NO WAY TO HELP HOSTAGES

U.S. lacks military options to aid eight Americans in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite the recent buildup of U.S. naval forces in the Mediterranean, Washington has almost no military options to aid the eight Americans held hostage in Lebanon, government officials say.

"There is not a lot we can do to help the hostages," one Pentagon source acknowledged privately.

U.S. naval activity off Lebanon tapered off Friday, although two Marine assault groups remained in the area.

One of two aircraft carrier task forces suspended its patrol of the waters off

Lebanon, while a three-ship Mediterranean Amphibious Ready Group carrying 1,900 Marines had linked up with a five-ship force carrying a similar number of Marines south of the island of Crete.

During the buildup of the last two weeks, Pentagon and White House officials said they planned no military strike but wanted to be prepared for possible retaliation if the kidnapers began executing hostages.

The fleet might also be used to evacuate several hundred American citizens who remained in Lebanon, Pentagon officials said.

The U.S. military record in the region has been mixed in recent years.

In 1980, an American mission to rescue U.S. hostages in Tehran failed, and three years later, 241 U.S. servicemen died when their barracks were bombed in Beirut.

The Reagan administration had better luck in 1985, using Navy warplanes to divert an airliner carrying the hijackers of the Achille Lauro cruise ship. And last year, U.S. forces outgunned Libya in air and naval attacks.

The situation in Lebanon does not invite the same kind of intervention practiced by President Eisenhower, who in July 1958 landed Marines to help Lebanese President Camille Chamoun prevail in a civil war.

By 1983, when President Reagan sent Marines to join an international peace-keeping force in Lebanon, civil war had all but destroyed any semblance of government.

There's not much U.S. can do to help 8 hostages in Lebanon

Overriding the objections of the Marine commander on the ground, Col. Timothy Geraghty, the White House ordered a naval bombardment of anti-government forces in September 1983, according to Pentagon sources.

The naval bombardment, which claimed some civilian casualties, raised anti-American sentiment in Lebanon. And that hostility was responsible, in part, for the subsequent bombing of the Marine barracks and the wave of kidnappings.

The exact location of the hostages in Lebanon is not known, according to administration officials, and even a commando raid against a specific site might cause the kidnappers to kill their captives before they could be freed.

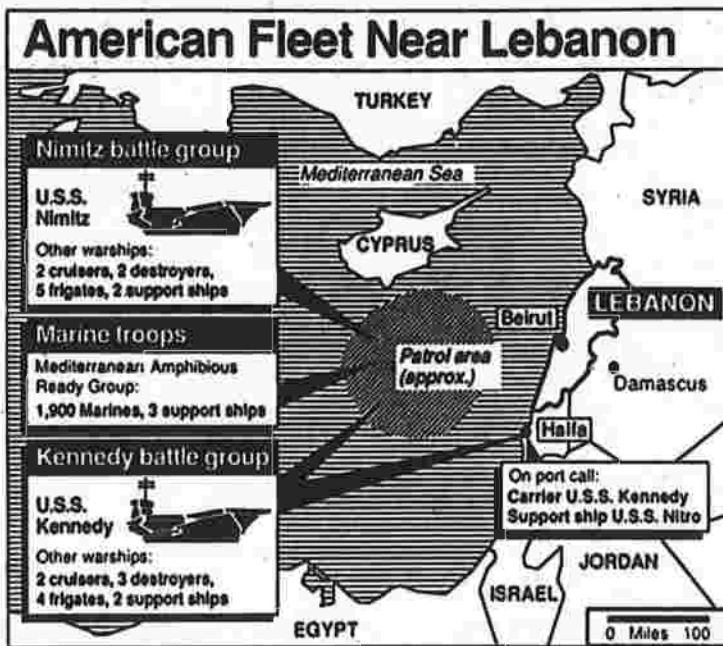

A naval bombardment or air strike against Lebanon, similar to those of late 1983, likely would hit civilian targets and serve little purpose other than to deepen local hostility toward Washington, Pentagon officials said.

The U.S. buildup has caused some concern in the Middle East and in Western Europe.

Belgian Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans said he raised the issue in a meeting Friday with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, but did not ask directly about U.S. military plans.

"I thought that for me it (would be) rather undiplomatic to ask that question of Mr. Shultz because he's not responsible for military action," said Tindemans.

He noted that some West Europeans nations had tried to talk the United States out of its air raid against Libya last year, and described that attack as "a source of frustration."

Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims said the current buildup was meant to show U.S. concern "about rising tension in the Persian Gulf and Middle East" as fighting continued in the Iran-Iraq war and Americans remained hostage in Lebanon.

"We want to make sure that we are prepared if our strategic interests are threatened and to show support for our friends in the area," Sims said.

The possibility of U.S. military action in the area appeared to recede as the carrier Kennedy began a port call in Haifa, Israel, and four of its escorting warships prepared to sail for the United States from Spain.

The Kennedy was left with an escort of five warships, and the other carrier in the area, the Nimitz, was accompanied by 11 ships.

Hostages face new death threats

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A pro-Iranian extremist group threatened Friday to kill two American hostages if U.S. forces attacked Lebanon and to kill a Frenchman if France supplies arms to Iraq.

In another development, the magazine that broke the story of American arms sales to Iran reported Friday that hostage negotiator Terry Walte was in captivity, but would be freed next week.

The death threats were made by the Revolutionary Justice Organization in Arabic statements delivered to a Western news agency and the independent newspaper

An-Nahar. That group claims it holds Joseph James Cicippio, 56, formerly of Norristown, Pa., who was acting comptroller at the American University of Beirut; Edward Austin Tracy, also 56, a writer from Rutland, Vt., and Jean-Louis Normandin, 35, of France's Antenne-2 television station.

Friday's statements were accompanied by two polaroid pictures showing Cicippio and Normandin wearing dark blue track suits.

Normandin was kidnapped last June 8, Cicippio was abducted Sept. 12, and the Revolutionary Justice group announced last Oct. 21 that it held Tracy.

The latest statement noted that the Iraqi state minister for military affairs, Gen. Abdul Jabbar Shauish, was visiting Paris, and said any agreement for France to supply arms to Iraq "will change everything into a tragedy very fast."

Iran and Iran have been at war since September 1980.

Terrorist groups holding other foreign hostages had earlier threatened to kill their captives if U.S. armed forces struck at Lebanon.

Group claims U.S. deports Arabs

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of Arab-Americans said Friday that arrests of Palestinians in Los Angeles mark the beginning of a deportation campaign by the Reagan administration targeting Arab visitors deemed to be security risks.

Such a campaign amounts to "wholesale character assassination" based on ethnic background, the National Association of Arab Americans said in a statement.

In an attempt to bolster its contention, the group released more than 30 pages of internal documents from the Immigration and Naturalization Service, some detailing recommendations that include detaining without bond Arab visitors who are believed to support terrorist groups.

INS spokesman Duke Austin said the recommendations were made last year by the agency's investigations division but were never accepted. He refused to say what, if any, steps are being adopted by the agency as part of any anti-terrorism campaign targeting Arab visitors to this country.

The documents call for holding secret hearings on deportation proceedings and for sending those arrested to detention centers. The INS, "under the guise of an anti-terrorist program, ... is attempting to turn back the clock to the days of the Japanese internment during World War II," David J. Sudd, the Arab American association's executive director, told a news conference.

On Jan. 27, INS agents arrested nine people, including eight Palestinians, in the Los Angeles area on charges they violated immigration regulations.

The nine were taken in custody after an FBI investigation failed to turn up evidence of plans to commit criminal or terrorist acts, federal law enforcement sources, speaking on condition of anonymity,

Seasons union may call for a strike vote

Owner says 1199's demands 'off the wall'

By John F. Kirch Herald Reporter

The union representing workers at New Seasons Inc. will schedule a strike vote if substantial progress is not made with management at the contract bargaining table within 30 days, a union official said Friday night.

The New England Health Care Employees Union, District 1199, which represents about 30 employees at New Seasons, sent the 30-day notice to management Friday, said Jonathan Rosenblum, a union organizer.

If both sides cannot move closer to an agreement within that time, workers will vote whether to strike, he said. The union has 100 percent support from employees, he added.

Management and union officials met Wednesday at the bargaining table for the first time since workers voted for union representation last month.

DURING THE SESSION, Rosenblum said, management laughed at District 1199's contract proposal and refused to negotiate again until March.

"Our union negotiates with bosses all the time who are hard to deal with," Rosenblum said. "But they are acting in a totally unprofessional and undignified way."

Belle Fine, New Seasons' president, called District 1199's contract proposal "off the wall." She said the union made impossible demands.

"Their request was off the wall," Fine said. "We don't have money to pay what they're asking for."

New Seasons, which operates two group homes in Manchester for mentally retarded people and a day-care center on Garden Grove Road, is a private, nonprofit organization that is funded entirely through the state, which sets employees' wages.

Fine said that although Gov. William A. O'Neill has increased the amount private group homes will receive for wages, there is still a limit.

DISTRICT 1199 represents two separate bargaining units at New Seasons, one for supervisory positions and the other for nurse's aides and habilitation specialists. Fine, who attended the negotiating session but did not take part in it, said management had asked union negotiators to submit one contract proposal for each bargaining unit, but only received one.

In addition, she said, management told the union it would review the proposal and schedule another session for the first week in March.

"We asked them to wait. We're not ignoring them," she said. "This is ridiculous. We told them we'd meet with them in the first week in March. The first week in March is less than 30 days away. Why are they putting up this big act?"

Fine said the organization needed time from the union because it was under pressure to prepare two reports for the state. The reports, each about 50 pages, are needed before New Seasons can get its funding for wage increases, Fine said. The first report is due Feb. 17, and the second is due March 1, she said.

"If we don't get the funding, there is no New Seasons," she said.

Rosenblum said that if a strike is called, District 1199 will ask that the state take over New Seasons' operations or move residents to another group home.

But Fine countered that management could take care of the residents should workers walk out next month.

Rosenblum said the union's proposal was fair. "Our proposal is fundamentally equitable. It is an initial proposal and we're happy to discuss where (Fine) wants to go from here."

Both sides said they hope to avoid a strike.

'Rambo' center doesn't make Manchester clergymen happy

By John F. Kirch Herald Reporter

Manchester church leaders said Friday that an entertainment center being proposed on North Main Street is anti-Christian and will promote violence among youths.

LaserLand, which is being proposed by South Windsor attorney Harold Cummings, would feature players "armed" with laser guns and laser-sensored vests, who'd shoot an infrared beam at electronic monsters. The action would take place in a computer-operated playing field inside the 23,000-square-foot building, which would simulate an alien space craft.

The building currently houses Andy's of Manchester, which will close Feb. 14.

"This seems to be contrary to the spirit of the gospel," said the Rev. Emilio P. Padell of St. Bridget Church on Main Street. "We are concerned about the fact that they will have war games and guns in the area that will encourage young people to kill and destroy. It's what I call the Rambo factor."

The Rev. Joseph Milton, pastor of Second Congregational Church, is also concerned. He's called a meeting at 11:30 a.m. Sunday at the North Main Street church to discuss Cummings' plans.

Milton said members of the public are invited. He said he wanted to get an idea of the congregation's sentiment toward the center before releasing a formal opinion on it.

Milton said he couldn't speak for the church, but was personally against the plans, mainly because of the potential problems they might cause for residents of the Mayfair Gardens apartment complex across the street. The complex is for low-income elderly and handicapped people.

Michael Thornton of the Center Congregational Church said a staff member of his church would attend Sunday's meeting. He said he was against the entertainment center idea.

"I think it's teaching our young people the wrong values," he said. Padell said he wasn't sure if members of his church would attend Sunday's meeting. He said the issue would be discussed during a parish meeting in March.

Cummings could not be reached for comment Friday. However, he has said that he would be willing to discuss his plans with the building's owner, GLK Realty Ltd. Partnership to resolve any problems the center might cause.

Kelly Totonis, the property manager of the shopping center, which houses Andy's along with several other businesses, said he was against the plans.

Totonis said he wasn't sure if he could block Cummings' plans, but was prepared to take his case to the courts.

The lease restricts specific businesses from moving into the building, Totonis said. He said the lease does not mention entertainment centers.

Cummings has been negotiating with Loren Andreo, the owner of Andy's grocery store, and has not discussed his plans with the landlord, Totonis has said. Andreo subleases the space from the Springfield Sugar Co. of East Hartford. The lease expires in 1991. Springfield Sugar Co. officials could not be reached for comment.

Meanwhile, town officials said they are researching whether there are any restrictions on the use of the building, which was constructed under a redevelopment project in the early 1970s.

The shopping center, along with Mayfair Gardens and several other developments, was part of an urban renewal project in Manchester's North End in the early 1960s.

Although funding was approved by the federal government, it took years before construction actually occurred.

"We're looking to see if there are any barriers to anything other than a (food) market," Town Manager Robert B. Weiss said Friday.

He said Manchester residents have been calling the town asking it to block the entertainment center. But unless the town finds some legal barriers, the entertainment center probably would be allowed in the building, planning officials have said.

Cummings does not need approval from the Planning and Zoning Commission, Planning Director Mark Pellegrini said. He said they will only need a certificate of compliance with the zoning regulations. Entertainment centers are allowed in a Business III zone.

Route 6 bill might give some temporary 'stay'

By George Layno
Herald Reporter

A bill that would allow homeowners in the path of the proposed Route 6 highway to remain in their homes until the highway receives final approval will be scheduled for a public hearing by the General Assembly, state Rep. Edith G. Prague, D-Columbia, said Friday.

Prague, who introduced the measure, said if the bill is approved, it would prevent the state Department of Transportation from forcing residents from their homes until the highway receives the final environmental permits needed to allow construction.

In addition, the legislation would prevent the DOT from charging residents rent to stay in their homes the first year after the state acquires title, Prague said. After that, the DOT would have to charge lower rents than the "exorbitant" fees they are charging now, she said.
"They (the DOT) have just been riding roughshod over people," Prague said.

A number of homeowners who have either lost their homes or are in the process of having them purchased by the DOT have filed a federal lawsuit seeking to stop the acquisition process. On Wednesday, they appealed their case to the U.S. Supreme Court after the suit was rejected by two lower federal courts.

Prague's bill has been raised by the General Assembly's Transportation Committee, and is currently being drafted into legal language, a committee staff person said Friday. He said it would then be scheduled for a public hearing, but no date has been set yet.

Prague, who supports construction of the 11.8 mile highway that would extend from Bolton Notch to Windham, said she introduced the legislation soon after winning reelection in November. She said she sat down with the DOT to discuss the measure, and is waiting for the department to make a formal response.

DOT Deputy Commissioner William Lazarek said the department is trying to work out a compromise with Prague.

Currently, the DOT allows residents to remain in their homes 90 days after title is taken by the department, he said. Rent, though, is assessed after 30 days. Lazarek said that under the proposed compromise, residents would not have to pay rent for 90 days.

Prague said she did not foresee any legal difficulties with the bill if it is approved, even though federal highway officials have given the DOT the authority to acquire property.

Prague said that she is aware the department must take title to a certain amount of the property in order to retain federal funding for the $170 million project. However, she maintained that the DOT can still have title as long as residents are allowed to remain in their homes.

Corps is in trouble, man says

By Jacqueline Bennett
Herald Correspondent

COVENTRY — The Nathan Hale Fife & Drum Corps is on the verge of collapse, according to Councilman Richard Hines, a member of the corps.

Unless the group can find an affordable practice hall soon, it may disband, Hines told the Town Council earlier this week during an emotional presentation.

"Coventry is Nathan Hale," Hines said during the meeting at the Town Office Building.

Coventry High School is the best spot for the two-and-a-half-hour Sunday practice sessions, he said, but the group can't afford the $4,000 annual fee. In the past, members have tried halls in Manchester and Willimantic, but membership fell off, he said. Members have considered other places in town, but are concerned the noise would bother nearby residents.

Other divisions of the national organization have financial sponsors such as the American Legion or Veterans of Foreign Wars. But that's against the bylaws of the Coventry unit, said Hines. His group, he said, is self-sustaining, supported by performance fees.

"Since we are a town organization and represent Coventry, we could only accept money from the town," Hines said in an interview Tuesday. "Right now we are at the mercy of the town."

John Hetzel, of Carpenter Road, a founder of the organization, said Hines is overreacting.

"Our numbers are a little low but we're not disbanding," Hetzel said Tuesday. He is also reluctant to accept money. "I've always taken satisfaction in knowing we provide a lot without taking money from the taxpayers," he said.

Hines, however, plans to ask for a $2,000 subsidy from the town at the next council meeting.

Council Chairwoman Joan Lewis fears taxpayers won't go for the idea since non-residents participate in the corps.

Councilman Patrick Flaherty, however supports the idea.

"We support other organizations that do a lot less for the town," said Flaherty. He said the group provides a positive learning experience for young people and is good public relations for Coventry.

Formed in 1967, in preparation for the U.S. Bicentennial, the corps numbers about 60, said Hines. Half the membership is from Coventry, he added. The corps' four divisions — artillery, Knowlton's Rangers, music and crafts — have earned a national reputation in performances on the East Coast, Hines said.

He said it is one of the few activities in town for non-athletic youths.

If the group can start practicing by March 1, Hines said it will be ready for the performance season that begins in May. The group is currently turning down engagements, Hines said.

"If we have to disband, it will be a real loss to this town," he said.

Kennedy tallies amount of aid due from state

By George Lavno
Herald Reporter

The town of Manchester would spend $1.9 million more of its own money under the 1987-88 school budget proposed by Superintendent James P. Kennedy than it is spending this year, according to information released by Kennedy Friday.

The revised budget figures, which take into account the amount of money the town will receive from the state for teachers' salaries, show that the town plans to spend $20,161,656 of its own money next year.

The amount of the state money for salaries wasn't known when Kennedy proposed his budget last month. The Board of Education is expected to adopt the spending plan next week.

With the $11,703,382 the town expects to receive from the state in 1987-88, the school budget will total $31,865,038 if Kennedy's proposal is approved unchanged.

Kennedy estimated that for the current fiscal year, the Board of Education's spending will total $28,136,231. Of that, $9,883,546 will come from the state, leaving the town with an estimated cost of $18,252,685, according to Kennedy's figures.

Several factors could affect the amount the town expects to receive and spend next year. For instance, Kennedy said he expects the Board of Education to make some minor changes in the spending plan when it meets Monday.

In addition, many of the state aid figures are based on Democratic Gov. William A. O'Neill's proposed budget. Kennedy noted that last year, the Republican-controlled General Assembly made some changes in the governor's budget, leaving the town with less state money than it had anticipated.

This year, the Legislature is controlled by Democrats.

The town is scheduled to receive $432,498 from the state this year under the Education Enhancement Act, which was passed by the General Assembly last year to boost teachers' salaries and provide more money for education. Kennedy said the money will probably be paid in a lump sum to teachers once it is received in the spring.

In the 1987-88 fiscal year, which begins July 1, the town will receive $67,120 under the Education Enhancement Act. Kennedy said it will be distributed throughout the year in teachers' paychecks.

In another budget matter, Kennedy said he has proposed that $16,000 be appropriated to cover tipping fees that the town charges haulers to dump waste at the town's Olcott Street landfill.

While the town is in effect billing itself by having schools and other town departments pay the tipping fees, Public Works Director George Kandra said Friday it is done because it is impossible to know how much trash the town generates. The tipping fee is $12 per ton.

State Sen. Cynthia Matthews (left), D-Wethersfield, and state Rep. Naomi Cohen, D-Bloomfield, call Friday for a mandatory food-handling course to ensure that food served in Connecticut restaurants is safe to eat. Their proposal followed three salmonella outbreaks in the state.

Legislators want class to teach food handling

HARTFORD (AP) — Two state lawmakers, citing three recent salmonella outbreaks in the state, called Friday for a mandatory food-handling course to ensure that food served in restaurants and other establishments is safe to eat.

Although details must still be worked out, the proposal would probably require at least one person in every food-serving establishment to view a videotape on safe food preparation and perhaps take a test prepared by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N.J., the lawmakers said.

"Obviously we're not satisfied with what's been happening," said state Sen. Cynthia A. Matthews, D-Wethersfield, co-chairwoman of the Public Health Committee. She is co-sponsoring the legislation with Rep. Naomi K. Cohen, D-Bloomfield, co-chairwoman of the Education Committee.

"We will do what needs to be done to assure people they can have peace of mind when they're eating their food out," Matthews said.

Matthews and Cohen said they would like the University of Connecticut to develop the food-handling course in conjunction with the state's 12 community colleges. Matthews said the telecourse would consist of "some simple messages that we all learned in the fourth grade."

"It just seems we all need to be reminded of some very simple facts ... that food has to be handled with care, that it has to be handled with respect," said Matthews, whose family operates a frozen-pie company in East Hartford.

The proposal follows months of notoriety over salmonella infections in Connecticut.

On Monday, the Brown Thompson II restaurant in West Hartford was ordered closed because of salmonella food poisoning. At least 104 restaurant patrons had symptoms of infection, state and local health officials said.

Last week, another strain of salmonella struck the restaurant at the Treadway Hartford Hotel in Cromwell. In November, at least five deaths were linked to salmonella poisoning at the Mountain View Healthcare Center in Windsor.

Salmonella bacteria, found in feces and improperly prepared food, especially meat and eggs, usually causes a headache followed by several days of severe diarrhea. In the very young, the very old and the infirm, the dehydration caused by the unremitting diarrhea can lead to death.

The town of Fairfield has requested since 1975 that at least one employee in every food-serving establishment take 12 to 15 hours of instruction in safe food handling and pass the Educational Testing Service's test, said Arthur Leffert, the town's supervisor of environmental health. The town waives the requirement for people who have gone through formal restaurant training, he said.

"In the beginning there was some opposition," Leffert said. But restaurants accepted the requirements "after they saw how much they saw they could learn."

Food-industry representatives said they could support the lawmakers' proposal.

Ross may face trial in slayings

BRIDGEPORT (AP) — Michael B. Ross is scheduled to appear Monday in Superior Court for a status report on his case and possibly for pretrial motions and the beginning of jury selection, state's attorney Donald Browne confirmed Friday.

The hearing was scheduled before Judge G. Sarafield Ford in Bridgeport Superior Court, where the trial will be held because of pre-trial publicity in New London County.

The hearing was scheduled despite a pending defense motion in U.S. District Court in Hartford. The defense is asking a federal judge to dismiss two capital felony charges among the six lodged against Ross, 28.

The former Jewett City insurance agent is accused in the slayings of four young women and in the rape of three of the women. If convicted of even one capital felony count, Ross could face the death penalty.

"We're ready," Assistant Public Defender M. Fred DeCaprio said Thursday.

DeCaprio said he and co-counsel Peter Scillieri are scheduled to address Ford on the status of the case. He also said that they are prepared to argue pretrial motions and begin jury selection if Ford orders the trial to go forward.

Ford was on the bench in Bridgeport Friday afternoon and could not be reached for comment, his secretary said.

The defense also has filed a motion in U.S. District Court seeking postponement of Ross' Bridgeport trial until after the higher court can rule on whether Ross can be tried in Connecticut for the murders of Griswold teenagers Leslie Shelley and April Brunais, both 14.

That matter has not been scheduled for a hearing, The Day reported.

Ross' attorneys contend that their client cannot be tried here because the crimes were committed in Rhode Island.

Following a hearing in New London Superior Court last summer, Judge Seymour L. Hensel determined that the teenagers were kidnapped in Connecticut and killed in Rhode Island near the Connecticut border.

Their bodies were discovered in a Preston swamp after Ross' arrest in June 1984.

Ross faces two capital felony counts in the Shelley-Brunais murders and two counts each in the 1983 murder of Robin D. Slavinsky, 19, of Columbia and the 1984 killing of Wendy L. Baribeault, 17, of Lisbon.

Connecticut in Brief

Somers inmate hangs himself

SOMERS — A 26-year-old inmate hanged himself with a lamp cord Friday in his cell at Somers state prison, authorities said.

William Betances, formerly of Norwalk, had served nearly two years of a 20-year sentence for felony murder, and was not scheduled to be released until June 2003, said Connie Wilks, a spokeswoman for the State Department of Corrections.

Betances was found at about 8:35 a.m. in his cell in the prison's segregation unit by staff who unsuccessfully attempted to revive him, Wilks said.

State police were conducting an investigation of the incident, and the body was removed to the state chief medical examiner's office for an autopsy, she said.

Fugitive sought for counterfeiting

HARTFORD — A Hartford man wanted as a fugitive was named in a federal grand jury on charges he printed $488,900 in counterfeit $100 bills, the U.S. attorney's office said Friday.

Ellsworth Roston, 43, was charged by a grand jury sitting in New Haven with three counts of making counterfeit money, possession of counterfeit money and possession of plates for making counterfeit money. If convicted on all counts, he could be sentenced to a maximum penalty of 40 years in prison and a $15,000 fine.

Roston has been considered a fugitive since his March 1986 escape from the Federal Correctional Institution in Danbury, where he was serving a sentence on a previous counterfeiting conviction, Twardy said.

Court stays open in murder case

DANBURY — A Superior Court judge ruled Friday that the court room will be open to the public during pre-trial proceedings in the case of Richard Crafts, who is accused of murdering his wife and then putting parts of her body through a wood-chipper.

Crafts' attorney, Thomas Farver of Milford, said media coverage of the proceedings could prejudice the jury.

Danbury State's Attorney Walter Flanagan opposed the motion, saying "the First Amendment rights are more sacred than those ... by the defendant."

Superior Court Judge Patricia A. Geen said there wasn't enough factual evidence presented to warrant closing the court room.

Crafts, 49, a part-time police officer and an Eastern Airlines pilot, is accused of killing his wife, Helle, a 39-year-old flight attendant for Pan American World Airways.

Man charged in contract killing

STAMFORD — Authorities arrested a 45-year-old man on Long Island Friday, charging him with capital felony in connection with the alleged contract killing of a Haitian national.

Herbert Ambrose of Central Islip was arrested at 2 a.m. by Suffolk County police, Stamford police Chief George Mayer said. Police didn't have the suspect's address or other details on the arrest.

Mayer said the search for other suspects in the case continued on Long Island. Police have labeled the case a contract murder, but have not disclosed details.

Police have said the suspects knew the victim, Jean Ricot Cadet, and his wife, Marlene. Cadet was shot at close range in the head and back outside his South End apartment building shortly after midnight on Jan. 30. Cadet was getting in his car on his way to work as a security guard.

Police on Saturday arrested Willie Scraggs, 29, of North Babylon, N.Y., and Ronald Cashwell, 19, of Huntington, N.Y. They were being held at the Bridgeport Correctional Center in lieu of $250,000 bond each, on charges of capital felony murder.

Apartment fire kills woman, 72

HARTFORD — An apartment fire which resulted from careless smoking killed a 72-year-old woman Friday, authorities said.

Leslie Jenkins was killed after the fire broke out on the third floor of the 21-story Percival Smith Towers, a home for seniors, shortly after 10 a.m., said John Vendetta, deputy fire marshal.

The fire, which was quickly extinguished by firefighters, "caused minimal fire damage and heavy smoke damage," Vendetta said.

Attorney general says CRRA made illegal deal to buy dump

HARTFORD (AP) — Connecticut's trash-disposal authority acted illegally last year when it agreed to buy a dump in Waterbury without proper approval from its board of directors, the state attorney general's office said in an opinion issued Friday.

Attorney General Joseph I. Lieberman also criticized the beleaguered Connecticut Resources Recovery Authority for going ahead with the $2.5 million land deal in December without informing local officials of its plans.

Waterbury officials were dismayed to learn from reporters that the CRRA planned to ship bulky waste from 13 Fairfield County towns to the 18.8-acre site, which was already being used as private landfill.

"While the CRRA has powers to supersede local authorities in locating of solid waste facilities, it is clear the legislature did not intend for those powers to be exercised in a secretive manner," Lieberman said in letter to Gov. William A. O'Neill that accompanied the seven-page decision.

"If the CRRA is to accomplish its long-range mission, it must work with municipalities and the public in an open and cooperative fashion," Lieberman wrote. "Such was not the case in the acquisition of the landfill in Waterbury."

Waterbury officials have been seeking an injunction to prevent CRRA from using the site for disposal of demolition material, concrete chunks, tree trunks and similar material from neighboring Fairfield County.

Mayor Joseph Santopietro said Friday he wanted to consult with his legal department before deciding what to do next.

"We'll do whatever we can to eliminate the invasion by the gold coast into Waterbury," Santopietro said.

The attorney general's office found CRRA violated its own regulations and therefore state law in two areas. It also violated "the spirit if not the letter of its own regulations" in not obtaining an appraisal until after a purchase agreement for the Waterbury land was signed.

CRRA's board of directors gave its OK in November for purchase of a site in Waterbury, the attorney general's office said. But the board apparently never specified exactly which site was to be purchased or how much it was willing to pay, both required under CRRA regulations, Lieberman said.

The authority also violated the law by contracting with Waterbury Landfill Associates to continue as operator of the dump without putting the contract out to bid or holding a public hearing, the attorney general's office said.

The authority obtained a land appraisal on Dec. 8, 1986. The appraisal was not technically illegal because it was obtained the day before the authority got title to the land on Dec. 9, 1986.

Elbow room hard to find

HARTFORD (AP) — Elbow room is getting a little harder to find in Connecticut, according to the latest population figures released Friday by the state Department of Health Services.

The state's population increased by an estimated 43,270 in 1986, boosting the state's overall population to 3,241,500, the department reported. The increase translates into a 1.4 percent increase over 1985.

The surge also was the largest in the past 16 years. The annual population increases during most of the 1970s and early 1980s were under 0.5 percent, and the increase in 1985 was 0.9 percent, the department said.

The most populous cities in the state remained Bridgeport, Hartford, New Haven, Stamford and Waterbury. Bridgeport remained the largest city with 143,500 residents, 260 more than in 1985.

Hartford had 135,800, New Haven had 126,490, Stamford had 107,550 and Waterbury followed with 106,160. Stamford had the largest gain among the five big cities, adding 1,440 new residents to its population.

The state now has 86 towns with populations greater than 10,000 and 83 towns with populations less than 10,000. The only change from 1985 was in Stamford, where the population exceeded 10,000 in 1986.

Among the counties, Fairfield County remained the most populous in the state. It's the county where both Stamford and Bridgeport are located. The county had 842,570 residents in 1986. The county's population increased 10,210 over 1985.

Hartford County is the next most populous, gaining 10,480 new residents, to boost the total figure to 838,660. New Haven County had 788,510 residents, 9,450 more than in 1985.

Ragged kids abandoned by parents in devil cult

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Two men arrested after being seen in a park with six children dressed in tatters were held Friday on child abuse charges, and police said the men may be part of an international satanic cult whose members give up their children.

Some of the children told police they hadn't seen their parents since before Christmas. "They evidently have come from such sheltered existences that they had no concept of what a telephone was, or TV or anything like that," Scott Hunt, spokesman for the Tallahassee Police Department, said Thursday.

The children, ages 2 to 6, may have been given up by their parents so the parents could join a satanic cult in Washington, D.C., authorities in Florida said.

Police were alerted Wednesday by anonymous callers concerned because the men were dressed in coats and ties while the children, unwashed and insect-bitten, were playing in tattered clothes at Myers Park, a downtown playground.

Upon questioning after their arrest Wednesday, the men said the children were being "weaned" from their mothers in Washington. They said they were taking the children to Mexico to start a school for brilliant children. They denied any blood relationship with the children and refused to answer other questions.

"We don't know what we've got. All we have is six children and we don't know where they came from," Hunt said.

The oldest child said the children had never been to school. They had been traveling for several days or weeks, she said, although she didn't know where they had been. Also, they hadn't seen their parents since before Christmas.

The girl said when they did eat they were given raw fruit and vegetables.

Police identified the men as Douglas Edward Ammerman, 27, and Michael Houlihan, 28, and said they were believed to be from the Washington area. The two were each charged Thursday with one count of child abuse. They appeared in court Friday and were jailed on $100,000 bail each.

The oldest child and a 2-year-old boy claimed to be brother and sister and said Houlihan was their father. The other children were a 3-year-old girl and three boys, ages 6, 4 and 2, authorities said.

Medical exams showed one child had been sexually abused, Hunt said Friday.

On the basis of evidence found in a van at the park, District of Columbia police executed search warrants Thursday night at a warehouse and a home.

"The search warrant ... revealed that the organization is probably headquarters for some type of satanic cult," said Hunt. "Adults are encouraged to join this group and one of the stipulations of joining this group is that they give up the rights of their children."

Reporters for WMAL-AM radio and television station WRC-TV in Washington, D.C., entered the warehouse Friday afternoon.

IRS moves heaven and earth to fix W-4 form

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service pledged on Friday to try to improve its new W-4 tax-withholding form, acknowledging the document is so confusing it could cause many Americans to doubt that the tax system has been overhauled.

"We are moving heaven and earth to address the problems" with the W-4, IRS Commissioner Lawrence B. Gibbs told congressional panels. "I hope in the next several weeks we will be able to come out with something," especially for lower- and middle-income taxpayers. March 1 is a reasonable target date, he said.

However, Gibbs would not promise flatly to revise the form — or more specifically, the instructions and worksheet designed to make it easier for taxpayers to claim the correct number of withholding allowances. The simpler the W-4 becomes, he said, the greater the chance a taxpayer will have too much or too little withheld from paychecks.

The commissioner did promise to search for a way to avoid imposing penalties on taxpayers who make an honest effort to have the right amount of tax withheld but fall short because of problems with the W-4.

In the meantime, Gibbs recommended:

—Continue filing the new form. Otherwise, the taxpayer runs the risk of being overwithheld (giving the government free use of the money) or underwithheld (perhaps having to pay a penalty a year from now).

—If the federal tax withheld from a worker's paycheck this year is significantly less than was taken from the last check received last year, the employer should be asked to take out at least enough to make up the difference.

Gibbs testified for 90 minutes before the Senate Finance subcommittee that oversees the IRS and then moved to the other side of the Capitol for a session with a House Ways and Means subcommittee. Lawmakers let him know how upset they are about the new W-4.

"A veritable hailstorm of protest" has resulted, said Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Texas, who heads the House subcommittee.

"The W-4 form ... has started a prairie fire across America that is leading to a taxpayer's revolt," said Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., chairman of the Senate panel. He reminded Gibbs of the biblical story of Zacchaeus, the despised tax collector who later repented and became a disciple of Jesus.

"Mr. Commissioner, today we want you to repent ... We want to offer you the opportunity for salvation," Pryor said.

While not repenting, Gibbs did acknowledge that the confusion about the W-4 works against the goal of having taxpayers adjust their withholding to reflect major changes brought about by the 1986 tax-overhaul law.

Hundreds mourn Liberace as AIDS search goes on

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Hundreds mourned Liberace at a solemn memorial service Friday and President Reagan sent a telegram, while a coroner questioning the pianist's reported cause of death examined his body for signs of AIDS.

Liberace's body was taken to the Riverside County coroner's office on the order of Coroner Raymond Carrillo, who wanted to know if AIDS was involved in the entertainer's death.

Dr. Ronald Daniels, Liberace's personal physician, had reported the cause of death as cardiac arrest due to congestive heart failure brought on by subacute encephalopathy, an inflammation of the brain.

But Carrillo said, "This is a case that should have been reported to the coroner's office." Spokesmen for Liberace repeatedly have denied published reports he had AIDS. He died Wednesday at the age of 67.

"It is so sad that the entertainer ..."

er's publicist Denise Collier said from New York when she learned of the coroner's move. The squabble overshadowed the late morning service at Our Lady of Solitude Roman Catholic Church, less than a block from Liberace's home.

The crowd of about 250 mourners inside the church included stars Kirk Douglas, Isabel Sanford and Charlene Tilton. Another 200 people stood outside during the service.

Reagan in his telegram called Liberace "the ultimate entertainer."

"Nancy and I send our heartfelt condolences on Liberace's death. We pray that our lord will bless with his peace and comfort," Reagan said.

"Lee was a gifted musician, a man who truly earned the title 'superstar' and a caring individual who time and again responded generously when called upon to benefit those in need," Reagan said.

Freed reporter denies spying

ZURICH, Switzerland — American reporter Gerald F. Seib, freed from captivity in Iran, hugged his wife in a joyful birthday celebration Friday and denied Iranian charges that he spied while there on an official press tour.

"I am thrilled and thankful to be here," he said. "This happens to be my 31st birthday. And just being here is the best birthday present possible."

He said he was not physically harmed during several days of custody in Iran. Seib, who reports for the Wall Street Journal from his base in Cairo, had gone there with 56 other foreign journalists invited by the government to visit battle areas of the 6½-year-old war with Iraq.

Ad firm worked with Col. North

WASHINGTON — The State Department awarded a secret $276,186 contract last year to a public relations firm which, sources say, worked with then-White House aide Oliver L. North to rally support for giving military aid to Nicaragua's contra rebels.

The firm, International Business Communications Inc., hosted meetings to plan a $1 million pro-contra ad campaign and acted as "a reference library" for those making the ads, said Adam Goodman, spokesman for the Robert Goodman ad agency which produced the television spots.

The contract has raised questions about whether the payments might breach a 1948 law that prohibits spending federal money "directly or indirectly" to influence votes by Congress, except when administration officials provide information "through proper official channels."

Americans afraid of reprisals

BOGOTA, Colombia — Americans kept their children home from school, canceled parties and hired bodyguards Friday in fear of reprisals because of the extradition of an alleged drug kingpin to the United States for trial.

Some U.S. citizens, citing smugglers' threats to kill five Americans for every Colombian extradited, told The Associated Press they were sending their families out of the country.

Fighting heavy in Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Waves of Soviet and Afghan air force jets blasted guerrilla positions for a third day Friday in eastern Afghanistan, as thousands of troops massed nearby, guerrilla officials said.

They said all the fighting was concentrated in Paktia province, where artillery bombardments killed 29 of the Islamic, anti-Communist guerrillas.

Guerrilla representatives and other sources in Pakistan said Soviet and Afghan MIG and Su fighter-bombers, flying in waves of 12 jets at a time, were dropping 800-pound bombs on guerrilla emplacements.

The offensive began this week and is the first major military action by Soviet forces since the Afghan government declared a unilateral cease-fire on Jan. 15. Guerrilla leaders rejected the cease-fire as a trick.

Court says workers neglected

WASHINGTON — A federal appeals court on Friday ordered the Reagan administration to end a 14-year legal wrangle by issuing rules guaranteeing drinking water and toilets to farm workers in the field.

Citing a "disgraceful chapter of legal neglect," the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found that Labor Secretary William E. Brock abused his discretion in October 1985 when he delayed the issuance of federal rules for two years with the hope that state regulators would step in to protect farm workers' health.

Quadriplegic dies during fast

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. — Quadriplegic Hector Rodas, who didn't want to live because he could not speak, swallow or move, died Friday in the 18th day of a fast he began after a judge granted him the right to die.

Rodas, 34, almost completely paralyzed from drug abuse, died at Hilltop Rehabilitation Hospital at 3:25 a.m. from starvation, his doctor and a spokeswoman said.

Bob Nozik, 52, shouts "Have a nice day" to his neighbors in San Francisco Friday. Nozik, who's starting a support group for happy people, says the secret is knowing that someone loves you.

Chipper chap seeks chums

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Bob Nozik always has a nice day.

He wakes up smiling, and when people ask "How are you?" he always answers, "Great!" He radiates positive thoughts.

And it drives his friends nuts.

"When I talk to people and I'm being happy and cheerful as usual, I get weirdness back," he said. "It would be nice once in a while to get together with people who are as happy as I am and just not hold back being the way I am."

With that cheery thought, Nozik is starting a support group for happy people.

"You never see or read anything about people who are just happy," he said. "Everything I see is about people having problems. Maybe if we can get a group like this together, we can find out what it is in their backgrounds that is a common thread."

Two weeks ago, the 52-year-old ophthalmologist placed a newspaper advertisement seeking other "joyful, happy people."

Six cheerful people called. On Friday, the San Francisco Chronicle carried an article about his plans and the phone began ringing off the wall.

"The people I've talked to seem quite legitimate and reasonable," he said. "The plan is to call everybody back at the end of the month and arrange a get-together. If that goes well, then I'll see if people want to sign up and have an actual group."

Nozik is no stranger to group discussions. For years, he attended weekly encounter group sessions that helped him discover the happiness that bubbled inside him.

It all began in 1972. Nozik and his first wife began counseling in an attempt to save their marriage of 14 years.

"That part of it ended in divorce," he said, "but I was learning so much about myself that I kept going."

He dabbled in a range of the self-exploration fads that gripped California at the time, attending weekend seminars aimed at putting participants in touch with their feelings.

Newport News gets sub order, EB is shut out

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. (AP) — The Navy awarded Newport News Shipbuilding a $1.03 billion contract to build all four nuclear attack submarines authorized by Congress in the fiscal 1987 budget Friday, shutting out its chief rival, Electric Boat shipyard in Groton, Conn.

The award, announced by U.S. Sen. John W. Warner, comes nearly three months after Newport News Shipbuilding laid off 1,250 employees because of a lag in work.

"This runs into billions of dollars over several years. The economic impact of this major award spreads through the Tidewater area," Warner said by telephone from Washington, D.C.

Congress approved $2.3 billion for the construction of the four submarines, but the contract to the shipyard is less than that because some of the money goes to the Navy to equip the vessels.

Last year, General Dynamics Corp.'s Electric Boat Division received a $1.03 billion contract to build all four attack submarines authorized by Congress in fiscal 1986.

Newport News shipyard, the largest private employer in Virginia, won the contract this year primarily because it submitted the lowest bid, the Navy said.

"While this procurement included consideration of the industrial base and would have permitted awards of one or more of the four ships to the General Dynamics Corp., Electric Boat Division, this would have cost at least an additional $57 million," the Navy said in a statement.

U.S. Rep. John Rowland, R-Conn., a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said he would meet with Electric Boat officials on Monday to discuss the possibility of challenging the award.

"I want to take a close look at this year's bids to make sure the process was conducted fairly," said U.S. Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn.

"Given the tremendous success of last year, when Electric Boat won contracts for a Trident as well as all four 688-class attack subs, today's award should be kept in perspective," he said. "Electric Boat is already working on 15 ships with another Trident contract expected soon and I'm confident this award will not affect employment levels at Electric Boat."

The Navy said the four submarine contracts awarded to Newport News should be completed by November 1991.

Rep. Herbert H. Bateman, R-Ist., who represents the Newport News area, said the local yard's improvement of its submarine production facilities helped it win the contract this year.

"It is a drastic turnaround from last year," he said. "The shipyard's investment in new, upgraded submarine production capabilities is having its impact."

Francis McDonald, a spokesman for the Newport News yard, said he did not know whether laid-off employees would be recalled because of the new contract.

"We haven't got all the details on the contract," he said. "We're just happy that we received it."

In November, the shipyard laid off 1,250 hourly and salaried workers because of a declining backlog in Navy contracts. About 4.5 percent of the yard's 28,500 workers lost their jobs.

The layoff was the yard's first since 1978, when 3,000 people were dismissed.

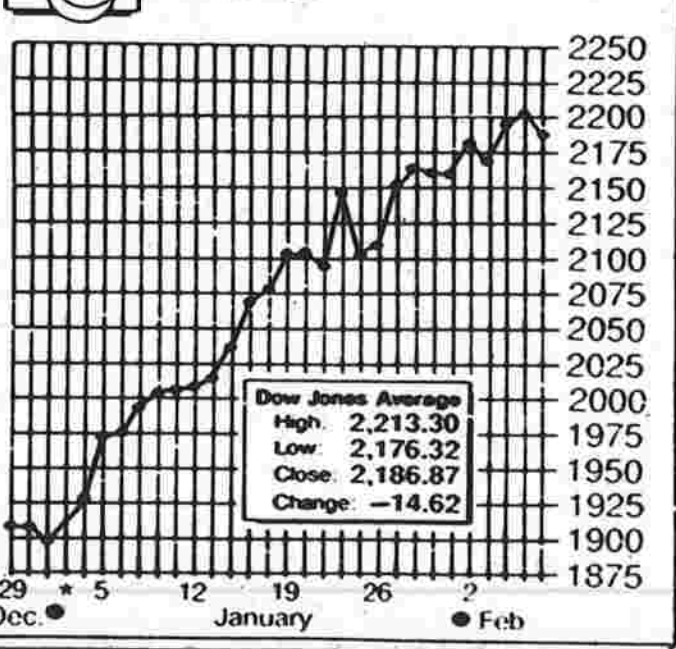

Jim Buckley, subdistrict director for the United Steelworkers, which represents blue-collar workers at the yard, said he did not know what impact the contract would have on employment.

"My immediate reaction is that it's good news," he said.

The yard's workload slowed with the completion of the nuclear submarine Chicago and the aircraft carrier Theodore Roosevelt last fall and the loss of bids on submarine overhauls and a new class of amphibious ships, shipyard President Edward J. Campbell said in November.

MARKET REPORT

Activity over the past 30 trading days

Bulls show the way

NEW YORK (AP) — In the dazzling display it has put on since the start of the year, Wall Street's bull market has left at least one question unanswered: How much is too much?

To date the record-breaking advance in stock prices has rewarded its true believers, while dealing unkindly indeed with any skeptic who doubted its staying power.

No wonder, then, that the market has gained a lot of new converts lately. "Success breeds success," said Eldon Grimm, a veteran analyst at Birr Wilson Securities Inc.

Sooner or later, though, it may also breed excess. At least that's the view of a few enthusiastic bulls who have lately tempered their optimism about the market outlook.

"The evidence now suggests to me that the ongoing bull market is about to enter a correction, consolidation stage which could last anywhere from several weeks to several months," contends Charles LaLoggia, a Rochester, N.Y., investment adviser in the latest edition of his market letter.

"I am not talking an end to the bull market. What I am talking about is a pause in the bull market which could take the form of some unnering selloffs and/or some backing and filling."

John Connolly at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. advised early this month that investors take "a somewhat more cautious approach. Although we do not consider the stock market overvalued, the recent sharp rise has realized some of potential appreciation, and that must be considered."

Jobless rate remains low

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fewer than normal post-holiday job cutbacks and unusually high winter construction activity kept the nation's seasonally adjusted civilian unemployment rate at 6.7 percent in January, the government said Friday.

Including adjustments to reflect normal trends — job growth before and during the Christmas holidays and a decline when the heavy shopping season ends — the economy created 375,000 new jobs last month, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' household survey.

Payroll growth as measured by a separate government survey of businesses and local governments, was even stronger, with 450,000 new jobs on an adjusted basis.

That growth mirrored an increase of 450,000 people in the U.S. labor force last month in the main survey, of households. In December, the labor force had dropped by 90,000 and the jobless rate fell 0.2 percent point from November's 6.9 percent.

Meanwhile, the seasonally adjusted number of unemployed workers rose from 7,949,500 in December — the lowest it had been since July 1981 — to 8,023,000 in January.

At the White House, spokesman Martin Fitzwater said two consecutive months with a civilian unemployment rate of 6.7 percent — the lowest it has been since March 1980 — and continuing job growth mean "one thing — a growing economy."

While some private economists supported that view, others called the January figures a statistical aberration because of the seasonal adjustments.

Gordon Richards of the National Association of Manufacturers called the figures "fictitious," saying inadequate seasonal adjustment procedures raise questions about the December numbers as well.

"The only reason that job losses were less than expected (in January) was because fewer workers were hired in December," he said.

Business in Brief

Insurance company bans smoking

HARTFORD — Smoking on the job will come to an end July 1 at the corporate offices of The Hartford Insurance Group, the company announced Friday.

The policy will affect 21,800 employees in Connecticut and at 285 offices across the nation.

The policy bans smoking in common work areas and areas near work stations, including corridors, reception areas and stairways. The policy continues the prohibition of smoking in conference rooms, elevators, classrooms and other confined areas.

The policy permits smoking in designated areas. "It's our intention to encourage wellness and productivity of our employees," said Jerome E. Bartow, The Hartford's vice president and director of administration.

Westport radio station sold

WESTPORT — Westport Broadcasting, owner and operator of radio station WMMM in Westport, has been sold to a former co-owner of Stamford's two radio stations.

Robert A. Graham and his son, Mark S. Graham, have purchased the Westport station for an undisclosed price. The two Westport residents have formed a new operating company, called Minuteman Broadcasting, and will retain the Westport station's call letters.

Graham previously co-owned Stamford's WSTC-AM and WYRS-FM.

First Federal plans conversion

EAST HARTFORD — George E. Stewart, president of First Federal Savings & Loan Association of East Hartford, has announced that its board of directors has adopted a proposed plan to convert the association from a federally insured mutual savings and loan association to a federally insured capital stock association.

In conjunction with the conversion, the association will issue and offer common stock to eligible account holders, other depositors and borrowers, members of the community, and members of the general public.

The conversion, which requires approval by the members of the association, in addition to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, will not interrupt the normal business of the association in accepting deposits and making loans.

After all regulatory approvals of the proposed plan of conversion have been obtained, the association will send a proxy statement to its members in connection with the meeting to vote on the plan of conversion.

IRS has toll-free number for help

The Internal Revenue Service, in an effort to publicize its free services, has announced a toll-free number taxpayers can call to obtain information.

Taxpayers wanting information about their closest Volunteer Income Tax Assistance, Tax Counseling for the Elderly or Community Outreach site should call 1-800-572-9045. Lines will be open through April 15. The advantage of this hotline number is its ability to bypass the busy technical information phone number (1-800-424-1040) and provide taxpayers with ready access to these important community programs, the IRS said.

Summit Hotel promotes Conran

HARTFORD — Thomas W. Conran has been promoted to director of sales and marketing for the Summit Hotel, General Manager Michael Burke announced.

Conran is responsible for national, regional and local sales and marketing, including prospecting, special programs and promotions, as well as directing the hotel's catering operations. In his new position he will additionally oversee advertising and public relations programs.

Conran joined the hotel in 1978 as a sales manager. He left in 1982 to pursue an opportunity as an independent meeting planner, and returned in 1985 as a senior sales manager. In April 1986, he was named director of sales.

Earlier in his career he was a physical education director at St. James School in Manchester, and he worked as sales manager for the Hartford Holiday Inn.

Don't try to beat the market with a bond index mutual fund

QUESTION: I have been investing in a bond mutual fund, which I like very much. However, my broker suggests that, instead of adding to my investment in this fund, I invest in a bond index mutual fund and a bond index

Investors' Guide

William A. Doyle

ANSWER: Let's start by pointing out that both types of mutual funds use the money you and other investors pay in to buy bonds. The bonds each fund holds then become its investment portfolio.

Most bond mutual funds have "managed portfolio." That means, from time to time, fund management will sell some bonds and buy others — in an attempt to do better than the bond market in general.

A bond index mutual fund does not try to "beat the market." Instead, it aims to do just as well as the market by replicating some recognized measurement of bond market performance, such as the Salomon Brothers Broad Investment-Grade Bond Index.

A bond index mutual fund seldom changes the investments it holds. As new money comes in, the fund simply increases its holdings in its established list of bonds.

Although pension funds, insurance companies and other big institutional investors have used bond index funds for years, that type of fund became available to individuals only recently.

They are really a takeoff on stock index mutual funds, which attempt to match the investment performance of the overall stock market.

ANSWER: The exact procedure for redeeming a mutual fund's shares, which can vary a bit from one fund to another, is spelled out in each fund's prospectus. The prospectus is updated annually and mailed to shareholders. If you didn't save your copy of the prospectus, get one from the fund.

The statements the fund mailed to your husband are proof of ownership. It's most unlikely you have come up with proof of the original purchase.

With those statements, the death certificate and evidence that you are your husband's heir, there should be no problem redeeming the fund shares. I suspect your lawyer is making much to do about virtually nothing and is running up the size of his bill.

Place a call to the fund's toll-free 800 number, yourself. You should be able to square things away in short order.

QUESTION: What are "REITs" and where can a small investor get detailed information about them?

ANSWER: REIT stands for real estate investment trust, which is sort of like a mutual fund investing in real estate. However, unlike mutual funds, REITs do not stand ready to redeem their shares. Nor do they continuously offer new shares for sale.

REITs are closed-end investment companies. Their shares are traded in the open market — some on stock exchanges, some in the over-the-counter market.

As a rough rule of thumb, there are two basic types of REITs — those concentrating on owning property and those concentrating on lending. But some do both.

Congressmen out of touch

Members of the U.S. House of Representatives demonstrated this week that they are terribly out of touch with both the standard of living and the intelligence of most of their constituents.

By allowing a Tuesday deadline for rejecting a congressional pay raise to pass, House members effectively gave themselves and their counterparts in the Senate $12,100-a-year raises — at least for the time being. Opponents of the raise have said they will try to have it repealed or challenge it in court if necessary.

The raises were recommended by President Reagan last month after a special commission had suggested even higher pay hikes for the nation's lawmakers, who made $77,400 a year before this week's increase.

The Senate last week rejected the pay raise, leaving the politically sensitive issue to the House to decide.

While some House members denounced the raise as unnecessary, a number of others complained that their paychecks were too small and criticized the Senate for forcing them to make what would surely be an unpopular decision with their constituents.

In a poor attempt at political deception, the House tried to have it both ways, missing the deadline so the raise went into effect, but casting a vote against the raise the following day. Most agree the vote was meaningless because the deadline for rejecting the raise had lapsed.

The ultimate fate of the raise might eventually have to be decided by the courts — a situation that should not have even become a possibility.

At a time when poor and elderly people are having to do with less than ever before and when even the average family is having a hard time making ends meet, it is ludicrous for those in Congress to suggest they simply cannot make it on a $77,400 a year. If that is the case, then lawmakers had better take a hard look at their lifestyles and adjust them accordingly, as all but the most wealthy Americans must do.

Not many people have the luxury of being able to give themselves raises. But if they did, most would probably have better sense than to dip their hands into the cookie jar one day and preach about the evils of gluttony the next.

Return to reality

After submitting an overly optimistic report on the state of Manchester to the Board of Directors in December, Town Manager Robert Weiss appears to have returned to reality.

In a verbal report to the board this week, Weiss described a number of problems the town faces, including a lack of office space for town departments, deteriorating sidewalks, a shortage of affordable housing for the elderly, and drug abuse.

The problems cited by Weiss are all valid and require attention if they are to be prevented from reaching crisis proportions.

With a strong commitment on the part of both town officials and residents, Weiss just might be able to list the same problems among the town's accomplishments when it is time for him to report on the town's condition to the board again in two years.

Business the old-fashioned way

Dollar down, dollar a week

By Joe Duffy

I think of these old fellows — commercial pioneers really — with the onset of winter clearances and the coming Lincoln-Washington birthday sales. I mean that ubiquitous gentleman of yesteryear, "the dollar-down, dollar-a-week" man. They operated out of the trunks of their beat-up cars with the back seats also piled to the hilt with merchandise. Their offices were in their deep-pocketed overcoats, often matched by a floppy hat. These might also carry slips of paper on the inside during the busy winter season.

Door-to-door peddlers, I guess, was their official designation. But actually, they were the architects of the credit economy long before all that fancy bank plastic we now crowd into the modern wallet. Short on fashion, perhaps, they were long on service and very good at remembering names, orders to specification, dates of delivery, and exact amounts.

My mother did business with several hardy dollar-a-week men at a time. They got our name and needs through the friendly neighborhood grapevine. Their arrival on our doorstep was not the unwelcome intrusion of a computer call or a print-out sales pitch labeled "occupant." With artful flourish, they'd lay out their wares, from sheets, pillow cases, dresses, work pants, aprons, and handkerchiefs to, yes, that old-time buy of buys — absolutely indestructible underwear! "Sum ting nice here, Mrs. ...." I can still hear them saying with accents that rang with sincerity.

No one ever got cheated, as I recall. If something did break or get torn prematurely, their next-trip response was unvarying. "Don't worry 'bout, they'd assure with a hand outstretched. "I make it up to you next time!" And they always came back. It was all done without sales slips or warranties. They sold peace-of-mind purchases the old-fashioned way, as the saying goes — on their words.

The 19th century corporate mogul J.P. Morgan, who allegedly could seal a deal on his promise alone, had nothing on these immigrant merchants who never heard his name. Their customers became their friends. Better, still, they made people-to-people transactions their ethos, another term they probably never heard. But they cared.

And these guys always had time to talk to mom, dad and me. Oh, the colorful stories from these keen observers of human nature. Like Meredith Wilson's shrewd "Music Man," they certainly "knew the territory!" What we all meant to each other back then, I now realize, went far beyond business. They could wear their hearts on both sleeves though they, too, had to fight for their mobile survival in an economy that always seemed to be pinching little people. Once I think I recall one of our weekly regulars shedding a tear when he learned of my grandfather's death. "Nice man, Mister, nice man!" I think he said with eyes open wide at the news.

Most of the walking warehouses have vanished from the major cities. But these dry-goods dinosaurs made their mark on me, and I suspect on the right way to conduct business, if we care to remember. In my business as a high school career counselor, I frequently listen to my starchy-eyed seniors speak of studying "entrepreneurship," the current rage at many major university schools of business. I want to tell these kids about some guys that wrote the entrepreneurial book once upon a time, but who'd believe my stories? Buy a ton of stuff for a dollar down, a dollar a week! And no bill of sale except a little lined pad tucked inside somebody's big woolen overcoat. You gotta be kidding!

EPA had to ban EDB despite pressure

WASHINGTON — Sometimes a scandal we first exposed is finally resolved to the public's benefit. Naturally, this is a source of immense satisfaction; it is solid evidence that our continuing efforts to keep the powerful honest are worthwhile. Here's one such story:

A federal court recently handed down a little-publicized decision that prohibits further imports of fruit treated with the cancer-causing pesticide EDB. The Environmental Protection Agency had declared that the chemical presented an "extremely high" risk of cancer and banned its use by U.S. farmers in 1984.

But the EPA then granted an extension for Caribbean mango growers who used EDB — an extension that would have lasted through at least this year's harvest if the court hadn't stepped in. The judge said the EPA's decision was "inexplicable and ... stands condemned as arbitrary and capricious." The agency was ordered either to rescind the extension or prove the EDB is safe.

As we reported last year, the real scandal was that EPA bureaucrats' decision to allow EDB-treated mangoes into the country smelled suspiciously like politically motivated interference. Our associate Corky Johnson got hold of internal government documents that identified the source of this political pressure: the State Department, which was afraid the EDB ban would harm the economies of Mexico, Haiti and Belize by cutting off their $20 million-a-year mango exports to the United States. Essentially, Foggy Bottom was willing to risk cancer among U.S. mango fanciers to protect three friendly nations' agribusinesses.

"These countries are of great strategic interest to the U.S.," Deputy Secretary of State John C. Whitehead wrote to EPA Administrator Lee Thomas. "Our interests in Mexico are enormous. ... We also have major strategic and economic interests in the Caribbean Basin."

Belize was depicted as a particularly serious victim of an EDB ban, which would "significantly harm the delicate economy" of the tiny Caribbean country, the State Department warned.

The pressure was too much for EPA; the agency caved in and granted an extension on the import of EDB-treated mangoes.

It was an astounding sellout. EPA scientists had been studying EDB for years and determined that the risk of cancer from its continued use was unacceptable. In fact, just 3 months before the extension was granted, an internal EPA memo stated:

"Since the risks for U.S. consumers of treated mangoes are not changed from EPA's 1984 estimates, which found one year of further exposure to be the limit of acceptable continued exposure, the agency feels that additional exposure to EDB in the diet is not in the public interest."

Publicly, the EPA found a silver lining in the extension: It would give scientists time to develop an alternative pesticide for mango growers. Privately, though, an EPA memo admitted that there was "no assurance that, given two more years of EDB use, acceptable alternatives would be fully available."

Until we disclosed the contents of this memo, EPA had tried to withhold it from the public — an action the federal court said was illegal. As for the ban itself, the judge said it was EPA's job to protect the public's health, not to worry about "foreign economic harm."

Jay Feldman of the National Coalition Against the Misuse of Pesticides, which was a participant in the lawsuit against EPA, praised our disclosure of important information the government had tried to keep secret. "The story was critical to uncovering the illegal behavior of the government," he said.

A prime choice

After more than 80 years of doing business at the same old stand, the Agriculture Department may decide to change federal meat inspection in ways that will save the taxpayers money and lessen the chances that consumers get tainted meat. Under a pilot program beginning soon, teams of meat inspectors will descend on packing plants without prior warning, temporarily replacing the resident inspectors who work full time at a single plant.

Agriculture's inspector general believes the new plan will save money and offer better protection, explaining that the regular plant inspectors don't always detect dangerous residues in meat and poultry. The residues, mostly antibiotics used to promote growth, can cause illness or even death when ingested in high quantities.

One reason these dangerous residues slip by is the cozy relationship that sometimes develops between full-time plant inspectors and the packing plant managers they're supposed to be keeping an eye on.

If the surprise visits — at plants chosen by computer — prove successful, the program will be expanded nationwide in 1988, according to Nancy Robinson of the Food Safety and Inspection Service. The money saved could be spent on more sophisticated methods of meat inspection; as the inspector general noted, the methodology has changed little since federal inspection began in 1906.

Brit in space?

This could be put in the Nice Try Department. The Soviets have been quietly hinting that they'd be agreeable to sending the first Briton into space on a Soviet rocket in the next couple of years. They mentioned this to some members of Parliament who visited the Soviet space center recently. There's a hitch, though: The Soviets hinted that it would be a nice return gesture if the Brits would leave NATO and kick American bases out of this country — a pretty high price to pay for a space ride.

Reagan's 'State of Confusion'

By Chuck Stone

I went to New York City the day after President Reagan's State of the Union message to visit my aspiring actress daughter, Krishna. She's really good, but still hasn't broken through the iron curtain for black actresses. After lunch, I visited my friend in Harlem, Booker Leroy Jackson. He had written another prayer to God. I can't resist sharing it:

"Yo, God:
"Just checkin' in.
"This is me again, Booker Leroy Jackson, your main man.

"I know you be havin' a lot of names to remember with folks everywhere hollerin' at you, so I'll hip you to my name one more time — it's a Booker like in Washington, Leroy like in Jones, and Jackson like in Jesse.

"Lord, the last time we hooked up, I got a feelin' that you was goin' straighten out some of this mess, but you ain't done right by us cuz we still catchin' hell from President Reagan.

"Did you hear his sorry State of the Union address?
"My friend, Malcolm (He's a numbers runner, lives in the apartment above me), said it was a State of Confusion address.

"The president turned me off when he be sayin' he regret Iran.

"I'm like everybody else in the country, God, I ain't into no Iran. And I don't be carin' about who stole all that money in the White House to buy back them hostages.

"Only one who care about all that mess is the newspaper, the television and the politicians.

"If President Reagan want to regret somethin', why don't he regret Forsythe Country in Georgia or Howard Beach in New York or the Citadel in South Carolina?

"All over the country, we got white people kickin' black tail and takin' names, baby, and what's our jive-talking president doin' 'bout it?
"Nary a thing.

"He more worried about makin' peace with Iranians than helpin' black and white Americans makin' pece with themselves.

"He only regret Iran cuz it didn't work.

"That's like some dude be robbin' your house and accidentally burn it down and then the brother says, 'Hey, man, I didn't mean to fry your house. I regret that.' (I didn't mean for you to think, Lord, that President Reagan is my brother, cuz he ain't. He's the Ku Klux Klan's brother.)

"And he act like he's Big Brother for Central America.

"Lord, he ought to leave them folks alone. Let them fight their own battles.

"Instead of sellin' wolf tickets 'bout Central America, President Rambo ought to be layin' some bread on Central Avenue in Los Angeles where a lot of poor, black folks live.
"But he stuck his chest out on TV and say how they be more jobs than any time in seven years and everything spoze to be sassy as a lassie.

"Lord, that ain't how it be goin' down.

"Some big organization put out a report about how things done got worse and worse for bloods.

"I'm not too cool on numbers, Lord, except when I play 'em (and I do hit sometimes), but in the last 10 years the number of poor whites went down by 18 percent, but the number of poor blacks went up 18 percent.

"Ain't that nothin'? President Reagan is makin' white folks richer, black folks poorer and everybody happier.

"Folks dig Ronald Reagan, Lord — I don't care what them polls say.

"All the dude gotta do is grin, blush, wiggle his ears, act dumb and everybody freaks out.

"I'm goin' call my man Jesse Jackson, and hip him — if he want to be president, he got to act dumb like Ronald Reagan.

"Jesse can't blush. Bue he can learn to wiggle his ears.

"OK, Lord? Gotta split.

"And if you hear from Pat Robertson, tell him Booker Leroy Jackson wants to know how come he couldn't pray you into shipping some of this snow to Florida.

"Amen."

Thoughts

Sometimes it takes a poet rather than a politician to solve social problems that arise from people's attitudes toward other people. Edwin Markham calls his solution: "Outwitted."

He drew a circle that shut me out —
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout,
But Love and I had the wit to win;
We drew a circle that took him in!

Let's have bigger circles of friendship in America and fewer ghettos of either white or ethnic minority groups. "E pluribus unum" — One out of many, the official motto of the U.S.A. — is on every coin in your pocket. May its spirit be in your heart as well.

Rev. H. Osgeod Bennett
Minister of Visitation
North United Methodist Church

Weddings and Engagements

Mrs. Jeffrey J. Pracella

Pracella-Robinson

Karen Louise Robinson, daughter of Donald and Anna Robinson of Hebron, and Dr. Jeffrey Joseph Pracella, son of Gerda Lima and Patrick Pracella of Pleasantville, N.Y., were married recently at First Congregational Church of Hebron.

The Rev. George Milne officiated. Cynthia Bove, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Jean Lapp, Lori Proulx, Mary Catherine Bove, Beth Wallace, Lisa Langella and Jackie Bowman.

Robert Schoenfeld was best man. Ushers were David Lima, brother of the groom, Lawrence Robinson, brother of the bride, Joseph Bove, Mike Fitzgerald, Ray Langella and Rick Bowman. After a reception at Chestnut Lodge in Colchester, the couple left on a cruise to the Caribbean.

The bride is finishing studies at the National College of Chiropractic in Chicago, Ill.

The bridegroom has completed studies at the National College of Chiropractic and is an instructor of anatomy at this college. The couple will live in Pleasantville, N.Y., following the bride's graduation.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Dean

Dean-Wright

Lynne Marie Wright of Johnston, R.I., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Wright of 25 Brent Road, and William Stephen Dean, son of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Dean of Chepachet, R.I., were married recently at St. Eugene's Church in Chepachet.

The Rev. Paul Archambeau officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her father.

Karen Wright, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Kathleen Daly Susan Aguiar and Sandra LaBreck. Ellen Morey was flower girl.

Philip Cerrone was best man. Ushers were Daniel Enright, James White, Tim Reiner. Ringbearers were Edward Maroney, Christopher Maroney and Michael Morey.

After a reception at Wright's Farm Restaurant, the couple went on a wedding trip to Acapulco, Mexico. They are making their home in Johnston, R.I.

The bride is a graduate of Manchester High School and Bryant College. She is employed by Rhode Island Hospital and Trust National Bank.

The bridegroom is a graduate of Mount St. Charles School and Bryant College. He is employed by Philip Machine Co. Inc.

Ambach-McNamara

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ambach of 43 Cornwall Drive announce the engagement of their daughter, Susan Elizabeth Ambach, to Mark Edward McNamara, son of Leo McNamara of 35 Main St. and Pat McNamara of Manchester.

The bride-elect is a graduate of Manchester High School and is attending Manchester Community College. She is employed by the Hartford Insurance Group.

The prospective bridegroom attended Manchester High School and served four years in the U.S. Marine Corps. He is employed by the State of Connecticut. A March 28 wedding is planned at St. Bridget Church.

Susan E. Ambach

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond G. Taylor

Taylor-Taylor

Kathleen Marie Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Taylor of 3589 South St., Coventry, and Raymond Goodwin Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alton Taylor of 9 Silver St., Coventry, were married recently at Storrs Congregational Church.

The Rev. Bruce Johnson of the First Congregational Church of Coventry, officiated at the double-ring candlelight ceremony.

"In our family, it's an honor," said Henry Cerise as he looked proudly at his 245-pound namesake.

Bill said he named Henry after his father because it was the strongest of his pigs.

But it wasn't Henry who took honors Thursday in the St. Tammany Parish Livestock Show. Charles, named for Bill's grandfather, and Tilly, named for his aunt, won purple ribbons — top honors — in the medium-weight class.

That means Bill will be taking them to the district show. Last year, his first raising hogs, he had the reserve grand champion in the parish show and fifth in the state.

Self-esteemers bloom in Calif.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Hundreds of Californians are showing they have the self-esteem it takes to apply for one of the state's newest task forces: a panel whose job it will be to promote self-esteem.

"It's blooming," said Assemblyman John Vasconcellos who introduced the bill to create the California Task Force to Promote Self-Esteem, Personal and Social Responsibility three years ago. "There is an infectious, contagious something that is happening that people are expressing themselves on."

As the snickers about the committee fade, hundreds of applications have been received from people who want to serve on the 25-member panel, he said. The job is unpaid but the panel will have an annual budget of $245,000.

Gov. George Deukmejian already has made nine appointments.

Low self-esteem is a factor in such problems as drug abuse and teen-age pregnancy, the bill's supporters say. "I took a lot of flak on this bill," said Assemblyman Gerald Felando, head of the Assembly's GOP Caucus. "There are still a lot of people snickering. They kept saying it's another one of Vasco's wacky ideas. It has been a long, hard pull. But this is a good bill, and it will work."

Porcine honor a family affair

COVINGTON, La. (AP) — Twelve-year-old Bill Cerise named one of the hogs he raises for his father, but Dad's not complaining.

"In our family, it's an honor," said Henry Cerise as he looked proudly at his 245-pound namesake.

Bill said he named Henry after his father because it was the strongest of his pigs.

But it wasn't Henry who took honors Thursday in the St. Tammany Parish Livestock Show. Charles, named for Bill's grandfather, and Tilly, named for his aunt, won purple ribbons — top honors — in the medium-weight class.

That means Bill will be taking them to the district show. Last year, his first raising hogs, he had the reserve grand champion in the parish show and fifth in the state.

Ferlazo-Dusza

Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Ferlazo of 13 Durkin St. announce the engagement of their daughter, Lori Ferlazo, to Robert J. Dusza Jr. of Manchester, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Dusza of Southbridge, Mass.

The bride-elect is a graduate of Manchester High School and received a B.S. degree in business management from the University of Connecticut. She is employed as a senior analyst with Aetna Life & Casualty.

The prospective bridegroom is a graduate of Southbridge High School and received a B.S. degree from the University of New England, Biddeford, Maine and an M.S. degree in environmental science and technology from the Hartford Graduate Center. He is employed by the Town of Manchester as sewer operations manager.

A spring wedding is planned.

DON'T SHAKE BABY!

Sometimes anxious mothers shake their babies to stop their crying or misbehaving. Shaking can cause brain damage, mental retardation, or even death. Babies are vulnerable to serious injury because their heads are large, their neck muscles are weak, and their brains are still soft. Even mild shaking can cause brain hemorrhages. A pediatrician advises:

"Hark ye good parents to words true and plain
Shaking your baby can bruise his brain.
Save the limb, the brain, and life of your tot
By shaking him never, never and not!"

A holy chance offered during 'forgive week'

DEAR READERS: Are you holding a grudge? Don't feel guilty. Many of us are. But we don't have to hold it forever.

Did you know there is an International Forgiveness Week? Well, neither did I. I recently learned that there is such a week. It's from Feb. 8 until the 14th. Robert Muller, former assistant secretary-general of the United Nations, wrote this piece for International Forgiveness Week.

DECIDE TO FORGIVE

Decide to forgive
For resentment is negative
Resentment is poisonous
Resentment diminishes and devours the self.
Be the first to forgive.
To smile and to take the first step.
And you will see happiness bloom
On the face of your human brother or sister.
Be always the first
Do not wait for others to forgive
For by forgiving
You become the master of fate
The fashioner of life
The door of miracles.
To forgive is the highest
Most beautiful form of love.
In return you will receive
Untold peace and happiness.

Here is the program for achieving a truly forgiving heart.

Sunday: Forgive yourself.
Monday: Forgive your family.
Tuesday: Forgive your friends and associates.
Wednesday: Forgive across economic lines within your own nation.
Thursday: Forgive across cultural lines within your own nation.
Friday: Forgive across political lines within your own nation.
Saturday: Forgive other nations.
Only the brave know how to forgive. A coward never forgives. It is not in his nature.

ROBERT MULLER

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter from "Perplexed in Washington State" who wanted to preserve her husband's tattoo for posterity: She should find a good taxidermist and stuff her husband in toto with tattoo bared for all to see. He would make a great living room conversation piece.

After all, the leg of some Union general is on exhibition in the Medical Museum in Washington, D.C., for visitors to ogle.

JIM GRIFFITH, CINCINNATI

DEAR MR. GRIFFITH: I thought you were pulling my leg, but my research disclosed the following: After Maj. Gen. Daniel Stickles' leg was shattered by a cannonball during the Battle of Gettysburg in 1863, the general himself sent the flesh and bones to the museum in a little black "coffin." He frequently went there to visit his leg, and even brought visitors to view it. There is even an example of the cannonball that did the damage.

DEAR ABBY: Apropos the woman who wanted to preserve her husband's tattoo after his demise: How gross! Assuming it could be done, think of all the morbid things it could lead to. For instance, the husband of a well-endowed wife might decide he'd like "bookends."

Medication can disturb sleep

DEAR DR. GOTT: I dream all night long. By morning, I feel like I've had no sleep at all. What can I do to stop this pattern?

Peter Gott, M.D.

DEAR READER: Dreaming is a normal part of sleeping. Usually it does not interfere with rest. However, vivid dreaming can be caused by many prescription and non-prescription medicines, as well as by alcohol and caffeine. Discuss your problem with your doctor; if you are taking any drugs, request that they be changed or their doses modified.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have had a problem with chapped lips for a long time and haven't found anything that helps much. What can you suggest?

DEAR READER: Chapped lips (uncomfortable cracking and drying) are due to a loss of natural oils in the skin. Creams or lotions that contain lanolin are quite effective in easing chapped lips. In addition, you will be helped by protecting your lips from strong sunlight or harsh winds; sunscreens and petroleum-base ointments are useful for this purpose.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Someone gave me a small copper chain to wear as a bracelet to ease arthritis pain. Does this really work?

DEAR DR. GOTT: My left foot is getting very troublesome. Walking is difficult because of contractions in the foot that make my toes curl down. The surgeon wants to release the tendon. How successful is this procedure? Would this have anything to do with left-carotid-artery and heart surgery I had nine years ago?

DEAR READER: The tissue that surrounds the tendons in the body (and hands) is called fascia. In some people, this fascia will contract, in turn causing foreshortening of the tendons. This produces contractures.

Disabled people targets for crime

ATLANTA (AP) — People with disabilities can be easy targets for crime unless they take an active role in protecting themselves, says the Arthritis Foundation.

To reduce a criminal's opportunities for striking, people with disabilities should always be alert to potentially dangerous situations and rehearse what their reactions would be.

It's a good idea to carry a small flashlight and a loud whistle at all

Surgery is performed to release the tendons from the constricting fascia. The operation is almost always successful when done on the hands; unfortunately, in the feet, the fascia may grow back and more surgery may be required.

Your tendon problems probably are not related to your heart and carotid-artery surgery.

times, because light and noise are a criminal's enemies. Many local police stations can send a crime prevention officer to people's homes to recommend types of security and alarm systems appropriate for their particular situation.

The story behind the story

By Josie

Q. I know that Jobeth Williams will be playing the role of a secretary in a film about a minister and his secretary in Kansas who plot to kill her husband. But I'd like to know what else she's been in besides "Adam." Any other pertinent information about her? Vernelle Davis, Modesto, Calif.

A. She's 37, from Houston, the daughter of a former tenor with the Houston Opera (he died when she was 16) and his wife, a member of a long-established Texas ranching family. She began acting when she was 6, began formal training at 14 and while at Brown University, spent most of her time acting in school productions.

After graduation, she stayed in Providence, R.I., and joined the Trinity Square Repertory Theater there. She then moved to New York, appeared on the soaps "Somerset" and "The Guiding Light," and like Stephen Collins, made her Broadway debut in "Moonchildren" on Broadway.

Her film debut was memorable: She played the lawyer with whom Dustin Hoffman became involved in "Kramer Versus Kramer" and who, naked, encounters his young son in the hallway in the middle of the night.

She followed that with "The Dogs of War," "Endangered Species," "Poltergeist" and "Poltergeist II," "Star 80," "Teachers," "The Day After" on TV, "The Big Chill," "American Dreamer" and "Desert Bloom." You're right about the Kansas story; it will be a CBS miniseries called "Broken Commandments," and she co-stars with Keith Carradine.

Stephen Collins

Q. Could you tell me a little about Stephen Collins, such as where he's from, what he's been in and what he will do next? Alice Teague, Montclair, Calif.

A. He's from Des Moines, Iowa, and Hastings-on-Hudson, just north of New York. He always loved performing (he would sing and dance to Broadway musical cast albums while his parents were out of the house) and started acting professionally right after his graduation from Amherst.

He was cast immediately in the production of "Twelfth Night" at the New York Shakespeare Festival, followed by the play "Moonchildren" on Broadway.

His film debut was in "All the President's Men," followed by "Loving Couples," "Between the Lines," "The Promise," "Fedora," "Star Trek: The Motion Picture," "Brewster's Millions" and "Jumpin' Jack Flash."

On TV, you may have seen him in "The Rhinemann Exchange," "Summer Solstice," "Inside the Third Reich," "Chiefs," the short-lived series "Tales of the Gold Monkey" and the recent sequel to "A Woman of Substance," "Hold That Dream." He'll be on TV later this month in an NBC miniseries destined to get pretty high ratings, "The Two Mrs. Grenvilles."

Q. Please tell me all about Ann Jillian, why she's no longer on "It's a Living" and what she's doing now. D.M., Sioux Falls, S.D.

A. She's 36, the daughter of Joseph and Ann Nauseda, Lithuanian immigrants who fled their country after World War II and settled in Cambridge, Mass., where she was born. She loved performing when she was a little girl and she was so good at it that her parents decided to move to Los Angeles when she was 4 so that she could pursue a show-business career.

She began to get roles almost immediately and worked throughout her childhood, appearing in, among other things, Disney's production of "Babes in Toyland" at the age of 10 and, at 12, as Dainty June, Gypsy Rose Lee's sister in the film "Gypsy" opposite Rosalind Russell and Natalie Wood.

When she was 16, she grew to 5'8" and couldn't play juvenile parts anymore but wasn't old enough to play adult roles yet, so her career stalled. She finished school, spent two years in college and worked in a department store instead.

A few years later, though, she was again employable and appeared in the series "Hazel" and "The Partridge Family." In 1976, she went out on the road with a musical, "Words and Music," which got good notices and brought her to the attention of the producers of another musical, "Sugar Babies," which would become a huge hit... and her big break.

It brought her back to Hollywood and starring roles in the TV movies "Mae West," "Alice in Wonderland" and the recent "Killer in the Mirror," the miniseries "Ellis Island" and the series which followed the first incarnation of "It's a Living," "Jennifer Slept Here." She was also in the movie "Mr. Mom."

She left the revamped "It's a

Ann Jillian

Living" for two reasons: The official one was that it took up too much of her time, which she wanted to spend with her family; the less official one involved a contract dispute with the producers and a feeling that she wasn't being treated with sufficient dignity and respect.

Since leaving the show, she's been busy with personal appearances and TV movies. One, "Convicted: A Mother's Story," just finished production for ABC; another, "The Ann Jillian Story," the account of her recovery from breast cancer and a double mastectomy in 1985, is in the rewrite stage.

She's been married to former Chicago policeman Andy Murcia, whom she met when "Words and Music" played Chicago, for about 10 years.

Q. I am a big Mary Martin fan and I would like to know what happened to the play "Legends" that she performed in with Carol Channing. Is it going to Broadway? James Mano, Fredericton, N.B., Canada

A. The play has had a successful run around the country and the two stars have gotten some positive notices. However, as we go to press, they both seem resistant to bringing the show to New York, presumably due to the infamous savagery of the New York critics. Negotiations are underway, though, to get them to change their minds.

Sarah Purcell

Q. What has Sarah Purcell been doing since "America" folded and what are her plans? Mrs. F. Morris, Metairie, La.

A. She's been doing guest appearances on syndicated shows, such as two disparate recent projects, one on world hunger and an episode of "The Hollywood Squares." She also taped an episode of "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" that should air soon. Regarding future projects, she's in the process of discussing a couple of TV ventures, but nothing has been set.

Outlook

Being a former nerd is quite 'in'

Wretched pasts are high chic

By Sarah Overstreet

You can't pick up a magazine these days, or listen to a Barbara Walters interview, without hearing some fabulous person's confession of former wretchedness. Jane Fonda and Ali MacGraw felt awkward and ugly as teen-agers. Dyan Cannon's hair was too curly. Morgan Fairchild's glasses looked like something off the Starship Enterprise.

Give me a break. The way I see it, none of that counts if you sprouted C-cups overnight, got your braces off and had an offer from Seventeen magazine in the next day's mail.

Nevertheless, To Have Been a Nerd is the hottest trend since Bob Greene immortalized the young urban professional. (Notice the past tense. Being a nerd, in the present tense, is never fashionable.) And the philosophy behind the trend is fairly sound, if you're considering it from the vantage point of one who didn't have a date until she was 27. It is this:

Darwin's law of the evolution of ambition. People who are stars in high school — cheerleaders, football captains, homecoming queens, student-body presidents, etc. — peak at age 17 and settle down to lifetimes of blandness. Face it: How could one ever hope to top being adored by hundreds of ones peers in ones formative years?

Having had it all, this philosophy asks sensibly, the homecoming queen-cheerleader settles down to selling decorating items in home parties. The football captain-student body president joins Rotary and eats rubber chicken once a week.

The logical balance to this theory is that those of us who were nerds in high school continue to strive well into adulthood, ever seeking to become the stars we never were when it counted. And because our painful memories of inadequacy fuel us, we reach heights our unucky beautiful and popular classmates can never hope to.

That's why it is absolutely crucial today, among those in the know, To Have Been a Nerd. To the savvy, to admit to having been a cheerleader or prom queen in high school immediately brands one as a current nothing. To Have Been a Nerd, on the other hand, classifies one as a late bloomer, an F. Murray Abraham whose nerddom chased him through terminal teen-age acne, through playing pieces of fruit in TV commercials, to winning an Oscar in middle age, acne scars and all.

(The captain of Abraham's high-school football team, it should be said, is now a sales rep for O-Cedar working on his 25-year pin: a little gold sponge mop with a ruby in its wringer.)

So powerful is this trend that the extent to which one was a nerd has become the latest status symbol. Comparisons abound from every corner of a trendy party. Instead of, "Hi, my name's Roger; what's your sign?" you hear, "Hi, I'm Roger. I wore the same pair of black wing-tips from 1963 to 1969."

Sizing him up through narrowed eyes, a young woman will take the challenge. "How awful for you, dear. Let's see, 1963... why, that would be the year I was elected Best Hall Monitor in the 8th-grade class personality poll."

"Big fat deal. My mother made me a rainsuit out of two Hefty bags. First, you cut off one corner of one bag for the hat, and then you cut armholes in the second one...."

It can get ugly. It has occurred to me that some of you peaked-out former stars may be wishing to leave the home-decorating-party-Rotary circuit, and make something of yourselves in middle-age. A word from one who holds no animosity for the way you treated one back in 1965: All is not lost. You, too, can learn To Have Been a Nerd.

First, forget you married the Yearbook King in a dream wedding with the entire pom-pom squad as bridesmaids. Forget you were Miss Pet Milk of 1967 and runner-up in Seventeen magazine's "Search for the Freshest New Face of 1968."

Fashion yourself a whole new history, and practice it at home until you can recite it without faltering at the next party. Using these simple, failsafe tips, you should be able to work out a background that will out-nerd Rhoda Morgenstern's:

1. No matter how bad someone says her hair used to look, say yours looked worse. Say yours was so frizzy your mother put it into two little balls on the top of your head, and moths ate one off while you fit into the school desks, and the boys' shop class had to make a special one for you.

3. Never admit to having had a date in high school, except for the time your parents paid your cousin from out-of-town to take you to the prom, and he told everyone he was your cousin and your parents had paid him.

4. Tell everyone how you were always picked last for every team at every recess, from dodgeball to math relays. Work up a little story about how you'd stand on the playground, praying, "Please, Lord, just this one time don't let them fight over who has to take me."

5. Never admit to having been a cheerleader, pom-pom girl or member of any school athletic team. Tell people you went out for the Bible quiz team, but didn't make it.

6. Say you had so much dark body hair your parents gave you electrolysis for your Sweet Sixteen.

7. Say your parents devoted themselves to thinking of clever ways to humiliate you. Tell how they drove you right up to the front door of the school every day in the 1962 Dodge Dart with one side mashed in and held shut with a rope. Tell how in restaurants they always put everyone's leftovers in your empty milk carton and made you carry it out.

Oh, and by the way: Good luck. No hard feelings about 1965. ■

You can learn to be fit for life

Half-hour workouts make you get into great shape

By Frances Sheridan Goulart

What's the best sport for all-over body-strengthening and body-shaping? Weight training, says the Aerobic Institute of America. But if you'd rather sit than lift — and still benefit — try calisthenics, the push-me path to fitness.

Calisthenics includes both isometric and isotonic exercises. In the first, you flex various sets of body muscles without contracting or relaxing them; in the second, it's the pull-up, push-up-and-out contraction of various muscle sets that produces the training effects.

The biggest benefit of doing your daily calisthenic dozen or half-dozen is the increase in body strength rather than improvement of cardiovascular or respiratory stamina — something running, cycling and swimming are best for.

These three sports give you twice the aerobic workout, but they neglect certain muscle groups, especially in your upper body.

An hour of calisthenics does as much to shape your figure as aerobic dancing, according to the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU).

It has a near-zero potential for injury, too, requires no special equipment and helps you fight off post-40 calcium deficiency disorders such as osteoporosis and circulatory troubles such as varicose veins.

According to Brinto Kiveloff, M.D., associate chief of rehabilitation medicine at the New York Infirmary-Beekman

Downtown Hospital, a sound cardiovascular system requires good reserves of blood properly distributed through the body. Normally, the muscles store 40 to 50 percent of the body's total, but aging affects blood-storing muscle fiber, which is gradually replaced by connective tissue. The connective tissue does not store blood as well.

Calisthenic exercise, advises Kiveloff, reverses this downhill process by improving your circulation, muscle tone and muscle bulk, and stabilizing blood pressure.

THE WORKOUT

The following calisthenics routine provides both isotonic and isometric fitness. Do it for 30 minutes three times a week and you'll be fit for life, says the program director of the One-to-One Fitness Center in New York City.

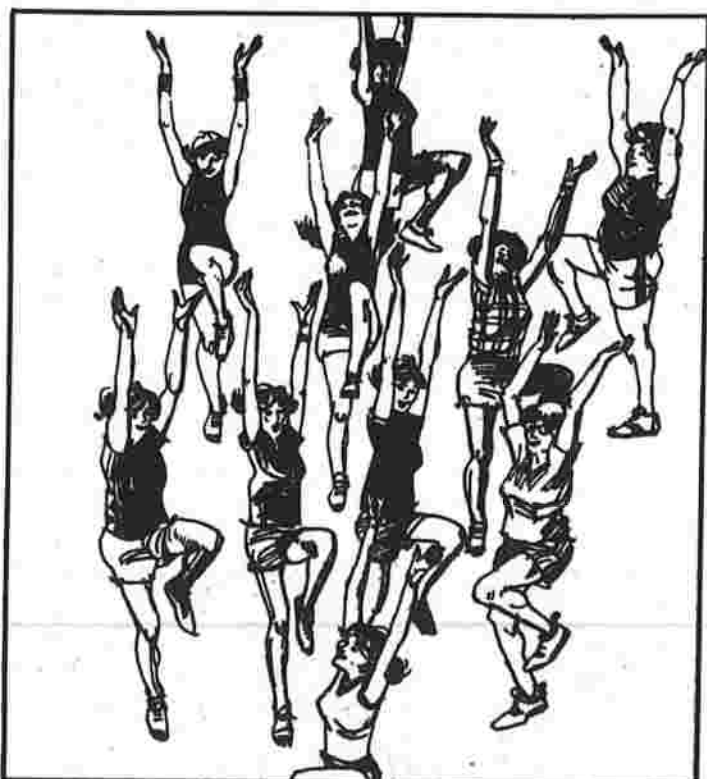

All you need is a thick rug, a towel and a pair of athletic shoes. For maximum benefit, do two sets of the exercises explained below:

1. Warm-up. Jog in place. To reap heart/lung-building and calorie-burning benefits, keep it up for 12 minutes. Use music to keep going or go outside and jog a few blocks, walk a few, jog a few, walk a few.

Cool down with 5 minutes of walking.

2. Firm up. Stand about 2½ feet from a sturdy table (or bookcase or counter). Keep your back straight, lean forward and grasp tabletop.

Bend left leg at the knee and raise foot behind you. Without twisting back, lift bent left leg to side, then slowly straighten leg.

Calisthenics has a near-zero potential for injury and requires no special equipment.

Hold for a count of two, bend knee and lower. Build up to 20. Reverse legs and repeat the exercise.

3. Leg shaper. Lie on left side, resting on left elbow. Place right foot in front of left knee. Lift left leg as high as possible, then lower without allowing leg to touch the ground.

Build up to 20, holding the last "lift" for 10 seconds. Repeat on right side.

4. Abdomen strengthener. Lie on back, fingers laced behind neck, elbows out. Lift left leg straight up and raise right leg 10 to 12 inches. Then do the "scissors" — alternatively raising legs, dropping lower leg only to point that back is still flat to floor.

Build up to 20 with leg, holding the last lift 10 seconds for each leg.

5. Waist trimmer. Lie on back with knees bent, legs slightly apart, arms at sides. Contract stomach and curl up halfway, reaching to left of knees. Repeat twice. Repeat to right side. Then reach to center for 10 seconds.

Add a second set when you master this.

6. Hamstring and across-the-chest-stretch. Stand with feet a shoulder's-width apart, arms out to the sides. Reach right hand down and across body to outside of left calf, twisting torso and bending left knee slightly. Point left arm to ceiling. You should feel the stretch in your straight leg and across your back.

Hold for 30 seconds, repeat with the other leg. Then stand with feet slightly apart, arms at sides.

Hold one end of a bath towel in each hand. Raise straight arms up, over and behind you and hold for 30 seconds.

Master of mimicry

George Carlin sees life from a 45-degree angle

By Linda-Marie Singer

"George! Hey, Mr. Carlin! Remember me?" Comedian George Carlin spins around before boarding his stretch limousine parked outside the Circle Star Theater in San Carlos, Calif.

"Hey, hello, howdy. How's it going?" he calls back in that familiar voice that has a warming (not to mention hilarious) effect on strangers.

"George, it's me — from last year?"

Not wearing his glasses, Carlin blinks hard trying to focus. With hordes of admirers dizzily rushing to see him backstage, he's sensitive about hurting anyone's feelings.

Turning around and sounding like Al Sleet ("Hippie-Dippy Weatherman"), he yells out, "Hey, man. Que...pasa?"

"Right!" the fan replies, and whips out a glass George autographed last year. "Now do you remember me?"

Carlin peers at his signature running around the side, and smiles graciously. (But who is this guy?)

Suddenly a crowd forms, and the entertainer, done-in after delivering an electrifying 90-minute performance, doesn't want to be rude; he just wants to go home.

"One more picture," a young couple pleads. Instamatics click and relick with the star posing between admirers, while tipping his ZZ Top visor to the camera.

Once inside the blue-gray limo, the 49-year-old takes a long swig of mineral water and sighs. His voice is surprisingly soft without any trace of wackiness, while his face reflects a quiet kindness. "It's those Irish eyes," he says, nearly breaking into a song.

Turning to his business partner and friend, Jerry Hamza, he asks about tomorrow's flight to Denver (next stop on his 100 weekend concerts per year).

"Sorry," interrupts the chauffeur. "Car won't start."

"Whaaaaat?" Carlin screeches. Suddenly he begins singing "I Haven't Got Time for the Pain."

One less laugh won't make a dent considering tonight's wild ovation when the Grammy Award winner, clad simply in jeans and sweat shirt, scooted onto the stage greeting everyone in sight: "Hello! Howdy! Whaddya think? Whaddya say? Whaddya feel?"

In less than five seconds, the sellout crowd zeroes into his batch of loony non-sequiturs (from "Have a nice day" to an "interview with Jesus").

They stay tuned as he dabbles in screwball observations ("You really know the country's in trouble when the president's first name is Booger"). Such capricious statements have carted the native New Yorker through a quarter of a century in show business.

For only Carlin, the master of mimicry, sees life from what he calls "a 45-degree angle." Once the audience tilts accordingly, he spends the rest of the time strutting, singing and spinning his way around the stage.

And while his appearance has gone through as many reincarnations as Shirley Maclaine, the one constant has been a steady stream of creativity. With 13 albums, six HBO specials, hundreds of weekend concerts and his book, "Sometimes a Little Brain Damage Helps," Carlin's latest venture is "Outrageous Fortune" (a Touchstone movie release). There he portrays a '60's burned-out hippie saving the day for both Bette Midler and Shelley Long.

With his recycled debut into films, he's now fulfilling a boyhood dream: becoming a movie star. Sure, there were prior attempts ("With Six You Get Eggroll," "Car Wash"), but they were a lifetime ago when the actor was painfully insecure, trying desperately to fit into the Hollywood mold.

But now it's after midnight, and Carlin rubs his eyes as the driver passes the exit. "Whoa!" he calls. "Isn't that the hotel?" He sighs and launches into another chorus of "I Haven't Got Time for the Pain," when suddenly his business partner asks about his wife, Brenda.

The showman's demeanor softens whenever her name is brought up. "She's probably been calling the room," he says, with that obvious "I miss you" in his voice. No one would guess the couple were together only last night, when he played to a jam-packed college arena in Los Angeles.

Once inside the hotel with

tourists racing around everywhere, the celebrity can't help hamming it up, offering those unsolicited but infectious salutations: "Hey, what's happenin'?" Howdy? Que...pasa? People stare as if to say, "Isn't that...?" But it's too late as he heads for the elevator.

Always the captivating chatterbox, George Dennis Carlin grew up in a New York City neighborhood bordering Columbia University and Harlem. He relishes those childhood days when his livewire wit made him the "class clown" of White Harlem.

"We called it White Harlem because it sounded bad, and we thought..." Suddenly he turns. The red light on the phone starts blinking madly. "That's Brenda," he declares, snapping his fingers before lifting the receiver.

"The show was great," he tells her, trying to muster some enthusiasm. "I'm very tired, my back hurts and the limo broke down. Yeah, broke down! Well, I'll call tomorrow." (Looks at watch and groans. It's after 1 o'clock.) His voice softens to a whisper: "I love you, too. Love you lots. Nighty night."

After changing into a powder blue T-shirt and drinking more mineral water, he can't help but chat about his wife of 25 years. "Brennie's great. Did you know she produced all my cable TV shows, and now does the new Parkview Stage company in L.A.? Wonderful sense of humor and what I call a quality laugh. The same type my mother had when I was a little kid."

"Yeah, I really knew something was up when I got that first genuine laugh from my mom. From that time on I began twisting reality for my own purposes."

Unfortunately, that reality led to quitting parochial school after one frustrating year. "But then I thought about maybe transferring to the High School of Music and Art, because I played the trumpet really well. Anything to stand up and be noticed, but they wouldn't accept me. 'You've no foundation in music,' they explained, 'and will have to repeat your first year to catch up.'"

Undismayed, he tried his luck at the High School of Performing Arts, only to be told, "First you'll have to complete speech, drama and fencing." Carlin's reaction? "Forget it!"

Being rejected at age 15 from the only two schools where he could develop his creativity, he settled on becoming a D.J. "I had plenty of time to plan, as my brother Patrick was 21 and out of the house, while our mother worked all day long. I was what you would call inner-directed, so I began to daydream."

"This may sound naive, but this was my plan: To stay in school until 16, then work for a year, enroll in the Air Force, getting my military over with. I figured that by 21 I'd be on the G.I. Bill studying radio broadcasting. In no time I'd become a comedian and finally — a famous actor."

Telling all that to his mother was another story, although his approach was simple enough. "Ma, I'm quitting school," he said out of the blue. "But she had aspirations — rather, 'aristocratic pretensions' — of both her sons going to college and being advertising executives." (Pat began there and later switched to screen writing.)

Reliving these memories has Carlin launching into his falsetto. However, as the humor unfolds, so does a twinge of lingering sadness over his mother's death.

"She married late in life, you know. Thirty-four when she met Patrick Carlin, a highly successful advertising man who worked at the Philadelphia Bulletin. (She managed the New York office.) I take it he was handsome and had a gift of gab. He also drank and was a bit of a bully."

Carlin never met his father (his parents separated when he was 2 months old). "Here I was supposedly their reconciliation baby. So, Mom returns to the business world, and when I turned 8 my father died."

This loss apparently left a mark on the young boy, who, after dropping out of high school, enlisted in the military at age 17. There he became a radio host, "and suddenly my mother liked the fact that I was attracting 'quality people.'"

'Gray power' saves the day for agencies

Senior volunteers make an enormous difference

By Susan Crain Bakos

After several years of admiring conspicuous consumption, Americans are presumably ready to knock some holes in our shrines built to material girls and boys. New York magazine, always a reliable trend-pointer, devoted an entire cover section in October of '86 to "Doing Good" in which the editors told people who were fed up with gluttony, covetousness and other sins where and how they could help the "less fortunate."

Apparently volunteerism is about to make a comeback. And the revolution could easily be led by senior citizens, who have been quietly volunteering while the rest of us were standing in line for Cabbage Patch dolls.

"I really don't like to talk about volunteering," says Kate, a sprightly 67-year-old widow who lives in Bryn Mawr, Pa. "No matter what you say, people think you are volunteering to do good, but the truth is I began volunteering to feel good. Whatever I do for someone else helps me as much as it helps them. Maybe more."

Kate is one of the nation's 365,000 senior citizens who participate in one of the 750 Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) projects located in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and Guam. She drives a van twice a week in the Meals on Wheels program which distributes hot meals to elderly and disabled people.

Other volunteers work in hospitals, libraries and schools, run thrift shops, help the Red Cross, the Scouts or United Way — or work in one of the other programs aimed at the ill and disabled.

Certainly the services they provide to these agencies are of considerable value. But as Kate attests, volunteerism is hardly a one-way street. The seniors who help others find their own lives enriched too.

She says, "I didn't know what to do with myself after my husband died last year. We had both retired from teaching positions the year before; we were looking forward to our golden age together. We planned to travel overseas and do the things we hadn't done when we were putting kids through school, paying off a mortgage and later looking after our elderly parents."

"We only got to make one trip together before he died of a heart attack. Well, I thought there was nothing left for me but dying too."

Kate had trouble getting out of bed in the mornings. In fact, some mornings extended into late afternoon. "When I started having my breakfast with 'Jeopardy' at 4 o'clock, I knew I was in trouble. My neighbor suggested I go to the senior-citizen center for companionship."

"I went there looking for friendship and sympathy. What I discovered was a group of busy people who didn't have time to feel sorry for themselves because they were immersed in so many volunteer activities. I thought, that's what I need. If I'm ever going to feel good again, it will be through doing something useful."

That need to feel needed is a most basic human desire. And the hardest thing about being a senior citizen is often that this desire seems to be unfulfilled. When you're no longer needed at a job or by your children, or in Kate's case, even by the person who once needed you most, your spouse — what are you supposed to do with the rest of your life?

Nita Kaplan, a hospital administrator in Chicago, says "RSVP volunteers make the difference in hospitals, just as the volunteer experience makes the difference in their lives."

Ironically, many of them decide to get into the volunteer program following the death of a spouse or close friend because they had a chance to see the need during their long bedside vigils. Now, when a grief-stricken person asks me, "What can I do?" I respond, "You can help." Helping someone else will also help them heal.

That simple philosophy is the cornerstone of the program. RSVP, which celebrated its 15th year in 1986, grew out of another program, Serve and Enrich Retirement Through Volunteer Experience (SERV) and SERV was launched in 1965 under ACTION, the government agency established by the Older Americans Act in the early '60s, which still sponsors RSVP.

The original SERV project in Staten Island, N.Y., was begun in recognition of that truth. Older adults, especially those who have felt recent loss, need to feel needed by other people again.

Adelaide Sugarman, the director of the Montgomery County (Pennsylvania) RSVP, says, "Matching those people who need to help with organizations who need volunteer help is what we do. Each organization runs independently, under the ACTION umbrella. And some RSVPs receive more funding through the federal agency than others."

Sugarman says there are no set minimum volunteer hour requirements or other criteria save one: "The volunteer must be active. If they haven't done anything for a period of three months, unless they're ill or out of town, we drop them from the active list. Some people contribute an hour or two a week, while others contribute much more. It would be hard to cite a norm."

"And we certainly don't have trouble finding volunteers to fill any areas. Once they get into the program, they're dedicated."

Moses Gibbons, a 70-year-old volunteer from Louisiana who insists everyone call him Mose, says no one should be surprised to hear he and his counterparts are "dedicated."

He says, "We come from a generation where people expected to look after each other. We grew up believing charity begins at home, in your own family and your community. I don't truck with a lot of foreign aid when we have need here. And so we're doing in our old age what we didn't have time to do in our working years: doing for others."

When Mose talks about "traditional values," he means helping your neighbor mow his lawn when he's down in the back. He doesn't use the phrase to justify conservative or repressive political philosophies. "Down home Americans always meant to help each other out. Maybe they just got too busy to do much of it until they retired."

Mose, who walks a mile a day whether he "needs" it or not, is part of an RSVP "friendly visitation" program. He visits the housebound three days a week, usually on foot, since he rarely drives his old Ford.

"I bring little things they need. And in the case of one couple, I stay with the husband, who can't get out of bed, while the wife gets out. Her only chance to get out is when I'm there. I tell people the most important thing I've ever done in my life is what I'm doing right now: giving that lady a break to do her shopping, pay her bills, have a cup of coffee at the Woolworth's counter. I spent a lot of years working for the railroad, but I never felt this good about what I did."

Across the country in southern California, Jessica Montgomery, who is largely wheelchair-bound, also volunteers through RSVP. Montgomery, 62, suffered a debilitating stroke five years ago. Then two years later, she fell while walking with the aid of a walker, broke a hip and suffered two more strokes while hospitalized. She says, "I thought I had the hardest hard-luck story around until I got involved in RSVP. There is always someone who has it worse. At least I'd had a chance to live and do things before my trouble. A lot of people are born with theirs."

Montgomery, an expert needlewoman, knits and crochets splendid items for various charity sales. She also addresses envelopes and handles other correspondence for charitable organizations. ■

Astrograph

Exciting and unexpected developments could occur in the year ahead. Try not to let events sweep you off your feet to the point where you don't capitalize properly on your opportunities.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) The results aren't apt to be all that everyone hopes for if you get involved with a friend in a business situation today. Don't jeopardize the relationship. Major changes are ahead for Aquarius in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Demands made upon you today could be rather severe or even unreasonable. Nevertheless, keep a cool head and don't let them throw you off balance.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) Failure to pay as much attention as you should to details today could cause unnecessary complications. Don't overlook small, significant factors.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If a joint venture in which you're presently involved shows poor chances of succeeding, perhaps you'd better consider easing out of the arrangement.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Should you be too headstrong and self-serving today, there's a chance you'll make things unpleasant for yourself as well as for others.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) Proper organization is essential today if you hope to perform effectively. Control events instead of letting them control you.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Try to stay away from involvements with friends that they can afford but you can't today. You can still have a good time without breaking your bank.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Everyone, including yourself, could be at odds today as to how important family matters should be handled. Pull together; do not pull apart.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) It's best not to try to prematurely launch a plan today that you know still has some bugs in it. If you fall flat, you won't get a second chance.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) A "what's in it for me" attitude will prove counter-productive today. Companions will pass you by if they think you're only looking out for number one.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you're negotiating a matter of importance today, tactfully back off and readjust your thinking if it looks like the other guy is holding all the aces.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You won't work well under pressure today, so don't pile up things which need doing start to pile up on you. Keep pace with your responsibilities.

Many of Southern European heritage have same problem

By Dr. June Reinisch

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I am a 17-year-old girl and am extremely hairy. I have sideburns, a moustache, hair on my chin and excessively hairy arms, toes and stomach. I've got more hair on my body than most guys. I'm of Greek descent, which I'm sure has a lot to do with it - but my mother, who's Greek, doesn't have this problem.
Is there any medication I can get to resolve this problem? I can't stand myself any longer and feel disgusted whenever I look in the mirror. Shaving and electrolysis do not work for me. I would think that if they can give someone a new heart, they should be able to help me, too.

DEAR READER: Many women with a Southern European background have more dark, coarse body and facial hair than other ethnic groups. A large percentage of the women who seek treatment for hirsutism (excessive facial and body hair) are perfectly healthy women; they have a genetic background that doesn't permit their natural appearance to match our current cultural image of hairlessness for females.
You do not mention your pubertal development or menstrual status. If you have not menstruated or if you menstruate irregularly, you should be tested to determine if the hair is related to high levels of androgenic hormones (males usually have more of these hormones than females).
Another key question will be whether the body hair is coarse or fine-textured, since hormonal problems often are associated with coarse body and facial hair.
Have you asked your physician about this? Perhaps he or she could discuss appropriate tests. You also can call the nearest medical school or large hospital and ask for an appointment with a physician who specializes in endocrinology or adolescent development.
It may take a number of blood tests, X-rays or other procedures to diagnose any hormonal or other health problems. However, if a medical condition is diagnosed, appropriate treatment can resolve the problem and reduce the hirsutism.
Treatment differs for each medical condition, so no single drug can be recommended. There also is no drug that "cures" hirsutism in healthy women.
Nearly all physicians who evaluate women for hirsutism know that worries about appearance can have a devastating impact. Therefore, most can recommend a counselor who is experienced in helping women achieve a better appearance and a better outlook on life. Counseling is combined with teaching skillful use of techniques that remove or disguise unwanted facial and body hair.
These techniques include the use of pumice, wax, chemical depilatories, bleaching, shaving, electrolysis and makeup.

Disagreement

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I am 22, female and a virgin. Although I'm not ready to share my body with my boyfriend, we have discussed sex.
He and I disagree about one aspect of female anatomy. He claims that any female who has had a lot of sex, and all women who have had a baby, have outward-turning or contorted labia (majora and minora). Although my labia are inward, or smooth, most of my girlfriends have labia that are not.
Is such unfolding of a labia automatic proof of sexual intercourse or childbirth?

DEAR READER: No. Even a physician conducting a pelvic examination cannot determine a woman's history of sexual activity from the appearance of her external genitals.
The size, color and shape of women's genitals vary greatly, especially after puberty and its initial increase in hormones. Prominent size, protrusion of the inner lips (labia minora) beyond the outer lips (labia majora) or development of folds in the labia are not proof of prior sexual intercourse or childbearing.

Sex appeal

DEAR DR. REINISCH: Enclosed is an ad for a chemical attractant. It claims that the male wearer will induce emotional and physical attraction in women. What do you think?

DEAR READER: There is no good scientific evidence to support this product's claims for "instant sex appeal."
Pheromones are chemicals that are naturally secreted by the body and that carry messages (including those about sexual receptivity, fear and aggression) to other members of the same species.
Experiments with animals have reported that androsteneone - the ingredient mentioned in the ad you sent - causes female pigs in heat to assume the mating position. I found no scientific documentation of a similar effect on human females.

This is a fascinating topic, and perhaps - with some serious scientific investigation - one or more human sexual-attractant pheromones may be found.
However, even if they are identified, it's unlikely that they will be able to control a woman's feelings and make her overlook a man's other characteristics. Any pheromones also will probably work very slowly, during the course of several weeks or months.
Most current research has focused on pheromones and their relationship to reproductive cycles. For example, it has been established that sweat from a man, placed under the nose of women, gradually causes the women to ovulate more regularly and have more regular menstrual cycles, thereby increasing fertility.
Meanwhile, you might be interested in knowing what women regard as sexually attractive in males. The top traits are good muscle tone, well-groomed hair, a clear complexion, white teeth, a willingness to share emotions, a good sense of humor and dependability. The $24 price for a can of the sex spray might be better spent on enhancing some of these known elements of sexual attraction.

You also can call the nearest medical school or large hospital and ask for an appointment with a physician who specializes in endocrinology or adolescent development.

IUD concerns

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I've been reading about problems with IUDs, and I filed a claim with the company involved with the Dalkon Shield IUD. My IUD was inserted in 1967, but the lawyer I spoke with said that the Dalkon Shield wasn't introduced until 1970.
After checking with my doctor, I learned that my IUD was a Copper-7. Now what do I do?

DEAR READER: Double check with the physician who inserted your IUD (intrauterine device for contraception) about the date it was inserted and the brand of the IUD. You might also contact the physician who removed it; perhaps the records will note what type it was.
Reportedly, some IUD users have an increased risk of pelvic infections and infertility.

According to published accounts, sales of the Dalkon Shield began in 1971 and sales of the Copper-7 didn't begin until 1974. If you had an IUD inserted in 1967, it might have been a different brand or may have been part of an experimental or research program. In any event, you need to establish the exact date and brand used.

The Copper-7 was taken off the market by G.D. Searle Co. in 1986, but this action was attributed to economic considerations. Any complaints against the Copper-7 are not being managed by a centralized legal office; the Dalkon Shield claims were managed by a centralized office in 1986.

Your next step will depend on what you find out from the physician. If the device was a Dalkon Shield, recontact the lawyer you spoke to about your claim, explain that you have more information and offer verification of the date of insertion and brand of device.
If the device was a Copper-7 or some other brand, you must consult your personal lawyer for advice about what to do next. You can obtain further information about the Copper-7 by writing to: Medical Communications Department,

G.D. Searle Co., 4901 Searle Parkway, Skokie, IL 60077.

Worries

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I am a 62-year-old woman and I went through menopause 10 years ago. During tests on my gastrointestinal system, my doctor detected a fibroid tumor in the uterus. He told me not to worry and said that a lot of women have them when they reach 40 or 50.
But I cannot stop worrying about this. Could this cause any trouble or turn into cancer?

DEAR READER: Your doctor is correct in saying that many women have fibroid tumors in their uterus. It's estimated that by age 50, about 50 percent of women have these benign (noncancerous) tumors.
When the production of estrogen from the ovaries drops around the time of menopause, fibroids usually stop growing or shrink.

In a postmenopausal woman, surgery to remove a fibroid tumor is necessary only if the tumor grows so large that it presses on the bladder, rectum or other internal organ. It is estimated that fewer than one of every 200 uterine fibroids become cancerous.
Your physician can check on the condition of your uterus during your regular pelvic examination and Pap test; this is usually yearly, unless your individual schedule differs. Between exams, report any bleeding or internal pain to your physician, although there usually are few problems with fibroids after menopause.

Send questions to Dr. Reinisch in care of The Kinsey Report, P.O. Box 48, Bloomington, Ind. 47402. Volume of mail prohibits personal replies.

Today's new business traveler

Times have changed for business travelers as has industry

By Susan Crain Bakos

You are in a hotel room trying to eat your room-service dinner and do your work on that tiny ill-lit table squeezed into the corner by the king-size bed. And you are secretly feeling a little guilty. Why aren't you exploring the city? Why aren't you out there wine and dining and having a good old time? Clearly your expensive room, dominated by that oversized bed, wasn't designed with occupancy in mind.

Well, you can stop feeling like a corporate wall-flower. The business traveler is no longer cavorting after dealing with business. Large urban hotels at night are lighted human hives: inhabited cubicles of people working, reading, relaxing, gearing up for the next day's meetings and the flight back home. Nobody is having a wild and crazy time.

James Burke, director of research and development for Holiday Inns, says, "Until we undertook studies of the business travel market last year, we subscribed to the popular notion that the business traveler was someone, probably a man, who checked in, freshened up and headed out. We thought they only used their rooms for sleeping. Well, we were wrong. "The business traveler spends more time in the room than we thought and wants much more in the way of convenience and amenities" — and much less in the way of bed space.

Industry observers credit the change to several factors:

- Stronger interest in health and fitness and awareness of the downside of heavy eating and drinking.

- A weariness with the going-out syndrome on the part of frequent travelers.
- Fear of sexual encounters with strangers.
- And the increase of women business travelers who have had to be more careful of their images and their personal safety than men do.

The rapid growth of the women's business market (now 35 percent of the total) has been the big story in the industry for the past few years. Between 1982 and 1985, 79 percent of the total increase in room nights sold was attributed to women business travelers. According to Burke, women will compose half this lucrative business market by the end of the decade.

"When we asked these women what they wanted, we expected them to focus on small luxuries, such as shampoos and creams," he says. "We found they had very definite ideas about what they wanted: major changes and improvements in the rooms and bathrooms. They felt the comfort level had not kept up with the comforts they had at home. We were identifying king-sized beds as the ultimate in comfort, while they looked at those beds and saw wasted space."

Women asked for smaller beds and more room space; comfortable chairs; larger tables to accommodate room-service trays and work; better lighting in rooms and bathrooms; and larger bathrooms, equipped with hair dryers and make-up areas. They want working mini-suites, rather than sleeping rooms with the bed discreetly placed so they can meet with a client in their rooms if necessary.

And not surprisingly, male business travelers want most of the same changes. Everyone, for instance, asked for improved shower stalls, not bathtubs. Over 90 percent of hotel guests shower rather than bathe, sighting time considerations and the reluctance to sit down in strange tubs. (Everybody worries if it's really possible to deep clean those rubber strips which prevent slipping and falling!) The big difference in the traveling sexes is that women are "a little slower to come out of their rooms than men," Burke says. For example, 89 percent of women traveling alone would rather order a drink from room service than go down to the bar.

And the reason for that is obvious, according to Cheryl Chapel, a frequent business traveler. "While it's perfectly OK to dine alone in hotels now, it's not as easy to go into the lounge and have a drink. There are too many guys who still wear polyester suits and still think the lone female drinker wants to be hit on. Sometimes I call ahead and ask to have a wine and cheese tray placed in my room so I can avoid that whole hassle of what to do about a drink and snack before a late dinner."

Actually a lot of men would prefer a quiet pre-dinner drink alone in their rooms too.

"I think we can credit women travelers with getting the hotel industry to pay attention to what we want now," says J.J. Ross, an insurance examiner who spends approximately four months of every year in hotel rooms. "Until women began traveling a lot in the early '80s, hotels were like men's clubs during the week. The food was heavy and the amenities light. And room service was for guys who were partying in their rooms."

Ross will no longer stay in a hotel which doesn't offer health club facilities or feature low-calorie, low-cholesterol, low-sodium menu choices. He also expects room service to send up one lite beer without negative comment, or provide a sandwich at 2 a.m. if he's working late. And he wants a variety of good in-house movies "because once I'm in for the night, I'm in. I want to unwind."

He isn't alone. A spokesperson for the Four Seasons hotel chain, which won the 1985 Women's Choice Award from "Women's Travel Connections" newsletter, says nearly 40 percent of the meals ordered in their dining rooms are from the low-calorie selections.

Listen to the voice of authority

These trusted cookbooks can save you from culinary disaster

By Sandra Scott Klink

Some voices command authority. Generally they belong to well-respected experts in their particular fields. The food world has enough voices to all but deafen the sharpest of ears. Granted, many of the innovative new ideas come from unheard-ofs, but there are times when the familiar can be reassuring.

When investing in a cookbook, most of us would like to believe that any recipe we elect to try should be at least professionally turned out, even if it isn't the most dazzling dish ever. Not always true, and some of these flops have cost a lot of time and money. So, as a form of insurance, it can pay to listen to those who have established themselves, those who have and deserve a fine reputation. The following cookbooks can be trusted:

Jean Anderson, author of The Food of Portugal (Morrow, $24.95), has credentials a mile long (12 cookbooks, extensive editing experience, food and travel writing), but that is only the beginning. What is equally important is a true love for — and familiarity with (54 trips to Portugal!) — Portuguese food.

We have been without an in-depth guide to the gastronomy of this country, and Anderson has filled the void. The foods of Portugal are unto themselves — varied, surprising, lusty, and not all like Spanish food, as many believe. Seafood, of course, is crucial, but ah, the sausages, soups, cheeses, sweets... and wine. Flavors are unexpectedly combined and provide the most pleasant surprises.

One of the best of these surprises is Clams in a Cataplana, a felicitous combination of clams, pork, tomatoes, peppers, herbs and seasonings. Having sampled this delight in Portugal, I searched everywhere to no avail for a recipe so I could re-create this memorable dish. This book has it, and it's perfect.

Anderson has also included a wealth of helpful information on Portugal's unique wines, soups, cheeses, sweets (made primarily with egg yolks and sugar), fish, along with a glossary of useful terms. In general, a complete, even scholarly, guide to Portuguese cooking. Bravo!

Few, if any, people know Italian cooking better than Marcella Hazan. Ask anyone who is familiar with her two earlier volumes. She further enhances her reputation in Marcella's Italian Kitchen (Knopf, $22.95). Supremely innovative without being trendy, Hazan has offered up 250 exciting new recipes that utilize some of the new ingredients in sane, delicious ways.

In her introduction she offers all the cook needs to know about possibly unfamiliar ingredients like balsamic vinegar, pancetta, Italian cheeses, porcini mushrooms, and includes a page of "Elementary Rules" which serve as a focal point of any aspiring Italian cook. It's a page absolutely packed with valuable information.

Nearly every recipe begins with a personal note, and, when possible, ends with an ahead-of-time note, most helpful for plan-ahead cooks. Much is to be learned by curling up with this book and reading it cover to cover, a task not likely to be completed without numerous detours into the kitchen to cook.

In case you haven't checked the best-seller charts lately, Jeff Smith, the friendly, familiar face that many of us see on TV, has a new book out. The Frugal Gourmet Cooks with Wine (Morrow, $16.95) is an eclectic mix of recipes that utilize wine to its fullest extent. Not every recipe in the more than 300 includes wine, but all are at least complementary to it.

Smith views wine as a food, a familiar ingredient, and claims that it stimulates your sense of taste and helps cut down on the desire for salt and makes food more interesting. His final section, "On Enjoying Wine," helps the reader with tips on matching wine with food, stocking (frugally, of course) a wine cellar, tasting and serving wines. Most entree recipes have wine suggestions, and he runs through an international range of cuisines in this context, too.

This is not a fancy book, but it is a helpful one with menu suggestions, simple recipes and nice touch with a wide range of foods. Smith may not be an authority in the true sense of the word, but his high visibility almost puts him in that category by default.

King of the Nouvelle Pizza, Wolfgang Puck has pulled together a collection of recipes from his popular Los Angeles "restaurants to the stars," Spago and Chinois on Main. Like many other imaginative cooks, he combines techniques from cuisines the world over and implements them with great gusto.

Pizza and pasta recipes reign supreme here, delicacies like Lobster Ravioli with Fresh Dill

Marcella Hazan

Wolfgang Puck

Sauce or Pizza with Smoked Salmon and Golden Caviar. This is not what you'll find at your local pizza parlor; no pedestrian tastes are catered to. It's trendy, of course, but it's food with a flair. If you've been turned away at his restaurants, at least you can attempt making the food at home.

Back to pedestrian tastes: Without a doubt the authorities in this category are Jane and Michael Stern. They have the final word in what the real America eats — the man on the street, you, me, and the many who haven't yet mustered the courage to admit that they actually love that stuff they were brought up on. Street food, bar food, diner food, deli food, country-store food is all neatly categorized in Real American Food (Knopf, $19.95) with great joy and enthusiasm.

The book is pure pleasure to read, even though mere reading of a few of the items might cause vicarious stomach upset (viz. Rochester Garbage Plate, with a spice-laden sauce, potatoes, bacon grease, baked beans, onions and hot dogs and much, much more).

Humble classics like Buffalo Chicken Wings, Philadelphia Cheese Steaks, Fried Grits, Ham and Red-Eye Gravy and Egg Creams have been garnered from all regions of the country by two people who could be called the court jesters of American food. Except they really are serious. Everyone should enjoy this book on some level. It's good fun.

Speaking of a serious rhapsodize about the food having a life of its own, wax poetic about the dimensions of food. What ecstasy, what bliss! This man loves his subject. It's contagious. Recipes are included.

So trust any of these experts. They've all created cookbooks that would be worthy additions to anyone's library.

Here it is: real Philadelphia Cheese Steak from "Real American Food":

- SOUTH PHILLY CHEESE STEAK SANDWICH
 8 ounces Cheez Whiz (the only correct brand)
 2 tablespoons butter
 1 large onion
 oil or butter for frying
 4 frozen sandwich steaks
 2 Italian rolls, sliced lengthwise condiments to taste:
 ketchup, red and green peppers, hot sauce

Put Cheez Whiz in top of a double boiler with butter. Heat until soft and drippy. Keep warm over hot water as you prepare steaks.

Slice onion and fry it in oil or butter on a griddle. When golden brown and squiggly, scoop onions to side of grill and slap on a couple of slabs of prefab frozen sandwich steaks. When brown on one side (less than a minute), flip and cook other side, pushing onions back to mingle with meat. The steaks will be done within 90 seconds, total, but don't worry if they loiter on the grill with the onions a few extra minutes.

When ready to serve, take a sharp knife and hack steaks into helter-skelter ribbons, then scoop them up with onions and load them into the rolls. Immediately spoon on molten cheese and add desired condiments.

Serves 2.

Finally, we come the voice of authority on Cajun cooking, Paul Prudhomme. His best-selling cookbook is owned by hundreds of thousands; now you can hear his voice and watch him on a two-volume "video cookbook." And what a show it is! Chef Paul Prudhomme's Louisiana Kitchen (J2 Communications, $19.95 each) tackles two themes. The first is a Complete Cajun Meal Featuring Blackened Redfish and the second is Cajun and Creole Classics — Jambalaya, Blackened Prime Rib, Chicken and Andouille Smoked Sausage Gumbo.

Sit tight and prepare yourself to watch this dervish hurl fistfuls of seasonings into saute pots,

Critical Condition (R) Richard Pryor made this movie right around the time rumors about his health started circulating, and he looks shockingly gaunt. It would be convenient to blame the rest of the movie on Pryor's health, too, but others deserve the blame — screenwriters Denis and John Hamill, in particular. In fact, "Critical Condition" is one of those pictures that probably make half of the audience consider taking up careers as screenwriters. Surely, any of us fools could write something as senseless and silly. (But would we want to?)

Until recently the great black hope of American screen comedy, Richard Pryor is reduced here to popping his eyes to try to be funny. He plays a convict who fakes insanity to avoid prison. While undergoing a psychiatric evaluation at a New York hospital, he is mistaken for a doctor. A storm has caused a power shortage, sending the hospital staff into chaos. The movie shows how a well-meaning fool (Pryor, that is) can whip a complacent hospital bureaucracy into shape.

From a satirical point of view, the most promising character is the surgeon, played by Bob Dishy — a nervous country-club kind of guy who's obsessed by fear of malpractice lawsuits. Mostly, though, the picture settles for raunchy jokes, as in the bit with a sexpot patient who entices Pryor — until he realizes she needs to be treated for VD. Some of this low-comedy humor is funny, almost in spite of itself. Some of it isn't. Generally frantic and noisy, the movie finishes with a sentimental romantic flourish between Pryor and female lead Rachel Ticotin. In context, the attempt at warm human feelings is unseemly. Grade: ****

Duet for One (R) Movies like "Critical Condition" go wrong because their makers seem to be contemptuous of, or indifferent to, the audience. But movies sometimes go wrong even though everyone involved was trying their damndest. An example is "Duet for One," an "opening out" of the play by Tom Kepinski about a concert violinist who contracts multiple sclerosis and is forced to re-evaluate her life. Julie Andrews, who stars as the violinist, has said that this role is her best. Watching the film, you can feel Andrews is giving her all, and her performance is gallant, but supercilious and downright nostrily. Playing her rather selfish conductor husband, Alan Bates looks as shockingly puffy as Pryor looked gaunt in "Critical." Bates' performance isn't bad, though, and perhaps, there's meaning in the fact that he resembles Beethoven. Essentially, this is an illness-of-the-week TV-movie done for the big screen. It's overwrought and over-explicit, with lots of symbolic touches. Grade: ****

New home video

Absolute Beginners (PG-13) HBO/Cannon, $79.95. This largely ignored 1986 release showcases the talents of rock video director Julien Temple. It's ambitious and splashy, if erratic and ultimately tiresome. Try it, though. An adaptation of Colin MacInnes' 1959 novel, which celebrated "The Teenager," and climaxed in racially motivated gang warfare, the movie is like a pop "West Side Story" (without the latter's rigor and great score, alas). "Beginners" is best in its isolated numbers (with David Bowie, Ray Davies and Sade) and always dazzling to look at. Grade: *****

Extremities (R) Paramount, $79.95. Farrah Fawcett turns the tables on a rapist in this hokey and probably exploitative film, from the stage play. Some misguided people consider this though-provoking. Farrah is good, though. Grade: ****

(Film grading: **** excellent, *** good, ** fair, * poor)

Allen recalls 'Radio Days'

By Bob Thomas
The Associated Press

Cinema Review

Today's generation can't fully comprehend what radio entertainment meant to their parents and grandparents in the 1930s and '40s. Radio was "the theater of the mind," an escape from the Depression and wartime and Cold War tensions into a land of make-believe.

Woody Allen remembers. He was growing up during the war years, when Americans huddled around their radios to hear the latest battle news, as well as mysteries, comedies, adventures, gossip and quiz shows. He has fashioned his memories into another of his impeccable comedies, "Radio Days."

With his customary disregard for conventional construction, Allen presents two story lines: the lives of an extended New York family crowded under one roof; and the glittery world of personalities who dwelled in the upper reaches of Radio City. Director-writer Allen narrates "Radio Days" but does not appear. The seemingly autobiographical story is told through the eyes of Joe (Seth Green), the boy who lives his fantasies through the radio. No wonder. His parents (Julie Kavner and Michael Tucker) are always bickering, his aunt (Dianne Wiest) is constantly on the prowl for eligible males and an uncle (Josh Mostel) is forever bringing home fish his friends give him.

Life in New York's Rockaway Beach is paralleled with the doings of radio stars, notably a cigarette girl (Mia Farrow) who rises to have her own gossip show. They are a serene lot, these radio luminaries, dividing their times between studios and nightclubs.

Superbly edited by Susan E. Morse, "Radio Days" maintains a joyful balance between reality and a world of dreams. Just when the Rockaway family starts to grow tedious (they have been pictured in the works of Neil Simon, Philip Roth and others), Allen switches the dial to a delightful radio vignette. The swing music of the period, supervised by Dick Hyman, is lovingly reproduced.

Actors always perform their best for Woody Allen. Mia Farrow again proves her versatility as the dippy star-struck blonde. Dianne Wiest is gloriously poignant as the ever-hopeful manhunter. Some of Allen's favorites — Jeff Daniels, Danny Aiello, Tony Roberts — appear in small roles. Even Diane Keaton turns up briefly as a nightclub chanteuse singing "You'd Be So Nice to Come Home to."

The Orion release bears a PG rating, mostly for some sexual bloop. The running time is 85 minutes.

Vadim films at N.M. jail

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Part of the New Mexico State Penitentiary will be turned into a movie set for a new version of "And God Created Woman" by Roger Vadim, the director who made the original 30 years ago.

Filming should begin next month at the prison building south of Santa Fe and should continue for several weeks, Lenny Vullo, the film's production manager, said Wednesday.

Vadim, perhaps best known as the ex-husband of Brigitte Bardot and Jane Fonda, is directing and co-producing the picture, which Vullo said will likely be released later this year.

Rebecca DeMornay will play an inmate at a women's prison in the film's early scenes, Vullo said. Her role was originally played by Bardot.

Vadim's original film was in French, while the remake will be in English.

Aussie hopes critics kinder

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Aussie movie star Bryan Brown, panned in last year's $27-million flop "Talpian," hopes to win over the critics with the movie, "The Good Wife," to be released in the United States later this month.

The movie, co-starring his wife, English actress Rachel Ward, is set in the Australian bush, portraying the obsession of a bored country housewife for the town lothario.

Brown, in keeping with the strong, silent but sensitive character he developed in "Breaker Morant" and "The Horns," plays her bewildered but caring husband.

He shrugged off the failure of "Talpian" with the critics, saying, "They were in the mood to cane me."

His other movie for 1986, "F.X.," had done well, he said. Brown and Ward wanted to promote "The Good Wife" in the United States, but the couple are expecting a child later this month, Brown said.

Author says sci-fi books are important

By Tom Alnehart
The Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Like a multi-armed life-form uprooted from Venus and brought to Earth for an autopsy, science fiction would die if it were accepted by the literary establishment, says Orson Scott Card.

"The last thing we want is to be captured by the same people who killed literary fiction," said Card, a Greensboro resident whose novel "Ender's Game" this year won the Hugo and the Nebula — the top two national awards in science fiction. "We're shaping the future and they're not."

Card, 35, said most modern literature dwells endlessly on the same theme — "the contemporary angst, the midlife crises of professors in second-rate colleges." He said this type of novel developed in the 1930s and has been beaten to death in literature classes ever since.

"That's the death of literature — professors teaching children how to think." By contrast, he said, science fiction has an unlimited choice of theme and setting, it continues to evolve and it is read voluntarily by interested readers.

Card said science fiction, more accurately called speculative fiction, has matured beyond its gee-whiz, "Buck Rogers" origins. It now explores a complex range of human thought, although it still draws strength from its rocket-blast roots. Yet it continues to get hostile readings from many scholars.

"It's definitely a snob thing," he said. "There's a widespread belief that anything that sells well and can be read by people without Ph.D.s can't be any good."

Card defines science fiction as fiction set not necessarily in the future, but certainly somewhere outside the everyday world.

"Science fiction steals freely from every other genre," he said. "We've moved beyond science in science fiction. There's certainly no science in my stuff because I don't know enough about science. My goal is to create art, not devise a new machine."

"Ender's Game" is about a young boy who sacrifices himself to defend Earth in an interplanetary war. It won the Hugo, bestowed by fans, in September and the Nebula, awarded by other writers, last spring.

Card, a Mormon who is most proud of his writings for his church, said his science fiction can't help but reflect his Christian values.

"Ender's Game takes as given ... that it's a noble act to sacrifice your personal interests for the sake of society," he said.

His work represents one side of a dispute among the current generation of science-fiction writers. On the other side, he said, are the "cyberpunks" who write about loners fighting for survival in a terrible future world controlled, for example, by computers. On his side are the writers who explore "new concepts of bonding ... and commitment" among humans of the future.

"The battle lines are getting drawn, and I think the result will be some outstanding fiction," he said. "There are some terrific writers on both sides. As we argue we'll just make each other better."

Card said the current generation is the third among science fiction writers, but writers of the first generation, including Robert Heinlein and Isaac Asimov, are as widely read as they were in the 1940s and 1950s.

The second generation, the so-called "New Wave" of the 1960s, broke away from high technology and dealt with the nitty-gritty problems of real, sweating, cussing people. That's something that movies like "Aliens" are only now catching up to, he said.

The second book in the Ender series — "Speaker for the Dead" — came out last spring, and Card is working on the third book, "Ender's Children."

He's also working on a larger novel series called "Tales of Alvin Maker," about a 19th-century America in which there had been no American revolution. Card said this is a new type of American fantasy that explores the hexers, dowsters and other folk magicians of the period. Previous fantasy, with its dragons and wizards, has been based on old Celtic and British myths.

Card supports his wife and their three children entirely with his writings. He has published nine science-fiction books, the first in 1976, plus books, plays and audio tapes for and about the Mormon church.

Card has two pieces of advice for aspiring science-fiction writers: read all you can and don't worry that your plot has already been written.

"Change space to ocean, change starship to sailing ship, and you have the fiction of the 1200s," he said. "It's all been done, but that doesn't matter.

Book Reviews

Tribes member pens novel about Indians

FOOLS CROW. By James Welch. Viking. 391 Pages. $18.95.

As everyone probably knows by now, the American Indian was badly misunderstood and mistreated by the white man bent on wresting a vast land for himself only.

At first, most Indians were willing to share their endowment of land, water, game and other of nature's amenities. But they were to find that this did not satisfy the voracious greed and desires of the whites. The whites wanted all for themselves, and would use any means to get it.

One of the white man's pretexts was that Indians "were little more than animals and should be destroyed or penned up. Quite naturally, the Indians began to fight back. This led to terrible excesses on both sides. In many ways what the whites did was worse than what the Indians did.

"Fools Crow" is a riveting novel vividly portraying the Indians' way of life, traditions, religion, dreams, visions and love of nature. The setting is Montana after the Civil War and focuses on Fools Crow, a warrior who was to become a medicine man of great perception.

This is no rush-to-an-overpowering-end sort of story. It moves gently through the day-to-day Indian ways, slowly building up to what Fools Crow concludes must be a disaster for his small tribe no matter what it does. The choices afford only despair.

The author certainly should know whereof he speaks. He is a member of the lingering remnant of the tribe he has written about.

'Night of the Fox' is quite a thriller

NIGHT OF THE FOX. By Jack Higgins. Simon & Schuster. 316 Pages. $17.95.

It takes Jack Higgins an uncommonly long time to get the plot of his latest thriller, "Night of the Fox," zooming along properly, but once he does the story becomes so riveting that it's hard to set aside.

As in a number of previous Higgins thrillers, this tale takes place during World War II. The Nazis still are giving the Allies a terrific fight but they are losing the war and they know it.

The Allies know it too and they are in the process of preparing a gigantic invasion of the European mainland. The Germans, of course, are aware of this but they don't know when the invasion will come or where. Not too many people do. One that does is American Army Col. Hugh Kelson.

Unfortunately for the Allies, Kelson is aboard a ship that gets torpedoed, manages to escape the fiery wreckage and, worse luck, he washes ashore on the German-occupied island of Jersey. The Allied high command discovers his location, determines to either get him out or kill him and dispatches Henry Martineau to do the job. Martineau, a philosophy don turned undercover agent with "the look of a man who had found life more disappointing than he had hoped," disguises himself as a top Nazi officer and, accompanied by a young girl, hops over to Jersey and this thriller roars into high gear.

There are chases, violence, sudden death and a subplot involving Germany's Field Marshal Rommel. All add up to a most satisfying thriller.

SHORT NOTICE AUCTION OF RARE VALUABLE STOCK

PERSIAN RUGS AND OTHER ORIENTAL RUGS

A complete shipment of genuine handwoven Persian and other Oriental Rugs had been ordered for Pre-Christmas sales for stores. These goods did not arrive on time and those financially responsible for the unpaid shipment have instructed their U.S. agents to auction the entire collection and other valuable pieces in single units.

This collection, which is over 200 pieces, all sizes, in our opinion, is the finest collection in design, craftsmanship, and colors of handmade carpets, rugs and runners we have ever seen in all our years of selling the finest quality oriental rugs and carpets.

Peggy Lee is back on the road after another near-fatal mishap

The indomitable Peggy Lee, who has fought diabetes, glandular deficiencies, double pneumonia, a near-fatal fall and heart surgery, has just returned from a 10-week tour.

By Bob Thomas
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The indomitable Peggy Lee, recovered from double-bypass heart surgery, is back on the road again, posing her still unanswered inquiries, "Why Don't You Do Right?" and "Is That All There Is?"

Nothing, it seems, can stop the songstress, not diabetes, glandular deficiencies, double pneumonia, nor a near-fatal fall in which "my ribs were torn from my spine." Her closest brush with fate came in October 1985 when she underwent the heart surgery in New Orleans, followed by complications.

"I just came back from a 10-week tour," she said in an interview at her Bel-Air home. "I've also been appearing with symphony orchestras, and it's a real thrill to have all those musicians behind you. I also have a great jazz quintet, so you can see I have the best of both worlds."

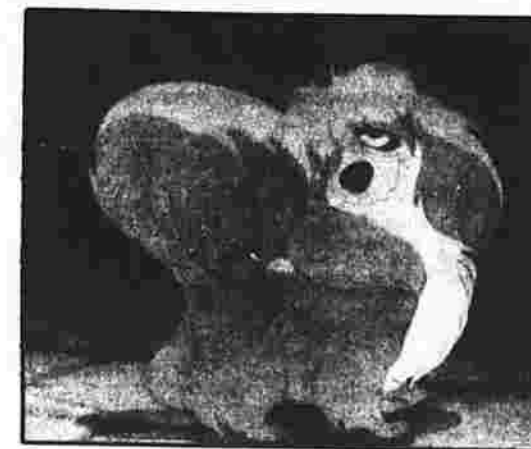

A whole new generation of filmgoers has also been hearing Peggy in the Walt Disney classic, "Lady and the Tramp," which has been earning big bucks ($23 million) in a re-release this winter. She not only wrote the songs with Sonny Burke; she also plays the voice of the canine tart Peg who sings "He's a Tramp (but I love him)."

"The character was originally called Mammie," Miss Lee recalled. "But Walt didn't want to insult our First Lady, Mammie Eisenhower."

The singer recalled that her assignment on "Lady and the Tramp" came about by a happy accident. "I had left Capitol Records for five years because they wouldn't record my version of 'Lover,'" she said. "They already had a huge hit of 'Lover' by Les Paul. Mine was such a different version that I didn't think it competed."

"Sonny Burke and other Decca executives were at the Copa (New York's top night club) when I was singing 'Lover' and the audience was going crazy. I saw from the beginning that it was going to do something. My contract was up and I went to Decca. They said they would record 'Lover' right away."

"Then Sonny was asked to do the score for 'Lady' and he asked me to do it with him. See what I mean about accidents? Maybe they're not."

Peggy Lee is the voice of Peg, a Pekingese in Walt Disney's classic, "Lady and the Tramp."

What does she remember about working with Walt Disney?

"Everything good. It was the first time I realized that enthusiasm is a great, great part of genius. He had enthusiasm he had for every part of his work. He would pose for the animators to show them different characters. He was into every corner of his work."

Besides her tours, Peggy has been working on her autobiography. It should be quite a saga, covering her North Dakota childhood, the band-singing days with Benny Goodman, the hit records, the movie roles, the endless tours, with plenty of heartbreak along the way.

"The tour of late 1985 could have been her last. 'I'd been having problems with my heart,' recalled Miss Lee, who had undergone four angioplasties (balloon surgery). "Each time I would get up and go out on the road again. I was so proud of myself for doing that."

"Then I was down in New Orleans, and as Redd Foxx would say, 'Here comes the big one!' It was quite a shocking experience to find myself in the ambulance on the way to the hospital. I thought I was on my way to the White House (to appear at a dinner)."

"It was too serious to come home. They had to operate quickly. I am terribly grateful to be alive. They had to reopen the chest after one surgery because of complications because of two infections. I will be forever grateful to all the people who prayed for me and sent me cards and called. I was unconscious part of the time, but I know that all of it helped me get well."

Desperate measures
By James Jacoby

When you arrive in a contract that has little or no play, all you can do is determine what favorable lie of the cards will allow you to make that contract and then play for the cards to be that way. Today's hand is an example.

After South had cue-bid the heart ace, North simply bid six diamonds. He reasoned that declarer had six cards in the diamond suit. If he also held the heart ace, a spade finesse would be enough to make the slam. Or so he thought. In fact, the spade finesse was only part of the equation for 12 tricks.

Declarer was up against it. To make the slam, he had to find a way to get rid of three heart losers on the spade

Blazers surprise club in the NBA to date so far

By Bob Baum
The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — At the All-Star break, four NBA teams have won at least 30 games this season: the Los Angeles Lakers, Boston Celtics, Dallas Mavericks and Portland Trail Blazers.

The Portland Trail Blazers? That's right. The team given up for dead by many pro basketball experts after Sam Bowie went out with a broken leg in the fifth game of the season is 30-19 after beating the Lakers 106-104 Thursday night.

"I'm not about to say that the Portland Trail Blazers are as good as the Los Angeles Lakers or the Boston Celtics," first-year Coach Mike Schuler said. "But we've played some good teams and we've beaten some good teams."

"I think we have been most competitive with everybody we have played, with the exception of the first two games with the Lakers."

And he hopes the Blazers exorcised that demon with their victory Thursday night.

When Jack Ramsay was fired and Schuler, a Milwaukee Bucks' assistant, came to Portland, the new coach made no secret that he thought the 7-foot-1 Bowie was the most important ingredient to the team's potential success.

So when Bowie suffered his second broken leg in two years Nov. 7, the outlook for the Blazers appeared dismal. But since then the team is 29-15.

"I didn't have any idea what was going to happen when Sam went out," Schuler said. "I told the players that they all would have to do more, and they have."

Schuler traces the team's good fortune to the unexpected good play of Steve Johnson at center. Johnson, who had bounced around with three NBA teams, came to the Trail Blazers in a trade from San Antonio for Mychal Thompson.

He was considered more of a small forward than a center. But he was thrust into the starting center's role when Bowie was hurt. His impressive play inside surprised the coaching staff.

"The play of Steve Johnson, which allowed us to establish an inside post game, is such a big, big thing for us," Schuler said.

The Blazers also seem to like each other. Their racehorse offense, triggered by Clyde Drexler and Kiki Vandeweghe, has been either first or second in the league in scoring throughout the season.

Their field goal percentage is among the league's best, and their defense, while not great, is a definite improvement over last season's 40-42 club.

Kenny Carr, despite a recent problem with a sore back, is having his best pro season, averaging 10.8 rebounds per game.

Second-year point guard Terry Porter has become increasingly adept at running the Portland offense, recording his first "triple-double" against the Lakers with 18 points, 13 assists and 10 rebounds.

Off the bench, Schuler has used Jerome Kersey and Jim Paxson liberally and has split backup center time between veteran Caldwell Jones and rookie Kevin Duckworth, who came to Portland from San Antonio in a trade for disgruntled Walter Berry.

"The team jelled a lot quicker than anybody expected," Johnson said.

Schuler is confident his team won't collapse as last season's Blazers did in a February swoon that eventually cost Ramsay his job.

"I'm really happy with our team," Schuler said. "Our guys are playing well together. It's for the most part a very unselfish team. For the most part, they believe in the things we are trying to do."

Question on Ford's home causing Clemson confusion

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — The question of who actually owns the 4,160-square-foot house where Clemson football coach Danny Ford resides is causing confusion at the university.

If the state owns the $537,000 home, Clemson may have to start charging Ford rent. If the state doesn't own it, then the university may have to give the property back to IPTAY, the school's athletic booster club.

The house near the Clemson campus was built in 1983 with private funds provided by IPTAY.

Ford's contract calls for the school to provide the house as the head football coach's residence. It also serves as a recruiting and entertainment center for athletic prospects, staff and coaches.

IPTAY budgeted $400,000 for the project. When construction exceeded that amount, Clemson's athletic department contributed $137,000.

Ownership and control of the house and surrounding 1.1 acres was transferred from IPTAY to Clemson University in 1984. But the university failed to get state approval for the transfer.

The state auditor's office pointed out the problem in its latest audit of the university and urged Clemson officials to seek retroactive approval from the state Commission on Higher Education, the legislative Joint Bond Review Committee and the State Budget and Control Board.

Thursday, the CHE rejected the property transfer.

Commission vice chairman William Whitener said the decision was designed to send a message to all colleges and universities that they should follow proper procedures and "not be building $537,000 houses for coaches."

Commission member George Brightbaird said the transfer would set a "dangerous precedent" because state law allows colleges to provide rent-free housing only to their presidents. Other administrators must pay rent based on prevailing local rates.

Ford does not pay rent, but must report the perk as income to the Internal Revenue Service, higher education officials said.

Ford's annual salary is a reported $78,000, and the school makes payments on a 157-acre farm to be turned over to him in 1995.

While the commission rejected the property transfer, the Joint Bond Review Committee and the state budget board may override the decision, said Charles Brooks Jr., the CHE's acting executive director.

David Larson, Clemson's vice president for business and finance, said his next step will be to "check with some other state officials and see what we should do next to clear up the title issue."

Eamonn Coghlan breaks the tape after winning the Wanamaker Mile at the Millrose Games last Friday night in Madison Square Garden. He is the favorite in Saturday's mile run in Dallas.

Coghlan the favorite

By Denne H. Freeman
The Associated Press

DALLAS — Ireland's Eamonn Coghlan, the 34-year-old "Chairman of the Boards," who was so impressive in winning the Millrose Games mile, will be a heavy favorite Saturday in the Dallas Morning News Indoor Games.

The mile will be missing ailing Steve Ovett of Britain. Ovett, suffering from the flu, finished last in the Wanamaker Mile in the Millrose Games Jan. 30 at New York's Madison Square Garden. Coghlan overcame countryman Marcus O'Sullivan to win in 3 minutes, 55.91 seconds.

"I'm not fit to face Coghlan and the fast field in Dallas," said Ovett, who ran 4:14.52 in his indoor debut in the United States.

Paul Donovan, a former star distance runner at Arkansas, will replace Ovett. Other challengers include Frank O'Mara, Doug Padilla, Gawain Guy and Jim McKeon.

While illness robbed the meet of Ovett, pole vaulter Billy Olson apparently will compete. Olson, who withdrew from the Millrose Games because of sinus problems, was responding to treatment.

"I'll be there with bells on," Olson said.

The 60-yard high hurdles duel among Greg Foster, Tonie Campbell and Renaldo Nehemiah will be another highlight. Foster spoiled Nehemiah's comeback from the NFL, beating him in the Sunkist Invitational at Los Angeles Jan. 16. Campbell finished second and Nehemiah was third. Foster also won at the Millrose Games, with Nehemiah, the world record holder in the 110-meter high hurdles, second.

The meet has produced several outstanding performances in the past.

Nehemiah lowered his world best in the 60-yard hurdles to 6.62 in 1982. Carl Lewis ran a world best of 6.02 in the 60-yard dash in 1983.

Valerie Brisco ran the 440-yard dash in 52.99 for a world best in 1985, a year after winning three gold medals in the Los Angeles Olympics.

Lewis faces tough competition from Pittsburgh junior Lee McRae, current holder of the world best, in the men's 60. McRae, who beat Lewis in the Millrose Games, set the world best of 6.00 in 1986. Others in the dash include Harvey Glance, Floyd Heard and Emmitt King, who upset Lewis in the meet last year.

Jackie Joyner-Kersey, who broke her world heptathlon record in the U.S. Olympic Festival last summer at Houston, will long jump against Carol Lewis.

NFL work stoppage doesn't appear likely

By Dave Goldberg
The Associated Press

Before the 1986 NFL season, the chances of a strike in 1987 looked 50-50. Now, although nothing concrete will happen for another six weeks, it looks unlikely there will be a work stoppage.

Why? For one thing, both sides seem to realize that the 1982 strike did little but turn off fans — it took the NFL three years to recover.

For a second, neither side seems locked into its rhetoric — the players' demand for free agency; the owners' insistence that they'll go out of business before they grant it.

At the Super Bowl, officials from the union and the NFL Management Council seemed conciliatory, and Commissioner Pete Rozelle and union head Gene Upshaw said publicly they were optimistic that a walkout could be avoided.

But most important may be Upshaw — the ex-player successor to aspiring politician Ed Garvey as the union's executive director.

Garvey has been out of football four years, but mention his name to almost any front office employee and the employee's temperature begins to rise. Mention Upshaw and he says: "He's a guy you can talk to."

In fact, for the past few months, Upshaw has been talking to Jack Donlan, head of the NFL Management Council, who will be his adversary at the bargaining table. Their aim is to clear minor issues before getting to the main items — free agency and drug testing. And while the main items will be tough, the consensus on both sides is that the absence of Garvey eliminates the personal animosity that was one of the prime ingredients in the 1982 strike.

"With Garvey," says one club official, "I always had the feeling that if you said one thing, he'd say the other — just on general principles."

The NFL's other main problem, the television contract, is expected to take form in early March. And while no figures have been formally proposed, it looks like things may not be as bad for the NFL as they might have been.

The key is a short contract — in this case, three years. The current contract is for $2.1 billion over five years, and prior to that, four years was the standard length.

But five years proved to be too long — the networks were locked into the long-term contract when cable, cassettes and other developments began to dilute the advertising dollar. With a reopening in three years, there's more room for maneuverability and more flexibility.

And if it is a three-year contract, look for the NFL to get about what it does now — between $400 million and $450 million a year.

The reason the NFL can do that well in the face of network losses of over $100 million the past couple of years? There may be a couple of areas of leverage for Rozelle, who has proved in the past to be a master at using even a hint of an opening.

One is what one negotiator called a "mini-deal" for non-Monday night prime time games. An outlet without the NFL — CBS or HBO or Fox Broadcasting — probably would pay more than the games are worth just to get a foot in the door and there even in some talk of CBS getting the package.

There's also some lobbying to end the traditional Sunday alignment of CBS-NFC and NBC-AFC. NBC is the prime lobbyist — the AFC generally is in the smaller markets and, at least for the present, has the less attractive teams. It might be willing to pay more to get the NFC, which would mean CBS would have to bid more to keep it.

The main off-season guessing game is figuring out if Tampa Bay will keep the rights to quarterback Vinny Testaverde or trade them and keep Steve Young.

The best guess? Testaverde will play in Tampa Bay — if he goes, so (probably) would the few remaining Tampa Bay fans who choose to show up eight Sundays a year.

Moreover, the cost of trading for Testaverde would be prohibitive.

The latest vogue is a theory that to make the playoffs consistently, a team needs seven quality players around which to build. No team is anxious to dig into those seven, preferring to pawn off a name player on the downside of his career — as the Los Angeles Rams did when they sent guard Kent Hill to Houston for the rights to quarterback Jim Everett or as the Los Angeles Raiders would be prepared to do with running back Marcus Allen.

So while Seattle Coach Chuck Knox is convinced that a first-rate quarterback could get him to the Super Bowl, he's not about to trade a Jacob Green or a Curt Warner or a Steve Largent to get him. Even a team with as much talent as the New York Giants probably would have to surrender a Carl Banks and, or a Leonard Marshall, dismantling a Super Bowl-winning defense.

But the Seahawks, or the Raiders, Steelers, Cowboys, Chiefs, Chargers or 49ers might put together a package of draft choices to get Young, whom a lot of scouts still consider a gem hidden by the ineptitude around him.

There's a little less chance of a black head coach in the NFL soon — two black assistants have been downgraded from coordinator's jobs.

One is Jimmy Raye, who was interviewed for the Houston job a year ago. But he had the misfortune of being offensive coordinator at Tampa Bay, and when Leeman Bennett was swept out, so was Raye, who now is receivers coach at Atlanta.

The other is Billie Matthews, offensive coordinator under Rod Dowhower at Indianapolis, but downgraded by Ron Meyer when he replaced Dowhower. Dowhower, ironically, ended up as Raye's boss — he's the new offensive coordinator at Atlanta.

That leaves just Tony Dunny, defensive coordinator at Pittsburgh, as the only black coordinator.

Reynolds signs

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Outfielder R.J. Reynolds signed a one-year contract Friday with the Pittsburgh Pirates, the team said.

Reynolds, 26, batted .289 last season in 118 games with nine home runs and 48 runs batted in.

A switch-hitter, Reynolds was acquired from the Los Angeles Dodgers on Sept. 3, 1985, along with first baseman Sid Bream and outfielder Cecil Espy in exchange for third baseman Bill Madlock.

Boston proposal on fighting in the pros is 'ridiculous'

By Maryonn Mrowca
The Associated Press

BOSTON — A proposed ordinance in which police could arrest professional athletes involved in brawls during games got a stormy reception at a hearing Friday from city officials and the general manager of the Boston Bruins.

"This is the most ridiculous thing I've ever seen come before this board," said Councilor Albert L. O'Neil.

If any hockey player were arrested on the ice or police tried to handcuff NBA star Larry Bird of the Celtics, the fans would create an uproar, he said.

"Let's not make the Boston police look like fools," he said.

The ordinance was proposed in January by City Council President Bruce Bolling, who had said that if sports teams wouldn't take responsibility for curbing violence in their games, the city would.

Although the measure is written to encompass all sports except boxing, some observers have said it appears to be aimed at hockey.

At an NHL game at the Boston Garden on Nov. 20, the Montreal Canadiens and the Bruins became embroiled in a bench-clearing brawl that spilled onto a ramp leading from the ice. Eight players were ejected from the game, four players were suspended, $25,000 in fines were assessed and 124 penalty minutes were handed out.

Ryan Walter of the Canadiens received an automatic three-game suspension for being the first player off the bench, while his teammates Chris Nilan and Claude Lemieux both received automatic one-game suspensions as did Jay Miller of the Bruins.

Only Bolling spoke in favor of the ordinance at Friday's hearing before the council's Committee on Governmental Operations. He has said he proposed the measure because he feared increasing violence in sports was sending the wrong message to the city's youths. "The Boston Police Department of any other municipality's police should not have to be in the position of referee," he said. "That's not what we're looking for here."

Under the measure, "any professional athlete engages in competition within the city of Boston shall be subject to immediate arrest ... upon the commission of any violent act during said competition."

Bruins' General Manager Harry Sinden said it would create problems that would far outweigh any good.

"In my wildest dreams I can't envision what would happen if the cuffs were put on a player," Sinden said after testifying against it.

In Detroit, City Councilman David Eberhard said last month he would look into the possibility of drawing up an ordinance similar to the one proposed in Boston.

Katrina Witt of East Germany waves a bouquet to the crowd after winning the 1986 International Free Skating Competition in Tokyo. Witt moved into contention in third place at the Europe Figure Skating Championships on Friday in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

Witt closes in on Soviet pair

flawless but I was a little disappointed with my marks," the native of Minnetonka, Minn., said after getting mostly 5.7s out of a possible 6.0. "I thought my marks would be higher because I did a triple flip."

"It's just a freestyle competition now. It will be difficult but I feel confident."

Trenary has made a courageous comeback from a freak accident in which another skater's blade severed muscles and arteries in her left calf two years ago.

"I'm sick of talking about it," she said. "I've put it behind me."

Tiffany Chin, the 1985 American winner, moved up from fourth to third heading into Saturday's freestyle.

Later Friday, the free dance featured defending champions Renee Roca and Donald Adair trying to hold off Suzanne Semanick and Scott Gregory.

The men's short program also was held Friday night.

In junior pairs, Kellie Lynn Creel and David McGovern captured eight first-place selections in the short program. Creel, 18, of Orange, Calif., and McGovern, 19, of Long Beach, Calif., already have won the Southwest Pacific and Pacific Coast regionals this year.

Witt had 2.8 ordinals after the second stage of the three-part individual competition, and trailed Soviets Kira Ivanova, who had 1.8, and Anna Kondrashova, with 2.6.

Witt jitterbugged to first place in the short routine, skating to a modernized version of "In the Mood." Dressed in a bright blue party dress with a headband, she skipped, bunny-hopped and danced like a girl at a party.

West Germany's Claudia Leistner also had 2.8 ordinals, the same as Witt. But she was in fourth place, because Witt won the short program.

The top four women were so close that the winner of Saturday's long program will take the gold medal. "I felt good and I'm satisfied with how I skated now," Witt said.

Witt was fourth after the compulsory school figures. She is considered the best free skater in the world and is favored to capture the title.

Thomas adds to skate lead

By Barry Wilner

TACOMA, Wash. — World champion Debi Thomas padded her lead by winning the women's short program Friday, while disaster struck 1986 runner-up Caryn Kadavy at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

Skating in a full-length jazz leotard, Thomas hit perfectly on her combination jump and her face lit up with a smile.

"Oh yeah," Thomas said. "I had been having a hard time doing it and that's the main thing (in the routine). I was coming out of the first spin all dizzy."

This time, she hit it perfectly, making her coach, Alex McGowan, beam just as much.

"Mr. McGowan said to have a lot of eye contact with him out there," she said. "I said, 'If I land the combo, we'll definitely have eye contact.'"

"I knew I could do the combo and all the elements in the program."

But when you're out there, you have to do them and I had a good time doing them."

Thomas has just about lost contact with the rest of the field, building a huge margin over second-place Jill Trenary, who got the other first-place vote.

"The free skating is 10 million times tougher than the short program," Thomas said. "I still have to win the long program but I am overjoyed to be in the spot I'm in."

Kadavy, of Colorado Springs, Colo., fell once and also didn't complete a combination jump in what usually is her strongest part of the event. She was third after compulsories but dropped to fourth overall after placing ninth in the short program.

The 18-year-old Trenary, Kadavy's teammate under renown coach Carlo Fassi, continued her sparkling performance. She was second in the compulsories and strengthened that position — and her chances of earning a medal here to qualify for the World Championships next month in Cincinnati — with a snappy routine to a conga beat.

"I thought my short program was

Bruins, Penguins exchange goalies

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Penguins on Friday traded goaltender Roberto Romano to the Boston Bruins in exchange for goalie Pat Riggin.

Riggin will join the team in time for Saturday night's game in Pittsburgh against the Chicago Blackhawks. Penguins spokesman Harry Sanders said.

Riggin, 27, originally was a second-round NHL draft choice of the Atlanta Flames in 1979.

The 5-foot-9, 175-pounder was second-team all-star during the 1983-1984 season with the Washington Capitals. He shared the Williams Jennings trophy with Al Jensen in 1983-84 with the Capitals.

Riggin has played in Boston this year in 10 games. He has a record of 3-5-1 and a goals-against average of 3.39.

He currently is playing in Boston's American Hockey League team, Moncton. In 14 games, he has a goals-against average of 2.55.

Romano originally was signed as a free agent in 1982 by the Penguins. In 25 games with the Pittsburgh this year, he had a 9-11-2 record and a goals-against average of 3.63 before being sent last week to Baltimore of the American Hockey League, where he had a goals-against average of 3.94 in five games.

In another move, Penguins goaltender Steve Guenette has been sent to Baltimore after being recalled by Pittsburgh on Jan. 28. He played in two games and had a goals-against average of 4.25.

Sports in Brief

Whalers host Canadiens tonight

HARTFORD — The Hartford Whalers currently in second place in the Adams Division, host the defending Stanley Cup champion Montreal Canadiens tonight at 7:30 at the Civic Center. The game will be televised by WHCT Channel 18. It is the first home game the station will televise due to the sellout crowd. The Whalers were only a point behind the first-place Canadiens in the division going into Friday night's game at Washington. After tonight's game, the Whalers will have a week off for the All-Star break (Rendez-vous '87). Fans selected the starting team in a two-game series. Ulf Samuelsson and Kevin Dineen are the Whaler representatives. Hartford will resume action Saturday, Feb. 14, at Los Angeles.

UConn travels to Syracuse

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — The University of Connecticut basketball team (8-12, 2-7 in the Big East), coming off a 64-54 victory over Holy Cross Thursday night in Storrs, will face the 11th-ranked Syracuse Orangemen tonight (WTRX Channel 20, WTIC-AM Radio) at 8 at the Carrier Dome. The Orangemen are 7-2 in the Big East and 18-3 overall. Syracuse is led by 6-foot-11 center Rony Selkaly and guards Greg Monroe and Sherman Douglas.

MHS, East hockey both home

BOLTON — The winless Manchester High School and East Catholic High School hockey teams will both be in action tonight at the Bolton Ice Palace. The Eagles (4-8) take on Simsbury High School at 7:15 p.m. The winless Indians (0-16) will face off with Hall High School of West Hartford in the nightcap at 9:30 p.m. The East Catholic girls' basketball team (7-9) will be on the road tonight in Hamden. The Eagles will tap off with homestanding Sacred Heart High School at 7 p.m. East needs only one more win to qualify for the state tournament.

In wrestling action, Manchester High (10-4) will host a tri-meet with RHAM High School of Hebron and Bulkeley High School at the Clarke Arena at noon. Meanwhile, the Cheney Tech grapplers (3-18-1) will also host a tri-meet at 11 a.m. with Killingly and Bacon Academy.

Take the number of seconds (24, 35 or 45) a college basketball player has in which to shoot; divide by the number of seasons (2, 3 or 4) Pete Maravich led the nation in scoring; and add the number of seasons Bobby Knight has been Indiana's coach (12, 16 or 20).

PAYOFF: The answer is also the one-game NCAA tournament record for rebounds, held by Bowling Green's Nate Thurmond.

Sports in Brief

Cougars host hoop tournament

The Manchester Community College men's basketball team (19-3), ranked third among New England junior colleges, host the MCC Winter Basketball Classic at East Catholic High School this weekend. The tournament begins tonight at 6 when Post College of Waterbury (8-3) goes against Richmond Technical College of Hamlet, N.C. (16-5). MCC takes on the Western Connecticut State University JV team in the 8 p.m. nightcap. The consolation game is Sunday at 2 p.m. followed by the championship game at 4 p.m. Tyrell Hartfield, the Cougar's leading scorer, will be looking to become the first MCC player to enter the 1,000-point circle. Hartfield currently has 990.

Flyers' Howe out indefinitely

PHILADELPHIA — Defenseman Mark Howe was expected to be out indefinitely with a herniated disc and would not play in Quebec's Rendez Vous '87 hockey series against the Russians, a team spokesman said Friday.

Howe was diagnosed following a CAT scan Friday. Said Roger Gottlieb, a spokesman for the NHL team, Howe has missed five games with a back that has bothered him since December. Gottlieb said.

Fans voted Howe onto the NHL All-star team that will meet the Soviet national team Feb. 11 and 13.

Dempsey signs with Indians

CLEVELAND — Former Baltimore Orioles catcher Rick Dempsey signed a one-year contract with the Cleveland Indians Friday.

Terms of the deal were not announced.

The 37-year-old free agent made $442,000 last year with Baltimore, but the Orioles refused to pick up his 1987 option for $600,000, thereby ending their 10-year association with Dempsey.

Since Dempsey is a Type A free agent, the Indians will have to relinquish their No. 1 pick in the June draft to Baltimore as compensation. The choice will be the 15th pick overall in the draft. The Orioles also will get a supplemental pick between the first and second rounds.

Dempsey ranked fourth in the American League last season among catchers with a .996 fielding percentage. He handled 719 chances with only seven errors. He has a career fielding mark of .988 over 14 major league seasons.

McNeese State on probation

LAKE CHARLES, La. — McNeese Coach Glen Duhon and his staff will not return next season and the school will not appeal any of the penalties against its program. Athletic Director Ted Brevell said Friday.

"Coach Duhon indicated in October that he would not seek a renewal of his contract. My recommendation, and I feel the university's position, will be not to renew any of the present staff's contracts for 1987-88," he said.

His six-sentence typed statement was made public after Southland Conference Commissioner Dick Oliver announced penalties against the McNeese men's basketball program and all current coaches.

Those include two years' probation, loss of all conference basketball revenues for this season and next season, and loss of two out of 13 basketball scholarships for the next two years. In addition, Oliver said, nobody now on McNeese's basketball coaching staff may recruit for two years, starting immediately.

'Smookey' Gaines steps down

SAN DIEGO — David "Smookey" Gaines, whose team is mired in the longest losing streak in San Diego State basketball history, announced Friday he would resign as head coach effective at the end of the current season.

His decision came one day after the Aztecs lost their 18th straight game and fell to 2-19 overall and 0-9 in the Western Athletic Conference.

In eight seasons at San Diego State, Gaines has an overall record of 108-111.

Gaines will be reassigned as an assistant athletic director for marketing and promotions for the duration of his contract through mid-1989. Athletic Director Fred Miller said.

Curry in need of big victory

By Tim Dahlberg
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Donald Curry, needing an impressive win to move back into title contention, faces unbeaten Tony Montgomery on Saturday in his first fight since a shocking loss to Lloyd Honeyghan cost him the undisputed welterweight crown.

Curry, who blames problems trying to make the 147-pound welterweight limit for his loss to Honeyghan last September, will fight Montgomery at 154 pounds in a scheduled 12-round bout for the USBA junior middleweight title.

A win by Curry would put him in line for a world championship fight at 154 pounds next month, against either Buster Drayton or Mike McCallum. A loss could derail a boxing career that seemed at its zenith last year when many called Curry the best pound-for-pound fighter in the world.

"I want to be impressive, and I need to be impressive," Curry said. "I want people to know I'm back."

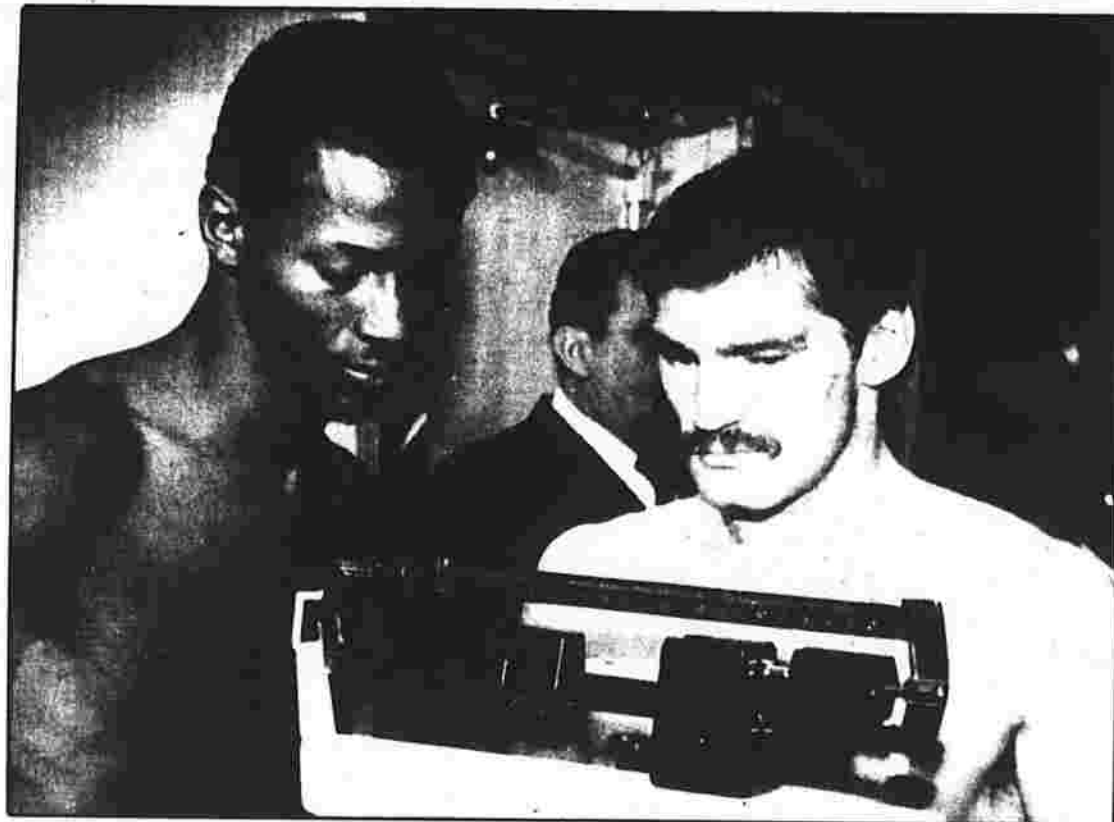

The fight, televised nationally by CBS beginning about 2 p.m. PST, matches Curry against a former sparring partner who helped him train for the Honeyghan bout.

"I was just going through the motions when I was sparring with Tony," he said. "I wasn't paying much attention to training or the fight."

Curry said he had to lose 21 pounds to make the 147-pound limit for Honeyghan, including 13 in the week before the fight. He blames the weight loss and managerial problems during training for the loss.

"I went into the ring extremely weak," he said. "People saw it wasn't me against Honeyghan. People expected me to destroy him and it was a surprise. The only thing I can do now is go back to knocking them out again."

Curry had run up an impressive 25-0 record going into the Honeyghan fight and was the undisputed welterweight champion, unifying the title with a savage December 1985 second-round knockout of World Boxing Association champion Milton McCrory.

Mark Breland (left) of New York and Harold Volbrecht of South Africa weigh in Friday morning for their welterweight title fight Friday night in Atlantic City, N.J. Breland, a 1984 Olympic champion, won the World Boxing Association welterweight championship when he knocked out Volbrecht with a crashing right to the jaw in the seventh round. Breland chased Volbrecht for most of the first six rounds, then finally cornered him late in the seventh. It was his 17th victory and his 12th knockout as a pro after he posted a 110-1 amateur record.

Connors upset, McEnroe triumphs

By Ralph Bernstein
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Czechoslovakia's Milan Srejber upset Jimmy Connors, 6-3, 7-6 (7-0) Friday night to advance to the semifinal round of the $465,000 U.S. Indoor Pro Tennis Tournament.

In the final match of the day, fourth seeded John McEnroe had an easy time beating Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland, 6-2, 6-3.

The 6-foot-8 Srejber featured a powerful serve in eliminating the second seeded Connors. Earlier, Tim Mayotte and Israel's Amos Mansdorf also advanced to Saturday's semifinal.

The fifth seeded Mayotte, who reached the final of this event last year only to default to Ivan Lendl because of pulled stomach muscles, won his quarterfinal, 7-5, 6-4 over 14th-rated Paul Annacone.

Mansdorf reached the round of four with a 6-7 (1-7), 6-3, 6-4 victory over Karel Novacek of Czechoslovakia.

Srejber, 23, won the first set from the 34-year-old Connors, but fell behind, 2-5 in the second of the best-of-three match.

He rallied to 5-5, Connors held his serve for 6-5, and Srejber his for 6-6, sending it into a seven point tiebreaker.

The ninth seeded Czech, who wears size 13 1/4 shoes, then won seven straight points in the tiebreaker to oust the 34-year-old Connors.

Langer, Couples share golf lead

By Bob Green
The Associated Press

HONOLULU, Hawaii — Bernhard Langer left his driver in the bag on the way to an 8-under-par 64 that lifted him into a tie with Fred Couples for the lead Friday after the second round of the $600,000 Hawaiian Open Golf Tournament.

"I carried it around just to show off," joked the West German star who completed two trips over the Wai'aleale Country Club course in 134, 10 strokes under par.

Langer said he used a 3-wood off most tees because "I'm hitting it pretty good and I just wanted to keep it in play."

The strategy helped produce the best round of the tournament, a bogey-free effort that included one string of four consecutive birdies.

He was tied with Couples, who shot a 65 while playing in the same threesome with Langer. Couples

2-putted for birdie on the 18th hole, missing a 15-foot eagle putt that would have given him 29 on the back nine.

The trade winds freshened in the afternoon and became gusty and blustery, sending the late starters sliding down the leader board.

Tom Watson, for example, was within three shots under par at the turn, but backed away in the shift, tricky winds. He finished with a 71 and a 138 total, four shots back.

Jack Renner, who has a history of strong play in this event, was within one of the top spot after nine, then struggled to a 38 on the back and finished at 71-137.

And Corey Pavin, the defending champion and first-round leader, blew to a 75 — 10 shots higher than his opening round — and a 140 total.

Those various misadventures left Larry Mize alone in second at 135, with Paul Azinger at 136, two off the pace.

St. John's whips BC

BOSTON (AP) — Senior Willie Glass scored 25 points and Mark Jackson added 23 as 19th-ranked St. John's rolled to a 65-50 Big East victory Friday night over Boston College.

Glass scored for 17 points in the second half, including 10 in the first nine minutes of the half as the Redmen opened a 40-32 lead with 8:49 remaining.

St. John's raised its record to 16-4 overall and 7-4 in conference play. Boston College dropped to 9-12 and 2-6.

Jim Classon stands tall for Cheney matmen with his unbeaten 20-0-1 up-to-date record

By Len Auster
Sports Editor

While some of his teammates have fallen for one reason or another, there's one matman with the Cheney Tech wrestling team that has risen above it all.

The Beavers, going into today's triangular meet with Bacon Academy and Killingly, possess a 3-16-1 mark.

Jim Classon is 21-0-1. That has set him apart from other members of the Beaver squad, and in line for his ultimate short-term goal — to be state champion.

What are his goals? "Short term or long term?" the confident 16-year-old junior asks right back. "Short term is to be state champ," he responds. In Class M or at the State Open he's asked.

"Both," he answers with the air of a winner. "This year and next. And I want to get a college scholarship," he continues, looking toward the future.

Classon is maintaining his weight at the 133, 134-pound level as he does battle in the 135-pound division. Twenty of his 21 victories have been by pin, including 15 in the first period (each period is two minutes in duration). He had 14 pins in succession until being held to a major decision last Saturday by a Portland grappler. A pin is worth six points to a team's total, a major decision four. His lone non-victory was a tie with Manchester High School's Aaron Dixon. "It was just a bad match," Coach Day (Jim Day of Berlin High School) said everyone is entitled to a bad match and I look at it in that it didn't end in a loss." Classon said philosophically.

The success enjoyed by Classon is new found. He was a junior varsity performer as a freshman, wrestling behind teammate Peter Albert who has just rejoined the squad after winning a bout with the books. He did get in nine varsity matches, going 4-5. He did make varsity as a sophomore, going 8-7 in the 119-pound class and 4-6 at 126 pounds for a composite 12-13 mark.

It was not an indication of things to come.

It was Classon's determination that has made the difference. "He wrestled tournaments all summer and went to wrestling camps all summer," said 13-year Cheney coach Alan Skinner. "Jim is just all desire. He made up his mind to go and learn freestyle. Freestyle is mostly takedowns and a lot of hard wrestling."

"He learned to do a lot of throwing. He got involved. He told me and his mother what he was going to do (and went out and did it)," Skinner says.

Classon went out for Cheney's cross country team this past fall — to help his wrestling. He wanted to build his endurance. "He has just worked hard for it," Skinner said.

From March until June of '86, Classon attended freestyle wrestling camps offered by Day at Berlin High, and by Central Connecticut State University coach Ken DeStefanis at Hall High in West Hartford, four days a week. He plans the same regimen the next two years.

Classon earned a trip to Iowa for Junior Olympic national competition as a member of the Connecticut Junior Olympic Team out of a camp last summer at Waterford High. The trip was from July 14-20 and it took him to Cedar Falls, Iowa. "I wrestled twice there and lost twice, but I learned to be tough," said Classon, attired in a gold Iowa Hawkeye T-shirt.

"Freestyle helped me a lot. It helped me in takedowns. You learn body awareness of where you are," Classon said. "If you're getting in a bad position, you learn how to get out of it real quick. And it helps in hip awareness."

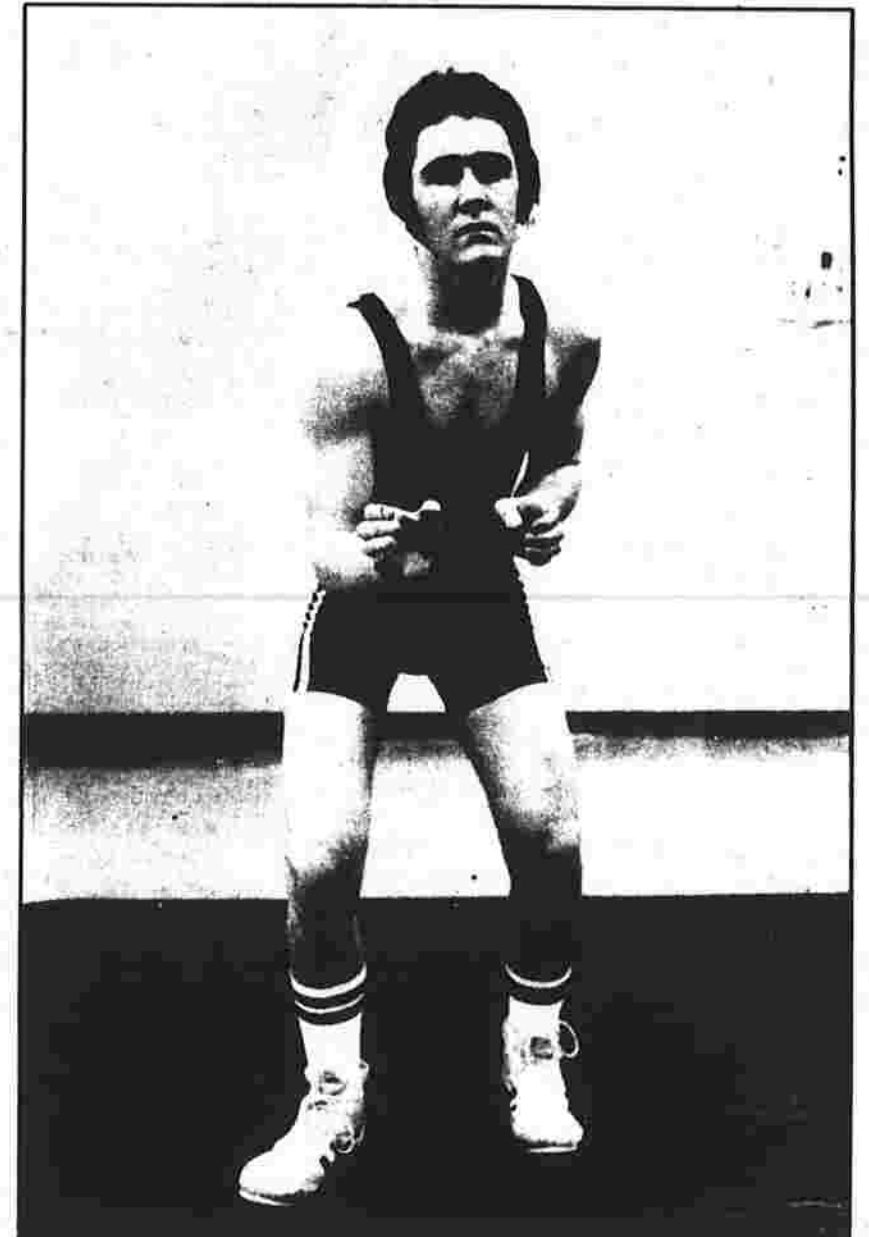

"He uses his hips real well," Skinner says. "If you watch him, he's always covering his opponent." What has the camps done for Classon? "It's made him tougher and very aggressive. He was aggressive, but I don't know if he knew the real meaning of the word," Skinner notes.

High school wrestling in Connecticut is folk-style, Skinner reports. Classon has been able to incorporate the freestyle ideology very well. "If you get the first takedown, 90 percent of the time you'll win. That's what wins for you," said Skinner. "Once he gets them down, he keeps them down."

"Last year I didn't know that many moves and when I wrestled I wasn't that strong," Classon admits. "This year I'm quicker and tougher." His favorite move is a headlock from the neutral position. "And then I try to keep him on his back," the Tech matmen said.

Classon got his first introduction into wrestling as an eighth grader with the combined Bennet/Tilling Junior High team. "People said it would be good for me because I am quick tempered. I have this burning to win and I just picked this sport. It's a great sport. It teaches you discipline, to be tough and it gets you in great shape."

"He was very determined going into this season," Skinner said. "He's been working hard. And now it's paying off."

Navy's David Robinson faces stiff test

By Gordon Beard
The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — David Robinson, Navy's spectacular 7-foot-1 center, faces his stiffest test of the season when the Middies play Miami today.

For the first time, Robinson will be facing someone his own size in Tito Horford, a 7-1 native of the Dominican Republic who is still learning the game.

"It will be like the teacher against the student," Miami Coach Bill Foster said. "Robinson is a senior, and Tito is a rookie."

"But I know Tito is looking forward to it as a challenge," Foster said from Miami. "I hope he learns some positive things from it."

Robinson, widely acclaimed as the likely No. 1 choice in the next NBA draft, has dominated the opposition so far this season while carrying Navy to a 16-5 record.

In his most recent outing, Robinson banked in a 40-foot shot at the buzzer, his first 3-point attempt, to give Navy a 73-71 victory over James Madison Thursday night. He was carried around Navy's Halsey Field House in celebration.

Robinson has averaged 29.1 points and 12.1 rebounds a game, high among the national leaders, and is No. 1 with 99 blocked shots.

Foster noted, however, that it will not be strictly a Robinson-Horford matchup at all times.

"They'll zone us some of the time," he said. "We'll play man-to-man, but Tito will get some help."

Miami, in the second year of a program that was abandoned in 1971 and revived in 1985, has an 11-10 record. Since Horford became eligible on Dec. 20, the Hurricanes are 10-6.

Horford, averaging 14 points and 8.9 rebounds, had 16 points and 17 rebounds in Miami's last game, a 63-57 victory over Florida State on Wednesday night.

In three games against Top 20 opposition, Horford had 13 points and 14 rebounds against No. 16 Duke, 8 points and 5 rebounds against No. 17 Providence, and 13 points and 4 rebounds against 18th-ranked Kansas. He scored 28 against Marquette.

"I constantly see him doing things better, week by week," Foster said, "or doing some things for the first time. He's a quick learner, and works hard."

The game at the Baltimore Arena, starting at 3 p.m., will be regionally televised (CBS-TV) to about 85 percent of the nation.

Cheney Tech's Troy Norman (23) gets set to launch a shot off over the defense of Vinal Tech's Jay Mounts (11) in their Charter Oak Conference basketball game Friday at the Cheney gym. Norman had 9 points in Cheney's 56-52 upset win over the visitors. The win qualified Cheney for the state tournament.

MHS swimmers remain unbeaten

Victory No. 10 in succession was racked up by the Manchester High boys' swimming team Friday afternoon in a 90-80 victory over East Hartford High at the Indians' pool.

The win sets the stage for the Central Connecticut Conference East Division showdown between Manchester and Windham on Tuesday at the Indians' pool at 3:30 p.m.

The Indians are headed for their best season ever, noted assistant coach Jeff Thornton. Manchester will also be out for its first-ever league title, Thornton added.

Manchester swept the 200-yard freestyle for the fourth consecutive meet with Mel Siebold leading a threesome of Mark Foley and Dave O'Brien.

Egils Ramans and John Gorman also were individual winners for Manchester.

Results:
200 medley relay: 1. Manchester (Brian Cromble, Bill Thompson, Egils Ramans, John Gorman) 1:52.53, 2. East Hartford, 3. Manchester.

Bolton a winner; MHS loses

ROCKY HILL — It is a rarity when the Bolton High School boys' basketball team wins a game. It is even more of a rarity when the Bulldogs blow out a team, especially when they are on the road.

Well, it happened. The visiting Bulldogs trounced Rocky Hill High, 51-27, Friday night to register their first Charter Oak Conference win of the year. Bolton is now 1-10 in the COC and 2-12 overall. Rocky Hill falls to 4-6 in the COC and 6-6 overall.

"We're very excited. It was a very big win for us," Bolton coach Craig Phillips said. "(Brian) Rooney and (Wade) Cassells went to the basket real well."

Bolton trailed, 9-8, after the first quarter and 17-15 at halftime. Bolton then held the homecoming Terriers to just two points in the third and assumed a commanding 31-19 lead after three quarters.

"We started a triangle-and-one on (Paul) Cristalli," Phillips said. Cristalli scored 23 points in the two teams' first outing which Rocky Hill won, 68-45. "Ed Cusano did a great job on Cristalli." Cristalli scored only six points.

Rooney and Cassells led Bolton with 21 and 14 points, respectively. Bolton's next game is Tuesday at home against Somers.

BOLTON (51) — Mike Yovinsky 11-23, Brian Rooney 8-17, Ed Cusano 0-3-7, Wade Cassells 6-2-14, Dave DeCompe 0-0-0, Josh Ryan 1-0-2, Drew Pinto 1-0-1. Totals 17-31-51.

ROCKY HILL (27) — Paul Cristalli 3-0-6, Mike Montano 5-1-11, Jerome Bolton 0-0-2, Dave Cusano 0-0-2, Brian Schultz 0-0-0, John Delmastro 1-0-2, Pete Francis 1-0-2, Don Diernd 1-0-2, Chris Knott 1-0-2. Totals 13-17-27.

MHS stopped

HARTFORD — Twice they have played each other this season and twice the Manchester Indians have come up on the short end of the decision to CCC East rival Hartford Public High School.

Seeking revenge after a 72-70 loss to the Owls in a recent home game, the visiting Indians had to play catch-up, against the fifth-ranked team in the state. Public stayed off a fourth-quarter Manchester rally to register a 74-67 victory over the Indians.

The win raises Public's record to 8-1 in the CCC East and 9-4 overall while Manchester goes below the .500 mark with a 6-7 record. The Indians are 5-4 in the conference.

"I honestly don't think we played that well," said Indian coach Frank Kinel, who saw his team tie the game at 68-68 on a Cinque Barlow jumper with two minutes remaining.

"We could have won the game after putting in a less than good effort," Manchester trailed after every turn, 20-12, 30-12, and 54-45. Junior Matt Vaughn brought the Indians back on three consecutive three-pointers in the fourth quarter. Vaughn finished with 15 points. The furious comeback took too much out of the Indians. "We just ran out of gas," Indian assistant coach Carl Bujausick said. Poor foul-shooting (13-for-28) killed the Indians while the Owls connected on 18-of-23 from the charity stripe.

Mike Lata and Rob Greene also scored 15 points each for Manchester. The Indians have a week off before entertaining Rockville next Friday at 7:30 p.m.

"We played in spots," Kinel added. "We shot erratically." Troy Love scored a game-high 29 points for the Owls.

H.S. Roundup

HARTFORD PUBLIC (74) — Paul Spence 6-4-17, Derrick Campbell 20-0-4, Troy Love 12-4-29, Wendell Lee 5-7-15, Robert Campbell 0-0-0, Eric Johnson 1-5-7, Chris Tate 1-0-2, Noka Spence 0-0-0. Totals 33-18-23-74.

Eagles bow

Getting it down to five early in the fourth quarter, East Catholic couldn't come any closer as Xavier High sealed its 61-54 victory from the foul line in All Connecticut Conference boys' basketball action Friday night at the Eagles' Nest.

The Middletown-based Falcons fly to 7-5 in the ACC and 9-5 overall with the win while the loss mathematically eliminates any hopes East had of qualifying for post-season play. East is 1-13 with six games left. It's 0-11 in conference play.

"It was close the whole game," said East coach Ray Page, "but we let them run away with it a little bit in the third quarter."

Xavier, leading 31-25 at halftime, moved to a 47-35 bulge after three quarters. "We cut it to five with six (minutes) and change left but couldn't get it any less," Page said.

Xavier was able to keep East at arms length from the foul line. The Falcons were 12-for-15 in the fourth quarter. Jim Brown was 4-for-5, Eric Stearns 3-for-5 and Sean Russell a perfect 4-for-4. "We tried them all," Page quipped.

Xavier threw pressure at East, but Page expected that. "Everyone in this league presses everyone else," he cited. "It wasn't a determining factor but when we did turn the ball over, we paid for it."

Six-foot-3 Damian Canny had a stellar outing for East with 24 points and 12 rebounds. "They had (6-7 Keane) Chapman on him but Damian was too quick for him," Page said.

Brown had 17 points and Stearns 16 to lead Xavier.

East is back in action Tuesday at 7:45 p.m. at Fairfield Prep.

XAVIER (51) — Jim Brown 17, Kevin Collicott 10-22, Keane Chapman 2-0-4, Eric Stearns 5-9-16, Sean Russell 1-5-7, Craig Solomon 5-4-12, Chris Friz 1-0-2. Totals 21-18-27-61.

Coventry triumphs

PORTLAND — Host Portland High took the air out of the basketball for three periods, but Coventry High finally caught the Highlanders in the fourth quarter for its 12th consecutive win, 51-33, Friday night in Charter Oak Conference boys' basketball action.

"They (Portland) just held the ball," said Coventry coach Ron Badstuebner, who saw his club climb to 11-0 in the conference.

"They were very deliberate. They pressed us and when they got the ball, they held it. We gave them everything (defensively) but they held it on us for three quarters. We just caught them in the fourth quarter."

Portland, 6-7 overall and 5-6 in the conference, had a 13-12 lead after one quarter and trailed by a single digit, 23-22, at halftime. Coventry did lead, 29-24, after three periods.

"Once we got ahead they had to shoot a little quicker and we limited them to one shot," Badstuebner said. Coventry was 10-for-11 from the field the second half, 19-for-27 for the game. Sophomore guard Jack Ayer was 8-for-11 from the field and totaled a game-high 23 points for the Patriots. Jon Seymour added 14 points and Rich Reagan chipped in a team-high 7 rebounds. Dave Guild netted 8 points to lead the deliberate Highlanders.

Coventry is back in action Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. at Rocky Hill High in a COC affair.

PORTLAND (33) — Shawn Murphy 1-0-2, John Dickson 2-2-6, Chorlie O'Brien 1-2-3, Craig Chivers 3-0-6, Dave Guild 4-1-9, Dan Moskey 0-0-0, Pat Smith 1-0-2, Matt France 0-2-2, Mike Tripoli 1-1-3. Totals 13-7-33.

Three-point field goals: Coventry — Ayer (1).

Girls Basketball

MHS fouled up

A steady march to the foul line helped pave the way for Hartford Public High as the Owls topped Manchester High, 58-37, in CCC East Division girls' basketball action Friday night at Clarke Arena.

The win lifts the Owls to 6-8 overall, 3-6 in the CCC East, while the Indians slide to 2-7 in the division and 3-12 overall. Manchester is now idle until next Friday when it visits Rockville High School.

The clubs were deadlocked at 23-23 at halftime before Public moved to a 39-30 lead after three periods. Manchester couldn't recover from falling behind. "The third and fourth quarters were a march to the foul line for them and we didn't," said Manchester assistant coach Mike Masse.

The homecoming Beavers showed why they have character by registering a 56-52 come-from-behind victory over Vinal Tech Friday night in Charter Oak Conference action to qualify for the state tournament for the first time in five years. The win raises the Beaver record to 8-5 for the season and 6-5 in the COC while Vinal falls to 8-3 and 7-3 in the conference. Cheney's next game is Tuesday when it hosts Cromwell High.

"There is a sense of accomplishment. The players are very happy," said Cheney coach Aaron Silvia, who will be making his first post-season appearance since taking over Cheney's helm four years ago. "This is the first team (under his coaching period) that you know you're going to be competitive night in and night out."

Cheney trailed throughout the contest until senior Bill Shea hit a bank shot to open the third quarter to push Cheney in front, 25-24. Despite horrendous shooting from the field (8-for-18) during the third stanza, the Beavers were able to take a narrow 32-30 lead into the fourth quarter. Aggressiveness was the operative word which brought Cheney back against the visiting Hawks. The Beavers' defense limited Vinal to just six third-quarter points.

The Beavers had trailed, 15-10 and 24-23, after the first and second quarters, respectively. "It seemed in the first half we were in slow motion," Silvia explained. "We weren't very aggressive. Regardless of win or lose, we were going to be aggressive (in the second half). We played an aggressive zone defense."

Cheney broke open a close contest in the fourth quarter with a fine shooting performance (9-for-13) from the floor. The Beavers hit their first seven shots of the quarter. Sophomore center Terrence Phillip scoring 7 of his game-high 18 points in the stanza. Phillip also pulled down a game-high 14 rebounds. Senior Tom Dowd added 7 of his 11 points in the critical fourth stanza. A foul-line jumper by junior Willie Ortiz off a steal with 6:38 left to play gave Cheney a 37-32 lead. When senior Mack Hawkins hit a three-pointer with 4:47 left in the game, Cheney had built a 44-35 lead.

Cheney qualifies for tourney

Futility has always been a given when talking of the Cheney Tech boys' basketball team. The Beavers have enjoyed just two winning seasons in the past 30 years.

Perhaps, this year's edition of the Beaver hoopsters ranks among the best ever in Cheney roundball history. Being competitive was something the Beavers always strived for in the past.

The homecoming Beavers showed why they have character by registering a 56-52 come-from-behind victory over Vinal Tech Friday night in Charter Oak Conference action to qualify for the state tournament for the first time in five years. ## Julius Erving in final outing as an All-Star

By Bill Barnard
The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Julius Erving's first appearance as a guard in his final All-Star game Sunday highlights two days of events at the annual showcase for NBA talent.

In addition to the All-Star game, featuring the NBA's top 24 players, the weekend also includes three-point shooting, slam-dunk contests and an old-timers' game on Saturday. Sunday's game is a sellout at the 32,746-seat Kingdome; Saturday's events were scheduled for the Seattle Coliseum.

Erving, who will retire at the end of this season, joins Hall of Famers Bob Pettit and Rick Barry as the only players chosen as All-Stars every year of their career. Erving said he appreciates the games for the opportunity to be released from the constraints of disciplined team play.

"I want my game to reflect my ability," he said. "Sometimes this year I think I have to play down a lot for the good of the team, but the All-Star game will be my chance to break loose, have fun and try out some of the old magic."

Erving was a starter as a forward in each of his first 10 NBA seasons for the Philadelphia 76ers after five consecutive All-Star appearances for the American Basketball Association. The only year he was not an All-Star starter was his rookie season, 1972, when the starting forwards were Dan Issel and Rick Barry.

Until the final results in fan balloting were announced, Erving trailed Michael Jordan, the NBA's leading scorer, and Isiah Thomas, a two-time All-Star Most Valuable Player and a starter in each of his first five seasons. Fan balloting determines who will start.

Erving, always near the top in the voting when he was on the ballot as a forward, said he didn't worry that he might not be a starter in his final season.

"I saw that the early voting was 1-2 with Michael and Isiah," Erving said. "With the type of seasons they're having, they probably deserved to start, so I wasn't afraid I wouldn't make it."

In the days before the All-Star weekend, Erving said he was too caught up in the 76ers' regular season to give much thought to his final appearance.

"The All-Star game doesn't become special until you're there," he said. "Until then, you have other things to attend to."

Pat Williams, former general manager of the 76ers, said Erving's absence will leave a void in the NBA.

"There is no way to measure what he has meant, not only to the 76ers, but to the league. ... to America," Williams said. "He brings a quality to everything he's involved with that enhances it. People talk about the next Dr. J, but there will never be anyone with that combination of athletic greatness and human greatness."

Boston's K.C. Jones, who will coach the Eastern Conference, has a starting lineup of Jordan and Erving at guard, Moses Malone of Washington at center and Larry Bird of the Celtics and Dominique Wilkins of Atlanta at forward.

Pat Riley of the Los Angeles Lakers, who will coach the Western Conference, will start two of his own players, Magic Johnson at guard and James Worthy at forward. Center Alvin Obajuwon of Houston and San Antonio guard Alvin Robertson also will be among the West's starters. The Rockets' Ralph Sampson was voted a starter at forward but he suffered a knee injury Tuesday night and will miss the game.

The Eastern reserves are Thomas of Detroit, Maurice Cheeks of Philadelphia and Jeff Malone of Washington at guard, Robert Parish of Boston and Bill Laimbeer of Detroit at center and forwards Kevin McHale of Boston and Charles Barkley of Philadelphia.

Backing up the Western Conference starters will be Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Lakers and Joe Barry Carroll of Golden State at center, forwards Mark Aguirre of Dallas and Alex English of Denver and guards Walter Davis of Phoenix, Eric Floyd of Golden State and Rolando Blackman of Dallas. Tom Chambers of Seattle was named as Sampson's replacement, but Riley will have the final say on who will start.

Abdul-Jabbar, at 39, became the oldest All-Star last year, breaking the record of John Havlicek.

LANDOVER, Md. — Sylvain Turgeon scored two goals during a 2-minute, 49-second span in the third period to spark the Hartford Whalers to a 5-2 defeat of the Washington Capitals in an NHL game Friday night.

John Anderson also scored twice, including an empty-net goal with 1:02 remaining, as the Whalers moved past the Montreal Canadiens into first place in the Adams Division. The Caps muffed a chance to break a third-place tie with the New York Rangers in the Patrick Division.

Turgeon's first goal came on a slapshot from the left point at 2:34 of the third period, which deflected off Washington defenseman Greg Smith and past goalie Bob Mason. Turgeon scored again at 5:23, putting a rebound past Mason after first deflecting a shot by Stewart Gavin. Mason was replaced by Pete Peeters after that goal, which gave Hartford a 4-1 lead.

In addition to assisting on both goals by Turgeon, Gavin scored a short-handed goal for Hartford at 16:23 of the first period, shooting the puck between Mason's legs after skating ahead of defenseman Larry Murphy. It was the 12th shorthanded goal allowed by the Caps this season.

Mike Gartner scored his 13th goal in 11 games to forge a 1-1 tie at 2:44 of the second period, but Anderson's unassisted goal on a breakaway put the Whalers on top at 6:36.

Anderson intercepted a pass by Scott Stevens and, after his shot was stopped by Mason, the puck was knocked into the goal by Stevens, as he slid into the net.

Wings 6, North Stars 4

At Detroit, Gerard Gallant scored two power-play goals and Steve Yzerman added a goal and three assists Friday night as the Detroit Red Wings earned a 6-4 NHL victory over the Minnesota North Stars in the first of a home-and-home series between the Norris Division's top two teams.

Detroit, 22-24-8, trails the North Stars, 23-23-7, by one point with the teams set for a rematch Saturday night in Bloomington, Minn.

Gallant scored his first goal at 14:16 of the second period, converting Brent Ashton's centering pass for his 26th goal of the season to tie the score 2-2.
