REAGAN ADMITS LAPSES

Wounds from scandal not mortal, he says

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, saying it is "awfully easy to be a little short of memory," said Friday he may have discussed a plan to pay people to rescue American hostages in Lebanon, but he added, "I've never thought of that as ransom."

In a separate comment, in an interview released Friday, Reagan, who once called former aide Oliver North a national hero, told magazine reporters the remark had nothing to do with North's role in the Iran-contra affair.

Meanwhile, on Capitol Hill, a member of the Senate Iran-contra committee told reporters that North's former secretary, Fawn Hall, had taken documents from the White House in her underwear — an allegation she angrily denied.

The once-secret hostage rescue program has been described in congressional testimony as an operation using federal drug agents to pay bribes and a $2 million ransom to win the hostages' release. But Reagan has repeatedly denied he went against U.S. policy of refusing to deal with terrorists.

On the Iran-contra affair in general, Reagan said Friday, "I haven't seen any evidence that I've been mortally wounded nor do the people seem to be unhappy about what we've been doing here."

He also asserted that "I've known what's going on" about efforts to support the contra rebels in Nicaragua. But he said he did not know about the reported diversion to the contras of money from the secret sale of U.S. weapons to Iran.

Reagan answered questions in a meeting with out-of-town reporters.

In the separate magazine interview, according to an account to be published in next week's U.S. News & World Report, Reagan spoke of comments he made shortly after North was fired last November.

"When I said to him ... that I still saw him as a national hero, that was in response to the fact that he has medals for valor and valorous deeds in the Vietnam War," Reagan said.

In other Iran-contra developments:

• Hall, former secretary to North, testified at the U.S. Courthouse for more than two hours before a special grand jury investigating the Iran-contra affair. Hall, who has told investigators she helped North destroy documents last November as Attorney General Edwin Meese III began his investigation of White House involvement in the affair, declined to comment on the closed-door proceedings.

• On Capitol Hill, Sen. Howell Heflin, a member of the Senate Iran-contra investigative committee, suggested Hall would testify at hearings later that she had carried documents out of the White House in her underwear. "She had stuffed documents in her brassiere and other clothes as she left," said Heflin, D-Ala. "I think that's been in the papers, hasn't it?"

Hall said through a spokesman, "I was shocked to hear what Sen. Heflin said about me smuggling documents out in my bra. It is untrue; it is outrageous that he would say that, and it is certainly sexist."

• Taiwan said it solicited $2 million from businessmen to help the Nicaraguan contra rebels and maintain "good cooperation ties" with the United States. The announcement came after Gaston Sigur, assistant secretary of state for Asian affairs, told the Iran-contra committees on Thursday he had helped arrange aid from an Asian country he did not name.

Immigrants may face AIDS tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Each of the 500,000 or so immigrants who apply for permanent residence in the United States each year would be tested for the AIDS virus under a Public Health Service recommendation made public Friday.

Such a requirement, if adopted, would not apply to tourists or visitors, nor be used to deny a temporary visa to a foreign citizen seeking treatment for AIDS.

Nonetheless, the recommendation goes beyond previous government proposals on how to fit AIDS into existing immigration law that cites infection with a "dangerous contagious disease" as grounds for denying permanent status.

A proposal considered in 1986, but never put in place, would have barred immigrants with AIDS but did not include a definition of the disease.

Public Health Service spokesman Jim Brown said agency officials now feel they have no choice but to certify infection with the AIDS virus as a contagious disease.

"We believe this is necessary because any person infected ... is assumed to be capable of transmitting the virus," said a memo from Robert E. Windom, assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health and Human Services, to HHS Secretary Otis R. Bowen.

U.S. food inspector warns panel: 'Eat at your own risk'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal meat and poultry inspector testified Friday that despite Agriculture Department assurances of progress, "the flies have been getting messier, the roaches fatter and the rats bolder" at food processing plants.

Verdie Gee, a Food Safety and Inspection Service inspector from Long Beach, Calif., told senators that the government label on beef, pork and poultry products should be changed from "USDA Inspected and Approved" to read "Eat At Your Own Risk."

Complaining of poor training of inspectors, "petty corruption" among department supervisors and harassment of conscientious plant inspectors and veterinarians, Gee said that "as long as the mismanagement continues, then filthy or diseased products will keep being approved for consumers to eat."

Gee testified before a Senate Governmental Affairs subcommittee three days after the National Academy of Sciences issued a study report saying that Americans suffer several million cases of food poisoning annually because federal inspectors fail to detect contamination by salmonella and other bacterial micro-organisms at poultry processing plants.

agreed with the academy's conclusion that the government's system of visual and manual inspections "does very little to protect the public against microbial hazards in broiler chickens" because bacterial and chemical contamination cannot be seen.

Houston said he favors a change in the law to give poultry processors, rather than federal inspectors, primary responsibility for examining all of the 4 billion chickens processed annually for such "aesthetic defects" as bruises and broken wings, which have nothing to do with public health.

That would free the 7,000 FSIS inspectors across the country to make more intensive examinations of poultry selected at random from the processing line for signs of disease or contamination.

Asked by Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., whether it would help to have enough money to hire 50,000 inspectors, Houston replied, "No. We've got to be able to inspect smarter than we are now, with greater use of science and technology."

Houston said, however, that despite intensive research, the technology for instantly detecting salmonella or other bacterial micro-organisms or chemical residues on poultry is years away.

He said sanitation breakdowns at meat and poultry plants continue to occur, and that tainted products are routinely approved as safe by other inspectors and plant managers.

"In the last year the flies have been getting messier, the roaches fatter and the rats bolder," Gee said.

"There are still holes in the roofs at some plants, so that when it rains the rainwater falls in and soaks the products, which still go out to the public," he said.

Because of poor training, Gee said, new government inspectors routinely overlook symptoms of measles, tuberculosis, cancer, pneumonia, arthritis, jaundice, drug lesions and parasites in beef carcasses — some of them from animals that are dead before they reach the slaughterhouse.

Head of MCC receives a feisty farewell

By George Layne
Herald Reporter

VERNON — To hear friends, colleagues and Manchester officials tell it, Manchester Community College President William E. Vincent is indecisive, overweight, a teller of bad jokes and not too bright.

"I've never heard anyone question his intelligence. In fact, no one has even mentioned it," said Andrew McKirby, executive director of regional community colleges in the state.

Judging from these and similar comments made at a roast of Vincent at The Colony restaurant Friday, you might think the school was glad its leader for the past seven years was leaving. But when the jokes stopped, about 100 people wished Vincent well and said they would miss him.

Vincent, 50, is scheduled to become president of Bucks County Community College in Newton, Pa., on July 1.

During his tenure at MCC — the state's largest community college with 7,000 students and 200 faculty and staff members — the college relocated to a new campus, and the morale of the school was turned around, officials have said.

"He's dumping us to run off to where of all places, Pennsylvania. Why not the Aleutian Islands," said Jack Gannon, associate dean of continuing education.

Gannon joked that Vincent, who visited China last year, applied some things he learned in that country to his job as MCC's president.

"Do you know what it's like to start every management meeting with the whack of a gong?" Gannon said.

"I'm not sure what we're going to do after Bill Vincent, but we're going to try," said McKirby. "Some even regard him as a legend in his own mind."

Part of his success at MCC was due to his political nature, McKirby said. "He realizes there are two sides to an issue, and he always takes both of them."

Jackson Foley, director of employee relations at MCC, said that during his two years on the labor negotiating panel, Vincent won a number of awards. These included: worst pun made at the bargaining table, longest joke, worst joke and the most obscure main story.

Vincent was presented with a number of gifts during the roast, including The Order of the Red Light medal from a college trip through the red light district in the combat zone of Amsterdam, Holland.

A poster-size photo of Vincent at his desk was also unveiled. It was dubbed "Surrogate Bill," and said to be light weight ("Something the real Bill has never been"), attentive, alert looking and "just as responsible as the real Bill under most situations."

Charles Pless, MCC's director of development, said that Vincent made most of his important decisions in the lavatory adjoining his office. When asked to make an important decision, he'd say "Let me sit on it."

He'd leave, there would be a flush, and he'd come out saying "OK, this is what we'll do," Pless said. Upon investigation, Pless said it was discovered that inside the lavatory was a two-headed coin, and a copy of "The Do's and Don'ts of Being President," written by a former MCC president.

Among others who spoke at the roast was Town Manager Robert B. Weiss.

Vincent announced in December he was leaving MCC. At the time, he said there is less state regulation in Pennsylvania, allowing more creativity than in Connecticut.

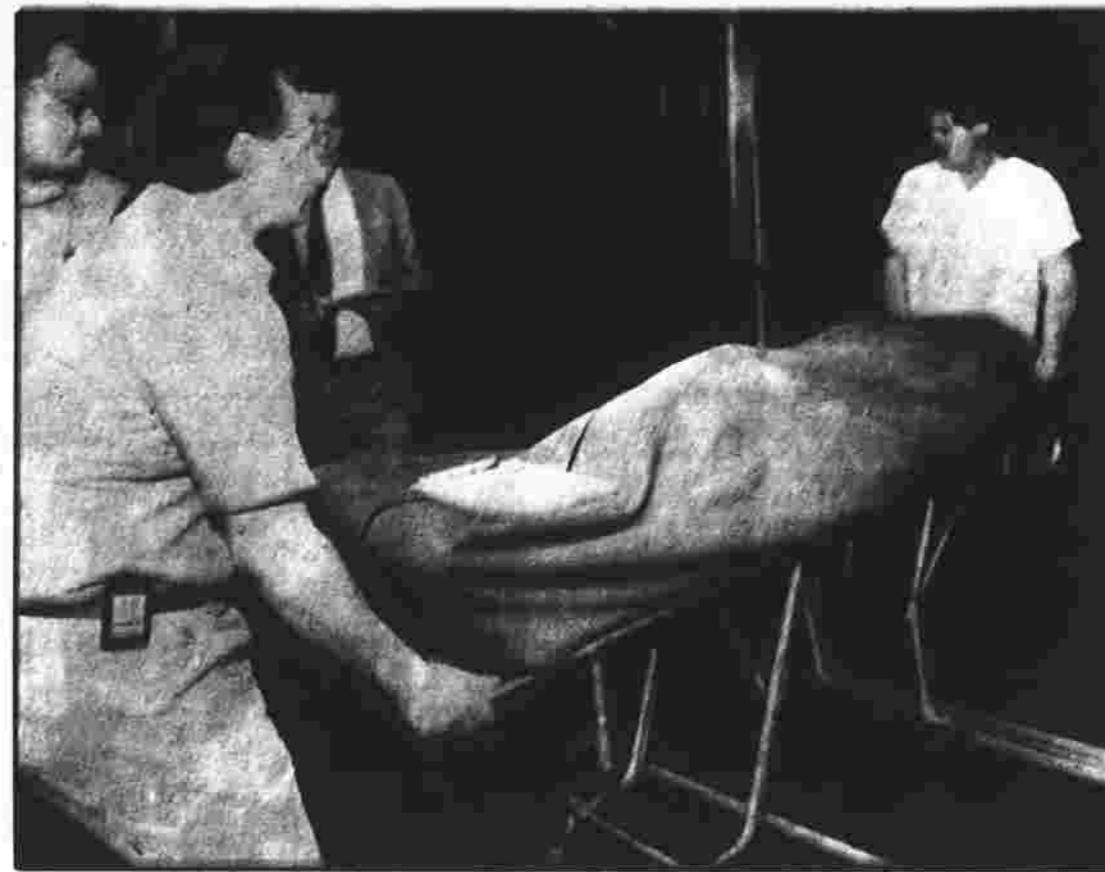

He also noted that he has previously taught in that state, and that the Bucks County college is larger.

The body of Stanley William Peregoy is wheeled from FBI headquarters and killed while holding five agents hostage. Portland, Ore., Friday after he was shot.

Man killed after he takes five FBI agents hostage in Oregon

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — An armed man entered FBI headquarters here Friday and took five agents hostage before being shot to death by other agents, officials said.

Stanley William Peregoy, 41, took one agent hostage at gunpoint outside the headquarters about 8:30 a.m., then held four other agents inside the office, the FBI said.

Charles Mathews, assistant special agent in charge of the Portland FBI office, said Peregoy was shot about 45 minutes later by two agents who were not among the hostages.

The two agents entered the room when Peregoy "displayed immediate life threatening actions directed at a specific agent," Mathews said. He would not describe the life-threatening action or how the agents knew when to enter the room.

The agents each fired one shot, Mathews said, one with a shotgun and one with a handgun. Peregoy, who did not fire his gun, was about 15 feet from the agents who killed him.

A loaded ammunition clip, another 50 rounds of ammunition and a note were found on Peregoy's body, Mathews said. The note "to a certain degree explains his actions here, it would be classified as a last will," Mathews said, but refused to elaborate.

Mathews said Peregoy had a history of contact with law enforcement agencies, including a visit to the FBI office about five years ago. Those previous contacts involved "irrational" behavior, he said.

Mathews said the gunman took the hostages into a squad room and stayed in one corner where he could observe all of the captives.

"He refused to negotiate," Mathews said. "I called to the squad area and managed to get one of the agents on the line. I had a hostage negotiator prepared to start negotiating."

"He refused to talk on the phone at any time with an agent or with anyone."

The first agent was taken hostage as he inserted a key to enter the office, Mathews said. Asked why the other agents were in a position to be taken hostage, Mathews said, "They were surprised initially when he came in behind them and there was nothing they could do."

Wounds not mortal, Reagan says

Johnathan S. Miller, formerly director of the White House office of administration, said in an interview that he had done nothing wrong but quit his job Thursday to keep from being a burden on Reagan. Miller was named by witness Robert Owen as a helper in cashing traveler's checks from North's office safe for donation to contra leaders.

Sen. Paul S. Trible Jr., R-Va., said Texas billionaire H. Ross Perot provided North with $300,000 in two cash installments to help pay for an operation using U.S. narcotics agents to find American hostages in hopes of rescuing them. Trible said in an interview that CIA agents attended some early meetings to discuss the project but that it was essentially run by drug agents acting under North's direction in 1985 and 1986.

Retired Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord, the key Iran-contra figure who told Congress his personal finances were precarious, said in an interview that he wants to buy 10,000 acres of timberland in Washington state — but not with his own money. The former Air Force officer, whose testimony last week left some Iran-contra committee members debating whether he was a profiteer or a patriot, said the only way he would get involved would be "the way all entrepreneurs do, with somebody else's money."

As for the hostages, Robert McFarlane, the president's former national security adviser, testified Thursday he had conferred with Reagan about a bribe-and-ransom program to win the Americans' release.

He said that "the legalities and so forth were handled by the attorney general and it was a matter of consensus between the attorney general, the president, myself, and I talked to the president about it."

State gets plans for Cheney Hall

By Alex Girelli
Associate Editor

Plans for preliminary work on the interior of Cheney Hall were delivered on Friday to the State Historical Commission for review, said Donald Kuehl, vice chairman of the Cheney Hall Foundation.

The work, to be done under a $34,500 grant from the state commission, is mostly demolition in preparation for renovations to be made later.

The work involves removing the stage, which will be rebuilt with larger, flat surfaces. It also includes installing the main electrical service box.

Once the state commission reviews the plans, then the building committee of the Cheney Hall Foundation will study them and put the work out to bid. Bids can be accepted and the contractor chosen before the State Historical Commission gives its final approval, but the work cannot start before then.

Kuehl said the architect, Malmfeld Associates of Glastonbury, has estimated that the work can be done within three months from the time it starts.

Exterior renovation of the historic hall, considered a key attraction in the Cheney Historic District, is almost completed.

The need to complete the outside work and begin on the inside has prompted the Cheney Hall Foundation to rule out use of the site for the strawberry festival June 20. The event is part of a series of Cheney district events that day.

Nearby sites are being considered.

The historic hall, considered a key attraction in the district where former textile mills are being converted to apartments, is being renovated into a center for performances and other cultural and social events.

At its last meeting, the Cheney Hall Foundation members discussed progress in its effort to have postcards of Manchester scenes printed and sold as one means of raising more money for the renovation.

Plans call for having 10 scenes printed in the first issue and saving other photos for later issues if sales prove successful.

A tentative schedule has been worked out for rents when the hall is opened under the management of the Little Theatre of Manchester, but the schedule has not yet been worked out.

Requests to use the hall have been received, but no commitments have been made.

Crime theories too novel for Louis L'Amour's wife

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Theories that Western author Louis L'Amour's novels may have inspired a man to harm two women — one of them a Connecticut native — in Washington state are "absolutely ridiculous," the author's wife says.

"Louis' characters are law-abiding citizens who respect women," Kathy L'Amour said in a telephone interview from the L'Amours' Durango home. Authorities in Bellingham and Pierce County, Wash., are looking for Darren O'Neill, 27, in connection with the disappearances of the two women.

O'Neill also is wanted in El Paso County for jumping bail after his arrest on a sexual-assault charge. Investigators who searched O'Neill's apartment in the Edgewood area near Tacoma, Wash., said they found numerous L'Amour novels. Authorities also say O'Neill used aliases that may be names of L'Amour characters.

Lt. Dave Duffy of the Bellingham police said the FBI would contact Bantam Books, L'Amour's publisher, for more information.

Stuart Applebaum, vice president of Bantam, said that if there is any connection between L'Amour books and the alleged crimes, "It's a rather tragic misreading of Louis L'Amour's novels."

"He certainly got the L'Amour frontier ethos very twisted. If L'Amour characters violate the law, they pay a debt to society."

Applebaum said L'Amour "hopes this fellow will turn himself in to police."

One of the missing women, Robin Smith, 22, originally from Meriden, Conn., was last seen in O'Neill's apartment March 22, authorities said.

The Bellingham missing woman, Wendy Aughe, 29, disappeared April 24. Authorities said O'Neill's fingerprints were found in the woman's car.

Bellingham detectives came to Colorado Springs last week to question O'Neill's relatives.

Weinberg re-election campaign recruits nationally known talent

By George Lovins
Herald Reporter

Democratic Mayoy Barbara B. Weinberg Friday brought a nationally known political organizer to Manchester to help her re-election campaign.

Chris Brown, of Santa Fe, N.M., has managed three-straight successful Democratic primaries in New Hampshire. Two of those were for virtually unknown candidates — Jimmy Carter in 1976, and Gary Hart in 1984.

But when asked if he has ever given advice to Weinberg, he said "no."

"She seems to be doing all right on her own," he said. Nevertheless, a fund-raiser held by Weinberg at the Manchester Country Club, with Brown as the attraction, pulled in about $2,000 for her campaign for a fifth two-year term on the town Board of Directors.

Weinberg has been mayor since 1983, when she first became the top vote-getter among board candidates. She is the first incumbent to declare for re-election this year.

She first met Brown in 1978. Weinberg's husband, Stanley, had met Brown in Boston during a meeting of supporters of Jimmy Carter, and he asked Brown to come speak in Connecticut.

Both Weinbergs were active in Carter's Connecticut campaign, and Brown stayed at their Pitkin Street home during the effort. Their relationship continued over the years, especially during Carter's unsuccessful re-election effort in 1980.

This time around, Brown is backing another little-known Democratic presidential candidate — Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri.

"I have a fear of front-runners," joked Brown, whose low-key demeanor suits his behind-the-scenes job as an organizer.

He said he does not purposely choose candidates who are less well-known. "I try to look for someone I think, by my reckoning, is the best candidate," said the 38-year-old Brown.

For the 1988 race, he said his choice had to be Gary Hart, whose campaign he helped in 1984. Joseph Biden of Delaware or Gephardt. Brown almost went to work for Hart, but he said Gephardt's record made him a better candidate.

The Missouri representative was not an outsider in Congress like Hart had been as a senator. Brown said, Gephardt would be able to work well with Congress, he said. This will be important following the decline in President Reagan's effectiveness in getting legislation passed because of the Iran-contra scandal. Brown said.

He said the American public is looking for someone who is not only honest, but someone who is effective. He said Gephardt can walk the fine line between being in firm control of the details, but also capable of directing the country toward broader goals.

As for the controversy over Hart's relationship with Miami actress Donna Rice, which forced Hart out of the race last week. Brown said it was in part brought on by Hart himself. He noted that Hart had challenged the press to tail him to see if he was a womanizer.

How does an organizer get people interested in a candidate a year before an election? Brown said the key is personal contact. He likes to have his candidate come into a state to meet as many people as possible.

From there, local party activists are recruited in each town. Brown said that while campaign staffs of less-well-known candidates mean there are fewer workers and more work, the staff is usually more effective because workers are more committed.

In New Hampshire, Brown said Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis is the front-runner now. He said Gephardt tied for second with two other candidates — Bruce Babbitt of Arizona and Biden.

Only the top three finishers will have a chance at the nomination, Brown said. If Gephardt wins in the Iowa caucuses before New Hampshire, and comes in second in New Hampshire, he will be the front-runner, he said. A Dukakis victory would be discounted because of his regional appeal.

If this scenario were to play out, "That would be quite adequate," Brown said.

Rita Hayworth, Hollywood's "Love Goddess," holds "The Valentino Prize" in Rome in 1978. Hayworth died Thursday night at the age of 68.

'Love Goddess' dies at 68

NEW YORK (AP) — Rita Hayworth, the red-haired dancer who became Hollywood's "Love Goddess" of the 1940s, captivating audiences with sultry movie roles and a stormy personal life that included a marriage to a prince, has died. She was 68.

The actress, who suffered for years from Alzheimer's disease, an incurable brain disorder sometimes described as premature senility, died Thursday night at the home of her daughter, Princess Yasmin Aga Khan, said Michelle Weinstein, spokeswoman for the princess.

Weinstein refused to give further details immediately.

A court had put Hayworth in her daughter's care in 1981 as disease robbed her of memory, speech, personality and ability to function. For several years in the 1970s, she had been misdiagnosed as an alcoholic.

Before her illness, Hayworth's provocative beauty burned itself into movie legend. Her picture was pasted on the first atom bomb. A photo of her kneeling on a bed in a negligee was one of the most famous pin-up shots of World War II, surpassed only by Betty Grable's leggy swimsuit pose.

On screen, she played temptresses "Gilda," "Miss Sadie Thompson" and "Salome." Offscreen, she wed Orson Welles, then became a princess in a wide-brimmed straw hat at her fairy-tale marriage to Aly Khan in a French village in 1949.

In all, she wed five times.

"Every man I knew had fallen in love with Gilda and wakened with me," she once said. Hayworth was born Margarita Canino in Brooklyn on Oct. 17, 1918. Her father, Eduardo, was a professional dancer who began training her at age 3 and put her on the stage with him at 6. Canino moved the family to Los Angeles and opened a dance studio when she was 9.

"I was barely 12 when my father closed the school and prepared a night-club act for him and me," she once recalled. "Our first engagement was in Tijuana, Mexico. We did four shows every day, the first at noon, the last after midnight."

She began working in movies at 16, but life as Rita Hayworth didn't begin until a few years later when she was signed by Harry Cohn, head of Columbia Studios.

"Harry Cohn made my black hair red and gave me my Irish mother's maiden name," she said.

Collaborating with her father's training, she danced with Fred Astaire in "You Were Never Lovelier" and with Gene Kelly in "Cover Girl." She co-starred with Frank Sinatra in "Pal Joey" and with Cary Grant in "Only Angels Have Wings."

Her private life soon rivaled her on-screen glamour roles. A marriage at age 17 to oilman Ed Judson ended early in 1943 and that September she married Welles, Hollywood's "boy genius" director.

Their union resulted in a daughter, Rebecca Welles, and a movie, "The Lady From Shanghai," in which they both starred and Welles directed.

The marriage ended after five stormy years. Soon afterward, on a trip to the south of France, Hayworth was introduced to Aly Khan, the playboy son of the spiritual leader of the Ismaili Muslims.

Blood test frees suspect in '73 murder

NEW HAVEN (AP) — A blood test caused the state to drop a murder charge on Friday against a man who was accused in the July 16, 1973 stabbing death of a woman in a city garage stairwell.

"This simply confirms what I have been saying for three years, that they had arrested an innocent man," said Hugh F. Keefe, the defense attorney for Anthony Golino.

New Haven police arrested Golino, 36, on July 3, 1984 — almost 11 years after the stabbing. He was charged in the murder of Concetta "Penny" Serru, 31, who died of a single stab wound to the chest while on the 10th-level stairwell of the Temple Street Garage. Golino, of New Haven, has been free on a $150,000 bond and is working as an oil company dispatcher.

Reached at Keefe's office, Golino declined comment. The prosecutor in the case, Mary Galvin, said she received on Friday results of a test that typed Golino's blood. The results ruled Golino out as the murderer, she said.

Golino was found to have type A blood, which did not match two types of blood found at the murder scene, Galvin and Keefe said. Golino had previously told authorities that he believed he had type O blood, which would have matched the evidence, they said.

The blood test was taken as a result of a pre-trial motion over defense objections, Galvin said.

Officers remembered

Members of the family of slain Milford police officer Daniel Scott Wasson attend the first Police Memorial Day ceremonies in Meriden Friday to honor

The proposed new route of the pipeline is shown by a dotted line. A spur route to Farmington may be eliminated.

Pipeline route changed

New path would be less extensive

HARTFORD (AP) — Backers of the proposed Iroquois natural gas pipeline announced an alternate route for the pipeline Friday that would cut through less of Connecticut than previously proposed.

The pipeline has provoked protest from Connecticut residents, who say that not only has the need for the gas not been demonstrated, but that the pipeline's construction could pose serious environmental threats.

Gov. William A. O'Neill and other political leaders are strongly opposed to the project. A spokesman for the governor said O'Neill would review the new proposal, but was still waiting to be convinced that the gas was needed.

The pipeline, proposed by a consortium of seven utility companies, would send natural gas from Canada through upstate New York, Connecticut, across Long Island Sound to a terminal in Suffolk County, on Long Island.

The new proposal is 14 miles shorter through Connecticut and eliminates six towns that were on the originally proposed route. The difference would be made up by going through more of Dutchess County, New York.

In a statement issued by the three companies from Connecticut involved in the project, officials said the change was made possible by the addition of a significant new customer, Central Hudson Gas and Electric Corp. in New York.

In addition, the consortium said it may be possible to eliminate the need for a spur pipeline to the Hartford suburb of Farmington. Officials said existing pipelines may be used to serve the central Connecticut area.

Iroquois also proposed that the federal Economic Regulatory Administration and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission conduct hearings in Connecticut on the pipeline to gather evidence on its need.

Officials also said that if the required permits are obtained, the pipeline could be in service by November 1989.

Under the new proposal, the pipeline would enter Connecticut in Sherman and then go south through New Milford, Brookfield, Newtown, Monroe, Shelton, Stratford and Milford.

Eliminated under the new proposal are the towns of Salisbury, Kent, Roxbury, Oxford, Sharon, Warren, Woodbury, Cornwall, Washington and Southbury.

U.S. Rep. Nancy L. Johnson, R-8th District, hailed the move to re-work the project.

"It shows that the active opposition of citizens and the strong partnerships that were forged to fight this battle, are clearly beginning to bear fruit," the congresswoman said.

McKinney's seat will be up for grabs Aug. 18

HARTFORD (AP) — Gov. William A. O'Neill on Friday set Aug. 18 as the date for a special election to fill the congressional seat of Republican U.S. Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, who died last week.

McKinney, a Republican who represented the district for nine terms, died at age 36 from a bacterial infection brought on by AIDS.

The Republican and Democratic state chairmen both predicted a lively campaign. "With a level playing field, with no popular incumbent, I think the Democrats have an excellent chance," said Democratic Chairman John F. Dronney Jr.

He said he knew of at least seven Democrats considering jumping into the race.

Republican state Chairman Robert S. Polimer said he had heard the names of many Republicans interested and said the GOP had an excellent chance of retaining the seat.

The governor said Aug. 18 was the earliest date that election could be held, under state law, for the state's 4th District seat.

"I believe the people of the fourth congressional district deserve representation and this is as fast as we can move to select a successor to my friend, Stewart B. McKinney," the governor said.

The process will include nominating conventions about June 30 and, if necessary, a primary election on July 21.

Polimer, who earlier had urged the governor to set the election as quickly as possible, said Friday he wished O'Neill had set it for after Labor Day.

"I think it makes it more difficult for voters to get out and vote during the vacation season," Polimer said.

Miami cops' confessions crack open PD drug ring

MIAMI (AP) — Confessions by two Miami officers have finally cracked open a police ring that allegedly killed four drug dealers and terrorized others, stole their cocaine and plotted to murder two federal witnesses, officials said Friday.

The FBI and local law enforcement agencies have been investigating the police department for almost two years and say as many as 15 officers may be directly involved in a ring linked to $15 million in drug trafficking as well as the four deaths.

"There have been significant developments in the case and we believe it's the beginning of an ongoing effort to root out corruption in law enforcement," FBI spokesman Paul Miller said Friday.

The first trial against seven alleged members of the ring, all former officers, ended in a mistrial in January. Within the past 10 days four of those seven have been arrested on new charges of allegedly plotting to kill the two star witnesses at their trial, authorities

Lawyers want Barbie forced to courtroom

LYON, France (AP) — Lawyers for alleged victims of Klaus Barbie urged in vain Friday that he be brought to court by force. But the Nazi who became known as the "Butcher of Lyon" says he was kidnapped from Bolivia and refuses to attend his war crimes trial.

"We should not let the initiative of whether or not Barbie is in the defendant's box be left to Barbie," said Charles Kormann, who represents the International League against Racism and Anti-Semitism.

Under French law, a defendant may refuse to attend his trial but the presiding judge can force him to be present.

Barbie, who earned his nickname as Lyon's Gestapo chief in 1942-1944, declared Wednesday that he would no longer attend court sessions. He claimed he was kidnapped in 1963 from Bolivia, where he lived for more than 30 years, and brought to France illegally.

The Bolivian government says the expulsion was legal.

Demands for Barbie's appearance were voiced just before the presiding judge, Andre Cerdini, began reading the evidence prepared by the investigating magistrate and Barbie's responses to interrogation.

A defendant attending his own trial would be questioned about the evidence in open court.

Victims are allowed to participate in French criminal cases as civil parties. About 150 individuals and organizations are represented at the Barbie trial by 43 lawyers.

Among major questions to be decided is whether Barbie was directly responsible for the Gestapo unit in charge of rounding up Jews in Lyon for deportation to Nazi death camps.

Judge Cerdini said Barbie "made a certain number of declarations, but I must say these declarations were not always the same."

Several lawyers for civil parties asked him to invoke the law requiring Barbie's presence, which has not been used for years. Judicial officials said it was employed last at the treason trial of Pierre Laval, premier of the collaborationist Vichy government in World War II.

"This trial must be a trial of truth, the whole truth," Kormann stated, which he said includes "the truth of confrontation, the exchange of looks, the truth of Barbie confronted by his victims."

"There is a truth that is different from a simple reading of documents," he said. "There is an emotional truth, a human truth, to see in that look if the torturer manages to maintain his attitude of cynicism."

Other lawyers, including prosecutor Pierre Truche, opposed forcing Barbie to appear.

Town rallies behind convictions

PETROLIA, Calif. (AP) — The 400 residents of this Northern California village are preparing a hearty welcome home for Dan Haywood, good Samaritan, community stalwart and ex-convict accused of a 1970 murder.

Haywood, Petrolia's 45-year-old assistant fire chief, was freed Thursday from Monterey County jail on $45,000 bail, met by villagers' donations and property pledges. He was ordered to return next month to face charges in the 17-year-old killing.

Lloyd Wear, serving time in a Florida prison for narcotics convictions, is alleged to have told authorities last year that he once heard Haywood and another man talking about the murder of Richard Castro at a remote site near Carmel Valley.

Authorities in Monterey County, acting on Wear's statements, charged Haywood and fugitive Elton Winchester with Castro's murder.

Haywood, who was on parole and had 35 years of crime behind him, drifted into Petrolia in 1979 and set about gaining the trust of the isolated coastal community 200 miles north of San Francisco.

U.S. wants to sell Saudi planes

WASHINGTON — In a move certain to touch off heated debate, the White House will notify Congress next week that it intends to sell a half-billion dollars' worth of F-15 fighter planes to Saudi Arabia, Reagan administration and congressional sources said Friday.

Congress, which has the authority to veto the purchase, is likely to take a close look at the plan in light of reports that the Saudis secretly provided financial help to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Although the Saudis have denied it, some members of the congressional committees investigating the Iran-Contra affair have put Saudi contributions to the Contras at $32.5 million in 1984 and 1985.

Lonetree faces court martial

WASHINGTON — Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree, the Marine embassy guard whose arrest last December touched off a spying scandal, must be court-martialed on espionage charges, a general ruled Friday.

But Lt. Gen. Frank E. Petersen Jr., the commanding general of the Quantico, Va., Marine Base, also ruled that charges alleging Lonetree allowed Soviet agents inside the U.S. Embassy in Moscow had to be dropped.

Petersen ruled those specific allegations were based on evidence that "consists principally of hearsay which is not admissible at trial."

The general's decision was disclosed in a brief statement released at the Pentagon just four days after Lonetree's pre-trial hearings concluded.

Petersen agreed in his ruling to reduce the number of charges against Lonetree. And he also ordered the court-martial to proceed on a "non-capital" basis, meaning the maximum penalty of death will not be sought.

U.S. disputes Soviet summit claim

WASHINGTON — The State Department today said Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev had not responded to President Reagan's invitation to hold a summit meeting here this year.

Spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley disagreed with a report in Bild, a mass-circulation West German newspaper, that the Kremlin had informed U.S. officials that Gorbachev was willing to travel to the United States for a two-day visit.

"We have seen that report," she said. "The president and the general secretary agreed at their Geneva meeting in 1985 that the general secretary would visit the United States for a summit."

"The president's invitation still stands. A 1987 summit has not been agreed to."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz delivered a letter from Reagan renewing the invitation while holding talks with Gorbachev last month in Moscow.

Rocket carries secret cargo

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — An Atlas rocket was launched Friday carrying a classified cargo which space policy experts say probably is a cluster of Navy ocean surveillance satellites.

The Air Force said the launch took place at 8:45 a.m. from Space Launch Complex 3 of the Western Space and Missile Center, but declined to identify the cargo.

"All I know is it's a classified payload," Air Force Sgt. Virgil Short said.

"There's probably a 95 percent chance that it's a White Cloud Navy electronic intelligence satellite (cluster)," said John Pike, space policy specialist for the private Federation of American Scientists in Washington D.C. "I'd heard that it was going to happen."

Riots continue in South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea — Students hurled rocks and firebombs at riot police Friday at dozens of universities as violent protests against the government of President Chun Doo-hwan continued for a fifth straight day.

Disident leaders, meanwhile, vowed to step up the protests this weekend to mark the anniversary Monday of the 1980 suppression by the armed forces of an uprising in the southern city of Kwangju, in which nearly 200 people died by official count.

Police used armored cars, tear gas and baton charges to break up demonstrations at 34 universities and colleges around the country. Columns of students singing revolutionary songs tried to march off campuses as waiting riot police units repeatedly drove them back.

Double murderer goes to chair

JACKSON, Ga. (AP) — Joseph Mulligan, who was convicted of killing a witness to a murder he committed for the insurance money, was put to death Friday evening in Georgia's electric chair.

Mulligan died at 7:25 p.m. EDT, said John Siler, a spokesman for the Department of Corrections.

Before he died, Mulligan visited with his father, his brother, a cousin and his attorneys at the state prison.

Earlier Friday, the Supreme Court, by a 7-2 vote, turned down an emergency request aimed at postponing Mulligan's execution and a formal appeal challenging his conviction and death sentence.

Only Justices William J. Brennan and Thurgood Marshall, who opposed capital punishment under all circumstances, voted to spare Mulligan's life.

Mulligan, 35, was sentenced to die for killing Marion Jones Miller in Columbus on Easter morning in 1974. A death sentence for the slaying the same day of Army Capt. Patrick Doe, Mulligan's brother-in-law, was overturned by state courts.

Big banks boost prime to 8 1/4%

NEW YORK (AP) — Major banks raised their prime lending rate by a quarter percentage point Friday to 8 1/4 percent, the highest level in 16 months and second time in two weeks they have increased the key interest rate.

The move reflected a broader rise in interest rates nationwide that is pushing up the cost of borrowing on loans ranging from credit card purchases to mortgages.

Chase Manhattan Bank in New York was the first to announce the increase in the prime, a benchmark interest rate used to set rates on a range of other loans. Other banks quickly matched Chase's move.

The prime is a benchmark used to set interest on a range of corporate and consumer credit. In recent years, the rate has taken on greater significance for consumers because it is used to set interest on variable rate credit cards, home equity loans and other consumer debt.

"It tends to be follow the leader type thing," said Philip Braverman, an economist at Irving Securities Inc. in New York. "Interest rates have moved up across the entire spectrum. The rise in the prime is part of that phenomenon."

Braverman and other economists attributed rising interest rates largely to the eroding value of the dollar, which has aroused investor anxiety that inflation will accelerate.

Inflation fears were underscored Friday by a Labor Department report that showed wholesale prices increased at an annual rate of 8.9 percent last month, propelled higher by steep increases in prices for meats, automobiles and energy.

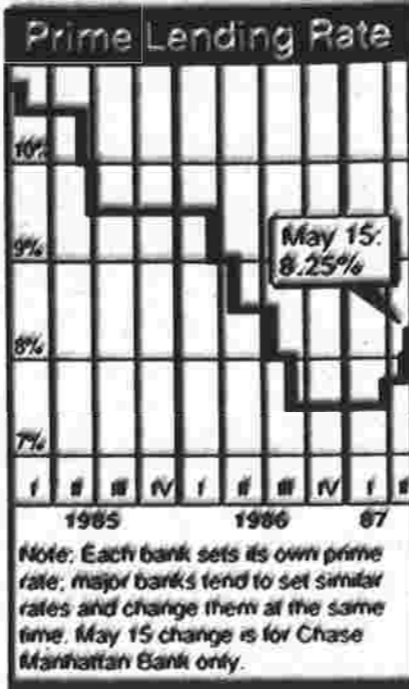

That news pushed bond prices down sharply, with the Treasury's bellwether 30-year bond falling nearly 20 for each $1,000 in face value.

The dollar's depreciation also has incited worries that the foreign appetite for U.S. Treasury bonds will wane, forcing dealers to raise interest rates on the bonds and make returns on them more attractive.

The Federal Reserve recently disclosed it had slightly tightened credit in order to push rates higher to support the dollar.

Worries about demand for Treasury bonds have been aggravated by the prospect that the government will have to sell billions of dollars in new bonds soon to finance the burgeoning federal deficit. The additional bonds could create a glut in the market, causing a further rise in interest rates to attract buyers.

The prime rate increase announced Friday pushed the rate to its highest level since July 1986.

Inflation could 'get out of hand,' economist says

WASHINGTON (AP) — With meat, autos and energy leading the way, wholesale prices rose at an annual rate of 8.9 percent in April, while industrial production fell for the second consecutive month, the government said Friday, delivering what economists called a severe one-two punch to the economy.

The 0.7 percent jump in wholesale prices over March was the biggest one-month jump since October 1985 and the 0.4 percent decline in industrial production was the sharpest monthly drop in 13 months.

"The combination of the figures presents a very negative picture of the prospects for the economy," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Bros., a New York investment house. "We have an inflation problem that is threatening to get out of hand."

Donald Strassheim, chief economist for Merrill Lynch, agreed that both the Labor Department's report on wholesale prices and the Federal Reserve's new figures on industrial production "don't make very good reading."

Meanwhile, some of the nation's largest banks raised their prime lending rate Friday by a quarter percentage point to 8 1/4 percent, the highest level in 16 months. Other banks were expected to follow.

Combined with smaller monthly rises in the first quarter, the April increase in wholesale prices boosted the annual rate so far this year from 4.6 percent to 5.1 percent, according to Labor Department analysts. Wholesale prices last year fell by 2.5 percent, with the overall figures skewed by a collapse in the world oil market that cut crude prices in half.

The April increase left the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Producer Price Index at 295.0. That means goods costing $10 in 1987 would have cost $29.50 last month. It is 78 cents more than those goods would have cost in April 1986.

Consumer price figures for April are not due out until the end of next week, but in March they also rose at an annual rate of 5.1 percent.

The wholesale price index showed food prices shooting up 1.5 percent in April following a 0.5 percent rise in March after five months of declines.

Energy prices went up after easing slightly in March. But the 2.1 percent increase in April was smaller than January's 9.8 percent and February's 4 percent leaps.

The Federal Reserve's figures on industrial production showed autos moving off U.S. assembly lines in April at a rate of 7.2 million a year, down from a March level of 7.9 million units and a February rate of 8.3 million.

Wholesale prices for some electronic equipment and furniture were little changed from March, when they rose considerably. The increase for non-food and non-energy consumer goods in April was just 0.2 percent, compared with 0.8 percent a month earlier.

GE venture gets Northwest engine order

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Northwest Airlines plans to buy as many as 325 CFM56-3 engines worth $1.25 billion to power the A320 and A340 aircraft it has on order from Airbus Industrie, a Northwest spokesman said Thursday.

The CFM56-3 is manufactured jointly by General Electric and SNECMA, a French aircraft manufacturing company, said Northwest spokesman Redmond Tyler.

Tyler said it was a "very close decision" by Northwest officials to go with the CFM56-3 over engines made by a Pratt & Whitney-Rolls Royce consortium, but said he could not elaborate on why the CFM56-3 was chosen. Pratt & Whitney is based in East Hartford, Conn.

Northwest and Airbus Industrie, a European aircraft manufacturing consortium, last year signed a $3.2 billion agreement for the sale of as many as 100 Airbus jetliners to the Minneapolis-based airline. The aircraft will join the Northwest fleet between 1990 and 1995.

Tyler said the engine order includes spares, but said he could not say how many would be included in the initial order or when they would be delivered. The airline expects eventually to buy all 325 engines included in its option, he said.

Market responds with a thud

NEW YORK (AP) — On Thursday of this past week, after three days of doldrums on Wall Street, Hugh Johnson, an analyst at First Albany Corp., said, "People are still on the edge of their chairs and waiting for the next move."

The next move came the next day, when the government announced a higher than expected increase in wholesale prices and a drop in industrial production and the major banks lifted their prime lending rate by 0.25 of a percentage point to 8.25 percent.

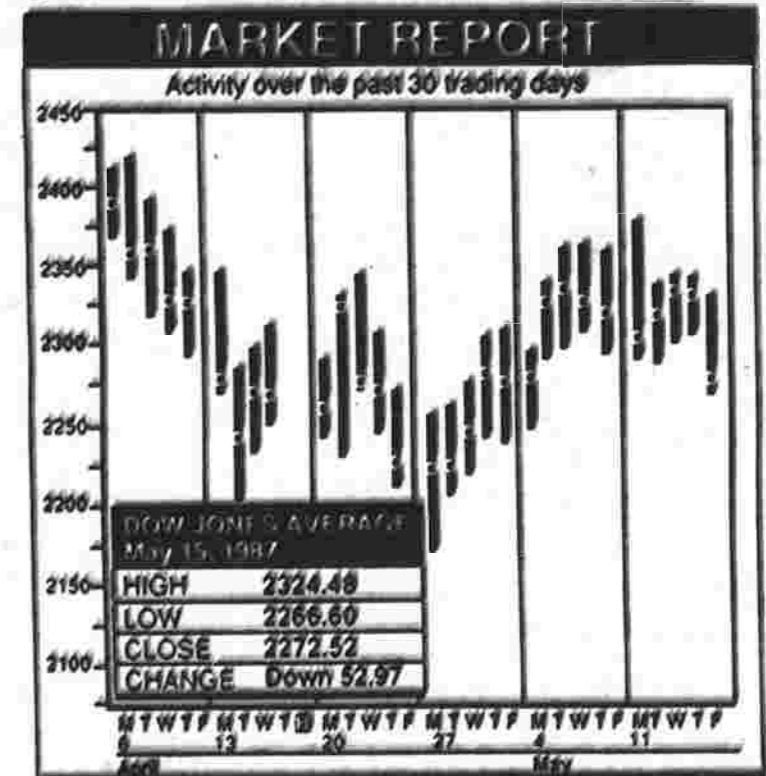

The stock market, which spent much of the week struggling to find a direction, found one amid that pile of news, and prices fell with a thud. That the market reacted so strongly comes as little surprise, given the recent weeks of volatility on all financial markets.

But while the news looked pretty grim — with fears of higher inflation and interest rates apparently being realized — analysts still were split over whether the market's historic rally was over.

"All the props that held up the bull market seem to be pulled out from under it," said Michael Metz, an analyst with Oppenheimer & Co.

The declining inflation and interest rates and the abundance of available cash in the financial system that fueled the market's upward run over the last few years no longer are there, said Metz. Strong earnings, another positive factor that helped the market's first quarter rally, likely would see a slowdown in their rate of growth, further detracting from the market's ability to move upward, Metz said.

"Is it a mini-bear market or just one of those technical setbacks? ... I'm leaning toward the cautious side," Metz said. "The market's underpinnings have weakened."

Jack Solomon, an analyst with Bear, Stearns & Co., said he was not concerned by the specter of rising interest rates.

"I'm still bullish," he said. "In the past we've gone up with rising interest rates." Saying, "We're not on rubber

Question of Yellow

What should a motorist do when he or she encounters a traffic light that has just changed to yellow?

According to Safety Bulletin, a publication of the Truck Council of America, experts in traffic safety say that most Americans do NOT know the proper function of the solid yellow light.

In most states, the motorist should stop at a yellow light as long as that can be done without endangering passengers or vehicles following behind. Unfortunately, many drivers believe they should speed up to make it through an intersection before the light turns red and, too frequently, this practice results in collisions.

Underhood Wear Points

"I've been really lucky. My car has nearly 30,000 miles on it and I've hardly raised the hood except to change the oil." "Lucky, indeed," a mechanic might respond, for a trained eye might spot several under-hood parts on the verge of failure. Periodic visual examination and diagnostic checkups are essential for the dependable operation of today's cars, the Car Care Council says.

GENUINE PARTS & AUTHORIZED SERVICE GUIDE...

Examination Required for Chief Causes of Tire Wear

Have you taken a good look at your tires lately? Since they're between your car and the pavement, maybe it's time for a close inspection.

Get your car off the ground on a lift and take a close look.

Automobile tires are designed to last many thousands of miles through just about every conceivable road condition. But it's not the road that's responsible for premature tire wear.

There are five chief causes of early tire failure:

Improper inflation. Under-inflated tires tend to wear along the sides, while over-inflation will wear a tire out in a strip down the middle.

Radial tires tend to look a little soft all the time, but don't be fooled and assume the tire pressure is correct. Learn how to check your own tire pressure and keep these wear problems from starting.

Improper alignment. A series of adjustments to steering and suspension components can generally correct this problem, you'll get improved handling as well as better tire wear. worn parts have to be replaced, of course, before accurate alignments can be accomplished.

Uneven wear

Wheels out of balance. Tires that don't wear evenly are often victims of this common condition, usually the result of running into curbs and going over bumps and potholes at excessive speed. Wheels must be perfectly balanced or tires will wear incorrectly, eventually developing a thump that sounds like humps on the road surface. Worn shock absorbers will accentuate the damage created by tire and wheel imbalance.

Examination Required for Chief Causes of Tire Wear

Bad driving habits. A major cause of a multitude of problems concerning your vehicle, bad driving habits can ruin a car. Carelessly driving over bumps and holes can throw off alignment and wheel balance. High speeds and cornering too fast can contribute to rapid tire wear.

Overloading. A load in the boot, gear in the rear, junk in the trunk. Heavy items that accumulate in the back such as out-board motors, tools or equipment, also tend to shorten tire life.

In the same vein, towing a boat or trailer can take its toll.

Check tire pressure when tires are cool. Recommended pressure can be found in the owner's manual.

Assemblies plan a fast
SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Leaders of the Assemblies of God have called on its 2.5 million members to fast and pray this Sunday, May 17, about recent events involving TV preachers and others.
The church said the events, in which Jim Bakker quit his TV show after admitting an adulterous tryst and complaints against him by TV preacher Jimmy Swaggart, have caused "turmoil, dismay, misunderstanding and pain."
Both Bakker and Swaggart belong to the denomination. Executives of its general council urged members to pray in their homes and churches "to unitedly seek the Lord in fervent contrition and intercession."
General Superintendent G. Raymond Carlson said that in such fasting and prayer, the Holy Spirit will "accomplish what carnal probing and human effort cannot."

Interfaith camp needs help

Editor's note: This column is prepared by the staff of the Manchester Area Conference of Churches.

By Nancy Carr
MACC Director

Interfaith camp needs help

It's only eight weeks until some 50 youngsters, ages 6 to 11, will be piling on the bus and heading for the MACC Interfaith Day Camp at Concordia Lutheran Church. The annual Interfaith Day Camp offers two weeks of fun, sun and lots of action to youngsters referred by local social workers as needing a special loving touch.

Interfaith camp needs help

The loving touch is provided by more than 25 teen-agers from Manchester High School and East Catholic High School who volunteer two weeks of their summers to be special friends to our youngsters of special need.

Interfaith camp needs help

This year we are hoping to make the day camp a "Sharing of Manchester" and the people that we need to do the sharing may be you. The day camp will be open 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. weekdays the week of July 13 and July 20.

Interfaith camp needs help

If you have even one morning free during these two weeks, would you be willing to lead a morning song time, show youngsters how to mold clay, inspire them with improvisation, lead fun with stenciling, show exciting slides on a dull rainy day, or help the youngsters make a video tape that they star in? Are there five nature lovers who would help us take a nature hike at Gay City?

Interfaith camp needs help

You probably have other great ideas, even better than these. Call Beth Harlow 642-4114 and share your idea with her.

Interfaith camp needs help

In addition to our morning specialists, we are looking for some dedicated children-lovers who can make a two-week commitment to help make the camp possible.

Interfaith camp needs help

OUR HUMAN NEEDS director can meet the state requirements for camp director. Nancy Moon, a student at Central Connecticut State University, has volunteered to be program assistant, and Sue Ryan, so good with young people, has offered to do counselor recruitment.

Interfaith camp needs help

We even have, for the first time, a full-time nurse, Teresa Labelle. Jane Sherman has agreed to handle transportation.

In the controversial textbook case in Alabama, the court's decision identified secular humanism as a religion. Later a Hartford newspaper columnist ridiculed this finding, declaring herself a humanist and denying it is a religion.

Perhaps she should know the official state of this movement before identifying with it (and not be ignorant of Satan's devices, 2 Cor. 2:11). The Humanist Manifesto's closing paragraph stated: "So stands the thesis of religious humanism." Paul Kurtz declared in the "Preface" to Human Manifesto 1 and 2: "Humanism is a philosophical, religious, and moral point of view as old as human civilization itself." The By-laws Of The American Humanist Association assert that the Articles of Incorporation were amended in 1968 "to reflect that the association has a legal status as a 'religious organization.'" In Torcaso versus Watkins the Supreme Court decision listed Secular Humanism as a religion.

$67,000 estate in paper sack

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — A man who sold newspapers on a downtown street corner for more than 20 years left $67,304 in a paper sack in his hotel room when he died, the public administrator said.

"If his family is located, the money will be turned over to his heirs," Raymond Nunes of the public administrator's office said Thursday.

Charles Scheel, 76, worked seven days a week — even Christmas and New Year's — and always had a pleasant greeting for his customers.

He was found dead in his 6150-a-month room near his stand after he failed to show up for work May 8. An autopsy showed he died of heart disease.

The money was found in a white paper sack on the floor next to his bed, Nunes said.

About panic attacks

NEW YORK (AP) — Panic attacks are characterized by sudden apprehension or terror, and symptoms can include palpitations, trembling and hot and cold flashes, according to Health Magazine.

Top chefs face mystery menu

CHICAGO (AP) — Not even the chefs knew what was on the menu when cooking teams from eight nations assembled Friday to compete for prizes in the first American Culinary Classic.

The teams of master chefs were to prepare three-course meals fit for a top-notch restaurant, then serve them to visitors at the National Restaurant Association's 68th Restaurant Hotel-Motel show, being held Saturday through Tuesday.

"Two teams per day do the cooking in two categories — hot and cold foods. It's like the Olympics — we won't know the winning country until the end of the show, on Tuesday evening," Scott Epstein, spokesman for the show, said Friday.

"Each day the cooks are going to prepare a hot food entry that consists of appetizer, entree, vegetable and starch and dessert. And, for the first time in international culinary competition, there are mystery baskets with food items in them," said Epstein.

"They won't know what they will cook until 24 hours before they have to cook and they have to cook 50 meals," Epstein said.

The teams are from the United States, Italy, Belgium, Great Britain, Canada, West Germany, South Africa and Singapore. The first chefs were handed their "mystery baskets" Friday afternoon and repaired to hotel restaurant kitchens around the city to begin work on their three-course meals.

The actual competition begins Saturday in a series of identical kitchens sealed off from spectators.

Many make our week a hit

Editor's note: This column is prepared by the staff of the Manchester Senior Citizens' Center.

By Jeannette Cove
Senior Center Director

Our heartfelt congratulations are extended to the new Mr. and Mrs. Senior Citizen for 1987, Mr. Larry Lombardi and Mrs. Vicki Konarski, two active senior center participants who have helped tremendously to make the center what it is today, unselfishly giving time and energy to further the efforts of the center.

People who missed last week's activities really missed a treat. Almost 100 attended Super Bingo with town officials as callers; about 150 attended Las Vegas Day, some to try their hand at gambling with play money and some to listen to the wonderful entertainment; 88 took a trip on Wednesday, either to the Coachlight Dinner Theatre or to the state Capitol and Library; on Thursday we played hot to well over 200 people who saw the crowning of Mr. and Mrs. Senior Citizen. We had the pleasure of the company of the state commissioner on aging, Mary Ellen Klinek; the mayor, Barbara Weinberg; the town manager, Robert B. Weiss; and the human services director, Hanna Marcus. On Friday the Big Week ended with a bang with a wonderful fishing derby and a gala dinner dance. What a Big Week we had!

There are so many people to thank who made it possible for us to have such a successful week. We would like to thank the following merchants for their donation of door prizes: Savings Bank of Manchester, Manchester State Bank, Acadia Restaurant, Army and Navy Club, Burger King.

Omaha hosts reunion of jerks

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — History will be served up with a helping of hot fudge, a dollop of whipped cream and a cherry on top this weekend as more than 120 former soda jerks gather to recall a favorite bit of Americana.

Omaha History Museum spokeswoman Betty Davis said the men and women, mostly from Nebraska and Iowa, will be honored guests at the third Soda Jerk Reunion at the museum, housed in the art deco former Union Station.

The reunion was concocted after museum volunteers restored the station's soda fountain to vintage condition and began serving hot fudge sundaes to weekend visitors.

They found customers reminiscing about the days when soda fountains sprouted on almost every corner and in almost every drugstore. Many visitors recalled their own days wielding ice cream scoops or mixing malts, Davis said.

When the museum sent out a call for former soda jerks to gather in 1984, "there was an immediate response," Davis said. "People would call and giggle and say 'I used to be a soda jerk.'"

Edna Monahan Traynor, 66, of Omaha, will be in familiar surroundings when she joins the ranks of honored soda jerks on Sunday.

The restored fountain with its black counter and stools, gleaming silver dispensers, mirrored walls and tiled floors looks very much as it did in 1944, when she worked there part-time.

"Since I was a young girl, all the fellas my age had gone to war," she said. "But troop trains came through Union Station with great regularity."

"There were lots of young men there," she said. "I was young and free and I thought, why not?"

The fountain's soda jerks would be put to the test when the trains arrived, Traynor said.

"They'd stand three to four deep and we'd make the sodas, sundaes, malts, milkshakes and cones as fast as we could," she said.

Traynor said she never dreamed that 40 years later the bustling station would house a museum and soda fountains would largely be a thing of the past.

Last year's reunion brought together several other women who had worked at Union Station as well as soda jerks from as far away as Massachusetts, Traynor said.

"We also get a couple thousand people who just want to see the soda jerks" at the reunion, which kicks off the museum's membership drive, Davis said.

The soda jerks aren't required to demonstrate their ice cream ability, she said. Instead, they'll wear old-fashioned soda jerk hats and badges and get to eat deluxe hot fudge sundaes served up in traditional glass dishes.

Other history and hot fudge fans will get smaller sundaes in paper cups, Davis said.

The museum would like to expand its list of soda jerks into a national registry, she said.

"The next step would be to start an organization of soda jerks," Davis said. "That's something for them to think about this weekend."

Traynor, who said hours behind the counter never dulled her liking for ice cream, said the soda jerk reunions are a family affair.

"My grandson went to the reunion last year and ate three hot fudge sundaes," Traynor said. "It's a history lesson he'll remember."

Thoughts

You are the salt of the earth. I've always had problems with that statement, probably because in our culture, we don't understand how salt is supposed to work. In our culture a fast food hamburger is salt; most canned hams are salt. Take popcorn at the movies. When I buy that stuff I don't taste popcorn, but salt. We seem to think salt is a food, when it is not. Salt is a seasoning. So when I read, "You are the salt of the earth," I think of popcorn, canned hams and hamburgers, and I go yuk.

Ever make chicken soup from scratch? I do, every once in a while. I put in the chicken bones, a large onion, some water, a little tarragon, parsley, pepper, and just two teaspoons of salt. And when I drop in the salt, it dissolves and gives its flavor to everything else in the pot. It gives itself invisibly to everything around it; and it seasons its little part of the world.

I think this is what Jesus had in mind when he said we are salt. We are a seasoning that brings zest and life and vitality to the people in our little part of this world. Salt is not supposed to overpower people, or oppress others with legalisms or apartheid, for that is when we are ruining God's creatures, poisoning them with salt. Everyone of us is part of a group of adults and children, where the climate and demeanor of the group changes when we are absent. Everyone of us is part of associations where the group works with more care and regard for each other, because we are there, compared to when we are absent. Our presence seasons the group invisibly, just as salt seasons the soup, invisibly. It's an unexplainable mystery... one of those unseen realities.

To each one of us God has entrusted into our care and protection, a precious part of his world, to be present to those people and creatures as a seasoning, a preserver of the quality of their life.

The Rev. John Holliger,
St. George's Episcopal Church

Give letter carriers a break

DEAR ABBY: The letter carriers of the Postal Service and the employees of the utilities, newspapers and other delivery services must regularly have access to the properties of the community in order to perform their duties. Thousands of persons nationwide have suffered pain and other consequences of being bitten by dogs. Seven thousand were letter carriers last year alone.

Dog owners must accept that the attitude of "My dog doesn't bite" is a fallacy. Some dogs do bite letter carriers and other delivery service people. Owners need to realize that dog ownership carries with it several responsibilities. Preventing their dogs from biting or attacking people who must enter the property is one of them.

The U.S. Postal Service has been taking a tougher stance by interrupting mail delivery to homes where a dog is not properly restrained. Additionally, the agency has been assigned and joining its employees in actions to recover damages resulting from dog attacks.

Dear Abby

Abby, will you please help us by asking dog owners to keep their dogs confined in a fenced yard, tied or chained, or keep them indoors during delivery hours? Thank you.
F. KOYE, SUPERVISOR
U.S.P.O., ROSEVILLE, MICH.

DEAR MR. KOYE: You bet I will. Where would I be without the U.S. Postal Service?

DEAR ABBY: I'm 25 years old, married, with a 7-year-old child. My problem? I have a strong urge to kiss other men. Just kiss them passionately — that's all. My husband doesn't kiss very well, so maybe that's the reason I have this overwhelming urge. I do know that this is driving me crazy.

Aspirin vs. Tylenol

DEAR DR. GOTT: Why do so many television ads say that all doctors and hospitals recommend Tylenol? I had two X-rays taken weeks apart, and after taking Tylenol tablets three days prior, they showed up in my stomach. What good are they doing?

Dr. Gott
Peter Gott, M.D.

DEAR READER: One of the problems with pills is that they sometimes do not dissolve after being taken. This is true of most medicine, not just Tylenol (acetaminophen). If you do not digest a certain medicine in pill form, try crushing it or using a liquid preparation.

I should add that not all doctors and hospitals recommend Tylenol. There are other, equally effective brands of acetaminophen that, like Tylenol, cause less stomach upset than aspirin. In addition, for some patients, aspirin is superior. In my practice, for example, I've found that — for adults — aspirin is more effective than acetaminophen in bringing down fever and relieving minor aches and pains, such as occur with arthritis. Rather than endorsing one product, most doctors and hospitals prefer to individualize, depending on the patient's needs.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am female, 70, and other than being on medication for hypertension, I am in good health. However, every time I go to my doctor, he wants me to have a variety of tests. Just what tests are really necessary at my age?

DEAR READER: Doctors vary

I don't want sex. As a matter of fact, sex doesn't interest me at all — even with my husband. Have you ever heard of anyone with this type of problem? I could sure use an answer.

NEEDS TO BE KISSED
IN FLORIDA

DEAR NEEDS: I have heard of women having a secret desire to kiss other men — but you appear to be obsessed by the desire. In order to get this out of your head, you need someone (a professional) to get into your head. Once you learn why you have this overwhelming urge, your chances for controlling it will be greatly increased. Good luck. In the meantime, why not try to teach your husband how to kiss with your liking? This could pay big dividends.

DEAR ABBY: Your answer to "Karen Krumrey of Ellenville, Mo." concerning the children who shot the robin was all right as far as it went, but it didn't go far enough. It is illegal to kill a robin in all states. This is a songbird and an insect-eating bird, and it is protected everywhere. So you should also have advised Ms. Krumrey that she should let the kids' parents know that they were not only cruel, but they were breaking the law as well.

You could also have suggested that shooting pellet guns is illegal in almost all cities — even here in Louisiana where we are considered "outlaws" by many.

Furthermore, pellet guns are not toys — they are powerful enough to kill many animals, not only small birds. And they can kill people as well.

INSECTICIDES

Most insecticides are poisonous to humans as well as to insects, only in lesser degree. Avoid the inhalation of insect spray mists, and wear gloves to avoid contact of powder or liquid insecticides with the skin. Follow directions on the label carefully. After using insecticides, soap and rinse the hands and face thoroughly before eating or smoking, and store insecticides out of reach of children.

Between the Lines

The story behind the story

By Josie

Q. Please give me some information on John Gavin. How old is he, what movies has he made, where does he live and is he married? Mrs. L. Mausi, Elkhart, Ind.

A. He's 56 and in the course of his career performed in such disparate movies as "Psycho," "Back Street," "Spartacus" and "Tammy, Tell Me True" as well as the TV series "Seesaw," on Broadway, in the TV movie-bio of Sophia Loren and in episodes of "Fantasy Island" and "The Love Boat."

When he was appointed ambassador to Mexico by his old Hollywood pal Ronald Reagan in 1981, he was starring in a revival of the musical "Can-Can," but, embarrassing diplomatically, he was also appearing in a series of rum commercials airing on Mexican TV and in a horror movie called "Jennifer" recently released in Mexican theaters. He served as ambassador, however, until his resignation in May of last year. He then returned to his home in Los Angeles and went into the broadcasting business. He's married to actress Constance Towers.

Ken Howard

Q. Please tell me where Ken Howard is from, if he's married, why he quit "Dynasty" and whether he'll be doing any new projects in the future. N.N., Boston, Mass.

A. He's from Manhasset, Long Island, a suburb of New York, and is a Yale Drama School grad, which is one of the reasons, it seems, that he quit "Dynasty." He loves theater specifically and intelligent projects over which he can have some control in general, and "Dynasty" didn't satisfy those requirements. He also admits not being a good company man and partygoer in seriously social Hollywood; so he's currently in your vicinity instead, teaching a working at Harvard's Loeb Drama Center.

He likes TV movies, though — they're clear-cut and self-contained. He hasn't ruled them out if a good one comes along. Regarding marriage: Yes, he's married to columnist Ann Landers' daughter, Margo.

Q. Could you please give me some information on the rock group Bon Jovi? K. Chiodo, Scranton, Pa.; Maritza, Union City, N.J.

A. Namesake and leader Jon Bon Jovi (original name: Bongiovi, which was simplified by the record label) is 25, from Sayreville, N.J. He started on the path to rock stardom 10 years ago when a lounge act guitarist moved into his neighborhood. He started lessons with him, and two years later put together a band called Atlantic City Expressway with Bon Jovi keyboardist David Bryan (then named Rashbaum). The band played the local bars, one night in Asbury Park, bar band fan Bruce Springsteen even sat in.

By 1982, though, Bongiovi was back on his own, sweeping the floor in his cousin's recording studio while working on songs to record. One called "Runaway" became a hit on local radio and brought him a recording contract.

Obviously, he needed to put together a new band, so he re-recruited Bryan (who by then had put in two years of pre-med studies at Rutgers and been offered a place at Juilliard), bass player Alec John Such, drummer Tico Torres and guitarist Sammy Sambora, all of whom had played in Jersey bands. Their records didn't do too well at first, but their relentless touring, as opening act for various heavy metal bands, sparked sales of the first two albums, "Bon Jovi" and "7800 Fahrenheit," and got them on MTV. The third album, "Slippery When Wet," pushed them over the top.

Currently, the reward for that album's success is a long, long tour. They should be on the road through mid-summer at least.

Betty Buckley

Q. What is Betty Buckley who played Abby on "Eight Is Enough" doing now? Susan Tyrrell, Santa Maria, Calif.

A. Filming a movie in Paris with Harrison Ford, directed by Roman Polanski. She also recently finished a movie called "Wild Thing" that should be in release around the country about now, has a new album out, and a role in CBS's miniseries "Roses Are for the Rich" which is scheduled to air next week. One project she didn't want to do, apparently, was an "Eight Is Enough" TV movie-reunion; the movie is still planned, but with another actress.

Q. Please settle an argument between a few old-timers. Who were the leading players in the movie "Wings"? John Flaherty, Waterbury, Conn.

A. The three leads were Clara Bow, Charles "Buddy" Rogers and Richard Arlen. "Wings," as you probably know, won the first Best Picture Oscar, awarded in 1928.

Q. Could you please tell me where actress Wendy Hughes is from and what she's been in? I saw her in "Amerika" and was very impressed. E.F., Baton Rouge, La.

A. She's from Melbourne, Australia (if you listened carefully to her character in "Amerika," you could hear traces of the accent) and has starred in a number of that country's most critically acclaimed movies, among them "Newsfront," "My First Wife," "My Brilliant Career," "Lonely Hearts" and "Careful, He Might Hear You." She also has an American film called "Happy New Year" starring Peter Falk that was finished a while ago but is, at this writing, unreleased.

Danny DeVito: It can't get much better

By Fred Robbins

If you don't think that life imitates art, consider the case of Danny DeVito, who stars in the comedy hit "Tin Men," and his wife, Rhea Perlman, of TV's "Cheers." Their story sounds like it's right out of "Guys and Dolls," where poor Adelaide celebrated her engagement to Nathan Detroit for 14 years before he finally married her. It didn't take Danny and Rhea quite that long — just 11 years — which proves again that not only is patience a virtue, but everything comes to her (or him) who waits. And waits. And waits.

"Thirty dollars in the sock drawer is not a good thing to get married on," he explains. "Rhea literally supported me for many years in New York, waitressing and dropping spaghetti on the Rockefeller's while I was running around during my out-of-work acting periods, trying to direct, putting together Super 8 film and badgering all my friends to be in it, and dressing them up, and going to the park and getting chased away from this building because we didn't have a permit."

"Rhea and I were always in the middle of a production, while I was looking for acting work to pay the bills... we wanted to make movies. That's where my head was. I wanted to project my work on this big 60-foot screen."

Early days, dues-paying days. They're always tough to go through, but seem nostalgic and sweet in retrospect, looking back from the success and security of their marriage and respective careers. The director in DeVito takes over as he replays their first meetings on his own built-in screen.

"I was doing an off-Broadway play in New York called 'The Shrinking Bride' (was that title a portent?) and Rhea came to see her girlfriend who was playing opposite me. I was playing a demented stable boy called Richie, then after the show we all went to hear Alberta Hunter (the legendary blues singer) at the Cookery, and — bam! it was magic time!"

His round and friendly face ceases into a grin. Wearing a dark suit and sport shirt, he removes his jacket and continues.

"I didn't ask her for her phone number until we were all out on the street and splitting up to get subways and cabs. But I got her number and two weeks later I called her."

When it's pointed out that any guy who waits two weeks to call a lady usually waits at least 10 years before he proposes, he laughs and says sheepishly, "I don't know why I waited so long. But then we had a couple of dates and I was living on 89th street and she was living in Brooklyn, and we got a friend's truck and we moved her in. Brought her from Brooklyn."

Did she ever tell him why she knew immediately that he was for her?

"She said when she was out in the audience that 'I gotta meet this guy.' I don't know what it was. I was playing a strange character, so I don't know what this says about Rhea. But we fell in love right away and it was great and it's the best thing that ever happened to me."

But 11 years, Danny. It really does sound like "Guys and Dolls" — and your families didn't meet during that whole time? "Well, Rhea and I were street people. I mean, she met my mother and father, she came down to Asbury Park and my father loved her immediately. He went nuts over Rhea. 'This is the one,' he said. He loved her. He was like going wild over her. I guess my father and I were a lot alike."

"And I'd go to Brooklyn, to Bensonhurst, to meet the Perlman and hang out there. But the first time I met them was when Rhea brought them down to see me off-Broadway in 'One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest.'" He breaks into a gale of laughter that shakes his whole roly-polyness.

"Can you picture the Perlman, sitting in the seats, right, waiting for my entrance, which was like, I came out of the door in the back of the theater, and ran like a wild man and burst through different doors, and finally lighted on a chair. This little tiny Italian guy with fiery eyes, going crazy, you know. Imagine this! And then we're going to have a drink after that."

Danny DeVito, the star of "Tin Men," has established himself as one of Hollywood's top character actors.

Another round of wicked laughter. "But they loved the little guy right away... which still doesn't explain the 11-year tryout period. He keeps trying."

"I really don't know why. We never knew if we were going to have to give up the apartment, we always knew it was right but we had to go through all the growing pains as a couple. But we were together, we loved each other. We were such free people, we had no obligations — just each other. So when we decided to get married it was the absolute right time for us."

Mustn't be too impulsive in serious situations like this. That was five years ago. He was establishing himself as Louie De Palma on "Taxi," and the family urge began to take over. He knew the magic moment was at hand.

"It wasn't the thing where we always wanted kids. I never thought it was in the cards, and then we decided one day, we said, 'It might be interesting to try this out' and 'Yeah, well, let's get... you know, will you marry me?' And 'Yeah OK!'"

Just when you were beginning to think he'd never ask? Now they're the proud parents of two daughters, Lucy, 4, and Gracie, 2, and the beaming 41-year-old father points out they were both born in March.

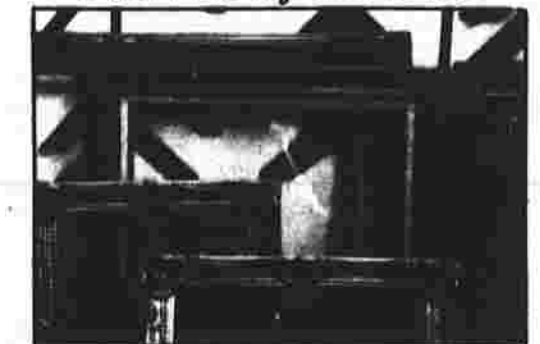

"That's because of 'Cheers,' because Rhea's hiatus is from February to July and she didn't want to have the baby on the show. So the pressure was on. I'll tell you! She got 'Cheers' as soon as we were married and then got pregnant, and imagine the look on the producers' faces! You know what I mean? They had to put up with Rhea with a belly for most of her whole first season that year."

He laughs at the memory of the conflict between production and reproduction. And is sure there is less conflict between motherhood and her growing career, citing "her boundless spirit and so much energy and love that it all glows through. I don't see Rhea just saying, 'Oh boy, this is what I really wanted in life.' So whether she's dealing with a story line or her work as an actress, or the children, she does it all."

His career, of course, is burning bright. ■

Sports-dating takes the pressure off

Forget the French restaurants — try a tennis court instead

By Jan Sheehan

Jennifer and Mark, two professionals in their late 20s, met at a party and liked each other instantly. At the close of the evening Mark asked Jennifer out to dinner at an exclusive French restaurant. But Jennifer had no desire to be impressed with a fancy meal. She wanted to know what Mark was really like. So she proposed they get together to play tennis, an invitation Mark readily accepted.

Far from atypical, this scenario reflects a growing trend among young adults who are choosing athletic activity as an alternative to the dinner-and-dancing pattern of courtship. "Sportsdating" is the pressureless way to break in a relationship; break a sweat, and if it all clicks, well, romance is just a healthy heartbeat away.

Romantic motives are not necessary, of course. Coed sports partnering is a good way to enhance — or test — a platonic relationship, a marriage or a business acquaintanceship. Nor is competition a requisite.

In addition to the competitive and group sports the sportsdating phenomenon embraces — the racquet sports, volleyball, softball, touch football — there are a number of popular activities that are best left unscored — running, skiing, aerobics, weight training and biking.

In the view of Dr. Robert Karsch, a sports psychologist and director of the National Health and Fitness Center in Washington, D.C., this new athletic fraternization stems in part from Title 9, which attempted to legislate equality of access to sports facilities on college campuses. But the primary factor, according to Karsch, is that "men have gained a healthy appreciation of women's physiological capabilities." Feminism meets fitness boom.

This new-found respect extends to the high seas. Sailing instructor Julie Stevens of the Learning Annex in Los Angeles, says that, not long ago, the men in her classes tended to boss around their female shipmates. But no more.

Today, says Stevens, "the men expect their partners to learn as much as they do." Sailing is ideal as a coed activity because "they can do it on an equal basis with equal success." And, because of the teamwork involved in sailing, says Stevens, "you learn to do it better when you do it together." Mark Sobczak, a real-estate broker, plays racquetball several times a week and prefers to play with women. Sobczak believes the fitness boom has made it more acceptable for women to play competitive sports such as racquetball, and he has found women to be challenging sports partners.

"A woman's style of play is different from a man's style," he says. "Women aren't trying to kill the ball with every muscle in their body. They're relying more on skill than pure power." Sobczak enjoys a racquetball game with a good partner, man or woman, but admits playing with a woman can enhance his social life. He has gone on to date several of his female racquetball partners.

Mark Ackerman teaches coed volleyball, softball and flag football for the Learning Annex. He notes that sports togetherness has its ancillary benefits. "Lots of people have gone on to enjoy interpersonal involvements," he reports. Even so, the purpose of his classes is to "have fun, learn a sport (or get in shape) and meet people," in that order.

While there is ample evidence that men enjoy mixing it up with women athletically, many of them are still anxious to preserve some measure of control or athletic superiority — even if that means admitting to the double standard.

"If the woman is a better all-around athlete, it's like mixing oil and water," emphasizes Barry Peoples, a medical equipment salesman and a superior snow skier. "I think most women want to look up to the man, and a disparity in skills won't work."

To underscore his point, Peoples describes a skiing excursion in which his date turned out to be a nationally ranked competitor. "It was awkward," he says. "Each person was trying to outdo the other. I was cocky and she knocked me down a peg."

Despite this mishap, Peoples is a strong advocate of sportsdating. "I like the activity, the interaction," he says. "A dinner date is too much like an interview — everyone's trying too hard. A sportsdate is a better way to gauge temperament."

"It gives you a chance to see how a man deals with frustration and to see how competitive he is," seconds Andrea Brannock, publicity director for the Colorado Tourism Board. "Sensitivity has a way of surfacing on a sportsdate." Brannock, who bikes and plays tennis, prefers the man to be a little better, "but not so he knocks my socks off. I like to be on an equal footing with a man."

Playing tennis or racquetball is a good way to test — or enhance — a platonic relationship.

Twenty-six-year-old Anna Genschow, a legal word processor, would rather not deal with the competition issue at all. "I prefer not to play a game with a man," she says. An avid tennis player, she has been caught in the position in which "you feel you have to lose or he'll smash his racquet."

"I played with a guy once who got real tired, he was sweating and panting... but he wouldn't quit! Some men have that complex. They care about the outcome more than I do."

What they don't realize, she says, "is that women are judging them on their personality as a whole. Men are harder on themselves than women are on them."

But in general, no matter what

Like Bennett, Tim Kross, a regional sales manager for an electronic component company, likes to play teacher. "I'm uncomfortable being taught," he admits. His more successful athletic dates have involved hiking and camping in the Colorado Rockies. "It really gets a rise out of them (women) when you ask, 'Can you make it to the top?' They're excited by the challenge."

Getting a rise out of a woman or positioning oneself as teacher would not sit well with Lisa Murphy, an attorney for the Department of Labor. "I'm a feminist," she declares, "and I don't take to roles."

Her athletic cup of tea is competing on an equal basis in such sports as volleyball and tennis. Even if John McEnroe is staring across the net, there'll be no hero-worshipping from Murphy. Not one to be pinned down as either "looking" or having "found" a partner through sportsdating, she is nonetheless a supporter.

"Dinner dates involve a lot of pretenses," she says. "On an athletic date you can roll with the punches and everyone is much more at ease."

Despite these testimonials by die-hard sportsdaters, it's safe to say that traditional dating is in no danger of extinction. Both modes have their advantages. There is much to be learned — and much courage involved — in the traditional, time-honored method: two new acquaintances tied to a table for hours, forced to make eye contact, desperately trying to articulate their thoughts in an intelligent manner, putting their don't-laugh-at-me trust in each other, and laying their very souls on the table beside the shrimp cocktail and spinach salad.

On the other hand, those who believe that the traditional, conversational date is the only sure way of getting to know someone should become more aware of what can be learned during the course of a sportsdate. Veteran sportsdate participants admit that, for the most part, men like to strut their stuff on an athletic date, while women are content with a 50-50 athletic coexistence.

And one last point to consider: If you're still attracted to your sports partner with his or her hair frizzed out, sweat pouring from a flushed face, tongue hanging from a panting mouth and eyeballs pinwheeling in pain, it must be true love. Set up that dinner date immediately. ■

Ask Dick Kleiner

Dear S.C.: Nowhere. NBC has not yet given permission to anyone to sell Carson cassettes. And, since it was a special show for a special time, it is unlikely it will be telecast again. Your only hope is through some private collector or wait until Johnny retires, because then chances are NBC will release a best-of-Carson tapes.

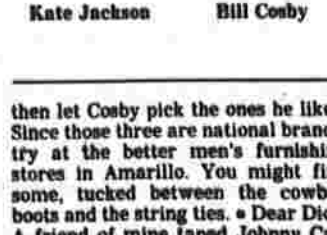

Dear Dick: We saw where John Gibson (Gipson) had been in "One Life to Live." I watch this all the time and don't remember seeing him. Can you tell me what part he played and when? — Mrs. C.M.W., Jacksonville, Texas.

Dear Mr. C.M.W.: The people on the show say that he hasn't been on the show in their memory. At least, he was never under contract. It's possible he was a day player, they don't keep records of all the day players who take bit parts. But he was certainly no regular.

On Sept. 11, 1986, the Dow Jones Industrial Average had its largest one-day fall in history, plunging 88.61 points, or 4.61 percent.

Bill Cosby

Kate Jackson

Dear Dick: We watch "Scarecrow and Mrs. King" every week and enjoy it tremendously. So glad they are now married. Only problem is we heard that Kate Jackson no longer wants to do the program. Is this true? — Unsigned, Racine, Wis.

Dear Unsigned: No. Kate, through her company, Shoot the Moon Productions, owns 50 per cent of the show. So there is a lot of money at stake, and she is wrapping up the fourth year of a five-year contract, so you can bet she'll be back next year, and happy to be back, if the network picks it up again. I think the show has lost a lot of its punch, with Mrs. King becoming Mrs. Scarecrow, and the ratings have fallen off some, too.

Dear Dick: Can you find out where Bill Cosby gets the sweaters he wears on his show? — K.M.R., Amarillo, Texas.

Dear K.M.R.: The people in charge of costumes for "The Cosby Show" tell me they get sweaters from three manufacturers — Missoni, Klaus von Aker and Alexander Julian — and then let Cosby pick the ones he likes. Since those three are national brands, they are the better men's furnishing stores in Amarillo. You might find some, tucked between the cowboy boots and the string ties. Dear Dick: A friend of mine taped Johnny Carson's 25th anniversary show on his VCR. You can imagine how thrilled he was when he accidentally erased it. Actually, he was very nice about it and that's why I would like to locate a copy of it on a VHS cassette. Where might I find one? — S.C., Fort Mill, S.C.

Souvenirs don't belong in the closet

By Anne Wescott Dodd

A friend would take one look at my Paris map, all tattered and worn, and toss it out. But when I open the map, I see traced in ink the path of a marathon walk one hot July day on the city streets, and suddenly I'm sipping wine in the shade of a sidewalk cafe. A magic map that can take me back in time to a place thousands of miles away is much too valuable to throw away.

Many of us are incurably nostalgic, and pack rats among us — I must admit I am one — return from journeys loaded down with everything from matchbooks and postcards to pamphlets from tourist attractions and ticket stubs.

Pack rats can't bear to throw anything away, so finding a place to stow all this nostalgia can be a bit of a problem. There are several ways, however, to make travel souvenirs useful and readily available for brief escapes from the problems of the day.

A scrapbook of a trip containing a mix of photos and mementos along with the itinerary and highlights makes it possible to relive a South Pacific holiday on a snowy afternoon.

But if you never get around to putting one together when you're back at home, consider doing the whole job while you travel. Bring along a small stapler with your notebook. Write an entry in this journal every day, using some pages to staple in pamphlets and other items you pick up along the way. When the trips ends, your memory book will be complete.

If you feel like exercising your artistic muscles, you can decorate your walls with collages of souvenirs in large picture frames. My father, who doesn't have much patience for organizing things in frames, devotes one whole wall in the utility room to his collection. Since it's right beside the back door, he's reminded daily of many fun-filled trips.

Colorful flat items, such as postcards and brochure illustrations, can be transformed into washable placemats and desk blotters. Glue the items to poster board (cut to the desired size) or a plain desk blotter and cover both sides with transparent self-stick covering.

If you can't resist picking up matchbooks or hotel soap, you might do what a character in a novel I read recently did with his theater ticket stubs: deposit the collection in a large glass bowl to grace a hallway table.

Several styles of lamps and tables nowadays have been designed especially for displays.

Instead of using shells or dried flowers to fill one of these clear glass lamp bases, arrange some of your trip souvenirs, such as small dolls dressed in native costumes, inside.

Tables with glass tops that lift up for filling a traylike area underneath can accommodate a variety of mementos in a museum-like display. I've collected plain old rocks from nearly all the places I've visited and housed them — each with its own calligraphy label — in a coffee table that also contains several small pins I received from Russian children in exchange for chewing gum and a small glass of sand I scooped up near the Sphinx.

If you're not up to such creative pursuits but still want to keep all those treasures safe, put everything from one trip in a box (if a shoe box is too small, a gift box the size stores use for sweaters and shirts should hold everything, including the diary you kept while traveling) and label it with the place you visited and the date. You may find some of what you saved useful in planning a future trip.

In any case, store the trip boxes where you can easily find them. The next time you read an article about London in a travel magazine and feel nostalgic, just by digging out your London box you can go back to the Tower of London for another peek at the crown jewels, smell the flowers in that English garden or relax, British style, in a friendly pub.

A trip remembered never ends. ■

Confessions of a late-blooming baker

By Sylvia Millenky

I have yet to find a scent that can compare with that of freshly baked challah (white bread), cinnamon babka (yeast cake) blended with the aromas of fresh dill and parsley simmering in chicken soup, enhanced by a delicately spiced gefilte fish, unquestionably the world's best.

My sister and I returned from school each Friday to find these wondrous creations in a sparkling clean kitchen with its mirror-like waxed floor. And Mama rarely seemed tired.

In pre-school days, when Mama baked we were each given a small piece of dough to roll out and fill with nuts, raisins, cinnamon and sugar. Mama always had miniature pans so that we could have our own mini-desserts. We would proudly, though undeservedly, accept credit for their production.

By my teen years I knew I'd never be a housewife; homemaker was not a designation in the lexicon of that era. Therefore I had no interest in the preparation of food. Unfortunately, interest in the consumption of Mama's culinary artistry did not diminish proportionately.

High school and college years were a time for serious work and serious play: Extra-curricular activities left little time for domestic ones. College years were spent away from home, and dormitory cuisine and three-for-a-nickel doughnuts from Woolworth's had dulled my pampered palate.

I planned to be a career woman and to have hirelings to assume all my domestic responsibilities. But fate dealt me a low blow. Though surrounded by many scions of the wealthy, I fell in love with a poor one, the kind who worked his way through college and won fellowships for advanced study.

There I was at 22, married and living in a $42-a-month furnished apartment near the campus where my husband attended graduate school. And I did not even know who to put the coffee in the percolator. Before the end of the first week in our own apartment, my husband bought me a cookbook. Subtle! In one year I prepared everything from page one to page 603, and he gained 11 pounds.

My first effort at baking was to make toll-house cookies. Easy and popular, right? Seven-year-olds do it all the time. Well, mine looked lovely but were flexible. It was not until I discussed my problem with a kindly neighbor that I learned that I had broiled them.

Later that year a college friend came for the weekend. I was bound to show off my newly acquired skills, and I planned an elaborate dinner with lemon meringue pie for dessert. I had just placed the pie in the oven when she arrived. We were so busy catching up on the events of the past year, that not until the smell of burnt meringue permeated the apartment did I realize that I had incinerated my dessert.

Lemon pie was on my menu and lemon pie we would have. Dorothy kept me company in the kitchen while I started over again; pastry dough, freshly squeezed lemon — no short cuts for me.

On another occasion, when a bachelor friend was coming to dinner, I decided to splurge and buy a steak. The word "steak," I learned the hard way, covers a multitude of cuts and a wide range of tenderness. After our cocktail and hors d'oeuvres hour, I placed the thick slab of meat under the broiler. When I tried to turn it over, my fork met as much resistance as if I had attempted to spear a concrete block. I was broiling a round steak.

Cussing the butcher did nothing to tenderize the meat. We dined on tuna fish and salad.

During that first year of pre-calorie-counting days, a homemade dessert was part of every dinner. Baking in the old gas oven with neither temperature gauge nor timer was, for the novice, a little like Russian roulette. Only the size of the flame indicated approximate temperature.

Before I developed accurate judgment, there were numerous over- or under-baked creations. But we devised a solution for turning failures into edibles. On our budget waste was unthinkable. Cakes were sliced and returned to the oven at a very low temperature for a slow drying process which turned all baked goods into zwieback-like comestibles great for dunking.

Over these many years I have learned to cook and bake very well, though unlike Mama, who never owned a cookbook, I rely on tried and true recipes as a start, then concoct variations which make the original unrecognizable.

I often think wistfully of Mama's specialties and regret that I paid so little attention to them. I know only a few. ■

Champagne is a delightful beverage

By Ted Larsen

I get a kick out of champagne — a big one. In fact, I love the bubbly in all its unique dimensions, from the sensuous shape of the bottle, to the bubbles that make my mouth feel as if my foot's asleep. Truthfully, I'd love the wonderful stuff even if it were non-alcoholic because the champagne experience is just plain fun.

Sparkling wines have been produced in many nations for centuries, but until 1700 the results were often unpredictable, sometime gravely dramatic. Even though bottles were available to vintners, their quality was terrible and the resulting explosions very messy. Often a French royal fete was un-royally shattered by glass and champagne.

A Benedictine monk came to the rescue. Dom Perignon, the wine cellar master of Hautvillers Abbey, was determined to improve the safety of his champagne-making neighbors. His tinkering with better corks, thicker bottles and reduced effervescence were a tremendous success.

In 1842 the champagne story switches to Cincinnati, Ohio, where Nicholas Longworth had 1,200 acres of Catawba grapes and a flourishing winery. Despite the success of his sweet "Sparkling Catawba," Longworth decided it was time the U.S. had a champagne of its own.

The reviews are tremendous with a gushing English reporter writing that Longworth's domestic bubbly "transcends the Champagne of France." We don't know how many tastings were needed to draw such an overwhelming conclusion, but assume the journalist's research was adequate.

French-born winemaker Paul Masson penned the next U.S. champagne success story when he brought some imported equipment to his California employer in 1884. Six years later Masson went on his own, winning medals at numerous international competitions including the snooty Paris Exposition of 1900.

Masson quickly developed a notorious reputation from his lavish parties where a popular singer once took a champagne bath for all to see. The stubborn Masson was dealt a crippling blow in 1922 when Federal agents raided the winery, his "Medicinal Champagne" apparently violating the spirit of Prohibition.

Most nations produce their version of champagne, but it took a U.S. Supreme Court decision to strip the French of exclusive rights to the word "champagne." However, the only true product comes from the old French province of Champagne, around the cities of Reims and Epernay.

Champagne is far from a health food, but nutritional content is not bad, considering it's an alcoholic beverage. Unlike hard liquor, there are significant quantities of vitamin B6, niacin, and minerals, which is another reason I get such a kick from this delightful beverage.

Such an ideal party beverage, even though many people think of it as wedding punch. An inexpensive champagne is perfect for this and most champagne recipes.

CHAMPAGNE PUNCH

- 3 ripe pineapples
- 4 ripe bananas
- 1 pound confectioners' sugar
- 2 cups fresh lemon juice
- 1/2 cup Curacao or Triple Sec
- 1/2 cup Chambord
- 2 cups brandy
- 2 cups light rum
- 4 bottles champagne, chilled

Peel and slice pineapple and bananas. Place in a food processor and using steel blade, chop until pureed. Place crushed pineapple in large punch bowl and cover with confectioners' sugar and lemon juice. Allow to stand for 2 hours. Add remaining ingredients, stir and allow to sit for at least 6 hours. Add one bag (or more) of ice cubes or a block of ice to bowl and allow to chill for 1 hour. Before serving, add all of the champagne. Serves 25.

HINTS

For an exotic fruit flavor, crush a variety of fruits along with the pineapple and bananas such as apples and pears. Fruits such as strawberries can also be frozen.

The champagne flavor (and expense) can be halved by substituting two bottles of ginger ale.

Simple cherry brandy can be substituted for the Chambord. I developed this unusual combination after tasting the German classic, champagne sauerkraut. The use of plain cabbage gives the dish a more mellow tone. Truly elegant treatment for humble cabbage!

CHAMPAGNE CABBAGE

- 1 head green cabbage, peeled and cored
- 4 tablespoons unsalted butter

Champagne makes an ideal party drink.

- 1 large onion, minced
- 2 medium Cortland apples, peeled, cored and chopped
- 2 cups champagne
- 2 cups water
- 1 tablespoon caraway seeds
- 1 tablespoon flour
- salt, pepper

Shred the cabbage as if you were making cole slaw. Melt butter in a casserole or Dutch oven and saute onion and apples until golden brown. Add the cabbage and stir. Pour in water and champagne until the cabbage is half-covered. Add caraway seeds and simmer over low heat for 1 hour.

Add directly to kraut without mixing with water. This sprightly-flavored relative to sherbet is perfect for a brunch. Serve it with chewy macaroons.

CHAMPAGNE SORBET

- 1 cup water
- 1 cup sugar, white
- 6 sugar cubes
- 6 lemons
- 1/2 teaspoon bitter
- 1 bottle champagne, chilled

Bring water to a boil in a saucepan and add sugar. Stir until dissolved. Remove from heat and allow to cool until comfortable to the touch. Meanwhile, rub the sugar cubes on the lemons and pour the strained juice into a mixing bowl. Add the lemons and pour the strained juice into a mixing bowl. Add the sugar cubes and dissolve them in the juice.

Add the cold champagne and bitter, along with the sugar syrup, to taste. Freeze this mixture in an ice-cream maker, according to the manufacturer's instructions. Serve in chilled glasses. Serves 6.

HINTS

If you don't have an ice-cream maker, pour into ice-cube trays and freeze in refrigerator for 30 minutes. Remove and using a fork, stir the frozen edges into center. Continue every 30 minutes until mixture is frozen like a thick slush. Before serving, pour into a mixing bowl and whisk lightly for a uniform texture. Try substituting oranges and orange juice for the lemons. To make this recipe non-alcoholic, use ginger ale rather than champagne. ■

Gardens of Stone (R) Director Francis Coppola's stateside view of the Vietnam War era seemed so promising. An attempted elegy for America's involvement in Vietnam, "Gardens of Stone" does show considerable care in its casting, and individual scenes reveal Coppola's directorial mastery. Yet it's a bewildering and unsatisfying experience overall. The movie lacks narrative momentum, settling for arch and corny dramatic effects, hindsight about the war and maudlin moodiness.

The setting is Fort Myer, Va., in 1966, where young Army recruits serve in the ceremonial Old Guard unit that presides over Arlington Cemetery. Training the new recruits is Sgt. Clell Hazard, a pro-Army anti-Vietnam combat veteran quietly well-played by James Caan (returning to the screen after a five-year absence). One of Hazard's trainees, Jackie Willow (D.B. Sweeney), makes a big impression on him. This idealistic and callow recruit can't wait to get to "the front" where he can fight the real war in the jungles. As Jackie's mentor, Clell tries to teach the boy a lesson he will eventually, and tragically, learn on his own: that "in this war, there is no front. It's not even a war. There's nothing to win, and no way to win it."

"Gardens of Stone" uses the father-son bond that develops between Clell and Jackie to drive home its thesis that Vietnam was a senseless war which divided generations and families. But the script and D.B. Sweeney's performance make Jackie too bland a figure to generate much dramatic conflict. To contrast with the all-male Army "family," both men are given love interests: Clell falls for a reporter and peace activist (Anjelica Huston), and Jackie woos the enthusiastic Rachel (Mary Stuart Masterson). Female characters have seldom figured at the center of Coppola's films, and the women here are no exception. The movie feels incomplete. It's worth noting that Coppola did bury a son during the filming. Perhaps the director was emotionally unable to give his all during the rest of the shooting, editing and post-production shaping process. Certainly, someone should have noticed the dark, lugubrious cinematography as well as the overblown musical score, which keeps telling us what to feel and when to feel it. Coppola's dad, Carmine, wrote the score; another example of a father-son bond in action. Grade: ½

Forever, Lulu (R) The celebrated West German actress Hana Schygulla ("Marriage of Maria Braun") comes a cropper in this mistaken identity comedy that seems to take its inspiration from "Desperately Seeking Susan." BUT there's nothing inspired about the film. It's completely, laughably inept — one of the year's worst boo-boos to date. Grade: ***

Secret Honor (PG) Vestron, $69.95. This 1984 Robert Altman film version of a monodrama by Donald Freer and Arnold M. Stone is a compelling curiosity that works very well on video. Philip Baker Hall stars as a dishonored, drunken and paranoid Richard Nixon babbling into a tape recorder in his wood-paneled study in the latter hours of Watergate. A "political myth" about Nixon and his career that bears plenty of resemblances to history, the movie achieves moments of besotted, lunatic grandeur. Grade: *****

Down by Law (R) Key, $79.99. Independent film maker Jim Jarmusch's follow-up to his smart, deadpan "Stranger than Paradise," this exquisitely shot black-and-white movie succumbs to self-consciousness and torpor. John Lurie and Tom Waits star as a pimp and an out-of-work deejay who meet, along with an Italian tourist, in a New Orleans jail cell. Having two jive downbeats like Lurie and Waits in one movie is at least one too many. With his wacky timing, Robert Benigni supplies what energy there is, as an Italian who speaks in American clichés. Grade: ****

Nepotism is alive and well

By Bob Thomas
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — If John Huston can direct his daughter, Anjelica, in a movie and help her win an Academy Award, then why can't Tamar Simon Hoffs direct her rock-star daughter, Susanna?

Indeed she has, and while "The Allnighter" is obviously no "Prizzi's Honor," it proves that nepotism is still alive and well in Hollywood. "The Allnighter," by Aurora Productions out of Universal Pictures, takes direct aim at the youth market. It concerns three fun-loving students at a surfside college on graduation eve.

Molly, played by Susanna Hoffs, is frustrated after four years of no significant romance and finally finds it with rock singer Mickey Leroy (Michael Ontkean).

Tamar Simon Hoffs was experienced in the theater. She had made two award-winning shorts, "Stony Island" and "The Haircut," the latter a Universal release. She had also directed and produced music videos for the Bangles, the all-female hitmakers headed by Susanna.

"The project was developed by Aurora," Mrs. Hoffs said. "We just wanted to do a youth-oriented movie with a backdrop of the beach. I've always liked the musical beach movie. It's a classic American form. We felt the time had come to do another one."

"Susanna, who spent a lot of time making movies with me, was kind of our consultant. She was the right age and had all the right ideas about what the main character should be. She had always read my scripts at home, and she would take the part of Molly. Pretty soon I began to see her in the part, but it wasn't at all designed for her."

"Mother asked me if I was interested, and I was," Susanna recalled. "The problem was that I was on tour with the Bangles. I went to Europe three times, and Japan, and three American tours. So I literally got off the plane from a tour, came home from the airport, and all the actors were there reading the script through. The next day we started shooting."

"The Allnighter" was filmed all over Southern California but mostly at Malibu, where the Hoffs live. Because of its small-campus atmosphere, Whittier College doubled for the movie's Pacifica College. Mrs. Hoffs co-wrote the script and produced as well as directed.

Susanna Hoffs and the Bangles established themselves in the rock world with their first two albums, "All Over the Place" and "Different Light," then hit the top of the charts with the single, "Walk Like an Egyptian."

She grew up with strong female role models in the music business, she said, including singers Joni Mitchell, Dusty Springfield and Dionne Warwick. And her mother was not concerned that the rock world was fraught with temptations.

"I have so much confidence in my daughter," Mrs. Hoffs said. "She has a great way of focusing on her goals. People like that do not get distracted by the traps that are associated with rock'n'roll. To her, it's just another form of art."

EIGHTH UTILITIES DISTRICT PROPOSED BUDGET -
FISCAL YEAR July 1, 1987 - June 30, 1988

Table with 2 columns: Category and Amount. Includes ESTIMATED REVENUES (Taxes Collectible, Supplemental Motor Vehicles, etc.), PROPOSED BUDGET EXPENDITURES (Administration, Public Works, etc.), ADMINISTRATION BUDGET (President, Directors, etc.), OPERATING EXPENSES (Contingency, Insurance, etc.), CAPITAL IMPROVEMENTS (Office, Firehouse, etc.), and GRAND TOTAL.

Table with 2 columns: Category and Amount. Includes CAPITAL EXPENDITURES (Complete Engine, etc.), PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT (SALARIES, OPERATING EXPENSES, CAPITAL EXPENSES), and GRAND TOTAL.

EIGHTH UTILITIES DISTRICT OF MANCHESTER
ANNUAL FIRE MARSHAL'S REPORT

The Fire Marshal's Office continues assuming duties of full time availability with one day a week for inspections, meetings and classes, and has accomplished the following: 112 inspections were conducted with follow-ups and letters sent citing fire safety code violations where necessary. Six fire investigations were conducted for more serious fires within the District; three were no serious losses. Hazardous structures on Main Street and Oakland Street were razed. Efforts are continuing to eliminate several other hazardous structures within the District. Certificate was received for successful completion of courses conducted by the National Fire Protection Association pertaining to the new Connecticut Fire Safety Code which went into effect April 15. New commercial development has consumed much time with meetings of planners, developers and builders to determine the best fire detecting and protecting systems for the various occupancies. We anticipate more such effort for the coming year. The joint efforts of the Fire Prevention Team and the quick efficient response of the Fire Department kept losses to a minimum throughout the year. RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED, GRANVILLE LINGARD, FIRE MARSHAL.

Prevention Week in October. A public information effort with the school visitations they presented a program to the Housing for the Elderly, and they arranged twelve tours of Fire Headquarters for the various scout groups. The Department purchased a Bag Mask Resuscitator and a K-13 Rescue Saw with memorial donations in the memory of Benjamin A. Cavazza and Bernice Martin. In the fiscal year the Manchester Fire Department has once again strived to serve the district residents and merchants in a professional and responsible manner. We would like to take this opportunity to thank the residents, merchants, and business people of the Eighth Utilities District for their continued support in helping us to make our community a safer place in which we live. Respectfully submitted, Harold A. Toplin, Jr., Chief MFD.

EIGHTH UTILITIES DISTRICT OF MANCHESTER
TREASURER'S REPORT
JULY 1, 1986 TO APRIL 30, 1987

Table with 2 columns: Category and Amount. Includes Checkbook balance, Receipts (1986 taxes and additions, interest on taxes, etc.), Disbursements (ADMINISTRATION, PUBLIC WORKS DEPT., FIRE DEPT.), Cash balances, Reserve funds, Anticipated expenses, and Balance.

REPORT FROM PRESIDENT

Thanks to the cooperation of your District Officers, staff, and the Fire Department, there will be no tax increase this year. Through their efforts, we have held spending increases to equal the grand list assessment increases. This is indeed good news for the taxpayers of the District. Thanks to the efforts of a great many people, too numerous to mention, the referendum question on the Town wide ballot last November effecting the District was resolved in favor of the District. Discussions are still taking place with the Town in an effort to put to bed once and for all the difficulties that have arisen over the years. Our new computer system is 100% on line and being utilized for payroll information, as well as tax records information. The program has been so successful that we hope to upgrade and utilize the computer program even more in the coming year. The Fire Department continues to improve its service to the District thru judicious purchases of the latest state of the art equipment and thru a vigorous personnel training program. A more dedicated group of volunteers and their enthusiasm would be hard to find. The Christmas Tree sale and the Peach Festival have become an area-wide institution enjoyed by friends from many surrounding towns as well as the Town of Manchester. There are prospects for tremendous development in the Northwest section of the District. While some may feel that increases development is a mixed blessing, with the continued growth in population and the growth in Connecticut's economy, development is a natural by-product. My personal and deepest thanks to the voters of the District for their confidence in allowing me to represent them. It is indeed an honor. Peace and blessing to all of you. Walter N. Joyner, President, Eighth Utilities District.

Van Berg is leaving nothing to chance as he prepares Alysheba for Preakness

By Ed Schuyler Jr. The Associated Press
BALTIMORE — Jack Van Berg, trainer of Kentucky Derby winner Alysheba, believes he has enough horse to win the Preakness Saturday at Pimlico. But Van Berg is leaving nothing to chance. Katrina Owens, Miss Preakness of 1984, attended the annual Alibi Breakfast Friday at the residence of Van Berg because 1984 was the year he won the race with Gate Dancer. Alysheba also is staying in stall 18 in the barn housing Preakness horses instead of stall 40, where the Derby winner traditionally stays at Pimlico. Gate Dancer stayed in stall 18. Van Berg also plans to wear the same brown suit Saturday that he wore on Derby Day May 2 at Churchill Downs. "That's the only coat he's got," quipped trainer D. Wayne Lukas, who will try and win the Preakness with Lookinforshibeagon after finishing out of the money in the Derby with the entry of Capote, War and On The Line. "I thought his race in the Arkansas Derby, when he ran second to Demons Begone, was a big one," Lukas said. The trainer felt, however, that Lookinforshibeagon was not seasoned enough to start in the 1 1/4-mile Derby. The Preakness is 1 3/16 miles. Demons Begone was the betting favorite in the Derby, but bled and did not finish. He is the third Derby winner in six years to miss the Preakness. The others who missed, because of decisions by their owners, were Gate Del Sol, 1982, and Spend a Buck, 1985. Pleasant Colony, 1981, was the last winner of both the Derby and Preakness. He then finished third in the 1 1/4-mile Belmont. The 11th and last Triple Crown winner was Affirmed in 1976. Alysheba will face eight other 3-year-olds Saturday. If all start, the 112th Preakness will be worth $543,000, with $412,100 to the winner. ABC will televise from 4:30 p.m. to 6 p.m. EDT, and post time is 5:33 p.m.

races in 1978, and most of his winners in the 1970s were recorded at Maryland tracks. The California-based McCarron, who hit the 4,000-victory plateau in 1985, has been riding with an eight-ounce stainless steel plate and 11 screws in his left leg as a result of a five-horse spill last Oct. 17 at Santa Anita. He returned to riding March 12, 1987.

NBA draft lottery to determine Robinson's future

By The Associated Press
NEW YORK — The team that takes Navy center David Robinson in next month's NBA draft may have to wait two years for its ship to come in. Robinson is considered the best player available, but his two-year commitment to Navy service may alter the strategy of the team that gets the No. 1 pick in Sunday's draft lottery. "No one really knows what Robinson wants to do," said Elgin Baylor, executive vice president of the Los Angeles Clippers. "He's in good bargaining position to wait two years and do what he wants. If we get the No. 1 pick, we'll press him to answer those questions." The Clippers are one of seven non-playoff teams that will participate in the lottery, which will be televised live by CBS. The other participants are San Antonio, Phoenix, Sacramento, Cleveland, New York and New Jersey. The lottery will determine the order of selection for the first seven picks in the June 22 draft. Robinson's military obligation will probably prevent him from playing any games in the NBA for two years, and that has some teams worried. "We may not want to be the No. 1 team this year," San Antonio President Angelo Drossos said. "There's a danger that he might not sign in a year, and you could waste the pick." Joe Axelson, general manager of Sacramento, said the team that gets the No. 1 pick will have a tough decision to make. "If we get it, we'll have to deal with it," he said. "If we get it, we'll have in the neighborhood of a month to find out what it means. All we know is that Robinson is a great player." New Jersey's general manager, Bob Weltman, said the team that wins the lottery has three options. "You can pick and sign Robinson, then wait two years," he said. "You can pick him and then trade his rights. And you can pick someone else." The 7-foot Robinson was the leading shot-blocker in the country last season. He was also among the national leaders in scoring and rebounding. Other top players in the draft include 6-11 Olden Polynice of Virginia, who played in Italy last season; 7-0 Chris Welp of Washington; 6-9 Armon Gilliam of Nevada-Las Vegas; 6-7 Reggie Williams of Georgetown; 6-3 Kenny Smith of North Carolina; 6-9 Dallas Cogsway of DePaul; 6-5 Dennis Hopson of Ohio State and 6-9 Derrick McKey of Alabama.

Although they are not in the lottery, the Seattle SuperSonics are very interested in the outcome because of a trade they made with the New York Knicks last year. When the Knicks acquired Gerald Henderson from Seattle in November, they agreed to give the SuperSonics their 1988 first-round pick provided it wasn't one of the top three selections. So if the Knicks draw the No. 4, 5, 6 or 7 pick Sunday, it will be turned over to Seattle. New York would then end up with the 18th pick in the first round. This year's lottery will be slightly different than the two previous ones. Under the new system, the team with the worst record in the league (the Clippers) will be assured of getting one of the top four picks.

IT'S BACK TO BOSTON

Bucks beat Celts to force game 7

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sidney Moncrief scored 34 points and Paul Pressey and John Lucas led a late 6-0 surge Friday night as the Milwaukee Bucks beat the Boston Celtics 121-111 to send the NBA playoff series back to Boston for a seventh game on Sunday.

Pressey drove the baseline for a reverse layup with three minutes left to give the Bucks a 110-108 lead after Kevin McHale's free throw, capping a 14-4 run Boston run, tied the game with 3:16 left.

Larry Bird missed inside and Lucas twice drove for baskets, giving the Bucks a 114-108 lead with 1:52 to go.

Moncrief connected on a 3-pointer at the buzzer to wrap up the emotional victory that featured a second-quarter fight between Moncrief and Danny Ainge.

Sikma had 17 points and Terry Cummings and Pressey 16 each for the Bucks. Dennis Johnson led the Celtics, who were playing without injured center Robert Parish, with 25 points. Bird and Ainge had 22 points each and McHale 21.

After trailing by 15 points in the first half, the Bucks opened a 102-93 lead with 8:27 left with a 17-2 run behind the play of Craig Hodges and Ricky Pierce.

But Boston, which missed 12 of its first 13 shots in the fourth quarter, rallied as Ainge and Johnson hit back-to-back 3-pointers, starting a 10-0 streak. McHale's basket with 4:36 left tied the game at 104-104 and Ainge hit another 3-pointer at the 4:02 mark as the Celtics regained the lead at 107-106.

The Bucks, down 67-59 at the half, used six points from Pressey to pull within 78-74 with 8:54 to go in the third quarter.

But Fred Roberts, who had 13 points, got loose twice for baskets, spurring an 8-0 Celtic run, giving Boston an 86-74 advantage with 4:50 remaining in the quarter.

The Celtics still led 91-88 in the final minute of the quarter, but the Bucks scored five points in the final nine seconds as Moncrief drove for a basket and Hodges turned a steal into a three-point play to make it 91-90 entering the final period.

Boston led 42-32 with 10:11 left in the second quarter when Ainge committed a hard foul on Moncrief as he was driving to the basket.

Moncrief then wrestled Ainge to the floor as both benches emptied and two minutes of holding and shoving ensued.

Once order was restored, Moncrief made both free throws on Ainge's foul and both players were assessed a fighting foul.

The Celtics, behind two baskets by Johnson, then went on an 8-1 run to take their biggest lead at 59-55. Johnson had 12 second-quarter points.
