Caprilands reduces fire threat

The latest report on the progess of safety measures being taken at the Caprilands Herb Farm in Coventry is encouraging.

Raymond Cooper, the Coventry fire marshal, says the operators of the herb farm have made some changes in the 200-year-old house at the farm. He had found the house unsafe for the number of people who visit it

Cooper came in for heavy criticism when he first sought to get fire safety violations corrected. Adelma Simmons, who has operated the farm for 40 years as an attraction for visitors and as an educational mecca for berb enthusiasts, has been understandably reluctant to make changes in the house. She feared that such changes would destroy the house's historic integrity and she won the support of many people who saw Cooper's attempts to enforce code compliances as arbitrary and high-handed.

But the house is a place of assembly in which numbers of people gather. The dangers are real dangers, not bureaucratic fancies. Cooper eventually turned the matter over to state authrorities.

Cooper accompanied state officials on an inspection last week and some changes have been made. Doors swing outward, not inward. An exit door has been added and some sheetrock put in place.

More changes are needed. There must be some ways to reconcile the desire to keep the house in as authentic a state as possible and still provide safety for visitors. Caprilands is apparently making the attempt now to find that happy medium.

It is really too bad the effort did not start earlier, when Cooper first called attention to the problems.

Pay the doctor or pay the undertaker

We're back at that time of year when newspapers, radio stations, firehouses and the United States Marines are out passing the hat for the needy. Toys for tots, food for the homeless and Santas with beards held on by elastic strings ringing their bells on the street corner. In that vein one of the television networks did a story the other day about a little boy, around 7 years old, dying of leukemia. He needed a bone marrow operation to save his life but the family didn't have the money. Evidently they, the neighbors and others in the community did everything they could to raise the necessary funds. Even the little boy helped. There were shots of the kid trying to perform at a fund-raiser on his behalf. In the end, though much money was raised, the drive fell $30,000 short and the boy died. This was followed with stock footage of the mother saying that the government had condemned her child to death because it had been ruled he was not eligible for Medicare. Just like a mother to talk that way.

The mother was lachrymose, bitter and unappreciative of the blessings the country had showered on her. She did not seem to realize that America is a free country, not a give away country. You have a right to free speech but you don't have a right to a doctor when you're sick. That is a privilege that you must earn, and, of course, some ple, like the dead boy, failed to earn enough. Like the man says, pay the doctor or pay the

Interestingly enough, in an oblique way the communist Mikhail Gorbachev brought the matter up on American television the other night

Nicholas Von Hoffman

Apparently one of the ways Russian politicians campaign for popularity rating and political support is to acquit themselves well on American television. In the course of doing so, the interviewer asked the inevitable human rights question, and Gorbachev, not at all discomforted by the topic, suggested that Russians may enjoy certain rights under Godless Marxist-Leninism which the little boy, perhaps, might have cherished.

In the Soviet Union, he hinted, access to medical care is regarded as a human right. A George Will might reply that ain't sayin' much because Russian medicine is only a step and a half away from unwashed hands and superstitious ignorance. There is a little doubt that Russian medicine is nferior to the best American medicine, but how many of us get the best treatment our medicine is able to give? The little boy didn't get any. He might have found actual treatment in the inferior Soviet medical system preferable to no treatment in the superior American oper

Time was when you heard a story like that of the little boy's death, you could console yourself with the thought that such things were infrequent and would soon be nonexistent. Now the signs are that in the coming years more people will be blocked out of some or all medical care. The growing shortage of nurses would, alone, promise an increasing scarcity, but as more employers cut down on health plan benefits or cut them out entirely, more people will be shocked to learn they are out of luck. If one of the curses of communism is the comfort of knowing that, regardless of how small your salary, you and or the members of your family are. no matter what, eligible for medical treatment, we will be spared that particular form of oppression for the foreseeable future. As we are often reminded, medical treatment or no, many Russians are hot to immigrate, but all that will give a sick American of modest means is a vague sense of superiority. Soviet atrocities in Afghanistan also may serve to make Americans with short memories feel politically virtuous, although the people conducting human rights rallies abroad do not attend meetings about how families at home ar to bear the costs of catastrophic illness. In the United States access to adequate medical car is not called a right, but an "entitlement," which smacks of selfishness and special interest lobbying. We have been told for a number of years now that it is the cost of entitlements which have put the country in the poor house. If we entitle dying children to medical care and they recover, their parents will want an entitlement for day care. The present system is much the best: If you get sick and your health insurance doesn't cover it, go beg

Answer to the deficit: Cut the fat

WASHINGTON - It is beginning to dawn on our prodigal politicians that they cannot go on running up the national debt. Government spending is too nigh and growing too fast. Something simply must be done to reduce the deficit and stabilize the overnment's finances — or the whole economy

Congress is under intense pressure, therefore, to reduce the deficit. But Congress is also under pressure not to cut back any government programs or projects. Most members don't really want to cut spending; they would rather increase taxes. Thereby, they can deflate the deficit and still keep on spending. Thus they can avoid the political heat that comes from cutting someone's pet

The federal government, meanwhile, is in serious financial trouble. One way or the other, the taxpayers will have to bail it out. The government must raise taxes, cut its spending or print more dollars. A tax increase will come out of the taxpayers' pockets. A spending cut will reduce their government services. More dollars will decrease the value of the dollars they own.

But there is another simple, painless solution by which Congress can reduce the deficit on schedule - indeed, it can double the reduction - without increasing taxes. All Congress needs to do is slash government waste. This won't aggrieve anyone except the bureaucrats and beneficiaries who will have to give up some of their extravagances. But of course, these are the people who it doesn't want to

There is a conspiracy in Washington. therefore, to condition the taxpayers for a tax hike. They have been told there's no option to swallowing the bitter pill. For the federal spendthrifts want the public to believe that no pork is left in the budget, that no waste can be eliminated

As co-chairman of the Grace Commission, I can tell you this is a lie. Enough fat can be slashed, enough extravagance eliminated, enough cash saved from going down the drain, to meet the scheduled deficit reductions without raising taxes Under the leadership of industrialist J. Peter Grace, the Grace Commission has demonstrated its ability to locate, identify and eliminate waste. Last year, President Reagan ordered the Office of Management and Budget to check how many of the commission's cost-cutting recommendations had been implemented and how much money had been saved. The OMB conducted a survey of all government agencies. Its conclusion: The Grace ommission has saved an astounding $69.5 billion. This incredible savings reduced the deficit by 28 percent in the last fiscal year. Yet no just obligation went unpaid; no federal program was mpaired. All that happened was that a few bureaucrats lost some promotions and privileges, and the federal government was left a little more lean and efficient So the good news is that the Grace Commission has already eliminated nearly $70 billion in waste from the federal budget. The bad news is that twice that amount of waste has been uncovered but still hasn't been eliminated.

The commission estimates that the federal government squanders an additional $100 billion in small wasteful habits. All this prodigious waste drives up the deficit and contributes to the government's financial insecurity. Footnote: You can help fight government waste by urging your representative or senator to join the Grace Caucus, which is trying to implement the Grace Commission's recommendations. The caucus is headed by Rep. Beau Boulter, R-Tex. and Buddy Roemer, D-La.; also Sens. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., and Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz. They fear America is in mortal danger of an economic catastrophe if the government's finances aren't put in order.

Tourism shifts east

Young Americans who used to loll around the cafes of Paris or theaters of London are drifting into Eastern Europe, thanks to glasnost, the depressed dollar and poor economic conditions in the communist bloc. The currencies of most communist countries are in worse shape than the dollar, prompting a brisk black market for dollars in almost every communist capital.

The "overcoat bankers" give rates far beyond the government exchange, making meals, show tickets and local booze (and drugs) cheap. Food in workers' restaurants and lodging in private homes is less expensive today than it was in Rome or Munich when the dollar was at a premium two years ago. Communist governments look the other way when money is traded on the black market. Even though it's against the law, it brings hard currency into the country - assuming the dollar can still be counted as hard currency.

House-Senate negotiators agree on plan on pipeline

WASHINGTON — A compromise on the controversial licensing review for the Iroquois pipeline, a project that would bring Canadian natural gas to Connecticut, New York and New Jersey, was reached in the waning hours of the year's congressional business.

NEW YORK - Keith Clearwater and Laura Davies have been named rookies of the year by Golf Digest magazine. Clearwater won $320,007 and two tournaments in 1987, the Colonial National Invitation at Fort Worth, Texas, and the Centel Classic at Tallahassee, Fla. Davies' biggest title of the year was

Yankees sign ex-Met Santana

NEW YORK - The New York Yankees announced Monday that the club had reached agreement on a two-year contract with shortstop Rafael Santana, who was obtained from the New York

Mets in a five-player trade earlier this month. The Yankees also announced that contracts were not tendered to veterans Mike Easler and Ron Kittle, making the outfielders free agents. The move enables the Yankees to attempt to sign the players for lower salaries than the maximum 20 percent cut permitted in the major league agreement

Golfer Sikes is dead at 58

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. - Dan Sikes, a consistent moneywinner on the PGA Tour and Senior Tour for 27 years, died following complications after stomach surgery. He was 58. Janet Evans sets swim record

ORLANDO, Fla. - Janet Evans, the smallest American swimming champion in 20 years, continued to win big Monday night as she set a U.S. Swimming Open meet record in the 100-meter individual medley. Evans' time of 4 minutes, 39.75 seconds, missed Tracy

The 5 foot-4 inch, 97-pound, Evans said that it was difficult to swim her best race after the hoopla surrounding her world record in the 400-meter freestyle Sunday night. "I just want to go home and get into the Christmas spirit," she said. She will have to wait one more night to go home, however, since she is entered in the 800-meter freestyle on Tuesday night

Abernethy-Sherrill reach settlement

ATLANTA - Former Atlanta sports agent Jim Abernethy said on Monday he has agreed to a settlement with Texas A&M football coach Jackie Sherrill on the release of his contract with two Aggie players who have lost their eligibility.

Abernethy said he signed a release in lieu of receiving a settlement of $5,600 for money he gave to A&M fullback Melvin Collins and $1,500 to A&M offensive tackle Tony Bartley. Abernethy stood by his previous statement that he spent $15,000 to $20,000 in expenses on the players.

"I'm not out to ruin these guys," said Abernethy in reaching the settlement, "Technically, this is the amount I can document at this time. There are so many receipts and papers to go through .. Morris, Tigers close to agreement

NEW YORK - Jack Morris is getting closer to reaching an agreement on a new contract with the Detroit Tigers and Charlie Leibrandt may soon break off negotiations with the Kansas City Royals, the agent for the pitchers said Monday. Dick Moss, who represents the two pitchers, said Monday that

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Kansas City Royals are taking a hard line for the second straight year with first baseman Steve Balboni by not offering him a contract.

By not offering Balboni a contract, the Royals can cut his 1987 salary of $625,000 by more than 20 percent if they do eventually sign him for next season. The risk is that Balboni, who turns 31 next month, now becomes a free agent and can sign with another

Manchester High School senior Charlie Holcomb has been skiing - CYNDI TARBELL been on a ski team. The ski team that he is a member of is the Ski Sundown Race Team. It is to this team that Holcomb devotes much of his time, and he considers it to be one of the most important things in his life. As soon as Ski Sundown opens for the ski season, Holcomb will be training there every day after school, and on weekends when he does not have a race. He has this season, in Vermont, in November. He did well in this race, and hopes to do even better in the other races that he will take part in this winter, about thirty in all. By placing well in these races, Ho comb hopes to make his way into the Eastern Ski Champion later in the year. From there frontrunners enter into the Na tional Junior Olympics. Producer watches those stories

By Jerry Buck

LOS ANGELES - When he took over NBC's "Hunter," producer Roy Huggins had the same philosophy as when he started in television 35 years ago — emphasize the story.

Huggins was asked by his former protege Stephen J. Cannell, to take over "Hunter" two years ago so Cannell and his partner, Frank Lupo, could devote more time to other projects "Every producer makes a lot of changes," Huggins said. "And every producer works differently. In the case of 'Hunter,' I did change the kind of stories they were doing. My approach

When Huggins joined "Hunter," the detective series was languishing in the ratings. Its ranking improved the second season after NBC moved it to Saturdays. "Hunter" is moving again nex week, to Tuesdays in a swap of time periods with "J.J. Starbuck.

After the first season, "the show had gotten what Steve calls a 'mercy pickup,'' said Huggins. 'He had a very good relationship with NBC, particularly because of 'The A-Team.' I'd stayed in touch with Steve after I retired in 1980. I thought that was it for me. Steve had worked with me on 'The Rockford Files.' I created it, and he wrote the pilot."

Huggins' first television series was "Cheyenne" in 1955. He followed with "Maverick," "77 Sunset Strip," "The Fugitive," "The Virginian," "Alias Smith & Jones," "Baretta," "The Rockford Files" and "Blue Thunder." Huggins had been a novelist and magazine writer and got into the motion picture business when he began writing screenplays from his books. He stopped work on two books to return to
