Across the nation

A storm pushed snow, rain and high winds across the West today while rain fell from the lower Midwest through the South.

Snow ranged across the northern and central Rockies and into the mountains of northern and central California. Rain and scattered thunderstorms extended along the coasts of Oregon and northern California.

A winter storm warning was posted for the Utah mountains. Travelers' advisories for snow and gusty winds were posted for the northern mountains and Sierra Nevada of California, the Lake Tahoe area and sections of Montana, Idaho and Nevada. In Kalispell, Mont., the storm dumped 5 inches of snow in six hours Wednesday evening.

Snow and blowing, drifting snow was expected to be widespread across the Colorado mountains and in south central and western Wyoming, with as much as 8 inches of snow possible today in the Colorado Rockies.

Advisories for high winds were posted in Southern California.

Rain spread from the lower Great Lakes across the lower Ohio Valley through much of the Southeast and Florida. Thunderstorms were scattered across Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

Snow showers dotted northern New England and western North Dakota while light rain reached from Iowa to South Dakota.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 a.m. EST ranged from 17 degrees at Yellowstone Park, Wyo., to 75 degrees at Homestead, Fla.

Don't Play With Them

Almost every child is warned about the dangers of playing with matches. But in the 19th century, people who made matches found out too late just how deadly they could be. Match heads then were made with white phosphorus, which proved fatal. Workers developed necrosis, a bone disease. By 1910, the incidence of necrosis had become so serious that the United States placed a high tax on the poisonous phosphorus matches, thus ending their production.

Almanac

Today is Thursday, March 19, the 78th day of 1987. There are 287 days left in the year. This is the date the swallows traditionally return to the San Juan Capistrano Mission in California.

Today's highlight in history: Three hundred years ago, on March 19, 1687, French explorer Robert Cavalier, sieur de La Salle, the first European to navigate the length of the Mississippi River, was murdered by a National Guard jet tanker near Greenwood, Ill.

One year ago: At the conclusion of two days of talks with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, President Reagan endorsed a $5 billion program to deal with acid rain.

In 1917, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the eight-hour work day for railroads.

In 1918, Congress approved daylight-saving time.

In 1920, the U.S. Senate for the second time rejected the Treaty of Versailles, setting the stage for a decade of American isolationism.

In 1931, Nevada legalized gambling.

In 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt ordered that men between the ages of 45 and 64 register for non-military duty.

About 100 people were killed as Kamikaze planes attacked the USS Franklin off Japan. The ship, however, was saved.

In 1951, Herman Wouk's war novel "The Caine Mutiny" was first published.

In 1953, the Academy Awards ceremony was telecast for the first time. "The Greatest Show on Earth" was named Best Picture of 1953 during the broadcast.

In 1976, Buckingham Palace announced the separation of Princess Margaret and her husband, the Earl of Snowdon, after 15 years of marriage.

In 1979, the U.S. House of Representatives began television broadcasts of its day-to-day business.

Today's birthdays: Judge John Sirica is 83. Actor-director Patrick McGeehan is 80. Author Philip Roth is 54. Actress-singer Phyllis Newman is 52. Actress Ursula Andress is 51. Lynde Bird Johnson Robb is 43. Actor Bruce Willis is 32.

"Right Stuff" hero Chuck Yeager says he emptied his garage to gather papers and paraphernalia he donated to Marshall University in Huntington, W. Va.

"I'd like to quote the old proverb: 'One man's junk is another man's treasure,'" Yeager said Wednesday as he and his wife, Glennis, presented the collection to the university's Foundation for the Society of Yeager Scholars.

The collection includes Yeager's World War II letters to his wife, his correspondence with several presidents, and videotapes, trophies, movie reels, photographs and documents.

The retired Air Force brigadier general and Logan County native also handed over fishing books and a pocket knife he carried on World War II flights and the wind tunnel model of the Bell X-1, the plane he flew in 1947 to break the sound barrier.

Roosevelt, 79, of Newport Beach, was admitted Sunday to University of California-Irvine Medical Center, hospital spokeswoman Dale Eastman said Wednesday, and was scheduled for surgery today.

"The prognosis is probably very good," said Roosevelt's doctor, former UCI Dean Stanley Van Den Noort.

Roosevelt, a retired Marine Corps Reserve brigadier general and former six-term congressman, will probably spend a week in recovery after the surgery, Eastman said.

Bowle on tour

David Bowie played two cuts from his forthcoming album to announce a 60-city, 15-country tour, his first in four years.

"It's not Ziggy but this is the nearest to rock 'n' roll I've got for a long time," Bowie said Wednesday at New York's Cat Club, referring to his 1972 album "The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders From Mars."

The tour, with Peter Frampton as lead guitarist, starts May 23 in Rotterdam, the Netherlands, and will include stops in at least 30 stadiums and arenas in the United States and Canada.

"The show will be theatrical. I want it to be a surprise. But it's a mighty big show," he said.

Not nominated

Director Roland Joffe says actors Robert De Niro and Ray McAnally should have been nominated for Academy Awards for their performances in "The Mission."

"I was disappointed that Ray McAnally wasn't nominated for what was far and away the best supporting performance of the year," Joffe said Wednesday. "The Mission" and received an Oscar nomination for the work. "And I was upset De Niro didn't get a nomination for best actor. He was quite superb."

Joffe also directed "The Killing Fields."

Set for surgery

James Roosevelt, eldest son of former President Franklin D. Roosevelt, was scheduled for surgery in Orange, Calif., to remove a possibly malignant lesion from his colon, a spokeswoman said.

Manchester/Area Towns In Brief

Montessori school gets an OK

BOLTON — The Zoning Commission unanimously approved Wednesday night the location of the Hans Christian Andersen Montessori School at the former town library building on Bolton Center Road. Use of the building as a school is permitted by the zoning regulations, but the regulations require that a hearing be held before the commission grants approval.

About 10 people attended the hearing, but none objected to use of the library by the school, commission member Alan Wiedie said this morning.

The building is owned by Harold F. Smith of Bolton.

In other action, the commission rejected a change in its regulations that would have redesignated the Bolton Notch Quarry from industrial to residential and neighborhood business. Chairman Philip G. Dooley recommended the change because the proposed Route 8 expressway would cut the quarry off from highway access, but an attorney for the quarry had argued that the change was intended to put the quarry out of business.

Action on another change, which would list the criteria for issuing special permits, was tabled until the next commission meeting in April.

Sidewalk, curb work slated

The town expects work to begin in April to repair and replace sidewalks and curbs throughout Manchester. Public Works Director George A. Kandra said Wednesday.

Offers for the project are being solicited and a contract is scheduled to be awarded after the April 3 bid opening, he said. The work should cost about $250,000 and will be paid from a $1 million bond issue approved by voters a few years ago.

The locations for the work have not been set yet, although he said some of it will probably take place in the Manchester Memorial Hospital area.

Kandra said many of the town's sidewalks and curbs are in bad condition. "There's miles of walk that need to be repaired," he said.

Comment session rescheduled

The comment session scheduled by the town Board of Directors today from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. has been changed to 4:30 to 5 p.m.; the board has announced. The session is open to all residents. It will be held at the directors' office in the Municipal Building.

MHS students compete for honors

Eight Manchester High School chemistry students are among 114 in the state who competed in a science competition for international honors this morning at the University of Connecticut, where a spokesman at the college said.

In the contest, known as the American Chemical Society Olympiad, the students took a multiple choice quiz to narrow the field down to 24. Those remaining continued to compete in essay exams and laboratory experiments to be held in Bolton.

The students from Manchester High School are Todd Powers, Justin Kim, Dava Greenwald, Phyllis Erin Sullivan, Robert M. Fallon, John Benford and Chase Hyok Yi.

Scholarship applications available

BOLTON — Applications for the Bolton Scholarship Fund are now available in the main office at Bolton High School. Bolton High School seniors and graduates, as well as other Bolton residents pursuing a post-secondary education, are eligible to apply.

Surplus food to be distributed

The Windham Area Community Action Program will be distributing surplus food this month at the following locations and times: Coventry Town Hall, Tuesday from noon to 1 p.m.; Andover Town Hall, Tuesday from 3 to 5 p.m.; Bolton Community Hall, Wednesday from noon to 2 p.m.

Dennis Conner, who skipped the Stars & Stripes to victory in the America's Cup, plans to meet with seven terminally ill children from Australia and New Zealand. The children, whose trip to the United States is being financed through their countries' Make-A-Wish foundations, will meet with the San Diego yachtsman on Monday, tour organizer Ruth MacKlin said.

At the top of their wish list was seeing the America's Cup yachting trophy and meeting Conner, who defeated Australian defender Koekaburra III last month in the sailing series in Australia, MacKlin said.

A New Zealand airline is providing airfare for the children, who are between 10 and 17, and their four chaperones. They are to arrive on Friday, spend five days in San Diego and then Actor-director John Derek lost out on a chance to be a juror in a burglary trial, but his wife, "10" star Bo Derek, was a hit in court.

The couple were green on St. Patrick's Day for Derek's appearance as a prospective juror in Santa Maria, Calif.

Mrs. Derek, 30, who also starred in "Tarzan, the Ape Man," signed autographs, including one for a Santa Barbara County court bailiff.

Deputy Public Defender Michael Dealy mentioned during questioning that Derek, 40, once played a defendant convicted of murder in "Knock on Any Door" in 1949 with Humphrey Bogart as the defense lawyer.

"Yes, I did. I got the chair in that one," Derek replied.

Deputy District Attorney Tom Lake removed Derek as a panelist after a peremptory challenge, which requires no explanation.

Students at Keeney Street School crowd one of the playground's two playscapes Wednesday afternoon. The playscapes have suffered repeated vandalism since they were installed in 1985. Rash of vandalism comes to end after PTA's pleas

By John Mitchell
Herald Reporter

Keeney Street School's two playscapes have not suffered any vandalism since school officials brought the matter to the public's attention more than a month ago.

The two large pieces of wooden equipment, which contain slides, rings, suspension bridges, ladders and decks, were put together by the school's PTA in 1985. There is one playscape on a hill in front of the building and another secluded behind the school.

Since they were installed, repairs have been needed about 10 times. Officials reported that slides were dented, parts loosened from the structures or stolen, and wood marred by graffiti.

In the most serious incident, bolts holding up the bridges were removed and the school had to bar students from the playcape for fear of injury.

Officials have no idea who could have caused the vandalism, adding to the aggravation and frustration. They had tried installing extra lighting but to no avail.

In the middle of February, the school's PTA co-presidents wrote letters to local newspapers, including the Herald, seeking community help in stopping the destruction.

Although residents have yet to offer support, Principal Frank Amara said that besides a couple of beer cans on the grounds, there hasn't been any trouble since the letters appeared.

"I was expecting a rash of vandalism," he said. "The opposite thing happened — we got nothing."

Amara said the school was closed for one week at the end of February due to spring break.

"That's when we got it — during vacations," he said.

"This is the first vacation we had nothing."

Gary Wood, spokesman for the Manchester Police Department, said the PTA at the school notified officers of the problem about three weeks ago. "We put some notes on our hot sheets and had police check the area," he said.

They continue to stop and patrol thoroughly on a regular basis, Wood said.

Amara said that additional time will tell if the problem has been completely solved, but the indications look good.

"I'm pleased," he said. "I think it made a difference."

Deposits may be lowered

Few seniors go to pet-rules meeting

By Alex Grell
Associate Editor

Only 16 tenants from the town's 276 federally subsidized apartments went to a meeting Wednesday night to discuss proposed rules changes on pets during a meeting of the Manchester Housing Authority.

As a result of their comments, authority members agreed to consider lowering the proposed $300 security deposit required for pet owners and the proposed $15 monthly charge to pet owners.

Four tenants indicated by a show of hands that they would be interested in having pets in their apartments.

At present, pets are outlawed. However, new federal regulations require that pets be allowed. The authority is in the process of coming up with some new rules.

While the authority's commission members agreed to lower the security deposit, they suggested a $5 monthly fee might be adequate.

One commission member, James Morancy, said he would check on the possibility of requiring tenants to carry insurance that would include coverage for damage to property so that no security deposit will be needed.

Another possibility discussed was lowering the deposit to $100 or having it paid in installments to ease the burden.

John FitzPatrick, vice chairman of the authority, will check with veterinarians to try to develop a standard for the size of cats and dogs.

The proposed limit on dogs now is 25 pounds. Morancy said he did some checking and found that only two or three small breeds would be within that weight limit.

One tenant said she would like to have a cat in her apartment, but it weighs 42 pounds. The limit for cats under the proposed rules is 20 pounds.

But the new federal regulations do not provide that option. Pets must be allowed and the authority has the right to pass regulations.

Most tenants who spoke said the $300 deposit would be more than they could afford, but some also agreed that a pet can easily do $300 worth of damage.

During the 45-minute discussion, FitzPatrick asked for comment on each section of the proposed rules. Tenants agreed with almost all of them, except for the fees and animal size limits.

Some argued that birds and household cats that have been declawed can do no damage. FitzPatrick responded that it would be difficult to have different security deposit provisions for different pets.

Bike-path bill's future doesn't appear bright

Three sections of a bikepath, two of which would be located in Manchester, would be designed with a total cost of $25,000 as a state legislative panel preparing the 1987-88 budget for the state Department of Transportation, state Rep. John W. Thompson said Wednesday.

However, Thompson, a Manchester Democrat, said he was told by the chairwoman of the Appropriations Committee's transportation subcommittee that the item probably will be eliminated once the subcommittee completes work on the agency's budget.

In January, Thompson, a member of the Appropriations Committee, was urged by William O'Neill, a member of the Manchester Park and Recreation Committee, to ask the General Assembly for $750,000 to construct the path from Charter Oak Park west to Manchester Community College along Interstate 394 and then north to Spencer Street.

But Thompson, who said at the time he thought the price tag was high, decided to see if other money was available for the work. The $25,000 that was proposed would be included in the DOT budget for renovation work on Interstate 394 and the Charter Oak Bridge over the Connecticut River.

State plans allow for building the bikepath along these routes in connection with the renovation work.

However, Thompson said the chairwoman told him this is not the year for the appropriation. Still, Thompson said the DOT might be able to do the design work from other funds appropriated for the highway project.

A bill introduced last year in the General Assembly also sought $750,000 to build the Charter Oak Park-Spencer Street leg, but was defeated.

The $25,000 proposed this year would have been used to design and plan three legs of the bikepath: from Charter Oak Park west to Manchester Community College, from MCC and north to Spencer Street, and along the Charter Oak Bridge.

The entire bikepath as first envisioned would extend 19.5 miles. So far, only 2 1/2 miles have been built, all in northwest Manchester.

This stretch extends from the intersection of Buckland Street and Tolland Turnpike north to the Burr Corners Commuter parking lot and then south to Wickham Park.

A 1 1/4-mile section slated to run along Tolland Turnpike east to Deming Street was killed last year because of opposition by residents.

Another 5.5-mile section is scheduled to be finished by the end of this year. The section would run from Wickham Park to Interstate 394, and then along the highway into East Hartford. Another spur will run from Spencer Street along the connector between Interstates 34 and 394.

Legislators vote to abolish office

But inspector general says he'll fight for his job

By Brent Lovmon
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — State Inspector General Henri F. Erkelens says he's "disheartened" that state lawmakers are moving to abolish his office before he's had a chance to prove its worth.

Legislative Management Committee, controlled by Democrats, voted along party lines Wednesday to eliminate the 6-month-old office of inspector general and transfer its responsibilities to the state attorney general.

Erkelens, who has worked in the office since 1982, said he is not personally opposed to the measure, but he believes in it. "I believe in it," Erkelens said during a 42-second news conference after Wednesday's 137-107 vote.

Erkelens refused to elaborate on the office. He also stood ready to personally do whatever is necessary to keep the concept alive.

Erkelens refused to elaborate on the office. He also stood ready to personally do whatever is necessary to keep the concept alive.

Erkelens refused to elaborate on the office. He also stood ready to personally do whatever is necessary to keep the concept alive.

Erkelens has been under fire since submitting a budget request last fall that included money for wiretapping devices, undercover disguises and guns. Some lawmakers feared Erkelens was more interested in espionage than in ferreting out waste, fraud and abuse in state government, as he was hired to do.

Erkelens has also been criticized for some of the cases he pursued. Erkelens cited one investigative report that devoted more than four pages to a dispute between two employees in the state Department of Administrative Services over the purchase of an office chair.

Creation of an inspector general office, modeled after a similar post in Massachusetts, was first proposed in 1980. Republicans finally won passage of a bill creating the office in 1982. Erkelens was hired to lead the office, which was to investigate complaints of the work of state auditors and other state offices. Including the attorney general. The 26-year-old Erkelens, who was formerly an inspector general with the state military department, took the $64,000-a-year office in August 1982.

House Minority Leader Robert G. Jaekle, R-Stratford, said Erkelens hadn't been given enough time to show how effective his office could be in saving the state money.

"I'm not willing to say we should keep the inspector general forever," Jaekle said. "I am at this point saying it is really too soon to tell. He has not been given his chance to show whether it should be continued, expanded or repealed."

The inspector general's office is part of the legislative branch of state government. Jaekle also expressed concern about transferring the duties to the attorney general, a member of the executive branch who stands for re-election every four years.

"The position is in the hands of a very high elected official in the state... could be used politically," Jaekle said.

The bill approved Wednesday returns to the attorney general's office the authority it had to investigate complaints from employees under a 1979 whistleblower statute. The 1985 law created the inspector general transferred that authority to Erkelens' office.

The attorney general's office would be able to investigate complaints from anybody, including members of the public, under the latest proposal. He would be required to report findings to the chief state's attorney's office, the state ethics commission, state auditors or federal authorities, depending on what he found. The bill would give the attorney general subpoena power, as the inspector general had.

"We did not seek this authority," said James E. Kennedy, a spokesman for Attorney General Joseph I. Lieberman. "However, if the legislature determines to go forward with this, we will fulfill our duties professionally."

The inspector general's office annual budget is currently $28,000. Erkelens has asked for $68,000 for next year so he can add nine employees to his five-member staff, reorganize his office and broaden his investigations.

Erkelens told the legislature's Appropriations Committee during a hearing on his budget request last month that his office has screened more than 100 complaints and settled 40 cases during his short tenure.

Inspector General Henri F. Erkelens tells reporters at a short news conference Wednesday that he will fight to save his post. The Legislative Management Committee voted to abolish the position of the inspector general.

Grandmother prays baby is born OK

WATERBURY — The mother who tried unsuccessfully to get a probate judge to agree to an abortion for her comatose, brain-damaged daughter is praying now for a healthy grandchild to be delivered sometime in late summer.

Betty Fuller, mother of Colleen Fuller 24, said Wednesday the tests following amniocentesis, a procedure in which amniotic fluid is extracted from a pregnant woman's womb, turned up no evidence of physical defects in the fetus.

The mother of five children said she sought to end Miss Fuller's pregnancy in January because she thought only a terribly impaired child would be the result. Miss Fuller has been in a coma since attempting to hang herself in a New Britain jail last Dec. 13.

"I couldn't see to bring it into the world like Southbury," Mrs. Fuller, 59, said, referring to a state institution for the mentally retarded. "If they'd have gone through with it (the abortion), I'd have had an awful heavy weight to go with the rest of my life," said Mrs. Fuller, a Roman Catholic.

She recalled telling physicians: "If any one of you doctors can tell me this baby will be born perfect, all well and good. Because if I believed in abortions I wouldn't have had all the children I had, right?"

"But nobody could say I because they hadn't done, you know, so many tests at that time. Now that they've done this test... I just pray now that it goes on and I'll have a beautiful grandchild," Mrs. Fuller said.

Miss Fuller, who is in New Britain General Hospital, is in her 32nd week of pregnancy. Her mother and brother, Bruce, said. Plans are for doctors to deliver the child by Caesarean section, possibly in early August, they said.

Mrs. Fuller said the prognosis for her daughter, who is breathing on her own and fed through a stomach tube, remains unchanged: she isn't likely to recover. Only her brain function is functioning, Bruce Fuller said.

They said they have no inkling why Miss Fuller, a high school dropout who had worked as a nurse's aide, attempted to hang herself in a bedsheet. Police reports said she was intoxicated at the time of her arrest on a charge of third-degree assault.

Experts on both sides of the abortion question said the Fuller case posed a dilemma they haven't confronted in the past. The closest comparison could be made with cases of babies delivered from brain-dead mothers sustained on life-support systems until their pregnancies were completed.

Mrs. Fuller described the ordeal as "an awful heartache."

"I mean, I think that girl into the world," said Mrs. Fuller, who had four sons before she bore times — to have my girl.

"I always dreamed some day I'd be able when she grew up, I'd go

Ex-prosecutor faces new drug charges

HARTFORD (AP) — A former assistant U.S. attorney was arrested in court on drug charges Wednesday after two other drug charges against him were dismissed.

Paul S. Sherbacow was taken into custody Wednesday in Superior Court by state police detectives who handcuffed him in a rear courtroom corridor. He was charged with selling more than a pound of cocaine to a former client.

The arrest was made just after Judge M. Morgan Kline dismissed charges against Sherbacow of possession of cocaine and conspiracy to possess cocaine with intent to sell.

The dismissed charges stemmed from a Dec. 11 search of Sherbacow's home in Simsbury. The search netted about 10 grams of cocaine, two address books and an Uzi semiautomatic weapon.

On March 10, Superior Court Judge Henry Hammer ruled that the search was illegal because the warrant did not establish sufficient cause to search the house.

Kline upheld Hammer's ruling Wednesday and granted a motion to dismiss the charges against Sherbacow.

The new charge against Sherbacow of selling cocaine, which carries a minimum sentence of five years in prison, arose from the same investigation that led to the December arrest, authorities said.

Hartford State's Attorney John M. Bailey, who authorized Wednesday's arrest, said the charge was made on the basis of a six-week follow-up investigation by state police.

Prosecutors said Wednesday's arrest was based in large part on statements of two men police say were involved with Sherbacow in a $300,000-a-month cocaine trafficking operation between Florida and New England.

The two men, Thomas Cardillo, formerly of Weatherfield, and Charles M. Kehoe of Hartford — have agreed to testify for the state. The two men, authorities said, authorities said Sherbacow, 46, Cardillo is being held on $500,000 bond on Florida drug-trafficking charges. An arrest warrant charging him with sale of cocaine has been prepared and sent to Florida.

Kehoe was released on a non-surety bond March 10 after a three-month stay at the Hartford Community Correctional Center. No details have been given about the cocaine, marijuana and other drug charges.

Commissioner wants AIDS education

NEW HAVEN (AP) — New Department of Health Services Commissioner Frederick Adams says it's unrealistic to "put your head in the sand" and think AIDS will go away by itself.

"We must take a hard line, including premarital screening and education programs that offer counseling in safer sexual behavior," he said in an interview appearing in Wednesday's editions of the New Haven Register.

"We need to recognize the significance of the problem and its potential for epidemic proportions that could be devastating to this country," Adams said, calling on the state to use all means available to curb the spread of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

Adams, who holds a masters degree in public health from Yale, was appointed state health commissioner last month by Gov. William A. O'Neill. He had a private dental practice in Hartford when he was asked to replace Dr. Douglas S. Lloyd, who was denied reappointment.

In addition to the premarital blood tests and public education programs, Adams favors programs that inform the public about the use of condoms in preventing transmitting the deadly virus. He also called for the testing of people who have had blood transfusions between 1975 and 1985, when blood screening for AIDS began.

Acknowledging that such testing would raise civil rights questions, Adams said the importance of stopping the disease outweighed them. When latent AIDS virus is being carried "it should be known in advance so that proper precautions could be taken," he said.

noting that pre-marital screening for syphilis has been going on for years.

While endorsing "abstinence and monogamy," Adams said education programs shouldn't be naive to the fact that condom use can help prevent the spread of AIDS.

The "devaluation of moral and ethical standards that began in the '60s is with us," he said. "It's a plague of our time. (But) you can't put your head in the sand or go in the closet and say we should all abstain and it will go away."

"These negotiations have produced an agreement that is in the best interests of our customers and the company," he said, adding that the agreement allows UI to reduce its earnings without reducing its existing rates or revenues.

He said the savings would be accomplished "through various accounting procedures."

Agreement could save $100 million

HARTFORD — An agreement among state utility officials, the attorney general and United Illuminating Co. could save UI customers as much as $100 million, according to company officials.

The agreement, which must be approved by the Department of Public Utility Control, reduces UI's expected profit level for this year from 12.7 percent to 14.6 percent.

"The bottom line is that UI has agreed to use its current excess earnings to pay expenses that we customers would have had to pay in the future," said Attorney General Joseph I. Lieberman on Wednesday.

UI Executive Vice President Robert L. Flacus estimated the settlement would save UI customers $100 million.

"Our customer costs will continue to remain at levels much lower than those resulting from rates approved in our 1984 rate decision, while preserving UI's critical cash flow at its projected 1987 level," Flacus said.

"These negotiations have produced an agreement that is in the best interests of our customers and the company," he said, adding that the agreement allows UI to reduce its earnings without reducing its existing rates or revenues.

He said the savings would be accomplished "through various accounting procedures."

Crime figure arrested on murder charges

BRIDGEPORT (AP) — A local crime figure who gained national attention for his role in an unsuccessful FBI sting of Bridgeport's police superintendent in 1981 has been arrested on murder and 15 other charges.

Thomas E. Marra Jr. also was charged Wednesday with kidnaping, arson, larceny, forgery and burglary to cap a two-year investigation by a task force involving Bridgeport, Trumbull, Stratford, Milford and state police. State Attorney Donald A. Browne said in announcing the arrest.

Marra, 33, was charged with murder in the slaying of Alex Palmieri, who was beaten to death by a baseball bat on Feb. 6, 1984. Browne said. A foot identified as Palmieri's washed ashore from Long Island Sound in Bridgeport last June, but the rest of Palmieri's body has not been found, Browne lacked criminal intent because he was working for the FBI.

Between the time of the plot and the present accusations:

—Marra's car was firebombed in front of Republican mayoral candidate Leonard S. Paolotta's headquarters during the 1981 campaign;

—He was convicted on charges stemming from an attempt to buy 31 video game machines with counterfeit bank checks;

—He was convicted, while in prison, of negotiating the sale of a non-existent Mercedes to an undercover FBI agent;

—He has been convicted on charges of being the alleged mastermind behind a stolen car ring that authorities believe stretched beyond Connecticut, from Maine to Missouri.

Woman pronounced dead

NEWTOWN — A woman believed to have been killed by her husband who is accused of putting her body through a wood chipper, has officially been declared dead by the state.

Helle Crafts, the Pan American stewardess and mother of three, whose body has never been found, died of an undetermined cause, according to the terse certificate issued by the state medical examiner's office.

The certificate, signed Feb. 6 by medical examiner Wayne Carver but not delivered to the Newtown town clerk until earlier this week, lists the date of death as Jan. 13, the day Richard Crafts was arrested at the couple's home.

The death certificate lists the town of death as Meriden, which is where the state forensic laboratory is located and where portions of human remains were uncovered around Lake Zoar in January.

Helle Crafts was last seen alive on Nov. 18 and has been presumed dead.

Search for new FAA chief begins

WASHINGTON — With the likelihood that Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole may resign this summer, the White House is expected to lose no time in searching for a new federal aviation administrator.

FAA Administrator Donald Engen announced Wednesday that he plans to resign in July after three years as head of the agency that regulates aviation safety.

Engen, who headed the FAA through three of the airline industry's most tumultuous years, gave no reason for his decision, although he said he was making his intentions known "to allow an orderly succession."

Soviet airliner skids off runway

GANDER, Newfoundland — A Soviet airliner skidded off a runway and its wing sliced through a snowbank early today as it was landing at Gander International Airport.

No injuries were reported among the 190 passengers and crew, but the cover was torn off the aircraft's engine and several runway lights were smashed, said airport manager John Pittman.

The pilot managed to steer the jetliner back onto the runway and taxi to the terminal, Pittman said.

He said the runway was closed after the incident.

Transport Canada officials were investigating why the aircraft landed well off the center of the runway. Pittman said the runway was clear and weather conditions were good.

Gay harassment didn't violate laws

CHICAGO — A secretive group that ran a personal ad appealing to homosexuals may not have violated any laws by revealing the respondents' sexual preferences to landlords and employers and warning against AIDS, a postal official says.

The "Great White Brotherhood of the Iron Fist," whose members have not been identified, has claimed responsibility for the Jan. 23 and Jan. 30 ads in the Reader, a weekly newspaper, officials say.

At least 12 men have been targets of the mailings, which have included letters saying the individual may be a carrier of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, said Jonathan Katz, a spokesman for the Gay and Lesbian Alliance at the University of Chicago.

The mailings, to neighbors, landlords and employers, included photocopies of the responses along with letters warning recipients to "avoid this homosexual at all costs," according to the Chicago Tribune.

Panel seeks to cap credit-card rates

WASHINGTON — A House subcommittee, proclaiming a first-round victory for consumers, launched an attempt to impose a federal ceiling on credit card interest rates.

The ceiling would be set at eight percentage points above the yield on one-year Treasury securities, to be adjusted quarterly. If it were in effect today, top credit card rates would be 13.8 percent — nearly 5 percentage points below prevailing rates.

Proponents hailed Wednesday's subcommittee vote, 5-3 along party lines, as good news for millions of credit card holders.

"With the prime rate at 7.5 percent and the Federal Reserve discount rate at 5.5 percent, there is no economic justification for credit card rates of 18, 19 and even 22 percent," said Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., chairman of the House Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee.

Defense shows flaws

WASHINGTON — Opponents of aid to the Nicaraguan contras see their narrow defeat in the Senate as "an alarm bell" signaling an eventual end to military aid, while Democrats say the vote gives them months to trace the use of past government and private assistance to President Reagan's Central American war effort.

Wednesday's 52-48 vote to free $40 million in previously approved contra military aid did not end the debate. Thirty-eight Republicans and 14 Democrats voted to free the funds; 40 Democrats and eight Republicans voted against.

"If we have the votes, there's no reason to filibuster," said Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va. "We just give it the 'ol' alarm clock."

There was no doubt that the contras would get the $40 million, regardless of the Capitol Hill

'Alarm bells' sound for contra rebels skirmishes, because opponents have acknowledged they cannot muster the two-thirds majority needed to override a certain presidential veto of any aid cutoff.

But contra opponents were looking beyond Wednesday's loss to an expected administration request for an additional $165 million for the contras for 1988, which could be blocked by a simple majority.

"This vote is not a victory for the administration's course of action in Central America," said Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va. "It is an alarm bell, it says the American people have grave reservations about the administration's policies."

Byrd and others pointed to the history of sharply divided votes on contra aid, and said no policy that provokes such division in Congress can be sustained over the long period it will take to achieve peace in Central America.

Byrd said present policy presents a choice "between the unworkable and the unacceptable" — unworkable, he said, because money cannot transform the contras into an effective fighting force; unacceptable because the policy could lead to the eventual use of U.S. troops in the region.

Dole conceded the administration and congressional backers of the rebels have done a poor job of persuading Americans the policy is sound.

Their narrow victory Wednesday offered "a new opportunity to do everything we can to convince the American people that what we are doing is right," Dole said.

Aquino may have been bomb target

BAGUIO CITY, Philippines — The bomb that killed four people at the nation's military academy may have been meant for President Corason Aquino, the chief investigator said today.

The device exploded Wednesday at the grandstand of the Philippine Military Academy during rehearsal for Sunday's graduation, in which Aquino will deliver the main speech.

Aquino flew to Baguio City, 130 miles north of Manila, early today to inspect the damage and meet with some of the 38 wounded.

She also prayed quietly before the coffins of the three men and one woman killed in the explosion, the first at the prestigious military academy.

The investigator, Brig. Gen. Jesus de la Cruz, told reporters the bomb could have been planted by Communist rebels or by "disgruntled personnel, whether soldiers or civilians."

Defense shows flaws

JERUSALEM — An attorney for retired U.S. aviator John Demjanuk today put under contradiction in statements from three Treblinka inmates who before their deaths identified Demjanuk as a brutal Nazi guard.

The defense also unsuccessfully petitioned the three-judge panel to admit as evidence proceedings from a U.S. court that it said would show flaws in one of the statements.

The judge ruled Tuesday that prosecutors could introduce testimony from the dead inmates, who identified Demjanuk from photographs in 1976 as "Ivan the Terrible." Ivan was a guard who operated the gas chambers at Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland, where an estimated 850,000 Jews were killed in 1942-43.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanuk, 60, who settled in Cleveland after World War II, denies he is Ivan and contends he is a victim of mistaken identity. He says he was in the Soviet army and spent 1942 and 1943 in a German prisoner-of-war camp.

A retired police investigator, Miriam Radwiker, 80, told the court Tuesday of the statements from the three Treblinka inmates.

She said that one, Eugen Turawski, jumped up and cried, "This is Ivan" when shown a photograph of Demjanuk in 1976.

But Yoram Shetel, Demjanuk's Israeli attorney, told the court the written account of Turawski's statement differed from Mrs. Radwiker's testimony. He said the written record showed Turawski said only, "I think it's Ivan."

"I am asking you, madam, what did Mr. Turawski say?" Shetel asked Mrs. Radwiker. She responded that a mistake had been made by the clerk filling out the record.

Shetel also questioned Mrs. Radwiker about the statement she took from a second Treblinka inmate, Abraham Goldfarb, also now dead.

Bomb threat empties Amtrak train

DU QUOIN, Ill. — More than 100 passengers and crew members were evacuated from Amtrak's City of New Orleans train today because of a bomb threat which proved to be false, a State Police officer said.

The train was searched. We came up zero," Sgt. Ray Lichliter said here. "We're reloading the train."

Amtrak train No. 59 en route from Chicago to New Orleans was stopped and evacuated in Ullin, about 18 miles north of Cairo in southern Illinois, around 10:45 a.m., Lichliter said.

Amtrak officials in Fort Washington, Pa., had told police that a passenger carrying a bomb and three guns would be boarding the train in Carbondale, the sergeant said. Carbondale is about 60 miles north of Ullin.

Reagan pledges action on acid rain

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is renewing a pledge to Canada to do more about acid rain, but environmentalists are saying Reagan is not doing enough to solve the problem himself.

The president said in a statement Wednesday he would seek $2.5 billion over five years to move into commercial use the new technologies that cut the precursor emissions of acid rain.

This is the sum that special representatives of Reagan and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney called for more than a year ago in a program that the president and other officials have said they supported — but without requesting new money to meet the target.

Mulroney asked Reagan in a telephone call early this year to re-examine the funds devoted to the program, White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater said. The prime minister has requested a decision before this year's summit conference of the two leaders in Ottawa April 5-6.

Leading broker plans guilty plea

NEW YORK — Boyd L. Jefferies, one of nation's most successful securities brokers, said today he would plead guilty to criminal charges related to trading stocks with former speculator Ivan F. Boesky.

Jefferies, founder and chairman of Los Angeles-based Jefferies & Co., said he also resigned from the firm.

He said in a letter to the firm's employees and shareholders that he would plead guilty to two felony counts of violating federal securities laws.

The charges resulted from a transaction in which he agreed to buy certain stocks from entities controlled by Boesky with the understanding he would sell the stocks back to Boesky later.

The transaction, known as "parking" securities, enabled Boesky to falsify the true extent of his stock holdings, Jefferies' statement said.

Pollution dilemma confusing

If the average citizen with no great knowledge of the delicate environment in which we live is confused, who can blame him?

He can be forgiven if he concludes that the only way to protect the environment from mankind is to remove mankind from it.

The prospect is really not that discouraging, but there is not much cause for rejoicing either.

The argument over potential pollution of the major reservoir that lies under most of Manchester illustrates the dilemma. When Manchester Lumber Co. proposed to locate a humbyard over the aquifer, not too far from town wells that tap its water for Manchester drinking, concern was raised over possible pollution of the aquifer.

As a result of that concern, plans were made to direct drainage from the property, not into dry wells on the site as originally planned, but into pipes that would carry it into the Hockanum River.

When that change was approved, the information was that the waters of the Hockanum and the hidden waters of the aquifer did not intermingle, or at least it was very difficult for them to get together.

But Arthur Glaeser, chairman of the town's Conservation Commission, pursued the matter further. He said that in conversations with officials from the state's Department of Environmental Protection, he has learned that it is next to impossible for the Hockanum and the aquifer not to exchange.

As a result, the commission wants to urge the town to require that the drainage be discharged farther downstream on the Hockanum.

That move may be worth the added cost, a cost that would probably be borne in part by the town.

But because all of the lower end of the Hockanum and that part of the Connecticut River fed by the Hockanum are both over an aquifer, it seems we might simply be moving potential pollution problems downstream.

And we would still be doing nothing about somebody else who might pollute it upstream.

On-site disposal has been expoused in recent years as the most economical way to get rid of drain water and the best way to recycle it. Fear that indestructible chemicals will find their way into drain water seems to have altered that view, or at least made it inapplicable to land that lies over an aquifer.

Draining into surface watercourses does not seem to be any better.

The thing to do is to make it as certain as possible that pollutants don't get into the drain water in the first place. But we can't pipe drain water all the way to the Atlantic Ocean to protect ourselves against the possibility of pollution.

Layoffs leave white-collar workers blue

A young man named Andre Dawson will earn about $500,000 this year. That's about half of what he took home last year. A helluva pay cut.

Mr. Dawson is a baseball player, an outstanding one in the prime of his career. The thinness of his pay envelope is accounted for by a decision on the part of the major league baseball team owners to cut their payroll. The same decision has been made by the managers in scores of industries these past six or seven years. What is remarkable about Mr. Dawson's drop in income is that it had seemed he was in one of those occupations which was immune to unilateral decisions by the boss. Mr. Dawson, after all, has unique and valuable skills. What the manager looks at him, he knows that while there are 11 men out on the street who'd like Mr. Dawson's job, none of them can do it as well.

Nevertheless, Mr. Dawson has found out that no inconsiderable cost to himself that he has nowhere near the bargaining power he thought he did. A number of other high-priced baseball stars have learned the same thing this spring: As individuals, even the best are relatively weak. For that reason, there is a lot of union talk around the league.

In short, these people aren't slouches but they get pink-slipped just as fast as any of the 24,000 A.T.&T. people who lost their jobs last year. If commodity journalists, one-of-a-kind talents, can be sent whirling out the door, what does the future hold for white-collar employees in the more run-of-the-mill positions in business?

IT IS AN AMERICAN tradition, although not one we should boast about, to treat blue-collar people with a certain economic savagery. It's always been a hire 'em in January, lay 'em off in September proposition. Blue-collar workers are hourly workers or piecework workers, but white-collar

"So far, so good — what's your next move going to be?"

The White House Keeping a sense of humor

By W. Dale Nelson

WASHINGTON — In his first seven weeks as President Reagan's chief spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater has acquired a new podium, cut the number of daily press briefings in half, kept his sense of humor and — perhaps most important of all — hung onto his job.

Like any presidential spokesman, Fitzwater has sparred vigorously with reporters. So far, however, the sparring has not turned as bitter as it sometimes did, on both sides, with his predecessor, Larry Speakes.

Fitzwater came aboard Feb. 2 as the choice of then-White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan, after Speakes took a public relations job with Merrill Lynch.

Fitzwater had worked as a Treasury Department spokesman while Regan was treasury secretary.

On Feb. 27, Regan was supplanted as chief of staff by former Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., and the question quickly arose as to what would happen to the people appointed by the president on Regan's recommendation.

A COUPLE OF ANSWERS came during Baker's first day on the job. Regan's hand-picked White House counsel, Peter Wallison, also a Treasury Department alumnus, would be replaced by long-time Baker associate A.B. Culvahouse. As for Fitzwater, "He told me I would be allowed to stay," the spokesman told reporters.

Fitzwater, like Speakes, does not have the traditional title of presidential press secretary.

That post is still held, at Regan's insistence, by Jim Brady, who was shot during an assassination attempt on the president in 1981 and still gets about in a wheelchair. Brady visits the office frequently, but the work of dealing with reporters

THERE HAS BEEN some grumbling from reporters, but Fitzwater has softened it by keeping his office door open much of the time and wandering into the press room to chat informally with the journalists. Speakes stayed in his office with the door closed, could be seen only by appointment and often failed to return telephone calls.

Fitzwater has rebuffed efforts by television journalists to have the briefings televised in full, as they are at the State Department, and rejected arguments that tonight's presidential news conference, since it is the first since Nov. 19, should be extended to an hour instead of the usual 30 minutes.

With his background at the Treasury Department, and before that the Environmental Protection Agency, Fitzwater is more expert on domestic policy than on foreign affairs. He incorrectly stated the administration's position on a test ban dispute with Senate Democrats last week, for instance, but corrected himself quickly when the error was pointed out.

THROUGH IT ALL, he is ready with the humor, often at the expense of his party, frame, his cigars and his sparse hair.

His humor and civility help him cope with early deadlines pressed for information on a wide variety of subjects.

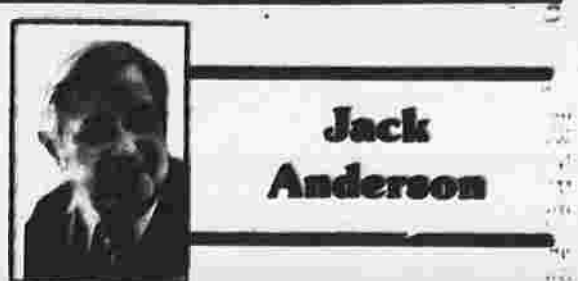

Fitzwater held twice-daily briefings only seven times during his first three weeks in office, then stopped them altogether. He made it official March 10, announcing there would be only one briefing per day, usually late in the morning.

W. Dale Nelson has been a reporter for 25 years and has covered the White House for The Associated Press since January 1983.

During his brief stay in the White House as communications director, John Koehler was stung by the disclosure that as a 10-year-old in his native Germany, he had belonged to the Jungvolk, an organization for kids too young to join the Hitler Youth. Koehler described the Jungvolk as a "Cub Scouts equivalent."

It was a poor choice of words, since it carried the implication that the Boy Scouts, to which Cuba graduate, was equivalent to the Nazis' fanatical Hitler Youth. Someone in the White House spotted the dire possibilities and contacted Scout headquarters in Dallas, as we discovered when we phoned a bit later.

"We had a call from the White House saying as far as they were concerned there was a difference in the organizations and no similarity," Scout spokesman Frank Hebb told our reporter Lisa Sylvester. "There is not any relationship or any semblance or similarity to that (Nazi) program," he added. Koehler declined comment. He was returning to life as a consultant, where a distant boyhood episode and an off-the-cuff explanation won't get the boss all bent out of shape.

Better idea cost analyst his SBA job

WASHINGTON — Did the Small Business Administration punish a contract employee for sharing his ideas on improving the system with a member of Congress? Here's what we've uncovered.

Jerry Dotey, 43, is a disabled Vietnam veteran with medals for valor, three Purple Hearts and a degree in mechanical engineering. He worked steadily as a temporary-hire construction analyst for the SBA's disaster-assistance program — until May 1986, when he briefed Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., on ways the program might be made more effective.

Dotey and another SBA contract worker who accompanied him, Anthony Rogers, were never called again for assignments in the disaster-assistance program.

"We didn't go (to Lott) to throw stones. We went there primarily to give information that could, if implemented, improve operations. I suppose we were blowing the whistle on the system itself. The taxpayers and the disaster applicants were the ones who were suffering," Dotey told our reporter Lisa Sylvester.

THE TWO MEN were sent from Lott's office to a meeting with SBA Acting Administrator Charles Heathery and Bernard Kulik, the disaster-program deputy. Heathery didn't stay long, and Kulik was not receptive to their suggestions, Dotey said. Soon after, his employment with SBA was terminated.

An attorney friend of Dotey's, suspecting retaliation by the SBA, contacted Lott's office, which in turn queried Heathery. Last August, Heathery assured the congressman that he would state the agency's inspector general look into the matter with "a high priority."

In the five months since Heathery's promise, neither Dotey nor his attorney has received so much as a phone call from the inspector general. Rogers got one brief and confusing call from an investigator at 7 p.m. one January day. An SBA spokesman says "Dotey's case is now closed because 'no evidence was developed to support the allegation' of retaliation."

A SUPERVISOR in the Atlanta office told us Dotey was on a recent SBA mailing list for permanent job applicants. But Dotey never got the application form, and the filing deadline has passed.

Dotey takes what cold comfort he can from the letter of recommendation written by his immediate supervisor just before Dotey went to see Rep. Lott. The supervisor said: "Mr. Dotey comes close to being the best qualified construction analyst I have had the pleasure of hiring or supervising in my 25-plus years in the disaster-assistance program."

Footnote: Several calls to Lott, Heathery and Kulik went unanswered.

Scouts' honor defended

The White House has made more than its share of political blunders lately, but when it's a matter of the eternal verities — motherhood, apple pie and the Boy Scouts of America — President Reagan's political operatives are razor-sharp.

During his brief stay in the White House as communications director, John Koehler was stung by the disclosure that as a 10-year-old in his native Germany, he had belonged to the Jungvolk, an organization for kids too young to join the Hitler Youth. Wait for key information ties up Iran-contra probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh is lacking key information from Switzerland and Israel as he tries to piece together the remainder of the Iran-contra puzzle.

Walsh told The Associated Press on Wednesday that his request for Swiss bank records may be tied up in that country's courts for an indefinite time.

The Swiss government has approved the request, but eight people with control over the accounts have filed objections and their hearings in Swiss courts could lead to long delays, Walsh said.

In addition, a source close to Walsh's investigation, speaking only on condition he not be named, said the Israelis have not yet submitted written information promised to Congress on their role in secret arms sales to Iran.

Spokesmen for the House and Senate committees investigating the sale and the diversion of profits to Nicaragua's contra rebels confirmed that lawmakers have not yet received the Israeli information. A Senate source said the material is still expected, and added he would not characterize Israel as uncooperative.

Walsh faced delays from abroad, developments moved forward briefly in this country: Walsh announced he planned to ask a court Monday, for the first time in his investigation, to delay a congressional grant of immunity to businessman Albert Hakim for the legal limits of 30 days.

Congressional sources have suggested that their motive in granting immunity to Hakim, 56, was the expectation that he will provide some of the needed Swiss bank account records.

Walsh said he would use the 30-day period, if granted, "to try to bring together whatever material we had" involving Hakim.

Congressional immunity would force a witness to testify or face prison. That testimony could not be used against the witness in a criminal case, but Walsh could build a case independently — so far, unsuccessfully.

They contended that only the executive branch, not a court-appointed prosecutor, can conduct a criminal investigation.

Nathan said the most serious question about the law is not its constitutionality, but whether a court should review an attorney general's decision not to seek an investigation of his close associates.

Such a question was raised, Nathan said, when Meese declined to expand an investigation into withholding documents from Congress to include two former officials of the Reagan Justice Department.

The measures were backed by Peres and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, while Ariel Sharon of Shamir's right-wing Likud bloc voted against them, the Israeli media said.

Although new military trade contracts would not be signed, the measures are unlikely to nullify existing contracts, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Falling coffee prices threaten economies of Central America

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A dramatic fall in coffee prices will cost the already weak economies of Central America hundreds of millions of dollars this year.

Estimates of the 1987 dollar loss range from $400 million to $700 million for the five Central American nations of Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Mexico expects to lose $400 million.

"The abrupt fall of coffee prices is sinking the region into a new crisis," Nicaragua Vice President Sergio Ramirez said recently.

Only a year ago, the area's nations reaped a huge windfall because of a rise in coffee prices triggered by a 1985 drought in Brazil, the world's top grower and exporter in coffee.

Buyers scrambled to purchase the Central American harvest at higher prices, adding millions to the region's economy.

In the past year, however, an oversupply on the world market and the inability of producing nations to agree on export quotas have caused coffee prices to plunge 65 percent. Most of the drop came in the past five months.

Nicaraguan Trade Minister Alejandro Martinez Cuenca said, "The drastic fall of the price of coffee is absolutely unmanageable."

Guatemala's economic minister, Lisardo Boza Lopez, said the decline "puts Guatemala in an emergency situation."

Coffee futures prices were about $1.20 a pound Monday, compared with $1.25 in mid-February.

The International Coffee Organization, a group of producing and consuming nations, met in London in early March to discuss possible export quotas, but negotiations collapsed.

Authority to meet N. Elm architect

Plans for construction of apartments for the elderly on North Elm Street will be discussed Monday by a committee from the Manchester Housing Authority and Alan Lamson, the architect for the project.

The meeting will be at 5:30 p.m. at the offices of the authority, 24 Bluefield Drive.

The authority has agreed to act for the town of Manchester as agent for construction of the 24 apartments on town-owned land. It has also agreed to try to work out a contract under which the authority will operate the apartment complex once it is built.

Officials of the town and of the authority want to move quickly on the project because the land has to be put to use for elderly housing by July 1, 1988, or the town will lose it under the terms of the will under which it was donated to the town.

Members of the authority's committee on the construction are Richard Schwoley, John FitzPatrick and James Morancy.

The Monday meeting was set by the authority at its regular meeting Wednesday night.

At the Wednesday meeting, the authority learned that it will receive a state grant of $80,000 toward the cost of vinyl siding for the state-subsidized apartments for the elderly at Spencer Village.

The buildings are now sided with Texture 111, a type of laminated wood.

Carol Shanley, executive director of the authority, reported that the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development has invited the authority to apply for funds that could be used for low-income housing, either new construction or rehabilitation of existing buildings.

She was authorized to seek further information about the funds, but not to make an application at this time.

The authority agreed to advise state Rep. John Thompson, D-Manchester, that it feels state money proposed for added rent subsidies be divided between people with incomes below 50 percent of the area median income and those with incomes of from 50 to 80 percent of the median.

John FitzGerald, vice chairman of the authority, contended that some people in the 50 percent to 80 percent category need not qualify for other types of assistance.

Thompson, a member of the General Assembly's Appropriations Committee, asked for the authority's opinion on the distribution of $5 million in additional rent subsidies proposed by Gov. William O'Neill.

He gave the authority a letter from Raphael L. Podolay, of Connecticut Legal Services, urging the Appropriations Committee to devote all of the rental money to the existing program for those in the lower income level, but perhaps raising the limit to 60 percent.

Podolay said in a letter that he understands the current proposal is to divide the extra $5.5 million in about equal proportions between the two income groups.

Victorious again

Susan Butcher of Manley, Alaska, faces reporters after her win in the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race Wednesday in Nome. It was Butcher's second consecutive win in the 1,157-mile race.

Police Roundup Bomb threat empties school

Robertson School received a bomb threat Wednesday afternoon, but police and Eighth District firefighters found no bomb in the building, and students and teachers were allowed to return to the building about 30 minutes after the call was received.

Principal Rochelle Abrattis said her secretary received the threat from what sounded like male caller shortly after 4 p.m. Emergency officials were called to the school at 4:07 p.m. and at about 4:30 determined that there was no bomb in the building, an Eighth District dispatcher said. Abrattis said about 30 people, from both the school itself and the adjoining offices, were evacuated from the building.

A Manchester man was arrested Tuesday on charges in connection with the alleged theft of an automobile, police said.

Stanley Nasuta, 20, a resident of the Samaritan Shelter for the homeless, allegedly took a 1976 Dodge from another shelter resident, police said.

Nasuta was charged with two counts of carrying a dangerous weapon, fourth-degree larceny, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. He was held on $5,000 bond pending an appearance in Manchester Superior Court.

Authority discusses security

Measures to improve security at housing projects for the elderly were discussed Wednesday night by the Manchester Housing Authority. In the wake of the March 8 slaying of Bernice B. Martin, 88, in her apartment at Coventry Gardens.

Department, has spoken at meetings of residents at the three housing complexes for the elderly, stressing the need to keep doors locked and to alert police in an emergency.

Coventry officials explain fund plans

Superintendent of Streets Roger Bellard said his department plows 80 miles of town roads, 22 miles of roads near the lake, and eight miles of unapproved roads. The antiquated equipment falls frequently and the town has to pour money into it annually, he said.

The second project involves the removal of asbestos from all the schools, at a cost of $275,000. More than 70 percent of that amount would be reimbursable by the state.

65-mph bill still faces tough road

representatives and senators for their home districts and states. Administration officials also have said the measure would spend too much money for mass transit.

Most lawmakers were cautious in evaluating their chances of mustering a two-thirds vote in each chamber to override a veto.

"I'm as big a Ronald Reagan supporter as there is," said Rep. James Hanson, R-Utah, a prime supporter of the faster speed. "But if he vetoes it, I'm overriding it."

Added Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, author of the higher speed limit provision, "I see that as a problem, and I hope when we get brain damage, they'll take a careful analysis of it before they decide to veto it."

Rep. James Howard, D-N.J., the leading opponent of the 65 mph measure but a top advocate of the highway bill, was more optimistic.

"I've been here 23 years," he said. "Every highway bill has been threatened by a veto, and none to my knowledge has ever been vetoed."

Edward, chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, had argued that the current 55 mph limit is a safety issue that should be addressed.

Over the next five years, about 3,500 of you out there will unceremoniously die," Howard said later, speaking to television cameras about the consequences of the bill.

"And many more thousands of you or members of your families will be permanently paralyzed or suffer brain damage. . . . Just can't help but believe very strongly that this issue will come back to us."

Howard said he believed the House vote reflected "a great anti-government feeling out there."

Consumer activist Ralph Nader, whose organizations have been among many health, safety and insurance groups that lobbied for the lower speed, used equally strong language.

"With this vote today, the representatives have blood on their hands, and they're going to have to live with it," he said. "The yahoos were vociferous and the silent majority of American people were used as not making a vociferous issue out of it."

According to Symms, the legislation would allow faster legal driving on 23,910 of the 45,391 miles of Interstate highway, affecting every state except Delaware.

FOCUS

Yes, things can feel good and be good for you, too

By Anita M. Caldwell Herald Reporter

People who think "anything that feels good can't be good for you," probably haven't tried Shiatsu or a basic Swedish. No, they're not the latest foreign craze, but the ultimate in relaxation and luxury.

But an increasing number of people say they give you the same feeling. Laura Munson, a massage therapist who practices from her office at 99 E. Center St., is among the many practitioners who are enjoying an increase in the call for their services.

As the health movement continues to expand, she has observed that more consideration is given to relaxing muscles as well as building them, and to reducing stress as well as reducing weight.

Originally from New York, Munson moved with her family to Connecticut in 1976. She began working with a chiropractor and in two years he suggested she concentrate on massage therapy because of her demonstrated ability and rapport with their clientele.

While still working for the chiropractor, Munson accepted patients on a part-time basis, using the office one day a week. Her business grew quickly, and by 1984 she opened her own office in Manchester.

"Like exercise, massage therapy is good for everyone," said Munson. "It enhances well-being and provides deep relaxation which is proven to be beneficial."

The basic principle behind massage therapy is that it stimulates the blood circulation and oxygen flow through the muscles by means of manually "stretching" them.

Many of her patients are referred by chiropractors, psychologists, dentists, cardiologists and other physicians. "Their patients need to relax," Munson explained. "They have too much stress, which affects their physical and mental health by restricting mobility."

JAPANESE SHIATSU is finger pressure applied to certain points on the body to release trapped energy. Swedish massage uses long full strokes along with kneading.

"The majority of my clients come for basic relaxation and muscle tension," Munson said.

The design of Munson's office, similar to that of a doctor's office, is also part of the treatment.

"Special attention is paid to the temperature of the room, the lighting, using music that is specially recorded to promote relaxation, and the basic comfort of the client and his or her ability to relax," Munson explained.

The patient is covered by a sheet and sometimes a light blanket. If desired, with only the specific areas being massaged exposed," Munson added. "This affords the client modesty and warmth."

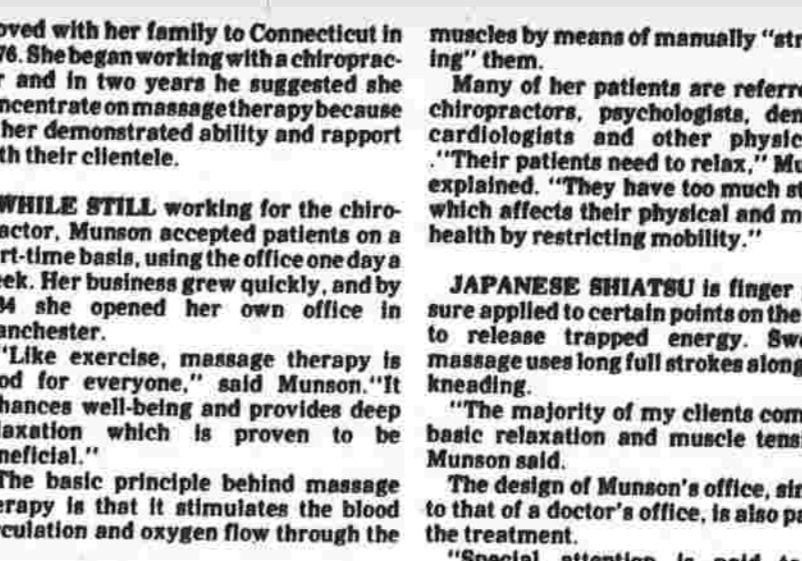

MUNSON, A GRADUATE of the Connecticut Center for Massage Therapy in Newington, has a Connecticut certification and New York state license.

Connecticut is among the many states that do not have licensing requirements, and there is no universal ordinance for local certification. On March 9, a bill was proposed to the Public Health Committee of the General Assembly for state licensing.

Munson hopes the bill is passed, and she is not alone. According to a recent report in Time magazine, 13 states have licensing requirements and many therapists are concerned about the lack of uniform training standards. Despite the irregularity of licensing, however, massage appears to be the latest prescription for stress.

Robert King, president of the Chicago-based American Massage Therapy Association, told Time, "Instead of having an extra martini or gulping Valium, people ought to consider a professional massage."

According to Munson, one of the nation's 50,000 massage therapists, the word is out.

Versatile track lighting can hardly be bettered

By Barbara Mayer
The Associated Press

For sheer versatility, track lighting can hardly be bettered. Depending on the type of bulb and housing selected, you can produce a good level of general illumination, bathe an entire wall in light, aim a strong and controlled beam of light to highlight an object or painting or illuminate a desk or counter for a specific task.

A single track can accommodate a variety of different bulbs, so all these tasks can be handled at the same time. Furthermore, fixtures can usually be snapped in and out easily so the track can be refitted if lighting requirements change. This flexibility is undoubtedly responsible for the continued popularity of track lighting from its introduction some 30 years ago.

Recently, Willem Klijnstra, a track lighting specialist for Lightoller, offered some pointers for those considering installing a track lighting system in the home.

He noted that lighting effects depend partially on the type of bulb chosen and partially on the location selected for the fixture.

CONSUMERS SHOULD become familiar with the terminology used to describe the various types of lighting effects and their chief purposes. For example, accent lighting directs light to a single place or object and thus provides drama and emphasis in the overall scheme. It differentiates one area from another. Wall-washing, which bathes the entire wall in light from ceiling to floor, dramatizes texture and color, and can be employed to make a room appear larger than it really is.

General lighting refers to the overall level of light in a room. As a rule, it is advantageous to be able to vary the level of general illumination from high to low to meet a variety of different needs.

Task lighting refers to light that is directed to a work surface. Studies have shown that by increasing the level of task lighting one can compensate for diminishing visual acuity due to aging.

According to Klijnstra, correct track and fixture positioning and selection of the right bulb for the job make the difference between success and failure.

WHERE TO PLACE the track in the ceiling depends on the desired lighting effect and the dimensions of the room. For example, for accent lighting in a room with an eight-foot ceiling, mount the track 18 to 24 inches from the wall. Use a single fixture to highlight each object. To wash the wall with light, place the track two to four feet away from the wall on ceilings that are nine to 11 feet high. Fixture spacing should equal the distance of the track from the wall.

It is important to choose the right light bulb for the job. "Lamps generate different beam spreads and intensity of light and color and some lamps work better than others in certain situations," he said.

Despite a higher initial cost, for example, tungsten halogen bulbs are said to be more efficient and have a longer life. Tungsten halogen light is whiter because the temperature within the lamp is higher. This characteristic renders it particularly suitable where clear bright illumination of glassware is desired, such as at the dinner table.

ANOTHER QUESTION is whether to select the standard 120-volt or to opt for a low-voltage system. Low-voltage systems are often used in museums and other places where it is desirable to minimize heat and glare. The bulbs give higher intensities and more lumens per watt than standard voltage. However, each low-volt lighting fixture must have a built-in transformer to convert standard 120-volt electricity to 12 volts.

Recently, Lightoller introduced a low-voltage fixture that has an adjustable beam spread. By turning a knob behind the fixture you can vary the beam spread from six to 18 degrees. Using an optional spread lens further widens the beam and a beam elongator produces oval lighting patterns. Additional accessories for use with this fixture include color filters, louvers and directional metal plates known as barndoors that control the shape and placement of the light.

Those interested in learning more about the selection and installation of track lighting can obtain a free booklet on the subject. Send a stamped, self-addressed business envelope to: Track Lighting Brochure, Advertising Department, Lightoller, 100 Lighting Way, Secaucus, N.J. 07094.

Plan ahead for additions or remodeling

By Chonging Times
The Kiplinger Magazine

If it's time to add a bathroom, remodel an aging kitchen, or make the basement over into a living area, it may be time to hire a remodeler.

The best remodelers are going to be booked into the future, so plan to make your selection four to six weeks before you want the project to begin, even earlier during the busy summer season.

Before you can get a good estimate of the project's cost, you must settle on plans and specifications. To get them, you have a choice of sources.

• Remodelers: This is OK as long as the builder can provide the services of a designer. Expect the company to charge a separate design fee, usually under $500, or work the fee into the overall construction charges.

• Architects: Finding one to take the job may be difficult because residential remodeling is usually small potatoes for an architect. Small firms of up to three people or architects fresh out of school may be your best bet.

This is likely to be the most expensive option; architects may charge a percentage of the construction cost, perhaps 10-15 percent. However, you're assured of professional training and partial or full project supervision.

• Designers: In most parts of the country anyone can use the label "designer," whether self-educated or formally trained. The American Institute of Building Design and the American Society of Interior Designers accredit designers, but the two groups rely on different standards.

To locate designers in your area, check in the phone book for local chapters of AIBD and ASID or look under combinations of "Home," "Building," "Residential," "Interior," "Design" and "Planner."

Although interior designers used to concentrate on just the decorative aspects of a remodeling job, more now handle structural changes to existing rooms, although they normally leave room additions to architects and building designers. But even building designers may need to call in an architect, engineer, remodeler, plumber or electrician to get plans past some building codes and to obtain building permits.

CHANGING TIMES suggests one way to test the competency and compatibility of a designer is to ask for an explanation of some facet of construction, such as the differences among subflooring options. You should get the same information from each candidate. Look for a forthright, reasonable explanation presented in a noncondescending manner and without technical jargon.

Designers often charge by the job, the hour or by keeping the difference between the wholesale and retail costs of the materials purchased. ASID found in a 1985 survey of members that the national average hourly fee was $58.

• Specialty services: The National Kitchen and Bath Association confers the designation of Certified Kitchen Designer (CKD) on experienced individuals who have been tested on construction and design.

These specialists, found at custom kitchen and bath showrooms, typically charge a fee of around $300 to $500. The fee is subtracted from the total price of the job, which normally includes cabinets, appliances and materials as well as installation. If a CKD has what you want, the price to you shouldn't be higher, and may be lower, than if you ordered from some other source.

One service, Nicholas Residential Room Designs (P.O. Box 244, Route 5, Herkimer, NY 13359), offers a mail-order service that primarily designs kitchens and bathrooms, based on a detailed questionnaire.

• Manufacturers' promotions: Many kitchen dealers and most Sears stores can provide a computer-generated kitchen plan. The plans are free or low in cost, but normally you don't get to keep them unless you buy the product.

PROVIDING THE DESIGNER with the original floor plans for your house can sometimes save you as much as 15 percent on the design fee. You can also save money at both the design and construction stages if you choose a plan that doesn't require moving existing walls, plumbing or electrical wiring.

Besides floor layouts and sketches, the final plans you get from the designer should include a set of specifications — brand names, styles, sizes, colors and model numbers of cabinets and appliances, and identifying characteristics of materials for construction, plumbing and electrical work. Use these specs as the basis for comparing remodelers' bids.

Once you've got your plans, you must choose the remodeler. Before inviting any remodelers out to examine your home, do some checking. A remodeler must be licensed in many jurisdictions, but in some that merely requires payment of a licensing fee.

Start by asking friends for recommendations. Check to see whether the contractor you are considering belongs to one of the two major industry trade groups: the National Association of the Remodeling Industry or the National Remodelers Council, an affiliate of the National Association of Home Builders.

All candidates (at least three) should visit your home to take measurements for the bid and warn you of any problems they anticipate. Each should get back to you within a week or so with a bid based on your specs.

Most remodeling jobs are bid as a lump sum. Sometimes the price is figured on a "cost-plus" basis; you won't know total cost until the work is done and an additional percentage is tacked on to the materials, labor and other specified expenses. The cost-plus approach is used when the extent of some problem can't be determined by the remodelers when the estimate is made.

Find out how the remodeler expects to be paid. Expect to make a deposit, which will be used to order your materials. A 30-50 percent down payment is typical; the smaller the job, the more remodelers tend to require

Once you learn use of hacksaw, it is invaluable

By Andy Long
The Associated Press

Once you have learned how to use a hacksaw, you will find it an invaluable tool. That's because it is so necessary in cutting most kinds of metal, a task many do-it-yourselfers avoid because they consider it too tough.

Cutting metal with a hacksaw requires only a knowledge of the fundamentals rather than a skill that takes a long time to learn. When you discover how a hacksaw can go through a piece of metal that seemed impenetrable, you are so impressed you can't wait to find a similar job to tackle.

In using a hacksaw, the important thing to remember is the cutting is done on the forward stroke. As you move the saw forward, you apply light pressure when cutting light metals, heavy pressure when cutting heavy materials. As you bring the saw back, release the pressure. If you don't, you not only will be working inefficiently, you will be dulling the blade. You should cut in a kind of rhythmic motion, with long, even strokes. Bring as many teeth into contact with the metal as possible. When you can, hold the hacksaw with two hands, one on the handle, one on the forward part of the frame.

THE METAL you are cutting should be held in a vise or jig. If not, the work will shift. Usually, you should start with several short, even strokes. Then, as the blade catches hold, switch to the long, even strokes, remembering to apply pressure on the forward strokes, none on the backward strokes.

Although it cannot always be done in an awkward location, you will get best results if you saw horizontally. When you have several pieces of this metal, place them between two pieces of wood and then saw through the whole thing.

When you buy a blade, it usually is marked with an arrow to show in which direction the teeth should face when you place the blade in the frame. In the standard hacksaw frame, the teeth should point away from the handle. But in a frame which does not keep the blade under tension, the teeth should point toward the handle. Select blades for the type of metal being cut. Generally, blades with 14 teeth per inch are considered very coarse and used for thick metal. Those with 18 teeth per inch are used for medium work, and those with 24 teeth per inch work well on one-inch cable and similar light metal. You can even buy blades for still lighter metals. They have 32 teeth per inch.

Rungs of chair abused, so they need attention

By Andy Lang
The Associated Press

The rungs of a chair sometimes need attention after a period of time because they are the part of that particular piece of furniture that gets a lot of abuse.

People rest or wrap their feet around chair rungs intended to support chair legs or, occasionally, be used as decorative separators. Add that to the problems caused by dampness and dry heat and you have good reasons why chair rungs require periodic care. The key ingredient in the repair of a chair rung is glue. It cannot be just any glue and it cannot be a sloppy repair, since rungs are integral parts that add strength to construction and so help prevent injury to the people who use the chair.

Having determined, by talking to your dealer or reading the label on the container, whether your glue choice is suitable for joints that must undergo stress, you cannot forget that new glue seldom adheres well to old glue. You have to get off as much of the old glue as possible, not always an easy job. But if you work carefully, scraping and sanding the parts of the rung ends that can be reached, you usually can provide enough clean surface for the adhesion of the new glue.

WHEN YOU RUN into a repair that is especially difficult because a rung cannot be removed from its socket, you can sometimes squeeze glue into the joint. Glue injectors and similar tools are invaluable in these cases, as well as in any others involving hard-to-reach areas. Depending on the type of furniture and the nature of the trouble, there are some cases where small screws, wood dowels, mending plates and various other furniture strengtheners may be needed. But these usually are used in conjunction with the glue. It is rare indeed when the repair can be made without the use of glue in some way.

Once the repair has been made and it is necessary to keep the joints tight until the glue sets, there are various ways you can clamp the rungs. One of the simplest is to wind a length of clothesline or similar cord around the legs, looping the rope from leg to leg and then holding everything tight with a twist stick. Place a large screwdriver or dowel or anything appropriate between the loops of the line, but be very sure it is braced in some way so it doesn't spin loose when you let go of it. If you get one of the professional straps that are used for clamps in this fashion, it usually comes with an appropriate gadget to hold the strap in place. You will find a number of such straps available. All serve the purpose, which is merely to hold the joints fairly tight until the glue sets. How long that is depends on the kind of glue you use, so be sure to read the instructions to determine the setting time.

IF YOU ARE ABLE to get a rung loose, you sometimes will find it has become wobbly in its socket because the end no longer is as big as it was or the hole itself has become enlarged. The best way to handle this is to make a small wooden wedge, saw a slit in the end of the rung and insert the wedge in it. This will make the joint tight automatically. In fact, occasionally, it will make it too tight. In which case, trim the wedge gradually until you get a secure fit.

By the way, when placing the rope clamp around the legs of the chair, use pads of some kind to prevent the rope from damaging the legs.

Should the chair being repaired be one that is used outdoors in all kinds of weather, be sure to use a waterproof glue. One of the best of this type is resorcinol, which comes in two parts and must be mixed according to the directions.

Experience is the key to putting up wallpaper

By Barbara Mayer
The Associated Press

Experience makes the difference when it comes to putting up wallpaper. A person has to get the hang of it, as any novice who has gotten tangled up in this type of decorating project can attest.

But did you ever wonder how short of mutilating their own walls, individuals can learn to put up wallpaper? Not to worry. There is a school for it.

The U.S. School of Professional Paperhanging in Rutland, Vt., has been operating since 1973. Its founder and current president, Stan Warsaw, claims to have trained more than 750 students.

Most people, of course, don't want to become professional paperhangers. They just want to redecorate a room or two. For them, Warsaw has some advice on how not to get hung up on the task.

He says there are at least three circumstances under which consumers should hire a professional rather than attempting to do it themselves. These situations include: when dealing with expensive wall coverings; when one is lacking in manual dexterity, and when it is a problem room. The problem could be unusual architecture, a very large room or one with walls in poor condition, that need extensive preparation.

WARSHAW ADVISES checking references before engaging a paperhanger and seeking a recommendation from a local decorating products dealer.

A professional job will be smooth and wrinkle-free, without any tears. Patterns should be well-matched and vertically straight, corners tight and the pattern should be level around the room. Seams should just touch. An installer who provides a written guarantee of adhesion and satisfaction should get an added plus.

Those who elect to do their own installation should remember that most failures result from improper wall preparation. Warsaw says to be sure to buy enough material to complete the job since dye lots vary. Begin at the easiest wall, planning where the seams will fall before actually starting. It is essential to have the correct adhesive.

Beginners should purchase wallpaper from a store that provides service. Ask the retailer to inspect your material for shading, bias printing and other possible flaws since, as a beginner, you don't know what to look for, Warsaw suggested. The retailer can and should provide information on what adhesive to use and how to prepare your walls. When deciding how much to buy, estimate generously to ensure enough material. Uncut packaged rolls can be returned with only a modest penalty, he said.

Finally, work in a quiet atmosphere. Keep children and pets out of the area and if possible take the phone off the hook.

WARSHAW SAYS that he frequently receives calls from consumers who encounter problems in the middle of a job as well as from interior designers, architects, specifiers, painters, contractors and stores who may have questions during or after a job.

One reason why is that there is surprisingly little documentation on correct wallpapering techniques, in his opinion.

As is typical, Warsaw learned his trade by going to work for his father, a wall-covering contractor in New York. He joined the business after the Korean War, despite the fact he had a degree in marketing and public relations.

"My father offered me $30 a day to paste wallpaper. I asked him how to make $50 and he said 'for that, you have to learn how to hang.'"

Warsaw eventually found there was little written and no formal training in the industry. "We needed more young people in our business towards the mid-to-late 1960s. We were looking for a school and I was shocked to find no formal schools existed. I decided to start my own school."

HE FIRST CONSIDERED setting the school up in New York, but eventually chose to establish it in Vermont in 1973. Today, he says, there are 180 students a year and steady demand for information on how to start a wall-covering business.

Individuals who write for information receive a packet of information that includes tips for the do-it-yourselfer. Information on adhesives, guidance on how to choose and evaluate a professional paperhanger, a list of types of wall coverings and their properties, such as whether they provide a thermal barrier.

The packet costs 50 cents plus a stamped self-addressed business envelope. For further information, write to the U.S. School of Professional Paperhanging, 16 Chaplin Ave., Rutland, Vt. 05701.)

You can find home furnishings at auction

By Barbara Mayer
The Associated Press

Although many people are afraid of buying at auction, they shouldn't be.

A person furnishing a home can use them to find interesting, beautiful and useful home furnishings at affordable prices, according to Emy Leeser, an interior designer who is associated with the John Stuart showroom in New York.

The collector can gratify his thirst for knowledge and secure additions for his collection at auction, says Richard Manney, a collector.

To Leeser, "the surprise, spontaneity, excitement and aura which pervade an auction surpass any visit to a gallery or antique store." It's worth learning how to buy at auction, she told a group of designers recently, since they can be sources of great finds, sometimes at reasonable prices.

Although reputable auctioneers attest to the authenticity of the objects for sale, they do make mistakes on occasion so the rule is buyer beware, she added.

However, she continued, those buying primarily to decorate don't need to be concerned about authenticity. For them, the best reason to buy at auction is to find objects of quality and interest.

FIND OUT about sales through newspaper advertisements. Then check the items of interest in person at the preview days. It's a good idea to go back for a second look if you intend to bid, she said.

To gain some idea of the likely bidding range, check the estimated prices nearly all auctioneers list in the catalog or supply on request.

Examine objects carefully for possible flaws. If there are one or more things you want to bid on, buy a catalog and mark the items along with estimated prices. Find out the approximate time these items will be called and be there ahead of the time of sale, she said.

In order to bid, you must register with the auctioneer. You will be given a number; usually it is on a paddle which you will raise to bid. Based on your review, decide how much you would be willing to bid for an item; make a note of it and then stick to your decision. When the auction is in progress, impulse bidding should be only a rare occurrence.

LEESER SAYS dealers and private individuals have very different bidding styles. "Private collectors may get locked into competitive buying at all costs. That is the time for you to lie low. Don't ever feel bad if the bidding goes over your limit. There are always other opportunities."

Besides furnishing or refurbishing a home, another occasion when auction-going is called for is when starting or adding to a collection. Collector Manney says the auction process helps him learn and make early mistakes anonymously.

Manney, whose collections of Federal furniture, contemporary sculpture and 19th-century Belter furniture are of museum quality, still loves an auction because it adds to the thrill of the chase which is a part of collecting for him.

Besides learning from his mistakes, he also learned from watching dealers at auctions because "they don't overpay." An important value of auctions is to study the pre-sale estimates and actual bids. That way you get a good sense of where the current market is.

WHEN BUYING for a collection or investment, authenticity is important, and Leeser advises obtaining documentation of an object's history from the auctioneer (who gets it from the consignor). If there is no provenance, consider hiring an expert to view and give an opinion of the work in question at the preview.

Auctioneers can also be helpful if you want to know what some of your collectibles are worth. A number of large houses, such as Sotheby's, Christies and Phillips, hold free appraisal days from time to time during the year when people can bring in an item or a photo of it and get some idea of what it is and what it might bring at auction.

These verbal estimates are rendered by the auction house's experts, but are not usable for insurance or estate purposes. Those who live outside the New York area can send in photos of their objects, along with any additional information such as a tracing or drawing of identifying marks, said spokesmen for both Sotheby's and Christies.

Both houses also offer such appraisal days in other parts of the country, often in connection with a local arts group or museum which charges admission and uses the event as a fund-raiser.

In 1916, Republican Jeannette Rankin became the first woman elected to Congress.

Inventory your home to decide on insurance

By Barbara Mavor
The Associated Press

Insurance authorities say that typically few victims of fire or theft have taken an inventory of their belongings before the loss.

The result, according to Kathleen Gura, is that they cannot be reimbursed for items that may cost many thousands of dollars to replace. Gura has launched a business in her hometown of Redland, Calif., to inventory the contents of people's homes. Recently, she wrote a book, "Protecting the Family Jewels," on the subject. It explains what a home inventory is and how to conduct one for oneself.

The purpose of the home inventory is to tell what is owned and how much it is worth and to enable a householder to make an informed decision on how much insurance is required, she said.

She says a good inventory describes each item one wishes to insure; lists its replacement cost and documents ownership with photos and receipts, when available.

AN INVENTORY should also include professional written appraisals of high-value items such as antiques, furs and jewelry. Gura says the most useful inventory also lists the frequently-ignored hundreds of small things that will have to be replaced if a complete loss is sustained.

Compiling such a list might consume several weeks. But for a quick fix on the value of household goods, list and estimate the replacement cost of home entertainment equipment, major appliances and furniture. These items usually amount to a quarter up to a third of everything in a home.

In her self-published book, Gura provides 20 categories of items found in most homes, such as luggage, clothing, sports equipment, books, linens, major appliances, home office equipment, toys, household items and tools.

A section on what she calls "forgotten items" (things such as erasers and pencils, glue, ironing board, cleaning supplies, vitamins and toiletries), notes average prices for these items. She says that while it is the personal mementoes that make a home unique almost every household has the same general type of things.

THE PERSON taking the inventory (she advises that several friends get together and help one another to make the job more fun and easier to accomplish) counts the number of items, estimates the likely cost of replacing them and arrives at a total replacement cost figure. The grand total of all these things is likely to be as much as $100,000 or more, she adds.

She advises the inventory-takers to familiarize themselves with current prices of anything they may not have purchased in a while by visiting a furniture and appliance store.

Documenting the inventory can be accomplished in several ways. Buying a large envelope and using it for receipts on insurances is one suggestion. If the receipt was not kept, insurance companies also accept manufacturer-instruction booklets as proof of ownership, she said.

Photographs of the objects, preferably with a family member included in the photo are also accepted as documentation. As a general guideline, she suggests taking photos of the outside of the house as well as each room. Include shots of unusual landscaping and plants and of outbuildings, pool and tool shed.

INSIDE THE HOUSE, go room by room, starting with one wall and taking as many pictures as necessary. She says that one or two shots per wall is usually adequate. Open cabinets and closets and photograph the interiors. Then take individual photos of special items such as artwork, antiques, coin and stamp collections and musical instruments. Group together in one photo small items such as ashtrays and knickknacks.

A replacement-cost inventory would be pointless if one's insurance policy was for actual cash value only. Consequently, she advised reviewing insurance carefully in the light of the new information provided by an inventory. Gura recommends a full-replacement cost policy. Though it usually costs more, it covers more. However, she noted that full replacement cost really means replacement up to a preset limit. If the inventory has disclosed the limit is unrealistic, one can negotiate a higher limit or add coverage for individual high-cost items such as jewelry or furs or collectibles.

TO KEEP PREMIUMS from rising too high, she suggests raising the deductible amount on the policy. Gura says a $1,000 deductible could save up to 30 percent on premiums and a $500 deductible might save about 20 percent. She also advises getting a quote from a number of insurance companies.

Insurance cannot replace irreplaceable items. Consequently, in order to minimize the trauma of a loss, she suggests that important records such as passports, birth certificates, marriage licenses, wills, deeds, contracts, income tax papers and a copy of the home inventory be copied and the copies kept outside the house, perhaps in a safe deposit box or at a relative's home. One might also consider copying family photographs or removing the negatives for safekeeping.

Most victims who have escaped a fire or other home destruction disaster recount that they were unable to think clearly in the moments before they were evacuated or fled the house. She says preparation of an evacuation list of items to take can help. If the items are kept together in a drawer or box it would be simple to grab the container and go.

Here's the answer

Why do houses seem noisier?

By Andy Long
The Associated Press

QUESTION: Is it my imagination or do houses these days seem noisier than when I was a kid? We are having a noise problem in our house right now and are considering the use of acoustical tiles in at least two of the rooms. One of them is the kitchen. Are we doing the right thing? Are acoustical tiles really that good? My neighbor thinks their value is exaggerated.

ANSWER: Acoustical tiles most certainly make a big difference. Have you ever dined in a restaurant where the ceiling are fairly low and there is no acoustical tile? Acoustical material works because it is made of an absorbent substance. Much of the sound generated in a room is absorbed by the tile. There should be other sound-absorbing material in the same room. Such things as rugs, drapes, upholstered furniture and objects made of soft, spongy matter all help to reduce the noise. Anything with a hard surface acts in the opposite way, permitting sound to bounce back and forth. That's why a kitchen usually is noisy; sound hits appliances, pots and pans and reverberates. As to whether houses seem noisier these days, they actually are. With so much mechanical equipment and less stuffed furniture, there is more noise and fewer absorbent materials.

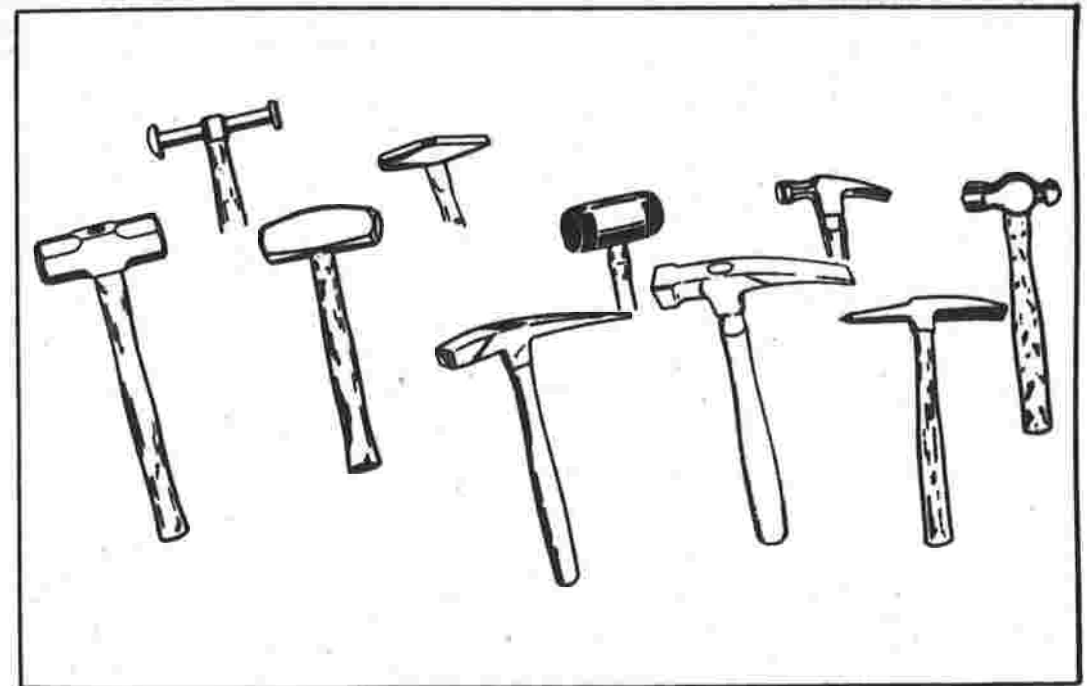

QUESTION: I plan on making a wooden workbench for my home workshop, but want to make a portable one so that it can be moved when necessary. My workshop is fairly small and there are times when the bench will have to be moved when handling a certain kind of work. Any ideas?

ANSWER: The bench can be moved more easily if you use the kind of casters on the bottom such as are seen sometimes on typewriter tables. When a lever is stepped on, the table or workbench cannot be moved. Stepped on a second time, the lever releases the casters so the table can be moved. Another thought: Be careful about the use of a workbench drawers whose contents might slide when the bench is moved.

QUESTION: The crawl space under our house always seems to be damp even though there are vents opposite each other in the partial enclosure. The dampness seems to be coming from the ground, which is just dirt. Will covering the dirt help?

ANSWER: Yes. You can test to see whether the ground really is the culprit by waiting until you have a dry period of several days and placing an old small rug or piece of carpeting on the dirt under the house. Weight it down with a few stones. Wait a couple of days. If the rug is wet, the moisture definitely is coming from the ground. To correct the condition, cover the ground completely with a vapor barrier, such as polyethylene film or heavy roll roofing. Overlap the pieces about 6 inches and seal the overlaps with roofing cement or an exterior adhesive. Sand sometimes can be used in place of the roofing cement. To make doubly sure, run the barrier up the wall a few inches. In this case, roofing cement or an adhesive will hold it intact, whereas sand will not. Incidentally, the ground always should be slightly sloped so that rain flows away from the house and not towards it.

Remodeling, not moving makes economic sense

By The Associated Press

Before putting up a "For Sale" sign on your house, it may make more sense to consider remodeling instead.

Today's economic facts of life indicate things have changed from the 1970s when buying and selling — or "trading in" — homes made financial sense, according to consultants in the remodeling industry, which represents an estimated $60 billion a year market.

An annual appreciation of 12 to 14 percent easily offset sales commissions, closing costs and moving expenses in those days, they say, and if you lived in your home for three years you could anticipate a healthy 20 percent profit on the sale.

But today, just to cover buying and selling costs — with no profit — you have to reside in your home for at least three years. Since it doesn't always pay to move, many homeowners are electing to stay in their existing homes and improve them to meet new needs.

For those tired of the maintenance responsibilities of an older home or who want to live in a different neighborhood, remodeling is not the answer — and it may not pay to undertake some remodeling projects.

According to the CertainTeed Home Institute, to assess the expense of any major remodeling project homeowners should consider the cost of turning the entire job over to a professional, how much it would cost to do the work themselves, and the cost of inconvenience during remodeling.

Most professional remodeling projects will cost between $60-$100 per square foot, the institute advises, so it pays to assess how much value the project will add to the home's resale value.

"You can cut remodeling costs in half by doing some — or all — of the project yourself, but naturally you will have to expend many of your own hours," the institute says. "And don't forget to plan for the inconvenience of some remodeling projects. A room addition or adding extra insulation may not disrupt daily life too much, but bathroom or kitchen improvements may."

To get the maximum real-estate effect, it recommends:

- Keep the project in scale with the neighborhood's real estate norms.
- Invest in types of improvements that will have the most practical, immediate use to the category of households moving into the neighborhood.

• Get acquainted with recent material trends in capital pay-backs for different types of improvements.

Generally, the institute says, home improvement projects offering the most value to a home are energy-saving upgrades, kitchen modernizations, existing space redesign and bathroom additions.

Nearly any home can be upgraded to the energy efficiency of the majority of new homes, it says, explaining that adding fiber glass bats or rolls to an entire house on a do-it-yourself basis may cost about $1,200 while adding approximately $1,000 (83 percent) to its equity financing value in the eyes of a mortgage lender.

"Caulking, weatherstripping around windows and doors and insulating a water heater and pipes, also will keep your home more comfortable and increase its resale value," says the institute.

"Remember lending institutions are offering breaks to buyers of energy efficient homes. The rationale is that these homeowners will have more income available due to smaller energy bills."

So what's new on the market?

By Andy Lang
The Associated Press

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT: A wallcovering removal tool.

Manufacturer's claim — That this tool features saw-tooth discs whose cutting action perforates and lifts the wallcovering ... that it forms channels that allow the remover solution to penetrate the wallcovering and loosen the wallpaper paste ... that it has a controllable penetration depth action to prevent damage to the wall ... and that a special adapter joins two of the devices to speed the scoring and permit the use of an extension pole on the upper walls and high ceilings.

THE PRODUCT: A security light with an infrared sensor.

Manufacturer's claim — That this lighting system detects the presence of people and vehicles on property ... that, when it does, it turns on two floodlights to scare off intruders ... that it has a fully adjustable aiming capacity and a range of between 40 to 60 feet ... that the unit turns on after dark ... and that the lights stay on for 5 minutes after activation, making it useful for welcoming guests and returning home owners.

THE PRODUCT: A sealer for water-stained ceiling tiles.

Manufacturer's claim — That, rather than replace water-stained tiles, sealing the stains with this primer-sealer will keep the water from spreading and bleeding through any paint or other finish ... that the product is a white pigmented shellac ... that its color is so close to that of most ceiling tiles that a top coat usually is unnecessary ... and that it has many other sealing and stain-killing applications around the house.

THE PRODUCT: A brightener for pressured-treated wooden decks.

Manufacturer's claim — That this product restores the natural, fresh look to pressure-treated wood, which, after a few years of weathering, can be dulled by dirt, moisture and surface mildew ... that a foaming action cleans the top layer, revealing the fresh-looking wood underneath ... that the brightener is mixed with water to produce a blue solution ... that, when the blue color disappears, the liquid is applied to the wood surface ... and that it can be applied with a sprayer, brush, mop or roller.

THE PRODUCT: A new level of paint sheen.

Manufacturer's claim — That this interior wall finish is higher in luster than eggshell-finished paints but softer in luster than semi-gloss paints ... that the new paint has a pearl finish similar to the European look in wallcovering ... and that it complements most furniture and decorating schemes.

The technique of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, remover, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743.

Do It yourself

This log home is an example of how many homeowners are getting well-built homes less expensively. More than 15 percent of the log homes built each year are constructed by do-it-yourselfers, says the Log Homes Council. This results in average savings of 20 percent on the cost of a log home.

Outdoor rooms need attention

By Barbara Mayer
The Associated Press

In the 1930s and '40s, it was the backyard. In the '50s and '60s, the patio replaced the yard.

Now, the space we live in out of doors has gone uptown and is called "the outdoor room."

Though this "room" may have no roof or walls, in at least some instances it comes complete with a swimming pool or spa, electricity, barbecue, furniture and potted plants.

With this kind of equipment, it seems clear that the space is meant to be important in the family's life—and so it is. To get the most out of the effort you put into creating it requires careful attention to detail.

If you've got an outdoor room in mind for the coming warm-weather season, perhaps these tips from landscaping authorities will help:

- Have a plan and stick to it. Take care of the basics first. These include screening for privacy with trees and large shrubs and, if necessary, fences. Hide unsightly views with plantings and take into consideration some plants will soon outgrow their present confines. Get help from a plant nursery and check in landscaping books before making a selection.

- If you have expansive grounds with an oversupply of trees, don't feel you must keep every one. Undesirable trees which are weedy or which compete with plantings can be taken down. Choose trees and shrubs you like and, to minimize maintenance, choose those that are known to be hardy in your area.

An important factor in how comfortable your outdoor room will be is in the flooring that you choose. Choices for paving are varied, but take into account local climate, necessary upkeep in time and money and the relationship between original cost and longevity. Select paving that is in character with the house and the surrounding landscape.

Take into account any special factors. For example, if you have young children, is the surface soft enough for them to safely play on, yet solid enough for fast-moving games?

In the paving unsightly or slippery after rain? Does it dry quickly? Will winter snows wash some of the surfacing away?

Gravel and wood chips are inexpensive compared to other surfacing materials, but both need to be replenished frequently since they wash away.

The most popular outdoor paving has been around long enough to prove itself in a variety of climates. That includes brick, stone, wood decking, concrete blocks, poured concrete and gravel. In some areas, tile, beach pebbles, wood rounds, crushed rock and indoor-outdoor carpeting in a grass-like texture are also popular.

When thinking about price, consider the cost of the labor to install it. For example, a do-it-yourself could probably lay brick in sand rather easily, working a little at a time. Poured concrete, on the other hand, is best done all at once.

Picking right face of veneer plywood

By The Associated Press

If you decide to use a premium grade hardwood veneer plywood for a home improvement project such as cabinetry, you may run into the problem of which side of the plywood will be the exterior.

Only the premium grades of hardwood veneer plywood—AA, A, and A1—pose a problem in selecting the right face. These grades have veneers on both sides that may at first glance look nearly identical. However, subtle differences exist, says Wood magazine.

Expert cabinet makers select the "showing" side of panels first, grain second, and splices last.

According to Wood magazine, color is the overall tone of the wood. In most cases, you'll want a uniform veneer coloring all across the stock, or across each of several panels. In some species—where industry grading standards accept sapwood as well as heartwood for the veneer—there will be a color variation. Here, you'll want to make sure that the color variation occurs regularly enough to form a recognizable pattern.

Grain should also be consistent across the face of the panel.

According to Wood, the selection of matching flitches, or strips of veneer that make up the panel face, was made by the manufacturer, but it's up to you to choose the most pleasing effect.

Splices, the faintly visible joints between flitches, should be your last consideration after color and grain. Only when these butted-up flitch edges interfere with appearance will this choice change priority. When both sides look to be the same, the best face will usually have the fewest number of splices. To find them, scan the panel from left to right across the grain.

If you cannot decide, even after considering variations in color, grain, and splices, Wood suggests this test:

Wipe a light coat of tung or Danish oil on both sides of the panel. The oil tends to enhance and magnify everything and should make the choice more obvious.

Fun and easy

Teamwork can make a bathroom remodeling project fun and easy. A new medicine cabinet and vanity can be the first steps in creating a new bath look. In most cases, only basic tools are needed to complete the job.

Choose right fastener to hang items on wall

By The Associated Press

In hanging items on a wall, the key is to choose the right fastener. After all, you do want it to stay put.

Which fastener you choose depends on the weight of the object to be hung and what, if anything, is behind the wall.

Better Homes and Gardens Do-it-Yourself Home Repairs book offers these tips:

With lightweight items, driving a small nail at an angle often provides enough support. For pictures and similar wall ornaments, a steel picture hanger is better.

When hanging medium and heavy weight items, try to secure them to wall studs. To locate wall studs, rap on the wall at various spots with your hand. The spaces between studs will respond with a hollow sound. A solid "thunk" probably indicates a stud. For walls made of drywall, use a magnetic stud finder to locate the nailheads holding the material to the studs.

Tying into a single stud will give more than enough support for most items. However, Do-it-Yourself Home Repairs recommends that large or bulky objects such as kitchen cabinets may need to span several studs. To locate adjacent studs, measure over 16 inches. Occasionally, studs are placed on 24-inch centers. To confirm the location of studs, drive a small nail through the wall material. If a stud is not located where you need it, reach for a hollow-wall anchor, Molly bolt, or toggle bolt. The larger the fastener, the greater its strength.

To install a hollow-wall anchor, bore a hole through the wall material large enough to accommodate the anchor's shank. Insert the anchor into the hole, tap its barbed flange into the wall and turn the bolt clockwise until tight. As the bolt is tightened, the anchor's slotted flange collapses and grips the back side of the wall material. Toggle bolts function in much the same way as hollow-wall anchors, but they mount differently.

First, drill a hole through the wall. Make the hole big enough to accommodate the folded-up wings of the toggle. Remove the bolt from the spring-loaded wings. Slip it through a washer and then through the object to be hung. Re-attach the wings and push them through the hole in the wall. As the wings move past the back side of the drywall, they'll spring out. Then, pull out the fastener and at the same time tighten the bolt.

For hanging things on brick, block or stone walls, use a masonry bit to drill an appropriately-sized hole into the masonry, preferably into the mortar between units. Then drive a lead, fiber, or plastic anchor into the hole with a hammer. Next, slip a lag screw through a washer, through a hole in the object to be hung, and into the anchor. Drive the screw with a wrench. The anchor will expand and grab the interior surface of the hole.

FDA make drug

WASHINGTON (AP) - drug shown to prolong the AIDS sufferers won federal approval today for prescription in the United States.

Ado-thymidine, better known as AZT, is not represented for the deadly disease, but trials last fall convinced doctors it does prolong life and ease symptoms among some patients.

Noting that it is the only drug proven to offer relief, a Food and Drug Administration advisory panel concluded in January that AZT should be approved despite some side effects.

Today's final FDA approval was announced by Robert E. Anderson, assistant secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, had been widely expected for several weeks.

MCC go ahead with exchange

By John Mitchell
 Herald Reporter

Although it may not be until 1988, Manchester Community College will establish an exchange program with a Chinese university.

Questions had arisen whether the program would be a "sister institution," Tianjin University, would be the ground following the agreement that Dr. William E. Vincent, the college's president, signed July 1 to take a preliminary agreement in Pennsylvania. It was Vincent who had signed a "memorandum of understanding" during a week visit to China last year. The agreement was signed by Shi-zehn, president of Tianjin University for the exchange of student and faculty.

Vincent said officials are busy today to decide whether to proceed ahead with the program until his successor is named. Officials decided to sign the program.

Vincent said he plans to launch a similar program at Bucknell University in New York where he has accepted a position as president.

According to Wellington, a professor of data processing at MCC who will help coordinate the exchange, about six people already expressed interest in going to China. "The response is enthusiastic," he said.
