NATIONAL FORECAST — Showers are forecast for Thursday from California to the western Plains, for the eastern Plains and Midwest, and for most of the Gulf Coast.

Connecticut forecast

West Coastal and East Coastal: Clear and cool tonight with lows 45 to 50. Mostly sunny Thursday with highs around 70.

Central, Eastern Interior and Southwestern Interior: Clear and quite cool tonight with scattered frost in low-lying areas. Lows from the mid-30s to lower 40s. Mostly sunny Thursday with highs near 70.

Northwest Hills: Clear and quite cool tonight with scattered frost. Lows 35 to 40. Mostly sunny Thursday with highs 65 to 70.

Coastal forecast

Long Island Sound to Watch Hill, R.I., and Montauk Point: Winds north around 15 knots today. Southeast around 10 knots tonight. South 10 to 15 knots Thursday.

Seas: 2 feet today and less than 2 feet tonight and Thursday.

Across the nation

Rain spread across broad sections of the West and Midwest today amid high water warnings, while fair weather returned to the East.

Showers and thunderstorms ranged from southwest Texas and eastern New Mexico across the Texas Panhandle, the Oklahoma Panhandle, central Kansas, central and eastern Nebraska, northwest Iowa, Minnesota and the Dakotas.

Heavy rain prompted a flash flood watch in southeast Kansas and the threat of flooding continued in southeastern South Dakota.

Showers were scattered from western Oregon across northwest California and rain spread across west central Missouri.

Temperatures dipped sharply in northeast Pennsylvania amid predictions of a killing frost overnight and a hard freeze in the northern mountains. Temperatures also were on the low side across the Adirondacks of New York and the north central and upper Connecticut Valley of Vermont.

Most of the East was in for fair weather today, quite a change for Massachusetts, which had blustery coastal conditions and the state's first snow this year Tuesday, about a half inch in the Berkshire Hills.

One fishing vessel sank Tuesday and numerous others were assisted by the Coast Guard due to seas with 8-10 foot waves and winds of 30-40 mph.

The 76-foot stern trawler Wakefield went down about 90 miles east of Nauset Light, The Coast Guard said. All four crewmen were rescued by fishing vessels.

A tornado touched down in the Humarock section of Scituate, about 20 miles south of Boston, and again in the same area, damaging unoccupied summer homes, police said.

Arms-Control Talks

On this day in 1787, after a long hot summer of debate, delegates to the Constitutional Convention signed the document that lays down the basic law of the land. At one point during the summer, a delegate moved that "the standing army be restricted to no more than five thousand men". George Washington said he would agree to the plan only if the convention drafted an amendment that would limit invading armies to no more than three thousand men.

Stocking stuffers

BOSTON (AP) — What to get that hard-to-please friend? Perhaps a $1 million home for his cat, shaped like an Egyptian temple and made of lapis, quartz and turquoise.

Or a $5 million minieries on her life.

These are among the suggestions Tuesday in the annual Robb Report on extravagant Christmas stocking stuffers.

The semi-precious stone house also makes a nice conversation piece and comes complete with a deed, architectural plan and owner's manual, according to the issue of the periodical, which calls itself the "magazine for people with million-dollar taste."

The four-hour film, on the other hand, is shot by a professional crew that recruits actors and makeup artists and provides period costumes, automobiles and even Arabian horses.

Building owner: War isn't over

By George Lovvo
Herald Reporter

"Maybe we didn't win the battle, but the war isn't over yet," said George Marlow, the downtown merchant who owns two buildings that would be demolished under a plan approved by the town for a Main Street access road.

Marlow said this morning he plans to explore the possibility of filing a lawsuit to prevent the buildings from being destroyed and the six businesses from being displaced. Calls to some of those business owners this morning found that they would support suing the town.

Marlow said the decision made Tuesday by the town Board of Directors to approve the plan was not based on the facts. "It's very unfortunate that the matter became a political issue," he said, adding that "arm-twisting" occurred in secret to get majority support for the plan.

If Marlow refuses to sell the buildings, condemnation proceedings will be initiated, town officials have said.

In addition to a possible lawsuit, Marlow said he will work to defeat the five Democrats who supported the plan. "The people who voted for this will have to answer," he said.

The plan calls for demolition of a building at the corner of Purnell Place and Oak Street — which Marlow has owned since 1952 — housing a restaurant, liquor store and shoe repair shop. Also to be razed is a building at 29-31 Purnell

Place, which contains a bakery, typewriter repair shop and a business machine store. That one has been owned by Marlow since 1946.

Bianca Contreras, owner of the Oak Street Package Store, said this morning she was upset by the directors' decision. "I came from so far away — from South America — because I didn't like the way people acted down there, the big stepping on the little," she said.

Contreras immigrated and opened the store three years ago with her husband, she said. "If this happens here, there is nowhere to go," she said.

Contreras said she has not made any plans to move yet.

"I think they're off their rocker," said Francis X. Terhune, owner of Yale Typewriter at 41 Purnell Place. Terhune, 79, said he might choose to end his business instead of moving because he is getting old. He said his current location, where he has been for the past 10 years, has been better than previous stores on Birch and Adams streets.

Joseph Sinnamon, owner of the Sinnamon Shop Restaurant in the Oak Street-Purnell Place building, would not comment this morning on the directors' action. He has strongly criticized the plan in the past.

Marlow said the argument that the two buildings must be destroyed to make the right lines on Purnell Place safer overlooks the fact that the road will handle increased traffic — which will pose more of a risk.

The building at the corner of Purnell Place and Oak Street may be demolished.

Downtown plan calls for demolition

After the board's decision, about 10 people who have repeatedly opposed Plan B — including merchant George Marlow, who owns the two buildings — left the hearing room without comment. Ginter said that under a tentative timetable, the six businesses will have to move in about 18 months to two years, after which construction is to begin.

Town Manager Robert Weiss told the board that the state will pay the tenants between $1,000 and $2,500 to help them move their personal property. He said the state also helps tenants find new quarters when they are forced to relocate.

Weiss noted that when the former Odd Fellows Building at the corner of Main and East Center streets was demolished a few years ago, all tenants managed to find new locations.

Mayor Weinberg instructed Weiss to prepare a letter to the six businesses about the aid that is available. Weiss was also told to organize an outline of what the construction would entail for Main Street merchants to help them prepare for the changes that will occur during reconstruction.

Job sharing on hold

By George Lovvo
Herald Reporter

Concerns about the effectiveness and fairness of a plan under which two employees could share one municipal job prompted the Manchester Board of Directors to postpone a proposal by the town administration Tuesday.

The job-sharing plan would allow the hours of 35-hour-per-week non-union managerial positions to be divided. Assistant Town Manager Steven Werber said how the hours would be divided would vary according to each position.

The job-sharing arrangement would only be tried upon the request of an employee. Werber said the practice has been widely used in private industry, particularly in insurance companies, in the past 10 years, but few municipalities have tried it, he explained.

"We would be paving some new ground," Werber told board members at a meeting in Lincoln Center. The program's purpose is to allow the town to retain the services of a full-time employee on a part-time basis, and it is geared toward workers who need more time to raise families, he said.

After several of them questioned the plan, the directors delayed acting on the proposal until October. They told Werber to come up with a more detailed description of how the program would work. Board members were concerned about a number of areas, including employee morale.

"I think the results could be devastating," said Democrat Stephen Casano. Morale might suffer if supervisory positions were shared, Casano said. He said it would make more sense if lower-level employees shared their jobs.

Republican Geoffrey Naab agreed, saying workers could become confused by the "musical chairs" of alternating supervisors.

Werber said that before lower-level workers could participate, the unions representing them would have to agree to the plan.

The directors also cited concerns about how benefits would be divided.

Werber said benefits would be divided evenly. But if, for instance, an employee participating in the job-sharing program wanted full medical insurance, he or she would have to pay the additional costs themselves, he said.

The program would not cost the town anything, Werber said. He said only one of the two employees sharing a job would qualify for a town pension, and only then if the work week were divided so that one received at least 20 hours of the 35.

Democrat Stephen Penny, the majority leader, said he was worried that job-sharing could be abused. He said a full-time employee's position could be reduced and a second employee not found to share the job — allowing the person to keep full benefits.

Town Manager Robert Weiss said that is possible under current working arrangements. But he said if full-time positions were reduced, it would create "serious gaps" in town services.

Medical mistake

Michael Jackson is mistaken in thinking his hyperbaric oxygen chamber will keep him young, says a medical expert who adds that the device could be hazardous.

The 28-year-old singer is having his own hyperbaric chamber made for him, said his personal manager, Frank Dileo.

Among other things, hyperbaric therapy is used to treat divers who suffer decompression sickness and to fight resistant infections. The pressurized chamber contains pure oxygen.

When administered by trained medical personnel, hyperbaric therapy is safe, said Dr. Timothy Canalis, associate medical director of the Western Center for Hyperbaric Medicine at Northridge Hospital Medical Center, Los Angeles.

The risks to an untrained user include pulmonary oxygen toxicity, seizures and the danger of an oxygen-fed fire, Canalis said.

He also said that any notion that a chamber can increase a person's life span is unproven.

Jackson is aware of the hazards of using the device without trained medical supervision, Dileo said Tuesday.

"He's saying he hopes it will keep him young," said Dileo, who denied a report that Jackson believes the chamber will let him live to be 150 years old.

A bogus story

A Los Angeles clinic has been ordered to pay Frank Sinatra $450,000 in damages for a public-life claim that the singer took sheep cell injections to prolong his life.

Sinatra never took the treatment, according to evidence in Tuesday's U.S. District Court trial.

Judge Manuel Real awarded Sinatra $350,000 in compensatory damages and $100,000 in punitive damages.

Clinic attorneys walked out on the trial after arguing the court has no jurisdiction and the matter should be tried in Switzerland. The attorneys filed an appeal.

Sinatra was not in court. His attorney, Milton Rudin, testified, saying the Enquirer has paid Sinatra $250,000 under a secret settlement in which it promised a two-year moratorium on use of Sinatra's name and agreed to give Sinatra approval rights on any story containing his name in the subsequent three years.

Enquirer attorney William Weinberger lost a bid to keep the document secret.

Rudin acknowledged that his disclosure meant the moratorium is now lifted.

That's more like it. After what seemed like ages to many, but in fact was less than a week's time, Manchester High finally won a boys' soccer game.

MHS looking for hoop coach as Steve Armstrong resigns

By Len Auster, Sports Editor

There is only so much one individual can pursue at one time and for this primary reason Manchester High School is now in the market for a new girls' basketball coach.

Steve Armstrong, 33, the head coach the past seven years, has submitted his resignation. Manchester director of athletics Mike Simmons confirmed Tuesday that Armstrong resigned at the start of the current school year.

Armstrong, who saw his seven teams compile an 80-66 work-load mark, is currently taking two graduate courses working eventually toward his doctorate in history and realized the load would be too great to bear.

"I didn't think I'd have time for the course-work and coaching and I've been shown that I made the right choice," Armstrong said. "There's no way, no way I could do this (classwork) and coach at the same time."

Mattingly chasing Boggs for batting championship

By Ken Roppoport, The Associated Press

There's still some suspense in the American League East, but it has nothing to do with the teams. It's the sizzling race between Boston's Wade Boggs and New York's Don Mattingly for the league batting title.

This is as good as I've felt at the plate as far as knowing myself, knowing the pitchers and making small adjustments," Mattingly said Tuesday night after going 3-for-5 and boosting his batting average to .309 in an 8-1 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

That put him just two percentage points behind Boggs, who went 3-for-8 in the Red Sox's 2-1 and 9-3 doubleheader sweep of the Milwaukee Brewers and maintained his average at .322.

With their 14th victory in the last 17 starts, the Red Sox reduced their magic number to a despite victories by division runner-up New York and Toronto. Any combination of nine Boston victories and nine losses by the Yankees and the Blue Jays will give the Red Sox their first AL East championship since 1975.

Mattingly hit his second home run in two nights, went over the 100 RBI mark for the third straight season, and set a career mark with 213 hits, to lead the Yankees over Baltimore.

Soviet attache slain in Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A gunman who officials said has a history of mental illness killed a Soviet military attache Tuesday as the diplomat's wife and 11-year-old daughter watched.

The Soviet diplomat was captured and taken to a nearby police station by a Soviet deputy military attache for air and naval matters, Pakistani officials said.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, identified the attacker as Zafar Ahmed. They said that he had been trying to emigrate to the Soviet Union and that the killing had no political overtones.

It was the second killing of a diplomat in Pakistan this week. A bomb killed an Iraqi diplomat on Sunday in the southern city of Karachi, and the Iraqi Embassy accused Iran of being behind the attack. Iran denied the charge.

Union files suit to stop drug tests

WASHINGTON — A federal employees' union filed suit Tuesday to block President Reagan's executive order instituting widespread drug tests for government workers, and the chairman of a House panel introduced legislation to override it.

The National Public Employees Union charged in its suit filed in U.S. District Court here that the executive order Reagan signed Monday establishing the test program violates the Constitution's Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable search and seizure.

The suit also charges that the executive order violates the Civil Service Reform Act in permitting agency heads to remove or discipline employees, including those in non-sensitive positions, who have been found to use illegal drugs.

Congress opposes Medicare hike

WASHINGTON — Congress is working to thwart an automatic increase that would raise to $372 the amount that Medicare patients must pay for their first day in the hospital in 1987.

Legislation under consideration would override that $30 increase and allow a more modest rise in the Medicare deductible instead.

Medicare patients now must pay $492 for their first day at a hospital. The House version would raise that charge to $500 for 1987; the Senate plan would set it at $520 and change the formula for future increases.

The two houses have yet to reconcile the differences in their deficit reduction packages, but congressional staff experts on Medicare said Tuesday it is a virtual certainty the $30 hike will be thwarted.

The Medicare deductible rises automatically as hospital costs go up. Last January the deductible jumped 22 percent, from $400 to $492. It was only $40 when Medicare started in 1966 and it was $180 in 1980.

Rehnquist vote expected tonight

WASHINGTON — William H. Rehnquist's nomination by President Reagan to be the nation's 16th chief justice is headed for a showdown Senate vote expected to confirm him by a comfortable margin.

Republican leaders, predicting a lopsided victory, moved for a preliminary vote today to end five days of floor debate on the nomination. It takes at least 60 votes to end the speech making. The Senate then was expected to hold a final roll call by this evening to confirm Rehnquist as successor to retiring Chief Justice Warren E. Burger.

A final vote on confirmation of Antonin Scalia, a federal appeals court judge, to fill a Supreme Court vacancy created by Burger's departure could be held an hour later, said Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va.

Republicans control the Senate, 53-47, with a majority needed for approval of Reagan's appointments.

Rehnquist's record was attacked in a prolonged floor debate as Democrats sought support for a drive to derail the nomination.

France explosion kills at least 1

PARIS — An explosion in a clothing and textile store in central Paris today killed at least one person and wounded as many as 40, fire department rescue officials said.

A person in the area said he heard the sound of a huge blast, followed by the sirens of rescue vehicles. The store is on rue de Rennes in the Montparnasse quarter of the capital.

If a bomb caused the explosion, which was not immediately clear, it would be the fifth such attack in the French capital since Sept. 8. Three people were killed and more than 100 injured in the four bombings.

The bombings occurred at city hall, a cafeteria in the La Defense complex west of Paris, the Pub Renault on the Champs-Elysees and police headquarters in central Paris.

A group calling itself the Committee for Solidarity with Arab and Middle East Political Prisoners has claimed responsibility for the four bombings since Sept. 8.

Reagan threatens spending veto

By Cliff Hogg
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan says he is ready to shut down the federal government rather than agree to a nearly $770 billion omnibus spending bill pending in the House — the largest such measure Congress has ever considered.

By voice vote on Tuesday, the Democratic-controlled House Appropriations Committee approved the package that is necessary to finance most government operations and programs for the entire fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. The full House is due to consider the legislation later this week.

However, the president wants more for the military and foreign aid and less for domestic programs than is included in the package, called a continuing resolution.

"I simply cannot agree to these provisions if they survive House and Senate action and reach my desk as part of a continuing resolution," Reagan told Republican congressional leaders at the White House on Tuesday.

Asked by reporters whether he would risk a partial government shutdown that could be triggered at the end of the month by a veto, Reagan replied, "I don't get one that I think is good for the people and going to help in what we're trying to do, you bet I'll veto," he replied.

Reagan added that he was not just drawing a line in the sand. "More than that, I drew the line in concrete."

The continuing resolution is necessary because none of the 13 annual appropriations bills that finance government operations and programs has received final congressional approval. Without enactment of this measure, or the individual spending bills, the government technically would be broke on Oct. 1.

Congress originally used such omnibus measures as stopgap devices to provide time to complete action on appropriations bills. But in recent years the measure has become part of the end-of-session scramble Congress makes to complete its work for the year.

Just as familiar is the veto game Congress and the White House play over spending bills as each side tries to get its way.

The White House ordered the closing of many federal offices — and the Washington Monument — on Nov. 23, 1981, after Reagan vetoed a continuing resolution.

Federal workers also were sent home briefly in 1984 after a stopgap money bill expired.

The bill put together Tuesday by the Appropriations Committee embodies 11 of the appropriations bills as they have passed the House and includes the two others as previously approved by the committee, making the package worth more than $687 billion. The largest previous continuing resolution was $470 billion for fiscal 1985.

Only government benefit programs such as Social Security and Medicare, along with legal obligations of the government such as the payment of interest on the national debt, are not covered by the pending legislation.

Voters keep Kennedy win streak alive

By The Associated Press

Democratic voters kept the Kennedy magic alive in Massachusetts, boosted Brock Adams for his clash with Sen. Slade Gorton in Washington, and settled an Oklahoma cliffhanger by picking a businessman as their nominee for governor.

In the highlight of the year's last big round of primaries Tuesday, Joseph P. Kennedy II, 33-year-old son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, won the Democratic nomination for the Boston-area 8th Congressional District seat being vacated by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr.

In Oklahoma, political novice David Walters edged Attorney General Mike Turpen by just 2,000 votes out of nearly a half-million cast after a bitter runoff campaign. Walters will face Republican Henry Bellmon, the former governor and senator, to determine who succeeds Democratic Gov. George Nigh.

In Washington, Adams, a former congressman and transportation secretary in the Carter administration, was under pressure to draw a strong vote to show potential contributors he could mount a serious challenge to Gorton, a first-term Republican elected in the 1980 Reagan landslide.

Kennedy's victory maintained the family record of never having lost an election in Massachusetts. It also marked the second straight success for the family's younger generation, following a victory last week by Kennedy's younger sister, Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, in a Maryland congressional primary.

"I grew up in a family where we were taught that the United States government stands for something and that America as a nation stands for something," Kennedy said in a victory statement. He vowed to his part to re-establish America as the "land of opportunity" if he joins his uncle, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, in Washington.

He will be heavily favored against GOP nominee Clark Abbott in a district that has not sent a Republican to Congress for more than four decades.

Kennedy spent more than $1 million on his campaign and stressed his experience as founder of Citizens Energy Corp., which has bought millions of dollars of crude oil, refined it and sold it at a profit to low-income families.

O'Neill, whose television endorsement helped push Kennedy over the top, said he was "very pleased that young Joe Kennedy is going to take my seat."

Retiring House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill (right) shakes hands with Joseph P. Kennedy II after O'Neill cast his vote in the Massachusetts primary election Tuesday morning. Kennedy, a candidate in the Eighth Congressional District, is running for the seat to be vacated by O'Neill.

Nine in ten Manchester area readers prefer the Manchester Herald for local news over any other print publication.

If you live in Manchester then the Herald's the newspaper for you because it's the only one that's geared expressly to the needs of the community. A recent survey conducted by First Market Research of Boston pointed out that the Herald's major strength is in its local news coverage and its intimate focus on the Manchester area. According to the study, nearly nine in ten readers say they read the Herald for the local news and nearly seven in ten say that local news is the most important strength of the paper.

The same study shows that the Manchester Herald is rated quite highly in terms of space devoted to selected local issues in its Op-Ed pages. Nearly eight in ten readers find that the space devoted to viewpoints on local issues to be more than sufficient in explaining the issues. This extensive coverage provides readers with the depth of information they need to make reasonable decisions on key local issues that may impact on their lives today, or in the future.

In turn, the Letters to the Editor column allows readers an opportunity to vent their views on an issue. One of the most important news categories in the minds of most Manchester area residents is local news, with nearly 75% rating the Manchester Herald very high in this coverage area.

Paying attention to the needs of its readers is the number one priority of the Manchester Herald. They feel it is their responsibility to listen to what residents in Manchester have to say. They're especially interested in hearing any comments you may have about the service you get from the Herald. They guarantee prompt delivery and courteous, efficient service on all billing matters. If you're not satisfied, they want to know about it. If you let them know how they can improve the paper for you, their readers, then they will continue to be your voice in Manchester.

Concern about drug abuse turns campaigns into 'Jar Wars'

By William M. Welch
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Candidates across the country are reacting to the heightened concern over drug abuse by calling for tougher laws and, in many cases, by taking urine tests to show they are drug free.

Triggered in part by the recent drug deaths of famous athletes, and by the rapid spread of a potent form of cocaine called crack drugs, have become a big campaign issue this fall. President Reagan, who took a drug test, issued a televised appeal against drug abuse on Sunday.

A few politicians have scoffed at the stampede to urinalysis as a "Jar Wars" publicity scheme that contributes little to a real drug solution.

But drugs are a problem that is easy to condemn — and an issue that candidates of all ideological stripes find easy to embrace.

"I wanted to see what this drug test was like, so I took one," Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, a Democrat and chairman of the National Governors' Association, said. He had his chief of staff take the test, too, and challenged opponent Frank White to do the same, which he did.

"We have received our reports and we passed," Clinton declared.

IN NEW YORK, Gov. Mario Cuomo has made an issue of his campaign to fight the use of crack and has called for laws that would allow judges to sentence crack dealers to life in prison.

Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, facing a re-election battle, joined a federal prosecutor in July to stage a New York City street-buy of drugs for the benefit of hidden TV cameras.

"I was irritated," said Andrew O'Rourke, the GOP's candidate for governor against Cuomo, "because they didn't take me along."

While drug abuse is an easy mark for a politician, the issue can cut the other way, too. Some candidates are finding past re-creams — or past drug use — becoming unpleasant flashbacks in their campaigns.

Pennsylvania Lt. Gov. William W. Scranton III, the Democratic candidate for governor, acknowledged last week that he used recreational drugs when he was younger. He declined to name which drugs he used.

Scranton, 39, the son of a former Pennsylvania governor, said he never used "hard drugs," and that his experimentation with drugs ended in the early 1970s.

"AT NO TIME in my life was I ever hooked, dependent, addicted or any of those other mean and nasty terms," Scranton said. "I've never been involved with anything addictive, anything dependence causing, and my involvement was always, I think, pretty much generally in the mainstream of the people of my generation."

In Indiana's 8th Congressional District, Republican candidate Richard D. McIntyre and his staff underwent voluntary drug testing and pronounced themselves drug free. His Democratic opponent, Rep. Frank McCloskey, called the move "showboating," and said:

"I'm ready to deal with Star Wars, but Jar Wars is a little beyond me now."

McIntyre's campaign dug up a decade-old article from a now-defunct underground newspaper that quoted McCloskey, then mayor of Bloomington, as saying he favored decriminalizing marijuana. McCloskey's staff denied it.

Rep. Carl Perkins, D-Ky., refused when he found himself challenged by GOP opponent James Polley to take a drug test. He countered by challenging Polley to take a lie-detector test to prove it wasn't all a political stunt.

In Florida's tough race for the U.S. Senate, GOP Sen. Paula Hawkins and her challenger, Democratic Gov. Bob Graham, are both hammering at drug use and the flood of illegal drugs into that state.

HAWKINS HAS charged that some educational materials warning children against the use of drugs actually encourage their use and shouldn't be used in the schools. She and her staff took drug tests.

President and Mrs. Reagan chat in their White House living room shortly before a nationally televised speech about drug abuse Sunday night. It was the second time in four years that the Reagans made a joint broadcast speech on the issue.

Reagan scales back proposal for cuts in nuclear weapons

By Barry Schwed
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, in a move to bridge differences with the Soviet Union despite the indictment of the Soviet spy ship Rylov, has scaled back his demand for a 50 percent reduction in long-range nuclear weapons on both sides, a U.S. official said.

The plan, reducing a projected ceiling on strategic bombers and missiles, will be presented by the U.S. negotiators to the 35-nation conference in Geneva on Sept. 17. The U.S. negotiators are expected to modify his demand for a 50 percent reduction in long-range nuclear weapons on both sides, a U.S. official said.

Fire in South African mine kills at least 177 workers

By Lourindo Keys
The Associated Press

VANDER, South Africa — A raging fire one mile underground sealed deadly chemical fumes billowing through a mine shaft, and five officials said today at least 177 workers died and 235 were injured in South Africa's worst gold mine disaster in the nation's history.

John Olivier, general manager of Kinnross Gold Mine 62 miles east Johannesburg, said rescuers were searching for 200 missing workers more than 30 hours after the fire broke out Tuesday morning in a welding accident at the No. 2 shaft. Mine officials had said there was little chance workers still missing survived.

The National Union of Mineworkers, which claims a membership of about 300,000, said at least 168 of the dead miners were black and five were white.

Most of the underground labor force in South African mines are black men who live as migrants in tin shacks on the outskirts of the mining areas, sometimes hundreds of miles away.

A few whites got underground in supervisory positions. The five whites killed included two surveyors and one supervisor.

Olivier said Kinnross had migrant workers from Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland and the South African tribal homelands of Ciskei and Transkei.

He said the fire began during the welding of a broken rail when an acetylene gas cylinder caught fire, and flames spread to a sealing material spraying equal burn on wire mesh along tunnel walls and ceilings.

The sealant, used to prevent corrosion and seepage of water, gives off toxic fumes when it burns but mine officials did not know it was so flammable, Olivier said.

"At the time of the accident, it was being sprayed on a tunnel wall to prevent corrosion," Olivier said. He said other fumes came from burning cables and piping made of polyvinyl chloride plastic.

"No one would have died if it weren't for the toxic substances. No one died in the fire," Olivier said. "He who sells what isn't his must buy it back or go to prison."

Consider your family needs in home computer selection

What subjects would you require all high school students to take? Math, yes. English, of course. What about computers?

The 17th Annual Gallup Poll of the public's attitudes toward the public schools in 1985 reported that 91 percent of respondents mentioned math and 88 percent mentioned English as the top two subjects for students who plan to go to college, and for the first time ever, computers were included in the survey. 71 percent of respondents said they would require computers for those entering college.

It's becoming obvious that in every aspect of life — from the classroom to the rec room to the boardroom — computers are being used. By the 21st century — less than 15 years from now — personal computers, also called microcomputers, will be as common in American homes as television sets are today.

Basic skills now are not just the three Rs, but instead the three R's and a C: reading, writing, arithmetic and computer literacy.

With all this computer-consciousness raising, you well may be wondering if you should buy a computer for your home. Simply put, a computer makes life more productive for you and your family?

First ask: How would you use a computer? Often folks jump on the computerized band wagon without assessing their needs. Unrealistic expectations can lead to frustration. One computer salesperson explained that people assume a computer can organize their lives, clean their homes and cook a pot roast all at the same time! Do not ignore this: A computer can only do what you tell it to.

Right now, the three most popular uses of personal computers (PCs) are for word processing, personal finance and electronic banking, explains Jay Amato, a manager at Computer Factory, one of the largest computer retailers in the Northeast.

Word processing, which creates, edits, stores and prints documents seems to be this generation's

Cover position when selling short

QUESTION: If I sell a stock short, I must buy it back some day. But suppose the company goes bankrupt and its name disappears from a newspaper stock tables. How do I buy back the shares I have sold short?

ANSWER: You'll pay two brokerage commissions — the first when you sell short, the second when you cover by buying back. If the stock you sell short pays dividends, you'll have to pay an amount equal to the dividends to the person from whom the stock was borrowed. When you sell short, your broker borrows the stock for you — usually from another customer. Dividends go to the person who bought the shares. You have to make up that payment to the lender.

At the time of your short sale, you must put up cash or other collateral — 50 percent of the stock's value, under present margin requirements. You pay interest to the broker on the rest.

You might have to pay a "premium" to borrow the stock. However, most stocks can be borrowed for short-sale purchases without that cost.

You might have to pay a "premium" to borrow the stock. However, most stocks can be borrowed for short-sale purchases without that cost.

And if the stock's price goes up, your final cost might skyrocket. The potential for loss on a short sale is unlimited.

Analysts say fears exaggerated

By John Cunniff
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Among the fears that helped trigger last week's big decline in the stock market was a fear that inflation would resume huffing and puffing, and that it would blow away some of the biggest gains in years.

But now many financial people say those fears are exaggerated. "Fears of surging inflation have been greatly overdone," says Wright Investors' Service, a conservative investment advisory and portfolio management firm.

"Fears that inflation will intensify appear to be exaggerated," says Jack Lavery, senior vice president and director of securities research and economics for Merrill Lynch.

"We don't see inflation as an immediate threat," says Albert Sindinger of Sindinger & Co., which each week telephones more than 1,000 households to determine the condition of their finances and their buying intentions.

Of course, says Sindinger, who forecasts the decline in the inflation rate, "inflation will eventually return, but only after we've gone through a good dose of deflation."

How, then, did the fear of inflation — along with fears of higher interest rates — need to grab professional market traders by the throat?

From studying their reports, it becomes clear that money managers never forgot the 1970s, when inflation devoured stock market values at the very time it was boosting other prices, including those of real estate.

Such memories linger, especially when enough inflation still exists to remind them of the potential problem. Inflation has never gone away, it still exists. Excluding food and energy prices, Data Resources Inc. points out, consumer prices rose at a 3.7

Latest GNP gains weakest since 1982

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy grew at a minuscule annual rate of 0.6 percent from April through June, the worst performance since the end of the last recession nearly four years ago, the government said today.

The Commerce Department reported that the gross national product, the total output of goods and services, emphasized how weak economic performance has been this year.

The 1.8 percent annual rate of increase in the GNP deflator, a price index that measures a changing selection of goods, was the best performance since the spring of 1987 and was credited to the dramatic plunge in energy prices this year. This price index rose at a rate of 3.7 percent for all of 1985.

Today's estimate of GNP growth for the spring quarter was unchanged from a month ago.

Many economists had expected the 0.6 percent growth rate would be revised upward to at least 1 percent, reflecting some improvement in trade and less of a deterioration in business inventories.

The fact that the report was unchanged emphasized how close to a standstill the economy was in the second quarter. The weakness has led a few economists to predict an impending recession.

But most analysts believe growth will strengthen somewhat in the second half of the year.

The Reagan administration is predicting a dramatic rebound to growth at over a 4 percent annual rate, basing this hope on a belief that the country's disastrous trade deficit will finally begin to show improvement.

Welding firm's appeal stalls zoning push

The East Hartford Welding Co. is challenging a claim by the town of Manchester that it is in violation of a long list of zoning and industrial park regulations.

The company, which has operated in an 8,000-square-foot building in the Buckland Industrial Park for several years, is appealing an order by Zoning Enforcement Officer Thomas O'Marra that requires correction of the alleged violations.

The appeal temporarily blocks the town from taking court action against the company, O'Marra said. Last month, O'Marra and Assistant Town Attorney William Shea threatened to file a civil suit or criminal complaint over the matter.

But because any legal action would be based on O'Marra's order, the town must await the outcome of the appeal.

The Zoning Board of Appeals, which has jurisdiction in the matter, has scheduled a public hearing Sept. 29 on the dispute. The board can nullify the order, modify it or set new requirements, O'Marra said.

The town charges that East Hartford Welding has violated the various regulations and a 1981 special exception by parking trucks on unpaved areas, storing material outside a designated area and doing work outside the building that is not allowed in the industrial park.

South Windsor planning officials said today the company has posted an $80,000 bond in connection with plans to build an access road to the site, where East Hartford Welding plans a 24,000-square-foot building.

The company has already received a building permit, the officials said, adding that some work is already starting on the site.

Manchester officials had started proceedings against the company before. However, the 1985 legal action was stopped when the company said it was planning to move to South Windsor.

This time, town officials said, they were tired of waiting.

Tolland plans are worthless, residents say

Widening will hurt area, many charge at hearing

Alex Girelli, Associate Editor

Plans to reconstruct Tolland Turnpike faced a barrage of criticism Wednesday night at a hearing that drew more than 100 people.

One after another, residents of the street in the North End of Manchester rose to object to a proposed bikeway, sidewalk and—in most cases—to the reconstruction itself.

Many of the 25 critics said the work is planned not for the benefit of those who live on the street, but for commercial developers who are building shopping malls and condominiums in the area.

Many also accused town public works officials of presenting them with a plan that was predestined for approval, demanding to know what steps they could take to protest further.

Only one person, consulting engineer William O'Neill, spoke in favor of the plan during the hearing which was held at the Senior Citizens' Center on East Middle Turnpike. O'Neill, a former town public works director and a member of the Advisory Park and Recreation Commission, advocates a network of bicycle paths in town. He lives outside the area on Kane Road.

Public Works Director George Kandra told the crowd that the final decision on whether to go forward with the plan will be made by the town directors, who are, he pointed out, elected officials.

"Not for long," someone in the audience said at that point.

When one Tolland Turnpike resident asked Mayor Barbara Weinberg when he should start contacting members of the Board of Directors, she replied, "Start tomorrow."

The only director at the hearing besides Weinberg, a Democrat, was Geoffrey Naab, a Republican. Instead of Kandra to comment, Naab declined "I came here to listen," he said.

A transcript of Wednesday night's hearing will be prepared by the state Department of Transportation and provided to the town for consideration by the Board of Directors.

Milton Shaw, the DOT's engineer for municipal systems, said after the hearing that it will take about four weeks to prepare the transcript. Shaw said the directors can then decide to go forward with the present preliminary design plans, to abandon the project, or to modify it.

Tolland Turnpike is a town road, but the project, with an estimated construction cost of $5.1 million.

Besides the reconstruction of the road and repaving its intersection with North Main Street, the town proposes to install a water main and has urged the Eighth Utilities District, the sewer authority in the area, to install a sanitary sewer it has planned for Tolland Turnpike while the road work is in progress.

At the hearing, Mark Pellegrini, the town's director of planning and development, said the planning staff is recommending that Tolland Turnpike be widened to four lanes between Slater Street and Union Street to permit right-turn lanes.

That is not part of the current plan.

While the sidewalk and bikeway came in for the heaviest criticism, Wednesday night almost no one complained of high speeds, which lasted more than two hours. Kandra said the final plan could be modified. The proposed 8-foot bikeway and the sidewalk could be eliminated, for instance, he said.

"We've gotten the message," Kandra said.

Some of those who protested the plan at the hearing had also argued against the Eighth District's plan for a sewer.

Sidney Elliott, who lives at 611 Tolland Turnpike, complained of high vehicle speeds, a lack of space for parking, and the cost of the sewer line. He said he could not see the need for the bikeway.

Elliott was the first of many speakers who turned their guns on the bikeway plan. Others said there is little bicycle traffic on the road, and several said they did not want to have to shovel snow from the 8-foot walk.

Median response: 10 books a year

Along with Hallums, six white men and one white woman are scheduled to be sworn in Sept. 28. Although all eight must still undergo a physical, town officials have said the decision is nearly final.

Hallums graduated from college in 1985 with a degree in legal studies. He has managed a McDonald's restaurant and worked as a maintenance worker.

"There are eight of us (who were hired) — eight qualified people," Hallums said.

"We're just happy to be in the department," he said. "I think the other seven officers worked just as hard in the department. They deserve just as much attention. When it comes right down to it, we're all police officers."
