 1984 costs at each hospital, adjusted for changes in the mix of cases and the volume of admissions, MMH spokesman Andrew Beck explained. The calculations took into effect 472 different types of treatments, or diagnoses, that included such things as heart attacks and tonsillectomies, but also the age of the patient and other special circumstances, Beck said.

At MMH, an appendectomy will cost $3,939, a gall bladder operation $4,845, and treatment for a fractured hip and pelvis $5,045, Stanley said. Those over 17 who have a tonsillectomy at MMH will have to pay $1,146, and those under 17 will pay $983.

The price scale for MMH ranges from $271 for false labor to $45,282 for burn-victim treatment that requires an operation. The prices set for these and other operations vary from hospital to hospital, but if costs are higher for one type of treatment they will be higher for all other treatments at a hospital, Stanley said.

Beck said, though, that the various prices allow patients to "shop around" for the lowest price. While the insurance industry has supported the state plan since it was approved by the General Assembly in 1984, Holdt said he was surprised at some of the differences in costs between hospitals. He said the full effect of the program will probably not be known until after it has been in operation for a few months.

Beck agreed. He said MMH was at first cautious about the plan when it was being discussed in 1984, and said the financial benefits to the hospital cannot be assessed until next year.

However, Beck said he was optimistic the price limits will help both patient and hospital. "Hopefully (it will be) more sophisticated, more accurate, and hopefully a more fair way to hold costs down," he said.

Manchester In Brief

Rec card fees going up Sept. 2

The Manchester Recreation Department will be increasing the cost of recreation membership cards.

Effective Sept. 2, the one-year cards will cost $12 for adults and $4 for children. Six-month cards for non-residents, who are barred from some of the activities, will be available for $24 for adults and $8 for children, according to a news release from the department.

Anyone participating in recreational activities through the department must have a card.

The cards can be purchased Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Recreation Department office at 397 Porter St. For more information, call the office at 647-3084.

Police officer saves area boy

A Manchester police officer who saved the life of an 11-year-old South Windsor boy received a citizen's award from the chief of the South Windsor department.

Paul Lombardo, who lives in South Windsor, gave resuscitation techniques to a boy who nearly drowned at a Skyline Drive home.

William R. Ryan, South Windsor police chief, wrote a letter to Lombardo. "I speak for both the young man's family and our department when I say, 'thank God for your presence,'" the letter said.

Comment session set for Aug. 21

The Board of Directors has scheduled a comment session Aug. 21 to hear comments or complaints from residents. The session will be held in the Board of Directors' office in the Municipal Building from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Future sessions are scheduled for the first Tuesday of each month from 9 to 10 a.m. and the third Thursday of each month from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Developer seeks zone change

A Manchester developer is seeking a zone change for a parcel of land in the southern part of town so he can build about 20 single-family houses.

Ernest Reed has proposed to change the zoning of about 17.4 acres at 385 Gardner St. from Rural Residence to Residence AA. If the changes are granted by the Planning and Zoning Commission, it would increase the density for that tract from 12 housing units per acre to two units per acre, Reed said Thursday.

Reed said that he plans to incorporate the development with another he is building — the 62-lot Mountain Farms subdivision just off of Gardner Street.

Stamler named to allocation council

Rep. Donald F. Bates, D-East Hartford, has designated Manchester Democrat Frank Stamler to sit on the local allocation council that was established to help spend Manchester's share of the state surplus.

Stamler is the district leader in the 9th Voting District. Bates said, and he has been involved in Democratic politics for years. Bates is the third legislator who has designated someone to take his place on the allocation council. State Sen. Carl A. Zinsner, R-Manchester, named former Manchester Mayor Nathan G. Agostinelli to replace him and state Rep. James R. McCavanagh picked Matthew Moriarty Jr., also a former mayor.

Bates, who was supposed to sit on allocation councils in the two other towns in his district, East Hartford and Glastonbury, said he chose Stamler because he felt a local leader should decide how to spend money locally. Bates, who will sit on East Hartford's council, said he might have a conflict should both committees meet at the same time.

Manchester is slated to receive about $500,000 from improvements.

Fire flow test scheduled Tuesday

The Water Department has scheduled a fire flow test for Tuesday at the Pratt & Whitney Building on Progress Drive to determine the effects of the water system for fire protection. The test is planned for 9 a.m. and should last two hours.

Decreased water pressure could occur, but the quality of the water should not be affected; the department said.

Property revaluation continues

The town Assessor's Office revaluation field teams are scheduled to work on the following streets next week: Center Street, Avon Street, Park Street and Laurel Place. Any streets not completed will be added to the following week's list.

Krupp selected for education panel

Judy Arin Krupp of McDevitt Drive, an educational consultant, has been chosen to serve on the board of trustees of the National Staff Development Council, the panel has announced.

The NSDC is a non-profit professional association of about 1,500 people in the United States and Canada who assist in coordinating programs to help teachers in public and private schools improve their skills. Krupp will join the board of trustees at NSDC's annual conference, and will be responsible for establishing local policy.

Kandra suggests buying trailer

Public Works Director George Kandra has proposed that the town of Manchester spend $13,124 for a new trailer to haul the town's road paving and roller.

The money would come from a projected $25,000 surplus in the Public Works Department's capital equipment purchase fund, according to a report prepared for Kandra by Highway Superintendent Keith H. Chapman. The surplus results from less-than-expected costs for a number of pieces of equipment, including more than $15,000 saved in the purchase of a new paver, Chapman said.

The Board of Directors will consider the matter when it meets on Aug. 26.

Developer may appeal court rule

By John F. Kirch
Herald Reporter

The developers of a proposed shopping center in South Windsor are considering appealing a court decision that bars commercial development on the 57-acre site.

Although he was not sure what action will be taken, C. David Freese, the project manager for Bronson and Hutensky of Bloomfield, one of the firms that would build the center, said the company should be making a decision next week.

"We are investigating filing an appeal," Freese said.

Freese was not sure whether Bronson and Hutensky's partner in the project, Melvin, Simms & Associates, had decided on an appeal and officials from that non-Manchester-based company could not be reached for comment.

The proposed 400,000-square-foot open shopping center would occupy 20 of the firm's 720,000-square-foot enclosed Buckland Hills Mall being planned for a site in Manchester, just across the street from the South Windsor site. The makeup would be similar to the Westfarms Mall and Corbins Corner development that straddles the West Hartford-Farmington town line.

In July, a Hartford Superior Court judge overruled the town's Winchester Planning and Zoning Commission decision to allow commercial development in the area. The judge's decision reversed the zoning of the 57 acres from Designed Commercial to Rural Residence.

The Pleasant Valley Neighborhood Association, a neighborhood group that is opposed to the Winchester Mall, filed a lawsuit in 1985 challenging the PZC's decision to grant the zone change to the developers.

Manchester attorney Bruce S. Beck, who represents the neighborhood association, has said that the court decision will have a detrimental effect on the Buckland Hills Mall because the judge's decision was based on the negative traffic impact the Winchester Mall would have on local streets. Beck and others have said that the Buckland Hills Mall would hurt roads and the environment of the area.

Manchester town officials have brushed this aside, however, saying that the site, which is located in the center of town, has all the necessary traffic permits needed. The developers are also planning to use proposed tax incentive bonds from the town to help pay for road improvements in Manchester.

Democratic nominee not surprised challenger quit sheriff's primary

By George Lovig
Herald Reporter

Al Rioux of Newington, the party-endorsed Democratic candidate for Hartford County judge, said he was not surprised that Plainville's John Tarca decided not to face a primary against him.

Tarca formally notified the secretary of the state's office Friday that he would not force a Sept. 8 primary. Rioux defeated Tarca in the July 23 convention that selected a Democratic nominee, but Tarca had enough delegate votes to force a runoff.

Tarca, a deputy sheriff for 25 years, had filed papers with the secretary of the state's office after the convention saying he would be a primary. Rioux said Tarca's withdrawal was based on his assurances to Tarca that if he were elected he would not fire deputy sheriffs who had supported Tarca.

Tarca could not be reached for comment Friday.

Rioux, Newington's Democratic town chairman, said he met with Tarca and Democratic State Chairman Timothy Moynihan on Wednesday. Rioux said Moynihan was concerned that the party would become divided by the primary, and Tarca was urged to withdraw from the contest.

However, Rioux stressed that there were no secret bargains made. "We didn't make any deals," he said.

Rioux said that as high sheriff he would continue to employ current deputy sheriffs if they were "competent and honest." He said he would employ deputy sheriffs based on their qualifications, not their political affiliations.

"I'm not going to give carte blanche to anyone," Rioux said.

Tarca's decision clears the way for Rioux to face Republican candidate Stephen Nick Polls of Hartford in the November election. Although heavily favored by most observers, Rioux said Friday he is not taking the contest lightly.

"I don't take anything lightly," he said. "I'm happy that this (primary) is over so that I can face the Republican candidate."

Rioux said he has not asked Tarca for help in campaigning, although he hopes to meet with Tarca and talk to him about the sheriff's office.

"He has an awful lot of knowledge about the sheriff's department," Rioux said.

The winner in November will replace Democratic High Sheriff Patrick Hogan, who is scheduled to retire next July.

Candidates agree to ban billboards

State Sen. Carl A. Zinsner, R-Manchester, and his Democratic challenger, Michael P. Meotti of Glastonbury, have agreed to respect a longtime practice of not using billboards and lawn signs in Glastonbury.

Both said they would use billboards and signs in the other towns in the 4th Senatorial District, which, in addition to Glastonbury, comprises Manchester, Columbia, Bolton and Hebron.

"They're billboards," a good part of the election process," Meotti said.

Zinsner, whose campaign manager asked Meotti to comply with the Glastonbury tradition, had already rented a billboard in that town for October. Zinsner said he would not use the billboard, however, and he was considering other options.

Those options include swapping the billboard for one in another town or, if it was legal, donating the billboard to a charity organization.

Meanwhile, Meotti said he is waiting for Zinsner's reply to a request that the candidates debate. Meotti said earlier this week that he hoped to have a series of debates throughout the 4th District, and he sent Zinsner a letter making such a request.

Zinsner said he had received the letter and was considering the request.

"We're going to be discussing it over the weekend," Zinsner said. He said he would respond to Meotti's request next week.

OPINION

State ruling is a victory for homeless

The civil rights of Connecticut's estimated 1,751 to 3,548 homeless people received a needed boost this week when the secretary of the state's office issued an opinion upholding the voting rights of the homeless.

In the opinion, which was sent to all town clerks and registrars of voters, the office said homeless people can register to vote in towns if they can provide a mailing address and have a place they call home. That place, the opinion said, might be a park bench, an alley or a shelter.

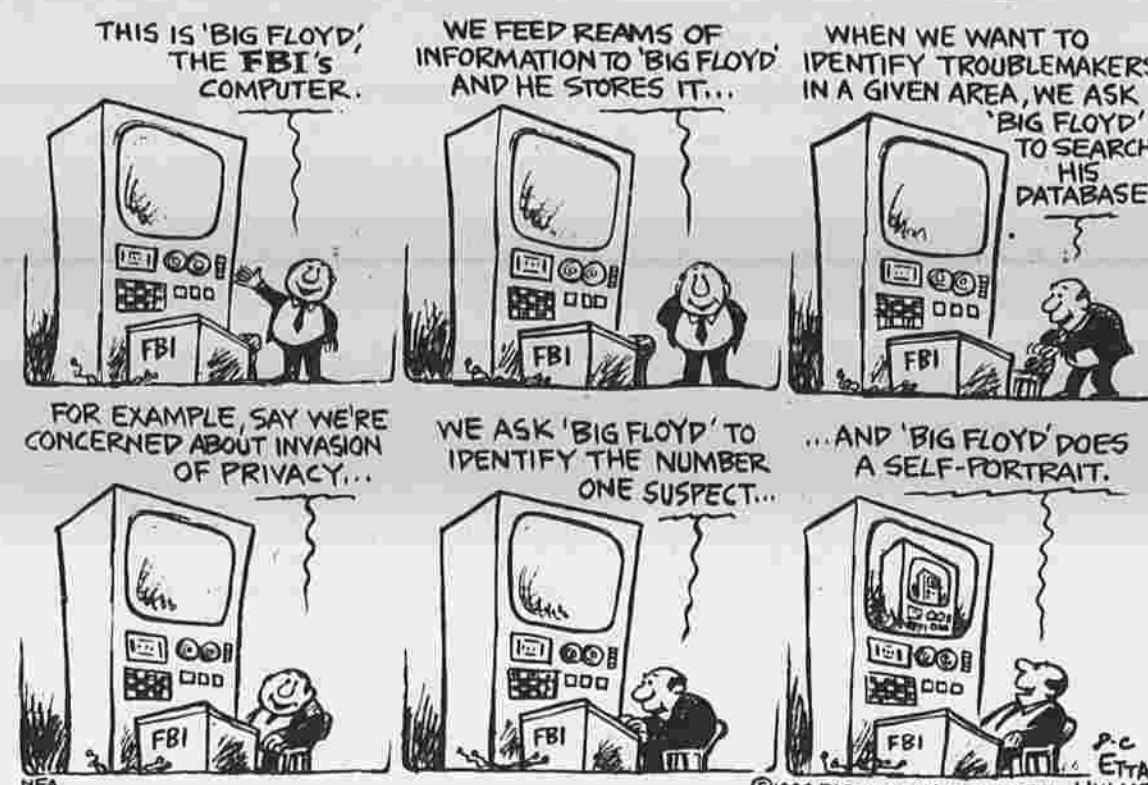

The opinion was hailed by the Hartford-based Center for Advocacy and Research Inc., which requested an opinion after it conducted a survey earlier this year and discovered that none of the towns it polled would register a homeless person as a voter.

The secretary of the state's opinion offered nothing new. Homeless people have always been allowed to vote.

But as the advocacy center's survey showed, the state's written regulations were often ignored, misunderstood or overlooked. As a result, many homeless people — who could be expected to have more at stake than the average person when they make their choices at the polls — were needlessly denied the right to vote.

Although homeless people lack a home as most of us have defined it, many choose to "make their homes" in a given town, sleeping on the streets or in shelters at night and using the community's available resources during the day. They deserve the same rights and respect given those who occupy traditional homes.

It is unfortunate that so many towns failed to recognize homeless people as legitimate voters. The secretary of the state's opinion should help to end the confusion and ensure that the state's homeless people can freely exercise their rights.

The lesson of 'Heartburn'

By Rusty Brown

Is there something to be learned from "Heartburn"? Is it just a two-hour movie with two popular box-office stars, Meryl Streep and Jack Nicholson, playing off the scandalous side of Washington? Is it merely a fast-moving, best-selling roman a clef of wisecracks and badinage? Or is it valuable insight into the disintegration of a marriage and its accompanying anguish and sadness?

It is, I think, all three of these. Here we have two well-known people — one, Carl Bernstein, half of the celebrated journalistic team credited with blowing the lid off Watergate; the other, Nora Ephron, witty essayist, author and screen writer.

The scandal in their high-profile marriage — his affair with the wife of the British ambassador — became a stunning item in a Washington gossip column, then a barely disguised novel written by Ephron, and now, a summer movie.

To top it off, Bernstein gets his rebuttal in this month's issue of Playboy magazine, telling of his legal maneuvering to get some control over how he's portrayed in the script. Perhaps that is why the movie is gentler on him than the book.

Be that as it may, the pain of the situation still comes through, a candidly told real-life trauma of a woman with a 2-year-old child and soon to have another who discovers her husband is having an affair. "There I was, seven months gone," she writes, "swaybacked, awkward, bloated, logy, with a belly button that looked like a pumpkin stem and feet that felt like old cucumbers."

The shock of discovery hits her hard. She writes, "You decide to love him, you decide to trust him, you're... in the day-to-dayness of the situation, and you kind of notice 'things aren't what they were, but it's a distant bell... And then when something does turn out to be wrong, it isn't that you knew all along, it's that you were somewhere else."

In the movie, we see her going through her husband's desk and finding the bills for flowers, long-distance phone calls and secret trips the lovers took together. She is shaking with rage when she confronts her husband with a drawerful of evidence.

Anyone who has faced a similar awakening knows the anger and humiliation, the crumbling self-esteem, the enormous sense of failure.

A friend of Ephron's, who weathered a similar wrench, advises her to wait it out. She gives that a try, but when the affair continues, decides she would "rather sit here and pretend it's OK... rather die than spend five more minutes... wondering where you are and anticipating the next betrayal."

We sense her choice won't be easy, when we see her boarding the plane — her newborn strapped to her chest, clutching the hand of her toddler, who struggles on baby legs, to climb the high steps onto the aircraft.

Would it have been better for her to stay? I don't know. Constancy, after all, is the wellspring of marriage. We think of a marriage certificate as a talisman to ward off the evil of temptation.

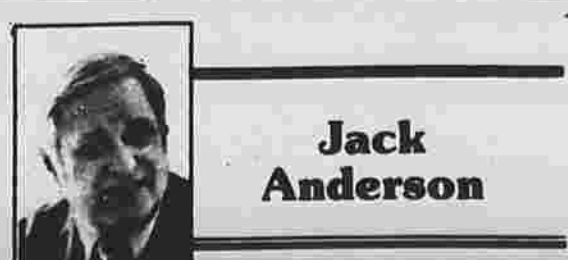

But infidelities happen — often, we suppose — and the innocent partner has two rude truths to reckon with: accepting the reality of the transgression; and figuring out what to do about it.

And here is where the book and movie go beyond a kiss-and-tell episode between notables. It's a public exposure of primal emotions. A lot of women have had to deal with Ephron's dilemma — whether to live on with a known betrayer, or to venture forth to the unknown. Either road is a despairing turning point in a woman's life.

Trust betrayed doesn't always destroy a marriage. But it leaves a scar that's hard to hide, a heartburn that doesn't go away. That's the lesson of "Heartburn."

Booze linked to air deaths

WASHINGTON — Could that second in-flight cocktail prove fatal in an emergency? Federal Aviation Administration investigators were startled to discover an apparent correlation between survivability in an airplane crash and the amount of booze a passenger had consumed.

No one lives through a plane-shattering crash or mid-air explosion, of course. But the unpublished portion of an FAA investigation on a 1983 emergency landing in Cincinnati indicates that in survivable plane accidents the heavier-drinking passengers are more likely to perish.

Twenty-three people died after fire broke out in a lavatory of an Air Canada DC-9 in June 1983. The deaths were caused by fumes from burning material in the cabin. The plane crash-landed and the survivors fled through the escape hatches.

As a result of the findings, the FAA has ordered that planes with 30 or more seats be fitted with slower-burning, more fire-retardant materials. Existing planes must conform by 1990.

But what was left out of the final 98-page report was the toxicological study done by experts at the FAA's Mike Montgomery Aeronautical Center in Oklahoma City, Okla. The study turned up surprising links between passenger deaths and the amount of alcohol in their bodies.

Of the 23 who died, three had more than enough alcohol in their blood streams to be declared legally drunk in most states; one had enough to be legally drunk in some states; eight had some alcohol in their blood and 11 had none. Tests on none of the 23 survivors, on the other hand, showed none who would have been legally drunk in any state and only four with any alcohol at all in their blood.

A spokesman for the FAA's Civil Aeromedical Institute told our associate Les Whitten that the statistics were not conclusive enough to state with certainty that booze can be a factor in survivability. Such other factors as distance from escape hatches, lighting indicating the hatches' locations and cabin attendants' training can also determine who lives or dies in a walkway accident.

It's because the scientific and statistical evidence is still too sketchy for definite conclusions that the alcohol content of the Air Canada passengers' blood was left out of the final draft of the report, the spokesman said.

Slippery polluters
About half of the vessel owners responsible for oil spills in U.S. waters says managers to escape the cost of cleaning up their mess, according to a report by the Transportation Department's inspector general.

As a result, from 1971 to 1985, the Coast Guard spent about $60 million of unrecouped funds to clean up onshore and offshore oil spills. The inspector general identified four chief reasons for the government's failure to collect from the oil spillers:

- Legislative limits on vessel owners' liability.
- Unidentified perpetrators.
- Delays in processing oil-pollution court cases.
- Insufficient public awareness of the effects of oil spills.

Not only does the Coast Guard lack the "deterrent effect of criminal prosecution," the inspector general found, but even civil penalties have not been assessed for the many spills on the Outer Continental Shelf. That's because the Environmental Protection Agency has yet to define "harmful quantities" of spilled oil, as it was ordered to do nine years ago.

Congress is considering legislation that would set up a Marine Oil Pollution Compensation Fund, financed by user fees, to shift the burden of unrecovered cleanup costs from the government to the private sector.

Under the dome
It's not often that a member of Congress rises to the defense of PACs — political action committees that allow corporations and organizations to make legal campaign contributions to favored politicians. The stigma attached to PACs in recent years can transform the staunchest populist into an apparent waterboy for the special interests.

But this hasn't fazed Rep. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., who evidently doesn't like what reform legislation proposed by Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., would do. So he recently wrote to 4,000 PACs asking for their help.

"In the past, reform has always been preferred for its unintentional effects rather than its original premises," wrote Boschwitz, a former plywood salesman. He then asked PAC managers to submit their opinions because "you are the folks who best understand these laws and can best analyze the proposed changes."

If Boschwitz were a poultry farmer, would he ask the fox's advice on design of a henhouse?

No postcards of Manchester

To the Editor:

Where are the Manchester postcards? Last week we had relatives from Tucson and Houston visiting and they wanted to send postcards of prominent places in Manchester to their families back home. We looked in a dozen stores (including Marlow's and Fairway) but were unable to locate postcards showing scenes in Manchester (the closest being Wickham Park). If such postcards are available in Manchester store, I'd appreciate knowing the place where they may be purchased.

Is there some agency (perhaps the chamber of commerce) that would be interested in providing postcards of our great town for tourists and visitors?

Japan and the buildup by the Soviets

TOKYO — As every reader of American newspapers knows, Soviet Premier Gorbachev is eager to limit nuclear arms, and it's Ronald Reagan who is the hardnose. Congressional doves like Teddy Kennedy are teaming up with such Third World figures as India's Rajiv Gandhi and Sweden's Ingvar Carlsson to try to knock a little sense into our saber-rattling president.

But if so, why did a worried Western military observer here recently describe the increase in Soviet air power in northeast Asia as "astronomical"? That nice Mr. Gorbachev has built Soviet fighter strength in this region up to nearly a thousand aircraft, with the late-model Fulcrums yet to come but expected soon. Add to the 350 bombers, 80 of them Backfires, which practice low-altitude attacks. And don't forget the 165 Soviet SS-20 IRBMs installed in the Far East.

Keep an eye on naval developments, too. The Soviet Pacific Fleet is the best and largest of the Soviet Union's four, with somewhere between a third and a half of all the Red Navy's vessels. Boasting 840 ships, including two aircraft carriers, it regularly plies the waters between Vladivostok and its base at Vietnam's Cam Ranh Bay — perhaps the best harbor in the Far East. And recently Soviet diplomats have been seeking "fishing rights" from the mini-states of the central Pacific (Vanuatu has already signed a contract), so the hammer and sickle will henceforth be seen much more often all over the mighty ocean.

But is Japan itself doing enough in its own defense? Much more than you may think, says Ambassador Mansfield. That famous 1 percent-of-GNP limit on defense expenditures doesn't include (as our own defense budget does) such costly items as military pensions; if it did, defense would account for 1 1/2 percent of Japan's GNP today. Moreover, Japan contributes more than a billion dollars a year toward the upkeep of the 55,000 U.S. military personnel in these islands — nearly five times, per capita, what West Germany contributed to maintain our forces there in 1982 (the last year for which figures are available).

WHAT, THEN, about trade? Our current $50 billion trade deficit with Japan is "intolerable," Mansfield agrees. But how much of this is Japan's fault? When the average GM car costs $13,500, can Americans be blamed for looking elsewhere? Or can the Japanese be criticized for meeting the demand?

Another thing: Look at the East Asian nations (Japan included) that are winning the competitive battle for American markets, and you will see people who concentrate on working together for a common goal. By contrast, the American economy resembles Saturday night in Clancy's Bar. Labor is forever at business's throat, and whenever business comes up for air, Congress jacks up its taxes and throws in a few new regulations. American business could compete far more effectively if it weren't treated at home like a dangerous criminal.

What America does have the right to demand of Japan is access to Japanese markets. And here — as witness the recent agreement on semiconductor chips — progress is being made. Now if we could just persuade Mama-san to try our oranges...

Longo blames petitioner for errors

ANSONIA — Independent gubernatorial candidate Frank Longo on Friday blamed a hired petition circulator for alleged irregularities in the way nominating signatures were gathered in Shelton. The Ansonia Evening Sentinel reported Friday that the petitioner, Ferdinand Rossetti of Danbury, had told people they could sign the petitions for themselves and their spouses, a violation of state campaign laws.

ZBA backs Upjohn sludge removal

NORTH HAVEN — A Zoning Board of Appeals ruling has upheld a town order calling on the Upjohn Co. to remove an 80,000-cubic-foot sludge pile of metal hydroxide from its Sackett Point Road property. Upjohn had appealed the original order and claimed it was illegal, in part on grounds the sludge pile was not regulated by the Planning and Zoning Commission because it had been there long before the town prohibited outdoor storage of hazardous waste.

No survivors in plane crash

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Fifty-four people, including 49 military men and five civilians, died in the crash of a Honduran air force transport plane in jungle-covered mountains, a military source said today.

"There were no survivors," said the source, referring to Thursday's crash of the Hercules C-130. The source, who insisted on anonymity pending release of official information, commented after a helicopter pilot on a joint U.S.-Honduran search mission reported that he had found the crashed transport and that there was no sign of life.

The source said he had no other details for the moment. The aircraft lost radio contact shortly after it took off at about 2:30 p.m. Thursday from a military air base at Mocoron, near the border with Nicaragua, and crashed in eastern Honduras north of the Nicaraguan border.

Fifteen U.S. and Honduran light spotter planes and helicopters took part in the search.

Baxley declared winner in Alabama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — A state Democratic Party subcommittee today unanimously declared that Lt. Gov. Bill Baxley is the party's nominee for governor, ruling that Attorney General Charles Graddick won a primary runoff by using illegal votes.

The subcommittee's ruling said, "Bill Baxley received the majority of the legally cast votes in the June 24 runoff."

Baxley had challenged the attorney general's 8,756-vote lead in their June 24 runoff, contending that the margin was built up with the help of illegal Republican crossover votes that Graddick openly solicited.

Tropical storm forms off coast

MIAMI — Tropical Storm Charley swirled to life Friday off South Carolina with winds up to 50 mph, becoming the third named storm of the Atlantic hurricane season.

The National Hurricane Center said the storm posed no immediate threat to land, but warned small craft along the Carolina coasts south of Cape Lookout, N.C., to stay in port.

The storm was about 140 miles southeast of Charleston, S.C., with top winds estimated at 45 to 50 mph, the center said. It said conditions were favorable for the storm to strengthen.

Doctor's lawyer defends shipment

PHILADELPHIA — The lawyer for a doctor who shipped human heads to Denver insisted Friday there was nothing illegal about it, while police in Colorado said the heads never arrived at their destination.

"The heads aren't here. Somewhere en route, they must've been detected. Those body parts are not here," said Denver police Detective Dave Pontarelli.

United Parcel Service employees in Louisville, Ky., discovered the heads July 24 when they opened a leaking package they thought contained aerosol cans, according to Dr. Richard Greathouse, coroner in Jefferson County, Ky.

The heads were packed in plastic bags, he said, adding that the workers resealed the packages and sent them toward the Colorado address without informing authorities.

Police and District Attorney Ron Castille said the heads were shipped by Dr. Martin Spector, who told police he had been shipping body parts for 15 years.

Spector, 70, has not been charged with any crime, said his attorney, Edward T. Peierstein.

Beaten drug agent 'feeling chipper'

TUCSON, Ariz. — A federal drug agent reportedly tortured by Mexican police was examined by doctors Friday amid tight security, a government official said.

Victor Cortez, 34, was "feeling pretty chipper" after the exam, said Terrence Burke, a special agent with the Drug Enforcement Administration in Phoenix.

Burke refused to discuss results of the examination performed at an undisclosed location, but said a report was being sent to Washington.

DEA chief John Lawn said in Washington that was "stripped, deprived of his cattle prod." Preliminary results from the medical examination showed he had a contusion on his right shoulder and multiple lacerations on both legs, Lawn said.

Mexican authorities denied that Cortez had been tortured.

Attorney General Edwin Meese III called the incident "a most serious and very disturbing occurrence."

Gramm-Rudman showdown looms

WASHINGTON — Rushing to recess, Congress squared off Friday over the deficit-reduction law, a bitter confrontation that was blocking an emergency debt bill needed to keep the government solvent until September.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and other sponsors of the Gramm-Rudman act reaffirmed plans to use the stopgap debt increase — which must be passed before lawmakers leave town — to win final passage of an amendment restoring automatic spending cuts to the law.

But Senate opponents geared up for a filibuster, a threat of endless debate to force the sponsors to back down.

And House Democratic leaders, strongly opposed to Gramm-Rudman, worked to secure enough votes to beat back the amendment should the Senate pass it and send it with the debt bill back to the House.

"We hope we don't get to that," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass.

meetings — gave it to Rostenkowski. It would have called for a $24 billion tax increase on corporations and a $124 billion cut for individuals. It would not have affected the deficit.

Packwood proposed that the two sides approve the bill now and agree to make up the shortage next month. He went so far as to have Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III call the president and extract an agreement that Reagan "won't be chewing on us" for writing a bill that is not revenue-neutral.

Reagan agreed, Packwood said. But Rostenkowski said "he cannot get the package through his conferees with the shortfall, even if we say we are going to make it up."

Then, Packwood said, David Brockway, director of the highly regarded staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, told the two chairmen that new calculations showed the $124 billion proposal would worsen the deficit by $17 billion. It would have cut individual taxes by $11 billion and boosted the corporate burden by $114 billion.

THE VISITORS SAID they noticed a backwardness to the country, a feeling that life was at the behind the times. "The standard of living is not like ours," Mansur said.

Armstrong agreed, saying that he came to that conclusion one day as he watched women cultivate a field. "It would take a bulldozer 10 to 15 minutes to do the work," he said. "It took the women three straight days, he said.

Some of the students said they saw too much public consumption of alcohol, possibly as the result of the Russian work ethic.

"Everyone works in some capacity," Armstrong said.

One woman, Armstrong said, handed six sheets of toilet paper to those who entered the hotel restrooms. "That's all she did," Armstrong said.

The students agreed that Leningrad was the nicest of the two cities but still had its problems. One was the water. Specifically, they said, it couldn't be consumed.

"When you take a shower you can smell the water," Armstrong said. "That threw a lot of the kids off."

Mansur said that brushing teeth was out of the question. After a shower, he said "your hair kind of smelled like a swamp."

He said that Leningrad was much looser as far as bartering with the street children, and it looked more old and European.

Armstrong said that Leningrad was more westernized than the two cities.

The students said the information they received on the Chernobyl incident was slanted. They said they heard various reports on the casualties, adding that the tour guides refused to answer questions about the situation.

Nichols, who went to Italy and France with an MHS group last summer, said that the countries are worlds apart. He liked Russia better because it was less commercialized.

July 4 panel looks for help

By Alex Girelli
Associate Editor

The Independence Day Celebration Committee is looking for an organization to take over the town's annual Fourth of July celebration or at least to supply some help in running the event.

Committee Chairman Nathan Agostinelli said Friday the first step will be to discuss the matter with the Greater Manchester Chamber of Commerce, which has been helping since 1984, when the townwide celebration, culminated by a fireworks display, was revived.

The major problem, Agostinelli said, is to get volunteers for the various jobs connected with the celebration, mostly volunteers to collect contributions at the site from those who attend.

Richard Carter, committee treasurer, said the budget for this year's celebration was $18,000, but only about $2,000 of the money came from contributions made on July 4 on the campus of Manchester Community College where the festivities took place. Advance contributions and sale of items made up the difference, he said.

Carter said about 25,000 people attended the event and more of them would contribute if there were more people to collect donations.

Agostinelli said most members of the Independence Day Committee would like to see the event taken over by some organization with more manpower, but they want the committee to remain in place for at least one more year and work in parallel with any new group that assumes responsibility.

Agostinelli said that in the three years of celebrations, the committee has worked out almost all the problems. He said everything except on-site contributions works well.

He said that Independence Day is one of the more active holidays and many people go on trips, making it difficult for any organization to commit manpower.

Agostinelli said most of the work has been done by about a dozen people. He said there is great deal to do on the day before the holiday and day after Independence Day.

Red Sox, Clemens turn aside Detroit

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Light-hitting Ed Romero triggered an eight-run fifth inning with a walk and capped the rally with his first homer in nearly two years as the Boston Red Sox raked to an 8-5 decision over the Detroit Tigers Friday night for Roger Clemens' 18th victory.

Blanked on two hits, both singles by Bill Buckner, for four innings the Red Sox jumped on starter Walt Terrell, 10-9, and reliever Bill Campbell for their biggest inning of the season.

Clemens, who had fallen in three previous tries for his 18th victory, struggled for his first triumph since July 25.

The right-hander, who has lost four games after a 14-0 start, allowed 10 hits in 7 2/3 innings, including a two-run homer by Darrell Evans. He struck out six and walked two. Joe Sambo relieved in the eighth after Joe Lemon's two-run single and got the final four outs for his 11th save.

Detroit took a 1-0 lead in the fifth inning and shut out the Royals the rest of the way as the Yankees won their fourth straight game.

The Cardinals scored their run in the seventh and gave up a three-run homer to George Brett, his 12th of the year.

The Yankees broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth. Singles by Don Mattingly and Dan Pasqua sandwiched around a walk to Dave Winfield led the bases with none out against Scott Bankhead, 6-4.

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Rookie John Morris singled home two runs to break a 10th-inning tie and made a potential run-saving catch in the seventh inning, leading the St. Louis Cardinals to a 4-2 victory over the New York Mets Friday night.

Morris hit the single with two out and the bases loaded off reliever Jesse Orosco, 4-5, and a third run scored on the play on a throwing error by Mets right fielder Darryl Strawberry.

Left-hander Pat Perry, 2-2, worked one inning in relief of starter Bob Forsch for the victory, and Todd Worrell pitched the bottom of the 10th for his 26th save despite giving up a run-scoring double to Mookie Wilson.

Ozzie Smith started the winning rally with a walk and was forced at second by Tommy Herr. One out later, Terry Pendleton walked and Tito Landrum beat out an infield hit to load the bases.

Morris, called up from Louisville last month and used as a defensive replacement in this game, followed with a line single to right, scoring Herr and Pendleton. Landrum scored when Strawberry's throw bounced past catcher Gary Carter and went to the backstop.

The Mets, blanked on just three hits through six innings, scored in the seventh to tie 1-1 against St. Louis starter Bob Forsch, who allowed seven hits in eight innings.

After Morris' catch robbed Howard Johnson of an extra-base hit, Rafael Santana, got the first extra-base hit off Forsch, a double, and scored the tying run when Lee Mazzilli, pinch-hitting for pitcher Sid Fernandez, singled.

Fernandez, who has lost two of his previous three decisions, gave up just one run on five hits in seven innings in his best outing since he two-hit Atlanta on July 11.

MACC News

It's hard to believe that our shelter is almost complete

Editor's note: This column is prepared by the staff of the Manchester Area Conference of Churches.

By Nancy Carr Director

After years of operating the shelter in basements and side rooms and whatever we could beg, I'm still thinking. Volunteers from our shelter users and from Community Baptist Church have just finished painting all the walls and ceilings and posts with the white paint donated by Clark Paint Co. and it is bright, light and beautiful. How exciting to watch the community prepare a cheerful and welcoming center to feed and shelter our most needy brothers and sisters.

If you saw the picture in last Saturday's Manchester Herald of Father Joe and his cohorts from St. James Church, you had a sneak preview of how the renovations are coming. The showers and bathrooms are in, along with most wiring and a new heating system. A ceiling is in, in walls and new windows are in place and everything is painted bright white. Even the required handicapped ramp is in place.

As soon as the remaining electrical work is done and the flooring installed along with a few plumbing odds and ends, we'll pour the front stairs, move up the cots and invite you all to a celebration.

ONCE WE HAVE the main shelter area done, we can begin on rehabing the ground floor for use as a soup kitchen. And you can help. If you know of a restaurant or other facility closing that might have used equipment for sale, please call the shelter at 647-8903 and let us know. We must meet state and federal regulations for food preparation and serving and so must use commercial grade equipment. Finding good used equipment will stretch our community dollars.

And thinking of stretching dollars — our thanks to the following businesses for their generous support: Lynch Motors Inc. and the Southern New England Telephone Co. To John DeQuattro for continuing financial backing, and to the Rotary Club of Manchester and the Exchange Club of South Windsor for their most welcome contributions. Thanks also for the many gifts from individual donors: Patricia T. Noonan, Elsie Lewis, W. David Keith, James and Linda Cherry, and Edwin and Gretchen Sage.

MANCHESTER CHURCHES CONTINUE, even through the summer, to raise money for the shelter. Along with St. James Church, St. Bartholomew Church has just concluded a most successful collection and additional funds have been raised by the Presbyterian Church of Manchester. St. Mary's Episcopal Church, Community Baptist Church, Emanuel Lutheran Church and North Methodist Church.

We also benefit from steady support from those who bring food and supplies to help out at the shelter and Shepherd's.

Donors to the shelter in the past months include Nathan Agostinelli, Lynn Smith, Barbara Baker, Margie Soule, Rich Brennan, John Stator, Mary Beth Camp, Joan Schiller, Charles Cronin, Mrs. Tabol, Mark and Marcia Green, Lois Warrender, Hayden Griswold Jr., Manchester Memorial Hospital Volunteers, Bruce Guinan, St. James School (8th grade) Barbara Juggis, Wicken Spoon Bakery, Robert Holmes, Church of the Nazarene, Nick LaPenta, Concordia Lutheran Church, Sue Mahoney, Emanuel Lutheran Church, Anne Maitre, St. Bartholomew Church, Frank Mott, St. Bridget Church, Richard Pelletier, Samuel Pierson.

Soup Kitchen contributors include: K. Bryon, Women's Group of South Methodist Church, Cathy Currie, Civitan Club, Mrs. Harold Cummings, Manchester Women's Club, M.P. Fabian, VFW Post 2046, Emily Miller, Helen's Bake Shop, Robbi Plavin, Mary Shobin, Mrs. William Tauske. Our thanks and blessing on you all.

WE'RE STILL PULLING together odds and ends of the Interfaith Day Camp even though the last freckle-faced camper has been hugged and the last reluctant goodbyes shouted back and forth as the bus pulled away Friday afternoon. We do want to say thank you to all the folk who made these summer days possible for some very special children who needed a special touch of love.

First, thank you to our wonderful teenage counselors who did the yelling, the hugging and the loving. They were absolutely great. And to the staff at Concordia Church: Elsie Werner, Barbara Baker, Nancy Gutreich, who provide so much support to the Day Camp each year. And thanks to Sue Ryan and her daughter, Andrea who stepped in and kept the camp open this summer by volunteering to take over as Camp Director.

Thanks to those who stepped up to the plate: Steve Ray Gehring, Katie Fister and Fran Cimmi, Mary Leslie and her daughter Rachel and all the nurses, to Ann Tramantano who for the seventh and last year (we'll miss you, Ann) organized the daily feeding of almost a hundred campers, counselors and staff and to our MACC churches who each year sign on to provide a day's food and women to prepare and serve it: Concordia Lutheran Church, North United Methodist Church, Center Congregational Church, St. James Church, St. Bartholomew, Assumption Church, South United Methodist Church and St. Bridget Church.

HEARTFELT THANKS TO Dr. Wickersham, an absolute love of a doctor, and Dick Oulette and Mary and Ed McCrever who brought cookies and ice cream to make the last day special, to Genesis Center who shared craft items and supplies with us and to sponsors Nancy LaBonne, Suzanne Gales, Steffie Borello, Catherine Putnam and the Anshel Puzerionians who offered children join us in saying thank you, everyone.

The story behind the story

By Josie

Tom Hanks

Q. Could you give me some information on Tom Hanks. How old is he, where is he from and will he be making any more movies? Pam Freeman, Justice, Ill.

A. He's 29, from Oakland, Calif., where he and his three siblings were raised by their divorced father, until, as he explains it, his father married again, to a Chinese woman with her own children and all of a sudden, there were a lot of people around the dinner table with names he couldn't pronounce.

He attended Skyline High School in Oakland where he was the class cutup, if not a great scholar, and Chabot Junior College. After Chabot, he won a scholarship to California State University in Sacramento, where he discovered theater.

Soon, he was acting in the classics and after graduation, was asked by the director of the Great Lakes Shakespeare Festival in Cleveland to apprentice there. He spent three seasons with them and then moved to New York, where he lived in a garret, made a slasher movie, "He Knows You're Alone," and appeared with the Riverside Shakespeare Company.

An ABC talent scout spotted him and flew him to Los Angeles where he spent eight weeks auditioning for TV pilots. One of them, "Bosom Buddies," sold and became a series, if not a great ratings hit. He made other TV appearances as well, particularly one in an episode of the series "Happy Days" in which he played a guy who Fonzie had pushed out of a swing during childhood and who was now returning, as a black belt in karate, for revenge.

Years later, "Happy Days" star and now director Ron Howard remembered that bit and called him in to read for the movie he was directing, "Splash."

That movie, of course, became a tremendous hit, leading to a string of other movies for Hanks: "Bachelor Party," "Volunteers," "The Man With One Red Shoe," "The Money Pit" and "Nothing in Common" which was released in late July. He also has a new movie, which he just finished filming in Israel called "Love Hurts"; no release date has been set.

Q. Could you tell me about Tom Cruise? Is that his real name, how old is he, does he have brothers and sisters, what movies has he made? Nancy Pace, Anderson, Calif.; Kathy C., Madison, Wis.

A. Thomas Cruise Mapother IV was born in Syracuse, N.Y., on July 3, 1962. Because of his father's electrical engineering job, the family moved around a lot, last to a town outside Ottawa, Canada, where his parents were divorced.

Following the split, he and his three sisters moved with their mother to Louisville, Ky., where his interest and skill in sports, begun in Canada playing ice hockey, accelerated. (He had a rougher time in the classroom because he had dyslexia. As a result, he hated school.)

At 16, his mother remarried and the family moved to Glen Ridge, N.J., where he continued his sports, now football and wrestling. He wasn't very focused, though, and had no idea what he wanted to do after high school — travel possibly, before thinking about college — or even where his talents were concentrated. He realized that he wasn't good enough for pro sports.

When his glee club instructor suggested that he try out for the school's production of the musical "Guys and Dolls," though, he found his calling. He got the lead, and after the performance had a serious talk with his mother. He wanted to try to make it in show business and he asked her to give him 10 years to do it. Skipping his high-school graduation, he moved to New York.

Within five months of his arrival, he landed a bit part in a movie, the bomb "Endless Love." A few months later, he got a small part in the movie "Taps," later expanded to a major part, when he replaced the actor already cast. The embarrassing "Losin' It" followed, then "The Outsiders." His next film was the surprise hit "Risky Business," and that film made him a star.

The less successful "All the Right Moves" followed, as did a year in London for the recently released failure "Legend." "Top Gun," on the other hand, is a major hit and his next film is eagerly awaited: "The Color of Money," a sequel to "The Hustler" co-starring Paul Newman and directed by Martin Scorsese. It's due out in December.

Tom Cruise

Linda Blair

Q. I saw an actress named Linda Blair in a movie called "Ruckus" recently and I thought she was great. Could you tell me about her background and what she's doing now? Bill M. Donald, Abilene, Texas

A. She's 27, was born in St. Louis and raised in Westport, Conn., but starting at the age of 6, she spent her afternoons in New York modeling. At 10, she got her first movie role, a bit part in a movie called "The Sporting Club" followed by something called "The Way We Live Now."

She was 12 when she filmed the movie that would really bring her attention, "The Exorcist," in which she portrayed the possessed child Regan, a role she repeated in the critically slammed sequel, "Exorcist II: The Heretic."

She also did a number of TV movies such as "Sweet Hostage," "Sarah T.: Portrait of a Teenage Alcoholic," "Born Innocent" and "Victory at Entebbe" as well as "Airport 1975" and independent movies such as "Chained Heat," "Hell Night," "Roller Boogie" and her newest, soon-to-be-released "Night Fighters."

Her personal life has often gotten more attention than her movies: at 15, she moved in with the then-little known Rick Springfield and at 19, was busted in a massive drug sweep. She pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to possess cocaine and was placed on three years probation. She also posed nude for Oui magazine in 1982.

Vince Edwards

Q. Can you tell me whatever happened to that good-looking Vincent Edwards, who played Ben Casey on TV? Also, when did that series end? Miss R. Peck, Jersey City, N.J.

A. The series ended in 1966 and his career foundered afterwards. He started directing — a TV movie called "Maneater," episodes of series such as "Fantasy Island" — and continued acting in miniseries such as "The Rhinemann Exchange" and "Evening in Byzantium" and the movie "The Seduction." He's currently shooting a movie called "Return to Horror High" in which his daughter co-stars. There's also talk about doing an updated Ben Casey TV movie for next season.

Q. I have always admired the British actor David Warner. Could you please tell me where he's from and what movies he's been in? J. Kelly, Grand Falls, N.J., Canada

A. He was born in Manchester, England, the illegitimate child of two parents who kept stealing him back and forth from each other, so he moved around a lot during his childhood.

His movies include "Tom Jones" (he played T.J.'s brother), "Morgan," which was his big break in movies, "Straw Dogs," "Cross of Iron," "The Omen," "The Battle of Cable Hogue," "Airport 1979," "The Man with Two Brains," "The French Lieutenant's Woman," "Tron" and "Time Bandits." He's currently filming "Hansel and Gretel," in which he also sings.

Life in the fast-food lane is risky

By Sarah Overstreet

I was driving down a busy street eating a McDonald's fish sandwich the other day (I think the sandwich has its own name, but I always just holler, "One fish sandwich!" into the intercom and they know what I mean. I always add, "And no fries or hot apple pies," before they have a chance to ask) when I dropped a big plop of special sauce on my lap.

I dabbed at it with a wet paper towel when I got to work and it left a little stain on my red wool suit, but I didn't mind. It was the first time I'd had a fast-food mishap in about a year, and for someone who eats in the car as much as I do, that's quite a record.

I used to drop food all over myself, until I learned which foods were "car safe." A McDonald's fish sandwich is a superb choice for someone with a standard transmission, because the slice of cheese sticks to one piece of bun, while the breading on the fish sticks to the other piece of bun, and all the pieces stick to one another.

It stays in one piece while I pass it to the other hand so I can shift, and then again when I put it in my lap so I can turn the steering wheel with both hands.

I've tried to drive eating just about every type of fast food offered, and learned the hard way which fast foods I can and cannot eat en route. The Big Mac is impossible.

When you bite down on one side, stuff comes out the other end. When you set it down, all the layers slide apart and you have to pick up the layers one at a time and eat them. The Whopper is almost as bad.

A taco, of course, breaks apart and dribbles all its innards down your chin and arm. A burrito will hold together pretty well, but you have to be careful not to bite into the foil wrapper.

McNuggets and Kentucky Nuggets are handy, but since they're finger foods, you get grease all over your steering wheel. And their plastic foam containers are so flimsy and unbalanced they'll flip over if you have to make a sudden stop, throwing chicken parts all over the front seat.

I should have known a Wendy's baked potato was not suitable traveling food, but I love them so much I felt I had to try. During my first and only car voyage with one, the potato rolled out of fork range several times before I was able to scoop some filling out of the potato. Then as I guided the scoopful of potato-chives-sour-cream to my mouth, it fell off the side of my fork and onto my coat.

I don't mind food all over the car and as much as I mind the alternative, which is no fast food. I was always the kind of kid who hated to stop whatever I was doing to come to the dinner table, and I still hate having to sit in one place and do nothing but eat.

I tried bringing a book to the table so I could read while I ate, but my father said, "Young lady, put that book down so we can have some family time together." Then he and my mother proceeded to sit there in silence, chewing their food like a couple of bored cows. Eating in the car lets me do something else while I eat, namely drive to someplace else so I can start doing something besides eat.

"I've tried to drive eating just about every type of fast food offered, and learned the hard way which fast foods I can and cannot eat en route. The Big Mac is impossible."

Fast food is also my ethnic heritage. I grew up just three blocks from one of the nation's first fast-food emporiums, Red's Giant Hamburg in Springfield, Mo. Two decades later, Red's was immortalized in a PBS documentary on Route 66, and yuppie businessmen flocked to it in droves every lunch hour because it was trendy and camp.

But, of course, all we knew about Red's in the 1950s was to look for the old Buick parked out in front with the foil-covered bleach bottles whirling from a contraption above its hardtop, and drive up and shout our requests at the old bullhorn.

My mother was a good cook, but she was smart enough to know that Red was, too, so we went there a lot. Long before the phrase "quality time" was coined, my mother understood that we could have more fun eating in the car on the way home from Red's than we could have around the dinner table.

Now there was food you could eat in traffic, if you didn't want to eat in the grassy little parking area near the trash barrels behind Red's. Red gave you a big white cardboard box in which he put both your french fries and your hamburger, and you could put the whole thing on your lap and let the dribble fall where it may.

Cottage days

Mary Egan recalls long-gone summers

Editor's note: The honey-suckle vine is gone now. So is the windmill that used to be at the rear of the cottage. But Mary B. Egan of 75 Jarvis Road remembers her grandparents' summer cottage at Crescent Beach in Niantic as if she had just visited it yesterday. Her grandfather, James T. Farrell, was a prominent Hartford Democrat and a longtime crony of former Hartford Mayor Richard J. Kinsella.

I am seeing the little girl that I was the summer when I was about 3½ and went to live with my grandparents at the cottage. I have vague recollections of being at the cottage when I was even younger, but my first clear memories begin with that summer.

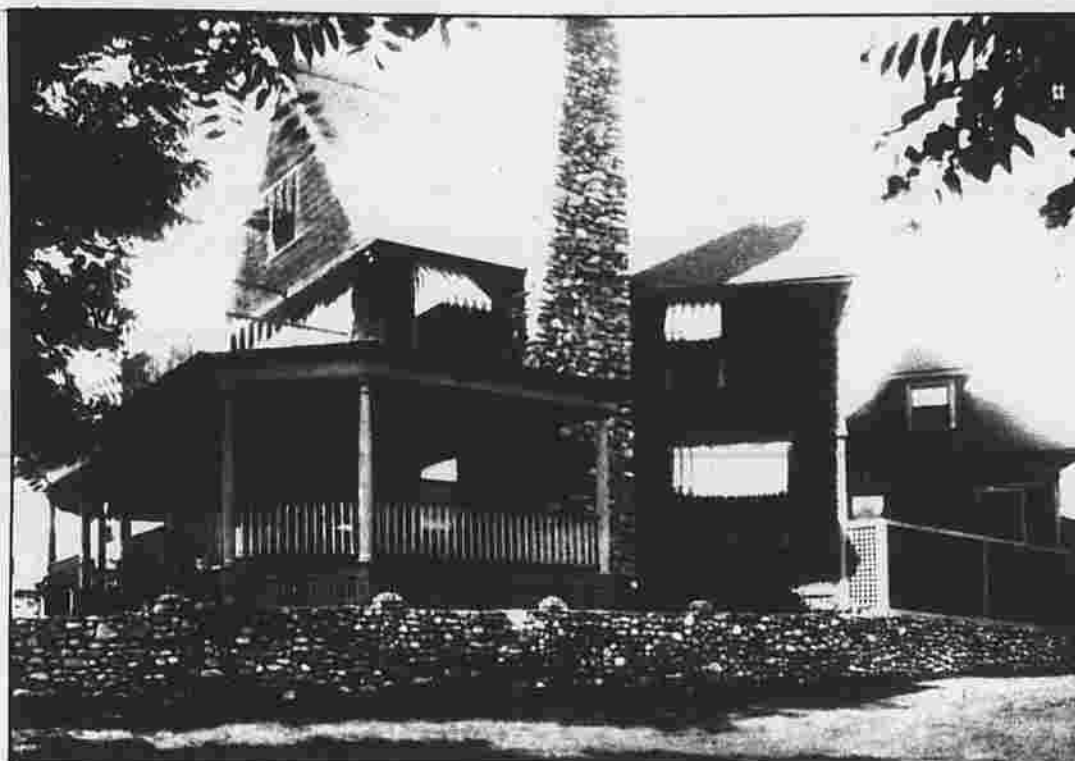

I fell in love with the beach that summer. I fell in love with the water. I fell in love with the cottage, and with my grandparents.

I can see Grandpa now walking around the cottage inspecting it for necessary repairs or painting, with me in tow. And Grandma, with me behind her, checking out the many bedrooms for those that would need curtains or bedspreads which she would make during the coming winter months. I can see myself helping Grandpa turn off the windmill. He'd hold on to me as I scrambled up the ladder to the long handle. When I reached it, I grabbed it and swung on it to bring it down so he could secure it. He was always nervous until I was safely back on the ground, but I wasn't the least bit afraid and was so proud that he let me do it.

Grandpa was bald and always wore a cap when he was in the sun. And a short-sleeved shirt. Fair skinned, he sunburned and freckled easily. And he had the kindest, most thoughtful, most discerning blue eyes I've ever looked into. So often did I climb on his lap, tickle his ear and whisper in it — to tell him some little secret I had, or to ask for something. I had a hard time staying on his lap because his tummy was in the way.

I'd wheedle him into taking out his pocket watch and making it chime for me. Three times he'd make it chime, then snap it shut. Every night before I went to bed I scrambled up on his lap to tell him something, to ask for something, to get his hugs and kisses and give him mine. How pained I was the summer I discovered I was too big to hop up on his lap anymore.

I knew with the instinct of a child that my grandparents loved me unconditionally. During the summer I revelled in being their little "pet." Gram bought my clothes. She gave me an allowance. I had horseback riding lessons. I went roller skating at the rink and to movies. I went to carnivals and had my fortune told. I got my own bedroom when I told Gram I thought I was too big to sleep on the cot in her room anymore.

When I was sick or hurt, Gram and Gramp hovered anxiously over me, waited on me, indulged my every whim.

Nearly every summer I kept them in a state of nerves. One summer I caught whooping cough. One summer I was recovering from pneumonia. Another summer I was recovering from having had my tonsils and adenoids out. I had impetigo and poison ivy. I got sties and a boil that resisted treatment and glass in my feet. I lost a thumbnail when tiny slivers of wire and wood got jammed under my nail as I opened the porch screen door.

I can see me now screaming at the top of my lungs beside Gramp in the car as he drove me to Dr. Dart's office. Gramp's calm voice trembling as he tried to soothe me, his hands clenching the steering wheel. And afterwards, I went around proudly showing off my raw nailless thumb to anyone who had the stomach to look.

How many times Gram took me to Dr. Dart's. I can't say. How many times Gram stood shaking visibly and wringing her hands, watching us drive away. I don't know. But never, ever did either one tell me I was a care or a worry to them. Rather, they lavished on me that love and attention I took so for granted.

Twice a day, before lunch and dinner, my grandparents went for a swim at our beach. And every day I went with them. On Sundays I went with them right after church. But on weekdays, since I always swam at the public beach, I had to keep track of the time by the great clock near the sunhouse. When I saw it was time for my grandparents to go bathing. I'd dash off for the cottage to help them down the steep, dirt path to the beach. Sometimes I wasn't so watchful and I'd spot them well on their way. So, I'd swim from the pier to our beach and join them in the water. I can see Gram and Gramp now as they watched me with indulgent smiles, every now and then eyeing each other and shaking their heads as I showed off my skill in the water. I was an excellent swimmer and knew Gram and Gramp had every confidence in my ability. They never placed any restrictions on where or when I could go in the water.

The summer I learned to row the boat my cousins, Julia and Mary, sisters around my age, couldn't swim yet. But I was eager to show off my skill and Grandpa gave me permission to take them for a ride, though no farther out than the end of the pier. It was a magnificent day. There was a brisk breeze. We rode back and forth from our beach to the pier a few times and the girls decided they wanted to learn to row, too.

By the time they mastered the technique the sun was high in the sky, we were hot and sweating, tired out and sick of the boat. And Julia was badly sunburned. I took the oars and checked our position. I couldn't believe it. I thought the glare of sun on water was making me see things. I could barely make out the shoreline. And there wasn't another boat in sight.

I rowed as hard as I could, as long as I could. I rowed until I was winded, and my palms were blistered and sore. All the while I kept thinking about how angry Grandpa would be. That the kids couldn't swim. That the boat couldn't have drifted out so far without our noticing it. That no one would believe us if we told them such a story.

I looked back to see how much progress we'd made. The shore looked just as far away. I rowed some more, and when I looked again, the beach still was no closer. Now my hands were raw and bleeding and I couldn't row any longer. Julia and Mary had to take turns at the oars until they, too, were exhausted. And the shore was as far away as ever.

The three of us sat silently in the boat, looking at each other glumly, trying to hide our growing fear. We sat there a very long time. When I told them there was no other way out except for me to swim to shore for help, Mary agreed but Julia became hysterical. She jumped up and screamed wildly that I was going to leave them to rock. As Mary and I tried desperately to calm down Julia, we all spotted Horton's lobster boat bearing down on us. Waving and screaming in excitement, we almost tipped over the boat. The lobstermen were astonished to discover it was three little girls they were rescuing. They could talk of nothing else as they brought us to the pier — except to warn us, using vivid descriptions, about the perils of tides and currents. Grandpa heard my explanation with his usual calm, and then told me I could not go out in the boat again unless a grown-up was with me.

For most of the summer I was alone in the cottage with my grandparents, except for Skippy, Gramp's Boston bulldog who adored him. She followed him around the cottage, sat beside his chair at meals, and lay at his feet when he was reading or relaxing in the living room or on the porch. She was alert to his every move, watching him with affection in her round, dark eyes.

I was my grandparents' little helper and little companion. I helped Gram with the dishes, laundry, and cleaning. I ran to the store when she was out of bread or milk, or if we had company and needed ice cream. I ran to the post office every day. If there was any running to do I did it. I helped Gramp roll up the porch rugs when it rained, and put the chairs against the cottage. I went with him every week to do the food shopping. I went to the garage with him when the car had to be repaired. I went to the different churches with him to deliver pies and cakes Gram made for all their bake sales. And I trotted beside him when he went to Niantic to do errands.

Grandpa went to Hartford more frequently than usual the last summer I spent at the cottage, and sometimes he had to stay overnight. Then Grandma and I had an evening by ourselves. I can see Gram now sitting in her chair mending as I was my stomach on the floor at her feet doing puzzles or drawing. We talked about the day and other things like marriage, education, and careers. Gram told me the same old stories I never got tired of hearing, stories about family and friends — the choices they made and what happened to them.

We talked about growing up. I wanted to know all about her youth, and Grandpa's, and their courtship and marriage. But I could tell she wasn't interested in reminiscing about the past, only in teaching me about the pitfalls in life. She made me promise I'd go to college and I kept that promise. She wanted me to be independent in mind and spirit as well as to be able to take care of myself. I listened to everything Gram told me and never forgot it. But, then I was 11½ years old. Gram's advice was for a distant time and I put it in the back of my mind for later. She told me it would be the last summer the three of us would be together. I laughed off her words but a momentary trickle of fear ran through me. I couldn't envision a world without my grandparents.

birthday my grandmother had a series of strokes. She was in the hospital until late spring and then was taken to the beach for the summer, to be cared for by nurses in the cottage. And I couldn't be with her and Gramp. I visited as often as I could, and each time I saw Gram I was sure she was getting better. Then, toward the end of the summer she suffered a massive stroke. I was told she would never be herself again. She would never be able to walk or to speak. Nor would she even know me. (She would live another four and a half years.)

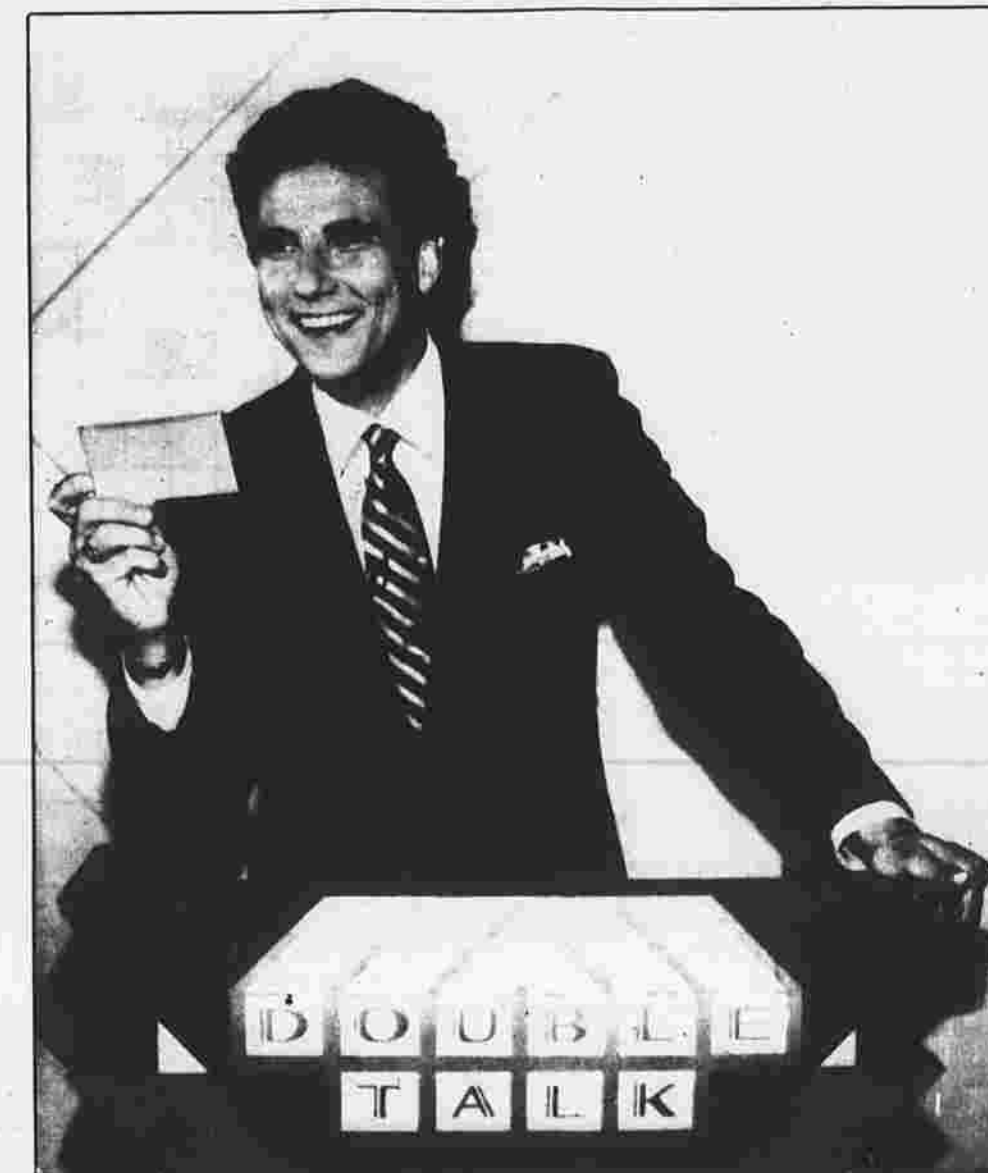

A few weeks later, I got the news that Grandpa had died suddenly. In just 10 months I had lost my grandparents.

I remember the last time I saw the cottage that summer when I was 12. Grandpa was standing near the honeysuckle-covered lattice fence waving at me as the car I was moved away. I was waving at him through a flood of tears. Behind him the windmill was whirling away, and I wondered sadly who would help him turn it off. ■

A few grapes of wrath

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The claim that Fresno is the raisin capital of the world made during the filming of the CBS miniseries "Fresno" has stirred up a few grapes of wrath.

The miniseries, a spoof of "Dallas" and "Dynasty," is about a power struggle in raisinland. It's being filmed in Fresno.

The citizens of nearby Selma, home of the National Raisin Festival, are miffed. "You might say a friendly miffed," said city administrator Charles Rough, who claims his city is the capital. "If you come down 99, we have signs saying that, and we have stationery with that on it."

The controversy has not withered on the vine. Fresno Mayor Dale Doig noted that Fresno is the county seat of Fresno County, which produces 78 percent of all U.S. raisins. He said, "Fresno likes to take claim."

Kalem Barsarian, general manager of the Raisin Bargaining Association, said, "There's 15 little communities that could claim they're the capital. The real capital is Fresno County."

Barry Kemp, co-writer of "Fresno" and executive producer, said, "We, like everyone else in the world, are well aware that Selma is the raisin capital of the world. We've only been saying that Fresno was for convenience sake."

A year in paradise

By Bob Thomas

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The lean, slacker-shouldered figure shambling into the Beverly Hills Tennis Club was undoubtedly Walter Matthau, but why was he limping? Was he preparing for another of his older roles as in "Kotch" or "The Sunshine Boys"?

Walter Matthau as Red

"I tore a ligament in my right leg running across Pacific Coast Highway in an attempt to save my life," he explained in his famous rueful rasp. "Here — wanna see the brace?" He lifted a pant leg to expose a solid piece of plastic on his lower leg, injured while car-dodging on the perilous Malibu roadway.

Matthau chose an outdoor table affording a view of a voluptuous brunette lounging on the opposite side of the swimming pool. "Nice legs," he observed as he eased into a chair for a luncheon interview concerning his new film, Roman Polanski's "Pirates."

A waitress took Matthau's order and thanked him for tickets to a preview of the movie, which she called "simply wonderful." The actor's review was more restrained.

"For character and atmosphere I would give it four stars," he said. "I would not give it four stars for plot and action. I will say that Polanski is a genius for making an atmosphere seem real. Most films have a counterfeit quality to them."

The 65-year-old actor had viewed the project with Matthauian aplomb: "I didn't like the script. I didn't understand the script. First it was the ship against the pirates, then the pirates against the ship, then the ship against the pirates. I didn't think it was funny or adventurous or anything. And the thought of swimming and climbing and dueling on one leg for five or six months in Tunisia didn't appeal to me."

"It was my youngest son Charlie who changed my mind. He said, 'You gotta take it. Poppa. You'll get to work with Roman Polanski, one of the great directors today. It's an open-air part that could change your career. You gotta take it.' And so he did. But he must have wondered when the six months turned into an entire year, two months of preparation and 10 of shooting. He spent a month alone on the accent."

"They wanted me to use a Bristol accent, but it goes like this," he said, demonstrating an unintelligible lingo.

"That sounds like an American actor doing a bad Irish accent, like this." He demonstrated. "I decided I would speak cockney, and they got me an expert, Jennifer Patrick of the National Theater. Pretty soon it came very easily." As the only American in the multi-national company, Matthau was surrounded by foreign languages.

Polanski, he said, "spoke Polish to the stunt men, Italian to the special effects, costume and hair people, French to the makeup people and the French actors. Then he would bawl everyone out for not speaking English. 'This picture is in English!' he shouted. 'I want everyone to speak English!'"

He and his wife, Carol, were housed in "two large bathhouses — they call them villas over there. One of them was for luggage." He claims his wife brought 152 designer dresses and 300 pairs of shoes.

"The roofs over there are built so that when it rains, the water flows right through the house. During a big storm, we complained to the landlord. He brought us 300 towels and said, 'Mop it up.'"

The rains forced the "Pirates" company to shift to the Seychelle Islands, where it was 95 degrees with lots of lizards.

"They call it a paradise. Maybe that's because it has sun, sky, beach and water. Nothing else, just sun, sky, beach and water," said Matthau.

The actor said that although he fought with Polanski, he respected the director's talent and knowledge.

"I enjoy fighting with directors," he said. "It helps me get a grasp on the character. Whenever Polanski said something I didn't agree with, I said so. He has an enormous ego, and it was hard for him to accept opinions from this American actor."

Matthau didn't think of going into acting until he got out of the Army.

"I knew that I enjoy making speeches, both in school and the Army, but it never occurred to me that I could make a living out of acting," he said.

"When I got out of the Army, I enrolled at the Columbia School of Journalism. After three weeks I switched to the New School of Social Research Dramatic Workshop. Acting seemed simpler than writing, and the school was closer to the Garden — Madison Square Garden. It was a good way to make $90 a month on the G. I. Bill and to meet girls."

"Gradually I began to realize that what I was doing on the stage was cashable. People got a kick out of me. It was a good time to be an actor because television was opening up, and I could play crooks, cops, doctors, lawyers, pimps, anything."

Walter Matthau became a busy character actor in television, theater and movies.

"The big change came when that guy over there wrote 'The Odd Couple,'" said the actor, nodding toward sweating playwright Neil Simon who was involved in a doubles tennis match. "I met him at a party at Hal March's house and he said, 'I'm writing a play for you.' I said, 'That's interesting, send it to me.'"

"Six months later he sent me the first two acts. I told my wife, 'Even if he can't find a third act, it's gotta be a hit.' And as a matter of fact, he never could fix the third act, and he had to tamper with the second act to accommodate it."

Studying Simon, Matthau mused: "Look at him over there, looking just like a normal tennis player. You'd never know that from his typewriter came $250 million worth of material."

The playwright finished his match and stopped at the table for a bit of banter. Simon recalled when Matthau first met Polanski in the Paramount studio commissary 20 years ago, after the director had filmed his first hit, "Repulsion."

"I was lunching with him and my mind went blank when I introduced Walter," said Simon. "I said, 'This is Roman Repulski.'"

Matthau added, "And I said, 'No, you mean Roman Polansion.'"

Film capsules

Aliens (R) — Sigourney Weaver, Carrie Henn, Paul Reiser, Michael Biehn (Thriller) Even if you try and follow the plot — Warrant Officer Ripley, after a 57-year nap in outer space, goes back into combat with those slimy extraterrestrials — you'll soon tire from clutching your seat in fear. This film continues the screams that were instigated by 1979's "Alien." Director James Cameron has created perfect summer fodder to keep us hoarse for days, but Weaver is a problem. Running around in her underwear playing Ramboette, she needs to hone her acting. Luckily, the success of "Aliens" rests on the special effects, and not Weaver's histrionics. Grade: B-plus.

Malcolm (PG-13) Colin Friels, John Hargreaves, Lindy Davies (Comedy) This Australian comedy features a childlike adult character named Malcolm, whose mechanical wizardry sharply contrasts with his social maturity. He builds an array of magnificent gadgets, including a car that splits in two (and keeps on running) and cardboard scale models of Australian trams. But what excitement develops when Malcolm rents a room to a humbling bank robber, played with verve by John Hargreaves? Colin Friels brings tenderness and an ingenuity to Malcolm. The music, by the Penguin Cafe Orchestra, is the finest film accompaniment in many seasons. Grade: B-plus.

Vamp (R) — Chris Makepeace, Sandy Baron, Robert Rusler, Dedee Pfeiffer, Grace Jones (Horror Drama) "I wanted the film to be funny," says producer Donald Borchers. "But always within the confines of a situation based in reality." Borchers had failed. This plotless exercise in inanity features: a hissing Grace Jones covered by nothing but breast coils and body paint (courtesy of Keith Haring); dialogue fit only for the dead; and stale humor. Imagine the scripts that Hollywood rejects! Without a doubt, the worst film of the year. Grade: F-minus.

About Last Night ... (R) — Rob Lowe, Demi Moore, James Belushi, Elizabeth Perkins. (Drama) What seems like a one-night stand — two Yuppies meet in a bar, then race home to display their ample sexual gymnastics — is actually a poignant tale. This couple wants to be in love, despite interference by friends who insist commitment is an '80s faux pas. Ed Zwick has made a self-assured feature film debut, but what makes the film real is the acting. Love sheds in his Brat Packer image and turns in an unabashed performance, but Demi Moore steals the film. Baring her soul (when not baring her breasts), Moore proves that the talents she exhibited in "St. Elmo's Fire" were not flukes. Grade: B.

At Close Range (R) — Sean Penn, Christopher Walken, Mary Stuart Masterson. (Drama) Sean Penn lives in the rural South with his tired grandmother, broken-down mother and foolish brother. Then one day, dad comes back to town — with money, flashy cars and the promise of success. But there is one small problem: Dad is a thief. Walken infuses his role with a delicious evil, and Penn, who must make some rather brutal decisions, has never been better. The last 20 minutes are devastating. Not for the entire family. Grade: B.

Big Trouble in Little China (PG-13) — Kurt Russell, Kim Cattrall, Dennis Dun, James Hong, Victor Wong. (Comedy Adventure) Twentieth Century-Fox bills this as a "mystical action adventure comedy kung-fu monster ghost story." Sounds like trouble? You bet. Russell plays pig salesman Jack Burton who, caught among underworld Chinatown ghosts, battles creatures with such foreboding names as The Sewer Monster, One Ear and Needles. There are special effects, inane dialogue and more special effects. John Carpenter has too much to work with here; he compensates by directing with a manic pace. If there was more focus — and less frenzy — "Big Trouble" would have been a big, fun film. Grade: C.

Club Paradise (PG-13) — Robin Williams, Peter O'Toole, Rick Moranis, Jimmy Cliff. (Comedy) This is a Club Med for the big boys: Dope, drink, women donning and doffing their bikinis. This is also bad comedy. Director Harold Ramis ("Caddyshack") fails to ignite this tale of Chicago fireman Jack Moniker who, suffering from burnout, invests his pension and disability money into rejuvenating a tacky island colony into a Garden of Eden. What could have been a funny movie is simply a bland stretch of amusing one-liners and many unfunny moments. Williams' vapid character forces him to act manic, and '60s icon Twiggy graces the landscape in a thankless role. Grade: C.

Blow out the candles

By Larry McShane

NEW YORK (AP) — On Aug. 1, 1981, Music Television (MTV) was born with "Video Killed the Radio Star," a clip by an obscure British band called the Buggles.

Two weeks ago, the 24-hour music station on cable TV aired the Top 100 videos of its five-year reign. The No. 1 clip was "Born in the USA" by Bruce Springsteen.

MTV celebrates its birthday this month as an innovation turned institution, its progress marked in double time, leaving critics confounded and changing the way America listens to, and looks at, music.

"We knew we would be successful. We didn't anticipate that we'd be as successful as we were, as fast as we were," said Tom Freston, senior vice president and general manager of MTV. "There's a whole generation out there that loved rock 'n' roll and loved television, and it was put together for them."

With such a ready audience, musicians quickly realized the importance and impact of video. The clips helped turn such newcomers as Madonna and Cyndi Lauper into national sensations; Michael Jackson hoped to win an Academy Award nomination after his 15-minute, $1 million "Thriller" effort.

Definitely not, said MTV, pointing to ad revenues projected to increase $100 million this year and viewership in 28 million homes.

"In the beginning, most major artists weren't making videos," said Freston. "I mean, Van Halen's not making a video — Bob Seger is. Journey's not making a video — hey, Bruce Springsteen wasn't, now he's making videos. Who's to deny the power of television?"

Clive Davis, president of Arista Records, cites MTV exposure in launching Grammy Award-winner Whitney Houston, who scored four Top 10 hits from her debut LP, "Whitney Houston."

"A new band like a 'til Tuesday or a Mr. Mister, they can crossover from video to radio," Mickey Thomas, lead singer of the Starship, said recently of two groups that have benefited from MTV exposure.

"Sometimes it can help." "We get more videos now that we ever got," Freston said. "The first week we ever got 10 was maybe a year into our existence. Now, we regularly get 35 a week, and we can add maybe half of those."

MTV's success has helped similar video showcases, including "Friday Night Videos" on NBC and "Hot Tracks" on ABC.

There's also "Video Vibrations" on BET, which features the black acts MTV tends to ignore, though MTV has long countered charges that it discriminates against black groups by saying it caters to rock music, not rhythm and blues or country-western.

Freston is also quick to dispute the charge that MTV has become tied to Top 40 radio.

"In the early days, there weren't a lot of superstars and major artists who had videos," he said. "We played a lot of unknown people; we played what we got. As the form became known to be effective, everybody started making them."

"Believe it or not, people want to see Madonna, and they want to see John Cougar Mellencamp and see the big stars. But you probably can't find two dozen commercial stations in the country that have a playlist larger than ours. We're playing 90 records a week, 45 of which are unknown."

However, questions recently arose over who was watching MTV. The A. C. Nielsen Co., which provides ratings for the three major networks, gave MTV some shocking figures in December: Viewership was down from its high of 1.2 in 1983 to a .6 share, which meant that only 6 percent of the homes that could watch were watching MTV.

MTV hotly disputed the figures and has turned to another rating company, AGB Television Research, which uses an electronic device or "people meter" to record viewing data. Nielsen relies on the written diaries of viewers who must remember to record what they've watched.

Nielsen problems aside, the channel is facing other woes: How to stay fresh when videos are so commonplace.

To diversify, MTV has shown episodes of "The Monkees," the 1960s TV comedy about a rock group, and "The Young Ones," a contemporary rock comedy from Britain.

The channel has also shuffled its video jockeys for the first time: British-born Julie Brown has just signed on, while J.J. Jackson and Nina Blackwood have departed.

And this year's MTV awards on Sept. 5 will be broadcast live from both New York and Los Angeles. Winners will not run to the stage and give acceptance speeches; instead, they'll be handed the awards at their seats. ■

No cause for confusion

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Although Elizabeth Bennett commutes between roles in the American television series "You Again?" and the British series "Home To Roost," there is no cause for confusion.

The NBC show, which stars Jack Klugman, is the American version of "Home To Roost."

Miss Bennett, a Briton, plays the same role in both shows, as Enid Tompkins the housekeeper. The NBC series will be on Wednesday nights against the hit serial "Dynasty" this season.

"It's actually much easier to do comedy here," she said. "There are more comedy roles for women here. In England I suppose it's chauvinism. The women who are funny have to be strange or a bit grotesque. A lot of people thought I was miscast in England."

"I found that after playing here and going back, my role in England was very narrow. Here, it's broadened out and is more interesting to do. A show like "The Golden Girls" could never be made in England."

Her role as Enid in England was the first time she'd ever done comedy on television. "I'd done lots of comedy in the theater and wanted to do some on television," she said. ■

Sorry, we have no Mexican office

Phony ad claims that Orgatron-12 can restore a man's vigor

By Dr. June Reinisch

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I often receive ads in the mail for pills promising to restore vigor to older men. I usually just throw them out, but I got one today I would like you to check for me.

This one claims to be approved by the Kinsey Institute and by Masters and Johnson. Doesn't this one sound respectable?

DEAR READER: It certainly sounds that way, but nearly everything that we have been able to check in the ad is absolutely false.

There is no "Mexican Branch" of either the Kinsey Institute or the Masters and Johnson Institute, and neither of our offices has endorsed, approved or is selling any such product — despite what is claimed in the ad you sent for Orgatron-12.

The ad displays an issue of something called the "American Journal of Human Sexuality" — which also does not exist, according to directories of journals and magazines. Moreover, no one at our institute has ever seen or heard of this journal, although we have the world's largest collection of materials related to sex, gender and reproduction.

According to the ad, Orgatron-12 is "produced under strictest supervision of the Federal Pharmacía of Mexico." We can find no official government unit or registered private organization with that name in Mexico.

The ad attributes research on this substance to a Dr. Leland Thomas, "famous football player from Notre Dame" and Nobel Prize-winning scientist. We could find no such physician listed in medical directories or listed as a recipient of a Nobel Prize. We are also certain that no Nobel Prize has yet been awarded for "advances in sexual research for older men," as the ad claims this Dr. Thomas has received for this product.

Also, we cannot find

documentation of any research project, in the United States or Mexico, involving 900 impotent men, 884 of whom became potent while more than half "noted a measurable increase in the size of their sexual organs." Nor can we locate evidence that a "jipuri plant" (called Orgatron-12's main ingredient) "is known to have been used by the Aztecs as a potency plant." We plan to continue investigating the matter of so-called sex drugs or enhancers in general, and Orgatron-12 in particular, because they have used the Kinsey Institute name. We will keep readers posted on our progress, and we will report to you on the results of a chemical analysis of Orgatron-12 when it is completed.

As we have stated in the past, the only way to treat erection difficulties, lack of sex drive or other problems of sexual functioning is to first find out what is wrong and why. Increasingly, research is finding that health problems and prescription drugs are associated with these conditions for many men, and the sexual side effects can be reversed with appropriate treatment. In addition, psychological factors play an important role — by themselves or in combination with physical problems.

Anyone with these problems should call a reputable sex-dysfunctions clinic or therapist and make an appointment for an evaluation. (A reputable clinic can be found by calling the nearest medical school.)

Ordering substances like the one in the ad you sent us only delays getting competent help with the problem and may increase psychological distress.

There's no Mexican branch of either the Kinsey Institute or the Masters and Johnson Institute, and neither of our offices has endorsed, approved or is selling any such product — despite what is claimed in the ad you sent for Orgatron-12.

'That' feeling

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I am a widowed senior citizen. Many years ago I had trouble giving birth (the baby died) and the doctor did what he called a great deal of "necking," which I gathered was repair work. He told me never to become pregnant again. My husband and I had a wonderfully happy 40-year marriage, even though we had no further intercourse. Since that time, every Pap test has required the smallest instrument.

Now I have been blessed again and have been going with a very fine gentleman for a number of months. I still have "that" feeling, but I am too small down there to have intercourse.

Is there any way, without major surgery, to correct this problem of being so small? At my age, I find it would be too embarrassing to take this matter up with my physician.

DEAR READER: Then consult a gynecologist or menopause specialist. Vaginal atrophy (shrinking of the genitals and thinning of the vaginal lining) is a common problem for women near or past the menopause (the last menstrual period).

Difficulty with intercourse is not the only symptom of the low estrogen levels that occur during menopause. Many women also have an increased susceptibility to vaginal and urinary-tract infections. Only an examination will show whether your earlier surgery is a contributing cause of your current genital condition.

You must see a physician, who will carefully do a pelvic examination and conduct all tests necessary to determine what is involved in your particular case.

Treatment will depend on what is found, but regaining sexual functioning may require prescription medications or other assistance that can be provided by a medical clinic or a physician who specializes in treating menopausal women.

Call the nearest medical school or large hospital and ask for an appointment with the staff member most skilled in diagnosing the genital problems of menopause. Take this column with you and hand it to the physician if you're too embarrassed to begin the discussion.

Once all physical explanations are ruled out or treated, the specialist can refer you to a sex therapist if that remains necessary. It is not unusual for discomfort or fear of

"We are also certain that no Nobel Prize has yet been awarded in 'advances in sexual research for older men.'" penetration to lead to vaginismus — in which the woman unconsciously tightens her vaginal muscles to such a degree that intercourse, or even a pelvic examination, is impossible or extremely painful.

Treatment involves having the woman gradually stretch the vagina, beginning with a dilator smaller than a finger and progressing (often over several weeks) to a dilator the size of an erect penis. Intercourse does not begin until the woman feels ready. With the cooperation and communication of her partner, the depth of penetration and speed remains completely under her control until she gains full confidence that it's possible to have sexual activity without pain.

If vaginismus is involved, having your partner accompany you to the therapy sessions probably will help your treatment to be successful.

No uterus

DEAR DR. REINISCH: My question might sound ridiculous, but it is always on my mind.

I had to have a hysterectomy last year. Since then, I met a man that I really love. He knows about my surgery, but he wishes that we could have a baby together.

Has medical science come up with any way for a woman who has had her uterus removed, but who still has her ovaries, to get pregnant and be able to have a baby?

DEAR READER: Not yet. At present, the closest technique probably would involve removing mature eggs from your ovaries, mixing them with your partner's sperm in a glass dish (in vitro fertilization) and implanting the fertilized embryo into the uterus of another woman (a "surrogate carrier"), who would then carry the baby for nine months, deliver it and give it to you.

I do not know how many times this has been tried or how often it has been done successfully, but the procedure does involve careful coordination of the two women's menstrual and ovulation cycles. Call the nearest fertility clinic or specialist to ask if this procedure is available; if not, ask for the phone number of the nearest place that has a surrogate-carrier program.

Regardless of the medical expertise of any fertility specialist you consult, also ask for a thorough review of the legal issues involved before you agree to a surrogate procedure.

It's important to know if your state or locality has laws covering surrogate carriers and to determine what contractual arrangements are covered. For example, who will be financially responsible if the baby is born with a serious defect?

Recently, it has been speculated that it might be possible for a man to act as an incubator for an embryo. This has not been attempted with humans, but, theoretically, it would involve surgically implanting an embryo on tissues near the large intestine, where it would grow for nine months and be delivered by a second abdominal surgery. If it were possible, this procedure might also work for a woman without a uterus — but, again, this remains only speculation.

Send questions to Dr. Reinisch in care of The Kinsey Report, P.O. Box 48, Bloomington, Ind. 47402. Volume of mail prohibits personal replies, but questions of general interest may be discussed in future columns.

Herbal teas may not all be healthy

By Sonja Heinze

Are there some herbal teas that shouldn't be used, or perhaps used sparingly? Joan King, Farmington Hills, Mich.

In an article in FDA Consumer titled "Danger: Herbs Are Often More Toxic Than Magical," Tim Larkin, the author, states, "While many peppermint, rose-hip, orange and others of the more usual herbal teas do offer delicious alternatives to coffee and common tea, we cannot conclude from these facts that all herbal teas are safe, nor that it's safe to consume large amounts of any herbal tea over extended periods."

The source of half of our prescription drugs are plants or herbs which contain chemicals and have varying effects on the body such as inducing vomiting, lowering blood pressure, stimulating the heart or nervous system, sedating the brain and so on.

Herbal teas are made from plants, some of which are harmless, and some of which are not. Read the label carefully on any herbal tea you are considering buying. Some teas may only have a single ingredient, while some may be blends of as many as 20 different kinds of leaves, seeds and flowers.

Avoid teas made from senna, buckthorn bark, dock roots, aloe leaves, catnip, juniper, hydrangea, jimson weed, lobelia, nutmeg, wormwood and saffrafin. If you have a ragweed allergy, stay away from camomile, goldenrod, marigold and yarrow.

Under the heading "Danger," the FDA Consumer also lists arnica, wolf's-bane, belladonna, deadly nightshade, bitterweet, bloodroot, irish broom, horsechestnut, sweet flag, heliotrope, poison hemlock, spotted cowbane, henbane, jalaproot, lily of the valley, mandrake, May apple, mistletoe, morning glory, periwinkle, St. Johnswort, spindle-tree, tonka bean, wahoo bark and white snake-root.

If you're planning to try a questionable herbal tea, make a weak solution the first time and watch for adverse reactions. Brew the tea fresh each time, vary the types you use and do not drink more than three or four cups a day.

ODOR IN FREEZER

We recently moved. I read somewhere that when moving houseplants they could be stored in a freezer, so I tried it. Maybe we should have propped the door open. By the time we unloaded the plants four or five days later, they were still alive but had a fungus on them, and the inside of the freezer smelled like a decomposed animal. I scrubbed the fungus off the plants, put them outdoors, and they are thriving. But I still can't use my freezer.

I washed it out with bleach and water, then full-strength bleach, then Borax and water, then baking soda and water. Between times I put boxes of baking soda inside and left the door open to air it out. The odor has diminished somewhat but is still apparent. I also plugged the freezer in, hoping that when operating the smell would subside. Wrong! I'm afraid to put my food inside as the food might absorb the odor and taste bad or, worse yet, be harmful to eat.

I don't know what to try next. Help!

I don't know what to tell you. You seem to have done everything my references advise to clean a freezer. I am reminded of a time years ago when I had a similar smell inside my car. After tearing it inside apart and scrubbing everything within reach, I suspected I might be going mad. Finally a wily mechanic found a decomposed bird in my heating system. Have you checked the freezing mechanism for such a possibility?

SODIUM IN BEER

I am on a low-sodium diet and would like to know the amount of sodium in a bottle of beer. Also, don't you think it would be wise for beer companies to print this information on their labels? Vincent Paterno, Atlantic City, N.J.

The amount of sodium in a bottle of beer varies slightly, but generally in an 8-ounce bottle there are between 5 and 15 mg of sodium. It doesn't matter whether this is regular beer or light beer; the amount of sodium is similar. The ales contain more. In an 8-ounce bottle of Black Horse Ale, for example, there are 33 mg of sodium.

In answer to your question as to whether I think beer companies ought to print this information on their labels — yes, I think they should, for the convenience of consumers. I also believe they should be required to list all their ingredients on the labels because beer is, after all, a food. But so far the beer, wine and liquor industry has managed to keep this information from us.

READER FEEDBACK:

INSECTS IN PANTRY Mrs. Hugh Bushnell, Cheshire, Conn.: "This is in reference to a past column which contained suggestions from readers on ways to keep bugs out of the pantry. One reader suggested storing ventilated margarine tubs containing moth crystals in food cupboards."

"What an appalling proposal! At room temperature, moth crystals melt to become a gas. This gas permeates everything porous, like cardboard and plastic containers, flavoring the contents. Wooden surfaces absorb the gas also, and are almost impossible to deodorize again.

"At low levels, many people are allergic to the gas, some without knowing it. In a closed area like a pantry the gas could reach high concentrations, causing distress to anyone breathing it. Ingesting the contents of these containers could cause severe problems to anyone."

"This gas is poisonous. Moth crystals are a pesticide, to be treated with respect. Read the label, and then picture a baby fed contaminated farina!"

Thank you for bringing the hazards of moth crystals to this column's attention. ■

Home sweet barn

The Maxwells made one room into four

By Susan Plese

One thing's for sure: the cows wouldn't recognize their former digs — not that they'd be invited inside anyway. A cattle barn once belonging to the Knight Cheney house off Forest Street is now the handsome residence of Wilfred and Anne Campbell Maxwell.

There had been some major changes before the Maxwells bought the house almost three years ago. For a time, it served as a painting studio for Russell Cheney, then later as a residence. A focal point was the great room, Cheney's art studio, a cavernous space with 10-by-12-foot paned window facing north for the best light.

And it is in the great room that the Maxwells have concentrated their efforts. Although impressive in sheer size alone — about 20 by 40 feet with 17-foot ceilings — the room presented some practical problems.

Heating it was nearly impossible. When they bought the house, the great room was equipped with "a couple of steam radiators that wouldn't have heated a chicken coop," says Wilfred. The solution was a converted boiler with baseboard heat and five zones.

Second problem was practical use of space. The Maxwells wanted to maximize living areas while retaining the dramatic look of the original great room. The solution was to carve the room on two planes, both horizontally and vertically, making four rooms where one had been.

"I did at least two dozen sketches and perspectives before we made a decision," says Wilfred, a planning consultant who helped to plan downtown Manchester in the mid-1950s. "It was really difficult to understand, but it was done that way to preserve the window."

The couple acted as their own contractors. "I talked to a couple of builders and I couldn't even get a quote," says Wilfred. "So we decided — I'm sort of a tinkering individual — to do it (ourselves)."

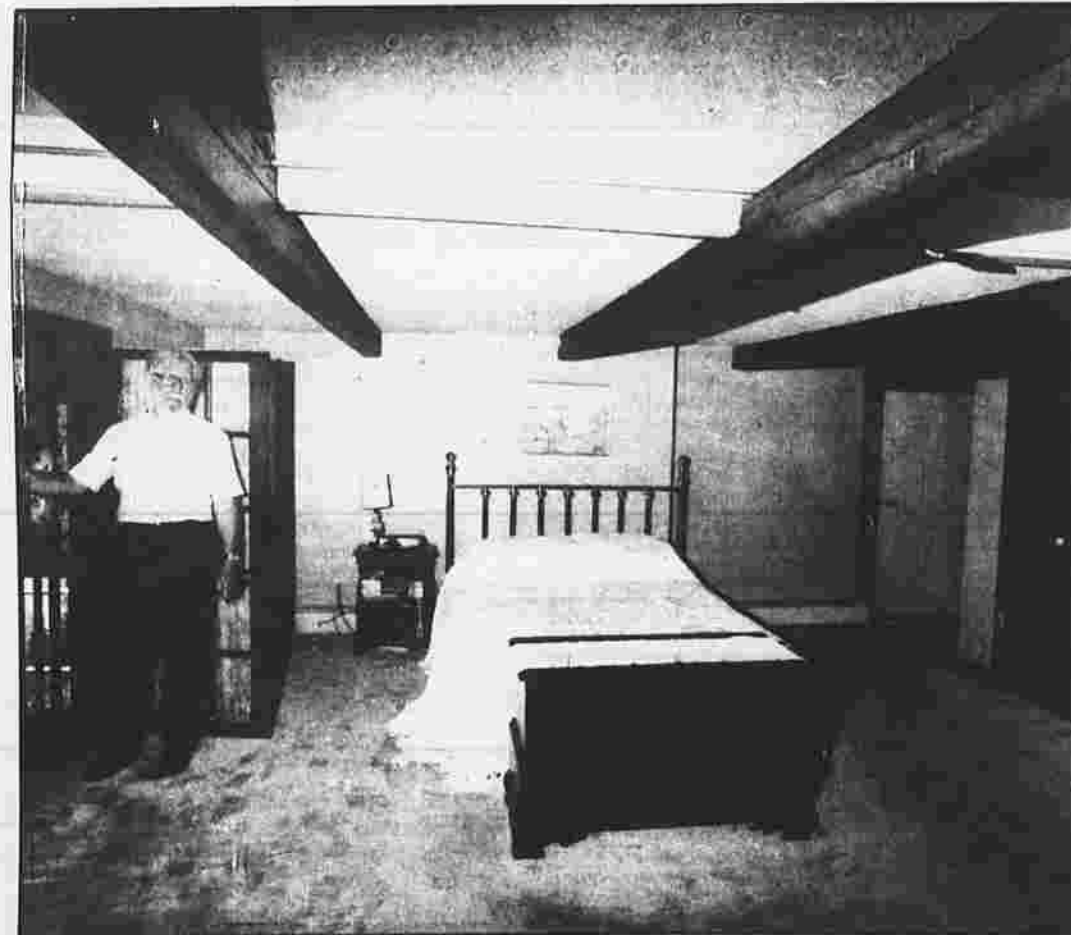

According to Wilfred's plans, they split the original room right down the middle. The side with the window would become the living room.

The other side was split again into two smaller rooms, one an informal sitting area with floor to ceiling bookcases; the other a dining room with fireplace.

But Wilfred made additional use of that second space by dividing it again horizontally, creating a second floor over the dining and sitting rooms only. That second floor eventually became the master bedroom.

The great room has lost nothing of its original dramatic aspect. The high ceilings have been retained, yet brought more into perspective with a decorative molding Wilfred fashioned around the room's perimeter about four feet below the ceilings.

A piano stands now in front of the window, and two large deep blue upholstered sofas face each other in the center of the room — a formal but comfortable conversational area.

From the living room, entrance to the dining and sitting rooms is through French doors that were custom made for the Maxwells. Just above the doors, a second floor balcony rims the walls of the master bedroom.

The window remains as the focal point. It is trimmed with a rose print balloon curtain, also custom made. "I wanted to maximize the light but not make the window overpowering," Anne says. "We also wanted to conserve heat. We finally arrived at this."

The balloon curtain conveniently hides a pleated fabric shade, the same Victorian moss green as the walls. The shade has an aluminized back for heat retention and can be lowered in the winter.

The Maxwells have decorated downstairs in shades of deep rose (carpeting), soft green (walls) and deep blues (upholstered furniture). The same colors are echoed in the print fabric window coverings.

Upstairs, in the master bedroom, the color scheme is considerably muted. Beige carpeting and a beige and rose wallcovering are highlighted with a brass bed and a pair of love seats set at right angles against the wall.

Half of the bedroom has a conventional ceiling, average height. But at the back of the room, Wilfred broke through to the attic in order to expose the peaked roof. He added a trio of skylights at the peak that provide both warmth and light.

The Maxwells are not sure when the cow barn/studio/house was built. "All it says in the town records is 'old' where it's supposed to say the date," Anne says.

But they have found hand-forged iron nails as well as chestnut beams while renovating the house — both of which give some clue to age. "We're guessing 1860 or 1870s, but it's hard to tell," she says.

Both Maxwells deny ever feeling discouraged during the massive structural changes. "But there was a point, in August of '84, when I was saying, 'Oh my God will we be ever be close to being finished,'" says Anne. "I've never lived on a construction site. You always think it will go faster than it goes."

"The day she was really upset was when we took the plaster off the master bedroom ceiling. There was grit all over the place. You could taste it," says Wilfred.

Anne also remembers, none too fondly, "the day this guy was cutting a hole through the wall for a window in the sitting room with a chain saw. That was the most upsetting."

The real challenge, both agree, is restoring an old house with integrity. "When you finish it should look old and look like he old house," Wilfred says. In many cases they carefully preserved old building materials and reused them in the renovations.

A lesser challenge is finding a Christmas tree each year that won't be dwarfed by the scale in the great room. Puny 10-foot evergreens need not apply.

"We've had fun with the Christmas trees, trying to find a tree large enough," says Anne. Once found, the couple places it on a plastic sheet in front of their master bedroom balcony, from which they can trim the upper branches. Then "we drag it over to the corner," Wilfred says.

By investing their own sweat and equity, the Maxwells estimate the cost of renovations at only a third of what they would have paid a builder. "But an amateur would have problems," Wilfred says. "You really have to know what you're doing."

"One thing you could be assured: no one would build a house like this in the town of Manchester. It is unique," he says, smiling. ■

Heavenly hash

It's been around us as long as leftovers

By Shirley E. Sump

Hash, originally a peasant dish, has been around as long as there have been leftovers, and many countries have their own special ways and names for it. Pytt I Pana from Sweden, Mexico's Picadillos, Hoppel Poppel from Germany and Ireland's Bubble and Squeak are just a few of the many dishes.

The word "hash" comes from the French word hacher, meaning to chop. The thrifty French prepare hachis with anything from beef to fish.

Early settlers brought their ideas with them to America. "Waste not, want not" was the rule heeded in colonial homes where leftovers evolved into such dishes as Red Flannel Hash. It is a classic example of a dish made with leftovers that has held its own through the years.

In America, the word hash is commonly applied to a mixture of chopped meat and potatoes fried or sauteed in a skillet. The fact is, there are many savory hashes in which the main ingredient is enhanced by anything from rice to beets, and methods for preparing them can be as different as the array of foods that are used.

Just remember, like any dish, hash is no better than the freshness of the foods that go into it. Because nothing is quite so uninteresting as a hash made with old stale leftovers.

The following recipes will help prove that a hash properly prepared truly deserves the name Heavenly Hash.

Cooked beets and leftovers from a New England boiled dinner were chopped and fried together in salt pork drippings. The resulting dish was this savory hash, named for the beet coloring similar to red flannel. This variation can be pan-fried or baked in the oven. With this old-fashioned dish, serve plenty of hot biscuits, pickles and your favorite cabbage slaw.

RED FLANNEL HASH
1/2 cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine
3 cups chopped cooked potatoes

2 cups finely chopped corned beef
1 (16-ounce) can chopped beets, drained
1/2 cup sour cream
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper

Saute onion in melted butter in small skillet until soft. Combine with potatoes, corned beef, beets, sour cream, salt and pepper. Spoon into greased 2-quart casserole. Smooth out top. Bake in (350F) oven 35 minutes.

Or fry mixture slowly in 3 tablespoons butter or bacon drippings in 12" skillet until bottom is crusty. Invert platter over skillet and turn out, crusty side up.

Serves 6.
Note: You can use 1 (12-ounce) can of corned beef or 2 cups of beef pot roast.

This is typical of the way in which Norwegian cooks use up leftovers. The pork and potatoes are cooked with the onions, and beef broth is stirred in and cooked until all moisture is gone and only the flavor is left.

NORWEGIAN BROWN HASH
4 cups diced cooked pork
4 cups diced cooked potatoes
1/2 cup butter or margarine
1 1/2 cups chopped onion
1 cup beef broth or bouillon
salt and pepper to taste

Brown pork and potatoes in melted butter in large skillet, stirring occasionally. Add onion; stir lightly. Stir in beef broth. Salt and pepper to taste. Cover and bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer 45 minutes, stirring occasionally, until all the broth is absorbed.

Serves 6.
I tasted this hash when I was in Hanau, Germany. The colorful name means hodgepodge or mishmash. That's exactly what it is — pieces of meat and vegetable mixed together in the same pan. Hoppelpoppel can be eaten at any time of the day, but is generally regarded as a snack in Germany, with a glass of beer.

HOPPELPOPPEL
5 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 large onion, chopped
1 1/2 cups diced cooked potatoes
1 cup diced cooked pork or beef roast
4 eggs, beaten
1 tablespoon dry parsley flakes
salt and pepper to taste

Melt the butter in a large skillet over low heat. Add the onions and saute them for about 1 minute, stirring constantly. Add the potatoes and saute them for about 3 minutes. Add the pork and stir for 2 minutes. Add the eggs, parsley, salt and pepper, stirring all the time. Continue cooking until the eggs are set.

Serves 2 to 4.
This is a hash of leftovers with a rice base. It originated in New Orleans late in the 1700s. It is popular now in every state south of the Mason-Dixon line between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic Ocean.

Depending on the leftovers, it can be made with shrimp, oysters or other fish, scraps of cooked pork, ham or chicken — one at a time or all together. This version using the original ham is quite good when served with crisp green salad and lemon sherbet.

JAMBALAYA
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 large onion, chopped
2 medium green peppers, chopped
2 cups long-grain uncooked rice
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 (28-ounce) can tomatoes
2 cups water
2 cups diced cooked ham
1/2 teaspoon dried thyme leaves
2 tablespoons dried parsley leaves
1/2 teaspoon instant chicken bouillon
salt and pepper to taste

Melt the butter in a Dutch oven. Add onion and cook over low heat for 2 minutes. Add green pepper; continue cooking

2 minutes longer. Add rice, stirring frequently, until rice becomes somewhat golden.

Add garlic, tomatoes, water, ham, thyme, parsley, chicken bouillon, salt and pepper. Bring to a boil. Cover and simmer over low heat for 20-25 minutes or until rice is tender. Add a little more water if the rice starts to dry out before it is tender.

Serves 6.
Children and the young at heart enjoy this hash. Serve with buttered corn, carrot and celery sticks; for dessert, brownies with vanilla ice cream. ■

Caprilands

By Sondra Astor Slave

The oldest restaurant in Coventry is not really a restaurant at all. Although it has served a midday meal for more than 35 years, Adelma Grenier Simmons' Caprilands is an herb farm. The lunch is an integral part of a lecture.

People come to the 50-acre farm on Silver Street, off Routes 31 and 44, from as far away as the West Coast. In the spring, it is necessary to make Saturday reservations two months in advance. Even on the hot and sticky Monday when we visited, it was almost 90% filled.

Mrs. Simmons is an institution in northeastern Connecticut, where she has operated her farm since 1929. Only a person of indomitable spirit would have decided to raise goats on rocky inhospitable soil (Capri is Latin for goats) against all advice, and then turn the enterprise into so successful an operation.

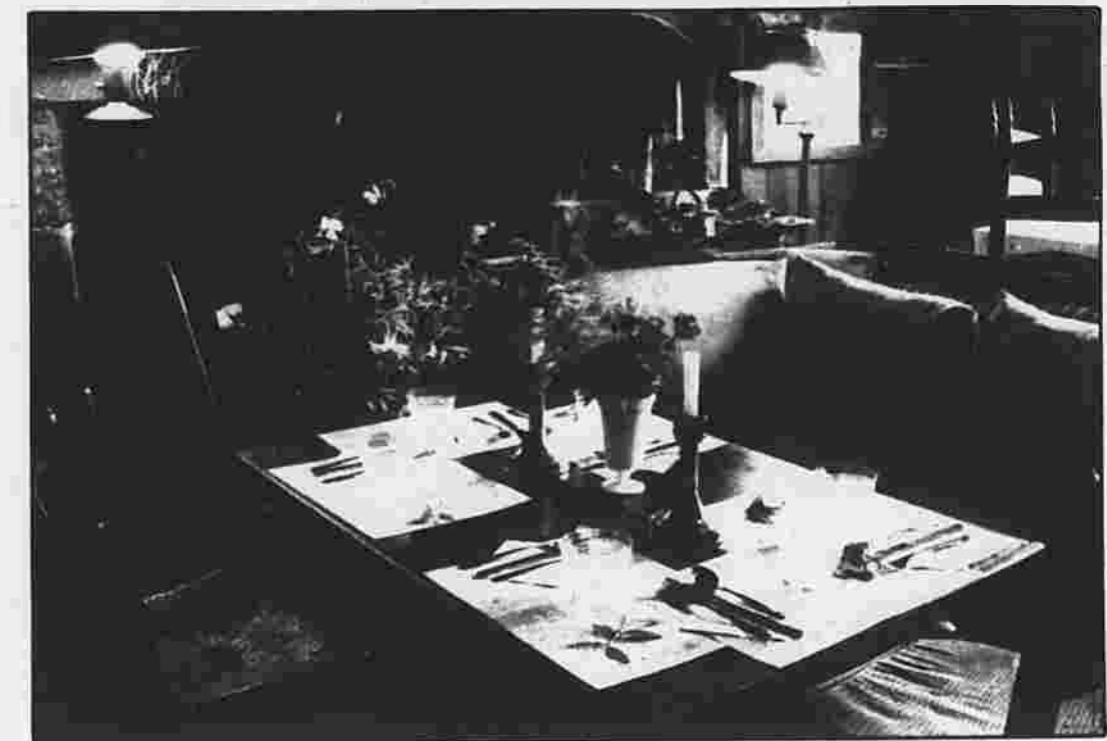

There is now a staff of 30 employed to care for the gardens and meet the needs of more than 100 guests daily. Although the lecture which precedes the lunch does not begin until 12:30, one is advised to arrive by 11:45. This allows time for payment of the $12-per-person fee, and for a self-guided tour of the eight acres planted in herbs. One takes time to stop now, or after the luncheon, in the various buildings where herbs in pots and packages, baskets and books are sold.

One can also sample the herb tea, crackers and spread which are available at the greenhouse from 11 to 12:30. On the day of our visit, the crackers were understandably wilted by the humidity. The curry-flavored cheese that topped some was well-blended and the herbed cheese on the others was also pleasant. The tea had a mint base and was refreshing despite the heat.

The lecture began in the large red barn. The building was surprisingly comfortable and smelled delightfully of drying herbs.

A brief history of Caprilands was interwoven with herbal lore and information on what was for sale in the various buildings. The lecture continued in the gardens and shortly before 1:30, the guests were invited into the house (where Mrs. Simmons actually resides) for lunch. Seating is at antique tables, set for eight or 10. Our dining companions came from Oregon, Virginia and the Connecticut coastline.

A table awaits diners at Caprilands in Coventry.

The meal began with pink flowers afloat in a dry May wine punch that was punctuated with woodruff. Crackers spread with tasty beef relish, a corned beef pate and an herbed cream cheese were the accompaniment.

A basket laden with three breads — applesauce and peanut quick breads and a white yeast bread — waited on the table, with an herb butter that was too heavily seasoned for all but the white bread.

A strawberry yogurt soup was the next course. The fresh flavors made this the favorite of most of those at our table.

We were next shown a huge salad artfully arranged in an immense bowl. A few minutes later we received portions in small bowls. I was not the only one voicing surprise that the greens we were served were primarily iceberg lettuce. With all that was growing outdoors, this poor cousin of the lettuce family was most unexpected. An accent of herbs and feta cheese only slightly mitigated our disappointment.

The next plate had us even more puzzled. An obviously long-cooked and only slightly rosemary-flavored pork chop shared space with a generous portion of nicely herbed rice, a tablespoon of cinnamon-flavored applesauce and green beans so overcooked that at first we mistook them for pasta. This was all the more disappointing as the bacon and other seasonings were first rate.

Dessert was served at the greenhouse, ostensibly so that one does not have to wait as the tables are being cleared. Small pieces of cocoa cake were topped by cream cheese frosting and offered on napkins with paper cups of herb tea.

Caprilands' written material offers a caveat that this is not a restaurant and that the usual amenities might not be provided. We found this warning was appropriate only in reference to the cocktail-size napkins placed at the table, and the need to request water and glasses, and the menu being offered recited at the conclusion of the main course.

The facilities remain open until 5 to allow for browsing and purchases and the grounds are delightful for spending a day outdoors. Caprilands is open from April to December, seven days a week. On Sundays high tea replaces lunch, and costs half as much.

One gets a mixed message at Caprilands: cabbage patches that are a work of art clash with large plates of overcooked food. An establishment so involved with the land would seem a logical place for a more seasonal menu. The Connecticut summer is perfect for main-dish salads or lightly grilled fish, where the Caprilands' herbs could be shown off to better advantage. ■

How to pick the number one newspaper in a multiple paper town.

In a town like Manchester, you might as well start with readership. In a most recent survey conducted by First Market Research of Boston, the Manchester Herald holds the overall local readership lead. According to the study, the Manchester Herald is the leader for local news, local happenings and local sports, with three quarters of the readers saying the coverage is the most extensive.

Next, the number one newspaper should provide readers with a depth of information needed to make valued and reasonable decisions regarding key local issues that may impact on their lives today, or in the future. Well that same study shows that the Manchester Herald is rated quite highly in terms of space devoted to selected issues in its Opinion pages. Nearly eight in ten readers find that the space devoted to viewpoints on local issues to be more than sufficient in explaining the issues.

The number one newspaper should also provide a service to its subscribers. The Manchester Herald is found to be a good community newspaper by over nine in ten readers, with over one third rating it as very good. The Manchester Herald is also a very effective advertising tool for reaching the Manchester Area public and it is preferred over most other forms of printed advertising.

Caring about its readers should also be a priority with the number one newspaper. The Manchester Herald feels it is their responsibility to listen to what residents in Manchester have to say. They want to hear about readers views on the news — what they think is important, what should go into the paper and what shouldn't. They're especially interested in hearing any comments you may have about the service you get from the Herald. They guarantee prompt delivery and courteous, efficient service on all billing matters. If you're not satisfied, they want to know about it.

If you're still trying to figure out which is the number one newspaper in Manchester, the facts are obvious. Your choice will be the same paper more and more readers in Manchester choose every day. The Manchester Herald — your voice in Manchester.
