Parkade sale means a mall, merchant says

By John F. Kirch and George Lyng
The Manchester Herald

The section of the Manchester Parkade shopping center surrounding Sears is scheduled to be sold today to a three-man partnership that plans to enclose the structure and turn it into a mall, an informed source said this morning.

The source, a Parkade merchant who asked that his name not be used, said he did not know the sale price.

One of the three people who will purchase the popular strip shopping center on West Middle Turnpike is Amran Oron, the merchant said, but he did not know the names of the other two partners or where any of the three are from.

The sales agreement is scheduled to be signed later today, the source said. Officials with the Cutter Operating Corp., the Parkade's landlord and part owner, could not be reached for comment.

Cutter owns the West Middle Turnpike side of the Parkade, which contains the Sears store, a D&L department store, a Channel Home Center and other smaller stores. The Broad Street side of the shopping center is owned by the Boston-based Wilder Manley Associates, Parkade officials have said.

The sale of the Sears side of the Parkade would end months of speculation by merchants at the Parkade, who have said repeatedly that a developer was interested in purchasing the large shopping center. Since last winter, rumors have spread throughout the Parkade that Cutter would be selling. However, until today nobody knew who the potential buyer was.

"This is a new owner who wants to upgrade the shopping center," the source said. "It's what we've needed. It's going to give us new life ... and increase the traffic coming to the shopping center."

More snow on the way

By George Lyng
The Manchester Herald

While many have recovered from the storm that dumped up to a foot of snow on the area early Wednesday, several hundred Manchester and Bolton residents are among the thousands statewide who are still without electricity.

The lingering effects of the storm put people out of their homes and kept crews at work on area roads late into the night as forecasters predicted more snow for today.

In Manchester, about 25 people spent the night at the state armory on Main Street despite a recommendation by the Red Cross that the building not be used.

"It's not a good place for a shelter," said Elaine Sweet, director of the Connecticut Valley East Branch of the American Red Cross. Besides being drafty and cold, she said, the armory is in violation of some state building codes.

Those who spent the night at the armory came from the Samaritan Shelter run by the Manchester Area Conference of Churches and were sent there because MACC's Main Street building lost power.

"You had to put them somewhere," said Nancy Carr, MACC's executive director.

The shelter had its power restored this morning, Acting Director Jeff Cox said.

Carr said Manchester's armory was the handiest alternative to the shelter and was sent there because MACC's Main Street building lost power.

While Wednesday's storm caused problems for adults, it gave children the day off from school. In Center Park, 10-year-old John Doyle (top), 13-year-old Joe D'Amora and 9-year-old Dean Thibodeau took advantage of the break and did some sledding.

Senate to investigate White House deals with Iran

By Tim Ahern
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A leading Senate Democrat, hours after President Reagan's public grilling on secret arms sales to Iran, said today the Reagan administration still needs to clarify contradictions between what the president said and what his aides have been telling Congress.

At the same time, both a Democrat and a Republican member of the Senate committee that on Friday will launch the first congressional inquiry into Reagan's actions said they believe laws requiring congressional notification of such arms sales have been at least technically violated.

"The president had so many contradictions last night that I think he's going to have to have further clarification today," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., on the NBC-TV's "Today" program.

Nunn, who is likely to take over as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee in the new Democrat-controlled Congress, said U.S. foreign policy is "in a serious disarray and it's time to take some strong steps."

"The president contradicted all the information that had been put out by his aides for the last week," Nunn said. "I had hoped he would be able to restore credibility ... but I counted at least seven major contradictions from what I had previously been informed by his top officials."

Nunn said he could not believe that the arms sent were not defensive, as the president maintained.

"When you have a major power like Iran that is on the march that has declared its intention to take over Iraq, in this context there is no way you could describe the arms that were transferred as being defensive in nature," Nunn said.

He suggested that a group of "wise men and women" should review the administration's foreign policy decision-making process and propose changes.

Meanwhile, Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., and a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said they would be interviewed by the committee on the "CBS Morning News" that Reagan should have admitted he made a mistake in approving the Iranian deal.

"We don't expect perfection in our leaders," McConnell said. "The president has had a very good track record for six years. This particular decision was a mistake."

McConnell said the president's failure to inform Congress until 18 months after the Iranian operation began "was at least a technical violation."

But he said he thinks Reagan still has the confidence of the American people on other issues. "It doesn't mean that his entire record is wiped out by this," he said.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, another member of the committee interviewed by CBS, said, "I think he (Reagan) did violate the law. The laws that we are to be advised in a timely manner."

Bentsen said CIA Director William Casey will have "a lot of explaining to do" when he appears before the committee in closed session Friday.

"My understanding is that he has a written directive from the president telling him not to advise us of this particular incident."

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., outgoing chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said Reagan may not understand that the law required him to inform Congress that he had undertaken sensitive secret negotiations with officials of Iran, a nation labeled a terrorist state by the administration.

Lugar told NBC, "I suspect that the president does not understand the law."

Smokin' out in town

By John Mitchell and John Kirch
The Manchester Herald

The American Cancer Society's 10th Great American Smokeout pushed some Manchester residents to quit smoking, even if only for a day, with a little help from their friends.

The smokeout, officially designated for today, began early at Manchester Community College, where an Adopt-A-Smoker booth was set up Tuesday. The school has also been demonstrating a smoking dull with a tent-bite attached, which measures the tar and nicotine in cigarettes, according to Donna Wagner, a registered nurse at MCC who is helping to coordinate events.

Outdoor activities were planned at MCC but had to be postponed. "This weather really put a cramp in our style," Wagner said.

Those included a balloon launch scheduled for Wednesday and a "Run Your Butts Off" one-mile fun race, which was to have been held this morning. The race will be rescheduled for Tuesday, with the winner getting two free meals in the Cheney Dining Room.

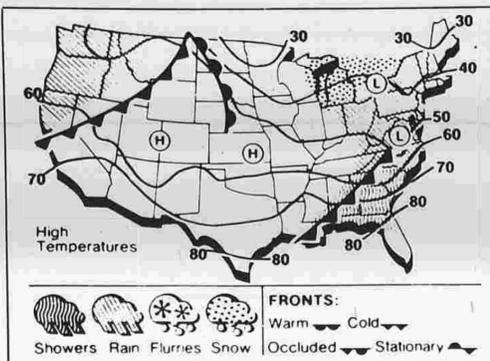

"I'm sorry everything kind of deflated along with my balloons," Wagner said.

The Manchester North Unit branch of the cancer society ran an Adopt-A-Smoker campaign to go along with MCC's activities, in which residents were invited to challenge an acquaintance to try and kick the habit for the day.

They were neighbors years ago on the city's Verona Way and plan to live at his farm in Benton Harbor, Mich.

"When I first met Muhammad he was like a big brother. He didn't have any sisters and as I grew up he was my idol," the new Mrs. Ali said after the ceremony. "I think when I was 17 is when I fell in love with him."

Former X-rated movie star Linda Lovellace has been sent home to await a liver donor after being cleared for a transplant.

Lovellace, whose real name is Linda Marchiano, was placed on the transplant list Wednesday at Presbyterian-University Hospital in Pittsburgh, said hospital authorities.

Marchiano, 37, was admitted to the hospital for tests on Nov. 10. She suffers from acute cirrhosis of the liver resulting from a hepatitis infection she apparently contracted during a blood transfusion.

The transfusion followed a 1970 car accident that lacerated her liver, said hospital spokesman Tom Chakurda.

Talking Turkey
Turkeys do not come from the nation of Turkey. This American bird received its name by mistake. Europeans arriving in America confused the bird with the Guinea fowl. But the Guinea fowl didn't come from Turkey either. The Portuguese found the bird in Guinea, West Africa. However, they brought it to Europe through Turkey. This case of mistaken identity was soon corrected. But by that time, the American bird had already been tagged with the African bird's false name.

Peeved councilman puts on horsepower
NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bugged by a report on the number of city-owned cars, City Councilman Joe Giarrusso rode to work in a horse-drawn buggy. But Giarrusso's buggy was not your standard French Quarter model. Those are generally driven by rather ordinary-looking men; the reins on Giarrusso's carriage were held by a woman clad in a silky dress.

It also had a telephone, though there was no indication that the Mickey Mouse phone had any sort of hook-up.

"The council's cars are probably the most critical issue facing this city now," Giarrusso said Wednesday. "We're just going to have to meet this crisis today."

The New Orleans Times-Picayune reported Sunday that the New Orleans city government had more take-home cars than the eight any cities surveyed by the newspaper.

Politics stays in Swensson's life

By George Lovvo Herald Reporter

Reminders of Republican Elsie "Biz" Swensson's six years in the Connecticut General Assembly are still coming in.

Next to the telephone in her Porter Street home is a spiral notebook where she keeps written messages from constituents who have called to ask her for help with their problems. The appeals have not stopped despite Swensson's loss in the 13th Assembly District Nov. 4 Democrat John Thompson.

Each is written down in the notebook, as they have been since she was first elected in 1980. In the past year and a half alone, the stack of notebooks has grown to five, and Swensson said she will keep all of them.

In an interview this week, Swensson said she'd tried to explain to one caller that she will no longer be serving once the new legislative term begins.

"Don't you realize I'm not going to be a representative anymore?" Swensson recalled asking the person.

Although that might have come as news to the caller, Swensson said she had come to terms with her defeat even before the election. As she campaigned door-to-door in mid-October, she said, she sensed "1986 was going to be a year in which the Democrats would do well."

"I CRIED for a whole day," Swensson said. "And then I got over it, and I've felt like a million dollars."

The difficult part was not election night, she said. Rather, it was that she saw defeat coming, but continued to receive both checks and encouraging words from supporters. That made her feel compelled to continue campaigning aggressively, she said.

"It got to the point where I got knots in my stomach," Swensson said.

The 64-year-old legislator, known for her talkative, enthusiastic personality, said she will mostly miss helping her constituents. Every day she would rise at 5 a.m., work on writing letters to them for two hours, have breakfast and then head for the Capitol, she said.

"It's going to be difficult not to wake up at 5 now," she said. "I'll have a failure, I worked too hard."

Swensson's long hours are attested to by those that saw her at work.

"She was the closest you can come to a full-time legislator," said Manchester Republican Town Chairman Donald Kuehl. "I think she worked harder than anyone I ever knew in keeping in touch with her constituents."

representative Manchester has ever sent to the General Assembly — and the only one to serve three terms — expressed a like sentiment, saying she'll miss the people at the Capitol. Many days, she brought in homemade muffins and creme puffs.

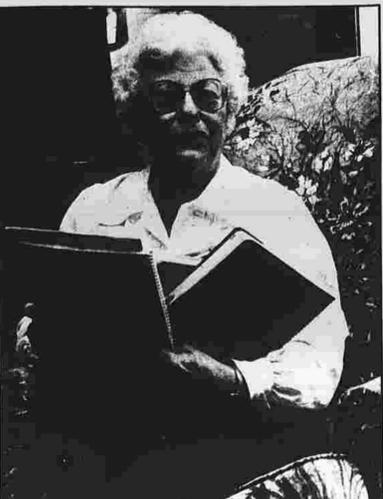

"To me, you're just like everybody's aunt," one person at the Capitol told her after her defeat.

Swensson's main concern as a legislator were helping elderly people and children, she said. She listed among her accomplishments working for a law that raised the amount of state aid for funeral expenses from $600 to $1,100 this year and $1,200 next year, and helping poor mothers properly feed and take care of their children.

BUT HER BIGGEST success probably came too late, Swensson said. As a member of the Government Administration and Elections Committee, she helped draft a bill that called for a referendum on removing the party lever from voting machines.

The measure was approved by Connecticut voters in the Nov. 4 election, but Swensson attributed her defeat to the party lever and what she labeled the Democratic "political machine." She said she is hopeful the removal of the party lever will prevent that from happening in the future.

"I'm really proud of the record I have as a legislator," she said. Swensson's political career began in the early 1960s, when she worked elections for the Republican Party at the District 11 polling station in what is now the Mahoney

State Rep. Elsie "Biz" Swensson holds the notebooks she used to record phone calls received from constituents at her Porter Street home. Swensson, 64, a Republican who served three terms representing the 13th Assembly District, was defeated by Democrat John Thompson in the Nov. 4 election.

Recreation Center. Swensson then became a member of the Republican Town Committee, first as the leader of District 9, then as vice chairwoman under four different town chairmen. The first of those was former Mayor Nathan Agostinelli, whom she called her "political mentor" because he helped her learn what it took to win a campaign.

In 1980, the Republicans could not come up with a candidate to run for the seat being vacated by retiring Democrat Francis Mahoney.

"No one else would run, so I said, 'What the heck, I would,'" she recalled. "I never thought a Republican could win in the 13th."

However, she beat Phyllis Jackson in 1980 and then former Manchester Mayor John Thompson in 1982 and again in 1984.

Swensson said she is not bitter about her loss to Thompson this year, though she complained that Thompson made false campaign claims about her voting record.

As for the future, Swensson said she plans to spend more time with her husband, adding that he has been understanding and helpful during her campaigns. Swensson said she also will remain active as secretary of the Connecticut Eastern Seaboard program and keep doing volunteer work for Manchester Memorial Hospital.

Swensson has retired from politics, but it has not left her life, she said.

"There's something about being a legislator that can never be taken away from you," she said.

In Brief

Town directors to meet on mall plan
When the Manchester Board of Directors resumes its recessed meeting of Nov. 13 on Tuesday, members will consider a plan to fund the construction of roads and sewers for the proposed Mall at Buckland Hills.

Under the proposed arrangement, the town would issue bonds to pay for the estimated $13 million cost of the improvements and pay the expense with real estate taxes collected on the mall over the next 15 years.

The Economic Development Commission is scheduled to vote on the plan Friday.

The directors will meet at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Lincoln Center hearing room.

Town seeks architects for schools
The town has begun soliciting offers from architects to design repairs to four elementary schools and Manchester High School, and hopes to select an architect on Dec. 3, according to Building Committee Chairman Paul Phillips.

Phillips said an ad hoc committee composed of himself, Building Committee member Frank Pitts and School Superintendent James Kennedy will oversee the selection process. He said the group hopes to receive about 10 offers and would like to choose a local architect.

The elementary schools scheduled to be repaired are Nathan Hale, Bowers, Verplanck and Wadell. The work will bring the schools and MHS into compliance with state building codes.

Voters earlier this month approved a referendum that provides for spending $8.8 million for the repairs. The town's share of that will be $3.5 million, with the state covering the rest.

Phillips said he hopes the work will begin in July or August 1987 and will be completed by September 1989.

Town schedules water-flow test
The Manchester Water and Sewer Department will conduct a fire-flow test on Parker Street Friday to test the water system for fire-protection purposes, it has announced.

The test will start at 1 p.m. and last for about two hours. The quality and pressure of water or could be affected on Parker Street, Sheldon Road, Sanrico Drive and Progress Drive.

Town mulls water-fee change

By Alex Girelli Associate Editor

The town administrator is studying the possible effects of eliminating or reducing the minimum charge for water as a means of easing the burden on elderly customers, but sources close to the administration indicate it is difficult to determine the exact outcome of such a change.

The study was requested by Mayor Barbara Weinberg in September. The question first arose when the Board of Directors was considering the budget for the current fiscal year and was revived last week by Republican Town Chairman Donald Kuehl, who sees it as a possible means of saving water.

Administrative reports on the question have not been made public, but indications are they would be if the minimum charge were eliminated entirely and a fixed charge of $2.60 per 100 cubic feet of water up to the 1,200-cubic-foot minimum substituted, the water department would lose at least $15,000 in revenue.

If the department were to charge a fixed fee for all water use, the fee would have to be $2.18 per 100 cubic feet to provide the revenue needed to support the department on the basis of the total amount of water it now sells.

While that would save money for users of small amounts of water, it would increase costs for larger users, administrative reports indicate.

The reports will be presented to the Board of Directors for consideration.

Public Works Director George Kandra said he thinks the amount of water saved by eliminating or State Rep. James R. McCavanagh, D-Manchester, said Wednesday he has been chosen vice chairman of the General Assembly's Judiciary Committee, a panel he has served on for the past two years.

"Judiciary is a major, major committee," McCavanagh said, adding that he was very pleased to have been given the position. "Evidently they (Democratic leaders) were happy with the job I did during the last year."

McCavanagh said he will also continue to serve on the Public Safety Committee but will not lead it.

Before winning re-election to his third two-year term on Nov. 4, McCavanagh said he wanted to head the Public Safety Committee and that he had a very good chance of being named to the position.

However, McCavanagh said today that his leadership position on the Judiciary Committee will allow him to serve as a liaison for safety matters raised in the Education, Review and Investigations Committee. In addition, he said he felt honored to be on the judicial panel because he is not an attorney, while most members are.

he hopes to serve on the Appropriations Committee, but he has not yet been contacted by party leaders. He said he also asked to serve on the transportation or public safety panels, although his first choice was appropriation.

McCavanagh represents the 9th Assembly District, which covers part of East Hartford, Glastonbury and the southwest corner of Manchester. Vernon Mayor Marie Herbst, a Democrat who was elected in the 35th Senatorial District seat that includes Coventry and Andover, said Tuesday she also has not been told what committees she will serve on. However, she said she applied for membership on the Education, Environment, Finance and Public Safety panels.

State Rep. J. Peter Fusco, R-Bristol, said he does not expect to be notified of his assignments until after Thanksgiving. Fusco, whose 5th Assembly District includes Bolton and Andover, said he applied for the Finance, Judiciary, Banks and General Law committees.

Manchester smokes out cigarettes

Those who "adopted" smokers pledged money to the organization on Friday the American Puffer Alliance, which grew out of the Institute of Social Ethics organization two years ago, scheduled a Smoke-In Day.

The counter-demonstration is supposed to symbolize the rights of smokers and the discrimination they have faced for nearly 20 years, according to information from the association.

Although nobody from the American Puffer Alliance was available for comment this morning, one Manchester smoker expressed some annoyance at the smokeout events.

Pauline Vanallen said she was asked to leave the Creative School of Hairdressing in Manchester today, where she attends school, because she lit up a cigarette.

"I do feel that the people who are honoring this, that's good," she said. "But it's their choice. I said I was not honoring the smokeout. That's my choice."

OPINION

Rezoning rejection was right

The Planning and Zoning Commission took the right stand this week in refusing to rezone land along Wetherell Street for a use inconsistent with a comprehensive development plan that is a mere four months old.

The proposal offered by developer Andrew Ansaldo called for a change from Rural Residence to Planned Residence Development for about 25 acres of open land as part of a 52-acre development plan. Residential development with a density of up to 10 units an acre would have been allowed in the PRD section.

When Manchester's Comprehensive Plan of Development was adopted this past summer after considerable controversy over housing densities in the southwestern section of town, it provided for zone changes that would accommodate a maximum density of three units per acre in that area. Thus to approve the PRD segment of the Ansaldo proposal would have undermined the plan, which was adopted to replace one that had never been updated to reflect the realities of a developing community.

Obviously, the new planning guide cannot have been outed in four months, and for the PZC to have ignored it so soon after adoption would have been tantamount to saying it was not needed in the first place. That holds true no matter how selfish the motives of those who turned out to denounce the Ansaldo proposal.

In the long run, higher housing densities in the very area Ansaldo proposed to develop may be justified. That may even be true during the life of the plan, which was designed to last 10 years, because conditions in southwestern Manchester may change. The demand for housing may increase dramatically, and utilities may be improved. Indeed, as originally proposed, the comprehensive plan called for housing densities of up to 10 units per acre in the area. Then residents of the area protested and won their point.

If they were not right, the plan should not have been modified. But it was changed, and the PZC adopted it. The PZC's decision against the zone change must have been especially difficult because the rezoning application came from Andrew Ansaldo, whose proposal looked to be of high quality and whose general reputation as a responsible developer merits respect. Whatever the future may hold, however, it was the right decision for now.

Venture clubs reveal promising ventures

STAMFORD — "I knew that venture capital clubs could work in high-tech areas and Fairfield County, Connecticut. But I wondered in the spring of 1985, could the concept work in low-tech or no-tech areas?" said Carroll Greathouse, the administrator of the Connecticut Venture Group — the nation's oldest venture capital club.

"Then Venture Magazine did a four-page spread. And I was flooded with requests from around the country to help start similar groups. They now range from Puerto Rico to a committee putting together a club in Montreal and new ones in Richmond, Va., Phoenix, San Francisco and Milwaukee.

"By the end of a year, 50 of these clubs had been established. In our July/August Directory, there were 79." Greathouse said. "I know of 45 now and there will be 100 by year's end — double that of a year ago."

What is their attraction? Money! Lots of it.

"BUSINESS WEEK" put it more sedately on May 26: "At venture capital clubs you get to know the people involved in new business straightaway. ... with any new venture, keep in mind that to compensate for the high risk and the lack of dividends along the way, the eventual take should be a lot more than what you have come to expect from Wall Street." Look for five to six times your money in five years, says Larry Reynolds, a Washington writer on ventures.

That's no exaggeration. Prime Capital Management of Stamford boasts a return of 25 percent a year. But numbers don't communicate feelings.

With a quarter century of experience as a

Foreign Relations outcome will affect Senate future

By Donald M. Rothberg
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — While Democrats prepare for their new Senate majority, the most interesting early power struggle of the 100th Congress is Sen. Jesse Helms' bid to take the senior Republican spot on the Foreign Relations Committee.

The North Carolina conservative wants to move ahead of Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., who served as committee chairman the last two years while the GOP controlled the Senate.

Republican and Democratic senators were scheduled to meet separately today to choose their leadership for the session that begins next January and to start determining committee lineups.

Some decisions they make will give the first hint of the tone for the next two years as the Democrats assert the majority they won in the 1986 elections and the Republicans try to preserve President Reagan's agenda.

Party chairman Paul G. Kirk Jr. plans to use a Democratic National Committee meeting Sunday to issue a warning that the 1986 election results represent an opportunity but not a call for a return to the policies of the 1960s and 1970s.

FOR THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE, the three days in Washington will be a time to celebrate the return to power in the Senate and a chance to rub elbows with some of the party's potential 1988 presidential candidates.

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado and Joseph Biden of Delaware, Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Gov. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona and the Rev. Jesse Jackson are expected to do little stroking of party activists.

At the Capitol, neither the Democrats nor the Republicans are expected to turn to any new faces for the Senate leadership. It'll be a swapping of jobs for Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Sen. Byrd's R-Kan. Byrd, who was minority leader the past six years, will take over as majority leader, while Dole will move in the other direction.

It's how the closer senators line up that will set the tone for the next two years, and that is the significance of Helms' challenge to Lugar.

Two years ago, Helms had seniority on two committees, Foreign Relations and Agriculture. Keeping a promise made during a tough re-election campaign, Helms chose to become chairman of the Agriculture Committee, leaving Lugar to head Foreign Relations. The Indiana senator proved adept at building consensus positions for policies on a range of issues, including the president's program to send $100 million in aid to the contra forces fighting to overthrow the leftist government of Nicaragua.

THE HELMS-LUGAR contest may not be decided until January when the committee holds its first meeting of the new session, but most unofficial vote-counters expect Lugar to win in the committee and in the Republican caucus if Helms carries his challenge that far.

If Helms proves that assessment wrong, the expectation is the North Carolina senator would lead the GOP on a far more confrontational course with Democrats on foreign policy issues.

Helms would reflect conservative frustration with policies on South Africa and Latin America. The senator not only takes a hard-line position on Nicaragua, but he is one of the few congressional defenders of Gen. Augusto Pinochet of Chile, a leader whose repressive policies have drawn criticism from the administration.

With Democrats eager to investigate the role of the White House National Security Council in Latin America and secret dealings with Iran, and with arms control a high priority, foreign policy could overshadow domestic issues in the next Congress.

If that is the case, the Foreign Relations Committee, chaired by Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., could become a battleground reminiscent of the Vietnam War period when the panel was in the forefront of opposition to policies of both Democratic and Republican administrations.

Car cutback doesn't faze chief justice

WASHINGTON — Is Chief Justice William Rehnquist a scrofflaw?

That's exactly what congressional sources say he is. And at first or second glance, it certainly looks bad for Rehnquist.

He has been deliberately ignoring a new law — passed by Congress and signed by President Reagan last month — that prohibits all but a handful of high officials from having chauffeur-driven government limousines take them to and from work. The chief justice is conspicuously absent from the list of eligible VIPs.

A Supreme Court spokesperson confirmed that Rehnquist is being driven to and from work in a government limo. She told our associate Donald Goldberg that the chief justice is aware of the new law's provisions and has a Supreme Court attorney analyzing the statute.

The court spokesperson said Rehnquist may be entitled to a free ride on grounds of security. The new law does allow that particular exemption — for an official who has received a death threat, for example.

BUT THE LAW REQUIRES certifying in writing to Congress that "highly unusual circumstances present a clear and present danger," with the reasons spelled out. Congressional sources say Rehnquist has not submitted such a written certification and thus not entitled to a limo for security reasons.

The legislation, introduced by Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., was intended to cut back on the expensive, unnecessary use of government vehicles by public officials. Congressional studies showed that literally hundreds of federal officials were commuting courtesy of the taxpayers — nearly 70 in the Defense Department and State Department, for example. The cost ran to millions of dollars a year.

The new law slashed the list of eligibles drastically. Except for VIPs with security problems and a few executive-branch officials explicitly granted the privilege by the president, use of chauffeur-driven limousines to get to and from work was limited to the president, the vice president and the heads of most agencies — not including the Supreme Court.

Capitol Hill sources have described the fierce lobbying by various agencies in this status-conscious city to have their officials exempted. The White House — which has a comfortable share of the exemptions — encouraged this pressure by telling the agency heads to take their beefs to Congress.

ONE OFFICIAL who had a good case was Selwa Roosevelt, the State Department's chief of protocol. Her job requires full-dress calls on visiting dignitaries at all hours of the day and night. Despite persistent phone calls to Capitol Hill, she didn't make the list. But she told us the White House has assured her she will be among the 10 officials the president can designate to receive home-to-office transportation.

Other VIPs won't be so fortunate and will either have to drive themselves to work, take buses or ride the Metro. Neither the comptroller of the currency nor the chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., for example, made it into the short list of free riders, even though their agencies lobbied long and hard. Maybe they can hitch a ride with the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, who did make the commuter list.

Even heavy clout in Congress proved unavailing this time. Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, who chairs the influential Senate Post Office subcommittee, tried to get chauffeur commuter rides for the postmaster general and his two top aides. He had to settle for just the postmaster general.

Fury in Foggy Bottom

Secretary of State George Shultz was reported to be outraged over the White House's backdoor arms-for-hostages deal with Iran, but his wrath was nothing compared to that of his professional underlings in Foggy Bottom. Rank-and-file career diplomats were understandably aghast at disclosure of the secret arms supplies sent to Iran; for years they have been quietly entreating U.S. allies and other governments not to sell weapons to the Iranians. In fact, one of those delicate don't-sell missions was in progress at the very time news of the administration's secret deal hit the headlines. The diplomats are mightily embarrassed.

More snow coming as first storm's effects linger

Shelby Joy, 12, cross-country skis past gravestones in the East Cemetery Wednesday after about eight inches of snow had fallen on the town. Joy attends Iling Junior High School and has been skiing for three years.

The affected streets in Manchester are Wetherell Street, Wylye Street, Timrod Road, Keeney Street, Broad Street and Piano Plaza. Power should be restored by late this afternoon, Chavez said.

Because power is out on Keeney Street, the Keeney Street elementary school was closed for a second day. Director of Curriculum Allan B. Chesterton said today. He said all other schools were reopened, and no problems were reported.

In Bolton, Leewood Drive, Colonial Drive and Birch Mountain Road Extension should have electricity back by late this afternoon, Chavez said.

Bolton Administrative Assistant Karen Levine said town officials were considering opening a shelter Wednesday night, but did not after NU assured the town that most homes would have power that evening. She said schools were open and officials were regularly checking on elderly people.

In Coventry, 130 homes were still without power as of 9 a.m., according to NU spokeswoman Marilyn Brossmer. That is down from 2,740 homes that were left cold and dark on Wednesday.

She said the streets affected are North River Road, Carpenter Road, Cedar Swamp Road, Silver Street and Jones Crossing Road, all of which should have power again by mid-afternoon.

The same holds true for most of those around the state, Chavez said. Coventry Human Services Director Dorothy Grady said no shelter was opened because most homes had power by Wednesday evening.

Manchester Health Director Ronald Kraatz said this morning he did not know of any problems involving people who spent the night in homes in which there was no electricity. He said people who are healthy should be able to spend at least one night in a cold house, though there is the risk of hypothermia if someone is not bundled up.

Kraatz said the Manchester visiting nurses group is checking on the elderly and infirm who are homebound. He stressed that if someone does remain in their home without electricity, they should not use charcoal to provide heat or cook because the fumes are deadly.

Meanwhile, Manchester Park and Cemetery Division employees removed large tree branches blocking roads early today and then set out to get smaller limbs out of the way, division head Robert Harrison said this morning.

Harrison said the entire crew, about 18 people, were at work. Harrison said the division's switchboard was deluged with phone calls early today and had to set priorities and tackle the more urgent jobs first. By 9 a.m. the last of the trees limbs blocking a road had been removed, Harrison said.

Manchester Highway Division crews were out this morning sanding roads and plowing snow piles back as far as possible to make room for the additional snow that is expected to fall tonight. Highway Superintendent Keith Chapman said weather reports vary, but he is preparing for the worst.

Crews worked all day Wednesday, with some out until 10:30 p.m. The operation started at about 2 a.m. Wednesday, Chapman said that if the storm hits early today, the workers may not get home at all.

Cancellations

The All Connecticut Conference championship football game between East Catholic and Notre Dame scheduled Friday night has been postponed due to field conditions.

The game has been tentatively rescheduled for Saturday at noon at Fairfield University, East Catholic director of athletics Tom Malin reported. The financial aid information session planned at Manchester High School this evening for college-bound students has been canceled, guidance counselor David Frost said this morning.

Frost said the meeting has been rescheduled for Dec. 1 at 7 p.m. in the MHS cafeteria.

MHS girl's killer gets up to 50 years

By John Mitchell
Herald Reporter

VERNON — A 25-year-old Mansfield man was sentenced Wednesday to up to 50 years in prison — 10 years less than the maximum — for the April murder of a Manchester High School student.

David L. Copas, who pleaded guilty in October to the brutal murder of Laura Bieu, began serving his sentence Wednesday after being transferred to Somers State Prison. He could be released on parole after serving just under 35 years, an assistant state's attorney said this morning.

"He's got to do at least two-thirds of the sentence," said Assistant State's Attorney Donald Caldwell, noting that the minimum sentence for the crime would have been 25 years.

Caldwell said that before Judge

Bieu's battered body was found April 27 near the Hop River. An autopsy showed she had been stabbed 18 times and suffered blows to the head that fractured her skull, according to a police affidavit.

Eugene T. Kelly handed down his sentence, the court listened to Copas' attorney, Jerry Gruenbaum of Coventry, argue for a change of plea, which was denied.

Contacted this morning, Gruenbaum said the sentence was "understandable under the circumstances."

"I was asking for 40," he said, noting that other judges might have been influenced by comments that Bieu's family members made during the sentencing. "I thought Kelly did a good job."

Copas, who pleaded guilty Oct. 8 to murdering Bieu, had changed his plea twice. He originally pleaded guilty to Bieu's murder in April, then changed his plea to innocent in June.

Earlier this month, Copas attempted to change his plea back to innocent, but Kelly denied his bid because he said there was no cause for the change.

Copas, who has been held at the Brooklyn Correctional Center since his arrest, was charged with stabbing and killing Bieu. He was held April 25, then dragging her case, police said. Butcher, who police say had a knife in his possession, was released on a $500 non-surety bond.

According to the police report, an officer who knows Butcher stopped him as he was walking east on Center Street at 10:29 a.m. in order to question him in regard to Linder's death.

The officer said he noticed part of a black leather case or holster when Butcher pulled his right hand out of his coat pocket, police said. When asked what he had in his pocket, police said, Butcher pulled out a sheath with a knife, which police said measured 4 1/2 inches.

Wood said that the arresting officer apparently knew that Butcher was a member of Linder's circle of acquaintances, but he would not elaborate.

Police spokesman Gary Wood said he could not elaborate on the incidents, but did say they were related to the Linder case.

Craig Scott is scheduled to appear in Manchester Superior Court on Monday. A court date of Wednesday was set for his sister.

On Wednesday, Arret Butcher, 30, of 281 Center St., was charged with carrying a dangerous weapon after he was stopped for questioning in connection with the Linder into a wooded area off Hop River Road in Coventry while she was still thrashing around and moaning.

Bieu's battered body was found April 27 near the Hop River. An autopsy showed she had been stabbed 18 times and suffered blows to the head that fractured her skull, according to a police affidavit.

The autopsy also revealed that Bieu had been sexually active in the hours before her death.

Joseph Toth, Bieu's grandfather, watched Wednesday's court proceedings, which lasted about 20 minutes, and said that the sentence was fair considering the maximum.

"It was a vicious crime," he said. "I still feel in my heart that anyone who commits a crime like that, they should be put to death."

Toth said that Bieu's relatives had gotten involved in Survival of the Homicide, a group he said is made up of relatives of victims.

"People don't understand what a person has to go through," Toth said. "We're hurting."

Police make arrests near scene of death

Police today reported three arrests made in connection with the investigation of the suspected murder last week of Ellington teenager Michael S. Linder, but a spokesman said he could not comment on the incidents.

Craig Anthony Scott, 17, of 125 Spruce St., was arrested at 12:15 a.m. Monday and charged with interfering with an officer and possession and sale of marijuana. He was detained on a $5,000 cash bond.

It was behind the apartment building at 125 Spruce St. that Linder's body was found Friday night. Linder, 17, died as a result of blows to the head, an autopsy revealed.

On Tuesday, Scott's sister, Colleen Brenda Scott, 19, also of 125 Spruce St., was charged with making a false statement and interfering with police. She was released on a $2,000 non-surety bond.

Police spokesman Gary Wood said he could not elaborate on the incidents, but did say they were related to the Linder case.

Craig Scott is scheduled to appear in Manchester Superior Court on Monday. A court date of Wednesday was set for his sister.

Breast-feeding is the only way, La Leche League members insist

By Margaret Hayden
Herald Reporter

Imagine the ideal situation. Be unrealistic. Don't consider money or time.

These were group leader Kathy LeDonne's instructions for a wish list for a nursing mother returning home from the hospital after the birth of a baby.

"Then, we'll make it closer to reality," she told the 12 young mothers who were compiling the list at a recent Manchester Evening La Leche League meeting at the home of Sharon Kaminsky, 31 Edgerton St. The Manchester chapter is part of a 30-year-old international organization that strongly favors breast-feeding.

By turns, the mothers and expectant mothers called out ideas. The babies suckled, slept or cooed and children laughed, sang and imitated motor sounds as they drove their toy vehicles on the floor. The living room sounds harmonized in the friendly session.

Some wish-list ideas included: "No postpartum depression."

"Support from everyone for breast-feeding."
"A maid."
"The body I had before the pregnancy in two days."
"Dad home all the time."
"A baby sitter for the other kids."
"Eight hours of uninterrupted sleep."
"A beautiful wardrobe."
"An uninterrupted shower and meal."

LeDonne had a novel suggestion for tired and busy mothers who want to avoid unwanted visitors.

"Hang a bathrobe by the door," she said, recommending the mother slip the robe on before answering the door. "This is a hint that you are not ready for visitors."

LeDonne also recommended having another birth-support person present during labor besides the husband.

Breast-feeding can reduce postpartum depression by changing hormone levels, she said. She also encouraged women to share their concerns with LaLeche members and other friends, and to read the group's literature. "Whatever works for you."

While the wish for a maid cannot be realized for most, LeDonne suggested that a relative, friend or a paid high-school student help the new mother.

"Remember, breast-feeding saves between $800 and $1,200," she said. She stressed that paid help would be needed for only a short time, if at all. "But, if it is not feasible, beg your friends. Practice before your mirror, saying 'I need help. I'm serious.'" the mother slip the robe on before answering the door. "This is a hint that you are not ready for visitors."

NURSING CAN HELP IN toning the figure after pregnancy, LeDonne said. Nursing flattens the abdomen by contracting the uterus, and it uses from 600 to 1,000 calories a day. For a new wardrobe, she suggested tag sales, consignment shops, sewing, and swapping clothes.

For the whole bath, LeDonne, who is a mother of two, suggested bathing with the baby. She also suggested that the husband watch the children.

"Fifteen or 20 minutes alone in a bath does wonders for your psyche," she said. She also recommended taking the telephone off the hook and not answering the doorbell during nursing and bath times.

After going through the list, mothers and children enjoyed snacks of fruit juice, cheese and whole-grain crackers. La Leche stresses natural food for all members of the family.

Your neighbors' views: Should the U.S. have exchanged arms for hostages?

John C. Tardiff: "I don't think it's a good idea. It's blackmail."

Thomas Lockwood: "It's a real stupid idea. It's setting a precedent for the future. It will allow Iran to continue its ridiculous war with Iraq. It's unfortunate, but they should keep Americans out of that area."

Matthew Cox: "Yes, I do think it's a good idea." He said it's unlikely the U.S. will sell Iran enough arms to make much of a difference.

Sandra Pickard: "It's hard to say." She said one can't put a price on human life. "But if we give Iran instruments they could use them against his (President Reagan's) own country."

Karen Anger: "I'm not for selling arms to Iran, but it's really a two-edged thing."

Jerry Bassola: "I have mixed emotions. It's nice to have our prisoners back, but you don't like to see us supporting the Iranians because of what they're doing to us."

Dumping kittens on the road is not the humane solution

I've got a new kitty. Driving home three weeks ago I noticed a carton by the side of the road near my house. Stopped to pick it up to throw it in the trash, but inside were a mother cat and five kittens, four probably 7 to 8 weeks old. Undoubtedly dumped by a fair-weather owner.

Pet Forum

Allan Leventhal, D.V.M.

Kitten was worried, had fleas and ear mites but is fattening up and seems to appreciate her new home. She sticks so close I have trouble not stepping on her. She purrs non-stop and likes her new family. My daughter's cat, whom we cat-sit, has an out-jointed nose. She doesn't like the competition and is spraying-marking the property more than ever to let the little newcomer know who's top cat.

Only wish folks that have female cats would have them spayed or, if not, at least take them to a shelter or humane society so they can have a chance for adoption rather than freeing, starvation or being hit by a car when dumped. With people retiring and moving South, others going to condos or apartments that don't allow pets, there are more humane ways of pet disposal.

Turning a domestic pet that's been provided with food and shelter into an environment where it must hunt or scavenge to survive is an extreme form of animal cruelty. If all other avenues fail, euthanasia is often a more humane solution but should be considered only as the last alternative.

WITH THE COMING holidays some advice is warranted. Even though the latest thing in greeting cards is pet birthday cards, pets really don't know when it's their birthday nor do they know when it's Thanksgiving or Christmas. Therefore, it's not necessary to allow them to celebrate by feeding them turkey and stuffing or whatever you feed on the holidays.

Companion animals used to pet food often will have indigestion with eating a well-balanced diet. Increased Vitamin C is necessary to help the bones repair themselves. An adequate intake of dietary calcium through milk products such as yogurt and buttermilk, and also proteins are needed to promote bone growth and replacement.

Minerals such as fluoride, which is in drinking water, magnesium and iron are also very important. Before changing your diet on your own, however, be sure to check with your physician. Any dietary changes must be consistent with any other medical problems that you are being treated for.

Treatment of osteoporosis by a physician will also help to slow down the progress of the disease as manifested in the mouth. The treatment usually consists of taking calcium supplements. It is also wise to make sure that you are rewarded with the retention of most or all of his natural dentition. Neglect of the teeth at this stage will in a short time lead to an increased number of cavities, gum disease and inevitably tooth loss. There should be no question as to whether you want to spend the rest of your life chewing comfortably as you always have and being free of oral disease or whether you want to start taking up heavy smoking or start eating a high cholesterol diet simply because they are elderly and "don't have much time left anyway". So it should be with dental health also. A person who has taken good care of his teeth throughout his life is usually QUESTION: My doctor tells me that I have osteoporosis. Since this disease affects the bones of my body, can it affect my jaws also?

ANSWER: Osteoporosis is a bone disease that affects elderly people in large numbers. Osteoporosis is a disease caused by a loss of bone mass due to the loss of the internal structure of the bones. Throughout our lives our bones are constantly being remodeled by resorption (loss of bone) and consequent replacement of bone material. As we age the ability to replace bone that has been resorbed diminishes and therefore leads to a decrease in bone mass. This disease is painless because most people do not know that they have the disease until something happens. What usually happens is that as the result of a fall bones are easily broken.

In the mouth many changes can be observed also. For example, following dental extractions, slow healing is seen due to the decreased ability of the body to repair bone. Also increased bone loss similar to that found in gum disease occurs. For people wearing dentures, a faster wearing away of the jaw's ridges happens causing the dentures to loosen and fit improperly. When the lower jaw becomes very thin it becomes difficult to make a well-fitting denture.

Explorer Christopher Columbus died in 1506 in Spain.

Dental society advocates healthy teeth for a lifetime

Editor's note: In an effort to increase people's awareness of the importance of good lifetime dental health, the Connecticut State Dental Association has declared the week of November 17 to 24, Dental Health Week for the Elderly. This column was prepared by the Manchester Dental Society.

QUESTION: I am 72 years old and I probably don't have much time left. Why should I bother with my teeth?

ANSWER: Most people as they get older have two concerns regarding their lives. First come thoughts of mortality and the realization that they are not going to live forever.

This week's featured pet is a nice male shepherd cross named Lobo. He's about 1 year old, is black and tan, and was found on Oakland Street on Nov. 6. He's a nice, but shy, dog.

Some of the dogs from last week were claimed by their owners and three had to be euthanized by a veterinarian. All three had been featured pets in recent weeks — Daisy, Twiggy and Colonel.

Among the new dogs on Tuesday was a female of an unknown breed, about 3 months old. She is a pretty beige color with a nice black face. She was found by the motor lodge on Tolland Turnpike on Nov. 16.

Another new one is a male, about 10 years old. He's a mixed breed, is brown and was wearing a red collar when picked up on Jones Circle on Nov. 18. He has a West Hartford rabies tag on his collar.

Several others are still waiting to be adopted and others are waiting for owners to pick them up.

Hand is at the pound on Olcott Street weekdays from noon to 1 p.m. or he can be reached by calling the pound at 643-6642 or the Manchester Police Department at 646-4555, or someone can be reached at either number, Monday through Friday from 6 to 9 p.m.

There is a $5 fee to adopt a dog and the new owner must have the dog licensed. Before being licensed the dog must have its rabies shot.

Pound is crowded

A little black and tan shepherd named Rex and about 3 months old, was left at the pound on Nov. 17.

Among the other new ones was an 8-week-old black and white female retriever found Nov. 18 on Spencer Street. Another new one, picked up Nov. 18 on West Middle Turnpike near Interstate 84, is a very handsome neutered male. He's about 4 years old, is a shepherd and was also wearing a red collar.

Poppy, last week's featured pet, is still waiting to be adopted. She is a Doberman-shepherd cross and was found at Maple and Spruce streets on Nov. 7.

Employee assistance plans show dramatic turnarounds

The type of EAP depends on the specifics of the office or workplace. Most have a part-time staff member or outside counselor who refers workers to community centers where they can get help for their particular needs. An EAP counselor is often a psychologist, social worker, certified alcohol counselor or physician — who is not only familiar with the treatment of people's problems but also in touch with the workplace and community.

"STRESS IS THE word these days. It's one of the problems people admit to with no stigma attached," reports Marilyn Sneiderman, Community Action Coordinator for American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, who sets up these programs across the country.

More and more companies are seeing the results of these types of programs. "In 12 separate studies we've seen dramatic turnarounds," reports Bickerton. Implementing these programs reduces the number of sick days, accidents, and health care and health insurance costs.

In brief: It makes good management sense. When job performance, productivity and morale improve, it can only spell savings for an employer.

"DRUG TESTING IS not the real issue," says Bickerton. "Drugs in the workplace is." Experts agree that helping workers in a constructive way, through education and counseling, is the better solution.

But still some companies remain unconvinced that they will get a return on their investment when they implement an EAP. Also, some don't want to get involved in the lives of their employees. But the complexities of life are such that the well-being of workers and the end result are inextricably linked.

WASHINGTON — Federally subsidized student loans encourage colleges to raise tuition and should give way to a new kind of loan requiring borrowers to pay more for their diplomas, Secretary of Education William J. Bennett says.

Outlining a broad view of what student aid should look like in the future, Bennett on Wednesday described a loan system without federal interest rate subsidies that would also take into account the borrower's ability to repay.

The loans, called income contingent loans, would allow graduates who take low-paying jobs to repay their loans over a longer period, but all borrowers would be required to repay their loans fully.

The proposal will be tested in a five-year pilot program at 10 colleges during the 1987-88 academic year. Bennett said he was sending letters to the presidents of all 3,331 U.S. colleges and universities inviting them to apply to be part of the test.

At the same time, Bennett, a frequent critic of soaring college tuitions, said he may ask Congress to tighten the federal aid spigot. He said his department was looking at excluding any tuition increase greater than 1 percent above inflation when figuring the level of federal aid for which a student qualifies.

Calling for college cost containment, Bennett said boosting student aid in response to tuition increases makes it easier for schools to raise tuition even higher in the next year. He noted that costs per student have increased 36 percent above inflation since 1975.

Current federal programs — Guaranteed Student Loans and National Direct Student Loans — subsidize all of the interest on the loans until after the borrower begins repayment and a portion thereafter.

With unsubsidized loans, "no longer will the costs of college be hidden. ... Rather than spending someone else's money, students will find themselves making decisions about their own money," Bennett said.

Under the income contingent loan program, repayment would not begin until nine months after graduation and for the first two years payments would be between $20 and $50 per month, depending on the size of the loan.

After that, payments would be based on the borrower's income and would never exceed 15 percent of adjusted gross income. Grants, requiring no repayment, would still be provided to the neediest students, he said.

Many proofs needed to apply

QUESTION: My husband died several weeks ago. I know I'm supposed to file an application for Social Security survivors benefits, but I don't know what papers to take with me. Can you tell me what I need?

ANSWER: Some of the proofs you may need to apply for survivors benefits are your Social Security number and deceased worker's number; proof of your age; the death certificate; proof of marriage; the children's birth certificates and their Social Security numbers, if they are applying for benefits; and the deceased worker's Form or income tax return for the year before death.

Don't delay applying because you don't have all these proofs. The people at the Social Security office can suggest other proofs that can be used.

QUESTION: I receive both SSI checks and Social Security retirement checks. If my Social Security check increases automatically, do I have to report this as a change of income to Social Security?

ANSWER: No. Social Security knows about the increase in your Social Security check.

Ray Ferraro of the Whalers holds the puck on his stick and gets set to fire it into the open net as Montreal goalie Patrick Roy makes the first move in their second-period confrontation Wednesday night at the Hartford Civic Center. Ferraro's goal proved to be the only one for Hartford in its 4-1 loss.

Canadiens skate by Whalers

HARTFORD - The crowd started tumbling out of the Civic Center with 3:22 left in regulation. Get the picture on how the homecoming Hartford Whalers fared Wednesday night? The Whalers talked big at their annual monthly luncheon one afternoon prior, but they couldn't back their words with deeds as the defending Stanley Cup champion Montreal Canadiens swooped into town and took home a 4-1 victory.

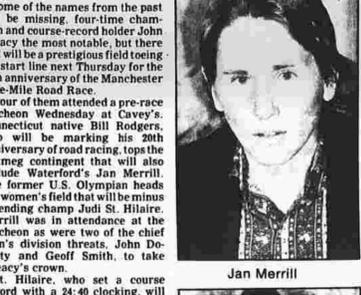

The three goals in the second period enabled the Canadiens to concentrate on defense. "It was the same style of play that they used in the playoffs," Ferraro said. "We made mistakes letting them get a two-goal lead. It forced us to dump the puck into the zone and take us out of our game."

Prime-time Fiesta Bowl not a financial bonanza

By Mike Harris
The Associated Press

Contrary to popular belief, a prime-time showing of the Fiesta Bowl with top-ranked Miami playing No. 2 Penn State would not be a financial bonanza for NBC.

"The financial aspects of this game are not what we went into it for," Kenneth Schaner, the executive vice president of NBC Sports, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview from his New York office. "We went into it because we were offered the chance to have a very special game and we're delighted to have the property, the premier college football matchup of the season."

"But it is not a financially rewarding situation," he added. "We're in a situation where we will be pre-empting prime-time programming, pre-empting profitable programming for a show that will not bring in the same kind of revenues."

If Miami gets past East Carolina, 2-8, and Penn State defeats Pittsburgh, 4-4, on Saturday, as expected, the two undefeated teams will announce immediately after their games that they will meet in the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., on Friday night, Jan. 2 in a game that should decide the national championship.

Bowl bids cannot officially be offered or accepted until Saturday at 6 p.m. EST.

The Fiesta Bowl normally is part of the solid New Year's Day bowl lineup that allows fanatical fans to watch college football from late morning to late night by switching from network to network.

"I think this (Fiesta Bowl) show would be a big (ratings) numbers," Schaner said. "Lower than the last game of the World Series, but I think maybe the mid 20s. I expect it would be in the top 10 of the week, maybe the top five."

"It's a game everybody wants to see and it features great personalities," Schaner said. "In the past, the Fiesta Bowl has been the afternoon game for NBC on New Year's Day, with the Rose Bowl following immediately after. What would replace the game in the Thursday afternoon time slot if it is moved to prime time on Friday night, Schaner said. "Really, that hasn't been decided. For one thing, the Rose Bowl will kick off on time at 2 p.m. (PST) and is tied to one bowl or another by a conference.

"Really, we've got a (bowl) system by and large that has allowed us to crown a national champion and allow for a game that people want to see played. In three of the last five years, we've had (bowl) games that in one way or another decided the national championship, and there were no special provisions made."

Asked if the network was responsible for putting together the proposed prime-time bowl deal, Schaner said, "We indicated to the Fiesta Bowl people that we could accommodate the game on Friday night if that is what they wanted. But they came to us with it."

Love fights drugs, Bias tells students

By John Mitchell
Her son's death was not in vain, in her opinion. "God had to take someone special," she said of the son who represented "one man to save millions."

East Hartford - In January, Lonise Bias had a dream that someone in her family would die.

When I woke up, I cried for two hours. It was so real," she said. "Every so often it would come back just for a little while, then it would go away ... I dismissed it."

But eventually, the dream forced the self-described "born-again believer" to confront the Lord, she said.

Five months after it first occurred, her son Len, a 22-year-old University of Maryland basketball All-American who'd been chosen to play for the Boston Celtics, was dead of a heart attack.

"This is the best reception I have had anywhere," Bias told the crowd gathered in the school's auditorium, while looking at red and white banners on the wall which read "Say No To Drugs" and "Death Of A Dream."

Iran deal illegal, Wright charges

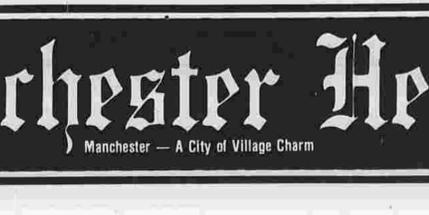

WASHINGTON - Accusing the Reagan administration of violating the law, House Majority Leader Jim Wright said today that Iran paid more than $12 million for the weapons it purchased from the United States.

Wright, commenting after a closed-door hearing with CIA Director William Casey, told reporters that 1,000 of the 2,000 missiles bought from the United States were assembled in San Antonio last February. Others were not shipped separately, he said.

"All were paid for by Iran - $12 million plus," Wright said. Wright, who is likely to be House Speaker next year, said that other than the United States and Israel, "several other countries" have shipped arms to Iran. But he said these shipments were not necessarily connected to the efforts by the

Lack of snow brings relief

Rainfall proves forecasters wrong, eases problems

By George Lavng
Herald Reporter

Manchester breathed a sigh of relief this morning after what had been forecast as snow instead came down as rain Thursday night, washing away some of the heavy mass that snarled tree limbs, took down power lines and made travel difficult on Wednesday.

"Oh boy was I ever," Park Superintendent Robert Harrison said when asked if he was pleased with the snow's failure to materialize.

"We were so very, very fortunate," he said. "If we had had what was predicted, we'd be in trouble."

By the morning, power in area towns was almost all turned back on. Northeast Utilities officials said, adding that remaining outages are scattered. Some 210,000 customers statewide were without power after Connecticut was covered by up to a foot of snow Wednesday night.

Meanwhile, town crews should finish clearing branches this afternoon that were either left hanging or cut from streets and sidewalks by the snow, Harrison said. The only tree that fell over entirely because of the heavy snow was on Edgerton street, he said.

Highway Superintendent Keith Chapman was also relieved. "This is a relief," he said. "The snow hit early Wednesday. The town's vacuum apparatus cannot be used because the leaves are still too wet. But now the general condition is putting the leaves into dump trucks, which then haul them away for disposal."

Chapman said about 60 percent of the leaf piles in Manchester have been collected. If the next few weeks are relatively dry, the pickup should be finished by the end of December, he said.

He said the snow this week set crews back by one week. But Chapman said the town is ahead of schedule, which it used in the past. "If we had gone on the weekly schedule, there could be another 10 inches of snow, we'd be in trouble," he said.

Chapman said the leaves did not cause snow plow crews and real problems, though some piles were accidentally pushed into the ends of driveways as streets were cleared.

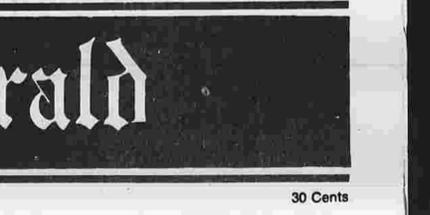

Asked about the general condition of the streets, Chapman said Thursday night's rain had left some large puddles, but no flooding. "If we were fortunate, very fortunate," he said. "If we got another 10 inches of snow, we'd be in trouble."

Chapman said only scattered, individual houses remained in the Manchester-Bolton area today, and should have been restored by late this morning.

In Coventry, the remaining election Thursday night's rain had left some large puddles, but no flooding. "If we were fortunate, very fortunate," he said. "If we got another 10 inches of snow, we'd be in trouble."

Lack of snow brings relief

Rainfall proves forecasters wrong, eases problems

Manchester breathed a sigh of relief this morning after what had been forecast as snow instead came down as rain Thursday night, washing away some of the heavy mass that snarled tree limbs, took down power lines and made travel difficult on Wednesday.

"Oh boy was I ever," Park Superintendent Robert Harrison said when asked if he was pleased with the snow's failure to materialize.

"We were so very, very fortunate," he said. "If we had had what was predicted, we'd be in trouble."

By the morning, power in area towns was almost all turned back on. Northeast Utilities officials said, adding that remaining outages are scattered. Some 210,000 customers statewide were without power after Connecticut was covered by up to a foot of snow Wednesday night.

Meanwhile, town crews should finish clearing branches this afternoon that were either left hanging or cut from streets and sidewalks by the snow, Harrison said. The only tree that fell over entirely because of the heavy snow was on Edgerton street, he said.

Highway Superintendent Keith Chapman was also relieved. "This is a relief," he said. "The snow hit early Wednesday. The town's vacuum apparatus cannot be used because the leaves are still too wet. But now the general condition is putting the leaves into dump trucks, which then haul them away for disposal."
