President Reagan gestures as he leaves the Connecticut to speak to community leaders in White House this morning en route to New Britain.

Reagan pushes tax ideas

By Susanne M. Schofer
 The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan took his tax-and-spending battle with Congress on the road today, holding to the White House business-as-usual stance during Lt. Col. Oliver North's Iran-Contra testimony.

As North was being grilled for a second day, Reagan left for New Britain, Conn., to plug his plan for changes in the budgeting process and restrictions on congressional authority to raise taxes.

Reagan declined to answer reporters' questions about North's testimony as he left the White House today and a spokesman, Dan Howard, said there were no plans for him to comment on New Britain.

Congressional protesters queried North repeatedly about what Reagan knew, but the president "didn't seem greatly concerned," said the White House spokesman.

Reagan's only afternoon appointments were with businessman Peter Grace, columnist Jack Anderson, Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger and leaders of a citizens' group against waste and fraud in government.

Leaving the White House, Anderson said Reagan "walked with a light step and didn't seem greatly concerned."

Anderson said the president had access to news reports of the testimony. Reagan contends that few people outside Washington are interested in the Iran-Contra hearings.

He told a group of economic reporters recently that "when you get a mile and a half away from the Potomac River, there are an awful lot of people that have gone back to their favorite television shows."

"I've never heard so much hearsay in all my life that wouldn't be permitted in a courtroom for a minute and a half, and it's taken as gospel by those who want to go further with this," Reagan said of the hearings.

The trip to New Britain was geared to give the president an opportunity to campaign outside Washington for his so-called "economic bill of rights," which he put forward July 3.

The program includes a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, even though Reagan has never submitted a balanced federal budget himself and the national debt has more than doubled during his administration to $2.3 trillion.

Reagan's only afternoon appointments were with businessman Peter Grace, columnist Jack Anderson, Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger and leaders of a citizens' group against waste and fraud in government.

North defends diversion plan as 'neat idea'

By Jim Drinkard
 The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Lt. Col. Oliver North told Iran-Contra hearings today it was a "neat idea" to divert proceeds from Iranian arms sales to Nicaraguan rebels, and stoutly defended the sale of arms in exchange for freedom of three American hostages in the Middle East.

Back in the witness chair for the second straight day at nationally televised hearings, North said he would have made sure the arms sales proceeds were deposited with the U.S. Treasury if he had received orders to that effect.

The 42-year-old Marine lieutenant colonel also denied that President Reagan told him it was "important that I not know" about the diversion of the profits to the Nicaraguan rebels.

"I don't recall the conversation that way," North told House counsel John Nields, who was asking about a phone call last Nov. 25 from Reagan to the man who had just fired from the National Security Council staff.

On his arrival for a speech in Connecticut, Reagan did not answer any questions as he stepped off the plane, saying he could not hear what reporters were shouting.

White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater, talking to reporters aboard Air Force One en route to Connecticut, said, "There are still a lot of remaining questions to be answered. We're still reluctant to comment."

Fitzwater said he would provide Reagan with news accounts of today's hearing and said Reagan would watch television tonight and read accounts in the newspapers. "As far as the president's concerned, all the answers are in," he said. "He didn't know. He didn't know."

North said that if his superiors had told him they wanted the proceeds to be returned to the U.S. Treasury, he would have seen to it. But he said he never received any such instructions.

"It was our money that was going to the Contras, wasn't it," Nields asked. "I disagree with your conclusion," North said.

The issue is important, because retired Air Force Gen. Richard Secord, who was recruited to facilitate the arms transfers, testified at the first week of hearings.

Two sources, declining to be named publicly, said congressional investigators were expected to take most of the day interrogating Secord about his involvement in affair, including the weekend inquiry he made last November, which has been criticized as inept. Secord is expected to testify publicly before the Iran-Contra committees later this month.

As North fielded questions, key lawmakers said they believe the thrust of his first day's testimony - that he acted on orders from above in what he did. The result would be to place great importance on the expected testimony next week of Vice Adm. John Poindexter, who was national security adviser during much of North's tenure on the staff.

As he did on Tuesday, North appeared in his Marine uniform, complete with six rows of ribbons. He wore silver-framed glasses to aid in reading documents that Nields frequently called to his attention.

The morning produced its share of legal sparring, as well as North's attorney, Brendan Sullivan, accused the committees of conducting a "stall job" by prolonging questioning of his client.

"May the record show that it took four and a half minutes to explain the stall," North said.

North said the decision was made to divert funds from the arms sales to the Contra rebels "with the authority that I got from my superiors. Adm. Poindexter, with the concurrence of William J. Casey, and I thought at the time, the president of the United States." He said he later learned that Reagan did not know.

Lasers ordinance may be retroactive
 By George Lovno
 Herald Reporter

A proposed ordinance that would effectively prohibit the controversial Laserquest arcade from opening on East Middle Turnpike might apply even if the firm applies for a construction permit before the ordinance is passed, town officials said this morning.

Zoning Enforcement Officer Thomas R. O'Marra said that certain public, health and safety ordinances are retroactive. The proposed ordinance to restrict amusement centers is based on the authority of the town to protect the order, health and safety of residents.

O'Marra noted that a few years ago, an ordinance directed at a construction permit stopped the businesses from continuing their operation. However, he cautioned that in that case, the ordinance focused on an activity, not the location of the business, as the proposed ordinance being drafted by the town attorney would do.

O'Marra said that Town Attorney John W. Cooney would have to decide.

"That's a technical and legal question of some significance," O'Marra said.

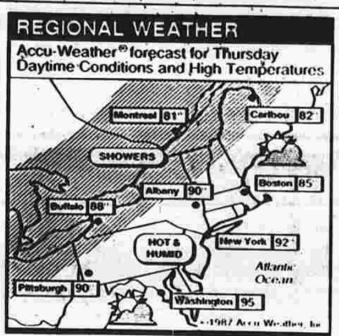

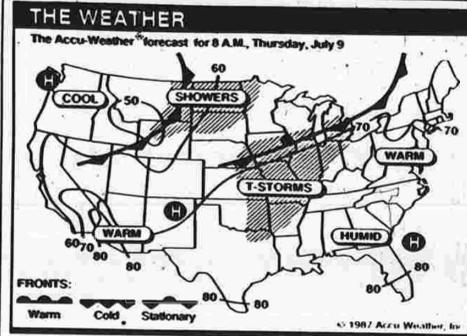

Cooney, agreeing with O'Marra, said today the ordinance would likely be retroactive.

Showers dampen U.S. from East to Midwest

Showers and thunderstorms dampened broad sections of the nation from the Plains to the Deep South and East today.

Heavy rain prompted flash flood watches in northeastern and north central Kansas and south central and southeastern Nebraska.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered over western Nebraska, northern and western Kansas and northwest Texas.

Showers and thunderstorms also raged from Maryland to New York, across northern and central Missouri, northeastern Arkansas, western Tennessee, southwest Louisiana, northeastern Indiana and northwest Ohio.

Dry weather prevailed across most of the rest of the nation, but skies were partly cloudy to cloudy in most areas.

The nation's high Tuesday was 111 degrees at Laughlin, Nev. In Greensburg, Kan., on Tuesday, the temperature rose 20 degrees in just 10 minutes to nearly 100 degrees.

Weather Trivia

What was the most deadly hurricane in U.S. history?

It was just like someone opened up the oven door," said Bill Ellis, who works at the power plant in Greensburg, which is about 100 miles west of Wichita.

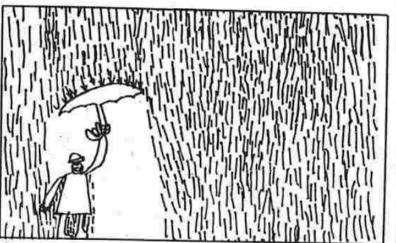

"It was just like someone opened up the oven door," said Bill Ellis, who works at the power plant in Greensburg, which is about 100 miles west of Wichita.

At 7 a.m., the temperature was 75 degrees. Just 10 minutes later, it was 95 degrees. After peaking at 96.6 degrees, the temperature began to fall almost as quickly, dipping to 86 by 8 a.m.

The phenomenon was probably due to an unusually unstable air system, said meteorologist Mike Smith in Wichita.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 49 degrees at Quilley, Wash., to 90 at Phoenix, Ariz.

FOCUS

Let Freedom Ring

On this date in 1835, the Liberty Bell cracked while it was ringing for the funeral of John Marshall. The story that the Liberty Bell was rung to celebrate the signing of the Declaration of Independence was a myth invented by journalist George Lippard in 1847. The bell did hang in the Philadelphia statehouse when the Declaration was being drafted, but no one thought to ring it. In 1828, officials tried to sell the Liberty Bell for scrap but could find no buyers.

DO YOU KNOW — John Marshall is best known for holding what important position?

TUESDAY'S ANSWER — Bubonic plague, or the "black death," was spread by rats.

Wallace photos

A University of Alabama Law School alumni group wants to display memorabilia of former Gov. George C. Wallace, who once tried to keep blacks from entering the university.

The Farrah Law Society in Tuscaloosa, Ala., has asked for photographs, letters and other memorabilia to put on display for incoming law students this summer, said student chapter president John Sharbrough.

The former governor, a 1942 graduate of the law school, likes the idea, but no agreement has been reached on what materials will be used. Wallace aide Elvin Stanton said Monday.

As governor, Wallace made his famous "stand in the schoolhouse door" in 1963 in an unsuccessful effort to keep two blacks from enrolling.

Racial controversy involving Wallace will not be left out of the display, said Sharbrough.

"We'll use everything," he said. "History is history. It can't be changed. We're not going to try to change it or sugarcoat it. We have all grown from what has happened, and so has George Wallace."

Off the wall

Rhea Perlman, the actress best known as Diane Chambers' sarcastic nemesis on NBC-TV's "Cheers," says she likes playing characters that are "a little bent out of shape."

In an interview in the July 11 issue of TV Guide, the petite Perlman said she'd like to work with her equally petite husband, Danny DeVito.

"And, well, I'd like to play some animals," she said. "Chickens, Monsters..."

Perlman said that although "Cheers" is a good thing, she realizes it will not last forever.

Orr honored

Gov. Kay Orr says she's deeply honored to have been inducted as the first woman member of the Lincoln Downtown Rotary Club in Lincoln, Neb.

"I'm looking forward to the day when we as women have accomplished all the firsts there are to accomplish," Mrs. Orr, Nebraska's first woman governor and the first woman elected as a Republican governor in the nation, said Tuesday.

In May, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that states may force the service club to admit women. Less than 24 hours later, a Rotary club in Auburn, admitted as a full member a woman who had played piano at club meetings for 31 years.

Mrs. Orr was inducted as an honorary member because she is an elected official, said club program chairman Bill Palmer. Elected officials cannot be full-fledged members.

Poetry in hills

Composer-impressionist Gian Carlo Menotti celebrated his 76th birthday with concerts, poetry readings and parties by artists and residents of the medieval hill town of Spoleto, Italy.

Dozens of people came to his residence Tuesday bearing bouquets and gifts as the Spoleto Festival founder linked champagne glasses with dignitaries and guests in town for the 30th annual festival.

Saving concert

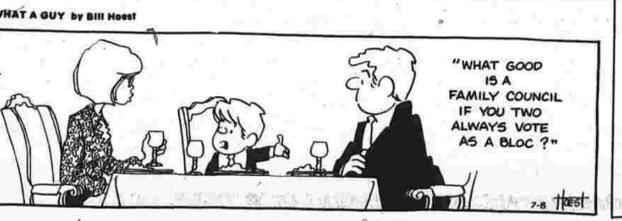

British rock singer John Christian was made an honorary citizen and given a gift reserve for the highest dignitaries for saving a concert with a $160,000 check.

Christian, a star in Europe, was here along with 80 musicians and festival organizers announced that Menotti has agreed to write an opera to have its premiere during the Olympic Games in Seoul, South Korea, in October next year.

The opera, titled "The Marriage," will be based on a love story about two young Koreans living apart in divided North and South Korea, they said. Part of the opera will be performed at the opening or closing ceremony of the games.

Manchester/Area Towns In Brief

Bolton zoners to rule on bookstore

BOLTON — The Zoning Commission is expected to decide tonight whether to allow a bookstore to operate out of a home on Bolton Center Road.

Joan Fogberg of Plainville proposed to open a small-scale business, specializing in technical and children's books, at 214 Bolton Center Road, where she would also live. However, she drew opposition from about 30 residents at a public hearing on July 24.

Some residents claimed that opening a retail business in the center of town is a bad precedent. Others said that the increased traffic the bookstore would bring would increase pollution. A few are concerned that the future might see the bookstore selling pornography.

Hospital group honors Lois Dunham

Lois Dunham, who retired last year after 39 years of service to Manchester Memorial Hospital, was recently made an Honorary Member of the Connecticut Hospital Association.

During her years with the hospital, Mrs. Dunham has served as an invaluable fundraiser, and as Purchasing Agent she initiated systems contracting, a system which simplified ordering supplies and keeping records. She helped found the Connecticut Purchasing Management Association, and served as its secretary for 19 years.

Coventry man is honored

COVENTRY — Derek W. Allison of Fieldstone Lane has received the New York Farmers Prize for his work as a University of Connecticut professor of plant science and animal science, the school has announced.

The award and a check for $500 is given annually to a scientist in animal husbandry or agronomy in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts or Connecticut. His research has centered on crop management and quality, and he is now trying to find a type of clover that will grow faster in pastures.

Allison, a native of England who has been with UConn since 1967, is the author of two books and 29 scientific articles. He is married and has two daughters.

Class of 1939 to meet

Members of Manchester High School's classes of 1939A and 1939B are invited to attend a meeting tonight at 7 at the Army & Navy Club to discuss plans for their 50th reunion.

Ling to attend museum institute

Steven Ling, the director of the Lutz Children's Museum in Manchester, has been selected to attend the Museum Management Institute, scheduled to be held through the end of this month at the University of California in Berkeley, where the museum has announced.

Ling, director of the museum since 1980, will undergo a four-week training program in museum leadership, management and business practices. He is one of 35 museum professionals chosen for this year's seminar.

Ling served as president of the American Association of Youth Museums from 1984 to 1986.

MMH study group formed

A joint study group of doctors and hospital representatives will study whether Manchester Memorial Hospital should establish a health maintenance organization.

The group, Manchester Physician Hospital Organization, will try to find ways of keeping medical expenses down for residents east of the Connecticut River, the hospital has announced.

One alternative is the creation of a health maintenance organization. In an HMO, patient costs for treatment would be covered by medical insurance and no additional bills would be received.

Coventry student is a top volunteer

Tonya Watson, a high school senior from Coventry, was recently recognized as the Second District Youth Volunteer of the Year by State Representative Sam Genderson.

Tonya, who was nominated by Judge of Coventry, has raised money for the Coventry Association for Retarded Citizens. She's also worked at the Willimantic soup kitchen, the Special Olympics, and the Red Cross bloodmobile.

Curb Appeal

When prospective buyers pull up in front of your home, their first impression will be crucial. If a house has peeling paint or a shaggy yard the buyers may resist going inside. If they do go in their negative first impressions could color their feelings about the rest of the house, even when the interior does meet their criteria. This is why "Curb Appeal" is so important!

Before marketing your home, check the exterior paint and trim. If the house does need painting, get it done as soon as possible, and complete any exterior carpentry work that may be needed. In the spring and summer keep your lawn mowed and trim the shrubbery. A few flowers at that time of year can also help dress up your front yard. Take into account any special needs your yard may have in the fall or winter to keep it in top "curb appeal" shape. A cared-for exterior will help your home give the impression that it has been well served before buyers even set one foot inside the front door. It will make buyers feel positive about the property from the first moment they see it.

Directors nix limiting comment

The Board of Directors has rejected a proposed rules change that would have restricted public comment during its meetings only to items on the agenda.

The proposal was dropped from the directors' meeting agenda Tuesday in Lincoln Center after it was clear no director was willing to move the question.

The rules change would have changed the order of the board's agenda, placing the first of two public-comment periods before the slots for communications and reports. Some directors complained that residents often use concerns raised in the presentation of reports as an excuse to comment on items not on the directors' agenda.

Three residents spoke against the proposed change. The measure, which would prevent townpeople from responding to communications and reports. No one spoke in favor of it.

at board meetings.

"The people who are governed ought to be inconvenienced," Weinberg said.

The first comment period during board meetings is intended solely for items on the board's agenda. The second period, at the end of each meeting, allows members of the public to bring any issue to the board's attention. The second period would have been unaffected by the proposed change.

The board's difficulty in sticking to its stated agenda was made clear on two occasions Tuesday night.

one instance, the Rev. Robert "Kaiser" Hershberger was allowed to address the board even though the issue he raised — the theft last month of Weis's birthday cake from Lincoln Center — was not included on the agenda.

The other instance was a presentation Weiss prepared on the town's work in dealing with hazardous wastes. Although Weiss promised to keep it short, the presentation drew Penny's ire.

"You could follow this up with four others if you want to," he told Weiss.

'Yuppies' housing gets tax break

The Board of Directors has extended to 1989 a tax deferral program for the rehabilitation of existing buildings for low- to moderate-income people. Under the program, mills in the Cheney Historic District have been restored and converted to apartments.

The vote, which took place Tuesday at the directors' meeting in Lincoln Center, was 7-1, with Director Geoffrey Naab casting the lone nay vote.

"I have to admit I wasn't convinced that this was advantageous to the town when it was adopted, and I'm still not convinced," Naab said.

He said it is still unclear whether the deferrals are necessary to encourage rehabilitation work and whether the apartments meet the needs of those for whom they were intended. "This is housing for yuppies," he said.

The extension of the program includes a new provision requiring developers to demonstrate the need for a deferment, Weiss said. He added that existing rehabilitated buildings will account for $3 million in property taxes over the next 10 years.

Town hall add proposed

An alternative proposal was presented for addition to the Municipal Building during Tuesday night's Board of Directors meeting Tuesday night.

The proposal, prepared by town Building Committee members Bob Samuelsen and Theunis Werkhoven, calls for an addition to the north of the present building having a total area of 6,000 square feet. The addition would provide 4,000 more square feet of area than an earlier proposal by Lawrence Associates to add on to the east and west corners of the building.

Neither Samuelsen nor Werkhoven had an estimate of how much the proposed addition would cost. The cost of the smaller addition has been estimated at $2 million.

The Board of Directors asked Samuelsen and Werkhoven to work over their proposal with Lawrence Associates, but no date was set for them to report back to the board.

Vernon St. complaints will go to DOT

The Board of Directors, expressing displeasure over the slow progress of road reconstruction on Vernon Street, agreed Tuesday night to send a written complaint about the project to the commissioner of the state Department of Transportation.

Although the town is contributing $340,000 of the $3.2 million for the project, the project is being supervised by the DOT. Residents of Vernon Street have complained about the contractor, Bristol Construction Co. of Bristol, since the project began over a year ago.

Public Works Director George Kandra said during the directors' meeting in Lincoln Center that the contractor had recently completed another job and would now be free to work full-force on Vernon Street.

He said the contract expects to complete the project by the original deadline of October.

Work on a culvert on Vernon Street, which was scheduled to begin in March, started Tuesday, Kandra said.

Mayor Barbara B. Weinberg asked Kandra to return to the Board of Directors in August with a report on what work remains to be done on Vernon Street and when it will be completed. She also asked him to consult with the town attorney to determine whether any legal action should be taken against the contractor.

Director Stephen T. Penny, a West Vernon Street resident who has complained about the project at past board meetings, expressed frustration Tuesday over having to drive on Vernon Street, which has become an obstacle course since reconstruction began.

"I hope that by abusing you, you will abuse the people who are doing a lousy, crummy job building that road," Penny said to Kandra.

Despite the delay, Kandra said, Bristol Construction has a good reputation for the quality of its work.

Town Manager Robert B. Weiss said many towns besides Manchester are finding themselves in the same situation because the best contractors are bidding on more projects than they can handle.

Director Geoffrey Naab said the town should have a local television station document the mess that Vernon Street has become.

"They would, but they couldn't get through," Director Peter P. DiRosa Jr. joked.

Coventry honors a founder

COVENTRY — In honor of the town's 275th birthday, the Town Council was presented with a recently done portrait of Jesse Root, one of Coventry's earliest settlers, this week.

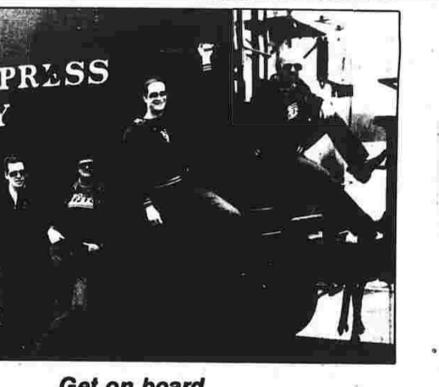

Local artist Scott Rhoades, a teacher at Local artist Scott Rhoades, a teacher at Capt. Nathan Hale School, was commissioned by the Rotary Club to do the portrait. He unveiled his work of Root at a meeting at the Town Office Building Monday night.

Root lived from 1736 to 1822 and became prominent as a member of the Continental Congress and as a chief justice of the Connecticut Superior Court. His life was researched for the town's birthday by two local women, Betty Messier and Janet Aronson, who wrote a book titled "The Roots of Coventry."

That book and illustrations from it are on display at the Town Office Building.

Council Chairwoman Joan Lewis said Tuesday the portrait will be shown at a 3 p.m. tea Saturday at the Community House to honor the authors. The tea is being held on Route 31. It is one of many colonial homes being shown in a public house tour this weekend.

The home tour is among many activities scheduled for Saturday to July 18 for Coventry's birthday.

Pit bull attacks on the increase

STAMFORD (AP) — The incidents of attacking pit bulls are increasing in Connecticut and the situation here is on a level with the national problem, says the chief of the state Canine Control Division. "There is a serious problem in Connecticut," Frank A. Intino, chief of the division of the Department of Agriculture said Tuesday. Intino said there have been 31 pit bull attacks reported so far this year in Connecticut. He said he didn't know how many attacks there were in 1986.

"Because of the notoriety of these incidents and what is happening in Connecticut, we know there has been an increase (in incidents) and we're starting to coordinate... to try to enact more stringent regulations," Intino said.

His comments followed the seizure of a pit bull in Stamford after it attacked a woman who walked into a yard, sinking its teeth into her leg until the owner's son choked the animal.

He said the division plans to ask the legislature for stiffer penalties for owning a dog that attacks, and for stronger wording of a law already on the books that prohibits vicious pets and identifies their presence made known to local officials.

Recent pit bull attacks around the country have prompted several cities to toughen laws about owning the dogs. The new laws range from banning the dogs to charging pit bull owners hefty insurance policies.

"Pit bull" has become a generic term for a variety of dogs that have bulldog blood.

In the Stamford attack on Sunday, a pit bull that had bitten two people previously attacked Effie Powell, who had 40 stitches to close killed five and injured more than 80 others, is still ranked as the worst in the federal prison system's history.

Federal prison system safer 10 years after 5 die in fire

By Judd Everhart
The Associated Press

DANBURY — In the decade since five inmates perished in Danbury in a fire ranked as the worst in the history of the federal prison system, officials say many safety measures have been taken in jails across the country.

Walter G. Bailey, safety administrator for the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, said major structural renovations have been completed or are in the works at the more than 40 prisons in the federal system.

At Danbury's Federal Correctional Institution, the inmate fire-fighting corps has had its headquarters moved to make response more timely, and there are more frequent fire drills and inspections.

"A lot of good things ended up coming out of that Danbury fire," Bailey said. "Obviously, a prison is built to keep people in, but at the same time, for fire safety reasons, we want to be able to get people out when we have to."

blaze started in a washroom and then swept through a cellblock in the low-medium security prison sometimes referred to as the "country club on the hill" because it hosts so many white-collar criminals.

During the fire, two potential exits were blocked by the flames and a third became impassable when a key broke off in the lock cylinder. The only escape route was a narrow stairwell leading into the prison yard, but the evacuation was hampered by building materials left in the area.

Autopsies on the five victims showed they died from inhaling acrid smoke emitted by burning plastic wall panels.

One inmate charged that the deaths could have been avoided if some guards hadn't been preoccupied with security, although a federal inquiry board found that no injuries occurred because staff failed to open doors in time.

The federal government was found negligent in its handling of the fire after inmates filed suit.

"Security was really paramount, safety was pushed to the back burner," Keith Dunningan, a Bridgeport lawyer who represented 10 inmates in the suit, said Tuesday, the tenth anniversary of the fire.

Since 1977, the plastic panels found to have given off the deadly smoke have been replaced at Danbury. Bedding and other furniture that could produce toxic smoke also have been replaced.

Other improvements include such non-standard items as sprinkler systems and smoke alarms, as well as doors that can be unlocked from a central control center and pressure-sensitive doors that can be opened when enough force is exerted. An alarm sounds when those doors are opened.

The executive assistant to FCI Warden Dennis M. Luther said the prison now has its inmate fire-fighting unit housed in a minimum-security camp on the grounds.

$4,230 spent per person

HARTFORD (AP) — The federal government spent an average of $4,230 per person in the state of Connecticut during fiscal year 1986, ranking the state seventh in the nation, according to U.S. Census Bureau figures.

Only in Alaska, Maryland, Virginia, New Mexico, Hawaii and Massachusetts did the government spend more per capita in 1986, according to figures released Tuesday by the state Office of Policy and Management.

The federal government's per-capita spending in Connecticut actually dipped slightly from the 1985 level of $4,258.

Per-capita federal spending nationwide was $3,392 based on a resident population estimate made July 1, 1986, compared to $3,233 in fiscal year 1985.

Alaska led the nation with a per-capita rate of $5,091, the first state to ever crack the $5,000 mark, according to OPM.

In the fiscal year 1986, the federal government spent $13.49 billion in Connecticut, slightly more than the $13.45 billion spent in the previous year.

Defense Department contracts accounted for the largest share of federal spending in the state, or $5.8 billion. The total, however, was less than the $6.1 billion spent in fiscal 1985.

The next largest share of spending in the state was in direct payments to individuals, $4.6 billion compared to $4.5 billion in 1985. Direct payments include such expenses as Social Security, Medicare and food stamps.

Grants to Connecticut state and local governments totaled $1.5 billion in fiscal 1986, up from $1.4 billion in 1985.

Federal employee salaries, wages and benefits were up 6 percent from $941 million in 1985 to $1 billion.

The balance of $498 million was in other programs such as research grants, agricultural subsidies, federal employee life insurance and postal service. These programs cost $336 million in 1985.

Despite its No. 7 ranking in per-capita expenditures, Connecticut got only 1.6 percent of the money spent by the federal government in 1986.

Phil Donahue speaks to reporters during a press conference Tuesday in Stamford. Donahue called NBC insensitive to strikers' concerns and said the network should bargain with the union.

NBC slammed by Donahue

By Linda Stowell
The Associated Press

STAMFORD — A smiling Phil Donahue in pinstripes shook hands with dozens of women who told him he was "even more handsome in person" after taping his first show in Connecticut.

Then, he changed into jeans on Tuesday for a news conference, where he attacked NBC for what he called its cavalier and insensitive attitude in dealing with its striking union.

"Here is a company who has not agreed to talk to the union," said Donahue, who moved his talk show, from New York to Stamford to demonstrate support for the 2,800 members of the striking National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians.

"Just for simple public relations they should do that," said Donahue.

member of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists. "Their attitude, to be kind, is cavalier, and to be more accurate, is insensitive and autocratic."

The camera operators, writers, editors and producers went on strike June 29 over the issue of job security in Connecticut.

Donahue's show, which will celebrate its 20th year in the fall, is produced by Multimedia Entertainment but originates out of the NBC studios in New York City. Donahue is a stockholder of Multimedia.

He said he will lease space from Connecticut Public Television, Channel 49 in Stamford, for this month. His show does not air in August. He said he doesn't know what will happen if the strike continues into September.

"The union is not asking for the moon," Donahue said.

Donahue, who said this is the first time he has moved his show for a strike, also said he has not considered canceling his show.

"This (moving the show) is not the perfect solution, but I have complicated loyalties," Donahue said. "I have a responsibility to my company and additional responsibilities to our subscribing stations. Donahue's Stamford show, which was taped because of the Iran-Contra hearings in Washington, D.C., was called 'Who's the Father?'" Three women talked about their experiences in having children that were not their husbands.

Donahue said the competition from Oprah Winfrey's talk show has "gotten our attention and energized us."

"I spent time in the Soviet Union talking about competition and I can't come back in the United States and say it's good for everyone but me," Donahue said.

Kiwanis end tradition

Club allows women to join

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The overwhelming vote by Kiwanis International to accept women members marks the end of an era for the nation's major service organizations, but don't look for an overnight influx of Kiwanis club families.

"I think it'll be gradual," incoming Kiwanis International president Tony Kaiser said Tuesday after the group, in its third try in three years, voted to end a 72-year tradition of limiting members to business and professional men.

"Many of our clubs and members are just so comfortable with the male membership that it will take them a little while to adjust their thinking," Kaiser explained.

The membership gave every indication of enthusiasm for the new rule, with well over two-thirds of the 5,836 delegates to the Kiwanis annual convention rising noisily to their feet when asked who supported the amendment. Cheers filled the Washington Convention Center when the result was announced and a paper balloting procedure was declared unnecessary.

"I was surprised," acknowledged outgoing president Frank DiNoto, who presided over the session. "It was overwhelming."

Only 47 percent of the delegates to last year's convention in Houston supported the change, and that was twice as much backing as the proposal had received the year before in Toronto.

The Supreme Court ruled May 4 in a California case that states may force service organizations such as Rotary International to accept women as members. The Jaycees started admitting women three years ago after the court made a similar ruling against them in a Minnesota case. Lions International, another major service organization, voted last week to allow women to join.

DiNoto said recent Supreme Court decisions helped prod the organization, but the deciding factor was grass roots support for the change. "There were more and more clubs that were admitting women to Kiwanis clubs anyway. It swelled from our membership," he said.

Before Tuesday's vote, 40 clubs in 16 states already had admitted women as members, in violation of the Kiwanis constitution and by-laws.

Transit authority ends tune for many subway musicians

By Kim Shearin
The Associated Press

BOSTON — Elliott Gibbons says he tried to earn money and spread holiday cheer last Christmas by playing classical guitar in subway stations, until some transit authority Grinch threw him out.

The same thing happened to other musicians, and they banded together to do something about it. In January, Gibbons helped form the Subways Artists Guild. About 30 performers belong, said John Blagow, a co-founder and musician.

"We were being kicked out of the subway during the winter and we're starting to coordinate... to try to enact more stringent regulations," Intino said.

Commuters were in the mood for music, he said, but the Massachusetts Transit Authority thought differently. The MBTA said musicians playing in stations that are crowded or being renovated can interfere with the trains.

"It was very tense. There was just no other way we could survive," said Gibbons, who used to play in New York City's Central Park until he moved to Boston in November.

Peter McConnell of Berkeley, Calif., plays a tune at the Harvard Square subway station in Cambridge, Mass., Tuesday. McConnell, who stopped in the Boston area on his way to Europe, plays in the subways to make a few dollars from appreciative transit passengers.

performers are allowed to play at most stations, Dimond said. Some of them still may be ejected by MBTA officials from time to time, but "I haven't heard of that for a few months now," he said.

"Each MBTA official in each station is authorized to ensure that passenger flow is not interrupted" and the noise level of the music doesn't interfere with station announcements, Dimond said.

Getting breast X-ray as easy as shopping?

By Susan Okula
The Associated Press

NEW HAVEN — Starting this week, getting a breast X-ray for early cancer detection may become almost as simple as going to the supermarket or the bank for women in Connecticut. But it may be much more expensive.

A Yale Comprehensive Cancer Center van equipped to take breast X-rays, the first of its kind in the state, will take to the roads this week, stopping at radiology centers, apartment complexes and workplaces around Connecticut.

The X-rays, also called mammograms, can be life-savers for women who undergo early in the early stages of breast cancer. Yale School of Medicine doctors said Tuesday. The mammograms take about 20 minutes and cost about $20, compared to as much as $200 in doctors' offices.

The 33-foot, blue-and-white van is "the latest advance we have in our fight against cancer," said Dr. Alan C. Sartorelli, the director of the Yale cancer center and a professor of pharmacology.

The van was unveiled Tuesday at a press conference at Yale-New Haven Hospital. It was financed with a $146,000 grant from the New Haven Foundation and a $75,000 donation from the Connecticut Division of the American Cancer Society.

It is equipped with a state-of-the-art mammogram machine in its own room, two private dressing rooms and a waiting area where women can view a videotape on early cancer detection.

One in 10 American women will develop breast cancer, the leading cancer killer of women. In Connecticut, 2,000 cases of breast cancer will be diagnosed this year, while 650 women will die from it, Sartorelli said.

The incidence of breast cancer in Connecticut is 6.4 percent higher than the rest of the nation, he said.

Breast X-rays, or mammograms, show more than 90 percent of breast cancers, and could reduce the mortality rate by 50 percent by providing early detection, said Dr. Phyllis Kornuth, Kornuth is the director of the mobile mammography program and an associate professor of diagnostic radiology at Yale.

The American Cancer Society recommends a baseline mammogram for every woman between the age of 35 and 40. The study should be repeated every year or two until the age of 49, and then annually after the age of 50.

But less than 15 percent of women follow the recommendations, Kornuth said.

The X-rays taken on the van will be examined by radiologists at Yale-New Haven Hospital, Kornuth said.

More than 80 people were injured in the fire on July 7, 1977. Whether the fire was set or was accidental was never determined.

Credentials vs. ideology for justices

The U.S. Senate has every right to consider Judge Robert H. Bork's conservative ideology during confirmation hearings for the U.S. Supreme Court. After all, President Reagan did.

Ever since Bork was nominated to replace Justice Lewis F. Powell, liberal Democrats and civil rights activists have screamed bloody murder, saying the conservative circuit court judge would tip the ideological balance of the nation's highest court.

But at the same time they are complaining, many Democrats in the Senate say Bork's qualifications, not his political philosophy, must be the overriding factor when they decide whether to confirm the appointment.

While it's true that the judge's ability to sit on the court must be evaluated, the Senate must also consider his ideology — whether it is liberal or conservative. It is the only way to counter a president who has made a nomination based on ideology.

Since 1981, the president has appointed two generally conservative justices — Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia — to the bench, while elevating the court's most conservative member, William H. Rehnquist, to chief justice.

Each time liberals were concerned over the candidate's political opinion, but each time the president's nomination was confirmed.

The fact that Reagan has nominated three conservative justices is not the point. The fact is that Reagan is making appointments based on ideology, and if Democrats in the Senate wish to fight them based on ideology, they should.

Clearly, it would be better for the country if presidents and legislators could put aside politics when making appointments to the land's highest court. But that's not the way Washington works.

Before the 1930s, battles over Supreme Court nominations were based almost solely on ideology. In 1835, for example, President Andrew Jackson nominated Roger Taney, who was known for his pro-slavery views and opposition to a central bank.

The Senate shot down the nomination. In 1930, the Senate rejected President Herbert Hoover's nomination of John Parker, using the judge's anti-union views as the criteria.

In more recent times the Senate has moved away from this, basing appointments mostly on a candidate's qualifications. The move was a good one, but it has also put legislators at a disadvantage when it comes to confirmation hearings.

Hopefully, both sides will someday put politics on the back burner. But today, it is unfair to ask the Senate to base its decision solely on the candidate's ability to do the job, when the president who made the nomination used ideology as the yardstick.

Bork didn't know politics in 1972 remap

There is one small irony for Connecticut Republicans in President Reagan's choice of Robert Bork for the U.S. Supreme Court. This is the same Robert Bork who, in 1972, drew a new map of districts for the state House of Representatives which, quite unintentionally we're sure, would have crippled the GOP's chances of electing its candidates to that chamber.

Bork, a respected Yale law professor then, wasn't trying to zig the Republicans. Heck, he was one of them and a pre-Reagan-era conservative to boot.

But Bork was asked to draft a plan of reapportionment for the House and he tackled the job as a jurist. He produced a grid that was a mathematical gem, scientifically sound. One problem: Bork's masterpiece was lacking in anything but coincidental political input.

"It would have emasculated us," recalls J. Brian Gaffney of New Britain, the GOP state chairman at the time. Translation: Bork's lines did not chase up one side of a street and down the other in search of Republican voters. Nor did they wander, like dividing roads, toward clusters of Republicans in distant neighborhoods as any decent plan would to serve the party in power. In the early 1970s, that was the GOP.

"He had little understanding of politics," says Frank McCarthy of Wethersfield, a GOP legislator then and a key participant in developing a plan that might help his party. McCarthy, later to become a Superior Court judge, wanted no part of the Bork plan.

In courtroom jousting over another plan, McCarthy was to gain acceptance of what he called a doctrine of "political fairness" in reshaping legislative districts. Bork's plan was faulty there. Th... said, in effect, that skewing of district

Survey not just pothole inventory

To the Editor:

I am reluctant to spend time responding to an editorial which was obviously not researched, and apparently hastily written.

After reading the editorial, however, I feel a few brief remarks are in order. Among other things, the June 29 editorial on use of consultants implies the $50,000 street and sidewalk survey is nothing more than a glorified "pothole inventory," that perhaps volunteers could perform part of the work, and that a consultant is not really needed.

What the person writing the editorial neglected to point out (or find out) is that the survey in question is a comprehensive block-by-block inventory of all town infrastructure between the right-of-way lines, including roads, sidewalks, curbs, gutters, drainage, signs, manholes, etc. As a part of the project, a pavement evaluation and analysis will be conducted, including test borings to determine any failure conditions which exist, how to best repair such conditions, what materials to use, and an estimate of the cost involved.

After completion of the project, Manchester will have not only a complete inventory of conditions, but will possess a computerized planning and prioritizing tool.

The survey will serve as a cornerstone for a long-range capital-improvement plan for infrastructure repairs and replacement.

The survey also includes training town personnel to perform subsequent inspections and computer analyses without the need for further outside assistance.

It should be remembered that the purpose of the grant in question is specifically for surveys, studies and audits. The funds cannot be used to physically correct conditions disclosed by the studies.

The decision whether to perform any project with town personnel or to engage outside firms is always carefully considered. Manchester has an excellent track record of performing work frequently contracted out by other communities. The in-house reevaluation effort and public works engineering design unit are two examples of this local effort.

Different opinions are what make a horse race and I sincerely welcome such differences of opinion. What is exasperating, in this case, is that the editorial opinion was a "knee-jerk" response not based on fact. As such, the editorial was a disservice to

Vernon St. job taking too long

To the Editor:

I am writing to agree with the residents of Vernon Street who are upset with the length of time that road construction has taken.

I just live off Vernon Street and travel this road every day. Driving an automobile over the road has been a chore for months. Cars are covered with dust and the ruts in the road are horrible.

Even worse is that I walk to work almost every day and the best route for me to take is to walk Street. After a rainy day, the road is like a mudhole. On dry days I am covered with dirt and dust by the time I get to work, especially when drivers exceed the speed limit and raise the road dust worse than normal.

The people whose homes are on the road have a legitimate complaint. Their homes are getting covered with dirt and will undoubtedly need washing or painting after the work is complete. They can't even open their windows or the inside of their homes get filthy. I sympathize with these people. It is my choice to walk on this road, but they have no alternative in traveling on the road to their homes.

This project has gone on for an extended length of time. Parts of the road have been dug up and then just left with no work being done, and yet the DOT claims that the work will be complete online.

I am sure that the residents of Vernon Street and surrounding streets will be greatly relieved when this project is finally finished.

lines was an acceptable mulling around as long as the districts would end up with roughly equal voter population.

So Robert Bork, a scholarly graduate of academia, has that little lesson in practical politics in his background as he swings toward a top rung in the nation's judiciary.

And if that Connecticut episode has its irony, let's suggest another for the Bork nomination. This is, after all, the ultimate patronage appointment. Bork is chosen, not so much for his performance in politics past — because he has next to none — but for his expected performance ahead on the court as a Reagan conservative.

That is what it's all about. Robert Bork may not have sensed it at the time, but his Connecticut experience in the reapportionment matter should have demonstrated for him a pragmatic difference between his world of theory and, away from the books, the world of reality.

'Moderate' is actually a terrorist

WASHINGTON — Hashemi Rafsanjani, the Iranian leader the White House believed was "moderate" enough to do business with, has been deeply involved in Iranian-sponsored terrorism and still is.

Rafsanjani, speaker of the Tehran parliament, was the Iranian behind the Reagan administration's arms-for-hostages deal. President Reagan, Lt. Col. Oliver North and others in Washington were convinced during the 1985-86 hostage crisis that Rafsanjani was not only sensible but anxious to improve relations with the United States and the West.

But he is not, and never was. We've compiled our own dossier on Rafsanjani, from CIA and other intelligence sources as well as Iranian sources. This is what we've learned.

Rafsanjani supervises the Iranian government's cooperation with Hezbollah, the Shiite extremist group that still holds American hostages — and which has been behind almost every anti-American act of terrorism in the Middle East since April 1983.

Hezbollah's Tehran office is in a building at No. 1-61 on a street known as Akbar Restaurant, near Nistan Seventh Avenue. In the northern Tehran neighborhood of Saltanabad.

The Hezbollah leader in charge there is Haj Hossein Shami; his deputy is Abdurrahman Ghosyar. Shami usually keeps in touch with Hezbollah headquarters in Lebanon by courier, though he spent 10 days there early last month.

Rafsanjani uses as a go-between a Lebanese man in the Iranian Hezbollah office by the name of Abuhaman. The Eighth Bureau of the Iranian Information Ministry also has connections with the office.

A recent official between the Tehran office and an Iranian contact based in Lebanon identified only as Khakhar included open boasting about "pulling off" recent terrorist bombings in Italy.

Rafsanjani himself has bragged publicly about Iran's connection to the hostage kidnappings. On April 3 he said in a prayer sermon: "We rendered the French so abject that they begged us. They said, 'We will expel the Mojahedin.'" He was referring to the French to the expulsion from France of Massoud Rajavi, leader of the People's Mojahedin, the latest and most effective anti-Khomeini group.

On April 6, in an interview with an Iranian newspaper, Rafsanjani sneered at the U.S. response to hostage-taking: "For years they had been repeating their slogans about not paying ransom, but it became evident they were lying. They have paid ransom. Those who told France, Britain and others not to pay ransom, themselves paid ransom. Of course, they had previously paid ransom, too: in connection with the TWA flight, they had 1,000 prisoners released and I intervened then, too."

Rafsanjani had his onetime personal pilot, Ali-Akbar Mohammadi, murdered in Hamburg last Jan. 16. Having received political asylum in West Germany, Mohammadi denounced Rafsanjani and the Khomeini regime on television. He was gunned down by two men as he was returning home from taking his daughter to kindergarten.

Ahmad Kan'ani, expelled from Tunisia on March 29 for terrorist activity, is a known protégé of Rafsanjani. From 1982 to 1984 Kan'ani personally directed terrorism from offices in Syria and Lebanon.

Iran's budget for terrorism, called "aid to the people of Southern Lebanon," is personally approved by Rafsanjani. The amount budgeted for 1986-87 is about a billion rials, or $12.5 million.

Rafsanjani was identified by the People's Mojahedin, whose information is usually accurate, as the man behind the plot to disrupt the annual Muslim pilgrimage to Mecca last summer. Saudi police arrested more than 100 Iranians, who had gathered to carry out activities in Saudi Arabia and to plan activities in other countries.

Finally, Rafsanjani is believed to have engineered the hijacking of an Air France plane in August 1985. Only two months earlier, he had openly threatened to crack French airline security.

Footnote: This is not our first exposure of the real Rafsanjani. On May 11, 1986, we warned: "As the Reagan administration continues its secret, conciliatory tilt toward Iran, the president's advisers should not lose sight of the dubious background of the people they're cozying up to."

We specifically fingered Rafsanjani as the administration's greatest hope — and a man very likely to betray any trust placed on him. We revealed to the White House — and the CIA — the Rafsanjani was the co-owner of an automotive shop in Tehran, when the bodies of two murdered American servicemen were found there in 1977.

LaRouche free on bond after plea

BOSTON — Presidential candidate and political extremist Lyndon H. LaRouche is free on bond and allowed to travel abroad after pleading innocent to plotting against a federal probe of his 1984 campaign finances.

LaRouche entered the plea Tuesday in federal court to a single charge of conspiring to obstruct the probe into an alleged $1 million credit card fraud scheme to finance his campaign. U.S. Magistrate Robert B. Collings released LaRouche on $20,000 bond and told him that he would be liable for $200,000 if he failed to appear for trial Sept. 21.

The government asked that LaRouche surrender his passport, but LaRouche said he needed it to visit his wife in West Germany and for vital trips to Italy, Turkey, France, Africa and South America in his campaign for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination.

Four kidnapped in southern Sudan

NAIROBI, Kenya — Three Americans and a Briton were kidnapped from their homes in southern Sudan by armed men identifying themselves as Sudanese rebels, a relief official said today.

"We do not know where they were taken to, neither have we received any information as to their whereabouts," said Dan Bitrus, executive director of the Nairobi-based Association of Christian Rescue Organizations Serving Sudan.

Bitrus said the abductions occurred between 12:30 a.m. and 2 a.m. Tuesday in Mundri, about 100 miles northwest of the southern city of Juba.

The armed men identified themselves as members of the SPLA, the Sudan People's Liberation Army," Bitrus said. Three of the victims, two American teachers and one British nurse, worked for the relief organization. Bitrus said. He identified them as Steve Anderson, who was born in Minneapolis, Minn.; Katherine Taylor, 32, of Johnson City, Tenn.; and 28-year-old British nurse Heather Sinclair.

Bitrus said the fourth victim was Mark Nikkel, an American Episcopal priest.

Australian voting is difficult

SYDNEY, Australia — Australians have voted in five national elections in the past 10 years, but the government apparently feels they haven't quite got the hang of it.

Each night on national television, a government-paid advertisement explains how to fill in the voting cards that will be used in Saturday's election. The ad, featuring a 12-year-old boy standing in the House of Representatives, gives the impression that voting in Australia is child's play.

It isn't. Australia has one of the most complicated voting systems on earth.

On Saturday, if past trends are followed, 95 percent of Australia's 16 million voters will go to a school or community hall to cast their ballots, and more than 6 percent of them will mess it up.

School sends hostage a picture

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Beirut University College today released a photograph of American hostage Jesse Turner's 2-week-old daughter in the hope his kidnappers would show him the picture of the child he has never seen.

"I had hoped you would be the first person to see my face after my birth," said the letter, addressed to "Daddy" and written in Arabic by Turner's Lebanese wife Badr, for the baby, Joanna. It was accompanied by a black-and-white snapshot.

The letter came one day after captured American journalist Charles Glass said in a videotape released by his kidnappers that he was an agent for the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

The letter to Turner said, "I hope I will not have to wait so long to see your face and meet my father for the first time. I'm sure you're eager to meet your first child."

Violence erupts following massacre

CHANDIGARH, India — At least two people were killed and several cases of arson reported in anti-Sikh violence in Hindu-dominated Haryana state today, following the massacre of 72 bus passengers in two attacks by Sikh terrorists.

The violence occurred despite a government attempt to prevent such incidents by placing the army on full alert. A general strike paralyzed Punjab state today, the United News of India reported.

The rightist People's Party called for a general strike in New Delhi for Thursday to protest the killings.

State Police Chief Hans Raj Swan told a news conference that a 55-year-old Sikh man was stolen to death in the industrial town of Yamunanagar in Haryana state today.

Swan added that a Patehabad, about 115 miles southwest of Chandigarh, a Sikh firing attack fired at an approaching Hindu mob but was overpowered and burned to death.

Four blacks injured in explosion

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — A limpet mine exploded in a hotel bar in central Johannesburg today, injuring four black men, police said. The explosion rocked the bar and blasted a hole in the side of the colonial-style building.

A police statement said an STM-2 limpet mine exploded at 11:12 a.m. at the two-story Village Main Hotel. The 55-year-old barman and two other black men in the bar were seriously injured, while a black passer-by received cuts on his hand from flying glass.

Hotel owner Yoi Hon said he had opened the bar at 9 a.m., checked the stock and was in his office when he heard the explosion. "My barman was crying," said Hon. "He staggered to the office." The barman, Sanford Phiri, had cuts on his head and arms.

"Everything was falling down and there was a small fire," said Hon. He helped put out the fire and the hotel and bar were evacuated.

GOP may change nomination rules

WASHINGTON — Against their will and much to their dismay, Republicans are moving slowly toward changes in how they pick a presidential nominee every four years.

At every step, the GOP blames overbearing Democratic legislatures for forcing them to change.

But every step the Republicans take moves them closer and closer to rules very much like — you guessed it — the Democrats. The GOP always has valued state rights above all others in its internal processes. But the national and state Republican parties are talking of actually abrogating, voiding and ignoring state laws they don't like.

Air traffic controllers criticized

WASHINGTON — A federal panel investigating the 1986 collision of a jetliner and a small plane near Los Angeles is calling for dramatic changes in the way air traffic controllers protect aircraft, saying too much emphasis is being placed on pilots scanning the skies.

The National Transportation Safety Board on Tuesday blamed failures in the air traffic control system and limitations and weaknesses in the so-called pilot "see-and-avoid" philosophy for the Aug. 31 collision of an Aeromexico DC-9 and a single-engine Piper PA-28.

Tanker truck blows up; 24 killed

By Mark Heinrich
The Associated Press

HERBORN, West Germany — A tanker truck loaded with gasoline crashed into an ice cream parlor and blew up, triggering a series of explosions and razing fires that killed up to 24 people, authorities said.

Another 36 people were injured in the Tuesday evening crash, which turned downtown Herborn into an inferno.

Explosions from the truck and a severed gas main leveled three buildings and gutted another nine. The downtown area was evacuated and rescue efforts, hampered by the extreme heat, continued today.

"Everything just blew up like the war was starting," Joerg Kessler, 23, of Herborn, an ice cream parlor customer told The Associated Press. Kessler managed to escape with only bruises.

The bodies of two victims were pulled from the rubble. Up to 22 others are missing and feared dead, authorities said. Most of the victims were believed to have been young people who had sought refreshment on the warm summer night.

Gerhard Boekel, a town spokesman, told a news conference today that one of the bodies belonged to an 18-year-old woman. He gave no details about other victims.

Of the 36 injured, 26 are still in the hospital, and the other 10 were treated and released, Boekel said at the news conference at a Herborn Hotel. Authorities earlier had reported 39 people were injured.

Boekel said the death toll was uncertain because it was unknown how many people were in the cafe or nearby buildings when the accident occurred. Tuesday night, police said they feared 30 to 50 people were dead.

"We are checking with families," he said. "But it's a very confused situation."

Boekel said the 48-year-old truck driver was in the hospital in Siegen and "is not in a condition to be interviewed" by police. He did not elaborate on the driver's condition. Police said earlier that the driver had told them his brakes had failed.

Boekel said the driver had left the expressway near Herborn and came down a very long hill leading to the town "at an extremely high rate of speed." He said it was unknown whether the accident had been caused by technical defects or an error of the driver.

Police said earlier that the driver had told them his brakes had failed. Boekel said that in 1983, three people were killed when a truck sped down a very long hill leading to the town "at an extremely high rate of speed." He said it was unknown whether the accident had been caused by technical defects or an error of the driver.

one-third of the building.
The partial application is the second such one submitted by Laser Games of Hartford. The first, submitted May 19, called for installing bathrooms and a grinder sandwich shop area.
The town Building Department rejected the application until the entire building application is submitted and all the uses for the building are known.
Despite the earlier rejection, Tarr said the second application is intended to establish a "dialogue" with town officials so they can point out areas where the plans need to be changed.

Lt. Col. Oliver North responds to questions while testifying before the joint House-Senate Iran-contra panel. Attorney Brendan Sullivan, who represents North, reviews notes.

North defends 'neat idea' the hearings that the money was property of "the enterprise" — his phrase to describe the international set of covert operations. An estimated $8 million were placed into private Swiss bank accounts, and remains there.

North said he believed Secord was entitled to "fair and just compensation" for his activities.
"I don't recall that we ever discussed a specific amount," he said, adding that he doesn't know how much money Secord took from the arms transfers.
In other testimony, North:
Gave a flavor of the covert world in which he operated. Niels referred to notes North made of a conversation with Israeli Amirim Nir in which the NSC aide wrote that "Joshua has approved proceeding as we had hoped" to replenish the weapons that Israel had sold to the "rebels."
North said he thought "Joshua" was a code name for Israeli officials. Advised to look it up on a code sheet, he said "I was wrong. I had forgotten the codes."
Niels: "Who was Joshua?"
North: "The president."
Sparted with Niels over whether retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord was an "authorized agent" in his role in arranging the sale of arms to Iran. Shown a document that he drafted for Poindexter to send to Reagan suggesting that an authorized agent, namely Secord, could be used to sell U.S. weapons to Iran, North demurred. Secord was the broker for the transaction," he said. "The distinction may be important, because Secord claims he was not an authorized agent of the government, and thus was not barred from placing some of the proceeds into Swiss bank accounts, where $8 million remains."
North said Secord, whom he described as "this poor man," was first brought in handling deals for the United States as an "outside agent," in 1984 at the request of CIA Director William J. Casey. Secord first dealt with the Nicaraguan Contras, but later, in January 1986, was assigned the tasks of negotiating with Iranian intermediaries on the sale of U.S. arms to the Nicaraguan rebels.
North used his second day as witness to offer a strong defense of the activities that lie at the heart of the Iran-Contra affair — the arms for hostages transactions and the diversion of funds from Tehran to the benefit of the Nicaraguan rebels.
"I saw that idea of using the Ataytollah Khomeini's money to support the Nicaraguan freedom fighters as a good one, and I still do. I don't think it was wrong. I think it was a neat idea," he said.
As for the arms for hostages swap, he said, "We got three Americans back and there was no terrorism... For almost 18 months there was no action against Americans," until the affair unraveled last fall.
The Rev. Benjamin Weir, Father Lawrence Martin Jenco and David Jacobsen all were released in exchange for separate shipments of American arms.

This photograph of Lt. Col. Oliver North standing by a stack of documents was presented to the Iran-contra panel Tuesday during North's testimony. North's attorney Brendan Sullivan said the documents, which were sent by the staff of the investigating committee, arrived too late for them to review prior to North's testimony.

the rumor that he is wanted for murder in Detroit.
"Frankly, I'm quite tired of it. All of these are quite unsubstantiated," Hershberger said.
Hershberger said one account of the cake theft goes that he made off with the cake hidden under his helmet.
"Where do you suppose I put this gooey pastry? In my saddle bag or on my handle bars?" he asked.
About five minutes into his remarks, the Board of Directors attempted to cut Hershberger off, but he refused to give up the podium. Instead, he played a tape recording of a song about a man who he said shared a fate similar to his own.
The song, "The Troublemaker" by Willie Nelson, is about Jesus Christ, Hershberger later said.
While the song played, Mayor Weinberg attempted to tell Hershberger that no accusations had ever been made against him by the directors. But Hershberger, who says he was interrupted by the song, told Hershberger that he can't hear the song if he's talking," he said.
Hershberger's actions eventually forced the Board of Directors to recess for 15 minutes.
"I'm quite impressed that I had the power to unseat the board," Hershberger said during the recess. "I've never done that."

Nipper finds his knuckler fails in Anaheim

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — All knuckleball pitchers, veterans and trainees alike, are advised to heed the warning: beware of Anaheim Stadium.
All Nipper of the Boston Red Sox became the latest to find that out, as he own pitch was his worst enemy in a 9-4 defeat Tuesday night at the hands of the California Angels.
Nipper's problem arose not because the resident Angels are experts at hitting the fluttering pitch, but because the wind currents in the stadium play havoc with knuckleball flight patterns.
"I think he had an outstanding knuckler," California's Doug DeCinces told Nipper, who began throwing the pitch in earnest this season. "But all knuckleballers have trouble in this park. Their pitches dance all over, making it tough on catchers. It must be the light air."
DeCinces' solo homer in the second, his 11th, gave the Angels a 1-0 start. The wicked knuckler took care of most of the rest.
"It was impossible to hit. And sometimes, it was impossible to catch," said Red Sox catcher Mark Sullivan.
"He pitched well. He deserved a better fate," said Boston Manager John McNamara.
Nipper, 7-8, walked three and threw a wild pitch and Sullivan committed a pair of passed balls as the Angels scored eight runs on a total of four hits in the fourth and fifth innings.
In the fourth, Wally Joyner walked and worked his way around to third on the passed balls — the second of which came as DeCinces struck out for what should've been the third out. Bob Boone followed with a double that scored both.
In the fifth, Gary Pettis' single and walks of Mark McLemore and Brian Downing loaded the bases. One run scored on the wild pitch, and three more on Jack Howell's triple off reliever Tom Bolton. Later in the inning, Boone picked up his third RBI by scoring Howell with a sacrifice fly.
"I was curious about Nipper's knuckler," said California Manager Gene Mauch. "He's got a pretty good one. But it takes a long time to learn to throw that pitch properly."
Mauch was also curious about his own starter, Mike Witt, his right-handed ace, had left his previous start after 4 1/3 innings when his shoulder stiffened.
"This time, Witt blanked Boston until the Red Sox collected four consecutive hits with one out in the sixth, Marty Barrett, Wally Joyner, and Mike Greenwell singled to score Rice.
Witt, 18-5, lasted until one out in the eighth, when successful singles by Boggs, Rice and Greenwell, and a walk to Dwight Evans, brought on DeWayne Bruce.
Bruce earned his eighth save by retiring all five men he faced.
"I think we broke their hearts when we came back from seven runs down to win Monday night," said Bruce, referring to California's 16-7, 12-inning victory.

Padres insist hit unintended; Cubs disagree

CHICAGO — Eric Show says he wasn't throwing at Andre Dawson. The Cubs aren't so sure.
Dawson was hit in the face by a Show pitch Tuesday and although it might have been unintentional, circumstances might indicate otherwise.
The Cubs retaliated as if it were intentional. Fights broke out and before the heat of the San Diego Padres 7-5, five Chicago players, including Dawson and two pitchers, were thrown out of the game.
Dawson, who homered twice on Monday against San Diego, hit his 24th homer of the season and seventh against the Padres in the first inning Tuesday after Dave Martinez also homered.
Paul Nove homered for the Cubs to open the third and one batter later, Show hit Dawson in the face. Dawson suffered lacerations of the lip, needing 21 stitches inside and outside the mouth, and a contusion of the left cheekbone. But there were no fractures.
The Padres insisted it was unintentional and some of the Cubs agreed, but retaliation was the order of the day. Dawson suffered lacerations of the lip, needing 21 stitches inside and outside the mouth, and a contusion of the left cheekbone. But there were no fractures.

Lamb burger pitas

1/3 cup soft bread crumbs
2 tablespoons plain yogurt
1/2 teaspoon dried oregano, crushed
1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg
1 or 2 cloves garlic, minced

1 pound ground lamb
1/2 cup crumbled feta cheese
2 large flat bread rounds, halved crosswise
Spinach leaves (optional)
Sliced ripe olives (optional)

Combine crumbs, yogurt, oregano, nutmeg and garlic. Mix in lamb. Shape into eight 1/4-inch-thick patties. Place 1 tablespoon feta on top of each of 4 patties. Top with remaining patties. Seal edges.

Grill, uncovered, directly over medium-hot coals for 7 minutes. Turn and grill to desired doneness, allowing 6 to 8 minutes more for medium. Serve in pita halves lined with spinach. Top with olives and additional cheese and yogurt, if desired. Makes 4 servings.

Nutrition analysis per serving: 286 cal., 22 g pro., 27 g carbo., 9 g fat, 67 mg chol., 175 mg sodium.

Peaches, berries and cream

2 pints fresh or frozen blueberries
1/2 cup sugar
3 tablespoons all-purpose flour

1/2 teaspoon ground allspice
1 teaspoon lemon juice
2 peaches
Whipped cream (optional)

Rinse fresh or frozen blueberries. In medium saucepan combine sugar, flour and allspice. Stir in berries and lemon juice. Let stand 5 minutes. Cook and stir over medium heat until thickened and bubbly. Turn mixture into 9-inch quiche dish. Peel and pit peaches. Cut each into 6 wedges; arrange in berry mixture, pit side down. Cover with foil. Bake in 375-degree oven cream, if desired. Makes 4 servings.

Microwave directions: Rinse fresh or frozen berries. In 9-inch microwave-safe quiche dish combine sugar, flour and allspice. Stir in berries and lemon juice. Micro-cook, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) 9 to 10 minutes or until thickened and bubbly; stir every 2 minutes. Peel and pit peaches. Cut each into 6 wedges; arrange in berry mixture, pit side down. Micro-cook, loosely covered with wax paper, 3 to 4 minutes or until bubbly. Serve warm, topped with whipped cream, if desired.

Twice-the-banana salad

1 ripe medium banana, cut up
1/2 cup salad oil
1 tablespoon vinegar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon sugar

Dash salt
8 cups torn greens
6-ounce can pineapple chunks, drained
1 medium banana, sliced
1 cup sliced fresh strawberries
1/2 cup peanuts

In a blender container combine the ripe banana, oil, vinegar, lemon juice, sugar, and salt. Cover and blend until smooth. Transfer mixture to a screw-top jar; cover and chill. In a salad bowl combine greens, pineapple, banana and strawberries. Shake dressing; pour over salad. Toss. Sprinkle peanuts on top. Makes 6 servings.

Nutrition information per serving: 199 cal., 4 g pro., 21 g carbo., 13 g fat, 55 mg sodium. U.S. RDA: 39 percent vit. A, 80 percent vit. C, 10 percent thiamine.

Shrimp-stuffed cheese

One 2-pound round Edam or Cheddar cheese
1/2 pound fresh or frozen shrimp in shells
3 cups water
1 small onion, finely chopped
1/2 teaspoon ground red pepper
1/2 cup soft bread crumbs

Using a vegetable peeler, remove all the red skin from the cheese. Cut a thin slice from the top of the cheese round. Using a grapefruit knife and spoon, hollow out cheese, leaving a 1/2-inch-thick shell. Soak shell in lukewarm water for 1 hour. Finely shred enough scooped-out cheese to make 1/2 cup. (Reserve remaining cheese for another use.) Peel and devein shrimp; remove tails. Meanwhile, heat water to boiling. Add shrimp; simmer 1 to 3 minutes or until shrimp turn pink. Drain. Chop shrimp. In a skillet cook onion in oil until tender. Add tomato, pickle and red pepper. Simmer, uncovered, about 5 minutes or until thickened. Stir in shrimp, crumbs and the 1/2 cup shredded cheese; heat 1 minute.

Drain cheese and pat dry with paper towels. Place the shell in a 1-quart casserole. Spoon warm filling into center of cheese. Bake, uncovered, in 350-degree oven about 10 minutes or until sides of cheese just begin to melt. Remove cheese from oven. To serve, cut into wedges. Serve at once with crackers. Makes 10 servings.

Nutrition information per serving: 279 cal., 21 g pro., 3 g carbo., 21 g fat, 82 mg chol., 696 mg sodium. U.S. RDA: 15 percent vit. A, 16 percent riboflavin, 51 percent calcium, 40 percent phosphorus.

Vegetable garden slaw

1/2 of a small head cabbage
1/2 of a small head cauliflower
1 small zucchini
1 stalk celery, thinly sliced
1 small carrot, shredded

1/2 cup dairy sour cream
1/2 cup bottled creamy cucumber salad dressing
1 teaspoon poppy seed
Dash bottled hot pepper sauce

Cut cabbage into quarters and shred. Cut cauliflower into small flowerets. Slice flowerets, if desired. Have zucchini lengthwise; cut into slices. In a bowl combine cabbage, cauliflower, zucchini, celery and carrot.

For dressing, in a small bowl stir together sour cream, salad dressing, poppy seed and hot pepper sauce. Pour dressing over vegetable mixture. Toss to coat. Makes 8 servings.

Nutrition analysis per serving: 81 cal., 2 g pro., 6 g carbo., 6 g fat, 5 mg chol., 108 mg sodium. U.S. RDA: 51 percent vit. A, 63 percent vit. C.

Coupon selling may not pay off

By Martin Sloane, United Feature Syndicate

DEAR MARTIN: I belong to a large neighborhood organization, 3,000 members strong, that has a big coupon exchange. Since we collect thousands of coupons and many of them are not needed by our members, we have been looking for a way to sell them.

Not long ago, we came across a company in Wisconsin that offers to purchase coupons. Each month they issue a list of coupons they are looking for and pay 25 percent of their face value.

The coupons must have at least 90 days left before they expire, and an organization like ours would be limited to no more than 15 of the same coupon.

In order to get on this program, we would have to pay this company $123 to receive its coupon lists for the next three months.

I hesitate to ask our organization to spend this kind of money to just sell it if it would pay to participate. What do you think?

GORDON REESER, SCRANTON, PA.

DEAR GORDON: I think that you should think long and hard about making this investment. This company sends out a list that may have 250 or more coupons listed. Let's say that half of the coupons listed appear in your area. That means you'll receive a maximum of 125 coupons for each of 125 products. This works out to a total of 1,562 coupons. Let's say that the average value of a coupon is 25 cents, and

Growers gambling on yuppie fruit percent of Brooks' $35 million gross sales.

HOMESTEAD, Fla. — Fruit growers in South Florida are gambling that a yuppie demand for something new and different to eat will establish a market for some exotic tropical fruits with funny names.

From this farm belt near Miami, they have begun shipping out such rare crops as star fruit (carambola), mamey sapote, atemoyas, sugar apples, manisota and low-calorie longans and lychees.

"They're yuppie fruits," says Marc Ellenby, owner of the Comfort Grove.

"We are gambling that a good deal of these are going to hit and become staple items," says Bill Schaefer, marketing director for J.R. Brooks & Son Inc., a Homestead fruit and vegetable shipper. "And I think they're the future."

"We are responding to the 1980s call of 'What do you have that's new and different?'"

Schaefer says that in 1983 his company shipped only mangoes, limes and avocados. Last year, the rare tropical fruits made up about 5

Try carrots not only to see better but to see less of you

Microwave Kitchen

Marge Churchill

OK, So what good is a carrot? "Let me see," you answer. Right! That is a good place to begin. Carrots are very high in vitamin A which helps prevent night blindness. Raw carrots are also a favorite with dieters because they are crisp, filling and low in calories. The result of eating carrots may be that you will see better, but at the same time it takes to cook them conventionally, and eating just one raw carrot will give you 11,000 International Units of Vitamin A, or almost triple the recommended daily allowance for women. A half cup serving of carrot also contributes about two grams of dietary fiber.

Terrible! But, can anything that is so good for you taste good too? Of course! Carrots can be prepared in many different ways and because of their mild flavor, lend themselves well to a variety of spices, herbs, and fruits for unusual and tasty combinations.

Carrots are available year-round. Baby carrots with tender skins can be cooked whole. Larger carrots should be peeled or scraped, then cut up for faster and more even microwaving. Older carrots have a tough, woody core. Halve them lengthwise, then pry out the pale core with a sharp knife. The outer portion can be cut up and microwaved like young, tender carrots.

Look for firm, well-formed smooth carrots with bright orange or orange-red color. Small to medium carrots offer best flavor. Trim tops to save space. Do not wash until ready to use. Good quality carrots, stored in plastic bag and refrigerated for several months.

For cooking fresh carrots, follow these suggestions. Whole baby carrots, approximately 12 ounces, will microwave in 6 to 8 minutes. Use a 1-quart casserole covered with 2 tablespoons of water. Stir once. Let stand, covered for 3 minutes. Carrot cuts, 2 inches in size, approximately 10 to 12 carrots of medium size, will microwave in 6 to 8 minutes on high power. Two cups of sliced carrots, approximately 1/4 inch thick will cook on high power in 4 to 7 minutes.

Today's column features carrot casserole which serves 2 people and is ideal for a summer buffet. Honey Gingered Carrots take only 7 to 8 minutes to cook, and are great served either hot or cold. Apricots are a hot fruited variation which is an ideal complement with poultry or pork. Marinated Carrot Relish, which is prepared ahead of time and served cold, is an excellent choice to serve with London Broil and sizzling from the grill. Of course, carrots can also be a dressed up part of any dessert menu. Rich and moist carrot cake frosted with a creamy cheese frosting is deserving of praise any time of year.

Foods Corp., which makes more hot dogs than any other firm in America. "And summer is definitely the peak season for hot dogs."

If your family is ready to go beyond the standard condiments purchased in supermarkets, here are some others you may want to try:

Sabrett's style steamed onions

- 5 large yellow onions
 - 2 tablespoons margarine
 - 1/4 cup water
 - 1 tablespoon ground cumlin
 - 2 teaspoons paprika
 - Salt and pepper to taste
- Peel and quarter onions, then slice the long way into "whiskers." Separate in a deep skillet, then add remaining ingredients. Cover and set over low heat for at least an hour, stirring occasionally. Cook until onions are soft and have picked up a golden-red color. Store in the refrigerator until needed, up to one month.

Fresh pepper relish

- 2 tablespoons corn oil
 - 1 green bell pepper, chopped
 - 1 red bell pepper, chopped
 - 1 small onion, chopped
 - 1 or 2 cloves garlic, minced
 - 1 cup ketchup
 - 1 tablespoon cider vinegar
 - 1/2 teaspoon ground cumin
 - Cayenne pepper to taste
- Heat corn oil in a large skillet over medium heat. Add peppers, onion and garlic. Sauté about 5 minutes. Stir in remaining ingredients. Cook just 2 minutes more and cool. Use on hot dogs or hamburgers within two days.

Olive condite

- 1/2 cup black olives (imported are best) sliced
 - 1/2 cup green olives stuffed with pimiento, sliced
 - 1/2 cup finely sliced celery
 - 2 tablespoons Parmesan cheese
 - 1 tablespoon lemon juice
 - 1 tablespoon olive oil
 - 1/2 teaspoon oregano
 - 1/2 teaspoon dry basil
- Combine all ingredients in a small bowl. Mix well and refrigerate for at least three hours. Serve within three days.

Gateau au chocolat

- 4 eggs
 - 4 squares sweet German cooking chocolate
 - 1 stick butter, softened
 - 4 teaspoons sugar
 - 4 teaspoons flour
- Lightly grease a loaf pan. Line it with waxed paper and grease the waxed paper. Set aside. Meanwhile, preheat oven to 425 degrees. Separate eggs, placing yolks into the larger bowl. Set aside. Melt chocolate, using microwave or top of the stove. Beat the butter into the melted chocolate with a wooden spoon. Beat egg whites with an electric mixer until stiff peaks form. Set aside. Using the same beaters, beat yolks until they are thick and lemon colored. Slowly add sugar, beating constantly. Add flour and beat until just blended. Stir chocolate mixture into the batter. Then, using a wire whisk, gently fold chocolate mixture and beaten egg whites together. Turn into prepared pan. Reduce oven temperature to 350 degrees. Bake 25 minutes. Cool in the pan, on a wire cake rack. Refrigerate in the pan until well-chilled, at least four hours. To serve, loosen cake with the point of a knife, then invert over a serving plate and remove from pan. Pull off waxed paper. Serve with whipped cream.

Chicago to be home of a media museum

CHICAGO (AP) — Work has started on a museum in Chicago devoted to the electronic media, according to Multichannel News. The Museum of Broadcasting, on the city's near Southside, will house exhibits, an auditorium, a research center and working TV and radio stations. The research center will contain historic audio and videotapes from Chicago's pioneer stations. According to the publication, a planned second phase would feature a working TV studio and four "Decade Rooms" that would duplicate living rooms of the 1940s through the 1970s, with radios or TV sets programmed with vintage entertainment.

GREENWICH (AP) — Christian Bertrand, head chef at Lutece in New York, is leaving the internationally acclaimed restaurant to open his own restaurant here with his wife.

Bertrand told the Greenwich Time newspaper on Tuesday that he is buying the Greenstreet restaurant and will reopen it under his own name sometime in the fall, ending an 11-year kitchen partnership with Lutece chef-proprietor Andre Soltnar.

"It's sad a little bit to leave Lutece because I loved it very much," said Bertrand, who lives in White Plains, N.Y., with his wife, Michelle.

"I am very close with Andre," Bertrand said. "He's not really my boss, he's my friend too."

"It's been a dream of mine for a very, very long time," Bertrand said of opening his own restaurant, which like Lutece will feature French cuisine. New York Times food critic Bryan Miller once referred to Bertrand as Lutece's "talented chef in the trenches."

Housework: surging industry with franchise possibilities

Housework — the chore most of us love to hate — is now one of the fastest growing of all U.S. industries. Cleaning franchises are soaring, sweeping across the country and reaping financial rewards.

This is a rags-to-riches story that should not surprise you. The need for help to clean our homes is clear, as more women enter the work force and dual families are increasingly considering the norm. Once thought of as a luxury reserved only for the rich, today maid services are being used by a growing number of middle- and upper-income families.

Franchises providing house-cleaning services have capitalized on the demand. Sales were up 20 percent, totaling more than $49 million in 1986 as compared with $41 million in 1985 for housekeeping franchises, reports Andrew Kostecke, franchise specialist for the Commerce Department. And sales are expected to total more than $68 million by the end of 1987 — a whopping 39 percent jump over last year.

Business is rapidly expanding. Of the 14 housekeeping/maid-service franchises in 1985, there were 669 units, which include both company- and franchise-owned operations. Last year that figure surged to 952 units, and more than 1,360 of these establishments are expected by year end.

"In the last five to six years, franchising in this area has been going gangbusters," Geraldine Strozio of the International Franchise Association (IFA) notes.

Sylvia Porter

opportunities to mounting numbers of entrepreneurs, they are also creating a huge demand for maids. The number of maids and house-cleaning employees working in private homes has been steadily increasing. In 1986, there were 583,000 individuals in this category, compared with 563,000 in 1985, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

To entice housekeeping personnel, many of these companies are providing perks, everything from uniforms to vacation pay to health insurance benefits. In general, the shift to a service economy — with maids falling into the category of "personal service professionals" — encourages the upscale image that many maid-service franchisors are creating for both employees as well as customers.

Customers are attracted to these housecleaning franchises for several reasons. Certainly, marketing campaigns and the resulting name recognition play a part. Customers also stress more substantial benefits to prospective clients. No longer will you have to search for a housekeeper; you will avoid the hassles of looking for a replacement if your maid is not available; aspects such as transportation, meals and insurance, which most customers neglect to consider, usually are included when you deal with a large, established company.

Costs vary, depending on which company you use, where you live, the size of your house, and of course, what you want cleaned. No matter which type of house-cleaning service you choose, for most, more valuable than any other factor is the time you will save.

British election campaigns are limited by law to about three weeks.

Gejdenson says U.S. has amnesia

HARTFORD (AP) — U.S. Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., says America has developed amnesia, forgetting the hardships of the energy crises of the last decade.

He and Consumer Counsel James F. Meehan, who represents power company customers in rate cases before state utility regulators, said Tuesday the nation must return to the days when energy conservation was paramount.

"It's almost as if we have amnesia as to what happened... during the oil embargo, when people's homes were cold, when people were unable to make the kind of normal and necessary trips that they're able to do today," Gejdenson said after presiding at a hearing at the state Capitol in Connecticut's "electricity future."

"With very little effort, we could create the energy of a $4 billion nuclear power plant by just going forward with conservation and co-generation" under which factories, for example, produce some of their own power, he said.

"That is the absolute least we should be doing."

The 2nd District congressman, a member of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, also said equipment standards for lighting could be upgraded that would save consumers as much as 70 percent on lighting.

Gejdenson also said he was skeptical about power company claims that "brownouts" — periods of intentionally lowered voltage — may be necessary during peak periods this summer.

"Unless there is some unexpected shutdown of power facilities in the Northeast, we ought to be all right throughout the summer," he said.

assertions that brownouts may also be necessary over the next few years, Gejdenson said those were really additional arguments for increased emphasis on conservation.

Meehan criticized the Reagan administration for proposing reductions in conservation programs. "Conservation is becoming a relic of history and is no longer the focal point of our national energy policy," Meehan said.

Richard J. Grossi, executive vice president of United Illuminating Co., which serves the New Haven and Bridgeport areas, told the committee that national energy policy, at least on nuclear power issues, has become "ambiguous and obfuscated."

That has meant that state and local governments have been "fill[ing] the void created by a federal government which has been reluctant to set definitive nuclear energy policy."

"The result is, that there exist nuclear power plants built or near completion caught in local webs of contradictory and parochial infighting," Grossi said.

He referred specifically to the beleaguered Seabrook nuclear plant in New Hampshire, of which UI owns 17 percent and which has been completed but has not yet been licensed to operate.

He said Massachusetts officials opposed to Seabrook have been able to delay its operation by not approving evacuation plans for the plant.

He called on Gejdenson, and Congress as a whole, to change federal regulations governing such plans so there could not be "the setting of national policy by a single state."

Investors like to give their own advice

By John Cunniff The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Millions of investors believe they are their own best fiduciaries, who believe that they believe that no broker or mutual fund manager or financial adviser can offer better advice than their own.

The activities of these individual investors are sometimes overlooked in reports about the securities markets, simply because the major sources of information, such as brokers, are part of the institutionalized marketplace.

The ranks of individual investors are growing, in spite of a contrary notion spread by some institutions and professional advisers that individuals are not competent to manage their own portfolios.

Individual and club membership in the National Association of Investors Corp., Royal Oak, Mich., exceeds 100,000, as does membership in the American Association of Individual Investors, based in Chicago.

Many thousands of other investors handle their own portfolios through monthly or quarterly contributions to dividend reinvestment plans, in which shares are purchased directly from companies, most of them blue chip.

Club and individual members of the NAIC — which once stood for National Association of Investment Clubs — regularly discuss their ability to outperform market averages and many of the professional investment advisers.

Using their clubs, generally made up of about 15 members, as forums to exchange views, many individuals have been able over the years to finance houses, college educations, businesses, vacations and retirements.

The AAI grew swiftly to more than 100,000 members although it was founded only eight years ago by James Cloonan, a former college professor and now its chairman.

Cloonan says it is based on the belief that "you, as an individual investor, can obtain better investment results than most professionals — if you are willing to spend the necessary time and exert the necessary effort."

According to Cloonan, "we have grown because more and more investors are tired of inadequate investment advice — because they want to take control of their own personal destiny — because they want better investments results."

One technique used in seeking those better results is to study smaller companies, whose shares are seldom purchased by the big institutions and which, in fact, are all but ignored by most securities analysts.

When well-managed, some of these companies have sharp growth curves. But even companies that experience modest rather than spectacular growth may offer greater rewards. Why? Because as they grow they are "discovered" by the institutions and recommended to their clients.

Cloonan offers this illustration of investing small rather than large:

If 60 years ago you had invested $1,000 in the stocks that make up the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, you would now have about $280,000, excluding taxes. (Capital gains taxes are paid only when shares are sold).

If, on the other hand, you had invested the $1,000 in a portfolio of smaller companies, says Cloonan, you would now have almost $1.25 million dollars. Time is important in his philosophy, and diligence too.

"Suppose through improved decision making you raised your average annual yield by only 3 percent?" he asks. "In 25 years, the individual earning 12 percent will have twice the assets of an individual earning 9 percent."

Money given for play about AIDS

HARTFORD (AP) — A major insurance company has awarded a $35,000 grant to a theater company for production of a play about AIDS. The Connecticut Mutual Life Foundation, the corporate foundation of CM Alliance, will contribute $25,000 and the American Council of Life Insurance will add $10,000, officials said Tuesday. CM Alliance includes the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co.

TheaterWorks, a non-profit company, will produce the play "AIDS" winner of the 1985 Obie Award, for a three-week run at the University of Hartford's Lincoln Theater in October.

"As is," the story of a young man's struggle to accept his disease and of how it transforms his relationships with other people, played on Broadway before going on a national tour.

"Ticket proceeds from the performances will go to AIDS Project-Hartford, which provides care to AIDS sufferers and educates people who are at a high risk of contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The program is the first major corporate-community project on AIDS in Hartford, CM Alliance said.

Warrants could have some value even if company is sold

QUESTION: About three years ago, I purchased 400 warrants in a company that has since been taken over by another company. These warrants expire this November. I have talked to three stock brokers with whom I have done business and none could tell me what to do with the warrants.

I paid only $2 for each warrant so the loss will not send me to the poorhouse. But I would like to know if I should present the warrant certificate to my grandchildren for possible future antique value, cook hamburgers with them or donate them to some charitable institution. I guess they would make a tax deduction for you. Can you offer some advice in a case such as this?

ANSWER: The natural first instinct is to find out if the warrants have any market value. If they do, you can sell and, on your 1987 income tax return, take a capital loss equal to the difference between the $200 you paid and the lesser amount you receive. We're assuming you won't be able to sell at a profit, thereby realizing a taxable capital gain.

Also, if the warrants have value, you can give them to a charity and, on your return, take a deduction for their market value on the date you make the gift. But if they are worthless, you get no charitable deduction.

In the worst case scenario of those warrants having no value, you can take a capital loss of the entire $200 you paid for them. You're supposed to report a capital loss for worthless securities on a income tax return you file for the year in which they lost all their value. If that happened to your warrants in 1984, '85 or '86, you should file an amended return for that year. To claim a loss on worthless securities, you're allowed to file an amended return back for seven years.

It's possible those warrants will have some very small market value in right up to their expiration date. In that case, you can report your $200 capital loss for 1987.

If the three brokers can't come up with any information, contact the company that acquired the company in which you bought the warrants.

QUESTION: When I told my broker I wanted to sell a covered call option, he asked about my financial net worth, income, outstanding debts, mortgage, etc. I told him it was none of his business, but he insisted—politely, of course. He doesn't pry like that when I buy securities and pay on the line. I never asked him to be my "big brother." It seems to me I should be able to do what I like with stock I own and, being a big boy, I can make my own decisions. I realized my broker didn't make this rule, but it galls me.

ANSWER: Let's hope you weren't too harsh on your broker. He was only doing his job by adhering to the "suitability rule" all practitioners of his trade are supposed to follow.

That rule aims at preventing brokerage customers who can't afford to take risks from moving into extra-chancy situations. It also covers the broker.

Writing a covered call option is not really risky. When you do that, you sell a option giving the buyer the right to purchase 100 shares of stock you own at a fixed price for a set period of time. You collect a premium when you sell the option. Many investors do that to increase their income.

Your only "risk" is that the option will be exercised and you'll have to sell the stock. If it rises to or above the price named in the call option contract. But if that happens, you'll get your price.
