TOWN TOUGH ON CODES

MEATOWN DESTROYED — East Hartford firefighters hose down the former Meatown building on Silver Lane Friday night after a two-alarm fire destroyed much of the building. One firefighter was reported injured. Story on page 3.

Inspectors target rooming houses in safety crackdown

By Alex Girelli
Associate Editor

The town is going to crack down on rooming houses with fire and housing code violations over the next few months.

Violations of the fire code have already been discovered at a rooming house at 140 to 142 Spruce St. Rudy Kissman, deputy fire marshal of the Town of Manchester Fire Department, said Friday. He said the building's owner has been notified but has not responded to the notice.

The rooming house was inspected May 4 and a videotape made showing violations. Kissman said he received no response to a letter he sent May 8 to the owner, Keith R. Baudis of 58 Sulkey Lane, Glastonbury. On May 27, Kissman sent a letter by certified mail, but when he checked with the Glastonbury post office earlier this week, it had not been picked up.

THE ROOMING HOUSE is one of about 15 in town that will undergo inspection in the next few months, not only for fire purposes, but also for housing code violations. The Health Department, which is charged with enforcing the housing code, will check for these violations.

John Salcius, health department sanitarian, said Friday that the majority of rooming houses in town are well kept, particularly in cases where the owner collects the rent in person, and thus regularly monitors the building.

Kissman agreed.

"We want to make sure everyone who lives in them has at least the minimum safety standards like exits, smoke detectors, and fire-resistant materials where they are required.

THE ROOMING HOUSE at 140 to 142 Spruce St., on the west side of Spruce Street just south of Birch Street, is licensed for 11 rooms. Kissman said he found that two additional rooms had been created in the attic. He said there was only one exit from the attic.

He said the town has gotten the tenants out of the attic.

Fire code violations have been discovered at this rooming house at 140-142 Spruce St., officials say.

Town inspectors get tough with rooming house violators

Kissman said that the inspection showed that smoke detectors had been removed from rooms and stored. There was also only one fire extinguisher in place, and it had not been inspected since 1984.

He said he found no hand rail on the stairs leading to the cellar, and open grills between floors, allowing free flow of air.

SALCIUS SAID annual permits to operate rooming houses are normally renewed in August, and he hopes rooming house inspections can be completed by that time.

The housing inspections, along with other types of inspections, are carried out for the Health Division by Salcius, and Josephine Forte and Larry Jean, environmental health inspectors. The division has been authorized to hire a third environmental health inspector beginning July 1.

The newly-authorized deputy fire marshal post, filled by Kissman in January, was created as a means of bolstering the town's fire code enforcement capacity. Fire Chief John Rivoso is fire marshal for the Town of Manchester Fire District in which almost all of the rooming houses are located.

Rivoso said he hopes the town will be able not only to inspect licensed rooming houses but also find out where buildings are being used illegally as rooming houses. And Kissman said that while the first inspections will be made at rooming houses, inspections will be made later at apartments and other types of multiple-family dwellings.

The next step in the case of the rooming house at 140 and 142 Spruce St will be to hand deliver a letter to the owner, Kissman said. If that does not produce results, the town will seek a prosecutor's summons from the Housing Court.

THIS WEEK one building with fire code violations that was being operated as a rooming house closed. The second and third floors of the building at 179 Main St., owned by J & G Associates, have been secured from entry with tenants from all 18 rooms evicted. The first floor of the building, at the south corner of Main and Birch streets is occupied by three businesses that are not affected by the closing.

Kissman inspected the building Tuesday morning and then went to Housing Court in Hartford to testify. The court then nolleed the code violations case against J & G Associates.

Earlier, with only one of the rooms occupied, Deputy Assistant State's Attorney Vicki O'Donnell had told the owners that she would take the case to trial unless they had gotten all residential tenants out of the building or made the code corrections by Tuesday.

ON MAY 15, before the nolle. J & G had filed with the Zoning Board of Appeals an appeal from a ruling by Thomas O'Marra, zoning enforcement officer, that the building could not be used as a rooming house.

Phyllis and Nicholas Jackson of Manchester, who along with Jacques Guay of South Windsor, own the building, were out of town Friday and could not be reached for comment on the whether the appeal will be withdrawn in light of the nolle in housing court.

David Golas, their attorney, said he has not had a chance to discuss the question of withdrawing the appeal.

O'Marra had ruled that since the building had not been licensed as a rooming house before zoning prohibited rooming houses. It was not grandfathered as a permitted non-conforming use. The Jacksons have contended that building has been a rooming house for many years and should be permitted to continue as a rooming house under the zoning law.

BUT THE JACKSTONS have plans to convert the upper floors of the building into apartments, and gave tenants eviction notices in early May. Phyllis Jackson said then that the owners had decided to close the operation and leave upper floors of the building idle until they can carry out their plan to convert them to apartments.

Hanna Marcus, town director of Human Services, said Thursday that her department has assisted a few of the tenants in relocating.

Flag burning set on Flag Day

The American Legion will hold a flag burning ceremony Sunday at 1 p.m. on the Legion's grounds to dispose of damaged, tattered and faded flags from residents and the local cemeteries.

The Legion color guard will present the flags to Herb Raymond, post commander, and then burn them, said Art Gravelis, a color guard member.

"We've been doing this for years," Gravelis said. "It's better than people just throwing them in the garbage, and it's the proper way to dispose of tattered flags anyway."

People bring worn flags to the Legion, or call to have them picked up at the cemeteries. Gravelis explained.

Last year the Legion destroyed some 1,500 flags from cemeteries, said Raymond.

This is the first year the flags are being burned on Flag Day, the anniversary of the day in 1777 when the U.S. flag was adopted.

"We thought it would be nice to do it on Flag Day. It's a nice little ceremony," added Raymond.

Meatown building burns

By Andrew Yurkovsky
Herald Reporter

EAST HARTFORD — A two-alarm fire caused extensive damage to the former Meatown building at 121 1/2 Silver Lane Friday night, destroying the front of the vacant brick-and-wood structure, and sending one firefighter to the hospital.

The fire was brought under control about 10 p.m., about an hour after it was reported, officials said.

Firefighters were still hosing the building down at 10:45 p.m., trying to cool hot spots inside, as officials kept spectators several hundred feet back. Fire officials were worried about a possible ammonia leak from cylinders stored in the building.

The cause of the fire was still undetermined late Friday night. Garry Hayes, the injured firefighter, was taken to St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center in Hartford. Information about his injuries was not available.

The fire came just a week before the building was to be torn down by the state Department of Transportation, which owns the property, said East Hartford Deputy Fire Marshal Edward Garrison. He said the building has been vacant for about a year and a half.

Firefighters had been called to the building earlier Friday because of reports that children were playing in the area, said Garrison, who was on the scene Friday. Because of the building's poor condition, the fire department was going to order the building torn down if the owners didn't tear it down first, he said.

Garrison said fire officials would probably wait until today to inspect the building's interior.

Firefighters had unsuccessfully attempted to get to four cylinders of ammonia stored inside the building, Garrison said. He said the fire could have caused the cylinders to rupture, but there appeared to be little danger of that after the fire was brought under control.

"At this time, it doesn't seem as if there's any danger of (the tanks) doing anything," Garrison said about 10:45 p.m.

Flames were shooting up from the building when firefighters arrived at the scene, said East Hartford firefighter Gary Hayes. "We could see the glow in the sky from Silver Lane," Andy Romano, another firefighter, said.

The sky was filled with smoke about a mile from the fire. The fire was reported at 8:53 p.m. by a neighbor. Three companies responded to the call, and about 15 firefighters were at the scene, Garrison said.

Fighting the fire was difficult because additions to the main structure blocked off access to the building's interior, Romano said.

Hayes, the firefighter who was later sent to the hospital, said that firefighters would have been able to start working from the fire sooner had the ladder truck from Engine Co. 3 on Burnside Avenue been operational.

Engine Co. 3, along with Engine Co. 6 on Forbes Street, arrived first on the scene, he said.

Roy Grutman, PTL attorney, makes a point during a Friday afternoon news conference in Fort Mill, S.C. He insisted that the scandal-racked ministry is not bankrupt.

PTL files Chapter 11, but denies it's bankrupt

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — The scandal-racked PTL ministry filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code Friday, blaming the "chaotic mismanagement" of founder Jim Bakker for piling up $70 million in debts.

"PTL is not bankrupt," Norman Roy Grutman, the PTL's lawyer, declared at a news conference at the evangelical empire's headquarters where the filing was announced. "PTL possesses assets vastly in excess of whatever liabilities it has at the present time."

Jerry Nims, PTL's chief executive officer and chairman of the Rev. Jerry Falwell's Liberty Broadcasting Network, predicted that "PTL will emerge more stable, more financially sound and a better place."

Grutman said the filing was necessitated by "chaotic mismanagement of the preceding administration."

Nims elaborated, saying that that under Bakker, "The records were atrocious. There were no internal checks and balances. There were no internal controls. We found major discrepancies in the ledger in terms of what we had purchased and what showed up here."

Grutman said the petition filed Friday afternoon in the federal bankruptcy court in Columbia would protect the PTL from creditors' lawsuits, but it would not inhibit the ministry from filing suits, he said.

During a PTL board meeting Wednesday at Falwell's Old-Time Gospel Hour headquarters in Lynchburg, Va., Falwell had disclosed the $70 million debt, to a total of 1,400 creditors, and said $23 million of that was delinquent.

"We obviously have some problems," he said.

In mid-May, Falwell went on the "PTL Club" television program and pleaded for $7 million by the end of the month. Falwell said the "May Emergency" had turned into a "May Miracle" when the $7 million was raised. The ministry already had counted $1.5 million in donations the first two weeks in May — evidence, he said, that PTL was maintaining the support of its 518,000 members.

A much-ballyhooed auction on Labor Day Weekend, though, netted only $200,000 instead of the $500,000 PTL officials had predicted they would raise.

As recently as two weeks ago, Falwell was painting a more optimistic view of the ministry's prospects.

In a speech in Grapevine, Texas, on May 25, he had predicted PTL would be back on its feet by the end of the summer. He told a conservative political action group that $6 million had been raised in the previous 11 days and the ministry was beginning to pay off its debts.

'Wall will fall,' Reagan says in West Berlin

By Tom Raum
The Associated Press

BERLIN — Standing under iron-gray skies at the Berlin Wall dividing East and West, President Reagan on Friday challenged Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev — if he truly seeks peace, prosperity and liberalization — to "come here to this gate ... tear down this wall."

Reagan's emotional declaration that "there is only one Berlin," spoken in German, was greeted with roars of approval from more than 20,000 flag-waving spectators, and was carried by loudspeakers to several hundred East Berliners trying to listen from beyond the Brandenburg Gate, on the other side of the concrete and barbed wire barricade.

"This wall will fall," Reagan declared in the speech, broadcast to Eastern Europe as well as Western Europe and North America. "For it cannot withstand faith. It cannot withstand truth. The wall cannot withstand freedom."

The president and Nancy Reagan returned to the White House at 9:45 p.m. EDT, where the family dog, Rex, scampered out the door to greet them. Mrs. Reagan scooped the spaniel up in her arms and carried him inside.

Nearing the end of a 10-day, 10,135-mile journey that took him to Venice for the annual economic summit of seven major industrial democracies, the president challenged Gorbachev to extend his liberalizing domestic policy of "glasnost" to ending East-West divisions symbolized by the Berlin Wall.

"We hear much from Moscow about a new policy of reform and openness," he said, citing the release of political prisoners, the end of jamming of some foreign news broadcasts and the start of economic ventures relatively free of state control.

"Are these the beginnings of profound changes in the Soviet state?" Reagan asked. "Or are they token gestures, intended to raise false hopes in the West or to strengthen the Soviet system without changing it?"

"We welcome change and openness. For we believe freedom and security go together — that the advance of human liberty can only strengthen the cause of world peace."

Then Reagan declared: "There is one sign the Soviets can make that would be unmistakable, that would advance dramatically the cause of freedom and peace."

"General Secretary Gorbachev, if you seek peace, if you seek prosperity for the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, if you seek liberalization: Come here, to this gate."

"Mr. Gorbachev, open this gate. Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall." Barricades kept anti-American demonstrators from getting any closer than one mile from the speech site. But before Reagan arrived from Venice, thousands of protesters had marched through West Berlin chanting anti-American slogans, smashing windows, looting stores and battling with riot police. Fifty-nine demonstrators were arrested and 67 policemen were injured.

In an impromptu reference to those who demonstrated against his Berlin appearance, Reagan said, "I wonder if they have ever asked themselves that if they should have the kind of government they apparently seek, no one would ever be able to do what they're doing again."

Accompanied by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Reagan stood behind a bulletproof glass shield on a raised platform and gazed over the wall at the Brandenburg Gate and the Reichstag, the former German parliament building. The two leaders stood directly opposite an East German guard tower.

Asked by reporters if he thought Gorbachev would accept his challenge to tear down the wall, Reagan replied, "Well, Jericho didn't last forever."

The wall behind the platform where Reagan spoke had been whitewashed during the night to remove graffiti reading, "Ronald Reagan Go Home." By the time he arrived Friday, the wall bore a fresh slogan, "Hello World, Welcome Reagan 1987," which was thought to have been painted by a few of the 250,000 U.S. Army troops stationed in West Germany.

East German soldiers and militiamen began erecting the wall around the western perimeters of Berlin after midnight on Aug. 13, 1961.

Growing 'no runs' list puzzles the GOP

By George Layne
Herald Reporter

The news for Manchester Republicans has not been encouraging of late. A number of potential candidates and one incumbent for the Board of Directors have said they will not run this November. Another incumbent has said he probably will not run.

Added to the list of "no runs" this week are William J. Diana, who has served seven terms on the board, and Wallace J. Irish, an activist with the Eighth Utilities District. Party members had looked on Irish as a potentially strong candidate.

Right now, those who have said they will not be candidates outnumber those who have said they will or are considering it.

The GOP, like the Democrats, can field up to six people for the board. Republican Town Chairman Donald K. Koehl said Friday he's optimistic the party will fill the state.

"I think we're assured of having at least enough," he said.

So far, the only declared candidate is incumbent Geoffrey Naab. Former town Director John Garstke, Manchester Human Relations Commission member Ronald Oella, and town Building Committee member Theodor Werthoven have all said they are interested in running, but have not made a final decision.

Besides Diana, GOP Director Thomas H. Ferguson has said he probably will not run. Three Republicans who unsuccessfully ran in 1985 — Edward F. Boland, Gloria D. DeLafere and Carol M. Lemitan — say they will not be candidates.

Other prominent Republicans, such as former state Rep. Elsie "Bix" Swenson and Harry Reinhorn, also have said they will not seek election.

The lack of candidates contrasts with Manchester Democrats, who have one possible opening on their state but four candidates vying for the position.

Why is it difficult for Republicans to get candidates?

"The Republican party has been in trouble for 10 years in Manchester and I don't think this year is any different from the past 10 years," said Irish on Friday.

Koehl said economics has played a factor. He said the GOP wants to attract candidates from different areas of life, such as businessmen. However, that is difficult in this area because the economy is good and there is less time for businessmen to devote to politics, Koehl said.

Irish said the reason he is not running is because he needs to devote more time to his growing insurance business.

Carl Zinsner, a former GOP director and state senator, said Friday it is difficult for any minority party to attract candidates. The key to changing that, though, is to focus on issues, he said.

Zinsner noted that it is the job of the majority to vote, and the job of the minority to speak up. In Manchester, however, the Republican minority "as a whole has been very quiet."

Coventry GOP chairman quits; eyes Michael Cleary, Al Bray

By Jacqueline Bennett
Herald Reporter

COVENTRY — Gregg E. Batterson resigned Friday as GOP town chairman to take up the chairmanship of Granaroots East, the Republican organization for the 2nd Congressional District. The group plans to win back the Republicans the seat held by U.S. Rep. Sam Gejdenson.

"I will be returning to professional management consulting, and, as such, cannot sit on a policy-setting board with direct impact on municipal operations," Batterson said in an interview Friday afternoon.

Batterson, 51, is a self-employed management consultant. He was elected chairman in 1985, when Roberta Coontz resigned from the post.

Batterson has endorsed former Councilman Michael Cleary to take over as GOP town chairman, and Al Bray, a teacher, for vice chairman. The nominating committee will meet June 18, and a special Republican town committee meeting will be held June 24 to elect a chairman.

Batterson's biggest accomplishment as chairman was expanding from three to 10 the number of town scholarships. He said the party raised more money than ever before for that project.

In addition, Batterson said that he learned during his two-year tenure that people want positive campaigns that focus on the issues. He plans to carry that insight into the campaign for Gejdenson's seat.

Batterson said Cleary is a good choice to lead the party because he

Kennelly sponsors acid-rain bill

By Scripps League Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Rep. Barbara Kennelly, D-Conn., said Friday the acid rain endangering New England's forests and rivers would be acted on and not just studied under a bill she has just co-sponsored.

"Everyone talks about the weather, but no one does anything about it," is the oldest cliché in the book," Kennelly said. "Unfortunately, it's true when it comes to the dangerous form of weather known as acid rain. Over 6,000 studies have already been done. It's high time to stop talking and start doing something."

The bill, introduced by Kennelly and nine colleagues, would require reductions in emissions of the two main causes of acid rain, sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide. Tougher air-quality standards for new power plants and new cars would also be required.

Kennelly, vice chairwoman of the Northeast-Midwest Coalition, said although New England is most affected by acid rain, the bill has support from all regions of the country.

State rep's ma becomes queen of the WATES

By Anita M. Caldwell
Herald Reporter

While state Rep. James McCavanagh was trying to trim the sails of the progressive Democratic legislators in the General Assembly, his mother, Alice McCavanagh, was trimming her own sails.

At the WATES dinner at Valle's Steak House in Hartford Sunday, McCavanagh was awarded the title of state queen for losing 60 pounds this year, the top weight loss among WATES clubs in the state. WATES stands for Women's Association to Enjoy Slimming.

From June to June, she lost 34 1/2 pounds, and from December to April, she lost another 26 pounds.

James McCavanagh, a real estate agent, is proud of his mother. "She works very hard at maintaining her weight," said McCavanagh. "She makes me very proud at her age to lose all that. And, it's good for her health, too." McCavanagh said his mother has been dieting for years.

"One time when I was in the Navy," said McCavanagh, "she sent me a letter with a Herald article that said she was Queen of WATES in Manchester. It was quite an accomplishment at that time."

How does one "stick" to a diet? According to the newest WATES queen, it's mental discipline. When she went to her doctor and he found cholesterol building up, he gave her a low-cholesterol diet. "I got scared when I heard about the cholesterol," McCavanagh said. "So, I just made up my mind."

The WATES group has given McCavanagh the extra support she needs. "If you gain, they boo ya, you know," she chuckled.

McCavanagh has been attending the WATES meetings for 29 years. Last spring at the club's annual banquet, she was given an award for perfect attendance as well as an award for reaching her goal.

The mother of three sons, James and Joseph in Manchester and Harry in Hebron, she said she used to baby sit a lot when her grandchildren were young. Now, she goes out with her women friends to different places and visits her family.

When she's out with friends, how does she resist temptation? "I used to love sweets," McCavanagh said. "Now, I have a small dish of sherbet."

A sensible sweet for a sweet victory.

Alice McCavanagh holds the trophy she won after being crowned statewide WATES queen. She lost a total of 60 pounds.

Weicker slams Reagan on AIDS

By Lee Roderick
Scraps League Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., who distributed a briefing book on AIDS to all 99 of his Senate colleagues this week, says Americans should concentrate on ending the devastating health problem and not be inhibited by the lifestyles of many of its victims.

"We've spent $1 billion on venereal diseases of different kinds in this country," the maverick Republican said Friday. "It is in the American tradition that if a person is hurt and dying, we do our best to alleviate his pain and suffering."

Chemical hospitalizes crews

BERLIN, Conn. (AP) — Construction workers remodeling a wing at a Northeast Utilities building were treated Friday for dizziness, nausea and throat irritation possibly caused by inhaling a chemical substance.

Dr. David Mucci, attending emergency room physician at New Britain General Hospital said nine construction workers reported feeling ill after working 15 minutes Friday morning in the west wing of the NU building on the Berlin turnpike. They were treated and released.

On Thursday, 11 workers — including the nine — complained of the same symptoms, Mucci said. Two were treated at the hospital and released and the others felt fine once they were in the fresh air, Mucci said.

Mucci said the workers were probably being affected by PL100, an adhesive being used in the renovating. "They've been using it (PL100) all along," Mucci said. "The only difference is now they're in a room that has a high ventilation system."

Some 35,000 citizens have AIDS — Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome — and more than 20,000 have died of it. Health officials estimate that two-thirds of those with the deadly disease are homosexual or bisexual men, and 17 percent are intravenous drug users.

Weicker, former chairman and now ranking member of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on health, was interviewed by Connecticut reporters Friday in his Capitol Hill office.

"There's a confusion among the American people" over AIDS, Weicker said. "They don't believe there's a crisis unless the president says there is a crisis. And the president has been very late to call attention to it."

Congress has nearly doubled the Reagan administration's request appropriation to fight AIDS each year since 1984.

"Our decisions must be based on science, not on philosophy or emotion," Weicker said. "There will be no easy way out of this problem. It will be very expensive for at least the next decade."

Weicker's comments on other issues:

• Administration policy in the Persian Gulf: "I would certainly let the law handle those who have broken the law" in selling arms to Iran or diverting funds to rebels in Nicaragua. "Congress ought to ditch the policy" of supporting the contra and pour more humanitarian assistance into the region.

• Reagan and the scandal: "The president certainly has been weakened" by the scandal, but Democrats have also been weakened by inept handling of it. "The Democrats are lying in the weeds, hoping the president will stumble."

• Presidential contenders: George Bush "comes closer to my beliefs" than other Republican candidates. Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas and former Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada are two other GOP contenders to watch, while "I don't think the rest of them amount to a hill of beans." New York Gov. Mario Cuomo would be the strongest Democratic candidate.

Obituaries

A. Gertrude Duncan

A. Gertrude Gordon Duncan, 83, formerly of Edgemoor St., Manchester, died Friday at the Manchester Convalescent Home. She was the wife of George W. Duncan.

She was born in Manchester April 30, 1904, and was a lifelong resident. Before retirement, she had been employed for many years as a secretary for the Connecticut Light and Power Co. She was a member of the South United Methodist Church.

FBI's 'Cashweb-Expressway' crushes money-laundering rings

By Pete Yost
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The FBI on Friday crushed three major money-laundering rings which service Colombian cocaine cartels, arresting 40 people and seizing $8 million to end a three-year, coast-to-coast undercover operation.

Seven Colombian leaders of the laundering rings were among those arrested, with three of them taken into custody off the coast of Colombia after being lured onto a 48-foot sailboat crewed by FBI undercover agents. The U.S. Coast Guard intercepted the sailboat.

As many as 51 other arrests were expected on federal, state and local charges, including racketeering, conspiracy, drug trafficking and possession of narcotics, FBI officials said at a news conference.

Since 1984, FBI agents participating in Operation Cashweb-Expressway have penetrated Colombian drug money networks and laundered $175 million "to gain credibility with the alleged leaders of the financial underground that serves as the bankers for" four Colombian cocaine cartels, said Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

The FBI opened or tapped into money-laundering operations in New York City, Newark, N.J., Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Detroit and New Haven, Conn.

Meese called the laundered money "a modest price, for the total results" over three years, which he said included criminal charges against 160 people, destruction of the laundering networks, seizure of $21.5 million in cash and other assets and confiscation of 2,100 pounds of cocaine worth $29 million. During the three-year life of Cashweb-Expressway, the FBI and police departments around the country arrested 70 other people on a variety of drug-related charges.

Oliver "Buck" Revel, the FBI's executive assistant director for investigations, said the deception was so complete that some ring members "were trying to get in touch with our undercover agents ... to warn them and ... to seek their advice" as arrests were being made Friday.

Traffickers and money launderers carried money to FBI front companies in boxes, suitcases and shopping and duffel bags in amounts ranging up to $2.5 million a trip in transactions that in many cases were recorded on videotape.

Most of the laundered money disappeared into bank accounts in Panama, Switzerland and Japan. The Panamanian government has seized the accounts in its banks.

The U.S. government plans to recover assets acquired with the drug money, said Revel.

Government affidavits filed in court alleged that the money-laundering rings served cocaine cartels headed by Pablo Escobar Gaviria, Miguel Rodriguez, Carlos Lehder and Rigoberto Correa. Lehder was extradited from Colombia and is awaiting trial in Florida on federal drug charges. Escobar Gaviria, Rodriguez and Correa are fugitives on federal drug charges.

Those arrested Friday aboard the FBI-crewed sailboat in the Caribbean Sea were Carlos Gaviria, 30; Juan Guillermo Restrepo; and Rodolfo Ariano Jr., 27, who has a residence in Miami.

Alleged top money-laundering figures arrested in Miami were Carlos Restrepo, 37; Marco Tulio Laura, 49; and Jorge Gomez, 34. Arrested in Los Angeles was Rodolfo Ariano Sr., who also has a residence in Miami.

Charges against Laura and Gomez weren't immediately available, but the other five were charged with conspiring to aid and abet the possession and distribution of controlled substances, which carries a maximum 20-year prison term.

Friday's arrests marked the second major assault in five weeks against drug money-laundering rings by the U.S. government. Last month, the Drug Enforcement Administration ended a similar investigation dubbed Operation Pisces involving undercover agents who infiltrated cocaine money-laundering rings.

The DEA operation proved so disruptive that some of the drug figures, looking around for some new launderers, unwittingly started doing business with the FBI-infiltrated rings.

Feds based undercover job in Greenwich

By Susan Okuda
The Associated Press

NEW HAVEN — An FBI undercover operation in Greenwich that funneled millions of dollars of illegal U.S. drug profits out of the country provided information leading to the smashing of major money-laundering rings on Friday, federal officials said Friday.

FBI agents were seeking the arrest of about 100 people, including 23 who were named in a Connecticut complaint, and had arrested about 40 by mid-afternoon on Friday, said Stanley Klein, special agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Connecticut.

At least 12 of the 23 named in the Connecticut complaint were arrested and charged with conspiring to aid the possession and distribution of cocaine. "A few" were arrested in Connecticut, while others named in the complaint were arrested in New York, Miami and international waters off the coast of South America, Klein and U.S. Attorney Stanley A. Twardy said.

Several Colombian leaders of the rings were named in the Connecticut complaint, including three who were arrested in the South American waters.

Most of the 100 were Colombian-based nationals, many with close ties with big Colombian drug cartels. Klein and Twardy said.

Twardy said that the FBI investigation undermined a money mechanism that fueled drug trafficking in the United States.

"We haven't won the war (against drugs). However, I think it is a very significant step, a significant victory in the battle," he said.

Twardy said the arrests were the end of "what is likely to be seen as the single largest undercover operation ever conducted by the FBI — an operation which was directed by the Connecticut office of the FBI and the U.S. attorney's office."

Klein and Twardy revealed few details of the Greenwich operation. They said it had its roots in Miami in 1984 when agents infiltrated a money-laundering scheme.

The agents moved their operation to Greenwich in 1985, and then expanded it to encompass money-laundering activities in New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Detroit, Newark and Chicago. Klein said Greenwich was chosen because of its proximity to New York, a major drug center.

Twardy said about $50 million was laundered through the Greenwich office, while at least $175 million was processed in the entire FBI undercover operation in the country.

The money made its way through a network of collection centers that started in the street with dealers and ended up in centers in Miami, New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco. It would then be moved outside the United States through cashier checks or wire transfers, mixed with other funds and sometimes moved back into the United States for investments, court papers showed.

In Greenwich, money launderers would bring their cash together with instructions to the undercover FBI agents to transfer the money to overseas accounts, some in Panama and Switzerland, Twardy said. Court papers showed hundreds of thousands and sometimes millions in cash would be brought to the Greenwich operation.

The FBI generally charged the launderers a three percent fee of the money they processed, according to a 69-page affidavit by FBI agent William F. Hutton III.

The three taken into custody in South American waters were Carlos Gaviria, 30; Juan Guillermo Restrepo and Rodolfo Ariano Jr., 27.

At least $8 million was seized during Friday's arrests.

Gambling raid nets 22 suspects

STAMFORD (AP) — Police seized $7,500 in cash and arrested 22 people on gambling charges during a raid at a social club, state police said.

During the raid by state and local police at the Panlakanian Social Club, gambling records, dice and accessories for a dice table were also seized. State Police Sgt. Robert Slattery said.

Graduates hear Bowie Kuhn

STAMFORD — Citing humanitarian Mother Theresa and former sportscaster Howard Cosell as examples of great courage, former Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn urged 31 private-school graduates to resist "conformity and yuppism."

In a speech Thursday at the King School's 114th commencement, Kuhn advocated bravery, compassion and courage, the "greatest human virtue" to fight weakness.

He told the graduates, including Cosell's grandson Justin Cobane, to be unafraid of taking on "monsters of opposition."

"I think of Howard Cosell and his great career... his perception of the hopeless and the inexcusable brutality of boxing," Kuhn said.

Neighbors knock the Navy

NEW LONDON — A Navy plan to beef up security at a submarine base has drawn fire from residents who claim restrictions on public use of the Thames River would shatter property values along the waterway.

The plan to prohibit loitering, fishing, swimming, photographing and mooring of boats within a security zone "diminishes my rights," said Elaine Woods, who lives near the river in the nearby town of Gales Ferry.

"Over the years I have loitered, fished, anchored and swam in the area," she said at the first public hearing on the issue. "It might be acceptable in Virginia or King's Bay, Ga., (where such zones exist around other Navy bases), but it is not acceptable in southeastern Connecticut."

About 150 people turned out at the hearing Wednesday where residents, developers and municipal officials spoke out strongly against the plan. No one but the Navy spoke in favor.

Rights gripe earns $90,000

NEW HAVEN — A man who was arrested by West Haven police after he refused to answer their questions has been awarded $90,000 by a federal jury.

The six-member jury deliberated for about an hour Thursday before finding that Patrolman Joseph Innamorato and Sgt. Joseph Conzo violated the constitutional rights of Tracy McAneny of North Haven.

McAneny was manager of the Super 8 Motel in West Haven on Dec. 15, 1983, when a guest reported a $600 camera had been stolen from his room.

Innamorato, finding there had been no forced entry into the room, asked McAneny for the name of the maid assigned to clean the room. McAneny refused to answer and about two weeks later he was arrested by the two police officers on a warrant charging him with interfering with police.

The charge was later dismissed.

Parents sue vaccine maker

NEW HAVEN — The parents of a severely retarded boy have filed a $9 million federal lawsuit against the maker of a common childhood vaccine, claiming a dose of it is responsible for his impairment.

Jeremiah Jones, now 5, suffers uncontrollable seizures, can't stand or sit, and suffers from other impairments as a result of the DPT vaccine, which immunizes children against diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus, the lawsuit claims.

Jeremiah's parents, Wallace and Lillie Jones of New Haven, filed the suit on Thursday in U.S. District Court in New Haven against American Cyanamid Co. of Wayne, N.J., whose Lederle Laboratories Division makes the vaccine.

Marshals seize bikers' club

MERIDEN — Federal marshals backed up by local police seized the headquarters of the Diablos Motorcycle Club and the Trojan Athletic Club Friday, marking the third raid by law enforcement officials on the buildings in less than a week.

Meriden police first raided the buildings last Saturday, when a shootout occurred at the Diablos clubhouse and 15 people were arrested on drug and weapons charges. No one was injured, and a 16th person was arrested during another raid Thursday.

The marshals served a warrant on the son of John "Jack" Baltas, a former national Diablos president and the legal owner of the club headquarters and the Trojan Athletic Club, stipulating that club members were forbidden to enter the buildings.

State Rep. Richard Foley, R-Oxford, listens to a question during a news conference in Hartford Friday. Foley said he has decided not to seek the chairmanship of the state Republican Party.

Foley says GOP could not afford leadership battle

HARTFORD (AP) — State Rep. Richard Foley said Friday he could have wrested the chairmanship of the state Republican Party from Robert S. Poliner but decided not to because the party couldn't afford "an intramural contest."

"Do I believe it could have been won? Yes, I do," Foley told a state Capitol news conference.

The three-term lawmaker from Oxford said a challenge now could damage the party at a time when it should be concentrating on the special congressional election in the 4th District this summer and the municipal elections in the fall.

"We as a party should be engaged not in an intramural contest, but in the varsity game," he said. "The varsity game is the fourth congressional district... and the upcoming municipals. Victories are what we're here for."

Poliner was elected in March to fill the rest of the term of Thomas J. D'Amore Jr. The Republican State Central Committee will vote on a chairman June 23.

Poliner said Foley "certainly can count votes as well as I can" and that Foley could not have beaten him.

He said Foley's decision helps the party, adding: "The fact that he delayed (announcing his decision), the fact that he equivocated and even considered a challenge as seriously as he did started us into a polarization."

"But I think we'll go in the other direction again and we'll get back on the right track," Poliner said.

Foley, who had run for the post in March against Poliner and others, had been urged by more than half of the Republicans in the General Assembly to challenge Poliner June 23. Those favoring Foley had said in a letter that the party under Poliner had become "a voiceless, penniless and directionless entity."

Foley had said after the March election that a challenge to Poliner in June would be "out of order."

Man used lover as blackmail bait

LITCHFIELD (AP) — A Danbury man has been convicted of arranging for his pregnant girlfriend to seduce a married businessman, then springing from a closet and pretending to take photographs to blackmail the startled victim.

The six-member jury took less than 90 minutes Thursday to convict Gregory Erhardt, 29, of extortion and robbery, finding he set up the tryst at his girlfriend's home to try to get $5,000 in hush money from the real estate agent, identified as Robert Lubus of Danbury.

Assault charges against Erhardt were dropped before trial.

Lubus said Erhardt's girlfriend, Lisa Percoco, 23, of New Milford invited him to her home in February and greeted him at the door wearing nothing but high heels and panties. Lubus testified that in the past he had given money and gifts to Percoco, who was his daughter's roommate.

Percoco, who was four months pregnant, lured Lubus into the bedroom, where she made sexual advances, Lubus said.

Erhardt then burst from the closet with a camera, pretended to take two photographs and began beating the semi-clad Lubus with a closet pole, Lubus said. After throwing Lubus down a flight of stairs, Erhardt held a knife to his throat and demanded $5,000, saying he would show the pictures to Lubus' wife if he didn't pay.

Lubus called friends at the Danbury Country Club in an effort to raise the money in small bills, but ran to a neighbor's and called police after Erhardt and Percoco took his wallet and fled in his car.

Erhardt, who is being held in lieu of $100,000 bond pending sentencing July 10 in Litchfield Superior Court, claimed he believed he was protecting his girlfriend from a rapist.

He said he made an unexpected visit to Percoco's apartment, heard screams from an upstairs bedroom, where he found Lubus in an excited state and Percoco cowering in a corner.

Erhardt said the fight erupted when Lubus refused to leave the house. He claimed Lubus offered him and Percoco $10,000 and his car to keep quiet.

Percoco faces two extortion-related charges. She refused to corroborate Erhardt's account, invoking her Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

Veteran chimp heads for the sun

NEW LONDON (AP) — After 26 years of monkeying around the zoo at Bates Woods, Rocky the chimpanzee has gone to the sunny climes of Texas to nibble raisins and popcorn and perhaps trade old war stories with other retired primates.

Rocky, this coastal city's lone chimpanzee for the last quarter-century, was flown Thursday from Bradley International Airport to his new home near San Antonio, Texas.

"Everything's great. There's been absolutely no problem," said Wallace Swett, founder and director of Primarily Primates, a nine-acre animal care facility 30 miles northwest of San Antonio.

"He seems one of the calmest chimps I've ever seen. He's a great guy," Swett said.

After being unloaded from a steel-reinforced wooden crate, Rocky was put in a cage next to three adolescent chimpanzees, Swett explained in a telephone interview.

"We've been observing him for a couple of hours. Right now, he's eating popcorn and raisins," the director said.

Rocky will be among 48 of his kind at Primarily Primates.

"We're not a zoo," said Swett, who has described the facility as a retirement home for animals that have been in zoos, circuses and other artificial surroundings.

Operated through donations by a non-profit organization, Primarily Primates is home for some 180 monkeys and apes and 150 other animals, including birds.

The final decision to move Rocky was made June 1, when the City Council reaffirmed a vote cast in February to close the zoo at Bates Woods.

Lieberman vows he'll stamp out pyramid schemes

By Linda Stowell
The Associated Press

STAMFORD — Connecticut Attorney General Joseph Lieberman said Friday he is determined to stamp out illegal pyramid investment schemes that are "spreading like wildfire."

"Pyramid games are a violation of law and... participating in a pyramid game is a good way to lose a lot of money," Lieberman told a news conference where he discussed probes of schemes in Hartford and Fairfield County.

The schemes were outlawed in 1973 by the General Assembly and violate the unfair trade practices law. Participants can face civil penalties of up to $2,000 for each violation.

Three individuals involved in the Hartford game called "Airplane" are facing civil action and a fourth who lost money on the scheme has already been fined $2,000, Lieberman said.

Lieberman said he will pursue the schemes, fine participants, and make them "cough up whatever money they've made."

Chief State's Attorney John J. Kelly said his office has had no complaints from victims and no polley on the games.

"But we do have it under review," he said. "If we get a complaint, we'll do whatever we have to."

In Fairfield County, a game called "Climbing the Corporate Ladder for Fun and Profit" is beginning to come unraveled, with some investors fighting to recover losses.

The game is made up of a chairman, two presidents, four executive vice presidents and eight vice presidents. The chairman's job is to recruit people, who generally pay $1,500 each as an entry fee. The chairman retires with $12,000 after he has recruited eight people.

Then, the pyramid splits, and each president becomes chairman of the new pyramids, and the recruitment process continues.

As the game gets bigger, it becomes harder to find new investors and when the game ends, everyone left playing loses their money.

Lieberman says "simple mathematics dooms pyramid schemes."

"As the pyramid expands and splits, ever increasing numbers of players are needed to feed the game's voracious appetite," he said.

"By the time a pyramid that begins with just 15 people splits for the 10th time, 8,200 new players are needed to keep the pyramid going. By the 20th split, the whole state of Connecticut couldn't support the need for new players."

"A few people at the top of each have made some money, and many, many people in the middle and at the bottom have lost," he said.

Lieberman said he "had no way of knowing" how many people are involved in the schemes in Connecticut, but added, "We think it's into the thousands."

He said his office is receiving calls from people in "every walk of life."

James Kennedy, a spokesman for Lieberman, said the office received a call from the mother of a 15-year-old Fairfield County high school student who had been asked to put up $25 to participate in a scheme.

"We have reports that teachers are involved, too," Kennedy said.

Lieberman said one of the problems in prosecuting participants is that the games are often started by people who solicit their friends.

"The real insidious quality about this is it doesn't involve hustlers," Lieberman said. "These people are being solicited by people they trust."

Flash floods claim 12-year-old

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Flash floods continued to threaten central and southeastern Texas on Friday after a month of record rainfall, and the body of a 12-year-old girl was recovered from a fast-moving creek.

Sun broke through the clouds in San Antonio and the hill country and the bad weather moved to southeastern Texas, where heavy rain flooded streets in Houston and surrounding counties.

Heavy rain fell in the Houston-Beaumont-Port Arthur area, including 6.89 inches at Beaumont and 7.79 inches at Bevil Oaks, 10 miles northeast of Beaumont. An isolated thunderstorm dumped 4 inches of rain in three hours at Lake Houston. Luce Bayou had a 24-hour total of 9.49 inches and Sheldon, near Houston, had 8.73, the National Weather Service said.

A storm system, moving from the north, was expected to bring in more rain to central and southern Texas on Saturday, said Cristy Mitchell, a forecaster with the National Weather Service in San Antonio.

"We will get a line of thunderstorms with possible hail, gusty winds along with the heavy rains," Mitchell said. "It looks the front will make it just into South Texas and stall out and that's the worst thing for it to do because it's just going to rain, rain and rain and add to the flooding situation."

Mitchell said San Antonio had surpassed its average six-month rainfall of 28.13 with a total of 28.76 inches of rain between January and June. That is the wettest month period since 1935 when a city received 30.49, she said.

Thousands protest military

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Thousands of people in downtown districts staged a noisy protest Friday against the country's military leaders, standing outside their homes banging pots and pans and honking their car horns.

Troops in riot gear were seen throwing tear gas grenades into open front doors of apartment buildings in the upper-class Betania neighborhood, near the downtown banking district, as the noise grew deafening after 6 p.m.

Other troops in the neighborhood threw rocks at car drivers honking the horns, but stopped when news photographers approached.

Disidents hold in cathedral

SEOUL, South Korea — Anti-government demonstrators held out for a fourth day at the Roman Catholic cathedral Saturday after tens of thousands of protesters attacked riot police with firebombs and rocks in clashes across the city.

Officials said 13 disident leaders were arrested Friday night on charges of organizing protests. They included Yang Soon-jik, vice president of the major opposition Reunification Democratic Party, Buddhist monks and Protestant ministers.

Thatcher is 'raring to go'

LONDON — Margaret Thatcher was "raring to go" Friday on five more years of dismantling the welfare state, after a historic third-term victory that raises doubts about whether the socialist Labor Party ever will regain power.

Crowds thronged near her official residence at No. 10 Downing St., some drinking champagne, waving Union Jacks and chanting "We love Maggie!" to celebrate the prime minister's victory in Thursday's general election.

Abrams delighted with support

WASHINGTON — Elliott Abrams, the embattled assistant secretary of state, said Friday he is "delighted with the support" he has received from superiors after angry accusations from some members of Congress about false or misleading statements in the Iran-contra affair.

"I have no plans to go anywhere," Abrams said when asked if he would resign in the wake of congressional suggestions he could no longer perform his job effectively in light of disclosures at the Iran-contra hearings.

Trade deficit getting better

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit narrowed for the second consecutive month in April, dropping to $13.3 billion and providing fresh evidence, economists said Friday, that the worst of the country's trade problems are over.

The dose of better-than-expected economic statistics was greeted enthusiastically by the Reagan administration and Wall Street, where the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials posted a 17.60 point gain for the day.

Millions at pope's mass

GDANSK, Poland — A crowd of more than one million people chanted "Solidarity, Solidarity," as Pope John Paul II celebrated mass amid a massive show of police force in this city where the labor movement was born.

"He (the worker) has the right to self management, a manifestation of which are, among other things, trade unions independent and self-governing," the Polish-born pontiff said from a 10-story platform shaped like the bow of a sailing ship.

Ex-emperor sentenced to death

BANGUI, Central African Republic — Former Emperor Bokassa I, tears glistening in his eyes, was sentenced to death Friday for at least 20 murders of real or imagined opponents during his 14-year reign of terror.

The verdict followed six days of deliberations and a six-month-long trial in Bangui Criminal Court. Bokassa was acquitted on several of the 14 charges against him, including cannibalism.

Hundreds of doc's deliveries reuniting for his 91st birthday

ST. HELENA, Calif. (AP) — A childless physician who delivered 2,000 babies during six decades of practice will be greeted and cheered by hundreds of them Saturday when this small town throws a parade and reunion marking his 91st birthday.

"Only in small-town America can you still do this," said Mayor Lowell Smith, who came up with the idea of a bash honoring Dr. George J. Wood.

The doctor retired exactly a year ago. "We're marking the passing of an era," said the mayor.

Wood started his practice at the corner of Main and Adams streets after settling here in 1925.

He made house calls for 61 years. In addition, Wood and his family have contributed close to $1 million to community groups. The money helped rebuild the town library and sent dozens of high school students to college, according to Margee Hench, a party organizer.

Many scholarships and donations were given anonymously because Wood didn't want recipients to feel obliged to come to him as patients.

"If you can stimulate your young people, you can improve the general status of things," Wood said. "I'd rather give scholarships than ride around in a BMW."

Those are some of the reasons why the Napa County community, which now has a population of 5,100 and more than a dozen doctors, has declared Saturday as "Dr. Wood Appreciation Day."

About 500 of "his babies" are expected at the bash, coming from as far away as Schenectady, N.Y., according to Del Britton, 49. They'll march in the parade, divided according to the decade they were born.

Wood delivered his last baby about 10 years ago. All but about 100 were born in hospitals.

One of the first was Chuck Carpy, 60, who was delivered by Wood in 1927.

"He also delivered my four kids, and we've all just grown up with him," said Carpy, now manager of Freemark Abbey winery. "He's touched so many lives it's just a natural thing to rally around him."

The parade will include 40 antique cars, the city's 1920s firetruck, the St. Helena High School Marching Band, and floats.

Wood will ride in a horse-drawn carriage while an airplane drops skydivers delivering congratulatory telegrams.

T-shirts will be on sale, reading, "I'm a Dr. Wood Baby."

Wood said he is amazed at the outpouring of affection.

Dr. George Wood, 91, poses in downtown St. Helena, Calif., Friday afternoon with Carolyn Lundell, 45, one of 2,000 babies he delivered over six decades. The city planned a parade Saturday in the physician's honor.

Arms protest brings arrests

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — About 300 people demonstrated in front of the Concord Naval Weapons Station on Friday, and 38 protesters were arrested, including author Alice Walker, police said.

The Oakland-based advocacy group Pledge of Resistance sponsored the demonstration to protest alleged weapons shipments to El Salvador. Weapons station spokesman Dan Tilakay said he could neither confirm nor deny whether the facility ships arms to Central America.

Most protesters were arrested for trespassing, said Contra Costa County Sheriff's Lt. Robert Henderson.

According to group spokesman Stephanie Troyan, Walker, who wrote the Pulitzer Prize-winning book "The Color Purple," had said before her arrest, "I am here because I can't stand it. I can't stand that the money I pay in taxes goes to kill people."

Henderson said the Navy property begins just outside a surrounding fence and was clearly marked with a yellow line. "In most cases, they went through a line of officers and crossed that yellow line intentionally," he said.

Some protesters were cited and released at the scene and others were taken to the Contra Costa County Detention Facility in nearby Martinez, then released, said Lt. Tom Lambert.

Fourteen who were brought to the jail listed their names as John Doe and authorities planned to detain them overnight, Lambert said.

Two California Highway Patrol officers arrest a protester outside the Concord, Calif., Naval Weapons Station Friday. The demonstrators were protesting alleged weapons shipments to El Salvador.

Goetz case goes to jury

NEW YORK (AP) — The case of subway gunman Bernhard Goetz went to the jury Friday, nearly 2 1/2 years after five shots in a train set off a worldwide debate over whether Goetz was an avenging angel or a villainous vigilante.

The jury received the case after 2 1/2 hours of instructions from state Supreme Court Justice Stephen Crane, who lectured them on the law regarding self-defense and justifiable force.

Crane said the jurors should consider whether "a hypothetical, reasonable person who is transported into the subway car on Dec. 22, 1984, and faced the same situation as the defendant," would have done the same thing.

The jury, which had been sequestered since Wednesday, was expected to continue deliberating Saturday if no verdict was reached Friday.

Goetz is charged with attempted murder, assault, reckless endangerment and four counts of illegal weapons possession.

He has admitted he shot Troy Canty, Barry Allen, James Ramseur and Darrell Cabey in the subway. But his lawyers argued that the shootings were justified. They said the four were about to rob Goetz.

Canty testified during the seven-week trial that he merely asked Goetz for $5. He said the four intended to break into video games, and he wanted to use the money to play the games so as not to attract attention.

The question, Crane said, was not only whether Goetz believed he was being robbed, but also, "What did he have a right to believe?"

Last man's club disbands

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A "last man" club of World War I veterans is disbanding with five of its members left.

The survivors, all in their late 80s and early 90s, won't meet this year for the first time in 50 years because three of the veterans are unable to get around.

"I asked them if I should call it off, and everybody said, 'Go ahead,'" said O.M. Ashe, 91, of Westwood, Kan.

"They told me to do whatever I wanted with the bottle," he said, referring to a bottle of champagne dedicated 50 years ago at the first meeting of the club. The bubbly was to go to the lone survivor.

still haven't figured out why I was able to outlive them."

At the club's annual meetings, surviving members would light a candle for every member who died the year before.

"Then we'd meet, eat, have a few drinks — you know, kick the ball around a little," said Bolin, the club's vice president.

Ashe has a photograph of 36 men dressed in suits. He is standing in the center of the group, holding the polished oak box where the champagne rested.

"This was taken at our 25th anniversary," said Ashe, who plans to keep the champagne in the box. "No sir, women weren't allowed. Heber is dead now. Carl's dead. Orla, this fellow here, died three years ago."

"You don't hear much about World War I anymore. After all, it was 70 years ago."

Marines drop charges against a second guard

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Marine Corps on Friday dismissed espionage charges against a second former guard at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, acknowledging its evidence wasn't legally sufficient to stand up in court.

Cpl. Arnold Bracy, 21, of Queens, N.Y., was freed from the brig at the Quantico, Va., Marine Base, where he had been held since March 24. He had been arrested four days earlier at the Marine base at Twentynine Palms, Calif.

The unexpected dismissal came just two days before Bracy's attorneys were scheduled to leave for Moscow on a fact-finding trip in hopes of buttressing the defense's case.

The dismissal of charges was the second major setback to the Pentagon's investigation of alleged espionage at the Moscow embassy. Last month, the corps was forced to drop the most serious charges against Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree, the major figure in the case, although he still faces a court-martial on other counts next month.

Bracy and Lonetree, 25, served together in Moscow as embassy guards during an eight-month period in 1985 and 1986. The Marine Corps had accused the two of escorting Soviet agents inside the embassy on numerous occasions last year after becoming sexually involved with Soviet women.

Lt. Col. Mike Powell, Bracy's chief military defense counsel, said he had been "convinced from the start that my client was innocent."

The Marine Corps, however, in its first direct confirmation of earlier press reports, said Bracy told investigators shortly before his arrest "that he had assisted Lonetree in allowing Soviets into secure areas of the U.S. Embassy."

"Cpl. Bracy confessed to a number of serious offenses against the Uniform Code of Military Justice, including espionage," the corps said in a statement.

The prosecution's case fell apart, however, when Bracy recanted that statement after his arrest, the corps acknowledged.

At a news conference Friday at Quantico, Bracy again denied the charges and said that he had been forced into a confession because of threats by his Naval Intelligence Service interrogators that he would lose his rights as an American citizen and as a member of the Marine Corps.

Bracy said he was approached by a woman who worked as a cook at the Moscow embassy in June 1986 and although she was not specific, he believed she was trying to recruit him as a spy.

Banks' loan problems domestic and foreign

By Bill Menezes
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A multimillion-dollar jury award to a California farmer who contended his main bank creditor drove him out of business shows the increasing problems lenders and borrowers face from billions of dollars in troubled loans — domestic as well as foreign.

The jury award stemmed from circumstances unique to the relationship between the farmer, Garth Conlan of Castroville, Calif., and the bank, San Francisco-based Wells Fargo & Co. But the dispute occurred in a sector that has been shaking the banking industry in recent weeks, as problems steadily mount from lending to agriculture, energy and the Third World.

A California jury this past week ruled Wells Fargo must pay damages totaling $50 million to Conlan, who alleged the bank drove him out of business by canceling millions of dollars in financing on his 1,500-acre spread.

Wells Fargo says it plans to seek a new trial, or failing that, to appeal the verdict and judgment.

ALTHOUGH THE PARTIES disagreed over the turn of events leading to the bank's foreclosure of the ranch in 1983 and Conlan's subsequent filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection from creditors, the jury agreed with Conlan's contention that the bank had acted improperly in dealing with him.

"We felt the bank kind of jumped the gun to cover its loss," jury foreman Cheryl Zertuche said at the time of the verdict.

The issue of how Wells Fargo and others can cover losses from problem loans also was highlighted with decisions by several major banks to add their reserves totaling billions of dollars in order to cover potentially uncollectable loans.

BankAmerica Corp., Chemical New York Corp., First Chicago Corp. and First Interstate Bancorp took the step this past week primarily because of shaky foreign loans. All of the banking companies said they would post major second-quarter losses — $1 billion in the case of BankAmerica — as a result.

The banks were the latest major institutions to take such a step since Citicorp became the first to do so last month, adding a whopping $3 billion to its loan loss reserves.

Prompting them has been a growing number of problem loans.

BANKAMERICA, for example, as of March 31 had $5.48 billion in loans on which interest was not being paid, compared with $3.8 billion a year earlier. That increase stemmed primarily from Brazil's suspension of bank interest payments, although BankAmerica and hundreds of other institutions have had trouble with domestic loans since the nation's farm and energy slumps began several years ago.

Many major banks, as well as smaller institutions, already had been adding millions of dollars to their reserves as the number of potentially bad loans continued to grow. But until Citicorp's move, most of those reserves had been tagged for areas other than foreign lending.

Week in Review

Although Citicorp and other institutions have said they expected their reserve additions were large enough to handle writeoffs of uncollectable foreign loans for some time, it also appeared that the problem showed little sign of easing.

Brazilian Finance Minister Luiz Carlos Bresser Pereira was quoted as saying on Tuesday that he hoped the International Monetary Fund would suspend payment of what Brazil owes it in the second half of this year, a step the IMF never has taken in its 40-year existence.

PAYMENTS OF INTEREST and principal owed to the IMF traditionally are a priority for debtor governments, which otherwise have been more willing to fall behind on payments to foreign governments and private creditors. The fund traditionally has followed a strict policy of refusing new financing with governments that fall too far behind in their payments.

Brazil has been paying the fund about $1.1 billion a year in principal and interest, and owes it a total of about $4.75 billion. The request to delay its IMF payments could indicate not only that it expected no short-term improvement in its economic problems but also that U.S. bank lenders were unlikely to see a resumption of their loan payments in the near future.

In addition to the big foreign lenders, smaller institutions continued showing the impact of loan problems.

U.S. and state bank regulators this past week closed several more small banks that became insolvent because of poor loans. Those loans generally were the result of what officials called imprudent lending practices compounded by the economic problems in the farm and energy belts.

IN OTHER business news of this past week:

• Wholesale prices rose by 0.3 percent in May, slowing the annual rate to 3.7 percent, easing fears of resurgent inflation in the U.S. economy, according to the Labor Department.

• The U.S. trade deficit narrowed to $13.3 billion in April for its second consecutive monthly decline, the Commerce Department stated. Economists said the figure provided fresh evidence that the worst of the country's trade problems were over.

• Retail sales fell 0.6 percent in May, the biggest decline in four months, following a 0.2 percent increase in April, according to the Commerce Department.

• Business sales fell by 0.3 percent in April while inventories rose by 0.2 percent, the government reported, a combination that could mean cutbacks in production and employment in the months ahead as manufacturers try to reduce unwanted inventories.

• The Commerce Department reported U.S. businesses planned to increase capital improvement spending by 3.1 percent this year, compared with expectations of a 3 percent increase three months ago.

GM recalls J-body cars

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. said Friday it is recalling 1.1 million 1983-84 J-body cars, such as Buick Skyhawk and Chevrolet Cavalier, and 108,000 1985-86 Chevrolet Spectrum cars to correct defects.

On the J-cars, which also include Cadillac Cimarron, Oldsmobile Firenza and Pontiac Sunbird, the driver's side left front seat anchor may break, causing the seat to tip back suddenly, GM said.

The automaker said it is aware of six accidents and 10 injuries linked to the broken seat anchors.

To keep anchors from breaking, dealers will reinforce them with a bracket, notifying owners to bring in their cars as parts become available.

On the Chevrolet Spectrum, built in Japan by Isuzu, a fuel pump defect may cause a leak and a fire in the engine compartment, GM said.

Business in Brief

CL&P issues preferred stock

HARTFORD — The Connecticut Light and Power Co. has sold $50 million of preferred stock as part of its ongoing program to refinance high-interest debt and high-coupon preferred stock.

The stock which will be retired in 25 years, will carry an annual dividend of 9.10 percent. CL&P, a subsidiary of Northeast Utilities, will use the proceeds to redeem $36 million in preferred stock. Series M, that was issued in June 1982. The 1982 stock, which carried an annual dividend of 15.04 percent, could not have been refinanced before this month.

Firm says summer jobs plentiful

HARTFORD — Summer jobs will be plentiful in Hartford, according to estimates made by one temporary help firm.

"The economy looks strong enough through the summer to support substantial hiring here," according to Neal Blackmarr, district manager for Kelly Services.

Blackmarr said Kelly plans to hire 3,000 employees for temporary work in the Hartford area, a part of a summertime effort to hire 150,000 employees nationwide.

Caldor expands senior discount

NORWALK — Caldor Inc., the discount department store chain, has announced that its 10 percent discount policy for senior citizens will now include merchandise that is on sale.

The new program starts on Wednesday, said Don R. Clarke, chairman and chief executive officer of the 115-store chain. "The senior shoppers aged 62 and over are an important part of Caldor's success, and we decided to do something extra for them to show our appreciation," he said.

Market is boring, uninspired and dull

By Chef Currier
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — With all the events of the past few weeks, many analysts say the stock market has been most remarkable for what it hasn't done.

Of late, investors have been confronted with an inflation scare, wide swings in interest rates, a change in the top job at the Federal Reserve, and a seven-nation economic summit meeting.

Yet stock prices have spent most of that period quietly plodding ahead in slow trading.

"The market is B.U.D. — boring, uninspired and dull," said A. Marshall Acuff, analyst at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., in a commentary published this past week.

"Judging by recent trends in volume, investors seem to be losing enthusiasm for stocks. The excitement of making money in the first quarter is past," Acuff said.

"An overall trendless market fraught with numerous internal reversals and divergences does not do much for one's performance or conviction," said Edward Nicolski, analyst at Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood Inc. "We suspect that this indecision is a major cause of recent low volume days."

Perhaps one primary explanation for the sluggish pace of the market is that views of the economic outlook have remained pretty much the same for some time now.

When President Reagan nominated Alan Greenspan to succeed Paul Volcker as chairman of the Federal Reserve Board this summer, there was naturally a lot of commotion on Wall Street.

But in the many analyses subsequently turned out on the subject, the words "doesn't change our forecast" appeared over and over again, whether the subject was stocks, interest rates, corporate profits or the economy as a whole. For the most part, the bulls stayed bullish and the bears stayed bearish.

As is often pointed out about the stock market, the most common motivation to buy or sell is a change in expectations.

The mood of calm faces a formidable challenge in the week ahead, with the arrival of a quarterly "triple witching hour" involving expiring stock index futures, index options and options on individual stocks.

Because of changes in the procedures involving some of the index options and futures contracts, many analysts say this particular witching hour poses the threat of fierce volatility all through the latter part of the week.

But if there are storms ahead, there was little sign of them in the week just concluded. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, with gains in each of the past five trading sessions, closed Friday at 2,377.73, up 51.58 from the week before.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose 4.36 to 189.85, and the market value index at the American Stock Exchange was up 6.14 at 335.64.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 182.38 million shares a day, against 147.26 million the week before.

The prevailing view of the domestic economy at the moment is that growth still proceeds on a slow course.

Consumer spending may be slowing, analysts say, but most or all of the slack is being picked up by a very gradual improvement in international trade.

By most economists' reckoning, overall economic figures for the second quarter will not be as strong as the first three months of the year, when a marked buildup in business inventories took place.

DOT fines Continental $250,000

By H. Josef Hebert
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Transportation Department, stepping up its enforcement of consumer regulations against airlines, announced Friday a civil penalty of $250,000 against Continental Airlines for various consumer protection violations.

The department also indicated that it was examining the consumer protection practices of "a number of (other) airlines," but no particular carrier was named.

The fine is the first civil penalty by the department against a major airline for consumer violations and is three times as much as ever levied by the Civil Aeronautics Board before it shut down in 1984, department officials said.

Continental acknowledged that it had had a poor record of dealing with consumer issues for a number of months but attributed the problems to its merger with People Express Airlines.

"We believe the vast majority of these problems are behind us," Thomas Plaskett, the airline's president, said at a news conference.

He said Continental agreed to pay the negotiated civil penalty of $250,000 "rather than engage in protracted litigation."

The department levied the fine as part of a negotiated settlement after determining that Continental, a subsidiary of Texas Air Corp., had:

— Not adequately informed travelers who were bumped from a flight that their substitute flight would be on standby and that they could receive cash compensation instead.

— Violated consumer protection rules by not promptly refunding tickets purchased by credit card after a refund request was made.

— Failed to inform travelers when flights included a portion of the trip on a small commuter plane instead of one of Continental's jetliners.

As part of the settlement, Continental agreed to stop the improper practices and beef up its consumer relations programs, including a commitment to expand its consumer affairs staff and training of personnel on federal consumer protection requirements.

Plaskett said that the airline already has implemented $60 million in capital improvements to better respond to consumer issues, including an improved telephone system to take consumer complaints. He said the airline also has hired additional consumer affairs specialists to deal with complaints.

The Transportation Department last month disclosed that Continental was the subject of a formal investigation because of consumer complaints. The action Friday is the first civil penalty imposed by the department since the rate of complaints about all airlines from travelers began increasing sharply last year.

OPINION

Nuke plant neighbors unprepared

While the federal government continues to license nuclear power plants, it refuses to try to determine whether people living near such plants are prepared to cope with an accident or other emergency.

In a report released Wednesday, the General Accounting Office said the government actually has no idea whether neighbors of the country's nuclear power plants have any idea what to do in an emergency.

The GAO urged the Federal Emergency Management Agency to survey people living within a 10-mile radius of nuclear plants.

It is inexcusable that the government continues to issue licenses to nuclear plants without regard to the preparedness of the communities around them.

Previous efforts to gauge the ability of communities to react to nuclear emergencies have met with resistance. Although FEMA conducts periodic surveys to make sure residents living near nuclear plants have received information on emergency planning, the agency has never surveyed residents to see if they have paid any attention to the information.

The only attempt by FEMA to conduct such a survey was thwarted when the Office of Management and Budget objected on the grounds that the proposed questionnaire was too burdensome. The 1981 questionnaire contained 20 multiple-choice questions, including some with several parts.

The government had better worry about the burdens and expenses it will face if an accident occurs at a nuclear power plant and the surrounding communities are unprepared.

Disaster planning should be a crucial consideration before any nuclear power plant is issued a license to operate. Such planning means not only ensuring that an acceptable evacuation plan is in place, but that affected residents are aware of the plan and other steps they should take to minimize the threat to their lives and property.

FEMA should promptly conduct a survey that will give it an indication of preparedness around nuclear plants and work to correct any deficiencies.

As last year's accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Union indicated, poor planning can be deadly.

Best wishes, Bill, and many thanks

To the Editor:

Town Director Bill Diana's recent announcement that he is retiring from public office calls for special recognition.

Having served with Bill on the town Board of Directors, I can personally vouch for his deep commitment to public service.

Not only has he served with distinction for many years as an elected town official, but he has also served with distinction as deputy state controller.

Our community will certainly miss him as a public servant but we recognize his well-earned right to return to private life.

Best wishes, Bill, and many thanks.

Laserquest plan threat to safety

To the Editor:

We are opening a "Pandora's Box" if we let in this new "Laserquest" shooting game.

Green Lodge is a residential care facility (home for the aged) with 20 residents situated across the street from the former Mott's supermarket.

I cannot see one single positive thing that will come of this new business. It will bring in clients from many states. I'm told it would be the only one on the East Coast.

I realize that our young adults need a place to get together that's safe and supervised and Manchester, like all other towns, has this problem.

Unfortunately, "Laserquest" will not be strictly for our town.

We will have one major traffic problem, with all the cars overflowing the parking lot, trying to get in and out of the parking lot, parking on all the nearby side streets, making it hard for fire and emergency vehicles to get through.

"Laserquest" plans to be open until midnight, which means we will have to put up with all the noise and pollution when the cars leave. This is the time most of us are sleeping with windows open in the summer.

I have personal experience with the younger age group leaving the tavern in the wee hours of the morning. For some reason, they think it's important to screech their tires and toot their horns as they go.

I've had residents leave my facility because of the noise and I still get complaints about the noise and the loud talking late at night when the tavern closes.

Besides the nuisance factor, I fear for the residents' safety with "Laserquest" being so close by with all the extra traffic. I already have had one elderly resident hit by a car while crossing at the traffic light into Mott's parking lot.

I have ongoing problems with the speed and amount of traffic as it is now.

The residents of Green Lodge and the group home for the handicapped two doors down do cross the street to go to the bank, Senior Citizens' Center and other places on that side of the street.

Our elderly deserve better than "Laserquest."

They couldn't pick a worse spot, so close to the Senior Citizens' Center, Green Lodge, dance studio, the group home and in a residential area that already has traffic problems.

Please, don't let this business in Manchester.

Rule one: Never listen to a bureaucrat

WASHINGTON — Taking federal bureaucrats' words at face value can be a risky business. Just ask William Bailey of Columbus, Ohio.

Bailey is president of Lee Products Inc., which manufactures braking systems for underground coal mines' hauling equipment. High-grade brakes can mean the difference between life and death for a miner in the close confines of a tunnel.

Considering the crucial nature of his company's product, Bailey took seriously the two memos sent out a few years ago by the Mine Safety and Health Administration announcing new criteria for evaluating the safety of braking systems. Bailey assumed, naively as it turned out, that the memos meant what they said — or appeared to say.

So Lee Products went to considerable expense redesigning its brake systems to meet the federal criteria and received a "certification of performance." That and 50 cents might have gotten Bailey a cup of coffee; it didn't help him sell any brakes. In fact, the expense of meeting the higher standards put him at a disadvantage with his competitors, none of whom had bothered to meet the federal criteria and obtain certification.

How could Bailey have been misled by bureaucrats? Easy. Our reporter Lisa Sylvester has seen the two memos sent out in 1979 to brake makers. The first one said:

Jack Anderson

"We propose that all equipment manufactured or rebuilt after June 8, 1981, must be provided with braking systems meeting these criteria." The criteria were attached.

The second memo a few months later notified manufacturers that the mine safety agency would "begin accepting applications for the certifications of performance" that were envisioned in the new setup.

The memos seemed pretty straightforward to Bailey, and his company set about following the apparent instructions. But bureaucrats have a way with words, and the magic word in this case was "propose." By merely proposing a new rule and stopping there, the bureaucrats rendered the whole thing meaningless.

Mine Safety and Health Administration spokesman Frank O'Gorman agreed that the memo "appeared" to say that certification would be required. "I sympathize enormously with Mr. Bailey," he said.

Then, with the unanswerable logic that makes dealing with a bureaucrat so frustrating, O'Gorman said: "How can we establish criteria without establishing a rule? And if we establish a rule, we have to go through the rule-making process."

He explained that "rule making is a very slow process" and includes a rigid series of steps: pre-proposal draft, public comment period, actual rule proposal, second public comment period, public hearing, third public comment period and, finally, a rule.

As for Bailey, whose company tried to make safer equipment by doing what it thought the government wanted, and wound up with a more expensive, less competitive product, O'Gorman said:

"I'm not sure how wise a business judgment it was to put his eggs into what he thought was a basket when it didn't exist. To bet on the future actions of the government, particularly in rule making, is a pretty hairy thing to do."

Bailey is understandably bitter. In a letter to the safety agency, he suggested sarcastically that either he was misled or the Mine Safety and Health Administration "is above reproach and therefore not answerable for its actions."

Watch on the Pentagon

The Pentagon spends are still at it. A General Accounting Office study caught the Air Force overstating the number of chemical-warfare shelters it would need for its personnel in Europe. The Air Force used a nice round number — 1,400; the GAO said that three bases alone were being allotted a total of 19 shelters more than they needed. At $493,000 per shelter, that meant a waste of more than $9 million. The Pentagon chewed it over and agreed that the requirements had been overstated — but only by eight shelters, or just under $4 million. But it did promise a review of the program, which has a price tag of well more than $600 million.

Meanwhile, congressional investigators have found that the Army in Europe, which travels on its wheels, is woefully unready for action. Half of the 5,000 vehicles scrutinized were certified as battle-ready but were actually inoperable. "The Army is not effectively maintaining its equipment to ensure maximum capability," the investigators reported. Preventive maintenance is weak, repair parts are lacking, training and supervision of mechanics is poor, the investigators concluded. They estimated that as much as 80 percent of the defects in military vehicles goes undetected.

China vs. Star Wars

Alarmed at the headlong rush toward Star Wars missile defense systems by both the United States and the Soviet Union, the Chinese have been frantically constructing their own deterrent: cruise missiles. Conceding the lead in space defense to the two rival superpowers — both of which Peking considers potential enemies in a nuclear war — the Chinese have decided to put their faith in cruise missiles, which would penetrate either Soviet or U.S. defenses as they stand now, and would be able to stand under either country's Star Wars shield as well. Peking figures this is the best chance to deter nuclear attack by either superpower.

While the AIDS bomb ticks

The ticking social bomb of AIDS should be driving us into national unity.

Instead, we're spinning off into bitter divisions by politics, sexual preference and race.

Officials in President Reagan's administration are feuding like ancient warriors over whether there should be mandatory testing (and, if so, for whom), the confidentiality of reports and targeted educational programs, while ignoring the groups most affected.

Of the three highest-risk groups — white gay males, blacks and Hispanics, and drug users — only white gay males are showing any mobilized concern.

At the Third International Conference on AIDS in Washington, D.C., male gays were an impressive and intelligent presence.

Unfortunately, they have few allies, outside of prominent entertainers inspired by the AIDS-related death of Rock Hudson.

"My sense of straight (college) students is that they say, 'It's not my problem,'" says Dr. Michael Ibrahim, dean of the University of North Carolina School of Public Health.

Their parents show the same stupidity of unconcern.

An equally torpid attitude is taken by blacks and Hispanics. But they're dying faster.

Blacks comprise 12 percent of the population, but account for 25 percent of the 36,000 victims of the disease, while Hispanics make up 6 percent of the population, but account for 14 percent of AIDS victims.

In the black community, this genocidal disease is regarded disdainfully as something "only white faggots have." Such massive ignorance and warped judgment come from centuries of racism. But blacks can no longer afford it.

Drug users, an already lawless community, are immune to public education efforts.

So mandatory testing, a cornerstone of the Reagan administration's anti-AIDS program, doesn't reach the groups who need help the most.

Mandatory testing is justifiably opposed as an invasion of privacy. For gays, it's another Damoclean sword to amputate their rights.

One frightening statistic ought to galvanize Americans into action: 1.5 million people are AIDS virus-carriers. To bring that statistic home, consider that one out of every 30 males between the ages of 20 and 50 is likely to be carrying the AIDS virus.

What should America do? Everything!

We should implement immediately:

• A massive educational program — especially aimed at the highest-risk groups.

• A medical research "Manhattan Project."

• Voluntary testing, with results being communicated to the victims.

• Mandatory testing for drug abusers, visitors to public health clinics, and certain sensitive categories of health workers.

• The appointment of gays, blacks and Hispanics to the presidential commission on AIDS. (This last is the most sensitive way the Reagan administration can demonstrate its commitment.)

When members of Congress, Catholic priests, prominent businessmen and professionals start dying of AIDS, the time for debate is long past. That ticking time bomb can explode any day.

Thoughts

Today is the eve of the Festival of the Holy Trinity, the only day on the commercial calendar devoted to a doctrine. Yet it is primarily a doctrine of Christ and of the unity of God. It is not mainly a time to remember 4th century theological debates. The Trinity is not a type of polytheism as some have imagined but a way by which Christians combine their witness to the life of Jesus with their affirmation of the Holy One at Israel. It is a festival of the tri-unity — with an emphasis on the completeness of God and our understanding of God as Creator, Redeemer and Sanctifier.

The value of the Trinity is in its fidelity to what the first apostles experienced. They found that God has become human in an

Tired of 'What's My Line?'

DEAR ABBY: While this is not exactly an earth-shaking problem, it can be very embarrassing, and I'm sure other people have had this problem, too. Very often when someone phones me, I have difficulty recognizing his voice.

Abby, please advise your readers that when they call someone to please announce their first and last names, even if it's a good friend. I know several Bobs, Sues, Barbaras and Pats.

Sometimes, well into a conversation, I have no idea to whom I am speaking or what he or she is talking about. And if I haven't spoken to the party in a very long time, I really get upset because I hate to ask, "Who is this, anyway?" I hope you don't think this is too petty to print.

NO MIND READER
DEAR NO MIND READER: Petty? Absolutely not. Little irritations cause big ulcers. And speaking of the telephone-related irritations: A pox on those folks who dial a number and if their party doesn't answer after the fourth or fifth ring, they hang up. Many people (especially those who are on in years) cannot spring to the telephone in 10 seconds, so give them a break and let the phone ring at least 10 or 20 times.

DEAR ABBY: I am planning a birthday party for my 8-year-old son. My problem is how to tell the mothers of the children who will be invited that instead of buying presents, to send cash instead. I have two reasons for preferring cash. One, I spent a lot of time and effort searching for the right kind of toys for my son and I prefer him to have educational toys. And he already has plenty of toys. With cash, I will be able to buy something my son really needs.

Frankly, I would rather have people bring nothing at all than have them bring junk toys or clothes. So how do I tell them without appearing rude?

MRS. Y.

DEAR MRS. Y.: There is no way you can ask for cash instead of gifts. It's tacky and presumptuous.

Children bring gifts to birthday parties because part of the fun is seeing the "birthday boy" (or girl) open the gifts and express joy, excitement, surprise and appreciation. All children enjoy receiving gifts and giving them. It's part of the birthday tradition.

DEAR ABBY: Please print this because we've asked several people and nobody seems to have the answer. In a traditional church wedding, when the clergyman asks, "If there is anyone present who sees just cause why this couple should not wed, speak now, or forever hold your peace," what would happen if someone spoke up? And has this ever happened outside of the movies?

CONCERNED COUPLE

DEAR CONCERNED: If someone claimed to know why the couple should not marry, the clergyman would stop the ceremony, confer privately with that person, then depending on the clergyman's decision, the wedding would either proceed or be delayed. I was informed that one wedding was stopped when a guest claimed that the bridegroom was already married. To her.

Conflicting information in hospital diet sheets

DEAR DR. GOTT: I suffered an acute myocardial infarction eight years ago. Since then I have been given several diet sheets from two different hospitals. These claim that olives, avocados, olive oil, etc., are no good. Since then, I have read that they are beneficial. There also is conflicting information on the benefits of nuts. My cholesterol levels are normal and I check out fine in all other respects. Can you shed some light on these conflicting reports?

DEAR READER: High blood cholesterol clearly is associated with coronary artery disease and heart attacks. If the cholesterol is elevated, a low cholesterol diet will be of benefit. Your doctor can tell you how stringent a diet you need, depending on your general health and blood cholesterol determination.

Because your blood cholesterol is "normal" — and by current standards, that would mean below 220 mg/dl — you probably don't have to be picky an eater as does a patient with a higher level. For example, nuts, shellfish and olive oil usually are considered to be "safe" foods, in moderation, whereas red meat, eggs and dairy products should be avoided.

Hospital diet sheets sometimes do not reflect the most up-to-date scientific advances. After all, new nutritional discoveries are reported every year. Again, check with your doctor. It's currently believed that the amount of fat in non-mammalian edibles, such as nuts and vegetables, is not a health hazard. To give you more information, I'm sending you a free copy of my Health Report, Eating Right For a Healthy Heart. Others who want the report should send $1 and their name and address to P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Is it normal for a woman to bleed or spot during pregnancy and still have a normal baby? I am getting the runaround on this. Medical books say no and some doctors say yes.

DEAR READER: Some mild spotting or staining is common in pregnant women. Outright bleeding is abnormal and should be brought to the attention of an obstetrician.

In women who have high-risk pregnancies, any spotting is cause for alarm and should be investigated. However, occasional staining does not necessarily mean trouble.

My answer is meant to give general information. A pregnant woman who spots should check with her obstetrician to determine whether the amount and frequency of the staining is within the acceptably normal range for that particular woman at that particular stage of pregnancy.

SUNBURN

Before you endure hours of discomfort, baking in the hot sun, you should know that the healthful effects of a suntan are almost nil. In fact, excessive exposure to sun permanently damages the skin and leads to premature aging, wrinkling, a leathery texture, and can cause a cancerous condition of the skin. A high-number sunscreen lotion, carefully applied, offers good protection, as does limited exposure to the sun.

Joe Bologna

Q. Please tell me all about Joe Bologna from "Rags to Riches."
Cindy Fleicher, Jones, Mich.

A. He's 51, from Brooklyn, the grandson and son of bootblack/shoe-shine specialist who expected him to become one as well. He, on the other hand, wanted to become a baseball player while he was growing up but veered off into art, as an art history major at Brown. He also got some show-business experience during his college years by writing jokes for the dean of discipline. They were so good that soon the other deans were after him to write jokes for their speeches. He also acted in school productions.

After college he went into the Marines and then advertising — writing and directing TV commercials. He missed writing jokes, though, so his agent put him together with a stand-up comedienne, Renee Taylor, who needed material for her nightclub act. They got along so well that they were married the following year, 1965 (appropriately for a show-business couple, they had their wedding reception on "The Merv Griffin Show"), and also began writing together.

Their first collaboration, doctoring a Broadway-bound disaster, wasn't an auspicious beginning, but a couple of years later, they had a major Broadway hit, "Lovers and Other Strangers," that later became a successful film. They followed that with "Made for Each Other," and on TV a series for James Coco, "Calucci's Department," the special "Acts of Love and Other Comedies" and "Bedrooms" on HBO.

They're now in production with the film version of their 1981 Broadway play "It Had to Be You"; they've co-written it and are co-directing and co-starring.

He and Taylor also have separate careers, however: she is writing (she recently had a successful book, "My Life on a Diet," due in paperback in December); he is acting. Besides "Rags to Riches," "Honor Thy Father," "Torn Between Two Lovers" and "Copacabana," movies include "Blame It on Rio," "My Favorite Year," "Chapter Two" and "Transylvania 6-5000."

Between the Lines

The story behind the story

By Josie

Q. Please tell me whether or not Liza Minnelli is planning any new entertainment projects. She's one of my favorites.
Judith Brown, Fresno, Calif.

A. Her current project is a scheduled three-week appearance at New York's Carnegie Hall, due to run through the middle of this month. After that, she has a couple of film projects in the works, all of which hinge on whether or not there is a directors' strike, a possibility as we go to press. She does have a new film due out in late fall, "Rent-a-Cop," co-starring Burt Reynolds.

Q. In my opinion, one of the best actors of stage, screen and television is Burgess Meredith. Has he ever received any Oscars or Emmys? Tess Chokas, Manchester, Conn.

A. He's one of the most highly regarded and flexible actors in the business, but he doesn't have as many of the best-known awards as one might expect. He has an Emmy for the 1976-77 season TV special "Tail Gunner Joe," and a special Tony award presented in 1960 along with a number of other nominations for both awards. He also has back-to-back Oscar nominations (for "Day of the Locust" and "Rocky"), but no wins.

Kirk Cameron

Christopher Norris

Q. There's a big gourmet dinner riding on this one: Was the character Christopher Norris played on "Trapper John, M.D." nurse Gloria Brancusi or Vancuzzi? Also, could you tell a bit about her and what she's doing lately.
E. McGuire, Scranton, Pa.

A. The character was Gloria Brancusi, and she played her for six years before deciding to leave to pursue new challenges, as they say — in her case, guest appearances on series such as "Murder, She Wrote," "Mike Hammer" and "Hotel."

She grew up in show business, the daughter of a Broadway conductor and a singer-actress (who, being theatrical types, though it fun to give her a boy's name; when she was younger, she didn't agree — the other kids gave her a pretty tough time, and the government took it literally by sending her a draft notice when she was 18).

While on the road with her parents, who were working in summer stock, she made her professional debut at 4, and by the age of 10 had debuted on Broadway. Later, she put in some time on various soaps ("The Doctors," "Search for Tomorrow" and "The Edge of Night") before moving to Los Angeles at 18 and a career in TV.

She's married to banker Bud Danley and they live in a house on the beach.

Q. Whatever happened to Jill Clayburgh? Mary Poole, Lakewood, N.J.

A. She slowed down her career the last few years to have her two children, but she's gearing back up. She starred in a CBS TV movie, "Miles to Go," last October and stars in a new movie, "Shy People."

Q. Please tell me a little about Kirk Cameron from TV's "Growing Pains" and what he's doing now.
Tara Hughes, Yankton, S.D., Michele Vance, Harts, W. Va., Tamie O'Neill, Manchester, Conn. Dianna Hinojosa, McAllen, Texas

A. He's 16, one of four children of a junior-high-school teacher and his wife, who reportedly run a pretty strict household and keep their son's fame, and fan mail, in perspective. He started in show business at 9 doing commercials; a friend of his mother's, the mother of "Eight Is Enough's" Adam Rich, had suggested that she take the kids' pictures into an agent and the agent chose Kirk.

The commercials led to a role in a short-lived series called "Two Marriages" which, in turn, led to "Growing Pains" two years ago. (His natural ease got him the part, but as he admits, his character is much smoother than he is in real life.)

His latest step seems to be to the movies: He's co-starring with Dudley Moore in "Like Father, Like Son" currently in production.

Jane Seymour likes romantic living

By Shirley Lee

“When I get up in the morning — if I'm not acting another role — I don't know who I'm going to be that day. Am I going to be a lady in white or a lady in blue? Am I going to feel a little vampy or do I feel like being pre-Raphaelite?”

Jane Seymour smiles as benignly as one of that particular Renaissance artist's madonnas might have done as she elaborates on the theme of her life that is so well expressed in her book entitled "Jane Seymour's Guide to Romantic Living."

"Trust me," she continues in her clipped British accent. "I don't spend more than 10 or 15 minutes deciding. It's whatever first hits my fancy in the wardrobe. And then, of course, I'm awfully practical. I'll wear something twice because it has to go to the cleaners, but I'll make it look very different the second wearing."

Clearly, today, she is The Lady in Blue, with her gleaming brown tresses spreading out over the shoulders of a deep electric blue dress adorned by a "crazy cherub pin" encrusted with all kinds of "ridiculous rhinestones" and backed by large green leaves shaped like wings.

"This is a very old dress," she says earnestly, "at least four or five years old. I never throw stuff out." To further dramatize the outfit, she's added a leather "cowboy belt made by a friend," covered with more little colored rhinestones, and high-heeled blue boots she found in Italy.

Seated on a boxy white couch in her large Beverly Hills living room, Seymour tells how thrilled she is with her new avocation.

"Making movies is fun. It's exciting and it's my job. But writing is my passion." She explains how it came about. "I'd never written so much as an essay before, but it's an idea I've had for a long time. It's part of my life. I'm deemed an eccentric to a certain extent by my friends and my family, although my family is just as eccentric as I am."

She decided to follow through on the idea when she was three months pregnant with her second child, Sean Michael, who was born July 31, 1985. (Her daughter Katie is now 4.) "I had just finished making a romantic movie and I thought, 'Now what am I going to do?' And I thought of the book and told my agent, who called a literary agent who, in turn, sold it to the publisher.

Romantic living, as Seymour defines it, means bringing "suspense, mystery, adventure, excitement and drama — femininity for women and chivalry for men — into your life. In other words," adds the actress, "don't feel obliged to give somebody a present on Valentine's Day because Hallmark Cards tells you you have to. Give it 10 days before because you feel like it and surprise that person."

She cites more examples. On the opening night of her Broadway production of "Amadeus" (for which she originated the role of Constanze Weber, wife of Mozart), she says, "The whole world had given me flowers, but nothing from my husband (Hollywood business manager David Flynn). I'm kind of hurt and disappointed. The curtain is about to go up my second. Then suddenly the door of my tiny dressing room is flung open and three dozen red roses are strewn all over the room. I can't walk without stepping on them. He didn't come in and say, 'Here are your flowers, darling. Good luck.' He just threw the roses and ran. That," she finishes proudly, "is my husband."

Another: There was the time about five days before their second wedding anniversary when Flynn brought home a bottle of champagne and gruffly demanded that she bring out the glasses. Handing her a filled one, he said, "There's something in this one," causing her to feel indignant that he thought her glassware unclean. When she looked, "in the bottom was this beautiful diamond pendant." She laughs. "I almost drank it."

Flynn, she insists, is really the one who inspired the romantic living bit.

But, for her own part, she once "kidnapped" her husband, picking him up in a car one day, driving him to the airport — where she allowed him one phone call to settle his business — then hustling him off on a mystery trip with her.

Likewise, she's persuaded him that wives and husbands should enjoy "business luncheons" for discussing personal and family matters. "One day a week he cancels another appointment and we go wherever he would go for business lunch and talk about everything. It's very romantic and lovely."

She says that friends are emulating this habit and have also adapted her "kidnapping" idea to their own circumstances, such as creating a unique way for their parents to celebrate a 40th anniversary.

"Open your mind to doing romantic and exuberant things," says the actress.

Seymour feels that her parents were also influential in forming her philosophy of getting the most possible enjoyment out of life. Born Joyce Penelope Wilhelmina Frankenberg in Middlesex, England, in 1951, the eldest daughter of a renowned British obstetrician and his Dutch wife, she studied ballet from the age of 2 and might have become a prima ballerina except for a knee injury.

At 16 she decided to become an actress and took for her stage name that of one of Henry VIII's six wives. Her first film was "Oh, What a Lovely War." This was followed by stage work and many BBC radio and television roles, including a six-hour version of "Far From the Madding Crowd."

She attracted the attention of the most powerful English casting director when she portrayed Winston Churchill's first love, Pamela Powden, in "Young Winston," resulting in many starring vehicles. One of these was the role of Solitaire in the "007" movie "Live and Let Die."

On arriving in America for a promotional tour for "King David," in which she played Bathsheba, she was advised by Hollywood producers that she should make an effort to lose her English accent if she wished to continue working there. She settled into a comfortable Middle Atlantic dialect that allowed her to portray proper Bostonian Marjorie Chisholm in the six-hour television novel "Captains and the Kings."

This was followed by the movies "Battlestar Galactica" and "Somewhere in Time" opposite Christopher Reeve. For her role of Kate in the critically acclaimed TV adaptation of John Steinbeck's "East of Eden," she won a Golden Globe award.

Recalling days of her youth, she says, "My parents did glamorous holidays when I was young, but with my two sisters and I they would get into our very old car with maps and we'd follow the Rhine or follow the Danube until we found a wonderful place to stop and have a picnic. We might tour a castle or buy frankfurters in Frankfurt or cheese in France. It was always an adventure."

This sort of thing may have inspired another of Seymour's hints to romantic living. "If you are feeling bored and need something to bring more excitement into your life," she advises, "and, of course, if you can afford it, pack a bag and with your passport in hand, go to the airport or the train station or bus depot, and take the next plane or train or bus to wherever it is going."

"I've traveled a lot on films to places that I never would have gone to for a holiday and managed to have the most wonderful time. There are fascinating places to go with marvelous inns and houses all over America. You could find yourself in a very romantic spot."

Leaving her children behind is difficult for her. But she makes every second count when she is with them and has a reliable nanny with whom to entrust them.

"I'm the classic juggler. When Katie was a tiny baby, I was doing an interview, breast-feeding her, taking a phone call and signing contracts while making a cup of coffee for us all. I don't believe in shutting my children out of my life. Sometimes if I am being made up, I will let the makeup man fix Katie up a little bit, too."

She also allows her daughter to "play havoc" with "marvelous makeup with all sorts of colors" she is no longer using. "It's the sort of thing they do at the Children's Museum, so why not do it at home? With a copy of National Geographic I can show her that with many of the primitive peoples of the world, it's not just a thing of looking pretty, but actually a cultural custom that's been going on for centuries."

She continues the subject of children. "When I am packing for a trip, I'll let Katie help me pick out my shoes. Of course I end up taking what I want, but she is already learning about putting things together."

Seymour, too, enjoys putting things together eclectically, such as the before-mentioned outfit she is wearing. "I don't believe in dressing as the designer says you should. An example can be seen on the dust-jacket of my book. The jewel I am wearing in my hair is not actually a tiara, but an earring. And the ornament at my throat is the rather elaborate clasp of a long string of pearls which I put on backwards for the picture session." She laughs. "If I'd turned around, you would have seen the pearls hanging down my back."

Try a weekend milking cows in Wisconsin

By Rex Gogerty

Want to spend a weekend harvesting corn on an Iowa farm? How about a few days skiing and milking cows in Wisconsin? A growing number of non-farm tourists are spending holidays and vacations on farms and ranches across North America and overseas. They say rural recreation is economical and exciting and there's a complete lack of crowds or commercialism.

"The part I enjoy most is the pace," says Vera Litwiler of Hopedale, Ill. "Even when we're traveling, we often spend the night on a farm. We like to enjoy the peace and quiet in the evening and the cheery sendoff in the morning. It's like stopping to see a good friend or neighbor."

Tranquility is always on the agenda at Olena's Guest Haus near Montezuma, Ga., one of the regular stops for Oliver and Vera Litwiler when they travel Interstate 65 to Florida. The fields and farmyards surrounding the Victorian home are dotted with dairy cows and the morning calm is broken only by the milking operation a half-mile down the country road. Lena Yoder's home-based rolls add elegance to the Georgia morning. Many guests rise early, watch the milking, pet a calf or visit with Olen Yoder as he cares for the 200-cow herd.

Olen and Lena Yoder started their bed-and-breakfast sideline enterprise three years ago. Their roomy home sleeps six guests. During the heavy fall and spring travel season the Guest Haus is booked most nights by tourists who like the country environment and reasonable rates — $25 per night for a room with two double beds. The hot rolls, coffee and milk are served on the veranda or in the kitchen.

The Yoders are part of a growing trend among farm families, selling services as well as food. Sparked in part by the economic pinch down on the farm, rural recreation has become a major sideline for many farmers. "I wanted something to supplement our farm income without commuting to a job," Lena explains. "We have a huge home and we enjoy people, so entertaining guests here on the farm seemed like a logical enterprise."

The Yoders provide conversation and barnyard tours as well as sleeping accommodations. They leave most of the meal preparation up to Alva Yoder, a neighboring dairyman who recently opened Deitsch Essen Haus, where Mennonite dishes are served daily.

Eating and sleeping are supplemented with a diverse recreational schedule on farms that entertain on a weekly basis. Chick and Lubertha Tindall provide swimming, camping, hiking and hunting on their farm near Peach Bottom, Pa. Their scenic Lancaster County location includes many historic and fun trips for families who come for two days or two weeks.

Like hundreds of other farms listed in the Farm Vacation Guide, the Tindalls' Pleasant Grove Farm offers heaping portions of farm life. In addition to three scrumptious meals a day, served around the big oak table, guests are invited to help make hay, feed calves or explore the ancient barn for a new clutch of kittens.

"We enjoy country living so we decided to share it with non-farm folks," Lubertha says. "Children seem especially interested in the milking process. Some of them didn't know where the milk on their table comes from. Kids and grownups alike love to explore our 130-year-old stone house and hike along the creek."

If you enjoy riding and roping plus spectacular scenery, consider a stopover at a Rocky Mountain ranch. Hundreds of western families now open their gates for the tourist trade as well as the cattle roundup. These working ranches offer rest and recreation at whatever rate you are geared to.

Riding up to the high range country is a favorite outing for guests at Mesa Creek Ranch near Millarville, Alberta, Canada. Dave Glaister hosts horsemen and women for a day-long trail ride to check on the cows and calves grazing the summer pasture. He and his company of city cowhands pack a lunch, enjoy the crisp air, tag a newborn calf and swap stories along the way.

"Some of our guests come to work," Glaister says.

Astrograph

Sunday, June 14, 1987
Exciting times are in the offing for you in the year ahead. Lots of new social involvements are likely, including a fun trip to a place you've been longing to visit.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) The places are now starting to blend together regarding something you've been hoping for. Expect some good news today. Major changes are ahead for Gemini in the coming year. Send for your Astrograph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.
CANCER (June 21-July 22) Joint ventures look exceptionally promising for you today, especially those that affect your financial well-being and reputation.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Involvements with friends should work out pleasantly for all concerned today, but this might not be equally true in your dealings with in-laws or relatives.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your craftsmanship and handiness could save you a fair piece of change today. You might be able to salvage something another has discarded.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You're likely to be in a very sociable frame of mind today, especially in the evening. You might plan something fun for after twilight.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) Arrangements you enter into today with family members or relatives could produce some substantial benefits for everyone involved.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Think big today. You will be far more adept at handling issues that are grand in scope than you will be in coping with smaller ones.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You have good possibilities for personal gain today from two unrelated sources. These promising developments could occur simultaneously.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) In competitive, fun involvements today, try not to make winning the vital issue. You'll have a lot more fun just enjoying the game for what it has to offer.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) People with whom you deal on an intimate basis today are likely to treat you more generously than usual. It's important, however, to repay their kindness at a later date.
ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be hopeful regarding today's events. You could be extremely lucky in situations where important people are involved and large issues are at stake.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) There are strong indications that you will benefit today from a confidential arrangement that is screened from the eyes and ears of curious onlookers.

Sexuality

Disabled girl should learn the facts

Grandma worries about menstruation's effects on patient

By Dr. June Reinisch

The Kinsey Report

DEAR DR. REINISCH: My 12-year-old granddaughter has cerebral palsy. She cannot walk or talk, and she is getting somewhat spastic. She requires almost total care. However, she is a bright little girl and very much aware of the world around her.
We're concerned about what to do when she starts her period. We are afraid that she will not understand what it is about and will have a hard time coping with the discharge and discomfort. We worry about her personal hygiene, especially at school. She still wets the bed at night, which would add to the problem.
For some time we have discussed her having a hysterectomy, but this is not an easy solution to even think about. What are the alternatives to solve this problem?

DEAR READER: Write to the United Cerebral Palsy Research Foundation, Program Dept., 1522 K Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20005 (Attention: Fran Smith). They can send you pamphlets about cerebral-palsied children and sexual concerns.

If you have specific questions not answered by the pamphlets, call their Public Relations Office at (800) USA-LUCP.
As I'm sure you already know, the effects of cerebral palsy vary so enormously from one person to the next that it is difficult for me to make suggestions about what might be best for your granddaughter. However, hysterectomy (surgical removal of the uterus) is not usually the treatment of choice.

Much more depends on what your granddaughter can do than on what she cannot do. You've said that she's bright and that she goes to school, so it should not be any more difficult for her to understand menstruation than for any other child. Even if she also has a degree of mental retardation or learning disability (and most people with cerebral palsy do not), much can be done to prepare for her adolescent changes.

As for all girls, it is important that she know about menstruation before her first flow appears. She needs to know that she is not sick and has not injured herself.

Penile Implant

DEAR DR. REINISCH: Does

Cerebral palsy does not usually alter reproductive or sexual functioning. She should understand that menstrual flow is one part of this aspect of life and that all women do this at puberty.

getting a simple (painless) penile implant require hospitalization? If so, for how long? Are there side effects? What is the average cost, and is it covered by health insurance?
DEAR READER: All types of penile implants require surgery, anesthesia and hospitalization for a few days. Many men are released on the third or fourth day after surgery.
The cost of an implant varies from $600 to $2,000. This does not include the surgeon's and hospital fees, which vary from one locale to another. If the cause of erectile dysfunction is a medical illness (such as diabetes), some insurance companies do cover penile implants. Check with your physician, the hospital where the surgery will be done and your own insurance company for more specific cost estimate.

Most men and their partners report being satisfied with the results of penile implant surgery. A few men (approximately 2 percent) who have had the semi-rigid type of implant have later difficulties with infection or extrusion of the device (that is, the implant comes out of the body). In nearly all of these cases, another penile implant can be inserted after the problem is corrected.

About 10 percent of men who have the inflatable-pump type of implant require later surgery to repair the device or correct problems, although they report high satisfaction with the surgical results.
However, penile-implant surgery should be done only after thorough testing to determine if causing the erectile problems. This is necessary because the penile surgery removes any future capacity to have natural erections. If there is a chance that other types of treatment (such as a change of medications) can restore erections, they must be tried before surgery is even considered.

Presurgical and postsurgical counseling are also important in ensuring satisfaction of the man and his partner. Not all physicians provide thorough evaluations or counseling services, so you should contact the department of urology at a medical school or large hospital and ask for an appointment with the person most experienced in evaluation erection problems.
If an implant is necessary, experience led also important when choosing a surgeon. Selecting, fitting and implanting the device can be tricky, so you should be in the hands of a surgeon who has done a large number of these procedures. Don't be too shy to ask a surgeon how many implants he or she has done

Much more depends on what your granddaughter can do than on what she cannot do. You've said that she's bright and that she goes to school, so it should not be any more difficult for her to understand menstruation than for any other child.

Drugs in semen

DEAR DR. REINISCH: If a man takes medications for high blood pressure and a heart condition, are there residues of these drugs in his semen? If so, could this affect his partner's health if they have oral sex?
As Pearsall notes in this notebook, "Superimuity" (McGraw-Hill) the positive effects of being able to continue the pleasurable aspects of life (particularly a long, sexual relationship) are crucial to the ill person's ability to regain or maintain a better health. If the man's partner is still concerned about possible exposure to a drug through semen, Pearsall suggests some options. Have the man wear condoms or don't swallow the semen; either technique would reduce even the slight chance of ingesting a drug, but will keep the pleasurable ability.

DEAR READER: There has been little research on the passage of various drugs into semen, but it is known that some drugs taken orally can be found in semen. For example, tetracycline (an antibiotic) has been found in semen shortly after the drug is ingested.

According to Dr. F. Paul Pearsall of the Sinai Hospital of Detroit (an expert on the effects of diseases and drugs on patients' daily lives), there is only a very small chance that any drug residue will have an impact on the health of the partner.

You can test your affair's survival rate

By Mollie Fermaglich

Having been born and raised in the heart of New York City, I instinctively know how to make the perfect egg cream. And, after only six months of French cooking lessons, I can now make a passable soufflé. But it's taken me more than a decade of dating to have finally figured out the precise ingredients necessary for any relationship to stand a chance.

For a long time, I relied on and believed others — my mom, my friends, how-to books and advice columnists — and I thought they really knew. I heard that opposites attract; I'd read that, if the sex was great, so would the rest of the relationship be; I was told that to get involved with someone whose background differed greatly from my own would be to court disaster.

And, while I'm sure there's an element of truth to each of these theories, in the grand scheme of things, there are far more crucial criteria involved when it comes to developing a lasting and mutually satisfying relationship with a man: "little" things that go beyond mutual respect and consideration, beyond the quality of your sex life together, beyond similar educational or socio-economic backgrounds.

For my money, here's what really counts, though not necessarily in order of importance:

Food compatibility. That's right — this is extremely critical to the success of any relationship. What you eat, where you eat and even how often you eat can make the difference between living happily ever after or never getting past the second date.

My first date with Philip took place over sprout salads and zucchini lasagna at a local health-food restaurant. As someone who has always preferred fruit pie (with tons of whipped cream) to fruit juice, the Yogurt Shack was not exactly my idea of gastronomic bliss. But, Philip was tall, dark, handsome and, yes, healthy, and at the time I would have eaten raw eggs and frozen bean curd just to be with him.

On our second date, we went to the movies and, before the film began, I stopped off at the candy counter to buy a chocolate bar. His reaction was so violent, you'd have thought I had just purchased a vial of cyanide.

Dare I let Philip return with me to my apartment where he would discover — gasp! — canned goods? Oh, no — red meat! Heaven forbid — a half-eaten bag of Cheddar-flavored potato chips! Instead, I suffered through brown rice and an unidentifiable though undoubtedly highly nutritious bean, herbal tea and organic orange slices. Perhaps Philip could have turned out to be the love of my life, but it was a relationship that didn't stand a chance unless we took our meals separately.

Then there was Charles. Charles didn't eat to live; he lived to eat. Here was a man who would wait in line in the freezing cold to get in to the newest Indian restaurant in town; who could tell you, whether you wanted him to or not, the foods of every province of the People's Republic of China; who would drive 40 minutes out of his way for a slice of what some newspaper rated "the best cheesecake east of the Mississippi."

It was hard for me to sustain a relationship with someone so obsessed with food that it took precedence over all else. I, who am perfectly at home with My-T Fine instant pudding, did not want to spend the better half of any relationship tracking down the French restaurant in our city that made the most authentic chocolate mousse.

Compatible bad habits. We all have them, and, like cavities, they're bound to surface sooner or later. In the interest of not wasting your time or his, the sooner you find out what each others' bad habits are, and whether or not they can peacefully co-exist, the better off you are.

Now, I'm not particularly proud that my housekeeping habits lean more toward sloppy Oscar Madison's than neat-freak Felix Unger's; that I often eat, read the newspaper and watch television simultaneously; that, when I get nervous, I crack my knuckles, gum or anything else I can get hold of.

But, that's me, and if I haven't learned by now to wash my dishes immediately after I eat, instead of letting them sit in the sink until the water evaporates, it's unlikely I'm going to change. It is likely that the lasting relationships in my life have been, and will continue to be, with those men who can tolerate my idiosyncrasies, and I theirs.

Like everything else, bad habits are relative — if you share them in common with a man, you're less likely to wear on each others' nerves. Men who toss their dirty socks onto the floor don't bother women who do likewise with their panty hose, and women who drench themselves in cologne seem to be drawn to men who bathe themselves in after-shave lotion.

Two years ago, I began dating Carl. Things went along smoothly the first couple of dates, and then came the inevitable first night at his place. Just as I was drifting off to sleep, I was suddenly jolted by WINS all-news radio. "The time is now 11:37, and it's a cloudy, cold night in the Big Apple. And, now for the headlines..." When I asked, less than politely I might add, what was going on, Carl calmly, matter-of-factly explained, "I always sleep with the radio on. I've been doing it since college. You'll get used to it. Good night." Good night, Carl, and goodbye.

This was not my only relationship to end, as Orson Welles said, "before its time." Gregory whistled incessantly, and I found no thrill in dating one of the Seven Dwarfs; Mark chain-smoked little French cigarettes and flicked his ashes any and everywhere; Paul couldn't sleep without the window wide open, even in the dead of winter, but a man would have to be more than special to me for me to risk double pneumonia.

Taste in TV, films, books. Let's face it — levels of tolerance tend to decrease as you get to know someone. In the beginning of a new romance, you may be able to feign interest in the "MacNeil-Lehrer Report" or "Nova: Life of the Speckled Brook Trout." But, how can a relationship endure if you're forced to (as I was), sneak-watch re-runs of "Little House on the Prairie" when he's working late?

I like to watch television. In fact, after a long day of working and using my brain, there's nothing I enjoy more than a couple of hours of junk-TV. I don't like pretending that I've never heard of "Wheel of Fortune," or that I think "Knots Landing" is where rich people keep their yachts moored. Imagine the problems that arose when I dated a man who didn't even own a television set, and who bragged that the last time he watched TV was when Ed Sullivan was still alive. Oh, sure — at first I had only mild withdrawal pains passing up TV Guide at the supermarket check-out stand.

But, soon I found myself calling friends to find out what happened on "Dynasty," and I knew I had sunk really low when my guy asked, "Who's this Alexis Colby you're always talking about?" and I responded with, "Oh, just someone I went to college with."

Taste in books and films plays a part in how long the two of you will last. I could never fall for a "Star Wars" junkie, and couldn't care less if Captain Kirk and Mr. Spock spun off somewhere into the atmosphere, never to be heard from, or seen again. And, as a Woody Allen devotee, it's unlikely I'd ever become involved with someone whose idea of "funny" is "Smokey and the Bandits," Paris I, II and/or III.

"Books," says my friend Claire, "can also tell you a lot about a person. If I don't see many books in a man's apartment, or if the ones I see are Louis L'Amour westerns, I know it's time to move on."

Other leisure activities. Does your idea of the perfect vacation consist largely of basking in the sun, drinking frozen daiquiris and comparing tans with your partner? If so, it's naive to think you'll stand a chance with a mountain-climbing, cave-exploring, "but are you right for Grape-Nuts" type of guy.

While we all enjoy introducing and turning on others to the things we love to do, the bottom line is that unless we ultimately succeed in converting the other person to our way of thinking, we're fighting a losing battle.

I don't want to spend seven precious days of my vacation in a wet suit with a SCUBA tank strapped onto my back; I love to go shopping, and couldn't bear being with a man who got anxiety attacks at the first sign of a shopping mall; I think Sundays are great for roaming through art museums, something impossible to do with a man who thinks Monet makes fabulous clip-on earrings.

There is nothing like a cold,

Dining In

When the family chef dines out

By Janet Lorimer

I confess! Taking me out to dinner is something from which most people cringe, and it really is my own fault. Take the other night, for example: "Well, Janet, here we are. Isn't this a lovely restaurant? I love the decor and I hear the food is just excellent. Speaking of food... Janet, what are you doing? Why are you sniffing the air? What do you mean, 'redolent with garlic'? What kind of a conversation opener is that?"

MARINATED MUSHROOMS

1 cup olive oil
1/2 cup dry white wine
1/2 cup lemon juice
1 clove garlic, finely minced
dash pepper
1 teaspoon oregano
1/2 red onion, cut into rings
18 medium mushrooms, trimmed
1/4 cup chopped fresh parsley

In a large bowl mix the oil, wine, lemon juice, minced garlic, pepper and oregano. Stir well. Add onion rings, mushrooms and parsley. Stir well to coat mushrooms and onion rings. Cover and refrigerate, marinating overnight. Serve chilled. Serves 4-6.

"Those hors d'oeuvres were delicious, but this soup smells heavenly. Mmmm! Must be homemade. Janet! Janet! Stop peering at it like that. Who cares what the little orange things are? They taste wonderful. This isn't a chemistry lab, you know. For crying out loud, the head waiter is frowning at us."

MUSHROOM BROTH

2 cups fresh, thinly sliced mushrooms
1/2 cup celery, thinly sliced
1/2 cup carrots, diced
1/2 cup onion, chopped
3 cups water
2 cups chicken broth
dash salt and paprika
1/2 cup white wine

Prepare the vegetables and place in a large pot. Add the water and simmer, partly covered, for about 45 minutes. Add chicken broth, seasonings and wine and simmer for about 10 minutes more. Serve hot. Serves about 4-6.

There is nothing like a cold, crisp salad to whet the appetite. I love those bits of cauliflower. What a clever touch. I wonder... Janet! Do you mind? We do not need a dissertation on the pros and cons of artistic garnishes!"

CLEVER CAULIFLOWER SALAD

1 small head fresh cauliflower
1/2 head lettuce
1 green onion, thinly sliced
1/2 cucumber, thinly sliced
Dressing:
3 tablespoons salad oil
1 tablespoon wine vinegar
1/2 teaspoon prepared mustard
dash pepper

Wash all vegetables. Tear lettuce into bite-sized pieces. Add cucumber and onion slices. Break off cauliflower flowerets and add to salad. Set aside in refrigerator while you mix dressing ingredients.

Mix oil, vinegar, mustard and pepper thoroughly. Pour dressing over salad and toss. Chill dressed salad for about 20 minutes before serving. Serves 4-6.

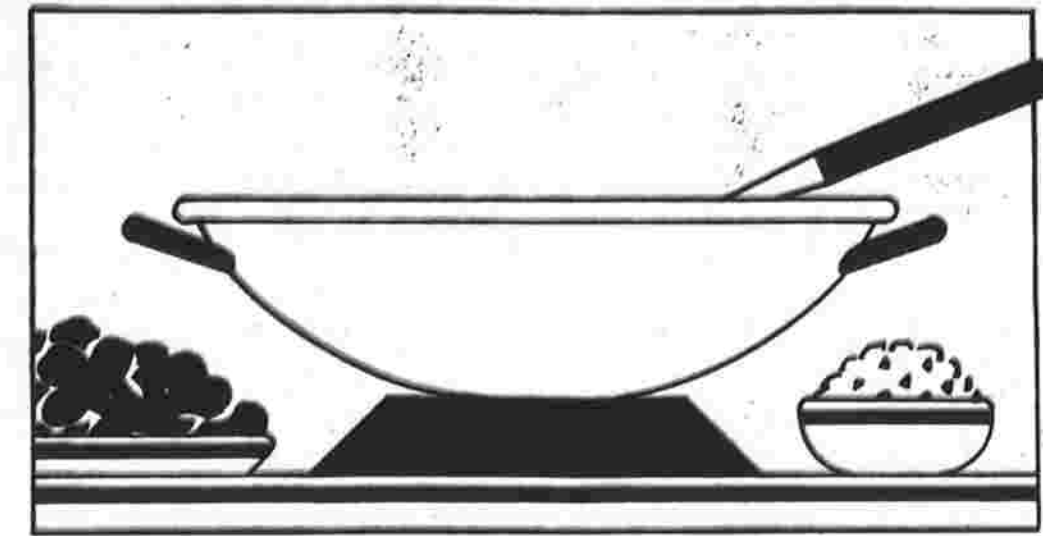

"Ah, now for the main course. I had such a time trying to decide between the beef and fish, but I'm sure I made the right choice. How's your chicken, Janet? Janet! Why are you gazing off into space, smacking your lips and muttering, 'Rosemary! Oregano! Thyme!'"

TANGY HERBED CHICKEN

10 pieces of chicken
1/2 cup salad oil
1/2 cup vinegar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon fresh parsley, chopped dash leaf oregano, rosemary and thyme
1 teaspoon finely minced green onion

Clean chicken pieces and remove skin. Lay chicken in a single layer in a shallow dish. Mix together oil, vinegar, lemon juice, seasonings and onion. Stir well. Pour marinade over chicken. Cover and refrigerate overnight. Turn at least once during marinating time.

To bake, heat oven to 375F. Lay marinated chicken on greased broiler rack. Bake for 20 minutes, then turn pieces over and continue baking for about 25-30 minutes more or until chicken pieces are fully cooked. Serve hot. Makes about 4-6 servings.

"Janet, I agree that this rice dish is certainly delicious, but I think that describing it as 'insouciant' is a bit much. Will you please stop staring at it through that magnifying glass? The people at the next table look worried."

GOLDEN RICE

2 tablespoons butter
1/2 cup chopped onion
1 cup brown rice
2 cups chicken broth
dash paprika

Melt butter in saucepan. Add onion and sauté until golden brown. Add rice and stir mixture thoroughly. Spoon rice mixture into large oven casserole. Pour chicken broth over rice mixture. Stir well. Cover and bake at 375F until liquid is absorbed. Remove casserole from oven and lightly toss with fork. Sprinkle top with a dash of paprika. Serve hot. Makes about 4 servings.

"Dessert? Goodness, I'm so stuffed I'm not sure I can. Well, on second thought, perhaps something light. What do you recommend? Janet, please be quiet. It is not necessary for you to know whether or not the pineapple has a pedigree."

recommend? Janet, please be quiet. It is not necessary for you to know whether or not the pineapple has a pedigree."

DESSERT STICKS
2 cups fresh pineapple chunks
2 cups firm banana chunks (about 1" in diameter)
1/4 cup honey
1/4 cup pineapple juice
dash ginger

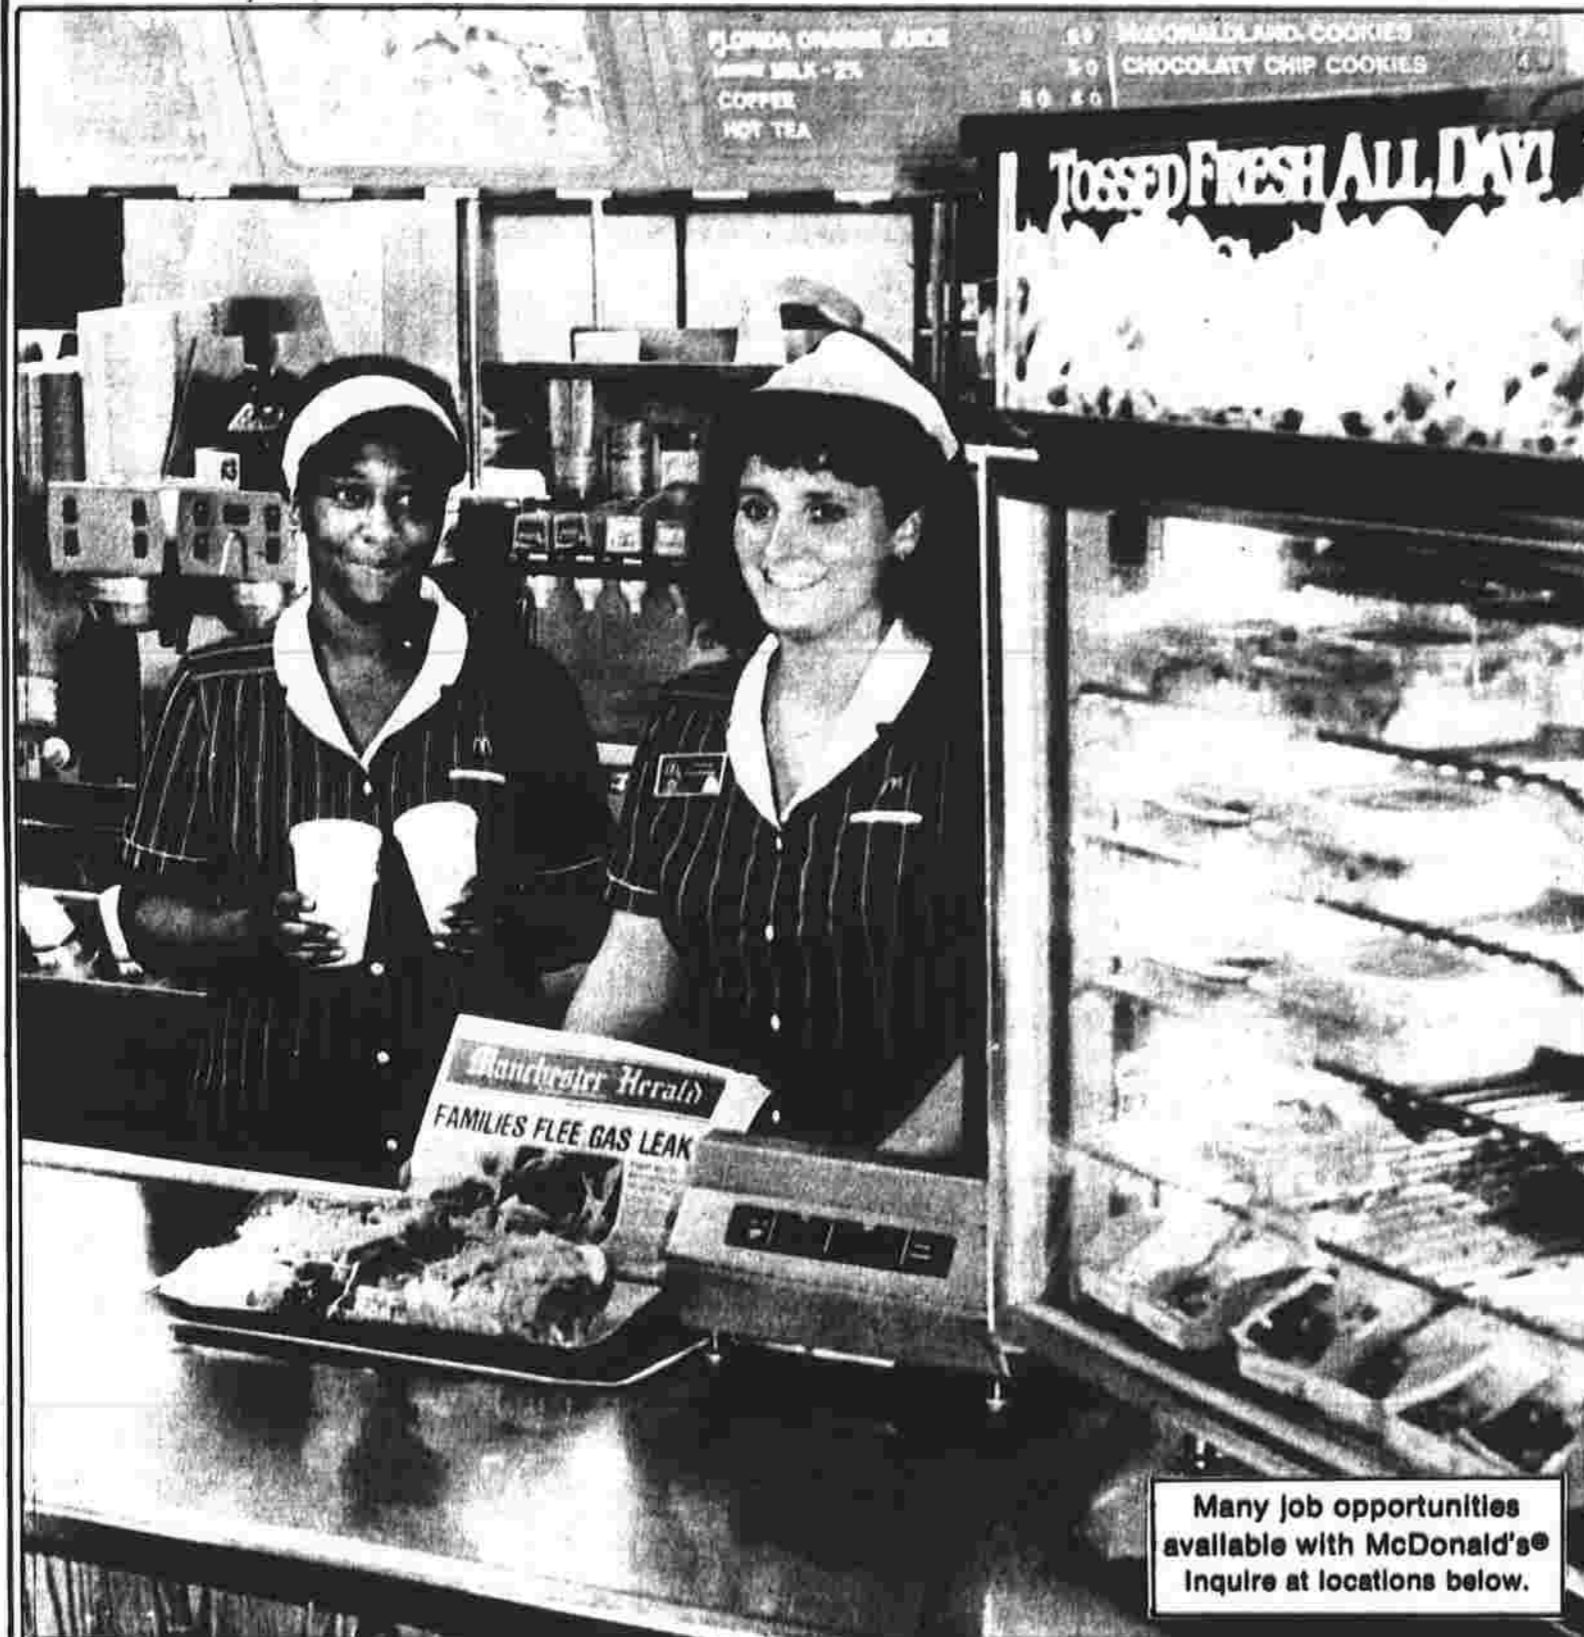

Thread the fruit on 6-8 bamboo skewers, alternating chunks of banana with chunks of pineapple. Mix together honey, pineapple juice and ginger. Brush liquid over the fruit chunks. Lay skewers on broiler rack. Broil about 4" from heat, turning and basting with more liquid for about 5 minutes or until fruit is golden brown. Makes 6-8 servings.

"Well, Janet, that was a lovely dinner and an — er, uh — interesting experience. Dinner out next week? Oh, golly, I just remembered I have an important appointment in Tibet. Maybe we can do this again some other time, like in 1997."

So folks, the moral of the story is: If you like to cook as much as I do, take my advice. If you're invited out to dinner, leave your chef's hat at home. ■

Filmeter Robert DiMatteo

In movie theaters

The Untouchables (R) The gleefully perverse director Brian DePalma ("Carrie," "Scarface") and native Chicagoan and Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright David Mamet ("Glengarry Glen Ross") joined talents for this big, handsome melodrama set in the Windy City during Prohibition.

Suggested by the TV series of the same name, "The Untouchables" pits righteous Eliot Ness (Kevin Costner) and his team of incorruptible gangbusters (Sean Connery, Charles Martin Smith and Andy Garcia among them) against the seemingly almighty Al Capone (Robert DeNiro) and his heinous minions. The movie is a darkly comic, stylized version of an old-fashioned gangster film. If you see it with the myth-debunking gangster epic "The Godfather" in mind, or if you expect anything fresh, "The Untouchables" may seem disappointing. It's certainly more conventional and simplistic than you'd expect from DePalma and Mamet.

But the rich production features at least two sequences that reassert DePalma's mastery of hallucinatory visual suspense. One involves a baby carriage rolling down the steps of Chicago's Union train station (film buffs will recognize this as a breathtaking homage to Eisenstein's "Potemkin"). There's also a pictorially stunning John Ford-style outdoor sequence.

Because DePalma and Mamet are trying to tell a basic good guys vs. bad guys yarn, they are at pains to make the film's representatives of virtue convincing and appealing. However, they end up settling for corny, idealized images of goodness. As played by Kevin Costner, Ness provides a noble profile and a calm, steadfast center for the film, but he grows boring as a character. And it's not clear how much irony is intended by Ness's progression from callow do-gooder to violent and vengeful do-gooder.

The movie saves its real affection for DeNiro (30 pounds heavier for the role) and his irresistibly obscene, imperially evil Capone. Meanwhile, Sean Connery brings a twinkly gusto to the part of Ness's mentor and eventual partner, the crafty old Irish Catholic cop, Jimmy Malone. One general warning: This is not for viewers with weak stomachs. Grade: ***

Salvation! (not rated) New York-based "para-punk" underground film-maker Beth B would seem to have been on to something timely with her portrait of a hypocritical televangelist huckster (Stephen McHattie) who is seduced and manipulated by some opportunistic, white-trash Heavy Metal types.

For a low-budget effort, the movie is very stylish: It has a full-blown garish look and a tough, tart rock score. But director/co-writer Beth B approaches her satirical expose with a sledgehammer, and the whole production takes on the aura of a depressive, put-on MTV affair. Ms. B and colleagues end up in effect preaching to the already converted — which in this case will probably amount to about a dozen hip "downtown-scenes" types in New York and around the country. Grade: **

New home video

One Voice (not rated) CBS/Fox, $29.98. This is a video of Barbra Streisand's first full-length concert in 20 years — her September 1986 benefit performance for an audience of 500 invited guests, given under the stars at the singer's California ranch. If you're a Streisand fan, it's a sublime 65 minutes' worth of Barbra at her mellifluous best.

Several classic Streisand songs are included, though the evening's standouts may be a piercing "Over the Rainbow" and an astonishingly fresh rendition of a tune that had seemingly been done to death, "Send In The Clowns." Only Barbra's politicking and patter between songs wear a little thin. Grade: ½

Film grading: * excellent,  good,  fair, * poor

Accurate defense pays off

By James Jacoby

When freely bid contracts are doubled at a high level, the best approach for you, as a defender, is to establish and take quick tricks. If there is a trump trick coming, you sit and wait for it. Low-level doubled contracts are a different story. The doubler is saying one of two things: either "Hey, partner, they're playing in my long suit" or "Together we have so much strength that the only way we can take any tricks is by crossruffing." In either case, the best defense against a low-level doubled contract is to lead trumps.

West certainly had a minimum for his takeout double, but he respected his partner's business double of two diamonds. He led a trump. Declarer won dummy's king, played a heart back to his king and another heart. East took the 10 and played another diamond. Declarer won the ace, ruffed a heart and played a club to the king and ace. It would be a mistake now for West to play either another club or his last heart. But he correctly played a spade to his partner's ace. East now took the remaining trumps, led a spade back to West's king, discarded his remaining club on the queen of hearts, and won the last two spade tricks. South was unlucky to make only four tricks and lose 1100 in his doubled contract, but East and West were right on target with their unerring defense. Note that without the opening trump lead, declarer should escape for only a two-trick set — a good result since East-West can easily make four spades.

A new book by James Jacoby and his father, the late Oswald Jacoby, is now available at bookstores. It is "Jacoby on Card Games," published by Pharos Books.

Family sedans can perform

By the Editors of Consumer Reports

Unlike the bulky gas guzzlers of the past, today's domestic family sedans have styling, features and performance characteristics that bring them into the mainstream of the world auto market.

Three upscale sedans — the Mercury Sable, the Pontiac Bonneville and the Chrysler New Yorker — recently tested by the auto engineers at Consumer Reports are good examples.

All three cars have front-wheel drive, a fuel-injected engine and a suspension system designed to tackle roads more challenging than straight, smooth interstates.

The Mercury Sable LS is a slick, comfortable car to drive. The LS tested comes with a 3.0-liter V6, automatic overdrive transmission, air-conditioning, tinted glass, dual power mirrors, power windows and a stereo radio as standard equipment. For the best model, the engineers added such options as tilt steering wheel, cruise control, rear-window defroster, power locks, electronic instrument cluster, power driver's seat and a premium stereo with cassette player. Final cost was nearly $16,300, including destination charge.

The Sable's V6 ran flawlessly, with smooth, responsive acceleration. Fuel economy was about 22 miles per gallon overall. That's thrifty considering the size of the car and its peppy performance.

The car's handling in routine driving inspired confidence, and it was nearly as good in emergency tests. But the brakes felt unresponsive at first. Repeated stops caused fading, requiring some extra pedal effort.

Information from owners of 1986 Tauruses and Sables shows reliability to have been worse than average. But most owners said they'd still buy the same car again.

The Pontiac Bonneville SE is performance-oriented and bristles with features. It's essentially similar to the Buick Le Sabre and Olds Delta 88. Standard equipment includes a 3.8-liter V6, automatic overdrive transmission, air-conditioning, power windows and AM radio.

Adding the sporty SE package, power driver's seat, power locks, rear-window defroster, cruise control and a stereo radio with cassette player raised the price to more than $17,600, including destination charge.

The Bonneville's V6 was eager. Expect about 20 mpg, overall.

Routine handling was predictable and crisp — much like that of a sports car. The SE package, with its Rally-Tuned suspension and special tires and wheels, make the difference. Emergency handling was commendable, and braking was faultless.

Because the Bonneville is new for '87, no reliability data is yet available. But similar Buick and Oldsmobile models were troublesome in their first year.

The Chrysler New Yorker is basically a dressed-up, stretched K-car like the Dodge 600 and Plymouth Caravelle. Standard equipment includes a 2.5-liter four, automatic transmission, power windows, center console, tinted glass, electronic instrument cluster, dual power mirrors and a stereo radio.

Adding the 2.2-liter turbocharged four, automatic air-conditioning, rear-window defroster, power locks, power seats, cruise control, tilt steering column, Sport Handling suspension and a premium stereo with cassette player brought the price to about $18,500, including destination charge.

The New Yorker performed well. Braking was fine. But the car's handling, both in routine and emergency driving, should have been crisper and more responsive. And, its ride should have been more comfortable. At 22 mpg, fuel economy was comparable to that of the other sedans.

The reliability of both the turbo and the non-turbo Chrysler New Yorker has improved to average.

In either case the throttle controls only the flow of air into the engine; the injectors provide a spray of pressurized fuel, precisely measured via computer, for correct fuel/air mixture under prevailing conditions (starting, idle, acceleration and so forth).

The benefits: more precise fuel/air mixture, delivered in correct proportions to each cylinder. Combustion is improved; better engine performance.

fuel economy and exhaust emissions are the net result.

An important factor to remember about fuel injection: Clean fuel is essential. Owners of vehicles so equipped are advised to use good-quality gasoline and to replace the fuel filter as recommended by the car maker.

One service problem created by fuel injection is a clogging of the injectors, which leads to poor starting, weak and uncertain operation and poor acceleration. Deposits can form at the fuel injector's tiny circular opening, which is about the width of a human hair, restricting the fuel flow and causing the gasoline to feed as a ragged stream instead of a fine mist.

Correcting the problem can be as easy as a few tankfuls of premium gasoline. Numerous oil companies have been advertising that their premium grade fuel contains detergents to clean fuel injectors. After the injectors are clean, switch back to regular gasoline.

Fuel Injection New Technique for Car Owner to Accept

New car shopping takes somewhat more savvy than it did a generation ago. In a more technically oriented society, car buyers are looking for features that were rare, if available at all, as recently as 10 years ago.

Among these features is fuel injection, the state-of-the-art method of delivering fuel to the engine. Traditionally, this has been done by the carburetor, basically an atomizer that mixes fuel and air and sends it to the cylinders via the intake manifold.

Fuel injection is a technique that has been in use for many years on race cars and other high-performance engines. Continued on page 41

However, demands for improved fuel economy and reduced exhaust emissions have cast fuel injection into the automotive limelight. Fortunately, electronic and computer technology make it a much more dependable system than in the past.

Basically, there are two types of fuel injection one might encounter on new cars: throttle body (TBI), where the injectors are in the area once occupied by the carburetor, and direct port injection, where fuel enters the cylinder at the intake valve. The intake manifold carries only air.

In either case the throttle controls only the flow of air into the engine; the injectors provide a spray of pressurized fuel, precisely measured via computer, for correct fuel/air mixture under prevailing conditions (starting, idle, acceleration and so forth).

The benefits: more precise fuel/air mixture, delivered in correct proportions to each cylinder. Combustion is improved; better engine performance.

HOW DOES DILLON DO IT
we guarantee car repairs for life.
It's our free Lifetime Service Guarantee, and you won't find a better repair guarantee anywhere. Here's how it works. As long as you own a Ford, Mercury, Lincoln or Ford light truck, if we repair it, we guarantee the covered repair for as long as you own your vehicle. If the covered part ever fails or wears out, we'll fix or replace it free. Free parts. Free labor. It covers thousands of repairs and lasts as long as you own your vehicle — no matter where you bought your car or how old it is. So whether you drive a "golden oldie" or a newer model, the next time it needs repair, bring it to us and get the best repair guarantee anywhere — our free Lifetime Service Guarantee. Ask us to see a copy of the Lifetime Service Guarantee.

Seahawks pick Bosworth, but he says no

By Jim Cour
The Associated Press

SEATTLE — All-American line-backer Brian Bosworth of Oklahoma was picked by the Seahawks in the NFL supplemental draft Friday but said he would rather sit out the season than play for Seattle.
"We have him and we're going to make every effort to sign him," head Coach Chuck Knox said. "There's going to be a lot of posturing and rhetoric in the days coming up."
The Seahawks won the No. 1 pick in a lottery and picked Bosworth even though he had not listed them among the teams for which he would play. He reaffirmed his warning Friday at a New York news conference.
"Seattle doesn't fit the mold I want to put myself in," Bosworth said.
"He has the leverage of playing or not playing," Seattle President and General Manager Mike McCormack said. "He's the same as any other player. I think his ability is what gives him the leverage."
Both Knox and McCormack said they would try to sign Bosworth rather than trade his rights to one of the teams on the list he said would play for.
"We're not even going to speculate on the possibility of a trade," said McCormack. "We've got players on our football team, some of whom are starting, whose agents sent out similar letters." He referred to a letter that Bosworth's agent, Gary Wichard, had mailed before the supplemental draft.
"We're not bluffing, we'll sit out the year if he doesn't get one of the teams he wants," Wichard said at the news conference. Wichard said he told that to McCormack when he talked to him after the supplemental draft.
Bosworth on Friday revised his list of preferred teams to four — Tampa Bay, Philadelphia, the New York Jets and the Los Angeles Raiders. Bosworth said

Tampa Bay was "number one" on his list because he wanted to play with quarterback Vinny Testaverde, No. 1 pick in the April 28 NFL draft, and liked new head Coach Ray Perkins and owner Hugh Culverhouse.
"I hope something can be worked out by one of my preferred teams," Bosworth said.
Originally, Bosworth also had included the Los Angeles Rams and the New York Giants, but Wichard said Friday the Rams were out of the Bosworth picture because they don't have a first round pick and the Giants were eliminated because "they wanted to use him as only as a backup or on special teams."
Knox and McCormack said the Seahawks had a lot of leverage, too.
"If he wants to play this year, he has to play with us," said McCormack. "If he goes back in the draft next year, he doesn't know who is going to draft him. Maybe it would be Buffalo. And if he sits out this year, I think his skills would really be diminished."
He added, "We've got players on our football team, some of whom are starting, whose agents sent out similar letters."
One of those players is Ken Easley, the former UCLA All-American who was Seattle's first-round draft choice in 1981. Easley's agent, Leigh Steinberg, told the Seahawks before the draft that Easley would not play for them. But Easley did sign with the Seahawks and has become one of the franchise's outstanding players. Easley was the NFL Defensive Player of the Year in 1984.
"If he doesn't play this year, he loses one year of earning power," Knox said of Bosworth. "He also has no assurances that he won't be picked by one of the teams he doesn't want to play for. So I think we're in a very, very good position."

Brian Bosworth discusses the NFL supplemental draft Friday at a news conference in New York after being picked by the Seattle Seahawks.

Seattle won the first choice when the team's logo was picked from a drum containing the logos of all 28 NFL teams. The draft, for players not eligible for the regular draft, was weighted so that the teams with the poorer records had the most chances of getting the top pick. None of the other five players eligible for the draft was chosen. They were running back Curtis Jeffries of Northwest Mississippi Junior College, kicker Jeff Valder of Arizona and defensive backs Rorery Perryman of Boston College, Titus Turner of Morris Brown and Gary Morris, who did not play college football.

Gretzky talking of retirement

NEW YORK (AP) — Edmonton Oilers star Wayne Gretzky said Friday he is considering retiring from the NHL before the start of next season.
"It's something that's crossed my mind," he said. "The door is open. I haven't made any decision."
After receiving his eighth consecutive most valuable player award in Toronto Wednesday, Gretzky told reporters he was uncertain about his hockey future.
At a news conference Friday, where he received the Beagram Sports Award as NHL player of the year, Gretzky again was asked about his plans.
"I'm going to sit back and consider my options," he said. "There's nothing concrete right now. My parents are coming back from Europe next week, and I want to sit down with them and talk about it."
Gretzky, who has led the NHL in scoring for seven straight years, is only 28 years old. But he has already played nine seasons of professional hockey, and the physical and mental demands of being the top player in the game have taken their toll.
"I feel my nine years have been a lot tougher than a lot of other guys' nine years," said Gretzky, who led the Oilers to their third Stanley Cup title in the last four years.

Defensemen priority in draft

By Ken Rappoport
The Associated Press

DETROIT — While the potential top three picks are offensive players, defenseman are likely to take a high priority at the annual NHL draft Saturday.
"I think it's a good assumption that we could get a defenseman in the first round," said Neil Smith, the Detroit Red Wings' chief of scouting who is eyeing, among others, Bryan Fogarty of the Ontario Hockey League's Kingston Canadians.
Fogarty, a 6-foot-1, 184-pounder, is among 11 defensemen who are projected as potential first-round picks by the NHL's Central Scouting Bureau.
The Red Wings, who have expressed an interest in Fogarty, as well as several other defensemen, hope he is still available when they make their No. 11 pick.
If not, four other defensemen have been labeled as "top ten" choices by the CBB — Glen Wesley of the Western Hockey League's Portland Winter Hawks; Chris Joseph of the WHL's Seattle Thunderbirds; Wayne McBean of the Medicine Hat Tigers of the WHL and Luke Richardson of the Ontario Hockey League's Peterborough Petes.

McBean, an outstanding skater, is considered by some scouts to be the closest rival to Pierre Turgeon for the No. 1 spot.
Turgeon, a high-profile center from the Granby Blons of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, is expected to be selected by the Buffalo Sabres, who draft first.
The New Jersey Devils have the No. 2 pick and reportedly are leaning toward a defenseman — rather than picking up the highly-touted center Brendan Shanahan of the Ontario Hockey League's London Knights, rated in a top three group of Turgeon and center Dave Archibald of Portland.
Marshall Johnson, director of player personnel for the Devils, has said that Joseph perhaps had the most potential of any of the top four defensemen available. He added that the Devils would be interested in any of the four.
The Devils go into the draft with several optional plans in mind and could come up with an 11th-hour deal that would change their drafting position and still allow them to get a top-rated defensive player.

Because he feels that there will still be plenty of good defensive players available in the lower positions, Devils General Manager Max McNab reportedly has been offering his team's No. 2 position around for more draft choices.
One of the teams that McNab has talked to is Boston, which has the No. 3 overall pick and is interested in Shanahan. Reportedly, McNab has offered to switch places with the Bruins for some extra draft picks.
McNab has also been talking to the Montreal Canadiens and Quebec Nordiques, both of whom are interested in Turgeon, should Buffalo select someone else.
If they pick Turgeon, the Sabres hope they have better luck than the Red Wings had with the No. 1 pick last year, Michigan State center Joe Murphy.
Murphy spent almost the entire season with Adirondack, the Red Wings' minor league affiliate. And there is no guarantee that Murphy will make the team this year.

Matt Bourque, Jason Stanizzi and Erik Wolfgang combined on the mound for the Merchants, 2-0 in JC-Courant League Junior Division play and 3-0 overall. Dave Shaleigh, Craig Parodi and Stanizzi slapped doubles and Zac Morford, Corey Craft and Matt Hein singled for the Merchants. The Merchants play Sunday at 2:30 p.m. against Simsbury at Cheney Tech.

Shriver survives rain delay

BIRMINGHAM, England - Top seed Pam Shriver survived yet another rain hold-up to beat South Africa's Dinky Van Hensburg 6-2, 6-3 in the Edgbaston Cup women's grasscourt tennis championships Friday.

Canada's Carling Bassett rallied to defeat American Sharon Walsh Peete 6-7, 7-6, 6-1 and make the quarterfinals. In other third-round matches, Natalie Tauziat of France came back to beat American Elise Burgin 4-6, 6-3, 6-5; Australia's Elizabeth Smylie downed Britain's Valda Lake 6-2, 6-4, and Soviet Larissa Savchenko whipped another Briton, Anne Hobbs, 6-3, 6-1.

Sabatini advances to finals

EDINBURGH, Scotland - French Open semifinalist Gabriela Sabatini routed Scotland's Suzie Mair 6-0, 6-3 Friday to reach the final of the Scottish Grasscourt championships.

In Sunday's final, the 17-year-old Argentinian will meet American Lisa Bonder, who beat Norway's Amy Jonsson 6-4, 6-2.

In the men's event, Sweden's Anders Jarryd beat Australian Des Tyson 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 to advance to a semifinal against the world's top-ranked player, Ivan Lendl. In an all-American quarterfinal, Johan Kriek also was pushed to three sets by Jonathan Canter before advancing with a 7-5, 3-6, 6-4 victory. He will meet Andres Gomez of Ecuador in Saturday's other semifinal.

Dayley has case of meningitis

ST. LOUIS - Relief pitcher Ken Dayley has been hospitalized with a mild case of meningitis, the St. Louis Cardinals announced Friday. Dayley was admitted to Jewish Hospital Thursday night and diagnosed to have a case of meningitis that is mild and non-contagious in nature, said team physician Dr. Stan London. London said he anticipated that Dayley will recover fully from the disease, which causes inflammation of the membrane enveloping the spinal cord. Dayley probably will be in the hospital 3-4 days, London said. Recovery should take no longer than three weeks, London said.

Brett returns to KC lineup

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Two injuries, one coming only three days after the first, have limited Kansas City third baseman George Brett to just 11 games and 38 at-bats in what has been his most frustrating season. "There have been times when I've been frustrated by hitting .350, but never, ever like this," said Brett, who was scheduled to be back in the lineup Friday night for the first time since May 16. "This might be the most frustrated I've ever been in my career."

Rodney McCray's daughter dies

HOUSTON - The daughter of Houston Rockets forward Rodney McCray died Thursday after battling a brain tumor. A brain tumor, 5, had undergone radiation and chemotherapy treatments since she was diagnosed as having an inoperable brain tumor in November. She would have been 6 later this month. The little girl died at M.D. Anderson Hospital with her father at her side. A private memorial service will be held today at M.D. Anderson Hospital. Funeral services will be in Louisville.

Blue Jays' pen most dominant

Baseball Notes

By Ben Walker
The Associated Press

The Toronto Blue Jays' bullpen, once the most-jinxed unit in baseball, is now the most dominant. With Tom Henke and Mark Eichenhorn in short relief and Jeff Musselman filling the middle role, the Blue Jays are 28-1 in games they lead after six innings. Toronto's starters are also doing the job — the Blue Jays are 25-3 when they score first. In addition, Toronto has won the first game in 17 of the 21 series they've played this season. The Blue Jays' longest losing streak is two games, matched by the Chicago Cubs as the shortest winless strings in the majors.

PETE ROSE'S RACENORSE is doing even better than his Cincinnati Reds. Rose owns one-fifth of 1 percent of Bet Twice, who won the Belmont Stakes and was runner-up in the Kentucky Derby and Preakness Stakes. ... Danny Heep may return to the majors with the Philadelphia Phillies. Heep, a free agent who did not re-sign with the New York Mets, has talked to the Phillies about becoming a left-handed hitter off the bench, a role Mike Easler helped fill before being traded to the Yankees.

The Milwaukee Brewers are the only team this century to have winning and losing streaks of at least 12 games in the same season. ... St. Louis' Vince Coleman had been successful on all 41 of his career stolen base attempts against Philadelphia before he was caught stealing home Wednesday night. ... The Reds have rallied from six-run deficits to win four times this season.

ELLIS BURKS AND Marty Barrett each hit grand slams in Boston's 15-4 rout of Baltimore Wednesday night. It marked the first time in major-league history that a team's leadoff and No. 2 batters both hit slams in the same game. ... Burks, a rookie, hit his first career slam during the Memorial Day weekend against Cleveland, and Indians Manager Pat Corrales said the U.S. Postal Service was partly to blame. "If we'd gotten the (scouting) tapes on time, we probably would have pitched Burks differently," Corrales said. "But we got the tapes two days late because the mail was delayed by the holiday."

Joe Niekro, acquired by Minnesota in a trade with the Yankees for Mark Salas, is the first knuckleballer in the Twins' 26-year history. ... Salas, meanwhile, almost did not make it to the ballpark on time for last Sunday's game. The taxi driver who picked up Salas at the airport drove him to Shea Stadium instead of Yankee Stadium.

ELSEWHERE: TONNY COHEN made his journey from The Netherlands to professional baseball pay off with his first victory. Cohen, a right-handed pitcher, wrote during the winter to the Pittsburgh Pirates from his native Amsterdam asking for a tryout and came to the United States at his own expense. He earned a spot with Pittsburgh's Class A Macon team and began the season as a reliever before recently getting his first victory as a starter. He is 1-4 with a 3.54 ERA. Although they are not related, Glenn Davis was raised in high school by the parents of Storm Davis in Jacksonville, Fla. The two consider themselves as close as brothers and spend as much time together as possible. So what happened this week when they faced each other for the first time in their major-league careers? Storm hit Glenn with a pitch. ... The Chicago Cubs ripped Houston for 40 runs in a recent three-game series. Last year, the Astros allowed a total of 40 runs in their final 16 games. ... Baltimore's bullpen has blown 11 leads this year, 10 in the seventh inning or later.

Becker toughens to reach semis

By Andrew Warshaw
The Associated Press

LONDON — Boris Becker, stepping up the pace when the going got tough, continued his preparation for Wimbledon Friday with 6-4, 7-6 victory over David Pate to reach the semifinals of the $300,000 Stella Artois grass-court tennis tournament at Queens Club.

In Saturday's semifinals, Becker will play defending champion Tim Mayotte, who beat the 19-year-old West German in the quarterfinals last year.

On Friday, Mayotte whipped Ramesh Krishnan 6-2, 6-3, his powerful serve-and-volley game too strong for the Indian's delicate touch play.

The other semifinal will be between Pat Cash of Australia and Jimmy Connors, at 34 the oldest statesman of the tournament.

Cash, agile and aggressive, upset No. 2 seed Stefan Edberg of Sweden 7-6, 7-6, in a match dominated by the server until the Australian pulled out both tiebreakers. Connors had to play twice in one day to make up for some rainouts.

First, he completed a 7-5, 7-5 third-round victory over Nigeria's Nduka Odizor, a match that had been suspended Thursday night midway through the second set.

Then, he ended the run of Eric Jelen, beating the West German 6-4, 6-4. Jelen, who reached the round of 16 at Wimbledon last year, had eliminated third-seeded Mats Wilander and 14th-seeded Amos Mansdorf before facing Connors.

"I'm tired," Connors said, "but not with playing twice. I can do that, but it's all the waiting around. Still, for me to play as well as this is pretty good."

Against Pate, Becker, a two-time defending Wimbledon champion, was not as sharp as he was earlier in the week.

After breaking his opponent for a 2-1 lead, the 19-year-old West German made three sloppy volleying errors that almost allowed the eighth-seeded American to break back into the match.

Becker managed to hold serve and took the first set, then broke Pate at the same stage in the second.

When he served for the match at 5-4, the West German hit two double-faults — he made five in all — and dropped his serve for the only time.

Each player then held serve and the set went into a tiebreaker, with Becker in danger of being taken to three sets for the first time in the tournament.

Edwards to assist Ueberroth

By Fred Goodall
The Associated Press

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth said Friday that sociologist Harry Edwards will assist the major leagues in boosting minority employment on and off the field. Ueberroth said Edwards will coordinate a project designed to locate and evaluate blacks and Hispanics who had relatively short, undistinguished playing careers but who might be interested in returning to the game to work in other capacities.

"Basically it entails trying to look at guys who could be like a Sparky Anderson, a Tommy Lasorda," Ueberroth said at the Associated Press Sports Editors Convention. "Guys who have great careers in baseball but weren't that good on the field."

The New York Times reported in Friday editions that Edwards, a professor of sociology at the University of California, will be named special assistant to the commissioner.

Ueberroth said Edwards, perhaps best known for organizing a protest by black athletes at the 1968 Summer Olympics in Mexico City, will not leave his job in California for baseball.

"Harry Edwards is a full-tenured professor at Berkeley and not coming to work directly for me," the commissioner said. "He's going to stay a professor at Berkeley, but he's going to help with a project we'd like to announce later."

Ueberroth said there are several hundred ex-ballplayers who fall into the category that the project will be aimed at reaching. Edwards' task will be to determine: "Where are they? Who are they? Have they been given a chance? Can they be trained?"

Teufel's slam paces Mets

NL Roundup

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Tim Teufel hit a grand slam and Howard Johnson added a two-run homer to support Sid Fernandez's six-hit pitching over eight innings as the New York Mets beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 10-2 Friday night.

Kevin McReynolds also homered as the Mets defeated the Pirates for the 25th time in their last 28 meetings. The Mets are 7-2 against the Pirates this season.

Fernandez, 8-2, allowed only Mike Diaz's second-inning solo homer and Johnny Ray's eighth-inning sacrifice fly in lowering his National League-leading earned run average to 2.17. Fernandez struck out seven and walked one. Roger McDowell pitched the ninth inning for the Mets.

Fernandez's starter Rick Reuschel, the league ERA leader entering the game, saw his ERA climb from 2.13 to 2.61 after allowing six earned runs in five innings.

With the Mets leading 2-1, Gary Carter walked to open the fourth and moved to third on Darryl Strawberry's opposite-field double to left. McReynolds, who had hit his 10th homer of the season to lead off the second, followed with a sacrifice fly. Johnson made it 5-1 by hitting a 1-0 pitch over the left-field fence, his 11th homer of the season.

Johnson made it 5-1 by hitting a 1-0 pitch over the left-field fence, his 11th homer of the season.

Fernandez's starter Rick Reuschel, the league ERA leader entering the game, saw his ERA climb from 2.13 to 2.61 after allowing six earned runs in five innings.

With the Mets leading 2-1, Gary Carter walked to open the fourth and moved to third on Darryl Strawberry's opposite-field double to left. McReynolds, who had hit his 10th homer of the season to lead off the second, followed with a sacrifice fly. Yankees win, Bosox routed

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dennis Rasmussen, threatened with banishment to the minors by Yankees owner George Steinbrenner, held Milwaukee hitless for 6 2-3 innings Friday night as New York beat the Brewers 6-3.

Rasmussen, coming off a string of poor outings, retired the first 12 Milwaukee batters. With Steinbrenner in attendance, Rasmussen breezed through the first 6 2-3 innings, walking one and hitting two with pitches before Jim Paciorek came to the plate.

Paciorek took a big swing on a full-count pitch and topped a slow roller. Third baseman Mike Pagliarulo, playing behind the bat, and Rasmussen had no play on the ball and let it go. Pagliarulo tried to coax the ball foul and it seemed to be heading that way until it just brushed the outside of the base, eliciting a loud groan from the crowd of 31,769.

Rick Manning and Dale Sveum lined solid singles in the eighth and after Rasmussen walked Mike Felder, he was relieved by Pat Clements. Juan Castillo's groundout then knocked in a run and Cecil Cooper singled in another.

Rasmussen, 4-4, won for only the second time in 10 starts. The left-hander had been 0-2 in his last five starts with a 10.34 earned run average. He struck out five and walked two and raised his career record against Milwaukee to 4-0.

Mark Salas, Ron Kittle and Henry Cotto homered for the Yankees, who had been swept in their last three games by Toronto and outscored 22-3.

Dave Winfield's RBI single and a sacrifice fly by Kittle made it 2-0 in the fourth against Chuck Crim, 3-3. Crim did not allow a hit until Willie Randolph opened the fourth with a single.

Cotto hit a solo home run in the fifth and Salas, acquired last week from Minnesota, hit a two-run homer in the sixth against Jay Aldrich. It was Salas' fourth home run of the season and first for the Yankees.

Randolph had an RBI groundout later in the sixth and Kittle hit a solo home run, his sixth, in the seventh.

Randolph had another RBI groundout in the eighth. Manning added an RBI single in the ninth.

Tigers 11, Red Sox 4
At Detroit, Alan Trammell hit a three-run homer off Roger Clemens, lifting the Detroit Tigers to a 11-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox Friday night.

With the score tied 4-4, Lou Whitaker started the Detroit seventh with a single. Bill Madlock laid down a sacrifice bunt and Kirk Gibson was given an intentional walk.

Trammell then hit the first pitch into the lower deck in left field for his seventh home run, knocking out Clemens, 4-8. Clemens, the 1986 American League Cy Young Award winner, gave up seven runs on eight hits, struck out four and walked two, both intentionally.

Detroit's Frank Tanana, 5-3, allowed seven hits, walking five and striking out five.

Each team scored twice in the first inning and once in the second. In the Boston first, Ellis Burks reached on a bunt single and Marty Barrett walked. Burks scored on a one-out single by Jim Rice and Barrett came home on a sacrifice fly by Don Baylor.

Whitaker and Madlock started the Detroit first with singles. Whitaker moved to third on Gibson's long fly ball to center field and scored when Clemens threw a wild pitch. Madlock who took second on the play, scored on a two-out single by Matt Nokes.

Spike Owen tripled and scored on a single by Rich Gedman in the Boston second. But Darrell Evans singled in the bottom of the inning and Clemens hit Chet Lemon on the left hand, with Larry Herndon replacing Lemon. Tom Brookens bunted the runners up and Evans scored on a sacrifice fly by Whitaker.

Trammell doubled in the Detroit sixth, extending his hitting streak to 17 games, the longest current stirring in the major leagues. Trammell stole second and scored on a double by Pat Sheridan for the Tigers' first lead of the game, 4-3.

But Wade Boggs tripled in the Boston seventh, extending his hitting streak to 14 games, and scored on a single by Owen to tie it again, 4-4.

Brookens hit a solo homer in the bottom of the eighth, then Gibson added a three-run shot.

Twins 5, White Sox 2
At Chicago, Frank Viola gave up four hits in seven innings and Roy Smalley hit a three-run homer, leading the Minnesota Twins to a 5-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox in the first game of a doubleheader Friday.

It was the American League West-leading Twins' sixth consecutive victory, while the White Sox lost their fourth straight and 10th in their last 12 games.

Blue Jays 8, Orioles 5
At Baltimore, Tony Fernandez' eighth-inning fly ball to left field dropped for three Baltimore players for a run-scoring double Friday night, leading the Toronto Blue Jays to a club-record 10th straight victory, 8-5 over the Orioles.

Toronto has won 13 of its last 14 games, while Baltimore lost its ninth straight, the Orioles' longest losing streak in five years.

Athletics 6, Rangers 1
At Arlington, Texas, Dave Stewart pitched a four-hitter for his seventh victory and Reggie Jackson hit his 554th career home run Friday night as the Oakland Athletics beat the Texas Rangers 6-1.

Stewart, 7-6, walked three and struck out nine as Oakland won for the fourth straight game.

Greg Harris, making his second start of the season after 22 relief appearances, dropped to 2-5. He went 3 2-3 innings, allowed nine hits, four runs, walked one and struck out three.

Lakers looking to wrap it up

Kevin McHale, who had 22 points and 14 rebounds in Game 5, said the Celtics have to rebound psychologically from losing their last six road games in the playoffs, all but one by at least 10 points.

"We haven't been a great road team this year," McHale said. "We have to regroup and make up our minds to win. I've said before that when this team sets its mind to it and gets that will to win, we're very tough to beat."

"We have to rebound, rebound, rebound and play aggressive. We can't let them run. We have to control the boards, play with intensity and slow them down. I take pride in my work, price in being a Boston Celtic. We have to go our there and give the best effort possible."

Larry Bird, who scored 18 of his 23 points in the first half as the Celtics grabbed a 63-46 halftime lead, said that home teams seem to get most of the lucky bounces, and Boston will have to fight that tendency.

"In the first two games, the Lakers got all the loose balls," Bird said. "We've got to be more aggressive. We're still the underdogs and until we go out there and beat the Lakers, we're not going to open anyone's eyes."

NBA fines teams

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Philadelphia 76ers center Jeff Ruland, the key in one of the franchise's most controversial trades, has retired from professional basketball because of a chronic knee injury, the NBA club announced Friday.

"We have concluded that Jeff can no longer pass physical requirements to play professional basketball," said John Nash, Sixers general manager.

Nash said Ruland, who reinjured his knee in pre-season training and eventually underwent arthroscopic surgery, failed to pass the club's physical examination. Nash said that after meeting with club officials, Ruland concluded that he had no alternative but to retire as an active player.

Ruland was traded to the 76ers with Cliff Robinson by the Washington Bullets on June 16, 1986, for Moses Malone, Terry Catledge and first-round draft choices in 1986 and 1988.

The deal generally was viewed as a "berating referee Earl Strom after the game" Jones was fined $500 for "remarks made to reporters" regarding Strom.

The Lakers, who lead the NBA finals 3-2, won the game 107-106. Game 6 of the best-of-seven series will be played Sunday afternoon at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif.

Chi Chi, Ballesteros in front

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez, trying for his fifth consecutive victory, shot an even-par 72 Friday to maintain a one-shot lead after the two rounds of the $400,000 Mazda Senior Tournament Players Championship.

Rodriguez' 36-hole score of 137 left him a shot ahead of Billy Casper, who had the day's lowest score, a 68. Butch Baird, Bruce Crampton and Charles Owens were three strokes behind at 140.

Baird's 69 was the only other score below 70, as scores jumped from Thursday due to windier conditions at the Sawgrass Country Club's Oceanside course. Crampton had a 70, and Owens made a 48-foot sand shot for a birdie on 18 to finish at 73.

"With the winds swirling the way they were, it was tough to pick the right stick," said Rodriguez. "When it's like that out there, you've got to be Clark Kent or Arnold Palmer to figure it out."

Palmer double-bogeyed the difficult, upwind No. 17 and wound up with an even-par round of 72 for a two-round total of 141. He hit a two-iron into a bunker and two-putted on the 468-yard, par-4 hole, which is bordered on the right side by water and has three sand traps at the green.

"I moved my head and hit it fat on the bunker shot," Palmer said. "I'm doing that consistently lately."

Palmer, 57, is a two-time winner of the Senior TPC and said he is very much in the hunt with 36 holes left for a third title.

"I putted a lot better today," he said. "Other than the first hole (when he missed a 4-foot putt and bogeyed), I didn't miss any short putts, the way I did yesterday. If I hadn't made that double bogey I'd really be in good shape."

Billy Maxwell, one shot off the lead after the first round, shot a 75 Friday and was tied with Palmer at 141, four shots back. Six players were tied at 142. The tournament has no cut.

Casper shot consistent 36s on the front and back nines, with five birdies and a bogey.

"I'm putting extremely well and playing well," he said. "The way the course is playing, you have to be able to chip and make good sand shots and I'm doing that."

Rodriguez, looking for his sixth win in 11 events, birdied the par-3 third hole, the par-5 11th and the par-5 18th. He bogied the fifth, ninth and 10th holes, all par-4s.

Jerry Barber led the Super Seniors for players 60 and over, with a 36-hole score of 3-over-par 147. Charlie Sifford was at 150 and Roberto De Vicenzo at 151. The Super Seniors also earn prize money for their position in the regular field of the 50-and-older tournament.

Ballesteros leads

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Seve Ballesteros birdied three of his last four holes for a 4-under-par 67 Friday that put him one stroke in front after two rounds of the $600,000 Westchester Classic.

"The conditions were a little more tough today. The course played longer, and we played in the rain most of the day," said Ballesteros.

"It's a little more uncomfortable playing in the rain," added the globe-trotting Spaniard, who owns more than 50 international victories.

Ballesteros, a playoff loser at the Masters earlier this year, reached the halfway point in 133, 9 shots under par on the Westchester Country Club course, which was dampened by day-long showers.

Ballesteros, who started play from the 15th tee, dropped a 25-foot putt for birdie on the 18th and made the turn at 1-over for the day.

He made his big move late in the cool, cloudy day with wedge shots that gave him putts of less than five feet on both the sixth and seventh.

He closed it out with a 2-putt birdie-4 on the ninth.

LPGA lead shared

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Colleen Walker and Patti Rizzo birdied their final holes Friday to move into a tie for the lead after two rounds of the $350,000 LPGA Mayflower Classic.

Walker shot a 2-under-par 70 and Rizzo had a second-round 68 for 36-hole totals of 7-under-par 137. The were one stroke ahead of first-day leader Deb Richard and Cathy Gerring.

Penny Hammel shot a 67 and was tied at 139 with Spain's Marta Dotti-Figueroa, Shelley Hamlin, Lenore Muraoka and Muffin Spencer-Devlin, who moved into contention with a 4-under 68.

Walker and Rizzo both sat out a 90-minute delay caused by a mid-afternoon thunderstorm. Richard and Gerring completed their rounds before the storm.

Walker finished with a 3-foot putt on the 310-yard, par-4 ninth hole. Her round included four birdies and two bogeys.

Rizzo completed her round on the par 5, 429-yard No. 18 hole with her sixth birdie of the day, sinking a six-footer.

Far on the 6,156-yard Country Club of Indianapolis course took a beating for the second consecutive day and it took a 3-over 147 — the lowest in the tournament's history — to survive the cut. In all, 80 players advanced to the third round, the largest group to make the cut on the LPGA Tour this year.

Ruland announces his retirement

By Ralph Bernstein
The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Philadelphia 76ers center Jeff Ruland, the key in one of the franchise's most controversial trades, has retired from professional basketball because of a chronic knee injury, the NBA club announced Friday.

"We have concluded that Jeff can no longer pass physical requirements to play professional basketball," said John Nash, Sixers general manager.

Nash said Ruland, who reinjured his knee in pre-season training and eventually underwent arthroscopic surgery, failed to pass the club's physical examination. Nash said that after meeting with club officials, Ruland concluded that he had no alternative but to retire as an active player.

Ruland was traded to the 76ers with Cliff Robinson by the Washington Bullets on June 16, 1986, for Moses Malone, Terry Catledge and first-round draft choices in 1986 and 1988.

The deal generally was viewed as a "berating referee Earl Strom after the game" Jones was fined $500 for "remarks made to reporters" regarding Strom.

The Lakers, who lead the NBA finals 3-2, won the game 107-106. Game 6 of the best-of-seven series will be played Sunday afternoon at the Forum in Inglewood, Calif.

In his two previous seasons Ruland played 67 of a possible 162 games. Ruland was the victim of foot, shoulder and knee injuries.

He played in just five games this season after reinjuring his knee.

Nash said in a statement, "Jeff's dedication to try and rehabilitate his knee has been an inspiration to everyone in the organization."

"Despite unanimous medical evidence to the contrary, his determination never wavered. Unfortunately, the passage of time has not improved Jeff's medical prognosis as he is unable to pass the club's physical examination."

Ruland graduated from Iowa College and was drafted into the NBA by the Golden State Warriors as the 25th pick in the second round of the 1980 draft. But he decided to play in Barcelona, Spain, for a year. In 1981, Golden State traded Ruland to the Bullets for a second-round draft choice.

In five seasons with the Bullets he scored 5,053 points for an 18.7 average, and grabbed 3,285 rebounds. He was named to the NBA All-Rookie team in 1982 and in the 1984 NBA All-Star game.

The simple explanation of the injury that ended Ruland's career is that bone in the knee wore out cartilage beyond repair.

LA. GLAD TO BE HOME

By Bill Barnard
The Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — All the Los Angeles Lakers are happy to be going home after three games at Boston Garden, but none more than James Worthy and Byron Scott.

Worthy scored 56 points and Scott 44 as the Lakers easily won the first two games of the NBA finals at the Inglewood Forum.

On Friday, a week after leaving California in triumph, Worthy and Scott returned to Los Angeles thankful that the Lakers still lead the best-of-seven championship series 3-2 instead of trailing 3-2. Game 6 will be played Sunday, with Game 7, if necessary, in Inglewood Tuesday night.

"Going back to the Forum, on a scale of one to 10, rates a 10," said Worthy, whose 46 points in three games at Boston Garden were 10 fewer than his total in two games at the Forum. "I'm getting a lot of decent shots, but they just aren't falling. I picked a bad time to be in a shooting slump."

Worthy scored 12 points, 10 of them in the third quarter, and Scott had seven in Boston's 123-108 victory in Game 5 on Thursday night.

Scott, with a total of 19 points in the three games in Boston, saw his scoring pace drop even more drastically at Boston Garden than Worthy's.

"I'm glad to be getting back to L.A., an environment I'm familiar with," Scott said. "We play better at home. It's more comfortable at home. You're not in hotels where there are fire alarms in the middle of the night."

Worthy was 1-for-9 from the field in the first half Thursday night and 6-for-19 for the game, and Scott was 3-for-10.

"It's difficult for our halfcourt offense to be effective when Byron and James are off," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "We have to get consistency from both of them."

Riley said the Lakers lacked the intensity the Celtics had.

"Everybody was planning banquets and trophies and parades and I'm sure some of that filtered down to the players," Riley said. "We're going to have to battle to win this thing. Maybe getting back to The Forum will help our players remember what it's like to play Laker basketball."

Magic Johnson, who led the Lakers with 29 points, 12 assists and eight rebounds, is certain that the Lakers' return home will be decisive.

"We're still up 3-2 and that's what counts," Johnson said. "We've been playing well in L.A. On Sunday, we're going to win."

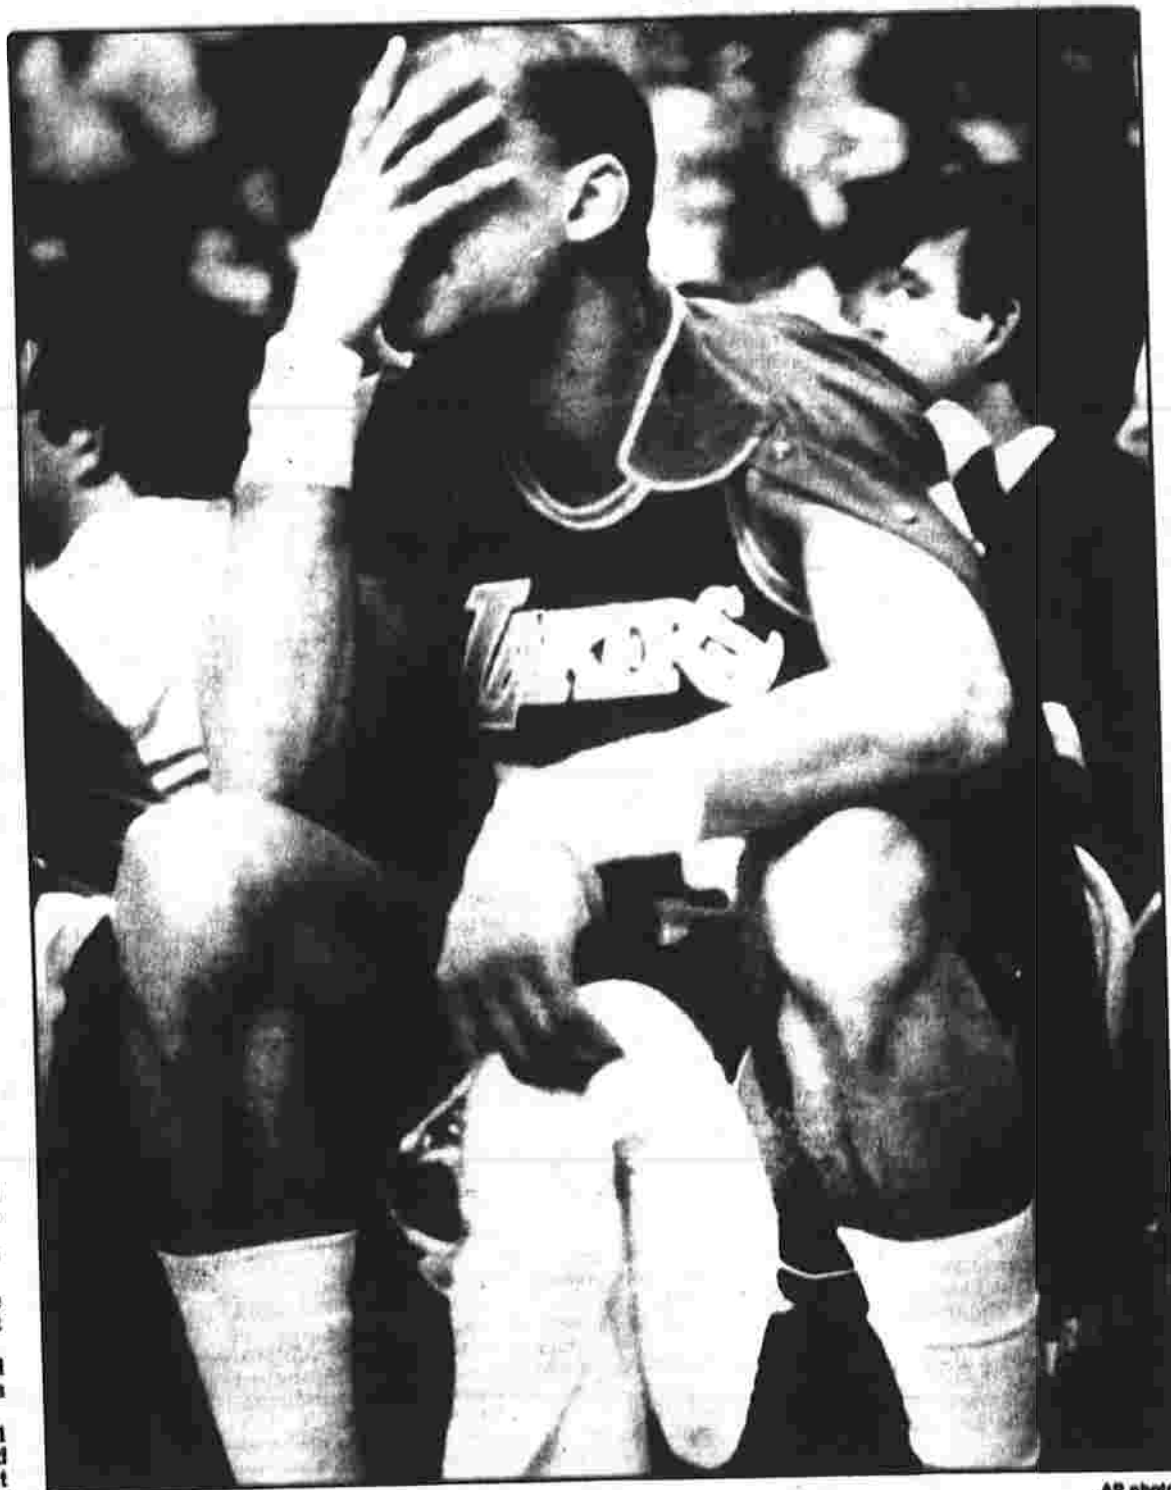

Scott agreed with Riley that the Celtics appeared to want to win Game 5 more than Los Angeles.

"It was in the back of our minds that if we lost, we could take care of it in L.A. I don't think they can beat us two more games, not in L.A."

The Celtics are the 19th team that has fallen behind 3-1 in a championship series, and none previously has overcome the deficit.

Danny Ainge, who hit five 3-point shots and had 21 points Thursday night as all five Boston starters scored at least that many, said the Celtics will have to hustle at the Forum the way they did for three games at Boston Garden.

"We have to pay the price on transition defense," Ainge said. "We didn't do it the first two games, but we did it the last three."
