Flag Facts
Contrary to popular belief, Betsy Ross did not sew the first American flag. The Betsy Ross myth apparently began with a story told by her grandson, William Canby, in 1870. He claimed that, in 1776, members of the congressional flag committee asked Betsy to sew the first flag. However, there was no flag committee that year. It wasn't until 1777 that the Continental Congress agreed to a design for the flag, and no one knows for sure who made the first one.

Gordon Lassow retires ego, 8th District career

Gordon B. Lassow, 52, the retiring Eighth Utilities District director, reflects on his 20-year career in politics.

Meanwhile, his years on the board saw the beginning of widespread development in the North End. What had been a relatively rural section of Manchester is now becoming a commercial center.

Lassow said he is proud of his efforts to modernize and improve the operations of the district which is 99 years old. He said he was particularly pleased with the purchase of a computer system and an aerial ladder truck.

Lassow said he does not want to completely end his involvement in politics, but he needs some time off.

"When you have the Board of Directors against you, I used to fight it out on my own," he said. "I don't think you can win when they're wrong," he said. Lately, though, that energy has been missing.

Lassow is one of Lassow's interests. He and his wife of 31 years, Marilyn, have an extensive collection of Wedgwood porcelain in their Hollister Street home. Some pieces date back to the 1800s.

He also likes to paint, and is an avid sports fan. The Boston Celtics basketball team is his favorite, and he and his wife own stock in the franchise.

A member of Manchester High School's Class of 1953, Lassow played football in high school. At Boston University, he started as center.

After his college years, he served in the Air Force. He considered making a career of the service, but left in 1961 to take a job as a meteorologist with the Travelers Insurance Co.

Lassow had studied meteorology in the Air Force and stayed with Travelers until 1973. Then he held a number of brief jobs, one involving computers and another with a travel agency.

He and his two brothers then took over his father's oil company, Ellsworth & Lassow Inc. on Oakland Street, when his father retired in 1974. He has been there since.

Health problems, caused mostly by obesity and diabetes, have plagued him recently. Last year, he spent some time in the hospital. Each day, he takes a number of pills.

Lassow said it is emotionally difficult at times being his size. He declined to give his weight, but did note that in college he weighed about 185 pounds.

Despite his problems, he has a sense of humor and considers himself an emotional person who is liable to say something in the heat of the moment without thinking about it until later.

"Sometimes you don't have time... You see something happening, you yell," he said. "I never scream or yell or rant or rave. I don't think I do get emotional. I get sad and I get happy and I get scared," he added.

Lassow has not always lived in Manchester. Although he grew up here, mostly on Autumn Street in the southern end of town, he lived in Hebron for 10 years before moving back in the late 1960s with his wife and three sons.

While in Hebron, he served on the Democratic Town Committee, the Board of Education, and the town Planning Commission.

For the future, Lassow said he might be willing to serve on a number of Inland Boards. If asked, however, he ruled out the town Board of Directors.

He said he also would continue to follow Eighth District affairs.

"I plan on being. If they want, an elder statesman to give whatever advice, or the good auspices of my experience," he said. "I don't plan on being a mentor. I plan on being an augur."

A new star

Mariette Hartley, co-host of CBS-TV's "The Morning Program" and a wisecracking star of camera commercials with James Garner, has been given a star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame.

Miss Hartley received the 1,400th star on the Walk of Fame on Thursday in front of about 150 friends and admirers. "It's one thing to walk along Hollywood Boulevard and see stars in the pavement. It's another to trip over your own," she said.

Miss Hartley made her film debut in "Hide the High Country" with Joel McCrea and Randolph Scott. Her TV appearances include "Star Trek" and "The Rockford Files," the latter with Garner.

Her series of commercials with Garner earned her three Clio advertising awards.

The Hollywood Chamber of Commerce installs the stars on Hollywood Boulevard for a $3,500 fee and a guarantee that the star will appear at the installation.

On July 4, and invitations have also gone out to the mayors of 32 other Oxford in the United States.

Mayor John Leslie of Oxford, Miss., said Thursday that Ramsey accepted an invitation Tuesday and will tour the United States with his wife, Irene, after their Mississippi visit.

"After this, maybe I can get the people here to call me lord mayor," Leslie quipped. He said Ramsey's attendance is especially significant because all Oxford in the United States were named for Oxford, England.

The name choice in 1837 was a successful ploy to attract the state's major public university, which was founded in 1848.

Riot feared

Authorities fearing racial violence canceled a rap concert in Seattle scheduled for Wednesday at the Beatle Boys and Run-D.M.C.

City police recommended cancellation, citing reports that black and white teen-agers were planning to brawl at the show at the Seattle Coliseum, said Terry McLaughlin, finance director for the arena's operator.

Police were confident security could be maintained during the show but after, McLaughlin said. Unruly fans have caused violence at other stops on the groups' tour.

About 3,500 tickets had been sold for the show and will be either refunded or accepted for use if the concert is rescheduled at another location, McLaughlin said.

Few suits against Manchester ever end up in the courts

By George Lovno Herald Reporter

Most of the claims and lawsuits against the town of Manchester are settled out of court, and the town usually ends up paying.

"We always come to the (town) Board of Directors to pay," said Town Attorney John Conroy. In fact, at this week's meeting, the board approved two settlements totaling nearly $18,000.

"We were pleased," Conroy said. "One of those for $15,000 was for a volunteer at Camp Kennedy who, while engaging in horseplay, injured himself when he ran into a steel post in 1983.

The other, for $2,950, was for a Nathan Hale student who was hit in the eye with a rock thrown during recess in 1985.

But the news is not all bad for the town.

Although forgotten for a few months, and mentioned almost as an afterthought by Conroy at the board's meeting this week, the town defeated an East Hartford woman's efforts to collect $40,000 as the town of liability for a child's death.

Some board members were also happy. Director Stephen T. Casano said knowing the town finally won one will make it psychologically easier to approve other claims in the future.

There are no readily available statistics on how many cases Manchester and other municipalities have won and lost.

But over the past few years, the number of claims and lawsuits against municipalities around the country have skyrocketed. This has resulted in higher insurance rates, and more decisions against towns as the town of liability for a child's death.

"It's common knowledge that towns often unjustly do have to pay," Conroy argued.

Of all claims filed against the town, Conroy said about 5 percent actually end up in court, and many of these are resolved before a trial is held. He explained that because the entire process is long, plaintiffs often want to settle out of court.

"An awful lot of time goes into a case," Conroy said.

That process begins with a notice for example of an injury someone claims was due to a faulty sidewalk. That a demand for money is sent. If that is not settled, a lawsuit is filed.

The long legal process then begins with discovery, which is an exploration of the facts. This often includes reports from doctors and engineers. This is usually followed by a number of pre-trial motions, and then trial itself.

The case won by the town, for example, began in November 1982 and was resolved this January.

Frances Miceli, 55, of East Hartford said she injured herself when she fell on a sidewalk on Wetherell Street. Miceli claimed the road was defective and the town was at fault.

Attempts to settle the matter out of court failed. When Miceli asked for $40,000, Conroy said the town decided to fight. Represented by a number of pre-trial motions, and then trial itself.

Attempts to settle the matter out of court failed. When Miceli asked for $40,000, Conroy said the town decided to fight. Represented by Assistant Town Attorney Thomas P. Ceina in Tolland County Superior Court, the town won.

That meant it did not have to pay a single cent in damages, although there was a cost to prosecute the case. Conroy said it is difficult to know if the amount of time and money spent on a case is equal to the verdict in the long run.

Somewhat philosophically, Conroy, quoted something Thomas Jefferson said about efforts by the United States to stop pirates in Libya in the early 1800s.

"Millions for defense, but not a penny for tribute."

MCC search panel still at work
The search committee seeking a new president for Manchester Community College is still screening applications and has asked for more information about some of the 120 people who have applied for the post.

Andrew C. McKirdy, executive director of the Board of Trustees of Regional Community Colleges, said Thursday that the final selection will be made this summer, but he could not say exactly when. He said searches for community college presidents "take longer than we would like, and this is one no exception."

The final selection is made by the board of trustees. Normally, the search committee narrows the choice down to two or three applicants for consideration by the board. The selection process is nowhere near that point now, McKirdy said.

Dr. William E. Vincent, president of MCC for about seven years, is leaving July 1 to become president of Bucks County Community College in Newton, Pa.

Those in Route 6's way get a break

By George Lovno Herald Reporter

Fifteen families now living in the path of the proposed Route 6 expressway will be able to stay in their homes longer without paying rent once the state Department of Transportation acquires title.

Beginning July 1, residents will be able to remain in their homes 90 days rent-free. DOT Rights of Way Director James Lewis said Thursday. Currently, residents have to pay a rent to the state after 30 days.

The department decided this week to change that after a review of its use and occupancy regulations.

The move was welcomed Thursday by one affected homeowner in Andover, and by a state legislator who unsuccessfully tried this year to get similar changes made through legislative channels.

"I think it's good. I'm happy they're moving in that direction," said Laurel Houle of Bunker Hill Road. Her house is currently being appraised to be purchased by the state.

"It's a small victory, but it is a victory," said state Rep. Edith G. Prusse, D-Columbia.

She had introduced a bill that would have allowed a 120-day rent-free period and lowered the rent paid by those who stay after 120 days. The measure, which had the support of the DOT, cleared the House of Representatives but was defeated in the Senate.

Prusse said the change from 30 days to 90 days is substantial. However, she said she would have preferred the 120-day period, and basing the monthly rent on one-twelfth of 5 percent of the home's value.

Currently, rent is based on one-twelfth of 8 percent. Lewis said the DOT did consider lowering it further, but fell 6 percent was appropriate.

Bolton parents speak up on athletics

By Andrew Yurkovsky Herald Reporter

BOLTON - Pointing to the recent disbanding of the Bolton High School baseball team, several parents told the Board of Education Thursday night that the school board and the Recreation Commission should better coordinate athletic programs in the town.

During the board's meeting at Bolton Center School, the parents said existing town and school facilities ought to be improved and more money spent for school coaches.

On May 13, Bolton High School Principal Joseph Fleming disbanded the school's baseball team because six of 14 players had quit. The team had not won a game since 1983.

Greg Fortin, who has coached the town soccer and baseball teams, was among 10 parents at the board meeting. He said that school maintenance workers have been unwilling to make improvements to playing fields.

"There's got to be some communication between what the town is doing and what the school is doing," Fortin said. "If we work together, we won't be in the situation where we're kicked out of the league."

Parents also spoke up about the school's policy on smoking. Since February, one day a month has been set aside for this purpose.

The school board voted in January to launch an anti-smoking campaign rather than banning smoking outright. John T. Muro, who proposed the ban, applauded the anti-smoking campaign but spoke in favor of banning smoking entirely.

Present school policy allows students with parental permission to smoke at designated times outside the school building. Board member Pamela Z. Sawyer suggested that students be required to attend a class on the dangers of smoking before they are permitted to smoke in school.

The first roll well in the United States was drilled in 1859 at Tiusville, Pa.

Teen-ager admits two burglaries

Sentencing is scheduled July 22 for one of five Manchester teen-agers arrested in connection with 1986 burglaries at Highland Park School and the Southern New England Telephone Co.

John Limberger, 17, of 150 Pine St., pleaded guilty Wednesday in Superior Court to two counts of third-degree burglary. He was arrested on Dec. 5 with four other youths when police found about $10,000 of office equipment, including a computer and several telephones, in a pile outside the offices of Visiting Nurse and Home Care Inc. of Manchester.

Limberger was later charged in connection with the Nov. 29 theft of telephone equipment, valued at about $10,000, from two trucks behind the SNEY building.

Another youth charged in connection with the Dec. 5 burglary, John Oahman, 19, of 21 Shady Lane, was found guilty in May of third-degree burglary. He was given a 15-month suspended sentence with 30 months' probation.

Also in May, Thomas H. Shea, 18, of Ellington, pleaded guilty third-degree burglary charges in connection with the two burglaries. His sentencing is scheduled June 22.

Attorneys seek victims of abuse

NORWALK (AP) — Attorneys who represent clients charging the police department with civil rights violations are asking residents for help in their lawsuits against the city.

The attorneys are running ads in a local newspaper asking residents who have been subjected to police abuse to come forward, in order to help their efforts in suing the city for police brutality.

The ads read, "If you have been hurt, beaten, or in any way mistreated by a Norwalk police officer, or had your complaints ignored, we need your help."

She said the ads began running in the (Norwalk) Hour Monday, another ad appeared Wednesday and the final ad will run Friday.

Collins said he has "no opinion" on whether there is a problem with police brutality in Norwalk because the consulting firm has not finished its study of the situation.

"We get claims from time to time, but we have not detected what looks to be a problem," Collins said. He said the city and commissioners "still have the responsibility" to watch for it.

Police Chief Carl LaBlanca said he has seen the ads and has brought them to the attention of the corporation counsel.

Walter Marcus, corporation counsel, said he doesn't believe there is a problem with police brutality in Norwalk.

Inspector carries out his threat

Alwyn Broderson, Coventry's assistant building inspector, made good his threat to resign this week.

After putting up with what he termed "harassment" from town officials, a lack of staff and a mountain of paperwork, Broderson, 77, called it quits.

It wasn't as though he didn't yell loud enough that he needed help. In March, he took on the responsibility of the full department after Building Inspector John Wilnauer had to leave the job because of an injury.

When he took over, Broderson warned the Town Council that he needed help badly and he might leave unless the new sewer-avoidance construction inspector, Gilbert Sass, was put under his direct supervision.

The Town Council, it appears, tried to make the best of a bad situation. Before Broderson voiced his complaints in March, the council had decided that Sass would work under the supervision of the new sewer plant operator.

However, a council member later said Sass would be assigned to the building department. What apparently happened was that Sass was assigned to the building department on a part-time basis, devoting only 15 hours a week to the job.

The building department's problems may be directly linked to the tremendous building boom in Coventry in the last two years, and the resulting "boom" in work for the building department.

The Town Council's inability to recognize the problems and Town Manager Harold Hodge's pressure on the department to meet deadlines are the factors that finally made Broderson decide to submit his resignation after five years.

The situation isn't going to get better until a serious effort is made to evaluate just how much staff the department needs, and then provide that staff. Broderson can be replaced, but there's no guarantee his successor will remain on the job if things don't improve.

Hart affair makes bedrooms fair game

It must have been a demeaning moment for Barney Frank, but it wasn't a happy one for journalists. The other day the Democratic congressman from Massachusetts called in a reporter from The Boston Globe and told him that he is gay.

It was a sagacious move. Call it a preemptive confession by a politician who saw what had happened to Gary Hart and took the lesson seriously. From now on any politician must confess to the fact that he is gay.

Anybody who's been around Washington for a while had to know that Barney Frank is gay. Nevertheless, Frank's sex life had been his own business until recently, so it cannot be a pleasant experience to discuss such intimate things with a reporter from the biggest newspaper in his home state. For a wider public, that a member of Congress was driven to protect his career by making such personal revelations is an indicator of media power and the uses to which it is put.

SINCE NEWSPAPERS and television put on the Hart peep show, no politician who hasn't worn a chastity belt since his or her 18th birthday can feel safe. Unfortunately, only a few are in position to do what Barney Frank did. Married homosexuals or press, but television especially, isn't itself to be blamed. Given that antagonism toward lesbians may be greater than it is toward gays, it would be courting a terminal career crash for them to go public. Barney Frank's being a Democrat also gave him a bit of an edge. His party has been markedly less savage toward homosexuality.

How Ted got Jesse's goat

By Lee Gould
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Senate debate over campaign finance reform the other day revealed at least one member of Congress who apparently would prefer getting re-elected without having to ask the voters for their help.

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., who is sponsoring a bill to limit spending on Senate elections, recalled in a floor speech a conversation he had with a colleague he would not identify.

"I talked to one congressman and he said, 'I would like it if I could raise 100 percent of my money from PACs,'" Boren said, referring to political action committees, the popular and powerful special-interest campaign contributors.

Boren said his colleague "was clearly one of those who raised far more than 50 percent from PACs instead of the people back home."

Boren said the unnamed lawmaker told him, "I really like the fact that I can raise $200,000 or $400,000 in one night here in Washington, D.C., in a fund-raiser, because now I do not have the embarrassment of having to go back to the people in my home district or home state and ask them to contribute to my campaign."

Boren said the man asked him if Boren, too, wouldn't be happier if he didn't need to ask supporters for money.

"I said, 'Thank God the Constitution requires us to require the people to participate in elections, and it requires us to ask them for their votes,'" Boren recalled.

Boren's story triggered the memory of Sen. William Armstrong, a Colorado Republican.

Although there are a lot of gay Republican politicians, the party's success makes unlikely we'll see avowed gay GOP officials soon. Vice George Bush's wisecrack at the recent AIDS meeting in Washington. Thus, though many politicians may want to put fear and blackmail behind them by copying Barney Frank, few can.

A consequence of Hart's destruction has been to embolden newspapers and television to expose the sex lives of prominent non-politicians. The first was the Rev. Jim Bakker. The well-publicized and much beleaguered founder of television's gaudiest Christ-orama (or is it a Jesu-thon?) has undergone a crucifixion himself from the gonad-seeking elements in our mass media.

PRE-HART, if Jerry Falwell had said that Jim Bakker was gay, no newspaper or television network would have touched it. Now it's as

PLO's Arafat reconciles with Syria

WASHINGTON — Yasir Arafat, the brawny PLO Liberation Organization chieftain, has been given an ultimatum he can't refuse. He has been told to make up with his arch-enemy, Syrian President Hafez Assad — and he's doing it.

What makes the rapprochement all the more bizarre is the source of the pressure on Arafat: Israeli President Shimon Peres, with the formidable backing of the Soviet Union. Hussein himself is a longstanding enemy of Assad, yet he's the one who ordered Arafat to get along with the Syrian dictator.

It was Assad-supported Palestinians who split the PLO four years ago and tried to assassinate Arafat in the process. But Arafat will cozy up to the hated Assad, in deference both to Iraq and to the Soviets, who are too powerful to turn down.

The Soviet strategy, according to intelligence reports, is to create a united, pro-Soviet, Arab front against Israel.

At Soviet prompting, the Palestine National Council, the PLO's "parliament-in-exile," met from April 20 to 26 in Algeria and achieved stunning progress toward unity. At the previous meeting more than two years ago, Syrian-supported radical factions boycotted the council.

THIS TIME they not only showed up, but actually reunited with Arafat's more moderate elements. There were occasions when the rapprochement seemed doomed, but each time the Soviet ambassador to Algeria, Vasily Taratuta, secretly intervened to pacify the squabbling Palestinians.

Arafat thought things were going swimmingly — until he got word from the Iraqi leader to "go easy on the Syrians" at the conference. "Arafat hit the roof at that," an intelligence source told. "He was appalled."

Arafat shouldn't have been surprised. His own intelligence sources — probably the Saudis — had warned him that Iraq and Syria were on the verge of patching up their long and bitter hostility.

After a brief display of pique, Arafat went along with Hussein's order. Declarations by the conference that would have antagonized Syria were dropped. (Arafat later spat his radical PLO leader George Habash at Damascus for talks with Assad.)

While the PLO meeting was going on, Assad flew to Moscow on April 23 for a two-day visit — his first in two years. In the backrooms of Moscow, our sources understand, the Soviets leaned heavily on the Syrian leader to talk things out with Iraqi President Hussein.

JUST AS ARAFAT had to pay attention to his patron, Hussein, Assad had to heed the advice of his Soviet benefactors. Syria owes the Kremlin more than $1 billion for weapons supplied over the years, and doesn't have the money to pay up.

Assad's trip to Moscow was ostensibly to discuss rescheduling this huge debt, and the Soviets used it as leverage to move Syria closer to Iraq.

The Soviet pressure appears to have been decisive. The day after his return from Moscow, April 26, Assad secretly flew off to the Royal Jordanian Air Force base at Al Jafir for a dramatic meeting with Iraq's Hussein. As we reported, the two old enemies met head-to-head for 12 hours on April 27, interrupted only occasionally by another meeting between Hussein and Assad.

The two neighbors resolved several issues outstanding between their two countries. But the most important difference — Syria's support of Iran in its war against Iraq — remained unsettled at the end of the meeting. Our sources say, in fact, that Assad sent his foreign minister to Tehran on May 12 to reaffirm Syrian friendship for the Iranians, who had gotten wind of the secret meeting between Hussein and Assad.

Why did Assad, normally so independent, go along with the Soviet plan for rapprochement with Iraq? The answer may be that Iran has a little sliver in renewing its agreement to provide Syria with free oil.

Breakable bolts
A Customs Service investigation of counterfeit steel bolts may result in a federal grand jury indictment this month. We broke the story about the bolts in our March 27 issue. The bolts are made in U.S. military hardware. The bogus bolts look like the genuine article, but under high temperatures they can turn to putty. The Customs Service has been looking into imports of the dangerously substituting steel bolts in Chicago, New York and Los Angeles — a total of a dozen cases of possible fraud. Counterfeit bolts have been found in bridges, dams, nuclear power plants and military weapons.

U.S./World In Brief

NEW YORK — Bernhard Goetz was a "dark spirit" of "a blind, self-righteous, violent fury" when he shot four young men on a subway train, a prosecutor said in summing up the attempted-murder case against Goetz.

"It's ugly. It's coldblooded. It's savage. It should sound alien to you," Assistant District Attorney Gregory Waples told the jury Thursday, nearly seven weeks after he opened the trial with a similar condemnation of Goetz's actions.

The jury was expected to begin deliberating today after instructions from the judge, state Supreme Court Justice Stephen Crane.

Goetz, 29, an electronics technician, has been charged with attempted murder, assault, reckless endangerment and weapon violations in the case, which has raised questions about how far citizens may go to defend themselves.

On Wednesday, defense attorney Barry Slotnick summed up his case, portraying Goetz as a victim who saw that Troy Cany, Barry Allen, James Rameur and Darrell Cobey were about to rob him, and shot them first on Dec. 22, 1984.

Waples argued that the four 19-year-olds were too shrewd to rob Goetz in plain view of other passengers.

Last words: 'rather be fishing'
ANGOLA, La. — A swaggering Jimmy Glass said he'd "rather be fishing" before being executed in the electric chair early today for the shooting deaths of a bound and gagged couple in 1982.

Glass, the last Louisiana inmate executed in five days, was pronounced dead at 12:14 a.m., eight minutes after the first of four, 15-second jolts of electricity were administered, said Corrections Commissioner C. Hall Phelps.

The 25-year-old high school dropout went to his death after the U.S. Supreme Court rejected an appeal without comment Thursday evening. The high court also had refused to stop Louisiana executions on Sunday and Tuesday.

Glass grinned as he was strapped into the chair. Asked moments earlier if he had a final statement, he said, "Yeah, I think I'd rather be fishing."

He heaped to mouth the word "hi" in the direction of Bosier Parish District Attorney Henry Brown, who was seated in the witnesses' chamber behind a window. Later the prosecutor said, "I don't think he saw me."

Dukakis outlines AIDS policy
BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis on Thursday announced an ambitious AIDS education program aimed at reaching every household in the state.

"Prevention and education are our two most important and effective strategies," Dukakis said at a news conference. "If you start mandating these things, the folks you want are going to be driven away."

Dukakis, who is seeking the Democratic presidential nomination, said he was proud of Massachusetts' early commitment to spending state funds on AIDS research and criticized the Reagan administration for spending too little and relying too heavily on mandatory testing.

The education plan announced by the governor includes: Dukakis said he had asked the Department of Public Health to review whether it would be appropriate to require pre-marital counseling on AIDS similar to the existing program to warn couples about rubella.

"In my judgment, probably yes," Dukakis said. The governor also said the 13 existing state-funded AIDS screening sites would be expanded to 28 in the coming fiscal year and that screening capacity would increase from 3,600 tests to 37,500 annually.

Iranian brags about his gunboats
NICOSIA, Cyprus — An Iranian Revolutionary Guards leader boasted Thursday that his fast gunboats could and would destroy any American warship that tried to attack islands off his nation's coast.

Earlier, a Tehran-based Iraqi dissident group warned it would launch suicide operations against Americans if they carried out attacks in the Persian Gulf, Tehran radio reported.

Gulfers deputy commander Alireza Afshar declared as a "Muff" claim by U.S. officials that they could destroy Iranian land-ship missiles installed at the vital Strait of Hormuz.

Afshar, quoted by the state-run Islamic Republic News Agency in a dispatch monitored in Nicosia, said his gunboats could destroy the intruding warships even from a long distance.

Sale rejection is warning to Reagan
WASHINGTON — Congressional rejection of a proposed $360 million missile sale to Saudi Arabia should warn the Reagan administration to proceed cautiously before escalating the U.S. military role in the Persian Gulf, lawmakers say.

The administration was forced to drop the sale proposal Thursday after 67 senators, the exact number needed to override a presidential veto, signed a resolution of disapproval.

As his gulf policy was dealt a blow domestically, President Reagan said in Venice that he was satisfied with the limited support allies gave at the summit for his Persian Gulf security policies.

Fire hurts man during surgery
CHICO, Calif. (AP) — A man undergoing surgery for injuries suffered in an auto accident was seriously burned when a fire broke out on the operating table, officials said.

Bill Bittle, 21, of Clear Lake, suffered burns between his thighs from his knees to his buttocks, said Bernie Hietpas, assistant administrator at Enloe Hospital.

Bittle was in critical and unstable condition Thursday with a blood clot on the brain from the crash, said another assistant administrator, George Frihance.

'Iron Lady' wins third straight term

LONDON — Britons elected Margaret Thatcher prime minister for a third straight term, handing her a strong parliamentary majority to pursue her goals of demolishing British socialism and updating the country's nuclear arsenal.

The contrasting sentiments inspired by the prospect of up to five more years of Britain's "Iron Lady" were evident, with the pro-Tory Daily Express headlining "SUPERMAG" and her foes yelling "fascist scam" at her.

Less than five hours after polling stations closed following Thursday's general election, official results confirmed that the 61-year-old grocer's daughter, Europe's first woman prime minister, was also the first in 160 years to win three consecutive terms.

With 595 of the 650 seats in the House of Commons declared, Thatcher's Conservative Party held 348 to 225 for the socialist Labor Party and 16 for the centrist Alliance of Social and Democratic parties. Minor parties held the other six seats.

With the remaining results expected, the Tories were expected to draw fresh investment from the Far East. Dealers reported gains, though 14-seat majority for government stocks and the British pound.

Labor could take heart from the fact that which we witnessed previously. Kincock told supporters at his constituency in his native Wales.

With her husband Denis beside her at party headquarters, Thatcher exulted: "It is wonderful to be entrusted with the government of this country, this great country, once again."

London financial markets, invigorated by the prospect of a new Conservative government, for the first time stayed open overnight in expectation of another Tory victory. The market closed at a record high, with the British pound.

NRC rejects Seabrook license request
By Christopher Colohan
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Seabrook nuclear power plant officials say they will submit new evaluation blueprints to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission near the New Hampshire reactor following the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's latest refusal to grant the plant a low-power license.

New Hampshire Yankee had drafted new emergency plans for the six Massachusetts towns prior to the NRC's Thursday decision. The NRC on a 3-2 vote declined to remove a commission stay that is preventing Seabrook officials from receiving a license to operate the evacuated quickly and safely in an emergency, the utility submitted its own evacuation plans.

It looked like a plan put together too quickly," said Zech, adding that the commissioners did not review it in detail.

Another commissioner who voted against Seabrook, James K. Aselstine, said the panel rejected the plan because New Hampshire Yankee put no effort into drafting a proposal on its own and had simply submitted the plans Dukakis refused to file.

"Simply slipping a cover on the old Massachusetts plan is not enough," Aselstine said.

In Boston, Dukakis said Massachusetts officials are viewing the NRC ruling as a "temporary victory."

"We've been saying this all along because (the plans) don't protect the health and safety of men, women and children living in Massachusetts communities near the plant," Dukakis said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., also praised the decision, saying, "It appears that wiser heads are prevailing and the message that we conveyed in the 1970s is finally being heard."

During the 1970s, Seabrook was the focal point of the anti-nuclear power movement as hundreds of demonstrators were arrested in mass protests.

Granting of the low-power license would have been a major step toward bringing the beleaguered reactor into full operation. It originally was scheduled to be operational by 1979.

New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu, a leading Seabrook proponent, submitted evacuation plans for his state.

Bakkers return to park to 'say goodbye'

By William Strocener
The Associated Press

FORT MILL, S.C. — Jim Bakker got a hero's welcome during a surprise visit to "say goodbye" to the Christian theme park he built before his downfall, and vowed again to start a new ministry if he can't return to PTL.

Hundreds cheered Bakker and his wife, Tammy Faye, on Thursday at Heritage USA during Bakker's first visit to PTL's theme park and headquarters since a sex scandal forced him to step down as head of the TV ministry in March.

Asked the reason for his visit, Bakker said, "To say goodbye to all. If (the Rev.) Jerry Falwell lets us, we'll come back. But otherwise we are going to start a new ministry."

Falwell, who was given control of PTL by Bakker in March, has accused Bakker of avarice and homosexuality and has rebuffed Bakker's requests to return to his TV pulpit, given up after Bakker admitted having a sexual liaison in 1980 with church secretary Jessica Hahn.

Bakker, who arrived with his wife on the new PTL board has ordered the Bakkers to vacate and declared, "We're here to stay."

Bakker said on Wednesday that he intends to be back on television within 30 days, and that he has received five offers to return to TV ministry.

"We all want to get past it and move on. None of us know what we are doing," Chapman said.

Bakker said on Wednesday that he intends to be back on television within 30 days, and that he has received five offers to return to TV ministry.

"We're certainly entitled to go on TV or start a new ministry, if that's what they want to do. Certainly, they're not talking about being back on PTL, but we could not stop them from going on television," said Falwell spokesman Mark DeMoss.

DeMoss said he didn't know why the Bakkers visited Heritage Village.

"He's certainly entitled to go on the grounds. They're public grounds," DeMoss said, "he's not going to regulate this military" walking on the grounds."

Hargrave said PTL's chief operating officer, wrote the Bakkers three weeks ago, giving them until June 15 to get their belongings out of the Tega Cay home.

Hargrave said PTL officials will meet with the Bakkers over the next few days, and work with them to determine which of the contents belong to PTL and which to the Bakkers.

data for 1985 and 1986 indicate that about the number of marriages and marriage rate have since declined.

While the marriage rate for eligible young women dropped to a new low, the national marriage rate was steady at 10.5 weddings per 1,000 people during the year, the same as a year earlier.

That indicates that the increase in total marriages was about the same percentage as the overall population growth in the year. But the 15-to-44 age group was growing faster, thus resulting in a lower marriage rate for those people.

One tradition remained, the study confirmed, however — the June marriage is still most popular, more than doubling the January rate of weddings.

Other findings of the new study included:
• While women have a higher first marriage rate, men are more inclined to remarry after divorce.

• For divorced people who do remarry, women wait an average of 2.4 years, while men wait 3.1 years. Widows remarry at a higher rate than widowers, with widowers remarrying after an average of 3.7 years.

• In general, divorced persons marry at far higher rates than do single persons, and both divorced and single people marry at higher rates than those who were never married.

• Average age at first marriage continued the increase that has been under way in recent years, reaching 23.8 for brides and 25.7 for bridegrooms.

Tricia Erickson listens to a question during an interview in her McLean, Va., home Thursday. With Fawn Hahn as a friend and Donna Rice as a client, Erickson and her talent agency are doing a booming business these days.

McLEAN, Va. — With Fawn Hahn as a friend and Donna Rice as a client, Tricia Erickson and her talent agency are doing a booming business these days.

"I'm not a hot-shot New York or Los Angeles talent agency, but I do care about people who get into the same situation," Erickson said Thursday in an interview at her home just outside Washington.

Erickson, 34, recently signed an agreement to represent Rice in future projects, such as articles, photo layouts, television spots and possibly a book.

"I view myself as more a protector," Erickson said, adding that her top concern is making sure Rice isn't exploited and that she maintains her emotional health.

"The first thing she is going to do is clean her room," Erickson said. Hahn, who lives with her parents in Fairfax County, Va., has turned down offers to drop out of the 1988 Democratic presidential race.

"I'm more concerned with her mental and mental health," Erickson said, describing a part of her business as "crisis management" — advising instant celebrities how to protect their interests.

"This all happened since Fawn, Jessica (Hahn) and Donna," Erickson said. She considered contacting Hahn, but hasn't followed through.

Hahn's one night with television evangelist Jim Bakker led to the unraveling of his empire.

Celtics have hope after Game 5 victory

By Howard Ulfson
The Associated Press

BOSTON — The Boston team returning to Los Angeles isn't the same Celtics bunch that got run out of town last week. That gives the Celtics hope for a seemingly hopeless task.

The Celtics had lost six straight road games, including Laker routs by 13 and 19 points in the first two games of the NBA championship series. They are trying to become the first team to survive a 3-1 deficit in the finals.

But after cutting that to 3-2 with a 123-106 romp Thursday night, they said they are better prepared to beat the Lakers at the Forum than they were in the first two games.

"I expect a lot better effort out of us in Los Angeles this time," said guard Danny Ainge, who sparked the Celtics with five 3-point field goals.

"We had one day off and one day to prepare going into the finals. We should have three days to prepare," Celtics coach K. C. Jones said. "Going to the finals with one day preparation spells disaster. But if we go out there and get blown out, I can't use that as an excuse anymore."

That is a distinct possibility Sunday in Game 6 of the best-of-seven series when the Lakers get their second opportunity to win their 10th NBA title and fourth of the decade. If needed, a seventh game will be played Tuesday night, also at the Forum.

The Celtics outplayed the Lakers in winning two of three games in Boston, where the Celtics are 86-21 in their last 107 games. Los Angeles is 46-4 this season on its home court and has to win just one of a possible two games there to take the title.

"We wanted to win, but we've got two games at home," Lakers guard Magic Johnson said. "It wasn't a do-or-die situation. We've been playing well out in L.A. On Sunday we are going to win."

"Maybe they just getting back to the Forum our players will remember what it's like to play Laker basketball," Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley said.

After setting it for five games, the Celtics are more confident that they can handle that style, which emphasizes a relentless fast break.

In addition, center Robert Parish and forward Kevin McHale don't seem as limited by their foot injuries as they were earlier in the playoffs.

"In Game 1, I don't think we were there, physically or mentally," Celtics backup center Greg Kite said. "We just weren't ready for them pushing the ball up so quick. We made some strides in Game 2, and since then I think we've been in a better flow and rhythm. We feel comfortable going out there."

"We're looking forward to the next 48 minutes of basketball to see if we can do what we've learned from the first two games."

Reagan urges Gorbachev to remove Berlin Wall dramatic remarks at Gorbachev, the Kremlin leader with whom he is trying to settle an arms pact and whom Europeans responding to a recent poll said was more of a peacemaker than Reagan.

"General Secretary Gorbachev, if you seek peace, if you seek prosperity for the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, if you seek liberalization, come here to this gate," Reagan said.

"Mr. Gorbachev, open this gate. Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall."

Specifically, Reagan urged increased free air access to West Berlin and suggested the city be the site of United Nations meetings or world conferences on human rights, arms control and other issues.

Among other things, Reagan suggested that Berlin — East and West — be the site of a future Olympic Games.

It was just after midnight on Aug. 13, 1961 when thousands of East German soldiers and militiamen began unrolling barbed wire and installing concrete blocks around the perimeter of the western sectors of Berlin to prevent people from fleeing from the East.

Twenty-six years later, the wall now stretches 103 miles around Berlin which is landlocked by East Germany. Its barriers reinforced by electric fences, trenches, dog runs and watchtowers.

Reagan said the wall, and other barriers between East and West, were "an instrument to impose upon ordinary men and women the will of a totalitarian state.

The anti-American demonstrations were about three miles from the gate where Reagan was to speak. A large area around the gate was cordoned off to prevent any of the demonstrators from getting within a mile of the president.

A sign on the Berlin Wall proclaimed, "Hello, world. Welcome President Reagan." The U.S. Embassy said an invitation-only crowd, estimated at 30,000, was expected.

Whalers with the elite at back of the drafting line

By Chris Dohi
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — They may not get a crack at the best player, but the Hartford Whalers have a chance to rub elbows with the National Hockey League's elite teams at the back of the drafting line.

By virtue of their best-ever regular season record, the Whalers will choose 10th among 21 teams in the 1987 NHL Draft Saturday at Joe Louis Arena in Detroit — a far cry from the not-so-long-ago team years when they would regularly be picking near the top.

The first and second picks, in order, belong to the Buffalo Sabres and New Jersey Devils while the Boston Bruins sneaked up to third by getting the Vancouver Canucks' first-round pick.

The Bruins pick again, 14th, followed by the Washington Capitals, Winnipeg Jets and Montreal Canadiens before Hartford gets a chance. The Calgary Flames, Philadelphia Flyers and Stanley Cup champion Edmonton Oilers are the only teams in back of the Whalers.

Instead of choosing somebody they hope can play in the NHL soon, or not immediately, the Whalers are relegated to picking somebody they hope can play and contribute in the future.

"It's like every other year in that there are three to six players who have the potential to step right in, the others are just prospects," assistant general manager Bob Crocker said Thursday in a telephone interview from his hotel room in Detroit.

The Whalers will pick 10th and 36th, but have given their third choice, 54th overall, to the Chicago Blackhawks as part of the deal that brought defenseman Bill Gardner in February 1986.

"In past years we would be talking about someone who could play right away. This year we're talking about the future. We're looking for someone who can help us two or three years down the line," Crocker said.

One player who won't be around by the time the Whalers pick is it's own player Sylvain Turgeon, Turgeon's younger brother, Pierre, a speedy, high-scoring 17-year-old center who's rated No. 1 by the NHL Central Scouting Bureau. If he's picked first by the Buffalo Sabres, he's almost sure to go second with the New Jersey Devils.

"He would be my first pick," said Crocker, who arrived in Detroit Thursday as did team president and general manager Emile Francis. "Pierre skates well, like Sylvain. He's got great hands, like Sylvain. But he's a little bit bigger and stronger than Sylvain."

"He has the potential to be more of a factor physically. But he's so young, you can never really tell. He'll be trying to replace a Gil Perreault in Buffalo, a 16-year-old. He certainly is the type of player you would build a franchise around though."

Although Hartford is in obvious need of a good-sized forward, Crocker said that, as always, the Whalers will pick the best available talent. This year's is a strong pool, dominated by defensemen, a position at which the Whalers are perhaps strongest.

"The defense (in the draft) looks really solid," Crocker said. "We wouldn't shy away from picking a defenseman if we thought he was a really good prospect. Our thinking is that we could always deal from a position of strength in the future. We can always trade for something we're looking for."

Record number taken in draft

NEW YORK — A record number of 1,263 amateur free agents were chosen in last week's draft by major league baseball teams, the commissioner's office announced. The previous record was 1,162 draftees in 1987.

The Kansas City Royals made the most selections, 74 in the 75 rounds. Next were the Toronto Blue Jays with 71, and the New York Mets and the Cincinnati Reds with 61 each.

Officials say McEnroe was hurt

NEW YORK — Tennis officials announced that no additional penalties would be levied against John McEnroe for leaving the court last month during a World Team Cup match in West Germany.

After investigating the incident, the Men's International Professional Tennis Council determined that a back injury prevented McEnroe from finishing his match against Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia.

UCLA, Tar Heel alumni to play

CHARLOTTE — It is being billed as a celebration of the two finest college basketball programs in the country.

North Carolina and UCLA alumni are scheduled to meet June 28 at Pantages Pavilion in Los Angeles in a nationally televised game, officials with Jefferson-Pilot Teleproductions in Charlotte said Thursday.

The game, to be televised by ABC, will honor former Bruins coach John Wooden and UNC's Dean Smith. Wooden and Smith faced each other once, in the 1988 NCAA championship game. The Bruins won 78-55.

Among those who have said they will play for the Tar Heels are Michael Jordan, James Worthy and Phil Ford. UCLA alumni expected to play are Marques Johnson, Kiki Vandeweghe and Michael Warren, who went on from UCLA to star on TV's "Hill Street Blues."

Mets' Backman put on disabled list

NEW YORK — The New York Mets Thursday placed second baseman Wally Backman on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to June 9, due to a pulled left hamstring.

Backman suffered the injury while batting out an infield single in the first inning of Monday's 4-2 loss to the Chicago Cubs. Backman is hitting .260 with no home runs and 8 RBIs.

The Mets also optioned pitcher Tom Edens to Tidewater of the Class AAA International League. Edens was 0-0 with a 6.75 earned run average in two appearances for the Mets since being recalled in late May. He was 2-4 with a 2.70 ERA with Tidewater before the call-up.

To fill the roster vacancies, the Mets recalled pitcher Jeff Innis from Tidewater and purchased the contract of veteran utilityman Clint Hurdle from the Tides.

Mets sign Redmen's Terry Bross

NEW YORK — Terry Bross, the starting center for the St. John's basketball team, was signed Thursday by the New York Mets as a pitcher but he will return to the Redmen for his senior year on the court.

Bross, a 6-foot-9 right-hander whose fastball has been clocked at over 90 mph, was selected by the Mets on the 13th round of the recent amateur draft. Bross was 0-1 with 17 strikeouts in 11 1/3 innings last year for the Redmen. He was assigned to Little Falls of the New York-Penn League and a team spokesman said Bross would be allowed to play baseball for St. John's next season.

Ripken, who ranks among the league leaders in home runs, RBIs and runs scored, received 501,040 votes. He led the AL in voting last year with 1,486,806 votes.

Outfielder Rickey Henderson, the runner-up with 394,098 votes, is among three New York Yankees leading their positions. Don Mattingly tops the first basemen, while Henderson and Dave Winfield are 1-3 in the voting for the three outfield positions.

MB's drop second of year

Two runs in the third inning lifted the Imaginners to a 4-2 victory over Moriarty Brothers in Greater Hartford Twilight Baseball League action Thursday night at Moriarty Field.

Moriarty's .3-2 is back in action Saturday night at 7:30 at Moriarty Field against Society for Savings.

The MB's left the bases loaded in the first inning and two in the third with Bill Kane's two-run single doing the damage in the latter frames. The winners added a run in the sixth. Steve Chotiner, in the first inning, and Bill Chapulis, in the fifth, knocked in Moriarty's run.

The MB's left the bases loaded in the fifth and sixth innings.

Ray Romero was the winning pitcher while Mark Hatje took the loss. Each hurler yielded five hits.

Netminders in demand at draft?

By Ken Ruppoppert
The Associated Press

DETROIT — Goalkeepers usually aren't high picks in the NHL draft. But this year could be different.

Jimmy Waite, a highly-regarded netminder from Chelmsford in the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, is on more than a few most-wanted lists as the 21 teams look ahead to Saturday's NHL draft at the Joe Louis Arena.

One of the lists belongs to General Manager Lou Nanne of the Minnesota North Stars, who will pick fourth in the draft.

"It's hard to judge how much of an impact a guy like Waite could make," Nanne said. "It's easier to evaluate skaters with other skaters."

But Nanne likes the background of this talented 6-foot, 183-pounder who relies heavily on cat-like reflexes and dismisses the fact that he was benched late during the Quebec League playoffs.

"He's 17, but he's already played so much hockey that being benched really isn't going to hurt him in the draft," Nanne said. "He's already shown he's going to be an excellent goaltender."

Nanne said he considered Waite in the same class with Edmonton's Grant Fuhr, who was the No. 4 pick in 1981.

Manchester junior high track squad

Lyle sets Westchester pace

By Bob Green
The Associated Press

HARRISON, N.Y. — Europeans Sandy Lyle and Seve Ballesteros took advantage of a familiar pairing and perfect weather to set the pace in the first round of the $500,000 Westchester Classic.

"We've played together many times, both here and in Europe," Lyle, a Scotman, said Thursday after shooting 65, one stroke better than Ballesteros, a Spaniard.

"I enjoy playing with Seve. I'm not awed, because we've played together so often, and sometimes you respond to his good play with good play of your own."

Ballesteros, who ranks as Europe's leading player, agreed.

"It helps you play better when you're with someone who is playing well," Ballesteros said after he and Lyle combined for a best ball 97.

Lyle, like Ballesteros a former British Open champion, set the pace with his 6-under-par round that included five consecutive birdies on the Westchester Country Club course in suburban New York.

"A good run," Lyle said of the burst of five birdies. "One of the better days I've had on the greens." He underplayed after dropping birdie putts totaling 182 feet in length.

Ballesteros responded with some scoring heroics of his own. He shot 68, or about 25 yards from the 18th and birdied in for a 66 that tied him for second with Loren Roberts.

Muraoka, No. 135 on this year's money list with $2,566 in earnings, was just one stroke off the pace set by Deb Richardson after Thursday's

Becker in form for Wimbledon

By Andrew Worslow
The Associated Press

LONDON — Wimbledon and Boris Becker are as inseparable as strawberries and cream.

As Becker prepares to defend his Wimbledon men's singles crown for the second time, the 19-year-old West German has been in sparkling form, powering his way into the quarterfinals of the $200,000 tournament at Queen's Club in West London.

Becker says he's surprised how well he's playing and is eager to get back on the Center Court at Wimbledon, his favorite Grand Slam tournament.

"I can't wait to get out there at 2 o'clock on that first Monday. I won't feel any pressure," he said.

"Whoever I play, I'll go out and enjoy Wimbledon in my home."

In his latest grass-court tuneup at Queen's Club, a tournament he won in 1985 on the way to his first Wimbledon title, Becker registered 10 aces Thursday in beating John Sadri, himself a big server. 8-4, 6-4.

Becker lost only seven points in 10 service games, six of them won at love.

"I did not expect to be playing so well," he said.

"You can imagine what you could do with Montreal if you wanted to make a trade with Turgeon or with Boston involving potential No. 2 pick, Brendan Shanahan of the OHL's London Knights. I'm not saying we'd want to move one of our first two picks, but that is the first time we've given it consideration."

Rodriguez blazing

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez, winner of his last four senior events and five of 10 tournaments this year, is off to a blazing start in the $400,000 Senior Tour tournament.

He also is facetiously humble of the record 7-under-par 65 he shot Thursday to take a one-stroke lead over Billy Maxwell going into today's second round.

"I deserve these breaks because I'm a nice guy," Rodriguez, 51, said after shooting the lowest round in Senior TPC history.

Rodriguez birdied six holes and eagled the par-5 No. 8 on the 14th, lost 4-3, 6-8 to Eric Jelen of West Germany.

Several grass-court experts, including No. 2 seed Stefan Edberg and No. 6 Tim Mayotte, the defending champion, received scares Thursday.

Edberg survived two rain delays to beat Wally Masur of Australia 6-7, 7-6, 6-4.

Mayotte beat qualifier and fellow American Richey Reneberg 8-4, 7-8.

Becker was to meet American David Pate today in a quarterfinal match.

Jimmy Connors, a three-time champion at Queen's Club, was to resume his suspended match against Nigeria's Ndaka Odzor. Connors was leading 7-5, 3-3 when the match was suspended by darkness on Thursday.

All that jazz

Manchester is no mecca, but it's gaining a reputation

Ask people where to go to hear jazz in Manchester, and many a brow will be contorted. Even the most chatty will be left speechless.

Though Manchester isn't a mecca for jazz, the town does draw its share of enthusiastic devotees. Cavey's Restaurant on East Center Street has been a popular spot for four years. The Hungry Tiger Cafe & Restaurant on Charter Oak Street and the Main Pub Restaurant & Lounge on Main Street are new to the jazz circuit, but they've had success.

Others haven't, and it could be because the jazz experiment didn't last long enough.

A jazz format has been part of the Main Pub's Sunday night lineup for about two months. "The most exciting thing for me and the most surprising has been the clientele's support of it," pub owner Glenn Beauille said.

DISC JOCKEY Rob Guilmette, who was playing top 40 at the Main Pub two nights a week, approached Beauille two months ago with the concept of jazz recorded on compact disc. Beauille said he'd give it a try.

Guilmette, 26, has been a DJ for eight years, playing mostly for weddings and parties. He developed a respect for performance jazz and a sensitivity to the listener.

To the purist once jazz is recorded it is no longer jazz. Guilmette believes jazz is an improvisational art, and it never performed the same way twice.

But Guilmette said, the clarity and crispness of the CD is as close as you can get to the live sound. "People don't know what they're not knowing it's jazz," Guilmette said of his Sunday night program.

"When people come up to me but they don't know what they're not knowing it's jazz," Guilmette said of his Sunday night program.

Guilmette also played for the Three Penny Pub at the Parkade a few years ago, but the management there decided to try something else.

"To go with a jazz policy," Gligliotti said, "you really have to hang in with it."

"At Cavey's, they're sensitive and supportive of good music," Gligliotti said. "A club or restaurant has to be patient while developing a jazz following. People who like jazz will travel a distance for it."

Guilmette also played for the Three Penny Pub at the Parkade a few years ago, but the management there decided to try something else.

BASSIST ED JONES, who accompanies Gligliotti at Cavey's, has seen increased interest in their music in the four years they've been performing there.

"We're seeing more people coming in just for the music," Jones said, "and the response has been improving."

R.J. Saux stopped playing there for the summer, but Denley expects to have the duo back again in the fall. "They're nice fellas, and talented musicians," he added.

PIANO PLAYER Charlie Gligliotti, an instructor at Manchester Community College, has been performing at Cavey's for the past four years. He has performed jazz and classical music since he was a teenager, as a soloist and as part of a trio. At Cavey's, he plays Friday and Saturday nights with bassist Ed Jones.

"People love jazz in Manchester," Gligliotti said. He believes his Cavey's audience proves there's a strong commitment to jazz in town. His listeners request the "good classics" such as Thelonius Monk, Ella Fitzgerald and Duke Ellington.

'It's nice and relaxing'

John Laggis of Manchester would ordinarily have to go to Hartford to hear jazz. So would David Bynes of Coventry and Tom Stern of Vernon. They are among a small but growing community of jazz enthusiasts who have secretly hoped jazz would find its way east of the river. To their delight, jazz has found a new home in Manchester.

One recent Sunday night at the Main Pub, John Laggis, 26, said he has been enjoying the jazz since the club began offering it. "It's nice and relaxing," Laggis said, and he doesn't mind that it's not a live performance. "A DJ plays what you want to hear from the original artist."

Corrie Anderson, 24, is regular at the pub. "It's a perfect topper for Sunday evening." The evening is relaxing, she said, even when there's a full house.

"Rob (Guilmette) has all his high-tech equipment and it really makes a difference."

"It's great to see young people," said Stern, who described himself as "almost 50." He said it gives an opportunity to hear jazz if they never were able to. "If they're not raised on it, they're not going to hear it."

Over at Cavey's on a Friday night, Bynes, 21, said he's played with the Albert Old Blues Band in Hartford. "Besides here (Cavey's), I can't think of a place to go in Manchester that offers jazz."

Dr. Bob Stoker, a local chiropractor, has studied jazz piano and plays occasionally for family and friends. He'd like to see more offered in Manchester. It would draw him out of the house more often, he said.

Mark Scheinberg and his wife, Joanne, are regulars at Cavey's every Saturday night where they meet six other couples for dessert and jazz. Scheinberg has played bass professionally, and would go elsewhere in Manchester if the caliber of performance was as good. "You get a lesson every time you come," he said of the Gligliotti-Jones duo at Cavey's.

Pianist Charlie Gligliotti and bassist Ed Jones perform at Cavey's on Friday and Saturday nights.

Roberta Peck Vater, a professional jazz singer and songwriter who teaches at MCC and performs at Aldo's in Hartford, says many local jazz enthusiasts are forced to go out of town.

"There are some staunch jazz supporters in Manchester who I suspect anticipate that they're going to have to go to other cities as well as in Hartford," she said.

Club owners don't promote jazz enough, Vater said. "A new club will use jazz to draw sophistication at the beginning of the week," she said. "But they don't feature it, so it soon goes by the board."

"Jazz is still the cultural stepchild in this country," Vater said. "In other countries, people stand in line to hear jazz. In this country, it's not given the priority."

JAZZ CAN BE ELUSIVE, and like its characteristic element of improvisation, it freely changes style and form.

"Jazz styles are constantly changing," pianist Gligliotti said. A musician may play the traditional Big Band sounds of Count Basie, the swing sounds of Oscar Peterson, or the Dixieland of Louis Armstrong. "Fusion," a contemporary combination of jazz and rock, has a more defined beat, as demonstrated by Spyro Gyra and Pat Metheny.

Jazz is uniquely American, Vater said, an art more than entertainment. "It's a cultural contradiction that while it's part of our roots, it isn't held in higher esteem as far as the money-making end," she said.

Meet Adirondack Fred, a mountain movie mogul

By Mary Esch
The Associated Press

SARANACLAKE, N.Y. — He calls himself Adirondack Fred, movie mogul of the mountains, "a woodchuck Woody Allen" and "a legend in my own mind."

Meet Fred G. Sullivan, an independent filmmaker struggling to make it in the movie business far from the glitz and glamour of the Hollywood Hills, in the rough and rustic Adirondack Mountains.

His first full-blown foray into feature filmmaking was "Cold River," the story of two children lost in the Adirondack wilderness. The drama got mixed reviews as Sullivan peddled it to theaters around the country in 1981, he says the Baltimore Sun panned it as "the worst wilderness film of the year."

"Cold River" financed by private investors, lost $1.2 million at the box office. Sullivan had a wife and four young children, including twin baby boys, to support. They were living in a tiny, gray-shingled bungalow in a lakeside village 300 miles north of Manhattan, and the specter of the wolf lurked amid the tricycles at the weedy doorstep.

So Sullivan went back to his loyal backers and the local bank and set out to make another movie. This time, he may have found his niche.

The movie is "Sullivan's Pavilion," an offbeat comedy about being a struggling filmmaker in the Adirondacks and raising a family and trying to pursue the movie amid dirty diapers and pitchers of beer.

Sullivan, 41, is a big, bearded, bearish man with tousled curls and a broad, disarming Irish smile. He dresses in classic L.L. Bean backcountry style: red suspenders, blue jeans, rubber boots.

The office and studios of his Adirondack Alliance Film Corp. are behind the papered-up windows of an old storefront on the dusty main drag of downtown Saranac Lake, between the post office and the Back Door bar.

Sullivan grew up in Glens Falls, "Deadwood on the Hudson," he calls it, a small city about 30 miles north of Albany. He made a brief stab at law school before he decided to pursue a boyhood dream of making movies.

For his master's thesis at Boston University in 1973, Sullivan came to Saranac Lake to make a wilderness documentary called "Of Rivers and Men." He and his wife Polly decided the friendly small-town atmosphere and scenic mountain surroundings were perfect for raising a family.

"Sullivan's Pavilion" is the life story of the filmmaker who refers to himself in the movie as "Fred G.," "F.G.S." or "Adirondack Fred." The self-effacing comedy stars Sullivan, his wife, and their four children, all playing themselves. There are also dozens of local residents, and six professional actors, who play a bombastic film critic, flautist, Russian bear and other oddball characters.

The 83-minute film comes off as an elaborate home movie that veers crazily from scatological humor and rowdy beer-drinking to mountaintop musings on the deep love of a parent for a child.

There are snippets from 8mm backyard epics Sullivan made when he was 12, film footage from Vietnam and scenes from the 1980 Winter Olympics at Lake Placid. Documentary segments are interwoven with zany fantasy sequences and scenes from the sometimes chaotic, often poignant sweet family life of the Sullivan brood.

The film garnered favorable reviews and a warm audience response in showings at the U.S. Film Festival in Park City, Utah, in January, and at theaters in Albany, where it made its commercial debut in March.

Swank crowd samples ribs in a chefs' tribute to Beard

By Mary MacVeen
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The 1,000 diners who were tucked into the swank restaurant on Thursday night, and who were provided to guide diners from the Dakota black bear to the cream of oysters Rockefeller soup to the Chipmunk salmon sandwiches and on and on for 20 tables.

"I wouldn't want to be anywhere else in the world tonight," said Jack Carmichael of Reading, Pa., who runs Joe's Restaurant and who cooked two popular dishes: a ragout, or stew, of wild mushrooms, and the bear, made of mushrooms known as shitake, walnuts and cumins.

"It's a dream come true," said Robert Bennett, an Oklahoma City caterer whose grilled cowboy's tallgrass bobwhite quail won many compliments.

The Third Annual American Chefs' Tribute to James Beard honored the man who inspired a generation of cooks to search their backyards for inspiration and ingredients. Beard died in 1962.

The 2000-plate feast benefited Citywide 100-Weeks, which Beard helped found to feed the elderly shut-ins. The 10 chefs were selected in a competition meant to uncover trends in American cooking.

"You are going to see more and more people coming out of the American cooking movement," said Lawrence Forgione of an American Place in New York, one of the "celebrity chefs" who cooked at the first two Beard tributes and returned this year to coach his successors.

"It was great of those guys to say, 'Let's bring in some of the younger chefs,'" said Frank Brigante of New Orleans, who prepared the oyster soup. "There's a real camaraderie (among chefs). It's a pride in America. It's only in the last few years American chefs got any respect."

His really shows how far the young American chefs have come," said Dean Fearing, chef at the Mansion on Turtle Creek in Dallas, who dressed in chef whites like his colleagues but added a pair of cowboy boots.

Fearing served up crab cakes with smoked bell pepper sauce as

Psychologist says parenting styles bring varied results

WASHINGTON (AP) — There are various kinds of parenting styles, and experience and research have indicated which kinds are the most effective in raising children, says Cynthia Baum, a psychology professor at The Catholic University of America.

The styles fall into three broad categories: permissive, authoritarian and authoritative, she explains, adding that the authoritative style is the one to aim for.

"Parenting styles tend to be related to both positive and negative child behavior," Ms. Baum points out. "Positive changes in parenting style often result in decreased negative behavior by children and increased family cooperation."

"Permissive parents are non-punitive, accept the child's impulses and don't encourage the child to obey externally defined standards. They treat adolescents in ways that make them feel guilty. For example, if a mother wants her teen-age son to clean his room she might say, 'If you really were a good son and loved your mother, you would clean up your room.'"

Ms. Baum maintains that the outcome of this style is teen-agers with less positive social behavior and lower achievements. These

Elvis' estate wants proof about affair

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A woman who claims in a book that she had Elvis Presley's illegitimate child should supply blood samples and other evidence to support her claims, managers of the singer's estate say.

"We're just asking them to prove this is not a falsehood," David Beckwith, a spokesman for the Grand Division of Elvis Presley Enterprises Inc., said Thursday.

Beckwith said a lawyer for the Presley estate has written the publisher, Random House Inc., seeking evidence to support claims made in "Are You Oursome Tonight?" by Lucy de Barbin of Texas.

Mrs. De Barbin says in the book published earlier this year that she had a 24-year affair with Presley and gave birth to his illegitimate daughter in 1958.

She says the affair was so secret that even Presley's closest friends were unaware of it.

She also says she kept her daughter's birth a secret from Presley, who died in 1977, while using numerous prescription stimulants and depressants 10 years ago at his Memphis home.

Presley's estate claims the sole right to market products bearing the singer's name or image.

If the book "is not a fraud and uses Presley's name and likeness, Barry Ward, a lawyer for the estate, said in the June 8 letter to Mrs. De Barbin's publisher.

Beckwith said from his office in Los Angeles that he has received no response to his request for evidence to support the book's claims, including blood tests from Mrs. De Barbin and her daughter, Desiree Presley.

Mutual fund yields reflect market

Investors' Guide
William A. Doyle

QUESTION: I own shares of two "government securities" mutual funds. Both keep advertising their great yields — 10 or 11 percent. But, while they are paying that amount in dividends, the value of their shares keeps dropping and the value of my invested principal goes lower and lower.

ANSWER: There's no getting around the fact that, in recent years, the value of government securities has fallen. The reason is that the Federal Reserve has raised its discount rate. The result is that the value of government securities has fallen. The result is that the value of your shares has fallen. The result is that the value of your principal has fallen.

Just be aware that you would be taking on more risk that the value of your investment might fall. If you don't want any risk, settle for a lower yield in U.S. Treasury bills or short-term notes or in federally insured certificates of deposit.

QUESTION: Some mutual funds whose investment portfolios are made up of bonds pay higher yields than other mutual funds which also hold bonds. Is that because the higher-yielding funds are more risky than the lower-yielding funds?

ANSWER: Generally, yes. The per share asset values of bond funds with high yields usually are subject to wider fluctuations than those of lower yielding funds.

Pratt takes consortium lead

EAST HARTFORD (AP) — Pratt & Whitney will become the sole manufacturer of the new engine for the European Airbus airplane, a move which will put an end to a "management nightmare," the consortium's president said.

Rolle Royce PLC, an English engine firm, and East Hartford-based Pratt & Whitney shared leadership when the consortium was established four years ago.

Clarification by White House boosts dollar

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar recovered from Thursday's loss in currency trading early today. Gold edged above $460.

Currency traders said the dollar recovered from Thursday's loss after the White House clarified a statement by President Reagan at the end of the Venice economic summit.

Reagan had told a news conference that it was "within reason" to expect the dollar's decline to continue. White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater said later, however, that the president did not
