Hart, 'angry and defiant,' quits race

Related stories on page 5
By Carl Hilliard
The Associated Press

DENVER — A defiant Gary Hart abandoned the race for the Democratic presidential nomination today, declaring "I refuse to submit myself, my family and my friends" to continued public scrutiny.

"I'm not a beaten man; I'm an angry and defiant man," Hart told a news conference here.

Hart disappointed supporters at the news conference, who cheered briefly when the former senator said, "Hell, no!" after he described a decision to make a quick announcement and quietly leave the scene.

Hart briefly discussed the controversy that followed this week's revelations of his relations with a model. He then withdrew.

The Washington Post reported in today's edition that Hart made his decision after the paper presented his staff with documented evidence of a recent liaison between Hart and a Washington woman with whom he had had a long-term relationship.

The Post quoted a senior Hart aide as saying the Post's information came from a source who had been promised a withdrawal of Hart from the race.

In Denver, Hart spent 15 minutes talking to supporters at his headquarters. Dixon, interviewed by the Denver Post, said "What happened last night may well have accelerated Sen. Hart's decision to protect his family," referring to Hart's learning that other news reports were planned about his personal life. "But I don't think that was the reason for his making this decision."

Describing Hart's visit to the headquarters, Dixon said, "Gary thanked everyone and said the campaign was never about his being elected president so much as it was about a cause and the future direction of this country, and he asked me to carry on regardless of what his every body up there is going to carry out."

The departure of the one-time front-runner will scramble the contest, with each of the remaining eight Democratic hopefuls looking to turn the chaos quickly to his own advantage.

It was just six days ago that Hart campaign was staggered by a story in The Miami Herald, saying he had entertained a 29-year-old model overnight in his Washington townhouse. Both Hart and the woman, Donna Rice, of Miami, said they had never had an affair, but they admitted they also had made an overnight cruise aboard a yacht in a Caribbean island in March. There, Hart said, they slept on separate boats.

Hart subsequently refused to answer questions about whether he had ever committed adultery.

Criticism of Hart grew as skepticism about his version of events overshadowed questions about the completeness and correctness of the newspaper's story.

His standing in the polls — where his No. 1 position had not been held ever committed adultery.

McKinney's death spurs AIDS fight

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Speaker Jim Wright said today the death of Rep. Stewart B. McKinney from AIDS illustrates that a way must be found to halt the spread of the deadly disease.

McKinney's personal physician, Dr. Cesar Caceres, said he believed the nine-term Republican Connecticut congressman got AIDS from blood transfusions received during heart bypass surgery in 1979.

But the Washington Post, quoting knowledgeable sources on Capitol Hill and in the Washington gay community, said McKinney had homosexual relationships. Homosexual men are at greatest risk for AIDS.

President Reagan, in a statement today, praised McKinney as "a forceful advocate for the causes in which he believed" and said he had served the people of his district "with effectiveness and dedication."

As his first order of business today, the Senate passed a measure, introduced by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., renaming the Connecticut Coastal National Wildlife Refuge for McKinney.

Weicker called McKinney "my dearest friend in politics" and "chided" those that want to be preoccupied with the fashion, with the form of his death.

He said more attention should have been focused on the lawmaker's work over the years on behalf of the nation's poor, "giving voice to those who have absolutely no power."

Wright, appearing on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America," said, "I think, apparently, this disease is much more widespread than we realized, and many, many more, perhaps millions of people may be walking around not knowing that they carry this deadly virus."

"Surely we must do something in the interest of everyone's health, protection, safety. We must find a way to arrest it, some antidote for it," Wright said.

Luete McKinney, the congresswoman's widow, said she was devastated by the news of her husband's death.

Jobless rate down to 6.3%

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civilian unemployment hit a decade-low 6.3 percent last month as tens of thousands of jobs were created in construction, retail trade and business and health services, the government said today.

The 0.3 percentage point improvement over March's rate cut the number of jobless Americans to 7.5 million, the lowest since April 1980.

April's unemployment matches a 6.3 percent rate for the first three months of 1980. Not since December 1979, when unemployment was 6.0, has the rate been lower.

The jobs rate has been falling steadily since September, when it stood at 7.9 percent.

Since then, employers have reported adding a net 1.8 million workers to their payroll, virtually all in the service area, now responsible for three-fourths of the nation's business and government employment. Manufacturing accounts for the remainder, 24 percent.

The Labor Department's monthly household survey showed 467,000 more Americans at work in April than in March, with total civilian employment at a record 111,835,000. A separate survey of business and government payrolls showed an employment gain of 315,000.

Local GOP leaders on McKinney: 'There's nothing bad you can say'

By Andrew Yurkovsky
Herald Reporter

Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, who died Thursday of an infection caused by the AIDS virus, was remembered this morning by area Republicans as a valuable asset to the state of Connecticut.

Nathan Agostinelli, a member of the GOP State Central Committee, said McKinney, who represented the Fairfield County area, championed the rights of the underdog during his 17 years in Washington.

"There's nothing bad you can say about Stewart. He's the kind of guy you really need in politics," Agostinelli said.

McKinney, 56, was not interested in acquiring political power but in serving his constituents. Agostinelli said. He said that the 4th District congressman was accessible, even "to those outside his district."

McKinney recently attracted national attention when he spent a night with the homeless in Washington, D.C., to dramatize their plight.

"And that sort of exemplifies Stewart McKinney," Agostinelli said.

Agostinelli became acquainted with McKinney during his own run for state comptroller and when the two worked on the Nixon and Reagan presidential campaigns.

Thomas F. Ferguson, a former chairman of the Republican Town Committee, said that McKinney's importance goes beyond partisan politics.

"Stew was a people man, he was a great negotiator of the party," Ferguson said.

George T. LaBonne, a former member of the GOP state central committee, said that McKinney's unwillingness to stand in the spotlight says a lot about the congressman.

"I think the mere fact that he was not a sensationalist is a tribute to his personality," LaBonne said. He said McKinney "kept his nuts-and-bolts things in order," focusing his efforts on the day-to-day work of committees.

McKinney's doctor said Thursday that the congressman probably contracted AIDS through a blood transfusion while undergoing heart surgery in 1979. But the Washington Post this morning cited anonymous sources as saying that McKinney had had homosexual relationships. Homosexual men are considered at high risk in contracting the AIDS virus.

"That's the most vicious rumor that anyone can spread. I think that's a vicious, rotten rumor," Agostinelli said. He said he believes that the disease was indeed contracted through a blood transfusion.

LaBonne called the allegation "hogwash."

Rose 'sorry' for himself

BRIDGEPORT — Michael Rose, convicted of two killings and being tried for four more, told police he returned to the woods where he buried one victim and "sat by a large tree feeling sorry for myself."

Confessing to another rape-murder, Rose, 28, of Griswold, told police he "went back once or twice to the scene where I left the body... I felt bad about what I had done but I never told anyone for fear of getting caught."

State's Attorney C. Robert Batti Sr. read the signed confessions Thursday in Superior Court during the fourth day of Rose's trial for the killings of four other young women.

The confessions were for the killing in January 1985 of Tammy Williams, 17, of Brooklyn, Conn., whose body was found in a swamp in June 1984; and Deborah Taylor, 25, of Griswold, whose body turned up four months after her June 1982 death.

Tort reform passes House

HARTFORD — Victims of civil wrongdoing would be able to get a larger share of jury awards under a bill headed by Gov. William A. O'Neill's desk after easily winning passage in the House.

Backers of the measure say they expect O'Neill to sign it, although the governor said earlier this year he would have to be convinced the current system wasn't working as well as it might.

"This bill enhances the rights of victims of civil wrongs," said Rep. Richard D. Tulliano, R-Poquonock, co-chairman of the Judiciary Committee. "It's important because it puts some fairness back into our system."

The measure, unanimously approved last week in the Senate, was approved by the House 100-37 Thursday after 2 1/2 hours of debate.

Collapsing victims mourned

BRIDGEPORT — Hundreds bowed their heads in prayer, flags flew at half-staff and radio stations fell silent two weeks from the moment an apartment building collapsed, killing 28 workers.

Even as the city mourned, published reports questioned the alignment of steel columns and firmness of ground beneath L'Ambiance Plaza that could have contributed to the collapse.

Construction workers in T-shirts, state and city officials in dark suits and women, some carrying babies, crowded into Thursday's 1 p.m. Mass at St. Augustine's Cathedral, two blocks from the site of the disaster.

The cathedral bells tolled 28 times for four minutes beginning at 1:36 p.m., the exact time the building fell.

Student charged in theft

HARTFORD — A Trinity College student was arrested Thursday on charges he stole a computerized list of Democratic Party contributors and political strategies from the State House Majority Office, state police said.

Mark Welland, 21, whose hometown was not available, turned himself in and was charged with third-degree larceny, according to a prepared statement from state police. He was released on a written promise to appear in Hartford Superior Court on May 28.

Building remains closed

NEW HAVEN — A downtown retail and office building will remain closed until at least June 1 because of concern about its structural integrity, officials said.

An evacuation of the 148-year-old, three-story building was ordered on April 27, the manager of the building told the New Haven Register. The manager did not want his name used in the newspaper.

The Phoenix Building, at 818 Chapel St., housed four retail and office offices and studios. It will remain closed until at least June 1, when an engineer's report is due, said Maxine Olderman, spokeswoman for Nicotra Water Property Management, which oversees the property.

Candidate escapes arrest

CONCORD, N.H. — The state says it will not press charges against longshot Democratic presidential hopeful Anthony Martin-Trigona who was wanted to the ground after interrupting a news conference by another presidential candidate.

The Connecticut lawyer was carried out Thursday by three security agents from a Statehouse news conference at which Democratic Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee was discussing his own campaign.

Martin-Trigona said he went to the Statehouse to hold a news conference about the Seabrook nuclear plant, but when he saw Gore's news conference he decided to engage Gore in an "impromptu debate."

Baby's death a homicide

NAUGATUCK — The death of a 21-month-old girl whose battered body was found in her mother's home has been ruled a homicide, authorities said.

An official at the state medical examiner's office in Farmington said Thursday that Sarah Cibulka died of brain injuries. Her body was found Wednesday covered with cuts and bruises, including several human bite marks.

The child's mother and her boyfriend were arrested Wednesday. Both have been charged with risk of injury to a minor.

The mother, Donna Cibulka, 25, is being held in the Connecticut Correctional Institution in Niantic on a $50,000 bond. Cibulka's boyfriend, Alex Nelson, 31, of Naugatuck, who was also charged with second-degree assault, is being held on a $100,000 bond at the New Haven Correctional Center.

McKinney's death stops legislation

Friends and adversaries pause to pay tribute to 'kind man'

By The Associated Press

The death of nine-term U.S. Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn., stopped action by colleagues on the House floor in Washington and at the state Capitol in Hartford as friends and adversaries paused to pay tribute to him.

McKinney died Thursday afternoon from a bacterial infection brought on by AIDS, according to his personal physician.

"As we mourn his passing, let us also celebrate the life Stewart McKinney led as one of the most dedicated, diligent and compassionate congressmen to have served in Washington," Vice President George Bush said. "So many times he lifted our spirits with his personal warmth, quick wit and engaging character. How we will miss him."

"A very kind man died today," said U.S. Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., who held McKinney's seat before running for the Senate. "A voice of compassion was stilled today. Many loved him. More will miss him."

"In an age of slick politics and empty promises, Stew McKinney was the genuine article: a public servant who was as much at home in a housing project as a corporate boardroom," said U.S. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn. McKinney's "wit and passion were the instruments of decency, fairness and common sense. He was one of a kind."

Most politicians skirted questions about McKinney's AIDS, of which rumors had been circulating for about a year.

One exception came from McKinney's House colleague Henry Waxman, D-Calif., who said McKinney's death "illustrates why we need to do everything possible to stop this treacherous disease through continued research and funding. We need to encourage people to be tested."

U.S. Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., introduced a resolution on the House floor saying he and his colleagues had learned of McKinney's death "with profound sorrow."

"This is a body that often breaks down in a parlous state," said Gejdenson, "but we don't often spend time with our friends." Gejdenson said. "For those of us in the Connecticut delegation, Stewart was a friend."

House GOP Leader Robert Michel of Illinois said he was "in mourning" over the death of his friend and colleague Stew served the House with distinction for 15 years and we will dearly miss him.

"I've never known a more dedicated member," said House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas. "He seemed to embody those characteristics of forbearance, of understanding, of respect for other people the assumption of sincerity he would want accorded to him."

"When I first came to Congress, Stewart was like a big brother," said U.S. Rep. Nancy L. Johnson, R-Conn. "He found me a place to live, held a reception to introduce me to my colleagues, and he sent me a fine legislative aide. He has been a good friend and counselor."

U.S. Rep. Barbara B. Kennelly, D-Conn., said McKinney had "served his state and nation long and well. I know him as a dedicated fighter for the people he represents and as a profoundly decent human being."

Former aide hopes some good will come

By Judd Everhart
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — The man who ran U.S. Rep. Stewart B. McKinney's 1982 re-election says he had "known for a while" that the congressman had AIDS and defended the wish of McKinney's family and his doctors to keep it secret until after he died.

Jay F. Malenky, the former aide, said he hoped some good would come out of McKinney's death.

The nine-term congressman died Thursday afternoon at a Washington hospital, where he had been admitted April 22. His doctor said he died of a bacterial infection brought on by AIDS contracted by blood transfusions, which was formally diagnosed after admission to the hospital.

Speculation about McKinney having AIDS had circulated for the past year. His office consistently attributed his troubles to a variety of ailments, most recently bronchitis.

Malenky, a New Britain lawyer who worked for McKinney in 1977 and 1978, ran the '82 campaign and then served as an aide to the House Committee on the District of Columbia on which McKinney served, said McKinney and his family had little choice but to keep his AIDS aspect of his health problems secret.

"How would he have functioned if it got out that he was dying of AIDS?" Malenky said in an interview at the Capitol, where he works as a lobbyist for the Connecticut Trial Lawyers Association. "Nobody would have wanted to be in the same room with him."

"There was never an attempt made to deceive the public, although I think that prior to his death it was nobody's business," he said.

"He insisted that it be made a matter of public record when he died and that's the kind of guy he was."

"I don't feel any discomfort at all that he died from AIDS. I feel sorry for his family because it's a horrible disease to die from. But I think what this may do is focus on the fact that it's a disease that's getting to be so commonplace that it's almost researched on the halls of the United States Congress."

Asked why McKinney wouldn't make his AIDS public if he got it from a blood transfusion, Malenky said, "I think that his doctors, who played a tremendous role, and his family, just thought it would be easier on him this way."

"My hope would be that people remember McKinney for his tremendous dedication to his constituency and his accomplishments over a two-decade period in Congress, rather than what the cause of death was," Malenky said.

Officials say death will erase misconceptions

HARTFORD (AP) — The death of U.S. Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn., will help erase misconceptions about the different ways AIDS can be transmitted, health officials say.

McKinney's death was caused by a bacterial infection brought on by AIDS, according to his personal physician, who believes the disease was transmitted to the congressman during one of many blood transfusions he received while undergoing multiple bypass surgery in 1979.

"If a transfusion was the source in McKinney's case, it demonstrates that it's not just a disease between homosexual and bisexual men," said Dr. Peter Galbraith, chief of health promotion at the Department of Health.

AIDS is a contagious disease, for which no cure has been found that attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections. It is believed caused by a human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV.

The virus is spread through contact with blood, semen and other bodily fluids. The chief victims of AIDS have been homosexual men and intravenous drug users.

"He (McKinney) didn't have the same protection that people have today, and it's very unlikely" that people will contract AIDS through blood transfusions, Galbraith said.

The Connecticut Red Cross began screening blood for AIDS in the spring of 1985, after the federal Food and Drug Administration approved current testing procedures, said Maryland Lincoln, director of public relations for the Connecticut Red Cross.

Rep. Stewart McKinney, photographed here in 1980, died Thursday of AIDS contracted in a blood transfusion.

"Throughout his distinguished career, he exhibited the qualities of leadership and devotion which brought him the respect of his colleagues and his constituents," Dronay said.

State House Minority Leader Robert G. Jaeble, R-Bristol, said McKinney was "a very effective congressman — maybe not a front-page, headline, glamour-star type of congressman, but hard-working and dedicated to the needs of this state... I am truly saddened."

Rep. E. Van Norstrand, D-Darien, a conservative Republican, said McKinney carried his liberalism with more grace than other liberal Republicans, including Weicker.

"I know he sometimes used to irritate me in some town committees, that he wasn't an orthodox Republican. His voting record was something like Weicker's, but he was quiet. He wasn't loud about it, and that bespeaks the personality. He was a nice guy, he really was," Van Norstrand said.

Evidence of another Hart liaison 'accelerated the inevitable' pullout

WASHINGTON (AP) — Just hours before Gary Hart decided to end his race for the Democratic presidential nomination, the candidate's staff was presented with evidence of a recent liaison between Hart and a Washington woman, the Washington Post reported today.

The Post said it presented the candidate's staff with the information, and it quoted a senior Hart aide as saying the development "accelerated the inevitable" withdrawal of Hart from the race.

Hart campaign manager Bill Dixon told the Denver Post that "documented evidence of a recent liaison between Hart and a Washington woman with whom he has had a long-term relationship." The reporter requested an interview with Hart.

Upon hearing about the Post material, Hart was described by a campaign source as being distraught.

Early in the day, Hart had held a tense, six-minute news conference where he refused to answer questions about adultery.

"Hart reportedly decided on his own to end the candidacy shortly after he heard the Post's information," the paper said.

On Thursday morning, senior Hart aide Hal Haddon telephoned Bradlee to inquire what the Post planned to do. Bradlee told him the Post did not have a story prepared and never intended to publish the woman's name.

Indicted legislator is in good condition

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Harold Ford, a Tennessee Democrat, facing fraud charges, was in good condition today in a Washington hospital after complaining of chest pains.

Ford was admitted Thursday to Washington Hospital Center for observation and was listed in good condition this morning, a nursing supervisor said.

Hospital spokeswoman Mary Anderson said Thursday that Ford did not suffer a heart attack.

The congressman's office issued a statement saying Ford suffered severe chest pains at about 11:30 p.m. but was in "no immediate danger." He was treated by a Capitol medical team before being taken to the hospital.

Ford's brother, James Ford, said the congressman had chest pains three to four years ago that required hospitalization, but he does not have a history of heart disease.

Ford was indicted along with four other men on April 24 by a federal grand jury in Knoxville.

Transfusion-related deaths continue

NEW YORK (AP) — The AIDS death of U.S. Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn., which is being linked to blood transfusions in 1979, illustrates that transfusion-related AIDS will still appear regardless of the current safety of the blood supply.

"That is because the AIDS virus can take years to cause disease after it infects a person."

So AIDS cases from past transfusions will appear now, even after blood banks have instituted such safety measures as screening blood for proteins called antibodies that show a donor has been exposed to the virus.

"We hope people will understand that most of these cases, as in this case, occurred before the availability of an antibody test," Terry Gautier, spokeswoman for the American Red Cross, said Thursday.

"Today, no one who really needs a blood transfusion should refuse it for fear of getting AIDS," she said.

Gov. William A. O'Neill, who was elected to the state House of Representatives with McKinney in 1966, called McKinney an industrious and hard-working... courteous and sympathetic.

"In every case that I remember working with him, he always had the best interest of the state and his constituents in mind," the governor said. "Although he was a Republican from Fairfield and I a Democrat from East Hampton, we always worked well together."

"The state of Connecticut has lost a great leader and a fine man," said O'Neill, who added he had last spoken with McKinney a month ago.

The governor ordered flags on state buildings lowered to half-staff until McKinney is buried.

McKinney's seat will remain vacant until a special election is called by O'Neill. The governor said Thursday evening that he had given no thought to setting a date.

Former state Rep. Christine M. Niedermeyer, a Fairfield Democrat who replaced McKinney last year, said he was "a good friend, a strong competitor, someone who worked hard to serve the best interests of the people."

She refused to talk about whether she would run for the seat again.

Republican State Chairman Robert S. Polner said McKinney had "left a record of public service that has been achieved by few and surpassed by none."

State Democratic Chairman John F. Dronay Jr. said McKinney had served "in the highest traditions of public service."

State House Minority Leader Robert G. Jaeble, R-Bristol, said McKinney was "a very effective congressman — maybe not a front-page, headline, glamour-star type of congressman, but hard-working and dedicated to the needs of this state... I am truly saddened."

Rep. E. Van Norstrand, D-Darien, a conservative Republican, said McKinney carried his liberalism with more grace than other liberal Republicans, including Weicker.

"I know he sometimes used to irritate me in some town committees, that he wasn't an orthodox Republican. His voting record was something like Weicker's, but he was quiet. He wasn't loud about it, and that bespeaks the personality. He was a nice guy, he really was," Van Norstrand said.

Volunteers refuse to admit defeat

DENVER — The state Democratic Party chairman called it "a very sad time" after Gary Hart and his wife huddled behind locked doors with supporters on the eve his announcement of the fate of his candidacy.

Amid reports he has abandoned his quest for the nomination, Hart had no comment for reporters as he met for 15 minutes Thursday night with his staff and supporters in his six-story Colorado headquarters building.

As Hart left the building in a crush of reporters and cameramen, several media representatives fell over themselves in an effort to get to Hart.

Hart stopped for a moment and smiled. "You guys take it easy and calm down," he said.

State Democratic Party chief Bule Seawell declined to confirm or deny that Hart, who scheduled a news conference for this morning, was withdrawing from the race.

But Seawell spoke in the past tense when he told reporters it is "a time to remember we were trying to do something for our country."

"This is a very sad time," he said.

Ad Hart's campaign manager, William Dixon, told reporters "Senator Hart came tonight to thank his supporters and say that we hope that we will all carry on, that the campaign has always been bigger than him. I whether the volunteers and staff members working inside the headquarters were upset about the reports.

"I'm still smiling and still going," he said about stepping back inside. "We've got support coming in from friends and supporters who are standing behind Gary and behind the campaign."

However, a network news reporter allowed inside the headquarters shortly before the doors were locked described the mood inside as grim and said he saw supporters weeping in their eyes.

In the mountains near Kittredge, meanwhile, a horde of reporters and photographers representing organizations from across the country converged on Hart's secluded home in the Troublesome Gulch subdivision.

The crowd was less behind a wooden gate located approximately 150 yards from the house. The gate was put up about two weeks ago after Hart announced his candidacy.

A 4-year-old, Tim Bowen, made his way around the gate, but rather than being greeted he was given Hart's autograph and had his picture taken with Hart and his wife, Lee, standing on either side.

The youth wasn't charged, but his mother, Norma, said she was still upset about the rumors of Hart's withdrawal from the presidential race.

"It's a shame," the 28-year resident of Kittredge said, shaking her head.

What're their names?

With Hart out, Democratic voters will be faced with little-knowns

By Donald M. Rothberg
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The abrupt withdrawal of front-runner Gary Hart from the Democratic presidential race transforms the contest into a struggle among seven politicians little known outside their own areas and another candidate that few think can win the nomination.

Only the Rev. Jesse Jackson can claim a significant national following.

The others? They are names like Babbitt, Biden, Clinton, Dukakis, Gephardt, Gore and Simon.

Until this disastrous week, Hart was running significantly ahead of all his rivals in the polls. It was the former Colorado senator against the field. The race was his to lose, and he lost it more swiftly than anyone could have imagined.

Now, according to his Wyoming campaign manager, Rodger McDonald, Hart will announce today in Denver he is pulling out.

So, the second tier of candidates becomes the first tier until, some one or two can break away.

But Hart's departure also opens the door for new entrants, including such names as change his mind. Hart's withdrawal "has nothing to do with me," said Cuomo. "The reason I chose not to run has nothing to do with Gary Hart, have nothing to do with my position in the polls; they have nothing to do with whether or not I could win."

Cuomo's reluctance won't still the voices eager to get the New York governor into the race.

Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, another politician who drew prominent mention as a potential candidate, put his plans on hold last winter and said he would re-examine the situation this summer. He's certain to find the situation dramatically changed from February. Of the announced candidates, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts is well known in neighboring New Hampshire, the site of the first primary.

A poll of 600 likely New Hampshire primary voters conducted for The Boston Herald and WBZ-TV said Thursday that Hart, who was tied with Dukakis a week ago at 32 percent each, had fallen behind Dukakis 37 percent to 17 percent.

But Dukakis' disadvantage may be the high expectations for him in New Hampshire, a state with a notoriously contrary electorate and a history of being unkind to Massachusetts politicians.

Former Gov. Bruce Babbitt of Arizona recently gambled by committing $250,000 on television advertising in Iowa, the state that leads off the Democratic process with precinct caucuses eight days before the New Hampshire primary.

Some Democrats shook their heads over Babbitt's decision to spend so much money so early in the race. Now they might consider it a stroke of luck if not genius.

Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri has based his bid on doing well in Iowa and courting support from organized labor. Gephardt is the author of labor-backed legislation aimed at forcing the government to retaliates against Japan to deal with that nation's trade imbalance with the United States.

Many Democrats had considered Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware the candidate with the best chance of overtaking Hart. With Hart out of the contest, Biden's chances will look better.

One of the party's best speakers, Biden is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and a senior member of the Foreign Relations panel. He recently surprised many party regulars by reporting $1.7 million in contributions during the last quarter, about $400,000 more than front-runners received.

The longer shots among this field of long shots would be Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee, Paul Simon of Illinois, and Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas. Clinton has not yet said whether he will run, but the removal of the front-runner is certain to make a race more attractive.

Gore has the support of some of the party's leading fund-raisers, while Simon has appeal among traditional liberals.

Each of the little known faces will gain fame and stature remains uncertain. But the Democrats now have a far different contest than one 26 days ago when Hart declared his candidacy.

Dukakis, Babbitt, Biden, Clinton, Dukakis, Gephardt, Gore and Simon.

Any of the contenders could claim front-runner status upon Hart's departure. It would be Jackson. His support among black voters — the largest group in the Democratic camp — surprised the political establishment in 1984 when he finished third behind Walter F. Mondale and Hart in the Democratic race.

But Jackson's race and his political position to the left of where Democratic leaders think the party ought to be makes him a very long shot for the nomination.

Most prominent among those who decided against running was Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York, and he insisted Thursday he would not change his mind.

Hart's withdrawal "has nothing to do with me," said Cuomo. "The reason I chose not to run has nothing to do with Gary Hart, have nothing to do with my position in the polls; they have nothing to do with whether or not I could win."

Cuomo's reluctance won't still the voices eager to get the New York governor into the race.

Hart couldn't stay in race

Gary Hart's decision to withdraw from the presidential race today showed considerable political reality. It's too bad the man didn't act with the same political reality a few days ago when he asked Donna Rice over to the Washington townhouse.

His blunder was especially stupid, considering his months-old public-relations problem of overcoming the image of a womanizer. It indicated an incredible lack of native intelligence, a quality sorely needed in a chief executive.

Whether he had an affair with the curvaceous Rice matters little. What matters is that the candidate who claimed to be the happy family man got caught in a situation which made him out to be a liar. Hart has learned that it is not fair to do as he pleases, but it is a fact. In this day, a candidate whose personal life cannot pass muster has no business trying for the highest job in the land.

There are those who would say that a candidate's personal life is no one's business. There are those who would say that there have been few presidents who have not been linked with extra-marital affairs.

Hart made the right decision today. Few Americans are willing to forgive a future president such a transgression. We want to believe that the president is a moral, as well as a political and ideological, leader of our country.

But Hart virtually issued a challenge to catch him in a deceit. Having been caught, he owed to the American public to drop out of the race.

Time for women in Rotary Club

The only woman at the Manchester Rotary Club's Tuesday dinner meeting was a waitress.

Thanks to a Supreme Court ruling on Monday, that situation may be changing. The justices voted to uphold a California law that bars Rotary International from ousting local chapters that have women members. The decision opens the door for chapters around the country to begin actively recruiting and welcoming women to the fold.

Rotary is a public-service organization which is the most public manifestation of the "old-boy network." Though members claim they are fined $1 for talking business, the friendships forged through this group are no doubt indispensable door-openers in the world of business.

The effects of the Supreme Court decision will be far-reaching and enormously important for women. In Manchester, the reaction of many members was that the decision was long overdue. At least that was the polite public reaction.

So it would be wise to withhold congratulations to local Rotarians for their liberal views until a Manchester woman is asked to join the fraternity.

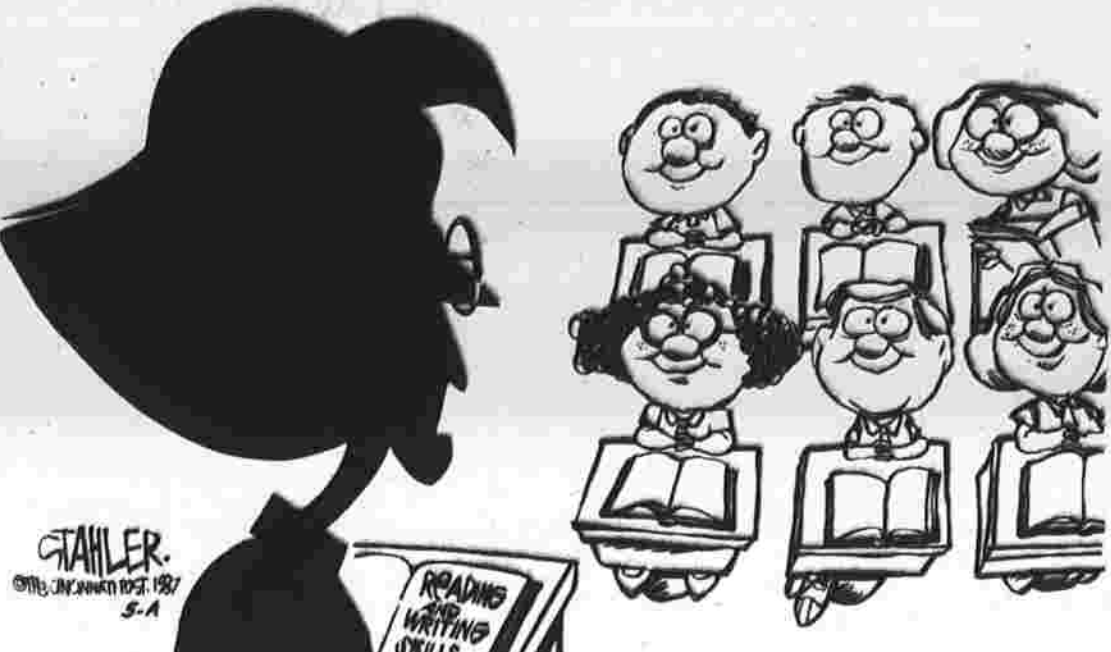

There are enough accomplished business women in Manchester that the only trouble the Rotary Club will have is trying to figure out which woman will have the honor of being the first to be asked to join.

20 years since the hooking of America

Every time another athletic hero is apprehended with white powder up his nose, the commissioner of the sport involved remarks that the problem is society-wide. If proof were needed, the arrest of a string of Wall Street stockbrokers for traffic in drugs supplied it. Evidently the only occupation immune to the problem is TV evangelism where the vices run more to sex and money.

The reaction from the society's commanding institutional heights to the prevalence of leisure-time drug consumption has been frantic and impatiently ill-focused. It has also been compromised both by an unknown but serious amount of official corruption and also by some kind of possible collusion with drug traffickers by people in the Reagan administration who may have used cocaine to finance their contra operations in Central America. At least one cargo plane loaded with marijuana landed at Homestead Air Force Base in Florida, according to CBS News. If true, it would be the first time. During the Vietnam War the CIA had a hand in heroin smuggling for similar reasons of state. It's noteworthy that some of the names associated now with the contra cocaine dealings are the same as those who, as young men, were involved with CIA drug smuggling in Southeast Asia.

IF IT COMES DOWN TO IT, is America willing to supply its youth with cocaine and such as the price for helping the contra win the war against the Nicaraguan communists? Perhaps they are, at least some of them. After all, there are many among us who would accept nuclear annihilation as a reasonable cost for terminating Marxism with extreme prejudice. It's possible to date such a phenomenon and ragedly phenomenon, this year is

"Study hard and, who knows, some day you could be another Vanna White or Pat Sajak."

Graham brothers family tree key

To the Editor:

I am compiling a "family tree" and would like to hear from any descendants of George, Gilbert and Thomas-David Graham. The three above-mentioned brothers emigrated to the U.S.A. before the Great War (1914-18) from a place called the Birches near Portadown, Northern Ireland. From information gathered, I believe one, if not all three, lived in Manchester when they settled in the U.S.A.

I am the granddaughter of Charles Graham. My father David, remembers Gilbert and George returning for a holiday when he was very young, about 9 years old, which would make the date approximately 1928.

Bill reduces hospital costs

To the Editor:

On Wednesday, April 29, the House of Representatives passed a bill that reduces future hospital costs under the prospective payment system for reimbursement, and grants certain rebates to people who have had a hospital stay since the original program went into effect Oct. 1, 1986.

The program charges patients staying in Connecticut hospitals flat fees for particular operations regardless of how long they stay in hospital. Patient illnesses are categorized into 470 diagnosis related groups (DRGs), which determine the amount to be paid.

Fantasy violence is not harmless

To the Editor:

Your editorial, "Laser Foes Make Big Impact" makes several points to which I would like to respond. It is a fact that many residents are concerned about the effect of a "laser" game establishment both on the quality of their lives and their property values. This is a legitimate concern that has been addressed directly and openly. I do not agree that "fantasy" violence may provide a "harmless outlet for aggressive urges."

Jack Anderson

I have heard this same argument for the past 20 years used to defend pornography. Does fantasy provide a harmless outlet for aggressive sex? As one who works with the rapidly increasing number of those convicted of sexual offenses, I suggest that such things have been proved false. Please note the frightening increase of violent sexual offenses against women and children.

You indicate that since those opposed to the center did not speak out against "Rambo" and Parkade games, opposition to "laser" games now, will you in the future not speak out against "laser" games now, will you in the future not speak out against other subsequent issues?

As an individual who opposes the establishment of such centers on East Middle Turnpike or anywhere, may I point out that I have been opposed to the sale of guns and to all weapons that foster a spirit of violence, including such movies as "Rambo." I believe you will find some of this opposition on public record over the years. However, public response is most effective when reasonable numbers of the public perceive an issue of concern. In this regard, those of us who are concerned about the effect of violence and the promotion of a spirit of violence as a form of entertainment find the present public concern a welcome opportunity to raise the whole issue of violence and its effects in our society.

Just possibly, once the community has had the occasion to stand back and reflect on issues and root causes, we may indeed have a rising community concern over the sale of weapons, computerized games of violence, and media presentations which extol violence against one's brothers and sisters as an acceptable, even heroic way of life.

Mini-editorial

At a recent Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on foreign aid, the African nation of Djibouti was mentioned. The senior Republicans, Jesse Helms of North Carolina, inquired where it was, and San Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., strode in a big map and pointed out the tiny country on the shores of the Red Sea. So take solace, the young among you who have been accused of being ignorant of geography. Some of your learned leaders aren't so smart either.

U.S. offers draft treaty

GENEVA — The United States has finished a draft treaty calling for large cutbacks in strategic nuclear weapons, and planned to present it today during talks with the Soviet Union, a U.S. source said.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, declined to reveal details of the proposal. But President Reagan said last Monday that a draft on strategic missiles would be introduced in Geneva as a way to "intensely" efforts to reach agreement on reducing strategic offensive nuclear arms by 50 percent.

Reagan said the draft would reflect agreements reached at last year's summit with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev in Iceland, and address Soviet concerns expressed since then.

Credit-card firms prey on consumers

WASHINGTON — Americans hold some 186 million credit cards — three cards for every four people in the country — and concern is growing that these consumers may be easy prey for companies that are making fat profits on the interest.

Despite the fact that smaller banks have gotten into the business and are offering lower rates, the average interest rate fell only half a percent in 1986. The average credit card rate now stands at a whopping 18.1 percent.

American Express will soon offer preferred customers favorable terms and other companies may counter, but this won't be enough to bring down rates substantially. The reason: The cards are one of banking's most profitable lines of business. The top 10 credit card companies charge an average rate of 19.2 percent and none has a rate below 17.88 percent. This does not include the annual fees.

Outraged lawmakers on Capitol Hill have offered bills that would tackle the problem of usurious interest rates. One measure would tie rates to the yield on certain Treasury securities; another would require credit companies to make full up-front disclosure of their annual interest rates.

Such moves would irritate the states, which historically have had the power to regulate credit card rates. The powerful banking lobby would also go into a full-court press. A national interest rate would force banks to be more cautious, they will argue, and thus deny credit to new and low-income applicants.

For these reasons, sources told our associate Michael Binstein, the idea of an interest rate cap will not survive, but full disclosure requirements stand a good chance of becoming law.

Beer battles
For seven years, the beer lobby has besieged Capitol Hill with pleas for an anti-trust exemption that would allow wholesalers regional monopolies. But the battle has been complicated this year by the introduction of additional measures of interest to the beer industry.

There are proposals to increase the federal excise tax on soda and to mandate warning labels on beer bottles. Legislation may also be filed that would limit beer advertising on radio and television.

The Beer Institute is concerned that the new developments may strain the industry's lobbying resources, and it recently warned its allied organizations to weigh the costs of blindly pushing the anti-trust exemption legislation.

The National Beer Wholesaler Association, however, is ignoring the caution flags. In March, the group unanimously agreed to push for the law that would grant wholesaler monopolies.

Announced the group's chairman: "It has our highest priority."

Israeli bomb near Sidon

SIDON, Lebanon — Israeli planes bombed Palestinian targets near Sidon today, killing 10 people and wounding 25, police said. The Israelis said they earlier foiled an attempt by guerrillas to enter Israel and seize hostages.

Four U.S.-built F-4s and two Israeli-made Kfir made three runs over the Palestinian refugee camps of Ein el-Hiwah and Mieh Mieh in the attack that began at 1:55 p.m. today, police said.

Ambulances took casualties to Sidon hospitals. Police reported one hour after the raid that rescuers had evacuated 25 wounded civilians.

Vote sets collision course

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu says the rightward swing by white voters has set a collision course between the voteless black majority and security forces.

"We have entered the dark ages of the history of our country," Tutu said Thursday, reflecting the distress of many blacks at the results of Wednesday's election for the white chamber of parliament.

Suburban far-right election voters on Thursday pledged to seek tougher enforcement of apartheid laws. Rebuffed anti-apartheid liberals were left in despair.

Thatcher's party strong

LONDON — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party made a strong showing in municipal elections, making a June general election appear virtually certain.

As results of Thursday's elections for control of most of the cities and towns in England and Wales poured in before dawn today, the main opposition socialist Labour Party was the only party suffering a net loss of seats.

Labour retained control of the big cities of Birmingham and Manchester, but with a reduced average rate of 19.2 percent and none has a rate below 17.88 percent. This does not include the annual fees.

U.S. delegate Menochem Rosenzweig called Brunner "the most notorious living Nazi war criminal" and said he was responsible for the deportation of 125,000 Jews to Nazi death camps.

Canada to update navy

TORONTO — Canada is close to choosing British- or French-designed nuclear-powered submarines to modernize its navy and assert its disputed sovereignty in the Arctic Northwest Passage, senior officials said.

"We're talking eight to 12 submarines," Rear Adm. Charles Thomas, who takes over the command of the Canadian navy this summer, told The Associated Press in an interview Thursday.

Canada's first fleet of nuclear subs would cost up to $3.75 billion. To justify the cost, the government is negotiating a transfer of technology under which two-thirds of the contracts would go to Canadian firms.

Challenger suit settled

HOUSTON — The widow of Challenger astronaut Ronald E. McNair expressed hope for the space program after the family settled a $4 million lawsuit against rocket maker Morton Thiokol Inc.

Terms of the settlement agreed upon Thursday were not disclosed, and records of the case were sealed.

"It is my hope our efforts in outer space will continue and be conducted in a safe manner," Charyl McNair said. "Ron looked forward to the establishment of a space station and further development of space exploration."

Air controllers cheated

WASHINGTON — An instructor at the Federal Aviation Administration's air traffic control training school alleges that answers to the final exam were available to students for as long as two years, according to a public report.

The Washington Post quotes the unidentified instructor as saying a packet of answers to problems on the exam was available to students and March. After that, FAA officials began developing substitute questions.

Iranians attack Soviet freighter

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — For the first time in the Persian Gulf war, Iranian forces attacked a Soviet freighter in the strategic waterway, marine salvage executives reported today.

The attack on the 6,489-ton Ivan Koroteyev at noon Thursday followed Iranian warnings to Kuwait not to seek Soviet and U.S. help to protect its vessels against Iranian attacks in the Gulf.

Second indictment almost certain

Tough questions resume in fourth day at witness table

By Jim Ortved
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Retired Maj. Gen. William V. Secord, portrayed in three days of testimony as an aggressive manager of the Iran-Contra arms deals, will almost certainly be indicted as a result of what he has told Congress according to a member of the Senate investigating panel.

Secord's testimony, though questioning from members of the House and Senate committees when he came back for a fourth day at the witness table today, was somewhat less probing today.

Sen. Lowell Weicker, D-Conn., a former chief justice of his state's Supreme Court, said enough questions were raised to "strongly suggest" that a possible indicting panel in the sale of U.S. weapons to Iran and diversion of payments to the Nicaraguan Contras to help Secord into court.

"I don't think there's any question that his testimony today will cause his indictment," Weicker said in an interview after the nearly six hours of questioning.

"It will of necessity mean the special prosecutor will bring an indictment," Weicker said.

Committee OKs added Medicare

WASHINGTON (AP) — House committee approval of a catastrophic health bill sets the stage for the first major expansion of Medicare in 22 years and strongly suggests a tax-based progressive financing plan will be injected into the program for the first time.

The major additional benefits in the measure, which cleared the House Ways and Means Committee late Thursday, are centered on a plan drafted by Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen and embraced by President Reagan after weeks of debate within the administration.

Although the bill goes somewhat beyond the administration approach is the progressive nature of financing in which 40 percent of relatively well-to-do elderly Americans would pay most of the freight for the entire program.

The administration would finance its proposal by imposing the same flat premium increase — about $6 a month to start — on all 31 million Medicare beneficiaries regardless of income.

Although beneficiaries of the income-related financing in the House bill are careful not to use the word tax, the variable charge — called a "supplemental premium" — would be calculated under a new section and premium table on income tax forms.

There was some objection to calling the payment a tax, Rep. Fortney H. Stark, D-Calif., chairman of the Ways and Means subcommittee, told reporters after approval of the bill. "It is a premium. It is an income-related premium. It is not means-testing."

Rep. Willis D. Gradison Jr. of Ohio, ranking Republican on the health subcommittee and co-author of the bill with Stark, said he prefers to call the financing mechanism "a mandatory, income-related user fee."

Iranians attack Soviet freighter

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — For the first time in the Persian Gulf war, Iranian forces attacked a Soviet freighter in the strategic waterway, marine salvage executives reported today.

The attack on the 6,489-ton Ivan Koroteyev at noon Thursday followed Iranian warnings to Kuwait not to seek Soviet and U.S. help to protect its vessels against Iranian attacks in the Gulf.

The Iranian attack on the Kuwaiti freighter was the first in the 9 1/2-year-old war. The Soviets are Iraq's main arms supplier.

The sources, who commented on condition of anonymity, said the general cargo vessel was hit off Dubai in the southern waters of the gulf. It sailed from Kuwait three days ago on route for the Saudi Arabian port of Dammam via Dubai.

The London-based Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence unit said the vessel was attacked by "unidentified small boats" and that its hull and superstructure were damaged.

Left, Senate counsel Arthur Liman puts a question to retired Maj. Gen. Richard Secord Thursday on Capitol Hill on the third day of testimony in the Iran-contra hearings. Right, Secord, looking up, gets advice from his attorney, Thomas Green. Secord insisted he never made a profit from his involvement in the arms sale to Iran.

But said he was inclined to sign and would decide within a few days. Several members of the committees contended the money from the arms sales, because it was generated by the sale of U.S.-owned weapons, rightfully belongs to taxpayers. Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., asked Secord if he would help return to the Treasury the $6 million or so still held in Swiss bank accounts under Hakim's control. Secord said that he would.

During his testimony, Secord said he had renounced any profits from the arms sale that might have accrued to him because he feared it might taint his prospects for returning to government service, perhaps as chief of covert operations for the CIA.

Liman questioned Secord about money transferred from Swiss bank accounts to his company, Stanford Technology Trading Group International. Secord testified that he regarded the money as a loan, although he had paid no interest on it in two years, and Secord declined to do so immediately.

The Iraqi attack tankers in Iranian waters, mainly near the Kharg Island oil terminal in the northern reaches of the gulf. Iran retaliates by attacking merchant ships in the southern neutral sector of the waterway.

Until Thursday, no vessels of the superpowers had been attacked, although the Iranians intercepted and seized a Soviet freighter in the gulf last year.

Two Soviet and one American freighters were intercepted by the Iranian navy near the Straits of Hormuz last year, but they were only searched for Iraq-bound cargo and then allowed to resume their voyages.

The raid on the Ivan Koroteyev heightened tension caused by the escalating Iranian threats to restrict shipping and to the strategic Strait of Hormuz, the southern outlet to the gulf.

"I don't subscribe to what you're saying," Secord replied, adding that he thought he was carrying out President Reagan's wishes. "I was trying to run a very small operation to do what I thought was an important job."

The president on Thursday said again he was unaware of any covert striffl of arms to Nicaraguan rebels. Secord testified Wednesday that fired White House aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North told him the president knew of the diversion.

"Then he was misinformed," Reagan said. "I did not know about it and I did not know where did that money go," the president said in response to questions from reporters during a White House ceremony.

"Reagan said there was nothing illegal in Secord as a private citizen being engaged with other private citizens in trying to get aid to the Contras."

Senate cigarette ban bill causes little smoke in Bolton

By John Attwood
Herald Reporter

BOLTON — A Senate-approved bill that bans smoking in Connecticut schools won't make much of a difference in Bolton, said town education officials, who criticized the bill's conflict with local law.

"It's not going to have a great impact in Bolton," said Board of Education member Pamela Sawyer. "Because it is at the state level, it will certainly be brought up again at the school level."

The bill, unanimously approved by the state Senate Wednesday, bans students from smoking in school buildings starting in October.

"I don't see that it really changes anything," said Joseph V. Fleming, Bolton High School principal. "It allows us to have a smoking policy as we currently have."

For Bolton, the bill is more than just another possible state policy. The town has made the subject of smoking in educational facilities a full-blown issue, both at the school and in the politics.

In December, teachers and administrators, Fleming included, criticized an idea by some Board of Education members to get rid of the high school's smoking area, the only place where students can currently smoke on the grounds. They contended the idea was expensive and unrealistic.

School officials, instead, agreed to promote an anti-smoking campaign instead of a complete ban, with the eventual goal of a smoke-free high school.

Fleming praised the Senate bill, which it allows local officials to designate smoking areas for school staff.

"I think it is unfortunately going to set up a problem with students," said Superintendent Richard Fackman. "I have some concerns whether or not boards of education are going to be able to take the bill with staff."

He said it would be hard to set up a smoking area specifically for staff. "We don't have the luxury of setting up lounges," Fackman said, due to space considerations.

Sawyer said the bill isn't logical in its approach to staff, and directed non-smokers and the teacher-student double standard. "That does set a poor example," Fackman said, about boards who would allow staff to smoke indoors. The bill makes no specific rules for teachers smoking outside," Sawyer said.

A complete ban, all agreed, was unrealistic.

"I like the approach we were using," Fackman said. "People who say they banned smoking and are successful are locked in their offices and don't see what's going on."

Pagano nears a ruling

By George Loynd
Herald Reporter

HARTFORD — The family of a Burlington man killed in a 1984 head-on accident with Manchester attorney Anthony F. Pagano made one last appeal today that Pagano not be allowed to practice law again.

The family and other interested parties told a special three-judge panel in superior court that Pagano's felony conviction in connection with the accident makes him unfit to practice law.

The family said that an average citizen convicted of a felony cannot vote or serve on a jury for seven years.

"As a citizen, I wouldn't be worthy of public trust over a case he (Pagano) was presenting," testified Karen Charast, sister-in-law of the victim, David Charast.

It doesn't make sense to me," Charast said.

However, Pagano's attorney, F. Mac Buckley, argued that the only criteria that should be used are whether Pagano has overcome any substance abuse and emotional problems he had.

Those conditions were set in 1985 by the judge who indefinitely suspended Pagano. Last month, the standing committee on recommendations for admittance to the bar recommended that the suspension be lifted.

The committee said Pagano — based on testimony at a January hearing — had overcome his emotional and substance abuse problems. It said there is no precedent in Connecticut case law for disbarring an attorney convicted of a felony.

The three-judge panel expected to issue a written decision, but did not say when. However, Judge Arnold W. Aronson, one of the three judges, indicated that questions regarding the felony issue were not relevant to the decision.

In his presentation, Buckley tried to make an argument against the felony issue that he anticipated the family would raise. But Aronson did not let him continue.

"That's not really a particular issue at this time," Aronson said. However, Chris Powell, managing editor of the Journal Inquirer of Manchester, said the court case would lead to a referendum suspend Pagano because of his felony conviction. Powell said the professional code of ethics for attorneys, if applied, would prevent Pagano from continuing his practice.

Powell asked that the code be taken into account by the referendum. After the proceeding, Pagano said he was hopeful the judges will decide in his favor.

Boston's Bill Walton will be a cheerleader on the bench for the rest of the series with the Milwaukee Bucks as a hairline fracture was discovered Thursday.

Celts' Walton out again with a hairline fracture

BOSTON — Bill Walton, who after an injury-plagued season has provided some of Boston's bench spark the last few weeks, is hurt again and will be unavailable to play when the Celtics' second-round NBA playoff series shifts to Milwaukee.

Walton said Thursday he aggravated a problem with his right ankle during Wednesday night's 120-124 victory that gave the Celtics a 2-0 lead over the Bucks in their best-of-seven series. His ankle won't heal fast enough to play in Game 3, which is scheduled for Sunday.

"The bottom line is we lost the game in Boston Garden and now we're going home," he said. "We feel we can beat the Celtics. We have to go home and grab them, get Friday under our belt and then worry about Sunday."

Boston's win improved their latest unbeaten streak to nine, including five in the playoffs. It also tied the record of 14 consecutive home playoff victories set by the Minneapolis Lakers from 1949 through 1951.

"You play in Boston and you give up something," said Sidney Moncrief, who scored 18 points. "I think the home crowd is going to help our ballclub. We played well in game two. And we are looking for this type of performance to carry over into Friday night."

The Bucks won their three regular-season home games against the Celtics, who were 20-21 on the road. But Coach R.C. Jones said the playoffs are different.

"We didn't win there in the regular season. And we're going to go in there and win a ballgame," he said.

Forward Kevin McHale returned to action after missing a game with a sprained right ankle. The 6-foot-10 McHale had 12 points and five rebounds in 28 minutes before fouling out. His presence will help offset the loss of Walton.

Larry Bird, who scored 30 points on what was termed an "off" night in Game 1, said he was confident the Celtics' first back-to-back NBA championship since Boston in 1981.

"Anytime on your home court, you feel you have an edge. When playing so close, they might go back there and feel confident," Bird said, referring to the series shifting to Milwaukee. "I feel we're good enough to win on the road. And if we win the third game, all the pressure will be on them."

Whalers sign 'Cat' to a five-year deal

By Jim Tierney
Herald Sports Writer

HARTFORD — The "Cat" is staying put.

Emile Francis, president and general manager of the Hartford Whalers, was signed to a new five-year contract. It was announced by Whalers Chairman and Managing General Partner Howard Baldwin, Thursday afternoon.

Francis, 46, has one year remaining on his present contract which expires at the end of the 1987-88 season. The new five-year contract, which will run through the end of 1993, is for a reported $1.25 million.

"I can't think of anything I'd rather be doing and I can't think of a place I'd rather be doing it," Francis said.

Baldwin praised Francis for his business ability and his enthusiasm. "Emile Francis has done an outstanding job in Hartford. His leadership, experience, hockey knowledge and enthusiasm have combined to make the Whalers into one of the most respected franchises in the National Hockey League, and a definite Stanley Cup contender in the years ahead."

Francis has guided the Whalers up the NHL ladder, from last place to an overall fourth place ranking this past season. Francis commented on his three key ingredients the Whalers have gained since his arrival. Francis cited respect,

Intensity far removed as Mets, Sox hook up

By Ben Walker
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Memories linger long in baseball, so even though the Boston Red Sox and the New York Mets have current problems that need attention, the focus still drifted back last October to the Series when they met again for a charity game.

"I started to come back to me last night. I was trying to fall asleep," admitted Boston right fielder Dwight Evans. "I was remembering back to Boston and it kept me awake for awhile."

On an overcast Thursday evening, there was none of the instant replay that hovered over Shea Stadium last Oct. 27, when on a dark night the Mets stormed past Boston 5-1 to win Game 7.

Nor was there any of the tension that spilled over March 14 when a bench-clearing incident erupted after Boston's Al Nipper settled a personal score by hitting Darryl Strawberry with a pitch in the first spring training meeting of the two teams.

And there was not the same air of anticipation that existed during a charity game last September in Fenway Park between eventual Series rivals.

Instead, the only thing that remained the same was the result. The Mets won 2-0.

A good-natured crowd of 32,247 jokingly booed the Red Sox, heaping most of their abuse on Boston first baseman Bill Buckner, whose error on Mookie Wilson's grounder capped the Mets' stunning rally in the 10th inning of Game 6.

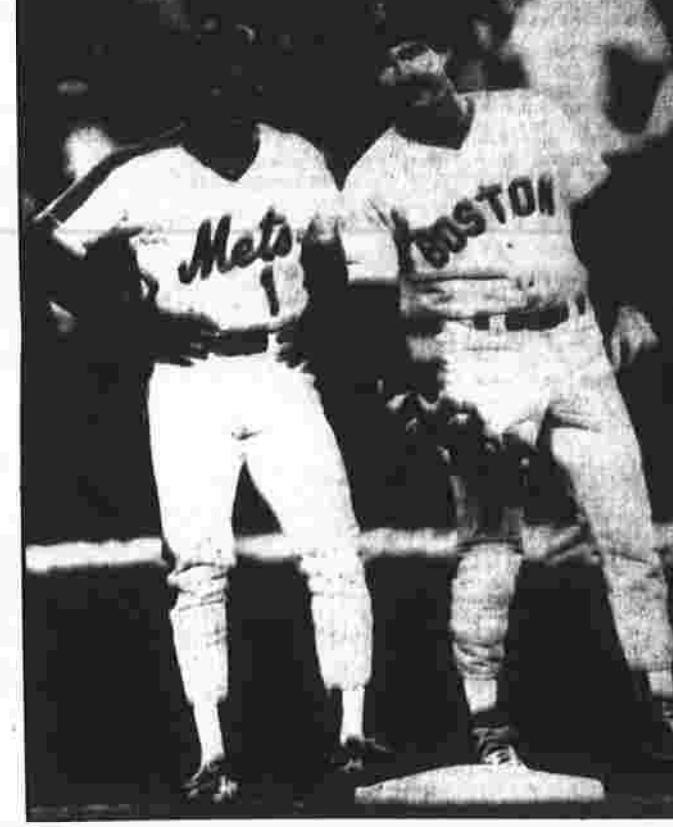

"It was a little tough over the winter," Buckner said.

"But I enjoy playing in New York and the fans here. I even came out early and asked Mookie Wilson to hit some groundballs," he said with a forced smile.

Buckner received a standing ovation when introduced along the third-base line before the game and got another cheer when he came to bat in the second inning.

The fans, as is usually the case at exhibitions, took the game more seriously than the players. There wasn't much action — Mets rookie David Cone pitched seven innings and Roger Clemens and Rafael Santana drove in both runs with a single and RBI groundout — and the crowd was at its loudest when replays of the World Series shown on the color scoreboard during the game.

"I've played nine innings and got out of here," said Wade Boggs, whose Red Sox took a chartered flight to New York in the afternoon and left after the game.

Boston, in the midst of an eight-game homestand, is just 12 1/2 games out of first place in the National League East. Clemens and Rich Gedman, and injuries to Bruce Hurst and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, Clemens, who vowed he would never return to Shea Stadium because of unruly behavior in the stands, was among a handful of Red Sox players who did not travel.

The Mets, 13-12 and without Dwight Gooden and Roger McDowell, left from the ballpark for Atlanta to start a seven-game road trip.

"We needed this game," Mets Manager Davey Johnson said. "Their ballclub is tired. I'm sure they felt they didn't need this game."

The ones who benefited most were the New York City Amateur

Baseball Federation and the Jimmy Meehan Trust, a Boston-based charity that split the proceeds.

"It was more exciting last year. It was like a prelude to the World Series," Johnson said. "This year, both clubs are not playing up to their potential. It's just exactly the opposite of last year."

The players echoed that sentiment with Wilson saying it best.

"It's an exhibition game. It's no big thrill," Wilson said. "Both teams have had enough problems of their own."

Wilson said he had not spoken to Buckner since the fateful grounder and did not plan to, even though they will be forever linked in baseball history.

"I'll see him, I'd probably say a casual hello and a casual goodbye," Wilson said. "I'd like to be remembered for something else than that at-bat."

threatened by the pack of long shot hopefuls — began to drop. And Democrats began to question whether he could continue in the race.

"He's obviously seriously wounded, and I believe it's fatal," he had scheduled a full day of campaigning Thursday in New Hampshire, but abruptly canceled all the events and flew to Denver with his wife.

In a statement released by his staff in Groveton, N.H., Hart said that "while running for president is important, right now my family is more important."

Some of those in the crusade were crushed by Hart's decision.

"I feel betrayed," said M. Jerome Diamond, co-chairman of Hart's Vermont campaign. Working for Hart was "a labor of love. There was a small group of us who way back in 1988 were just taken with him, his intellect, his vision. And to have all of that wasted, all of those hours, months and years, by hundreds and thousands of people. It is just devastating."

Hart, manager of George McGovern's 1972 bid for the White House, made a national name for himself in a matter of days in 1984. He came in an unexpected second in the Iowa caucuses and then stunned former Vice President Walter Mondale with a series of caucus and primary victories.

man's widow, was quoted by the Post as saying when informed of her husband's death she had long communications before he died and knew that his death would be used by certain people. The children knew him as a very good father, and I knew him as a wonderful husband who was very caring for people.

"I know that right now he would have liked to go forward and not look behind, and get help in finding a cure for this disease, however we will do that as well as we can."

Colleagues mourning McKinney's death said his dying wish to disclose AIDS as the cause of his death was characteristic of a man unafraid to stand up for what he thought was right.

"It was typical of Stewart to want us to know," Rep. Nancy Johnson, R-Conn., said after learning of McKinney's death Thursday. "It's not the easy route to take, but he knew it was important for us to know that we are all vulnerable."

McKinney's office said the 36-year-old congressman, survived by his wife and five children, had died from "pneumocystis pneumonia, a bacterial infection brought on by acquired immune deficiency syndrome."

Cauceres, asked if it were possible McKinney had contracted AIDS through homosexual contacts, said he'd heard that type of speculation about virtually every congressman in the city.

"It gets to the point of ridiculousness," the doctor said. "My belief is that he got it (AIDS) from the blood transfusions. This is to me the most logical, based on my knowledge and a review of charts."

IOC to look into incidental use of banned drugs

ATHENS, Turkey — Athletes who test positive for banned drugs on their own or on their behalf may now get a second chance, the International Olympic Committee announced today. Greene's pitching, solid defense key to East win

The continuation of good pitching and solid defense lifted East Catholic to a 6-1 victory over South Catholic in All Connecticut Conference baseball Thursday night at Merriam Field.

Greene scattered eight hits, improved his record to 3-1 for the season. He surrendered a first-inning run to the Rebels, 1-7 in the ACC and 2-7 overall, but then dominated the rest of the game. "I was in command after the first inning," East Coach Jim Penders said. "I was ahead of most of the hitters and when they hit the ball, we made some great plays in the field," he added, citing the play of second baseman Kevin Riggs and third baseman Rob Stanford. The latter was just back in action after missing a couple of games due to injury.

Greene showed pinpoint control by walking none while striking out 10.

East is now 7-1 in the ACC and 9-2 overall. It resumes play Saturday at the sixth annual Jim Penders Memorial Scholarship game against host Stratford High at Rogers Field at 1 p.m. The field game and game are in honor of Penders' father, long-time coach and athletic director at Stratford High.

Oilers even series with Red Wings

The Oilers are expecting a big explosion Saturday night, when the series resumes in Detroit. Monday night's fourth game also will be played at Joe Louis Arena.

"I'm not looking forward to playing in that rink because they're playing well there," Gretzky said. "They've got good fans and they're going to be awfully loud."

Donoghue committed to McCormick Mile

By Jim Tierney
Herald Sports Writer

Many outstanding athletic performances are placed high on pedestals, but as far as track records go, Donoghue's personal achievement is placed in only a higher echelon than breaking the 4-minute barrier in the mile and his participation in the 1987 McCormick Mile in New York.

Donoghue was a six-time Big East champion in the 1,500 meters the last week of the event. Donoghue views the McCormick Mile as an important prep.

Pressure on Habs at home

MONTREAL — While the venerable Montreal Forum may not be a visiting hockey team's choice of the place to play, the Canadiens are under a lot of pressure to win at home.

"I don't know if the home-ice advantage means anything, the way the playoffs are going this year," said Montreal Coach Jean Perron, whose team has won five of seven playoff road games this season.

Cards almost burn away win

By Merschel Nissenon
The Associated Press

There isn't enough heroism in the world for the St. Louis Cardinals' arson squad to blow a 14-run lead, but they gave it a good try. The Cardinals' bullpen is loaded with flame-throwers these days when what they really need are some fire extinguishers. "Have you ever seen anything like that? I never have," Manager Whitey Herzog said Thursday after the San Diego Padres scored five runs in the seventh inning and five more in the ninth before the Cardinals secured a 17-10 victory. "I wonder what was the biggest blown lead in the final inning in history? This one had all the makings."

Herzog saw his relievers blow eighth-inning leads of 5-2 and 7-1 earlier this month. And despite Thursday's score, the victory lifted St. Louis back into first place in the National League East, one-half game ahead of the Chicago Cubs, who lost to San Francisco 11-3, the only other game. Los Angeles beat Pittsburgh 6-3.

If you think Herzog has problems with a bullpen that has allowed 24 earned runs and six homers in its last 18 1/2 innings, consider the plight of Larry Brown, San Diego's rookie manager, whose club has a 7-23 record.

NL Roundup

"Can you imagine, we get 10 runs in a game (a season high) and we're not even close," Bova said.

Stroker Barnes, in his first at-bat of the season, hit a three-run homer and Jack Clark hit a solo shot among 17 St. Louis hits. The game was scoreless until Clark's seventh homer touched off an eight-run fourth inning, six of them against Andy Hawkins, 6-4. Clark and Willie McGehee each had two hits in the inning, with McGehee's second single capping the scoring.

Barnes, recently promoted from the minors, connected in the eighth inning off Greg Booker. Winner Bob Forsch blanked the Padres until he was chased in the seventh, when Stanley Jefferson and Bruce Bochy homered for San Diego. John Kruk hit a three-run homer off Ray Soff in the ninth.

Bova indicated that Hawkins, whose ERA is 5.8, may lose his spot in the starting rotation. "I think I've bent over backwards trying to get him on the board," Bova said. "There comes a time in everyone's career when you've got to say, 'Hey look, I ain't doing the job.' And I think that time has come."

"It's a shame when a starting pitcher can't get into the sixth or seventh inning. These guys get paid a lot of money to get these people out and they're not doing it."

Giants 11, Cubs 1

Rob Wilfong hit a two-run homer in his second NL at-bat to open the scoring in the third inning and Mike LaCoss allowed seven hits in 6 1/2 innings and struck out a career-high nine batters in his first start since April 12.

Wilfong, the fifth player to start at second base for the Giants this season, homered off Ed Lynch in the third inning after LaCoss was safe on third baseman Keith Moreland's throwing error. Wilfong, who hit 35 homers in 10 American League seasons, was signed as a free agent on Tuesday and called up after playing two games in the Pacific Coast League.

The Giants made it 3-0 on Matt Williams' RBI double in the fourth. Bob Melvin drove in two runs with a fifth-inning double and doubled home another run in San Francisco's three-run seventh. Jeffrey Leonard and Candy Maldonado hit consecutive home runs off Frank DiPino in the Giants' three-run eighth. The Cubs' only run came in the seventh on Sid Bream's two-run homer.

"I'm not worried about it (lack of complete games)," Honeycutt said. "There'll be other games. I'll take my win any time, no matter how we get it. I felt great out there. I had enough stuff to keep going."

San Francisco's Chili Davis slides into second base but isn't in time to avoid the tag of Chicago's Ryno Sandberg during third-inning steal attempt Thursday night. The Giants won, 11-1.

Teacher's pet This dog attends Keeney School

By Anita M. Caldwell
Herald Reporter

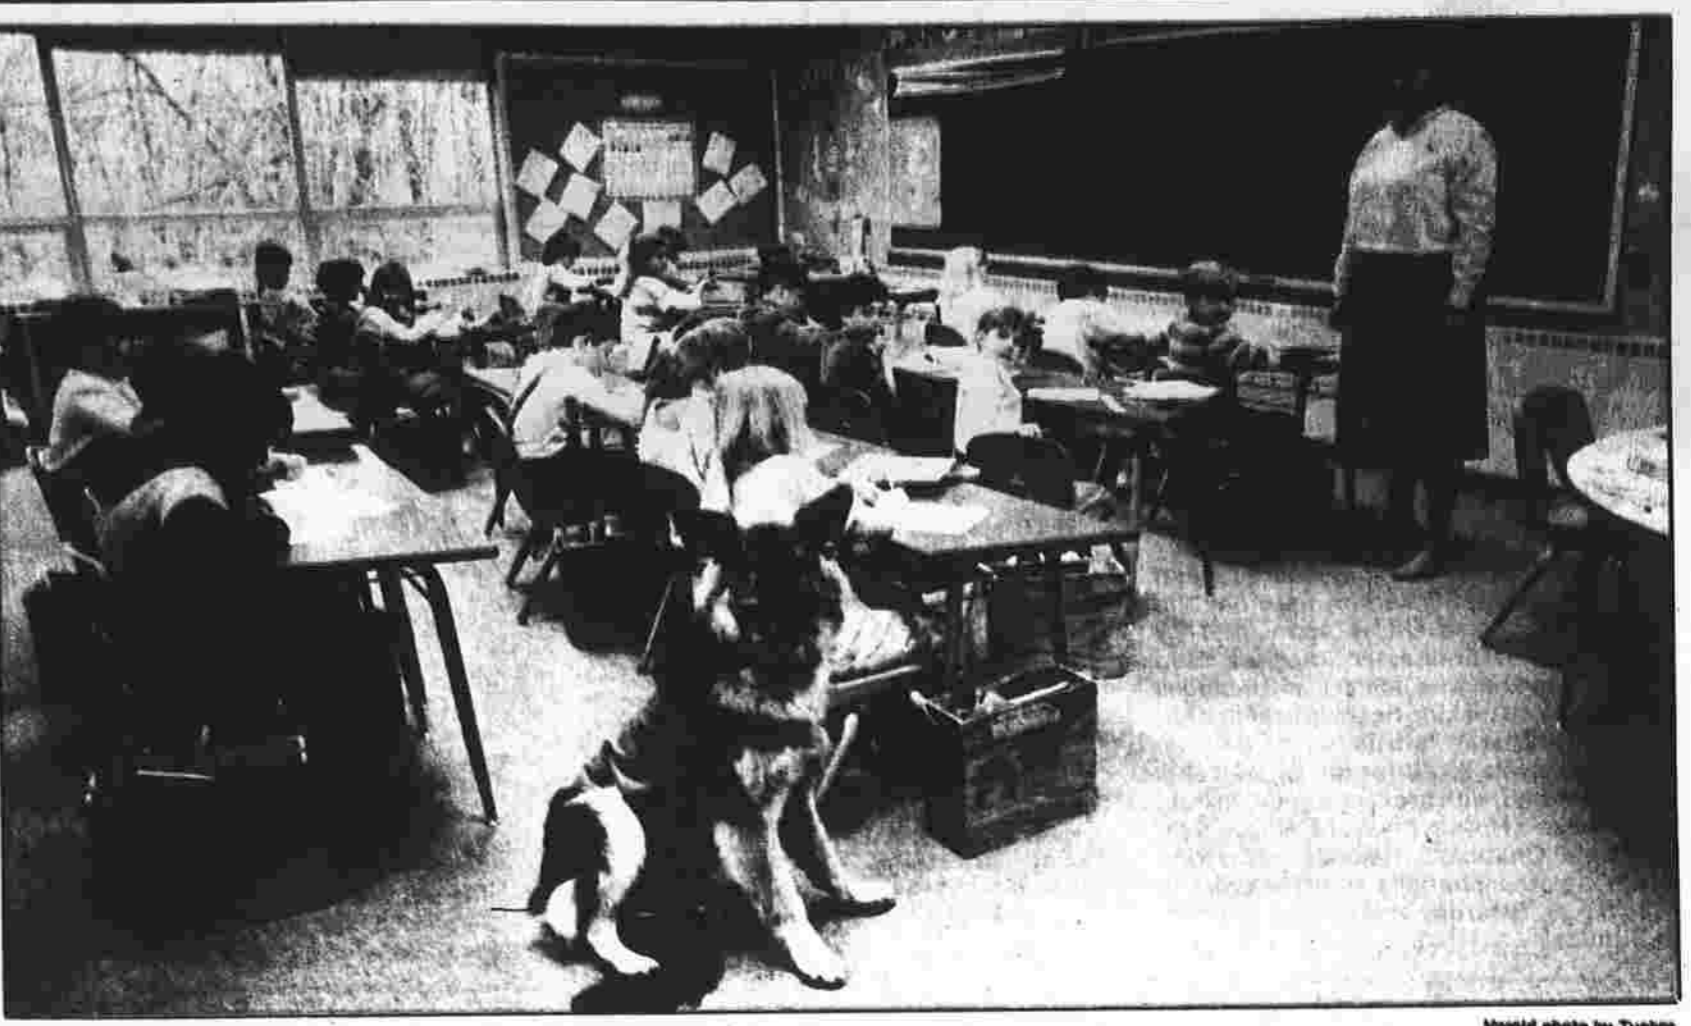

If you were to tell Jean Freeman she treats her dog, Hessa, too much like a baby, she'd be flattered.

Freeman, a 12 Dorset Lane resident, is one of 70 "foster parents" for the Fideico Guide Dog Foundation in Bloomfield.

The non-profit organization breeds and trains German shepherds to serve the blind. Freeman teaches the dogs social skills before Fideico trains them as guide dogs.

She exposes the dog to people, shopping malls, restaurants, and any and all places a blind person would normally go.

Part of the dog's "education" takes place inside Freeman's third-grade classroom at the Keeney Street School. The dog is often taken to school, since Freeman has no children.

Jean Freeman stands in the front of her Keeney Street School classroom with Hessa. She is teaching social skills to the dog who will eventually be trained as a guide dog for the blind.

While students have grown to love Hessa, the dog has become comfortable with them and the busy atmosphere that is a part of a school day.

"I'm very appreciative of (principal) Frank Amara for his support," she said. "It's very important for the dog."

Amara thinks the experience has been great for the students.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for the children to be involved in something so beautiful like this," said Amara. "Jean has chosen a hobby that is going to help a blind person 'see' and I feel good that we're doing our small share."

Freeman became involved with Fideico training five years ago, but was not a stranger to the organization. For 20 years, her father had Fideico dogs as house pets. He bought Fideico-trained dogs because they were even-tempered and good with people.

Freeman owned a Fideico dog as a house pet and through her association with the organization, she decided to become a foster parent.

"At first, I didn't think I could do it because I didn't think I could give it up," Freeman said.

Freeman is given the puppy at seven weeks and keeps it for about a year and a half.

A FIDEICO DOG requires far more time and discipline than an ordinary house pet, she said.

The dog isn't allowed to sit on furniture. Take food from the table, or sleep on beds. Eventually, the foster parent doesn't go anywhere without the dog.

She at ends Fideico training classes once a week with the dog. The classes provide exposure to other animals. Freeman said the trainers will even bring in a ferret that runs around the room. The dogs are trained to obey the command to "leave it."

Fideico gives a red jacket to each dog that has reached a certain level of discipline, enabling the foster parent to bring the dog into shopping malls, stores and restaurants.

When Hessa was ready to face the real world, Freeman began taking Hessa to shopping malls.

The reaction of the shoppers still makes her chuckle.

"People just assumed I was blind, even though they saw me reading signs," Freeman said. "Most people think I'm blind and hold doors for me," she said. "More than once, she's heard someone whisper, 'Doesn't she know better than to bring in a dog?'"

JANIE RUSSENBARGER, Fideico's foster program director, screens which puppies will be used in the foster program. Most of the puppies are females because of their smaller frame. She also matches the puppy with the foster family, and monitors their development.

In-community training is essential, she said. "If you raise a dog in a kennel situation, the dog won't be properly socialized. It needs to be at ease with dogs, cats, squirrels, traffic — everything."

Freeman said watching the dog grow and seeing her work pay off make her feel good.

"It's the thrill of my life. It makes it all worth it."

Trainers and dogs from the Fideico Guide Dog Foundation will strut their stuff on Sunday at 11 a.m., following the G. Fox 10K Mother's Day Women's Run. The demonstration will take place at the race's finish line, in front of G. Fox, 900 Main St., Hartford. To participate in the run, meet in front of the department store by 10 a.m. For more information about the race or the dogs, call 243-2590.

Athletes are subpoenaed to testify

NEW YORK — San Antonio Spurs forward Walter Berry may have been under the counter for a suspected drug dealer on at least one occasion, according to a published report.

New York Newsday reported in today's editions that Berry, New York Nets guard Dwayne (Pearl) Washington and welterweight boxing champion Mark Breland have been subpoenaed to testify before a federal grand jury in Manhattan which is investigating James Jackson, a reputed heroin dealer. Jackson has been described by federal prosecutors as the successor to Leroy (Nicky) Barnes, the heroin kingpin who was sentenced to life in prison.

Thrown in prison in 1978, Barnes has since turned informant and is seeking a presidential pardon.

McCallum ordered to San Diego

SAN DIEGO — Napoleon McCallum, the Navy officer who played running back for the Los Angeles Raiders last year, has been ordered to a San Diego-based Navy command, according to a service official.

McCallum commuted last year from Long Beach to the Los Angeles Coliseum in central Los Angeles, a trip of about 20 miles, to start five of the Raiders' 16 regular season games. San Diego is about 180 miles from the Coliseum.

A Navy official, who wished to remain anonymous, told The San Diego Union on Thursday that McCallum was denied his first three choices of duty — all on ships based in Long Beach.

By Jeff Bowen
The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The Minnesota Twins apparently have broken the curse of the left-handed pitcher. After losing to two Baltimore lefties, the Twins thwarted a third left-hander and beat the Orioles 5-2 Thursday.

"We're not looking back. We're going to the future," said Twins manager Tom Kelly whose team opens a three-game series tonight against the New York Yankees at Yankee Stadium.

Until Thursday, the Twins had not fared well against Baltimore southpaws. Rookie Eric Bell held the Twins hitless until the ninth inning of a 5-4 Baltimore victory Tuesday night, and Scott McGregor

Norman finally gets good first round

By Bob Green
The Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — It had been a long time coming, but Greg Norman finally got the first round he'd been waiting for.

"Isn't it nice? It's only taken five weeks," Norman said after a 6-under-par 64 on Thursday had given him a share of the first-round lead in the $800,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

"I've been playing well but, except for the Masters, I haven't really been a serious threat in anything I've played in," said Norman, who dominated world golf last year.

This year he has fallen well behind his 10-victory pace of 1986. He's won only once this season, in Australia.

Larry Mize's pitch-in playoff birdie beat Norman in the Masters playoff and only some weekend heroics — a 68 in the Heritage and a 59 at Houston, a 67 last weekend at Las Vegas — brought him respectable finishes.

Becker's 'bit of luck' saves victory

By Bob Greene
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Horacio de la Pena, forced behind the baseline to retrieve a high defensive lob, slammed in a perfect smash down the left sideline, an apparent winner.

But top-seeded Boris Becker launched his body to his right and hit a seemingly impossible forehand half-volley into the open court to move to match point. His service winner to close out the third-round match in the $815,000 Tournament of Champions was almost anticlimactic.

"I think it was one of the best points I've ever played in my life," Becker said Thursday after advancing to the quarterfinals of the week-long tournament at the West Side Tennis Club in Forest Hills.

"At 5-4 in a tiebreak, you need to have a bit of luck, too."

The "bit of luck" backed up his powerful serves and steady groundstrokes to give Becker a 6-4, 7-6 victory over the left-handed Argentine.

Tonight, Becker will face veteran Guillermo Vilas, another left-hander from Argentina.

The other quarterfinal pairings set fourth-seeded Andres Gomez of Ecuador against No. 9 Martin Jaito of Argentina, defending champion and second-seeded Vance Noth of France against No. 10 Aaron Krickstein, and No. 12 Slobodan Zivjovitch of Yugoslavia against unseeded Paul Anacono.

Noah continued his strong showing with an easy 6-1, 6-1 victory over his doubles partner and fellow Frenchman Guy Forget, while Vilas, who won the U.S. Open in 1977 on these same clay courts, eliminated Marty Davis 7-5, 7-6.

Gomez defeated South Africa's Barry Moir 6-3, 6-4. Jaito stopped No. 11 Jojo Bergeer 6-3, 6-3; Krickstein pulled off a midweek upset, routing a 68 in the Heritage and a 59 at Houston, a 67 last weekend at Las Vegas — brought him respectable finishes.

Choices abound for Mother's Day dinner

Restaurants offer free drinks, flowers on mom's day

By Nancy Pappas
Herald Reporter

You wouldn't want mom slaving over a hot stove on Mother's Day, now would you? Of course not!

And neither would most families in the area. That's why there are already so many restaurants in the area that are completely booked for mom's special day.

Here's a list of the places we found that still had reservations available, late on Wednesday evening.

Polly's Pointers

DEAR POLLY — With such startling statistics being reported about the inability of teenagers to read, I'd like to share our solution. We have two school-age children, and their teachers have stressed the importance of reading at home. We've given our children the option of either going to bed at 8 p.m. (lights out) or lying in bed to read a book until 9:30. As a result, our children have no problem reading. — B.W.

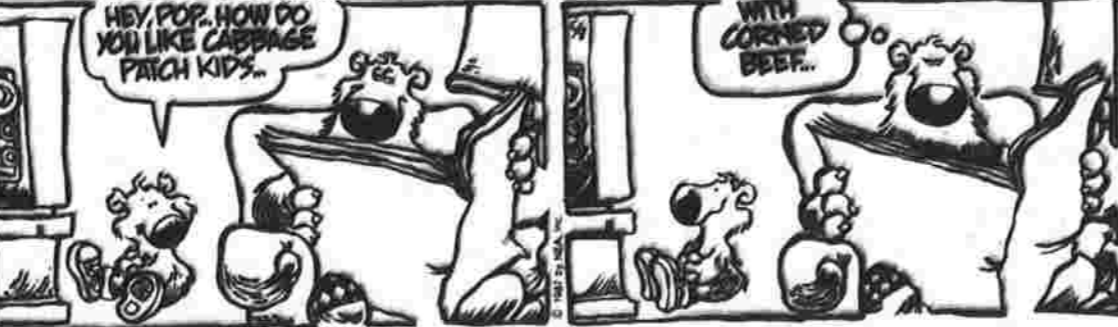

DEAR POLLY — When making a large batch of cooked rice (or any food), divide into portions for freezing into your muffin tin. Take the "muffins" out of the tin when frozen, and put them in a plastic freezer bag. Keep frozen to use for individual servings. — B.J.S.

DEAR POLLY — When embroidering with yarn, here's an easy way to thread the needle. Fold a six-inch piece of ordinary sewing thread in half and pass the loop through the embroidery needle's eye. Insert your yarn through the loop, then pull thread and yarn back through the needle's eye.

NBC looks ahead after another win

NEW YORK — NBC, just coming off its second straight winning season, is already looking to the future with a programming strategy that pays tribute to the successes of the present and past. 'Hill Street Blues' is going after this season, but two potential new shows feature actors from the innovative police drama that gave NBC a reputation for quality programming back when it was in this place.

Two other shows are derived from NBC's current top-rated comedies, 'The Cosby Show', 'Family Ties' and 'Golden Girls'. Still others come from the producers or creators of 'Miami Vice', 'Remington Steele', 'The A-Team' and 'Knight Rider'. NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff, in a telephone news conference from Burbank, Calif., described 'Miami's Boy' as an 'updated 'Marty''. It stars Bruce Weitz and Nancy Walker as a middle-aged guy and the mother who moves in with him. Weitz was Belter the Biter on 'Hill Street', the ferocious cop who melted when he got on the phone with 'Ma'. The pilot is 'the funniest script we've got,' Tartikoff said.

Cliffhangers in top 20

NEW YORK (AP) — Impending cliffhangers put 'Dallas' and 'Prime-time soap operas in the top 20 in last week's Nielsen as the networks prepared for their crucial May ABC, CBS and NBC offered specials, movies and new episodes of popular series for the month, one of four during the year in which local ratings determine advertising rates. 'NBC continued its off-season surge with an average prime-time rating of 15.3 on CBS' 13 and ABC's 12.4, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co. The rating is a percentage of the nation's estimated 87.4 million households with televisions. The regular season ended April 18, but many season-ending episodes of regular, prime-time series were held over for the sweeps. CBS' 'Dallas' was in the top 10, and CBS' 'Falcon Crest' and 'Dynasty' were in the top 20 as viewers apparently got set for cliffhanger episodes later this month. The audience traditionally drops the week before the beginning of reruns. The lower audience numbers especially affect news.

Child care costs billions and disrupts parent's jobs

By Randolph E. Schmid
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Child care costs American billions of dollars each year, and problems such as the inability to find a baby sitter disrupt the jobs of 400,000 parents a month, a government study shows. Some 5.9 percent of employed mothers using child care other than schools reported that they or their husbands lost time from work monthly because of problems with their child care arrangements, the Census Bureau reported Thursday. That would add up to an estimated 400,000 parents a month with baby-sitting or other child-care problems.

Even so, American families spend an estimated $11.1 billion annually on child care, according to the survey of 19,000 households taken in the winter of 1986-87. The study, "Who's Minding the Kids," was designed to measure the extent of child-care services used by employed mothers across the nation. It found that 5.3 million families with employed mothers pay for child care, at an average cost of $49.33 a week. That includes family arrangements in which some mothers pay to have a relative to watch the children, as well as baby sitters and professional day-care services. Of the 7.7 million women using some type of child care service — whether paid for or not — those most often facing work disruptions had their child cared for at the home of another person — 7.6 percent. Professional day care centers had the fewest problems, 1.9 percent. The women were asked whether they or their husbands had lost time from work in the month prior to the interview because of problems with their child-care arrangements. "Child care in someone else's home may be more susceptible to personal emergencies or weather-related disruptions that result in higher rates of father's in child-care arrangements than when using organized child-care facilities where more staff are available on a daily basis," the study said. The study looked at 8.2 million children under age 5 and 16.3 million between the ages of 5 and 14 to determine the child-care needs of working mothers. This was the bureau's most detailed study of this area, although previous surveys have reported on general arrangements of pre-school children. The new study found that for preschoolers, the largest share — 37 percent — were cared for at their own home while mom worked — nearly half being watched by dad. Others were supervised by a grandparent or other relative. Organized day-care facilities cared for 23.1 percent of preschoolers and about 8 percent were cared for by the mother herself either while she worked at home, or took the lot with her to her job. For children aged 5 to 14 the most common arrangement while mother worked was for them to attend school, this accounting for 76 percent. In addition, 11.8 percent were cared for at home, 4.3 percent in another home and the rest were at day-care facilities, with their mother or caring for themselves. While 5.8 million unmarried women are coping with work and the demands of children, only about 900,000 unmarried men are in the same category, the Bureau found. The report noted that finding child-care arrangements for the young children presents a problem for many families, since formal day-care facilities often exclude infants and very young children.

Cartoon's joke about safe sex lights up Reagan's switchboard

WASHINGTON (AP) — While President Reagan jests with some of the nation's top cartoonists in the Rose Garden, a joke by one of their colleagues caught White House switchboards to light up with calls about sex.

By coincidence, a "Doonesbury" strip showing Reagan urging young people to call the White House telephone number for safe sex information appeared in newspapers the same day the president was entertaining members of the American Association of Editorial Cartoonists.

"You keep us here in Washington from taking ourselves too seriously, and I can't think of any greater service to national sanity than that," Reagan told the cartoonists at the gathering Thursday.

He also offered good-natured criticism of their caricatures of him, saying, for instance, "I've tried every way I can to make my hair stand up that way, but it just won't take."

"Doonesbury" cartoonist Garry Trudeau, meanwhile, came up with his own depiction of Reagan, complete with exaggerated waves in his hair, saying on television, "Kids! Need rock-solid information on safe sex? Call this number on your screen!"

The number is the general telephone listing of the White House, (202) 456-1414, which also is listed in telephone directories for Washington and its suburbs. White House spokesman Martin

Fitzwater told reporters quite a few people have called the White House and "I've been giving them an alternate number."

The number he said he gave was that of the New York office of Universal Press, the syndicate that distributes "Doonesbury."

Deputy White House Press Secretary Leslye A. Arsh said later, however, that callers really were being referred to an AIDS hotline number maintained by the U.S. Public Health Service.

That number is (800) 342-5437. Reagan has said that obtaining from sex is the best way for young people to protect themselves against AIDS, but he also has said he believes teen-agers should be provided with information on other preventive measures.

Houston primps for opera house

HOUSTON (AP) — In this town where the busted oil boom has left some skyscrapers practically empty, the elite are primping for the grand opening of a $70 million arts center, the nation's first opera and ballet house built since 1971.

Originally scheduled to open this fall, the Wortham Theater Center is being christened at a black-tie affair Saturday, four months ahead of schedule and $5 million under budget.

The original plans were scaled back by more than $40 million as the oil bust deflated the city's economy. But donors came through with enough money to ensure that the complex, spread across two downtown blocks, was finished before the completion of a concert hall under construction in rival Dallas.

"The confidence and commitment of our citizens in our city and to our arts is one of our major strengths, and the Wortham Center represents a great future for our city," said Mayor Kathy Whitmire.

"The opening will certainly be a dream come true," said Harris Masterson III, a philanthropist who helped mastermind the project. "We needed a place for the opera and ballet and other smaller groups to grow. Now both the opera and ballet can grow and will attract the best artists and directors in the country."

The two-theater center, with a total of 3,844 seats, will house the Houston Ballet and Houston Grand Opera, which have been sharing the nearby 3,000-seat Jones Hall for the Performing Arts with the Houston Symphony.

Workers add finishing touches to the grounds of Houston's Wortham Center, the first opera house built since 1971.

Credit-card lending declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers are cutting back on credit-card debt, and credit-card lending is declining, according to a report released by the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. The report shows that credit-card lending fell by $1.5 billion in the first three months of this year compared with the same period last year. The decline is attributed to a combination of factors, including a drop in the number of new credit-card applications and a reduction in the amount of credit extended to existing cardholders. The report also notes that the decline in lending is occurring despite a relatively stable overall economy.

Leaders see slow growth, new threats of recession

By Martin Crottingham
The Associated Press

Leaders in the business community see the country achieving only slow growth in 1987, and they warn of a new threat of recession. The report, issued by the Business Council, a group of 100 leading business organizations, predicts that the economy will grow at a rate of 2.5 percent in 1987, down from 3.3 percent in 1986. The council also warns of a recession in 1988, citing a combination of factors, including a decline in consumer spending and a rise in interest rates. The report also notes that the economy is facing a number of other challenges, including a decline in business investment and a rise in government spending.

Red carpet treatment
Marilyn White, left, and Diane Eib happily accept a cup of coffee from Warren L. Prolesnik, president of Manchester Memorial Hospital. The nurses were honored on Wednesday as part of Nurse Appreciation Day. Hospital administrators planned something special for each of the nursing shifts. Wednesday morning, they, literally, rolled out a red carpet and greeted the nurses with coffee. The afternoon and evening shifts attended a reception.

Commercial blimp flights back

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — A blimp is taking sightings up over San Francisco Bay in what are billed as the first paid passenger airship rides since the Hindenburg exploded 59 years ago this week. Airship Industries, the British owners of the 194-foot advertising blimp, chose the anniversary Wednesday of the German airship's fiery end at Lakehurst, N.J., to launch their sky-high tours at $150 a head.

"Since there's no way we could hide from the Hindenburg disaster, we decided to grab the bull by the horns," said Airship Industries General Manager George Sprou. The passengers for the inaugural flights included Bill Walsh, coach of the San Francisco 49ers football team, and British Consul Graham Burton.

On May 6, 1987, the Hindenburg exploded in flames as it was arriving at Lakehurst, killing 36 people and ending the era of passenger airships.

'St. Elsewhere' renewed by NBC

NEW YORK (AP) — The Emmy Award-winning television series "St. Elsewhere" will be back for a sixth season despite lackluster ratings.

NBC announced Thursday it was keeping the one-hour, drama-with-black-comedy series, which is set in fictional St. Eligius Hospital in Boston.

"St. Elsewhere" had its debut in 1982. In a year after the police drama "Hill Street Blues" stunned critics with its similar gritty realism.

Both shows are productions of MTH Enterprises Inc. "Hill Street Blues" was not renewed this year.

"St. Elsewhere" is broadcast on Wednesday at 10 p.m. and stars William Daniels, who has won two Emmys for his role as the snobbish Dr. Craig. Ed Flanders, who won a 1985 Emmy for his portrayal of kindly Dr. Westphall, Ed Begley Jr., Christine Pickles, Eric LaNeauville, Stephen Furst, Cindy Pickett, Howie Mandel and Denise Washington.

The show ended the season 8th of 83 network prime-time series, with a A.C. Nielsen Co. rating of 13.4. The rating is a percentage of the nation's estimated 87.4 million homes with televisions.
