McFarlane: Ban didn't stop Reagan

By Jim Drinkard
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane told Congress today that President Reagan ordered him to help Nicaragua's contra rebels "hold body and soul together" even though the House and Senate had banned all U.S. military aid.

"The president repeatedly made clear in public and in private that he did not intend to break faith with the contras," McFarlane said in his sworn testimony as the joint House-Senate hearings entered their second week.

"He directed that we make continued efforts to bring the movement into the good graces of Congress and the American people and that we assure the contras of continuing administration support — to help them hold body and soul together — until the time when Congress would again agree to support them."

McFarlane emphasized that he had stressed to his own aides "that we were to operate at all times within the law, and that in particular we were not to solicit, encourage, coerce or otherwise broker financial contributions to the contras."

McFarlane was expected to face tough questioning during the televised hearings.

"Do you think that you can let it hang out here today — the facts?" asked Arthur I. Liman, the Senate committee lawyer who began the questioning.

"I'll do my best, sir," said a solemn-looking McFarlane.

In his opening statement, the former NSC director declared, "I regret and continue to regret the mistakes I have made" in the entire affair.

But, in a 18-page opening statement he read before responding to questions, McFarlane said the administration relied too heavily on covert operations and Congress had sent contradictory signals about its own views on the contras.

The result was a "confused and contradictory policy," McFarlane said. "The policymakers who create conditions like this must bear some of the moral responsibility for the failures that follow," he declared.

McFarlane served as Reagan's National Security Adviser from Oct. 17, 1983 to Nov. 30, 1985. His involvement in the Iran-contra affair continued afterwards, as he was recruited by the administration to make a secret trip to Tehran in May 1986 as part of an arms-for-hostages arrangement.

McFarlane has said publicly he feels a heavy responsibility for the failures of the Iran-contra debacle, and was hospitalized in February for attempting suicide by taking an overdose of anti-depressant pills. Congressional aides have reported that McFarlane seemed brittle in private questioning, and broke down on at least one occasion.

McFarlane was expected to be questioned closely about Reagan's knowledge of his administration's efforts to assist the contras during a period when all military assistance was banned.

It was during this period that NSC aide Lt. Col. Oliver North was involved in establishing a secret supply network, and in raising funds from private sources to help the rebels.

McFarlane said at the time, in 1985, he did not believe that such financial support was necessary because a foreign country — widely reported to be Saudi Arabia — was providing money to keep the war against the Sandinista government going.

McFarlane said he turned to two staff members to carry out Reagan's wishes: North and Donald Fortier.

Members of the UConn crew club carry a racing scull out to Coventry Lake for practice on Saturday.

Club eyes Coventry Lake for regatta

By Jacqueline Bennett
Coventry Correspondent

COVENTRY — If the captain of the University of Connecticut crew club has his way, Coventry Lake may soon be the site of a rowing regatta, to be kicked off with a 2,000-meter race called the Coventry Sprint.

"The lake is perfect for racing and we already have a 2,000-meter course laid out," said John Leonard, a UConn student who is the club's captain.

Town officials like the idea. They're pleased with the recreational use of the lake and the prospect of making Coventry the home of a collegiate regatta.

"It's fantastic," said Harvey Barrette, a recreation commission member. "It's good to see the area used for what it's meant for — recreation."

The club stores its two fiberglass sculls outside a building at Patriot's Park on the south shore of Coventry Lake. The club wants to build a boathouse at that location.

"The idea of a regatta is excellent," Town Council Chairman Joan Lewis said last week. "It is exactly the type of thing we have been looking forward to having to promote the lake. It is exactly the type of activity to promote tourism in town."

Former councilman Michael Cleary agreed.

"It would be a great drawing card and tourist attraction," Cleary said recently. "Going down to Middletown, I've seen people lining the Connecticut River just to watch the Wesleyan team practice."

The UConn crew club works out on Coventry Lake in an eight-man boat, with a female coxswain at the lead. The club is seeking local support to hold a regatta on the lake.

Because the team is a club and crew is not a varsity sport, the club could negotiate on its own with town officials to schedule the event, a spokeswoman for the university said.

The UConn club is coached by Kenneth Donnelly, a financial analyst for the town of Newington. The UConn club has competed against Yale and Harvard universities, the Connecticut Coast Guard Academy, Skidmore College, and Assumption College in Massachusetts. The club recently participated in the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Regatta in Orchard Beach, N.Y., completing its season.

"Overall, we did very well," Leonard said.

The 35-member club has 19 females. There are five novice rowing teams: one eight-member men's team, two four-member men's teams, and two eight-member women's teams.

In four races and one scrimmage, out of six boats per race, the club did not come in below third place. Two teams were undefeated in a season running from September to November, and January to May.

The sport is demanding, said Patty Snock, a club member.

Bullets damage court

The state police Major Crimes Squad is investigating an incident Saturday morning in which several windows at the Manchester Superior Court and the windows of a prisoner van were shot up, state police spokesman Sgt. Daniel Lewis said this morning.

Several windows in the front of the courthouse were shot at, leaving large holes, but none of the windows was shattered. Lewis said that 10 rounds, probably from a handgun, were fired at the courthouse and five rounds were fired at the van. The incident is believed to have happened at about 4 a.m., when a Manchester police officer was dispatched to the courthouse in response to a report of suspicious activity there, Lewis said.

Damage is estimated to be in the thousands of dollars, Lewis said. Police will be questioning court personnel today to determine whether any disgruntled people in court on Friday may have been responsible for the vandalism, he said.

Anyone with information about the incident is asked to call state police Sgt. Edward Cash at 288-3888. Police are asking the person who reported the incident to come forward, Lewis said.

AIDS gains on cancer as health fear

By Lawrence Kilman
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — AIDS, deadly and incurable, now rivals cancer as the most feared disease in America, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

The dread manifests itself in several ways: six in 10 Americans favor mandatory AIDS tests as a requirement for certain jobs, more than half would take a vaccine against AIDS if one were available, and about half think everyone or almost everyone is at risk of getting the disease, according to the poll.

The 1,304 adult Americans in the nationwide telephone survey were asked if they feared one disease more than any other, and 44 percent said yes. Of those, 48 percent cited

AIDS and 47 percent cancer as the most feared disease.

When the same question was asked in a Media General-AP poll in September 1985, 78 percent said cancer and 23 percent said AIDS. (In the earlier poll, some respondents mentioned more than one disease.)

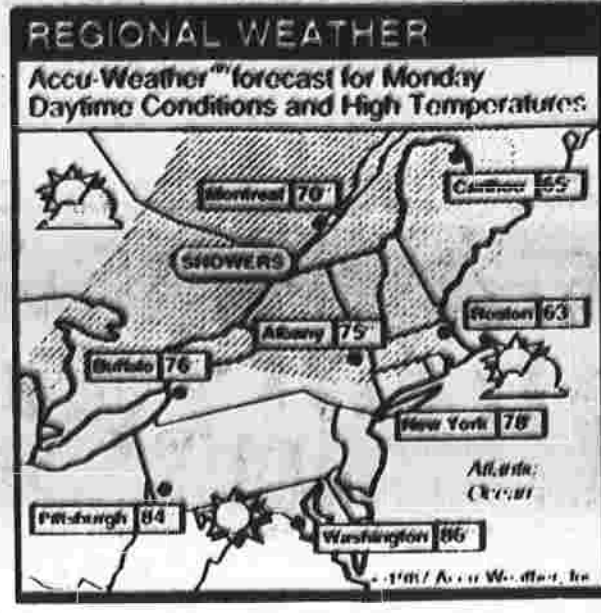

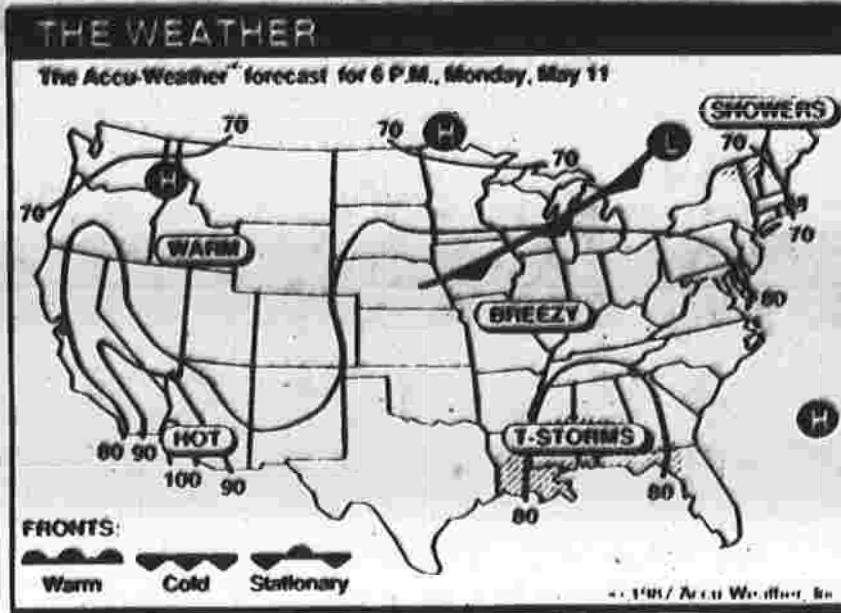

Among younger people, half of those who feared one disease more than others cited AIDS, while only one-third cited cancer. Women were as likely as men to fear AIDS.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is a disease in which a virus attacks the body's immune system, leaving victims susceptible to a wide variety of infections and cancers.

The immigration amnesty program is bringing thousands of people to registration centers like this one to apply for legal citizenship. In the past, immigration restrictions were often somewhat arbitrary. In 1870, for example, Congress granted naturalization rights to whites and people of African descent, but not to Asians. Asians today comprise 44.6 percent of all legal immigrants into the country. Only 10.4 percent are from Europe.

Laser foes get 4,000 signatures for their quest

By George Lovyns

Newell Curtis of Center Congregational Church on Center Street.

Last month, Laser Games of Hartford Inc. announced its plans to locate the high-tech entertainment center in Manchester. The game would involve having players walk through a maze of hallways and hidden rooms that would simulate the inside of an alien spacecraft.

In some cases, contestants would shoot a harmless infrared beam at monsters to collect points. Promoters say they want to open the business in November. They estimate the cost would be about $4 for a 10-minute game.

Sherman Tarr, a spokesman for the firm, said this morning he did not know if representatives from Laser Games will be present at the Tuesday meeting. The firm has complained that the game encourages violence, and the people it attracts may create a bad reputation for the town's main business because it is near residential areas.

The business could bring a high volume of traffic to the area. "Though Tuesday's meeting will probably be held under the jurisdiction of the Planning and Zoning Commission, we are opposed to anything that would be done, Tuesday's session will allow those concerned about the issue to speak out."

Wetters said that even if nothing is done, Tuesday's session will allow those concerned about something it's better to say you're opposed to something... rather than say "ah," and just walk away," she said.

Some church leaders involved with LOOM agreed.

Under the town's zoning regulations, the community in Manchester is not any longer interested in those types of entertainments," said Rev. James Meek of Community Baptist Church on East Center Street.

"It doesn't do anything else, it will raise the awareness that people are concerned about the well-being of this community," said the Rev.

Snow White found

JoAnn Killingsworth, Disneyland's first Snow White, says she could have saved the Disney folks the trouble of a nationwide search had she known they were looking for her.

Killingsworth had been sought to take part in the 50th anniversary of the movie "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

She was found Friday in Newport Beach, Calif., within 15 miles of Disneyland, after a friend who heard about the search called the park, said spokesman Bob Bask.

"I didn't realize Disney was looking for me," said Killingsworth, 63. "If I had, I would have called somebody and said 'Here I am. Here's Snow White.'"

When Disneyland opened July 17, 1955, Killingsworth, then 31 and a dancer, rode a float in the parade, accompanied by the seven dwarfs. Her one-day job included dancing with television host Bob Cummings and actor Fess Parker of "Davy Crockett" fame.

Giving away money

George Pillsbury has come to terms with his wealth by giving much of it away to progressive causes, and has become a consultant to people who inherit huge sums of money, as he did with his family's flour fortune.

"There can be a lot of guilt associated with having money... that you didn't earn," he said. "It's a big difference if you've just got it, it's like winning a lottery."

It caused him to identify with the 1950s television show, "The Millionaire," where every week a $1 million check was dropped into the hands of a person ill-prepared to deal with it.

"Their lives basically fell apart when they got that million dollars," Pillsbury recalls. "This is not that far from the truth in terms of the emotional problems that people (with inherited wealth) suddenly get."

Pillsbury came of age in the late 1900s and early '70s, touched by the anti-war movement, the feminist struggle and other social causes.

Coventry to vote on budget May 18

By Jacqueline Bennett
Coventry Correspondent

Green questioned the need for a police department.

"Dunkles took the bull by the horns and disbanded their police department," Green said. "For what it costs us, and what we get, I think we should consider it."

His remarks drew sighs and grumbles from the audience of about 50.

"That remark isn't worth commenting on," Police Chief Frank Trankos said later.

Ryan gave an emotional response to questions about funds for the fire department.

"In 10 years, I've been a registered nurse and worked in the emergency room at Manchester Memorial Hospital," Ryan said. "We don't have a paramedic unit in this town, or a paid fire department... If you could be in one other place and see what I see, that according to where you live or not, you'd realize the funds are essential."

The town is growing and so are its needs, she added.

Olmstead also voiced concern about increased spending for teacher salaries, noting that large state subsidies are likely to end in three years.

"I'm thinking down the road," said Olmstead. "What will we do then?"

The proposed budget for fiscal 1987-88, which begins July 1, includes $7.4 million for the Board of Education, $2 million in general government spending, about $700,000 for debt service, and $128,000 for capital expenditures. Passed intact, the budget would result in a 1.47 mill rate increase, bringing the mill rate to 34.14. One mill currently generates $181,350 for the town.

The referendum will take place May 18 from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Friday's meeting moderator Peter Halvorson invited public comment on the budget.

Olmstead expressed skepticism about the budget, which calls for a 1.47 mill-rate increase.

"One year we had a surplus with zero mill-rate increase," Olmstead said. "Last year we had a mill-rate increase and a surplus of $300,000. Can anyone tell me what kind of a surplus this increase will generate? It seems like we're doing this with mirrors."

Town Council Chairman Joan Lewis said she could not answer Olmstead's question.

"I doubt there would be much of a surplus," she added.

Yale students make promo tape on India charity group

NEW HAVEN (AP) - The public service efforts of two doctors and an educator working in India under the sponsorship of an international foundation have been documented in a videotape produced by two Yale business school students.

"It is very rare to meet people who demonstrate such a high level of commitment to their work," said one of the students, Douglas Hamilton. Hamilton plans to graduate from the Yale School of Organization and Management this month.

Hamilton and Ranji Nagaswami, who graduated from the school last year, did the videotaping last August after both became interested in the foundation, called Ashoka Ashoka, based in Washington, operates in India, Indonesia and Brazil by supporting entrepreneurs, called Ashoka fellows, who work for the public good.

Hamilton said he and Nagaswami first became interested in Ashoka when its chairman, William Drayton, visited the Yale management school in the spring of 1986. At that time the organization had little promotional material, he said.

Ashoka is a relatively simple concept that is best communicated by learning the individual stories of the fellows," he said. "Video is an effective way of telling these stories."

Hamilton worked briefly for the CBS Weekend News and also has spent time in Japan working for a member of the Japanese Parliament, Nagaswami, now employed by the Chase Investors Management Corp., is a native of India.

Hamilton said he and Nagaswami first became interested in Ashoka when its chairman, William Drayton, visited the Yale management school in the spring of 1986. At that time the organization had little promotional material, he said.

The two taped two doctors to earn a living and also provided medical care and treatment for them, Hamilton said.

Hamilton and Nagaswami also profited Gloria De Souza, an educator in Bombay De Souza pioneered an interactive approach to elementary education for the school children of Bombay, making learning more interesting for the students, the two said.

The Bombay Municipal Corp. has asked De Souza to introduce her methods to the 1,700 public schools in the city, they said.

In most parts of India, children are taught by rote, a carryover from British colonial days, they said.

The two students also filmed Dr. Hanif Lakdawala in Ahmedabad in northern India. Lakdawala and his wife have established a community health center in one of the city's slums, a Muslim ghetto, the two said. Lakdawala has also trained members of the community to be health-care providers, while women's groups have been organized to address issues of literacy, health and personal hygiene.

"We were just not prepared for the depth of their commitment," said Nagaswami of the three people featured in the videotape.

Hamilton and Nagaswami had 15 hours of tape, which they edited to about 14 minutes last fall. The videotape was recently screened at the Rockefeller Foundation.

A Rockefeller executive requested additional copies of the tape for the foundation to use as an example for other organizations interested in producing a promotional videotape, they said.

Ashoka also is hoping that the tape will air on public television and cable channels in the United States, the two said.

Polish community blames Soviets for crash of jet

By Brent Layman
The Associated Press

NEW BRITAIN — Immigrants and people of Polish descent, shocked by the plane crash near Warsaw that killed 10 local residents, responded with weeping and anger at the Soviets who manufactured the jetliner.

"I wouldn't fly that Russian junk," said John Markow, commander of the Gen. Joseph P. Battle Post No. 111 of the Polish Veterans Association, when men gathered around the bar and pool tables Sunday to talk about the crash.

Markow and other Polish immigrants, noting that the jet was Russian-made, said they blame the Soviets for the crash.

"The problem is in the Russian planes," said Andrew Kaminski, an immigrant who has canceled his trip to Warsaw next week on Sunday. "I've flown on LOT Polish Airlines, whose Flight No. 5693 crashed Saturday, killing all 183 people aboard. We want to go to Poland and see the crash site."

Sacred Heart Church planned to hold a Mass tonight for victims of the crash, which took place at least 11 Connecticut residents.

Ten of the victims lived in and around New Britain, a blue-collar city in central Connecticut where an estimated 20 percent of the 72,890 residents are of Polish descent. Many residents are immigrants who got jobs in the auto-and-die and bearing industries.

"One or another from the family will make his way here and make a good living so then they invite the relatives to come and join them," said the Rev. Paul A. Wysocki of Sacred Heart Church, where some Masses are said in Polish.

"The Polish people are suffering people. I'm sure every one of them is asking 'When will it end?'" he said. "Five of the crash victims were parishioners of Sacred Heart."

"I heard the news. I still can't believe it," Jankowski, who has worked for three years with Rutkowski in a Southington plant, said after Sunday Mass at Sacred Heart. Earlier, the names of the dead were read during Mass as parishioners wept.

"Also among the dead was a family of three from Newton returning from a relative's wedding in Poland. They were Janusz Trubisz, 36; his wife, Cecylia, 32; and their daughter, Yvette, 18 months."

Trubisz worked with his brother, Richard, in the family business Hartford auto body shop, said their mother, Jadwiga.

"I just want to be alone to cry," she said Saturday night after spending the day with relatives.

John Kwasowski, 64, an usher at Holy Cross Church in New Britain, said he accepted the crash with resignation.

"We're ready for the Polish jokes: the plane crashes because it's so close," he said. "It's a tragedy, but it happened. You always have to be very fatalistic about these things."

Poland and was returning home with his parents, Walter Rutkowski, 53, and Leonard, 49.

The younger Rutkowski's wife, 18-year-old Henna, stayed behind to await processing of her travel papers, Jankowski said. The couple met last year while Rutkowski was on vacation.

John Kwasowski, 64, an usher at Holy Cross Church in New Britain, said he accepted the crash with resignation.

"We're ready for the Polish jokes: the plane crashes because it's so close," he said. "It's a tragedy, but it happened. You always have to be very fatalistic about these things."

Members of New Britain's large Polish community mourn the deaths of 10 area residents at Sacred Heart Church Sunday morning. The 10, including five members of the church's congregation, were killed in the crash of a Polish jetliner in Warsaw on Saturday.

Union accepts beer pact

HARTFORD (AP) — Workers at five beer distributors were back on the job today after ratifying a three-year contract and ending a 10-day strike that halted beer deliveries in the Hartford area.

Members of the Teamsters Local 1085 voted 92-52 Sunday to approve the contract, said union chief Peter Susca.

The new contract will provide better pension and benefit plans, Susca said. He added that the hourly wage rate will increase 14 percent over three years.

"I don't want to go into a lot of details about it (the contract). Some general language was added that hopefully will be better for our members," he said. "I'm happy with the contract, but the members are satisfied," Susca said.

Member of the Local 1085 went on strike last week after the Franklin Distributors Inc. in South Windsor on May 1, after rejecting a contract offer by a 16-2 vote. After the vote, workers at four other distributors that belong to the Hartford Area Beer Distributors Association suspended deliveries to support of the Franklin workers.

Picket lines were set up outside the offices of the five distributors, but customers were not blocked from picking up their own beer.

Clem Sykes, president of the Hartford Area Beer Distributors Association, said although some beer shortages were reported, most stores were able to rely on their inventories.

Photographer backs Hart's story

MIAMI (AP) — Part of Gary Hart's version of events at his home apparently has been corroborated by a Miami Herald photographer, the newspaper reported a week after publishing the story that led him to end his presidential bid.

The newspaper concluded that the activities in question had not been "a central question in the Hart controversy." It does raise further questions about the surveillance" it conducted outside Hart's Washington townhouse last week.

Also Sunday, the Herald reported that the woman who offered the anonymous tip that led to the disclosure had told the newspaper that Hart seemed attracted to her but that she rebuffed him.

The tipster, the newspaper reported, said Hart was having an affair with one of her friends, and she did not want a man elected "who lies like that."

The Herald reported May 3 that a Miami woman had spent the previous Friday night and much of Saturday with the former Colorado senator.

The tipster, in a 90-minute conversation on April 22, told Herald Political Editor Tom Fiedler of a yacht party and overnight cruise involving Hart and one of her female friends, the newspaper said. The caller offered photographs of Hart and her friend together, but Fiedler declined, saying they would prove nothing.

The tipster identified herself as a liberal Democrat who could not tolerate someone who would say one thing publicly and do another privately.

"Gary Hart is having an affair with a friend of mine," she told Fiedler. "We don't need another president who lies like that."

She said she had met Hart at a yacht party several weeks before and that Hart had appeared attracted to her but that she had rebuffed him.

Approval of $5 billion budget likely

HARTFORD — The proposed $5.64 billion state budget for 1987-88 is expected to be approved this week by the Democratic-controlled House over the objections of Republicans who say the $287 million increase in spending is too much.

GOP legislative leaders claim the increase of 14.5 percent over the current budget is the highest in the country.

The battle lines may form around Republican efforts to save over a dozen state agencies in the past two years when they controlled the General Assembly.

Democrats are bent on eliminating the Transportation Accountability Board, which oversees state road and bridge contracts and the office of the inspector general, which is charged with ferreting out waste, fraud and abuse in state government.

A vote on separate bills eliminating the transportation board and transferring the inspector general's powers to state auditors and the attorney general could come before the budget bill vote, expected Wednesday in the House of Representatives.

UConn to create international office

STORRS — The University of Connecticut will create an office of international affairs to correct deficiencies in its foreign affairs program.

Julia A. Interim vice president of academic affairs, said he would set up the new office under a temporary director by September.

The international office is a response to a report by Fred G. Bunch, a political science professor, who found flaws in UConn's exchange programs with foreign countries, its teaching of foreign languages and cultures and its treatment of foreign students.

Burke said UConn inadvertently was insulting foreign scholars with slapdash accommodations. He said exchange programs have been conducted haphazardly, with no guiding rationale and that the university has neglected instruction in Arabic, Chinese and Japanese.

Burke said once-impressive programs on the Middle East and Eastern Europe have declined because respected scholars have left and have not been replaced.

Mom of 20 has plenty to celebrate

WALLINGFORD — Eunice H. Drake had plenty of time to receive well-wishers on Mother's Day, but that usually wasn't the case when she was raising her 20 children, including two sets of twins.

"I just had time to breathe between them," Drake, 87, said earlier this week. Drake, who had her first child in 1931 and her last one 24 years later, also is the grandmother or great-grandmother of 100.

"I was never sorry we had so many. I love them," she added. She raised her family in Fort Kent, Maine, but moved to Connecticut six years ago to be closer to eight children who live in the state.

A widow since 1962, she lives in the Masonic Home and Hospital in Wallingford, where a stitched sampler bearing the names and birthdays of her 20 children hangs over her bed. She said 10 of her children are still alive.

Drake said many families in northern Maine were as large as hers 80 years ago.

"They didn't have the Pill then," she quipped.

Repairs to close Interstate 91 lane

WINDSOR LOCKS — One southbound lane of Interstate 91 on the Dexter Coffin Memorial Bridge will be closed overnight beginning tonight as work to widen the bridge between exits 42 and 45 begins.

Leon Alford, district engineering manager for the state Dept. of Transportation, said Friday that the night work will continue indefinitely. Alford said.

The work is scheduled to begin at 10 p.m. and end by 6 a.m., before the morning traffic rush hour.

Crews will re-strip both lanes, then remove the existing median, Alford said.

The bridge widening is the most expensive phase of an overall project that began in 1985 to widen the highway for an 8-mile stretch from East Windsor to Massachusetts. The highway will be 160 feet wide and have three lanes in each direction. Widening the bridges along the route will cost $28.5 million and is scheduled for completion by 1991. Widening the rest of the highway will cost $33 million.

Hearing on strikebound home set

OLD SAYBROOK — The fate of a strikebound nursing home will be decided at a hearing next month in the wake of more charges of health code violations at the facility.

The state Department of Health Services released Friday a 19-count complaint detailing six pages of alleged health code violations at the Harbor Crossing Skilled Nursing Care Facility.

Fargo attorneys criticize surveillance

HARTFORD (AP) — The Federal Bureau of Investigation secretly listened to hundreds of hours of intimate conversations between defendants in the $7 million Wells Fargo robbery case and defense lawyers say there was no justification for the intense surveillance.

The lawyers allege that the FBI twice tape-recorded one couple and one man in their homes at least one other couple while making love.

Records in U.S. District Court also show that a telephone conversation between a suspect and her psychotherapist was taped by investigators.

Federal rules require FBI agents to stop listening or listen only intermittently when it is clear that the target of an investigation is engaged in personal conversations not concerning criminal matters.

The defense lawyers charge that the personal conversations may have been taped in order to force suspects to cooperate with authorities.

"There is no justification except to gain as much information as possible about the personal, intimate aspects of people's lives," said defense lawyer Ronald L. Kuby of New York City.

Federal prosecutors declined to comment on the taping of intimate conversations, but they and FBI officials have maintained that a mountain of evidence was necessary to unravel the robbery of the Wells Fargo depot in West Hartford on Sept. 12, 1983.

Nineteen people have been charged in connection with the robbery and 16 have been arrested.

Transfer of collapse site worries city

BRIDGEPORT (AP) — City officials are concerned about preserving evidence at the site of the Lambiance Plaza building collapse when federal investigators gave control of the area to the project's general contractor.

The federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration turned over the site Thursday to the general contractor, TPM International, and city officials said they were surprised.

"We've been led to believe they (OSHA) would not relinquish it until the investigation was over," Assistant City Attorney Mark Anastasi said Friday.

Evidence still at the site to be investigated includes the building's footings and the ground on which they were placed. Twenty-eight workers were killed on April 23 when the partially-completed 16-story complex collapsed.

Since the collapse, questions have arisen about whether the ground was strong enough to support the building.

Investigators had not completed soil tests or inspections of the building's footings when OSHA gave control of the site to TPM. On Thursday, John Chavez, an OSHA spokesman, said the agency still technically had turned it over to TPM.

On Friday Chavez said that technically the contractor could keep investigators out, but he said TPM was cooperating with investigators.

On Thursday, Stamford attorney Richard A. Silver filed a lawsuit on behalf of the family of John P. 30, a victim of the collapse, to ensure that evidence is not destroyed.

Silver said he would ask the court to appoint a special committee to supervise and protect potential evidence at the site.

Investigators have said the collapse was probably the result of a pilot radioed moments before Saturday's crash: "This is the end. We are saying farewell."

The jet reported engine trouble shortly after leaving Warsaw's Okecie International Airport, and was returning when it went down in a forest three miles from the airport. Witnesses said one of the four engines was on fire.

A Polish aviation expert said today that judging by the pilot's actions, the captain probably believed he had the plane under control and would reach the runway until the final minutes.

Mental-health workers await aftermath

By Linda Stowell

BRIDGEPORT — Rescue workers tolling for nine days at the Lambiance Plaza building collapse were sustained by hope that they'd find someone alive, a mental health official says.

But it was that hope that threw the families of victims into a tangle of prolonged tension and despair, said Dr. Catherine Tesluk, clinical coordinator of the mental health mobile crisis team in Bridgeport.

"It prolonged the tension and I think it increased stress," she said. "For some, the bodies were mutilated. Some had to wait so long and they entertained fantasies of their loved ones alive and uncomfortable, injured or dying — and out of their reach."

Some relatives expressed relief once told that the bodies were found, she said. "That would be like the family members of people in Vietnam who have never been found. The families never buried the bodies. They're left to rot," she said. "We're hearing about substance abuse, alcohol, insomnia, they're withdrawn and families are describing personality changes."

The Greater Bridgeport Community Mental Health Center is coordinating the mental health services for those who need them.

Tesluk said separate support groups have formed for survivors and families, for rescue workers, and for witnesses and co-workers.

She said Jeff Mitchell, a disaster relief expert from Maryland who was in Bridgeport during the disaster, would return to Bridgeport today to debrief police, fire and other personnel who worked at the scene.

Governor urges graduates to serve public

BRIDGEPORT (AP) — Despite intense media scrutiny and scandals that have topped public figures, students should not turn away from politics, Gov. William O'Neill said.

Addressing more than 1,300 University of Bridgeport graduates during commencement ceremonies Sunday, O'Neill said students should not shun politics because of events that led Denver's presidential candidate, Gary Hart to withdraw from the race last week.

"We need people in public service. Without them our system of government would falter and the ideals upon which our nation was built would begin to crumble," O'Neill told students receiving bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees.

Many consider Hart coverage unfair

NEW YORK (AP) — A majority of Americans believe media coverage of Gary Hart and his involvement in the scandal over questions about a candidate's private life, and 23 percent said coverage was fair.

The magazine said 70 percent disapproved of stalkers or other surveillance of the news media before the Hart story, while 9 percent had a more favorable one.

The Los Angeles Times also reported Sunday that 41 percent of those it surveyed had a less favorable view of the news media than before the Hart story, while 9 percent had a more favorable one.

The Los Angeles Times poll showed a virtually equal division over whether the news media should report the extramarital affairs, but the magazine said 52 percent of respondents said that private lives should be off-limits, while 42 percent said private lives are a good thing to investigate. It also reported that 99 percent felt the media focused so much attention on the Hart story they neglected other such stories that attract large audiences.

Newweek said 37 percent of those likely to vote for a Democrat are concerned about which candidate to support, though the Rev. Jesse Jackson led the likely candidates with 22 percent, followed by Sen. Michael Dukakis and Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois 9 percent.

Time's poll showed that without Hart, Cuomo received 20 percent, Jackson 10 percent, Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey 10 percent and Dukakis 8 percent. Cuomo was not listed in Newweek's poll.

The Los Angeles Times had Dukakis at 12 percent and Jackson and Cuomo with 7 percent each.

Investigators examine flight recorder

By Matthew C. Vito

WARSAW, Poland — A special government commission today examined a flight recorder from a Polish jetliner to determine what caused the crippled aircraft to crash near Warsaw, killing all 183 people aboard.

The 13-member commission, headed by Deputy Premier Zbigniew Ziobinski, was expected to issue its first statement on the crash later today, said Stefan Pospolny, a spokesman for the Transport Ministry.

Police found the flight recorder from the LOT Polish Airlines jetliner Sunday. One report said the pilot radioed moments before Saturday's crash: "This is the end. We are saying farewell."

The jet reported engine trouble shortly after leaving Warsaw's Okecie International Airport, and was returning when it went down in a forest three miles from the airport. Witnesses said one of the four engines was on fire.

Budget plan would aid Soviets, Reagan says

By Tim Ahern
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is complaining that the Pentagon budget bills in the House and Senate include nuclear arms control provisions that "would be handing the Soviets free of charge what they can't win at the bargaining table."

Reagan's criticism came as both chambers are scheduled to separately consider bills authorizing the defense budget for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

With both chambers controlled by Democrats, the bill that finally emerges from a House-Senate conference committee is likely to contain arms control restrictions opposed by Reagan, according to congressional leaders.

The House already has added language saying the United States should comply with the unratified SALT II nuclear arms treaty and should not change the U.S. view of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty, a pair of positions opposed by Reagan.

Also in the House this week, the Iran-Contra hearings continue, with testimony scheduled today from former National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane.

On the defense authorization bills, there are likely to be moves in the House to halt all but the smallest U.S. nuclear tests and cut spending for Reagan's "Star Wars" antimissile program, known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Similar proposals are likely in the Senate, which is scheduled to begin considering the bill later this week. The House will be in the second week of plowing through the huge measure, and neither chamber is expected to finish before next week.

Reagan, in his weekly radio address Saturday, called the House arms control provisions a "grave concern," particularly since the United States and the Soviets are at a key point in arms control talks.

Reagan said the House move seemed to be on the verge of major arms reductions," he said. "Bill, some in Congress would pull the rug out from under our negotiators with some legislation, such as that contained in our Strategic Defense Initiative and nuclear testing."

"Congress would be handing the Soviets free of charge what they can't win at the bargaining table. This is no way to run America's foreign policy."

Reagan's defense program generally fares better in the Senate than in the House. For example, the House measure proposes a $28 billion budget, compared with the $30.3 billion level in the Senate. The current budget is $29 billion, and Reagan had sought $31.2 billion.

Senate arms control bills are likely to be passed, although a major fight is expected over a committee-added amendment that halts any weapons tests that would violate the current view of the 1972 ABM pact.

Filipinos go to polls; little trouble reported

By Robert H. Reid
The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — Millions of Filipinos cast ballots today for a new U.S.-style Congress, with President Corason Aquino's personal popularity expected to give her centrist coalition a strong majority.

Aquino said the election was the most peaceful and honest "perhaps since independence" in 1946, adding there was a record turnout but giving no figure for total votes cast. Election chief Ramon Felipe estimated 86 percent of the 26 million voters cast ballots.

At least seven people were reported killed in scattered election incidents and there were some reports of vote fraud. But the violence did not compare with the bloodshed, intimidation and corruption which marked the 1986 presidential contest between Aquino and Ferdinand E. Marcos.

"The sight of millions of Filipinos showing up at the polls at the first hour this morning and patiently waiting for their turn to vote surprised me," he said.

"Up to now the Warsaw office of internal affairs has not received any information about such a case."

The remains of passengers were being taken to the Institute of Forensic Medicine in downtown Warsaw, but officials there said most of the bodies "are simply unidentifiable."

Stanley Baladyga of Seven Hills, Ohio, was among the first U.S. relatives of the victims to arrive in Warsaw. His father, Wladyslaw 43, was planning to fly to the United States for their first meeting in 20 years.

"I called my father two weeks ago and he was so happy that he was coming to see me after such a long time," Baladyga said, shaking with emotion and fighting back tears.

Police sealed off the area around the crash site, where about 1,000 rescue workers were carefully documenting the remains, fragments of the plane and personal effects.

The pilot also radioed that his suit control mechanisms were falling, according to a semiofficial source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The plane plunged into a wooded area three miles short of the runway at Okecie Airport, exploded in a ball of fire and broke into hundreds of pieces.

American relatives of those aboard the charter flight began arriving in Warsaw over the weekend to recover the remains of the victims. U.S. officials said there were 17 U.S. passport holders on the flight and at least five people with dual Polish and American citizenship.

A surprise GOP race in the 4th

The surprise entrance of Carol Kuehl into the race for election to the Republican State Central Committee from the 4th Senatorial District must have come as a blow to Bolton's Mark Johnson, who had no doubt been counting on the votes of Manchester delegates to win him the position.

The 13-member Manchester delegation is the largest in the five-town district.

Tradition holds that one of the two State Central Committee members from the 4th Senatorial District will be from Manchester and the other will be from Glastonbury, which has the next largest delegation based on the number of registered Republican voters.

Johnson's aspirations to the post must have stemmed from his knowledge that Nathan Agostinelli of Manchester had decided to step down and that none of Manchester's Republican leaders were eager to step into his shoes.

Kuehl's announcement Thursday, five days before the election Tuesday, radically changed the picture. Earlier in the week Kuehl had said she felt she did not have time to devote to the job. Her change of decision took even her husband, Manchester Republican Town Chairman Donald Kuehl, by surprise.

The combination of a Manchester representative and a Bolton representative on the committee is highly unlikely. A Glastonbury candidate is almost certain to be elected, leaving Kuehl and Johnson in direct competition if the Manchester-Glastonbury balance is to be retained.

There is also a tradition that one of the representatives should be a man and the other a woman. Kuehl is the only woman who is an announced candidate. The two Glastonbury hopefuls are both men.

If the delegates Tuesday are governed solely by tradition, Kuehl will be the winner on two grounds.

But they would do well to make their choices on the basis of what they perceive to be the merits of the candidates.

If Kuehl is preferred over Johnson, it should not be simply because he does not live in Manchester. Considering the close social, economic and political ties between Bolton and Manchester, Manchester Republicans should not feel under-represented if Johnson is the victor.

Town hall option biased and illegal

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to your April 20 editorial in which you questioned the cost and necessity to expand Manchester's Municipal Building. At its conclusion, your editorial recommended an alternative solution to provide handicapped accessibility for the citizen and public using the building.

This solution clearly shows a lack of understanding of present codes and regulations pertaining to accessible public buildings and equal employment opportunities.

There is also a tradition that one of the representatives should be a man and the other a woman. Kuehl is the only woman who is an announced candidate.

If the delegates Tuesday are governed solely by tradition, Kuehl will be the winner on two grounds.

Senators remove reform fairness

To the Editor:

On April 30, the state Senate approved legislation that substantially erodes the elements of "fairness" from last year's tort reform law. The Senate bill is unfair to Connecticut consumers, businesses and municipalities.

The new bill reinstates a large part of the "joint and several" concept removed in last year's law and shifts additional costs from those who are responsible but are financially incapable of paying to those who can pay.

In his quixotic quest for the presidential pot of gold, the Rev. Jesse Jackson is reportedly adding yet another colorful splash to his Rainbow Coalition: Edwin Edwards, the cagey Cajun governor of Louisiana.

The word floating around the bayous is that Jackson and Edwards are planning a mutual endorsement. Jackson, who carried Louisiana's Democratic presidential primary in 1984, is scheduled to be in the state this week, and our sources say he may endorse Edwards for a fourth gubernatorial term.

Edwards, who returned to Louisiana last year after Jackson's endorsement for the 1988 presidential nomination.

Asked by our reporter Lisa Sylvester about a mutual endorsement, Jackson said no deal had been made, but added with Delphic ambiguity: "No doubt, in the course of political conversations, you discuss prospects." Edwards would not confirm the rumors, either.

The fact remains that Edwards is the only governor on the exploratory committee Jackson appointed to study his 1988 prospects. And Jackson's support could be important for Edwards, who is lagging behind in many early polls following his prosecution and acquittal on federal corruption charges.

Jackson said he and Edwards have been friends for about eight years. Midway in that friendship, Edwards called for a boycott of the 1984 Louisiana primaries at the same time that black political leaders were urging participation. The result was that many white voters stayed home, while blacks turned out in force. Jackson won with 42 percent of the vote.

Some Louisiana political observers have suggested that Edwards' call for a boycott was a Machiavellian scheme designed to help Jackson — a scenario that Jackson described as "a kind of wage war."

At any rate, a secret endorsement deal between the two old political pals would hardly be out of the question.

Saudis give to the CIA's Afghan fund

WASHINGTON — The Saudi Arabian government's secret matching-funds arrangement with the CIA on military aid to the Afghan fighters has struck another blow of the $1.5 billion the Saudis have contributed to the anti-Soviet rebels has gone to Saudi-favored guerrilla groups that are not only the least pro-Western but also the least effective.

Since U.S. aid to the Afghan mujaheddin began, our intelligence sources say, the Saudis have matched congressional appropriations dollar for dollar. The CIA station chief in the capital city of Riyadh receives Saudi money for the rebels. In addition, individual Saudis have donated millions on their own to favorite Afghan rebel leaders.

But our sources charge that the Saudi involvement in the CIA's supposedly covert arms-supply program has tilted the aid program toward the mujaheddin groups that aren't doing much of the fighting, and may well turn out to be anti-American.

There are seven main rebel groups that form a loose coalition. Three could be considered moderate in their politics and pro-Western in their orientation. The remaining four, favored by the Saudis, are more conservative Muslim groups seeking to make Afghanistan an Islamic state.

The Saudis' wish has been the CIA's command, despite congressional intentions in the matter. For example, one of the four Saudi-favored mujaheddin groups, led by Rasoul Sayaf, has received 20 percent of the CIA/Saudi arms supply — even though it has only about 2 percent of the total guerrilla strength in the field.

Sayaf's strong Saudi backing would account for the disparity. (On one occasion alone in May 1984, the Saudi ambassador to Pakistan delivered $10 million in aid from Prince Abdallah, deputy prime minister of Saudi Arabia.)

A disturbing connection has surfaced between Afghan aid and the Iran-contra scandal. The Swiss bank account into which more than $10 million in Iran arms sales profits went was a CIA account containing $500 million intended for the Afghan mujaheddin.

Furthermore, it is known that former national security adviser Robert McFarlane discussed Afghan resistance contributions — and aid to the Nicaraguan contras — on several occasions with Saudi Prince Bandar bin Sultan.

The clearest indication of Saudi clout with the CIA is that U.S. Stinger anti-aircraft missiles delivered last year went first to Saudi-favored mujaheddin groups. Afghan rebel leaders who had come to Washington to plead their cause with President Reagan were initially cut out of the Stinger deliveries — almost as if in punishment for going over the CIA's head.

Jackson said he and Edwards have been friends for about eight years. Midway in that friendship, Edwards called for a boycott of the 1984 Louisiana primaries at the same time that black political leaders were urging participation. The result was that many white voters stayed home, while blacks turned out in force. Jackson won with 42 percent of the vote.

Some Louisiana political observers have suggested that Edwards' call for a boycott was a Machiavellian scheme designed to help Jackson — a scenario that Jackson described as "a kind of wage war."

At any rate, a secret endorsement deal between the two old political pals would hardly be out of the question.

U.S./World In Brief

Smelly senator says he won't budge

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — A state senator who has refused to leave the Senate chamber until fellow lawmakers agree on a budget said Sunday he was receiving "immense support" from the public.

But mostly, "I'd like to climb in a hot shower and stay there for a while. And get a shave," said state Sen. George "Buffy" Warner, a freshman Republican from Morgantown.

Warner has been holed up in the red-carpeted marble chamber since Friday afternoon, when he told the Senate he wouldn't budge, shower or change clothes until the state budget for next year is resolved.

Both chambers are scheduled to return Tuesday after recessing Friday, the 16th day of a 200,000-day extended session.

Warner complained that some House members have the attitude of "We don't have a budget. We don't care," and would go home. It's a complete flouting of the people's trust and the responsibility that they took on.

House Speaker Chuck Chambers disputed that. "I'm afraid Buffy has not been party to the conference committee meetings and meetings between the House and Senate leadership and he doesn't know what we have accomplished in any of those areas," Chambers said.

Boy kills father, wounds mother

HOUSTON — A quiet Mother's Day at an apartment complex exploded in tragedy when a 16-year-old boy fatally shot his father and seriously wounded his mother after they refused to let him play outside, authorities say.

Edward Simon Sr., 46, was shot just above the left eye and was pronounced dead Sunday afternoon at the family's apartment, said Sgt. Jim Boy.

Mary Simon, 47, was taken to Ben Taub Hospital where she was listed in stable condition early today with two gunshot wounds to the chest and a wound in each leg, police said.

The couple's other children, a 13-year-old boy, and a girl, 7, were in another room when all six shots of the father's .38-caliber revolver were fired, and were unharmed.

"He was outside and his dad told him to come in. He came stomping in. He was mad," homicide Sgt. June Cain-Crocker said.

After arguing with his parents, police said, the boy found the gun, shot his parents, and ran from the building.

Guo Espree, 16, said he and a friend were tossing a football around in a parking lot near the Simon apartment when he heard two shots and saw the boy run outside.

Two people killed in plane crash

COLLIERVILLE, Tenn. — A single-engine plane crashed into a house Sunday, killing both people aboard, but police said the residents of the home were not injured.

Bobby Goss, 24, said he and his stepmother, Leoda Goss, had been watching television just a few feet away from where the Piper Cub J-4 plowed into the rear of the one-story, wood-frame house about 3 p.m.

"It rocked the house," he said. "I looked out and there was an airplane almost in the bathroom."

Killed were the pilot, Roy E. Degan, 54, of Germantown, and Curtis V. Yates, 44, of Riverdale, Ga., said police Sgt. Dwight Hood.

The plane had taken off from Wolf River Airport in Fayette County, seven miles east of Collierville, shortly before the crash, said police Sgt. David Hamrick.

Witnesses said the plane suddenly lost power before crashing into the house, he said.

Voluntary AIDS tests recommended

NEW YORK — A confidential report by the federal Centers for Disease Control recommends a major increase in voluntary AIDS testing but opposes an increase in mandatory testing, according to a published report.

The 99-page report calls for strong laws to protect the secrecy of test results and the civil rights of those infected with the virus, according to an article in Monday editions of "The New York Times."

The report by Dr. James O. Mason, CDC director, said mandatory testing was not justified by current knowledge of how the virus spreads.

But it said testing should be encouraged for certain groups, including patients at venereal disease clinics, intravenous drug users and pregnant women in areas with high rates of AIDS infection, the newspaper said.

The report said the presence of antibodies against AIDS "is tantamount to a diagnosis of current and persistent infection" with the virus "even though many infected people have no clinical evidence of disease," according to the Times.

The report's recommendations run contrary to the positions of many in the Reagan administration, including Education Secretary William J. Bennett and White House aide Gary L. Bauer, who are proponents of increased mandatory testing.

Police continue search for convict

ST. ROBERT, Mo. — An escaped convict who eluded a three-week manhunt last month was being hunted today less than 35 miles from the original search zone after he apparently heaved a concrete block through a store window to get food, officials said.

The search for John David Brown picked up new steam over the weekend when he was spotted in a restaurant in Buckhorn. He fled in a car which later was abandoned.

Highway Patrol Lt. Ernest McCutcheon said someone threw a large concrete block through the front window of the Brickridge General Store at Laquey, 2 1/2 miles southwest of Buckhorn, about 1:10 a.m. today.

The store owner, Iva Pender, 68, who lives in the rear of the building, found someone trying to take some canned food and fired two shots. The intruder apparently was not hit and fled through the same front window, McCutcheon said.

"We feel very strongly that this was Brown and are right now operating under the assumption that it was," McCutcheon said. Brown, 32, who escaped from a prison at Fordland three years ago, is accused of shooting and wounding a police officer in Rolla, about 30 miles northeast of Buckhorn, on March 30. He also is wanted for questioning about the killing of a volunteer church worker at Doolittle on April 1.

Jewish families return to Germany

LANDAU, West Germany — William F. Mayer looked "with one wet eye and one dry eye" at the German wine-growing region he and hundreds of other Jews fled a half-century ago after the Nazis' rise to power.

The New York resident underlined the mixed emotions he felt when he and more than 70 other members of Jewish families driven away by Adolf Hitler's Third Reich came back for a week-long reunion in Landau.

The reunion was one of several run by West German towns and cities, such as Frankfurt and Berlin, to encourage former Jewish residents to come back to the land they once fled.

Landau officials used city funds and contributions to pay all costs for round-trip flights and lodging of former Jewish residents and their spouses. For many, it was their first time back.

Landau, with a population of 37,400, is a traditional German town with neat churches, winding streets and well-kept buildings. It lies in the middle of a wine-growing region in southwestern Germany, 12 miles from France.

About 800 Jews lived in Landau in 1838. Today, there are two.

Reagan: Battle not over for blacks

By Marvin Harrison
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan, asserting that blacks cannot be left behind in an increasingly high-technology society, says black scientists and other professionals must come to rival athletes and entertainers as models for the young.

While dedicating a science and health center at Tuskegee University in Alabama, named for the late Air Force Gen. Daniel "Chappie" James, and in a commencement address to some 200 graduates, Reagan focused on stories of successful blacks.

Reagan wearing a graduation gown, said the civil rights movement "earned the respect and gratitude of all good and decent Americans."

"The political and legal battle is obviously not over," the president said.

Yet, Reagan said, "Today, if black Americans are to progress socially and economically, if they are to be independent and upwardly mobile, it is imperative they be part of our great technological and scientific changes now sweeping our country."

Firefighters battle fires in two states

By The Associated Press

About 200 firefighters worked today to contain two fires that burned 6,000 acres of forest in the Pacific Northwest.

Forest fires were burning in at least five states and in Canada. A forest fire in New Jersey was brought under control Sunday night after consuming 100 acres.

Fire officials in Michigan say they hoped that rain would help them contain the fires, about 60 miles apart in remote sections of the central Upper Peninsula, but evening and under control Tuesday night.

"We're getting shower activity and thunderstorm right now. Firefighters from as far away as Minnesota and Indiana joined the effort, with the aid of helicopters, bulldozers, and tanker trucks.

Erratic winds on Sunday hampered 125 firefighters battling a 1,200-acre brush fire near Fatterston, Calif., authorities said.

"The terrain is very steep, and a chance of rain today, Woerpel said these conditions could help or hurt the firefighting, depending on where the rain fell.

Officials say they believe the fire, in Schoolcraft and Alger counties, were set.

Proper trump play yields overtrick

By James Jacoby. The old saw about beggars walking the streets of London because they didn't pull trump is exaggerated, since postponing drawing trump is often the correct play. Using the trump suit to throw a defender on lead as part of an elimination and end play is an unusual ramiification of the postponement.

best chance for making an overtrick, that is good bridge. Accordingly, declarer did lay down the spade king. When everyone followed, he then switched to the club king. West made the natural play of taking the club ace and leading back the heart queen, won by South's king. A second spade was now played to the ace, leaving West with the good queen. Declarer played dummy's remaining high clubs and then put West on lead with his spade queen. The hapless defender now had to play either a club or a diamond, allowing declarer to trump in dummy while stuffing his losing heart.

Polly's Pointers

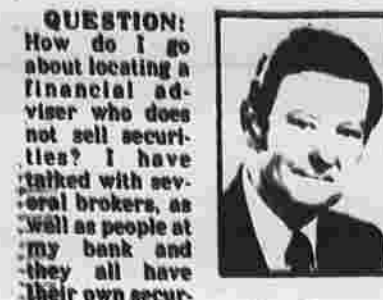

Cooking tips help coat the spoon. By Polly Fisher. DEAR POLLY - So many recipes call for cooking 'until the spoon is coated.' What degree of coating should one look for - a thin coating or a thick one? - SHAW. DEAR SHAW - This is a tough question since different mixtures really call for different textures or thicknesses. However, for custards and similar mixtures I use this test: Dip a clean metal spoon into the mixture and hold it above the pot. If the spoon is coated and the liquid doesn't run off immediately (such as soup or plain milk), draw a line through the mixture on your spoon with your finger. If the line made by your finger remains, the mixture is properly coated. Hope this helps. - POLLY.

DEAR POLLY - A shaker-top apiece bottle with a lid is great for storing vinegar. The vinegar is very convenient for sprinkling onto greens and fish. It's great to use whenever you want just a dash of vinegar. - CHRIS. DEAR CHRIS - This is a really handy hint for those who like simple vinegar and oil dressings, too. In fact, you could put oil in an identical bottle for easy shaking. It's also a perfect way to use those fancy flavored vinegars. Your helpful Pointer earns you the Pointer of the Week award, a copy of my book, 'Polly's Pointers: 1881 Helpful Hints for Making Everything Last Longer.' DEAR POLLY - I've devised a way to create miniature houses, stores, roads, driveways, etc. by using yarn remnants. I lay the yarn in the desired pattern on the carpet. Because the fibers of the carpet hold the yarn in place, the outlines remain even if bumped or stepped on. It's a lot of fun and cleanup is a breeze. QUESTION: How do I go about locating a financial adviser who does not sell securities? I have talked with several brokers, as well as people at my bank and they all have their own securities to sell. That makes me more interested in commissions than having my interest at heart.

Business helped by low dollar

By Martin Cushman The Associated Press

HOTSPRINGS, Va. - The falling dollar has finally begun to help American manufacturers, but the improvement is not uniform and some sectors of the economy, notably the oil industry, remain mired in hard times, leaders of U.S. companies report.

The Business Council, composed of the chief executives of 65 of the nation's largest businesses, met at a mountain resort this past week to discuss economic prospects. In a report, the executives forecast that economic growth for the next two years will be far from robust. While the executives did not predict a recession, they said the economy will grow at sluggish rates very similar to those of the past two years.

But in one bright spot, the executives said the worst of the country's trade problems appear to be over. They forecast that American exports should grow at a robust 9 percent rate in both 1987 and 1988. This optimism was based on a belief that a weaker dollar is making American goods competitive again on overseas markets.

Some of the executives said they already were beginning to see the improvement in their own sales figures. "We are getting an awfully strong lift from the weakening dollar," said James C. Burke, chairman of Johnson & Johnson, the health products company.

Edmund Pratt, chairman of Pfizer Inc., said half the big American drug manufacturers' sales were overseas and they were seeing improvements because of the drop in the value of the dollar, which began two years ago. Ruben Mettler, head of TRW, the defense and aerospace company, said "stressful times" in the computer industry in the past two years forced that industry to restructure as well.

"The majority of companies reduced work weeks, closed plants, reduced the work force, and IBM was no exception to that," he said. "The first quarter results for the industry suggest that business is picking up... but it remains to be seen just how strong this turnaround will be and how sustainable it will be."

George Ketter, chairman of Chevron Corp., said the nation's oil companies have yet to enjoy the better times that the rest of manufacturing is seeing. The first quarter of 1986, due to the steep drop in oil prices last year, Ketter said it appeared oil prices have now stabilized at around $18 a barrel, and he predicted they could rise to $20 per barrel by the end of the year. "I think we will see less (price) volatility than last year," he said. "It has to be less or we are going to watch another quarter of the industry go down the tube."

Ketter predicted that domestic oil production, which dropped 9 percent last year, will probably decline by another 3 percent this year, while oil consumption will rise 3 percent, making America further reliant on imported oil.

based on the complexity of the client's finances. Some charge by the hour. Still others charge a fee for a plan and hourly fees for additional consultations. Most financial planners, including those who rouse your suspicions, care their living from commissions on sales. And a good number levy a fee for a plan, plus sales commissions. Since you want to go the fee-only route, you should talk to a number of planners who operate that way. Discuss your entire financial situation and your investment objectives. Ask each planner what kind of a plan he or she would set up for you and what the cost would be. Pick the one you feel would serve you best. Unfortunately, there is no way to tell in advance whether a planner's advice will be good, bad or indifferent.

You're looking for what is known as a "fee-only" financial planner, one who sets up a plan for you and advises you on carrying it out. Fee-only planners are relatively rare, but they do exist. QUESTION: I am a single man, 37. I gave up my job eight years ago to stay at home with my mother, who is very ill. At that time, we had more than $240,000 in bank certificates of deposit and were in good financial condition. But I am now a bit worried. Because of low interest rates, our savings have come down to $220,000 and keep shrinking. Our interest income now is around $14,000 a year. I am looking for work I can do at home. And I feel I must invest to get more income.

I went to some financial seminars but did not feel comfortable with the presentations and advice. Recently, I attended a seminar given by a man who really impressed me. He has very good credentials and the price of his investment course is $289, plus $40 annual membership. If it is a good course, it will be well worth the money. Do you think I should sign up?

ANSWER: You must realize that anyone who figured out a sure way to get rich in the stock market wouldn't have to hold seminars and sell courses at those or any other price. He'd be cruising on the world's largest yacht.

So, if that man who impressed you promises a sure road to riches, my advice is to steer clear and save your money. However, if he's selling a basic course on finances, without pie-in-the-sky hopes and without a promise to do a lot of commission-generating business through him, go ahead and sign up. You'll soon know if his course is worth its rather modest cost.

QUESTION: My brother has taken to calling himself a "financial consultant." This title now appears on his business card. Until recently, he was an "account executive" who was known as "being known as a 'broker'."

ANSWER: Nothing, to my mind. But many brokerage firms such as "consultant," "planner," and "adviser," which have more status than "broker" and also indicate that the broker - because that's what he is - does more than just buy and sell securities.

It wasn't so long ago that most firms called their brokers "registered representatives." I remember when they were known as "customer's men." That, of course, was before there were many women in the business.

Chrysler plans restructuring to become more competitive

N.Y. (AP) - Chrysler Motors spokesman Alan Miller declined comment Sunday night on the possibility of a stock offering to help finance a restructuring of the company. Chrysler Motors announced in a statement Friday that it would hold a news conference today in Detroit to discuss the future of its Component Business Operations. The statement said the spare parts operation would become a subsidiary of Chrysler Motors, the third biggest automobile manufacturer in the United States. The New York Times reported in today's edition that the move affecting the $2.8 billion a year operation could be a preliminary to a public stock offering.

help the parts operation to arrange joint ventures with outside parts suppliers wary of sharing their technology with Chrysler. The officials, who were not identified, also said that as a subsidiary the operation would be more able to sell to Japanese-owned assembly plants. Several years ago, Chrysler moved its parts operation out from under the wing of its engine, transmission and auto assembly operations. Chrysler officials said the parts operation would no longer automatically supply the company with parts and that it would have to compete with outside operations.

Dollar rises slightly; gold steady

LONDON (AP) - The dollar rose slightly against almost all currencies in calm European trading today and dealers said little significant change was expected over the release of key U.S. economic indicators later this week. Gold prices were little changed. The recent upward swing of the dollar has been largely based on technical factors, dealers said and the market is waiting for Thursday's release of the U.S. trade balance for March and Friday's producer price index and industrial production figures for April. In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose to a closing 139.30 yen from Friday's 139.08. Later, in London, it was quoted at 139.95 yen. Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Friday's rates: -1,700 West German marks, up from 1,701.5 -1,477 Swiss francs, up from 1,475.5 -9,945 French francs, up from 9,987.5 -2,030 Dutch guilders, up from 2,021 -1,298.00 Italian lire, up from 1,295.00 -1,330 Canadian dollars, down from 1,330. In London, the dollar rose against the British pound. It cost $1.6710 to buy one pound, cheaper than Friday's $1.6735. Gold prices were steady in quiet trading. Gold opened in London at a bid price of $452.10 a troy ounce and at mid-morning the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $454.75, slightly below Friday's closing bid of $455. In Zurich, the bid price was $454.50 at noon, unchanged from late Friday. Exchange in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.35 to close at a bid $452.02.

WASHINGTON - As the value of the U.S. dollar continues to erode in international markets, pressure is building on the Federal Reserve to nudge up interest rates. Such action might help brake the dollar's relentless fall and prevent the Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker and many economists have long feared - a "free fall" of the dollar, a plunge that can't be reversed short of a recession. The Fed is widely expected by economists to act soon - possibly this week - to boost its "discount rate" - the fee it charges for loans to banks and other financial institutions. The rate, at 5.5 percent since last August, has not been increased in more than a year. Earlier this month, commercial banks raised their prime rate - for loans to their most creditworthy customers - from 7.5 percent to 8 percent. And, on Friday, the Veterans Administration increased the rate on VA mortgage loans from 9.5 percent to 10 percent. Since these and other rates have been heading up on their own, the Fed's raising of the discount rate might not trigger a major new round of interest rate hikes. But it could send an important signal to financial markets that the Fed is serious about propping up the dollar, analysts suggested. Higher U.S. interest rates could lure more foreign investors into putting their money in U.S. financial investments, which in turn would help strengthen the dollar. Still, some economists suggest that the dollar, if not already in the dreaded free fall, is verging on one - and could drop another 15 percent to 20 percent before bottoming out. What would be the effect on consumers and the economy of a free fall of the dollar? With a cheaper dollar comes the threat of higher inflation, higher interest rates - and, if the cycle continues, a recession. American tourists already have felt the effect directly as the value of their dollars decline almost daily. The dollar's slide is also making it much more expensive for the Defense Department to maintain U.S. troops and installations overseas. Meanwhile, the United States is becoming one of the world's best tourist bargains - for the Japanese and Europeans. The weakening dollar is also making foreign goods more expensive - from Japanese automobiles to French cognac. Janet Norwood, director of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, warned that "there is even some limited evidence" that American producers are beginning to follow suit and raise their prices. The government's Consumer Price Index so far this year has risen at an annual rate of 2.2 percent - compared with a scant 1.1 percent for all of 1986. To be sure, part of this comes as an energy price rebound from their 1986 collapse. But energy costs are fading as a factor and higher prices are becoming more prevalent - showing up first in consumer electronics, new cars, home furnishings and apparel. Japanese and European producers still haven't raised their prices as much as the roughly 50 percent the dollar has fallen since mid-1985. But economists claim it's only a matter of time since exporters in those countries are already feeling the pinch. "The dollar impact is beginning to show and can only build over time," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. "The process now is self-feeding and circular, and dangerous and unknown in its implications for the dollar, inflation and the financial markets." This is the reverse of what happened during 1983 and 1984 - when the soaring dollar drove inflation down, helping to depress the price of imports and contributing to this nation's record trade deficits. The Reagan administration until recently was content to see the value of the dollar fall in hopes that higher import prices would ease trade imbalances. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III even engaged in an active campaign to "talk down" the dollar further - a process he since has abandoned. A central concern is that if the dollar keeps falling, it may persuade the Japanese and others to pull back on their large U.S. financial investments - money needed to keep financing the government's staggering $2.3 trillion debt. The major industrial nations agreed in Paris in late February to take concerted actions to stabilize currencies "around current levels." But despite that vow - backed up with massive intervention in exchange markets by central banks - the dollar continues to tumble. At time of the February meeting in Paris, the dollar was trading at 153 yen. Last week, it fell to 159 yen - a new post World War II low.

Feds could boost interest rates up

By Tom Roun The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - As the value of the U.S. dollar continues to erode in international markets, pressure is building on the Federal Reserve to nudge up interest rates. Such action might help brake the dollar's relentless fall and prevent the Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker and many economists have long feared - a "free fall" of the dollar, a plunge that can't be reversed short of a recession. The Fed is widely expected by economists to act soon - possibly this week - to boost its "discount rate" - the fee it charges for loans to banks and other financial institutions. The rate, at 5.5 percent since last August, has not been increased in more than a year. Earlier this month, commercial banks raised their prime rate - for loans to their most creditworthy customers - from 7.5 percent to 8 percent. And, on Friday, the Veterans Administration increased the rate on VA mortgage loans from 9.5 percent to 10 percent. Since these and other rates have been heading up on their own, the Fed's raising of the discount rate might not trigger a major new round of interest rate hikes. But it could send an important signal to financial markets that the Fed is serious about propping up the dollar, analysts suggested. Higher U.S. interest rates could lure more foreign investors into putting their money in U.S. financial investments, which in turn would help strengthen the dollar. Still, some economists suggest that the dollar, if not already in the dreaded free fall, is verging on one - and could drop another 15 percent to 20 percent before bottoming out. What would be the effect on consumers and the economy of a free fall of the dollar? With a cheaper dollar comes the threat of higher inflation, higher interest rates - and, if the cycle continues, a recession. American tourists already have felt the effect directly as the value of their dollars decline almost daily. The dollar's slide is also making it much more expensive for the Defense Department to maintain U.S. troops and installations overseas. Meanwhile, the United States is becoming one of the world's best tourist bargains - for the Japanese and Europeans. The weakening dollar is also making foreign goods more expensive - from Japanese automobiles to French cognac. Janet Norwood, director of the

AIDS fear rivals that of cancer

In the United States and Europe, AIDS has so far been largely confined to male homosexuals, hemophiliacs and intravenous drug users. In Africa, it is believed to be transmitted primarily through heterosexual contact. Respondents in the Media General-AP poll were asked if they knew anyone with AIDS, and 7 percent said they did. And although fear of the disease was high, and half the respondents said everyone or almost everyone was at risk, only 16 percent thought they were at risk themselves.

Recently, some laboratories have been inundated by people seeking blood tests for AIDS. In the Media General-AP poll, 17 percent of the respondents said they were thinking seriously about being tested themselves. But far more controversial are proposals to require blood tests for AIDS before people can hold certain jobs. Support for such required tests was high among respondents in the poll.

The 61 percent of poll respondents who supported such tests most wanted them to be required in the health and food service fields. In addition, 14 percent said anyone who works around people should be tested, and a percent said tests should be required of everyone who worked.

A positive blood test indicates the presence of AIDS antibodies, which means the person tested has been exposed to the AIDS virus. Not all the people who have been exposed will become ill. AIDS is most often transmitted through sexual contact. Other means include transfusions of tainted blood or blood products, and the sharing of contaminated hypodermic needles or syringes with drug abusers. AIDS can also be passed from mother to child at or before birth.

As of May 4, AIDS had been diagnosed in 25,219 people in the United States and claimed 20,383 lives, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The CDC estimates the disease will strike 370,000 people and kill 179,000 by the end of 1991. Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,304 adults across the country. The poll was based on all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,300 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 2 percentage points either way because of chance variations in the sample.

"There is dedication and camaraderie among the girls. To get up at 5:30 and practice in the cold, there has to be," Sack said last week.

The club practices six days a week, regardless of the weather. Members keep in shape by running and working out with weights.

Leonard, the club's captain, said he'd like the club upgraded to a university team. Last week club members approached John Toner, UConn athletic director, with the idea of making rowing a varsity sport.

Toner, who is leaving UConn, said last week that he has asked Leonard for a budget, and he has promised to pass the information to the new athletic director, who has not yet been named.

As a varsity team, the club could get credit for its season standings and be ranked with other colleges, Leonard said.

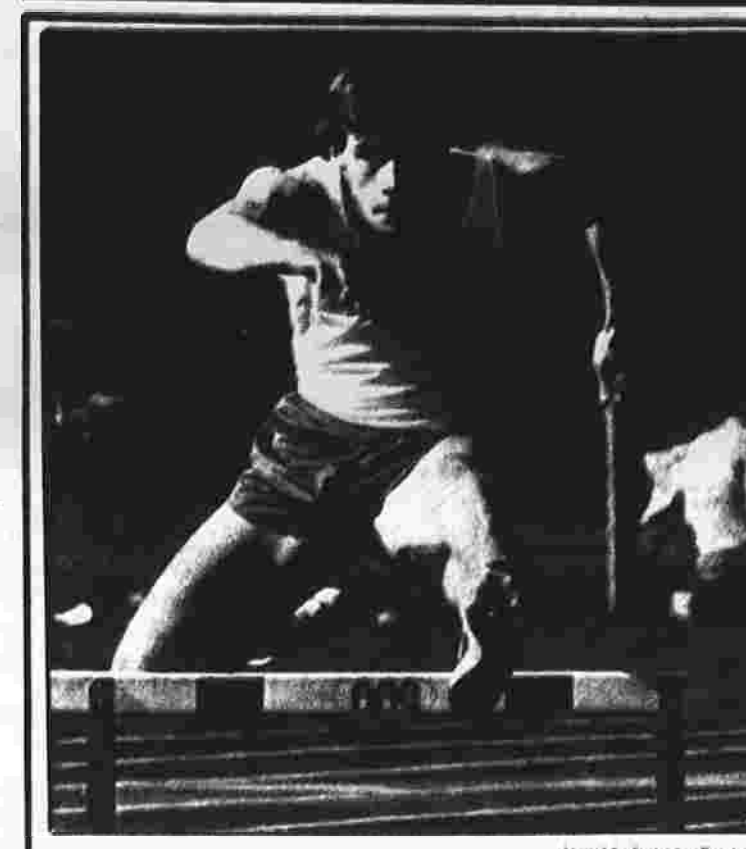

"I'd like to see it happen," said Leonard. "But either way, we plan to hold the first annual race to be called the Coventry Sprint next fall."

Manchester High's Brian Brophy added the Eastern Decathlon Championship to his list of accomplishments Sunday.

Brophy captures Eastern Decathlon

EMMITTSBURG, Md. — Another feather in the cap of Manchester High's Brian Brophy. The 18-year-old Brophy, headed for George Mason University in Fairfax, Va., on a full track scholarship, captured the Eastern Decathlon Championship Sunday with a total of 7,135 points, a total equaled by University of North Carolina senior Kevin McGorty. Brophy won on the basis of winning more of the 10 events.

Brophy's point total is the third highest ever for a high school decathlete in history and was just off the record for 18-year-olds. McGorty holds the record at 7,188 points. Craig Brigham still holds the national record at 7,589 and McGorty is in the No. 3 slot at 7,188, but that total compiled in 1983. "His performance may be better because he changed the (point) table two years ago," cited Manchester Coach George Sutor.

The junior Brophy set eight personal bests, and one Manchester school record en route to victory over the field of 18 decathletes at the state college and open competitors. Brophy was the only schoolboy. He had a personal best of 11.1 in the 100-meter dash, a personal best of 46-feet, 8-inches in the shot put, a school record jump of 22-feet, 8 1/2-inches in the long jump, a 6-foot effort in the high jump and a 69.2 effort in the 400-meter run, two-tenths off the school record. Brophy's first 100-meter dash was a 10.8 effort, trailing McGorty who had a 10.3 after the first day.

Brophy's opening effort on Sunday cost him maybe a shot at breaking Brigham's record. "He broke two of the hurdles," Sutor said of the opening event. Brophy had a 18.1 clogging, costing himself maybe 100 points or more. He came back, though, in the 400 with a 1:58-foot, 1-inch effort in the pole vault at 13-feet, 1 1/4-inches, and in the javelin at 166-feet, 3-inches, all personal bests. He finished up with a 4:46 in the 1500-meter run.

"He never ceases to amaze me," Sutor said. "Yes, his victory was surprising. I figure you're going to see much more mature athletes than Brian. But his performances were just outstanding."

Brophy will return to action for Manchester High on Tuesday against Enfield High at 10 decathletes in the state college and open competitors. Brophy was the only schoolboy. He had a personal best of 11.1 in the 100-meter dash, a personal best of 46-feet, 8-inches in the shot put, a school record jump of 22-feet, 8 1/2-inches in the long jump, a 6-foot effort in the high jump and a 69.2 effort in the 400-meter run, two-tenths off the school record. Celtics don't show fatigue as they outlast the Bucks

By Rick Goro
The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Were Larry Bird and the Boston Celtics tired? Nope, not even in double overtime, especially during the NBA playoffs when the defending NBA champion never tire of winning. "Fatigue is just no factor. I can play all day long," Bird said Sunday as the Celtics outlasted the Bucks for a 138-137 victory.

Boston has a commanding 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal playoffs, with Game 5 in Boston Wednesday. "It was long, no question. We had a lot of opportunities. I felt that the game was played just like extra point this afternoon," said Bird, who had 42 points. "They've got to beat us twice now in Boston Garden. To do that, they're going to have to pick their game up a notch."

The Bucks had seemingly done that Friday in the Milwaukee Arena, beating the Celtics 128-121 in overtime. But Sunday they couldn't do it before. It took an extra minute after reserve Darren Daye hit two free throws to give Boston a 138-137 lead.

BOSTON — In 1975, two rookie outfielders won regular jobs with the Boston Red Sox. Jim Rice and Fred Lynn became instant stars, leading the Red Sox to the American League pennant.

Now Rice and Fred Lynn are breaking in two other young outfielders with far less fanfare. And Mike Greenwell, 23, and Ellis Burks, 22, are proving gradually they belong with Boston's defending AL champions.

Greenwell hit in for the injured Rice, drove in four runs with a homer and a single and Burks beat out a bunt single and hit his first major league homer Sunday as the Red Sox whipped the California Angels 7-0 behind shortstop Bruce Hurst's five-hit pitching.

"I read an article the other day about the year Rice and Lynn came up to the majors. I feel comfortable comparing us with those two," Greenwell said. "I suppose, though, if you're going to get a little unfair to compare us with those two, I'd say we're better than them."

Burks hit his homer high into the screen to left to start the third inning. Greenwell capped the four-run inning with a three-run shot. His eighth home run in the stand-in right. Both home runs were off 42-year-old Don Sutton, winner of 312 major league games.

Burks, Greenwell hot commodities

NEW YORK — On a team with Don Mattingly, Dave Winfield, Ricky Henderson and Dave Righetti, the New York Yankees' best stars this year are Charles Hudson and Gary Ward.

A pair of off-season pickups, they continued to produce Sunday in leading the Yankees past the Minnesota Twins 5-1.

"I had a feeling there was a slot for me," Hudson said after improving his record to 5-0 with a six-hitter.

Ward, leading off with 28 runs batted in and a .441 average with runners in scoring position, drove in three runs with two singles.

The Yankees combined 11 hits by Ricky Henderson. The steals were the most in one game for the Yankees in at least 30 years, with further research incomplete.

"Anytime you go out and get some runs, you pitch with confidence," Hudson said.

Celtics don't show fatigue as they outlast the Bucks

By Rick Goro
The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Were Larry Bird and the Boston Celtics tired? Nope, not even in double overtime, especially during the NBA playoffs when the defending NBA champion never tire of winning. "Fatigue is just no factor. I can play all day long," Bird said Sunday as the Celtics outlasted the Bucks for a 138-137 victory.

Boston has a commanding 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinal playoffs, with Game 5 in Boston Wednesday. "It was long, no question. We had a lot of opportunities. I felt that the game was played just like extra point this afternoon," said Bird, who had 42 points. "They've got to beat us twice now in Boston Garden. To do that, they're going to have to pick their game up a notch."

The Bucks had seemingly done that Friday in the Milwaukee Arena, beating the Celtics 128-121 in overtime. But Sunday they couldn't do it before. It took an extra minute after reserve Darren Daye hit two free throws to give Boston a 138-137 lead.
