Democrats make state a battlefield

By Judd Everhart and Brent Loymon
The Associated Press

Jesse Jackson beseeched Connecticut Democrats not to let him down in their primary this week after his stunning boost in the Michigan caucuses, while a smarting Michael S. Dukakis reminded supporters that no candidate deserves to be anointed.

Jackson, Dukakis and Albert Gore Jr., the frontrunners for the Democratic presidential nomination, stormed the state on Sunday and all campaigned in the state today on the eve of the Connecticut primary.

Jackson visited a soup kitchen in Middletown while Dukakis asked about 200 people at a senior citizens center in New Britain to vote for him. Gore greeted commuters at railroad stations in Milford and Stamford before leaving for New York.

The fight for the nomination became even closer after Jackson won the Michigan caucuses, outpolling Dukakis by nearly a 2-1 margin, and made Connecticut's primary, which appeared once likely to be a ho-hum affair, the next test of his appeal.

"Connecticut, don't let me down," Jackson told 1,500 supporters on the green in New Haven. "You can make the difference. Your hope can make all the difference in the world."

Jackson appealed both for votes and for money at his stops in Stamford, Bridgeport, New Haven and Hartford on Sunday.

"If my opponents had my budget, they would have surrendered long ago. If I had their budget, they couldn't compete," Jackson said, estimating that he had been outspent nearly 50-1.

Dukakis joined youngsters dressed in ethnic costumes in a dance during a Greek independence day celebration at the temporary home of St. Barbara's Greek Orthodox Church in New Haven and greeted senior citizens at a housing complex.

He was accompanied by a phalanx of state Democratic powers who are supporting him: Gov. William A. O'Neill, Sen. Christopher Dodd, state party Chairman John F. Droney Jr., Rep. Barbara Kennelly of the 1st District, and Mayor Biagio Di-Lieto of New Haven.

As governor of neighboring Massachusetts and the candidate enjoying the support of the Democratic party machinery, Dukakis is the strong favorite in Tuesday's primary, where 52 of the 63 delegates to the national convention are at stake.

Dukakis acknowledged that he had suffered a setback in Michigan, where he finished second and far behind Jackson, but, speaking in Greek, he reminded supporters of a proverb often quoted by his immigrant father that says, "The sweetest honey is made only slowly."

"This is a very, very, volatile and unpredictable business," said Dukakis. "To try and define or anoint someone as the frontrunner is something I don't think anyone should try to indulge in."

Today he told the senior citizens in New Britain that he wants to make the Connecticut primary "another giant step on the road to the presidency."

Gore, the U.S. senator from Tennessee looking for a Northern victory, said the Michigan results

FROZEN FASCINATION — Tom Meisner, principal of Bennet Junior High School, fascinated Matthew Delphia of Windsor on Saturday at a time as Meisner joined several other celebrities at the Tri City Plaza in Vernon to model for charity. Among the beneficiaries were a shelter for the homeless and Newington Children's Hospital.

He cracked a smile, just once, when a little boy in a fireman's hat came up and peered at him to make sure he was the real thing.

But other than that one smile, Bennet Junior High School Principal Tom Meisner made a fine mannequin.

On Saturday at the Tri City Plaza in Vernon, Meisner and six other people, including Vernon Mayor Steven Marcham, Manchester Herald Advertising Director Denise Roberts, Vernon principals, a local radio personality and state Sen. Marie Herbst stood in the windows of plaza stores, modeling spring fashions and accessories for local charities.

They were joined by professional freeze models from the John Casablanca agency in Springfield, Mass., who gave the celebrity models a 15-minute lesson in freeze modeling before they went out, said Sandi Garfield, marketing consultant for Tri City Merchants.

The celebrity models seemed to learn fast.

They stood perfectly — well almost perfectly — still for two, 15-minute sessions, despite some good-natured heckling from shoppers at the plaza.

But until the small crowds started gathering at each window, some of the

Arraignment slated today in '87 killing

By Andrew Yurkovsky
Manchester Herald

The man charged in connection with last year's murder of Lauren G. Anderson, 26, was scheduled to be arraigned this morning on felony murder charges in Manchester Superior Court.

Epifanio Vasquez, 35, a former Hartford resident, was transported from New York to the Manchester lockup Sunday by Connecticut authorities.

State officials had requested extradition for Vasquez last year, but the process had been slowed because Vasquez faced felony drug charges in connection with his April 28, 1987, arrest by Rochester, N.Y., police, authorities said.

He was to be charged today with the January 1987 shotgun slaying of Anderson, reportedly a former girlfriend, in her Congress Street apartment.

Francis Sheehan, press secretary for New York Gov. Mario Cuomo's office, said today that Cuomo had signed a warrant for Vasquez's extradition on Aug. 10, 1987. The warrant was held in abeyance, however, because of the pending drug charges.

Sheehan said that the court threw out those drug charges on March 9 and that the Monroe County District Attorney's office was seeking reinstatement of the charges. Vasquez has waived his extradition rights, according to Sheehan, and is being held on $250,000 cash bail to face the murder charges here.

William Brongo, a prosecutor for the Monroe County District Attorney's office, said that the charges against Vasquez had been dismissed because of technicalities involving the procurement of evidence. Vasquez, who police said gave the fictitious name of Efrain Massa when arrested in New York, had been charged with illegal possession of a controlled substance and possession of a hypodermic needle.

Anderson, was found dead Jan. 27, 1987, in her apartment at 82A Congress St. Police said she was shot with a single bullet, which struck her left eye and entered her body. Manchester police have said Vasquez and Anderson may have been having an argument involving drugs.

Police spokesman Gary Wood said today that the arrest warrant for Vasquez has been sealed.

Watching calories has certainly paid off for Charlotte Granville of Deer Run Trail.

On Saturday, Granville's reduced-calorie apple pie, spiked with orange marmalade and decorated with pie crust leaves, took second prize in a contest to find the best two-crust apple pie in Connecticut.

She went home from the contest, held at the Salem Cross Inn of West Brookfield, Mass., with a microwave oven, a pewter pie server, a $25 gift certificate and a pottery mug. "I feel like it's Christmas!" said Granville, as she packed up the prizes.

Manchester voters who normally vote at the Bowers School will have to go to the Bentley Center, the former Hollister Street School, at 57 Hollister Street Tuesday to cast their ballots in the presidential primary.

The polling place for Voting District 2, has been changed to the Bentley Center because the Bowers building layout poses problems, particularly for handicapped persons.

The office of the registrars of voters could not determine this morning how many Republicans and Democrats are eligible to vote Tuesday. A spokesman for the office said many previously unaffiliated voters have enrolled in parties and a number of new voters have registered.

The large majority of phobics can be helped or cured

First in a series

By Denise Fortino
The Associated Press

Insidious, baffling and often bizarre, they are the most common mental health disorders in the United States — yet also among the most frequently overlooked and rarely treated. Up to 24 million Americans — about one in every 10 people — are afflicted by phobias of varying severity at some point during their lives. They can sometimes be so disabling that their victims are virtually imprisoned, unable to carry on normal, everyday activities.

A phobia is not just a very intense fear, but rather an entirely different experience, observes Dr. Manuel Zane, M.D., director of the phobia clinic at The White Plains (N.Y.) Hospital Medical Center and co-author of "Your Phobia" (Warner). While fear is a normal, appropriate response to some real or imagined danger, a phobia is a persistent, overwhelming and uncontrollable dread of an object or situation in the absence of any threat.

Phobic people are gripped by feelings of "total emotional disorganization, a sensation that they are going out of control, that they are at the edge of final, irrevocable disaster," Dr. Zane explains.

Sometimes phobias develop after a series of sudden "panic attacks." They become bouts of intense anxiety that strike with a barrage of frightful physical sensations — rapid, shallow breathing, palpitations, trembling, sweating, dizziness, nausea and weakness or tingling in the limbs. Panic attacks may be provoked by a specific phobia or they may occur spontaneously, for no apparent reason.

In either case, the symptoms are so unnerving that budding phobics soon learn to fear their recurrence. Ruled by anticipation anxiety, they imagine themselves going berserk, fainting, screaming hysterically or even dying when confronted with whatever terrorizes them.

"For many people, it's really not the place or circumstance that sets off future panic attacks, but rather the fear of fear itself," notes Dr. David Paskewitz, a psychologist at the University of Maryland Medical School in Baltimore. If their original outburst occurred in a shopping mall or while crossing a bridge, for example, panic-stricken people are likely to shun these and similar settings the next time to avoid experiencing the same physical reactions and tormenting thoughts. Ultimately, the areas or things that they consider off limits may be spread by association until their range of activities becomes very restricted.

One woman had several spontaneous panic attacks while on the train en route to work. Thereafter, she chose to travel by car or bus instead. But soon she feared the same symptoms might overtake her in these places, too, which led her to accept a job within walking distance of her home. Not long after, she felt uneasy and vulnerable even while shopping in a neighborhood store.

"My world became more and more limited until I was nearly immobilized," she admits, "unable to leave home without a sense that I'd completely fall apart."

According to The American Psychiatric Association, phobias fall into three main categories: simple, social and agoraphobia. As its name suggests, the first kind is usually aimed at something fairly concrete, such as cats, insects, thunderstorms, elevators or flying.

Social phobias involve a dread of being watched and evaluated by other people and inviting their ridicule or disapproval. Thus, "public" activities, including reading aloud, making a speech, attending parties, eating out or performing

Thoughts

Today Christians begin the "Week of weeks." Many parishes have daily services this week to mark the progression of the Passion of Christ. It is a "Holy Week" for all believers to take time to follow the Way of the Cross to Calvary and to the empty tomb of Easter Sunday. On this first day of Holy Week we might well consider how Jesus first came to Bethany to celebrate his last Passover in Jerusalem.

JOB SEEKERS — About 1,500 people were estimated to have attended Job Fair 88 Saturday at Manchester Community College, nearly triple last year's attendance. About 75 businesses recruited potential employees while services such as resume writing tips were offered.

Job Fair lures 1,500 people

By Nancy Concelmon Manchester Herald Saturday was a beautiful day for 75 area businesses. It rained most of the day, sometimes hard, but neither the businesses nor the estimated 1,500 job hunters who turned up for Job Fair 88 at Manchester Community College seemed to mind.

In fact, the rain may have helped boost attendance at the fair, held in the Love Program Center of the college and sponsored by the college and the East of the River Chamber of Commerce Association. The association consists of chambers from Manchester, East Hartford, Enfield, Vernon-Rockville and South Windsor.

Then again, weather may not have had anything to do with it, according to Greater Manchester Chamber of Commerce president Anne Flint.

"I think people who are looking for jobs are very serious," she said at the fair. Whatever their reasons, a record number of people attended the fair, held from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Free seminars on resume writing and interviewing were also available at the fair. Last year's fair featured 54 businesses and attracted about 500 people.

This year, Flint said that more than 200 people filled out survey forms at one of the doors within the first hour. Many more may have come through other doors, she said.

The survey forms asked people what type of jobs they were looking for, salary range and background information. The forms "tell companies what kind of applicants we have in the area," Flint said. "Obviously, we're an attractive area."

The applicants at the fair Saturday were as varied as the types of businesses. The visitors covered a wide range of ages. Some dressed casually, some brought their families along, others wore suits and carried briefcases full of resumes.

They visited tables manned by representatives of companies from Manchester and all over the state, including the Hartford Insurance Group, Bob's Stores Inc., Manchester Memorial Hospital, the Department of Mental Health, Aetna Life & Casualty, Savings Bank of Manchester and others.

Many of the tables had a list of available positions, which ranged from clerical to management, to police officers to drug counselors.

"It's a very diverse crowd," said Carl Ochnio, a coordinator for the event and director of the Career Services Placement Office at the college. "I think the companies we have reflect that."

"Hi. Looking for something a little different?" asked Steve Garland, director of the Hartford chapter of the Connecticut Citizens Action Group.

Garland, like many of the people at the tables, didn't hesitate to put passing visitors toward his table. CCAG is looking for people to fill entry-level positions in community outreach and fund-raising, he said. On the table, he had a list of interested people and their phone numbers. Garland said his year was CCAG's first at the job fair.

"We've gotten a really good response," he said. "Other businesses that participated in last year's fair were pleased with the attendance this year."

"I think we're doing a lot better this year than last year," said town Personnel Director Linda Parry. "We've just had a lot more people this year. We've given out a lot of applications."

Parry said that no positions were currently open in the town but would be in the future in the maintenance, planning and police departments.

"We're going out for police recruitment very soon," she said. "We're working on specifications and getting people to submit applications right now. With police officers, we really like to have a list we can draw from."

Parry was at the table for the town of Manchester with police officer Larry Wilson, who was talking to a person interested in joining the police department. Wilson asked questions about the person's education and experience and told him what to expect during interviews and tests for the department.

While some other businesses were ready to give interviews that day, like the town, some of the other businesses didn't have positions immediately open, but used the fair to recruit potential employees for the future.

"Right now, we're fully staffed," said Joyce Trainer, personnel administrator for the Savings Bank of Manchester. But, Trainer said, retail bankers, customer service representatives and tellers will be needed in the future. She said this is the bank's second

License plan rapped

1991 date disturbs some town directors

By Andrew Yurkovsky Manchester Herald The proposed budget includes $1,146 for tuition toward Camosci's degree.

"I'm wondering why he's concentrating on this when we need that more," Fogarty said. Camosci answered, "I'm trying to get this thing out of the way to have it in my hip pocket."

Town plans must be approved with the seal of a licensed professional engineer. That duty now is being carried out by James Weber, the assistant town engineer.

When the Board of Directors created the position of director of engineering services last year, Republican Directors Geoffrey Naab and Ronald Oesella sought a specific deadline by which the holder of the post would receive total $6,194,776, an 11.8 percent increase over this year's appropriation of $5,303,200.

Directors James F. "Dutech" Fogarty and Barbara B. Weinberg questioned during the workshop the commitment of the engineering services director to become a licensed professional engineer in the state. Fogarty asked why the director, William Camosci, was pursuing a master's degree in management at the town's expense rather than the license.

Pilot recycling plan is urged

By Andrew Yurkovsky Manchester Herald The town manager's proposed budget for 1988-89 includes $62,200 for recycling, up from $19,000 appropriated in the current fiscal year. Also included in the budget is $55,000 for a vehicle for collection of recyclables.

O'Connor said the administration has not decided whether to purchase the vehicle or whether to have hauling handled by a contractor such as Sanitary Refuse.

The state law, passed last year, prohibits a landfill from accepting designated recyclables after Jan. 1, 1991. Those items are newspaper, cardboard, office paper, magazines, glass, metal containers, scrap metal, car batteries, crankcase oil and leaves and brush.

O'Connor said that only paper, glass and metal containers would be accepted for the pilot program in order to avoid confusion.

"To try to educate everybody at once is not going to work," he said.

The town set aside collection areas at the town landfill for glass bottles, newspaper and used motor oil in 1971. At present, the town sets newprint to Lydall and Foulds for about $10 per ton. Metal containers are hauled away by Environmental Maintenance of Waterbury, which does not pay for them. The highway department hauls away glass to Diamond-Bathurst of Danville, which pays $19 per ton for the material.

O'Connor said that the town should reach an agreement for buyers and haulers of recyclables as soon as possible. If the town waits too long, he said, the glut of recyclables from other communities could make it difficult to get rid of them.

Hospitals plead for rates

HARTFORD — The state Commission on Hospitals and Health Care is hearing the plea for permission to charge higher rates from Connecticut hospitals financially strapped by the high costs of treating AIDS patients and a nursing shortage.

For hospitals in particular — Mount Sinai Hospital in Hartford, Bridgeport Hospital, Charlotte Hungerford Hospital in Torrington, and Rockville General Hospital Inc. in Vernon — have asked for special consideration because of their particularly dire financial circumstances.

"I was desperate for help a few years ago and there are an awful lot of guys out there who need help," said Hank Schieb of Winsted, for whose daughter, Brandie, now 8, the Brandie Schieb Children's Fund is named. "I got my break, now I want to do what I can."

Three years after the fund was started to help Brandie, it has raised a total of about $45,000 and has only $25,000 in its treasury.

The fund, administered by Vietnam Veterans Agent Orange Victims Inc. of Stamford, has already helped nearly $20,000 for two operations for Brandie, who will need much more reconstructive surgery.

Her father, however, owns a garage and hasn't been able to buy insurance.

A child in New Britain and another in California who have birth defects have also been helped by the fund. But organizers said thousands more need help.

Support for the fund has come from people who sponsored car washes, bake sales, and concerts. A group of businessmen in the Hartford area donated $8,000 they raised in a weight-loss contest. A Hartford doctor raised $9,000 with four concerts he organized.

Frank McCarthy, president of the veterans organization and one of the fund's founders, said he has called corporations seeking money, but his calls aren't even answered. He thinks that's because of the controversy surrounding Agent Orange.

"Here we are in a mini-corporate capital and we haven't received one corporate donation," McCarthy said. "We've got $1 million in a minute if we wanted to raise a monument or anything like that with Vietnam because being a Vietnam veteran is very in-

BRANDIE AND DAD — Brandie Schieb and her father, Hank Schieb, sit together in their Winsted home. A group of Vietnam veterans started a fund several years ago to help her.

Agent Orange to clear plant growth around their positions so the enemy couldn't hide.

He and his wife, Michele, also have another child, son Mike, 6, who apparently doesn't have any medical problems.

"We were told the stuff was harmless and we used it a lot," Schieb said. "Maybe it wasn't Agent Orange, but it was something over there" that caused his and Brandie's medical troubles, he said.

The U.S. Supreme Court let die on Jan. 11 some but not all of the lawsuits filed by Vietnam veterans against seven manufacturers of Agent Orange.

The court let stand rulings that the manufacturers as military contractors are immune from being sued over the alleged health effects of the herbicide.

The judges acted in three of the five Agent Orange cases pending before them. No indication was given when the court would act in the remaining cases or whether they would be granted a new trial.

Some 300 veterans involved in two of the cases are among those who were not involved in the class-action lawsuit that ended in a $180 million settlement with chemical manufacturers in 1984. There have been estimates that more than 120,000 people eventually may claim benefits under that settlement.

Brandie Schieb has long suffered the taunts of other youngsters. Her parents said she used to get off the school bus every day crying because other children were cruel to her.

Brandie, who still needs surgery on her jaw, one ear and the roof of her mouth, has become somewhat inured to the teasing. She tried out for her school play this year.

But children will always be cruel. "I took her sled riding and we saw a little boy from her school but she didn't want to talk to him," Michele Schieb said. "Later she told me that he was one of the boys who makes fun of her."

"I try to tell her that that's her time to talk to them so they get to know her. But I guess it's hard."

Brandie said her favorite subject in school is social studies and she aspires to be an acrobat. An A student, she wears a bright pink hairband over part of her hearing aide.

Jackson's victory forces party to take him seriously

By Donna Cassato
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Jesse Jackson's win in Michigan has sent a message to the Democratic Party that it can no longer ignore — at the rate he's going, Jackson just might wind up as its presidential nominee this fall.

Political analysts say Jackson's almost 2-1 victory over erstwhile front-runner Michael Dukakis in Saturday's Michigan caucus is a clear signal that the preacher-turned-politician is a very viable contender for the nomination.

Jackson, treated as an also-ran in 1984, has won in eight states so far this year — Michigan, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia, South Carolina, Alaska — and in Puerto Rico's non-binding contest.

The string of victories is forcing the party to re-examine the theory that a black cannot be nominated for president in 1988.

"The Democratic voters are sending a very strong message to the party," said Ann Lewis, a Democratic strategist and informal adviser to the Jackson campaign. "The quality of leadership is something they like and admire. This is a referendum on him and a referendum on his vision."

The campaign-watchers also said the Michigan win could translate into victories in other high-stakes contests, including the New York primary on April 19.

"I don't believe Dukakis can stop him," said David Garth, a New York media consultant who is working for Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr.'s campaign. "Unless something different happens."

New York, which has 255 delegates at stake, represents a

Time was running out for Gephardt

By William M. Welch
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrat Richard Gephardt, short of the "Michigan miracle" he so desperately needed, is leaving the presidential race just in time to file for re-election to his House seat.

Gephardt, who faced a Tuesday deadline to file as a candidate for re-election from his Missouri district, was formally announcing his decision at a Capitol Hill news conference later today.

A Missouri party leader, state Rep. Anthony D. Ribaldo, said that he had spoken with Gephardt Saturday night, and that Gephardt had indicated he would run for his seat from St. Louis.

"Dick Gephardt has informed me he'd like to proceed with his career in Congress," Ribaldo said.

Going into Michigan, Gephardt indicated it was a do-or-die state for him, but said he believed his prospects were good. Michigan is an industrial and union state that offered as receptive an audience for his tough talk on trade as Gephardt was likely to find anywhere.

Gephardt's last campaign speech was in Milwaukee, before Wisconsin Democrats who vote next Tuesday. He delivered it as the size of his Michigan defeat was becoming clear.

"All things considered, I'd rather be back in Des Moines," said Gephardt, who won Iowa's lead-off caucus but was unable to convert that into victories in other states aside from his own Missouri and in South Dakota.

Even in Iowa, Gephardt's candidacy was slipping away.

At county conventions there over the weekend, follow-ups to the precinct caucuses in February, Gephardt lost supporters to Dukakis, and Jesse Jackson gained ground as well.

"I think people see that Gephardt is pretty much out of it," said Tom Mann, a state senator from Des Moines who backed Jackson.

Gephardt had won 167 delegates through 31 contests, falling behind even Sen. Paul Simon, who was not a factor on Super Tuesday and only stayed in the race because he won his home state of Illinois.

His delegates, where people have actually been selected to fill those slots, would become free to do as they wished if Gephardt pulled out of the race. In states where no people had been selected yet to fill delegate slots won by Gephardt, his delegate share would be reallocated among the other candidates depending on state rules.

Gephardt surged to the top of the Democratic field in Iowa with savvy television ads and a tough, pointed campaign message blaming unfair trade practices for much of the nation's economic difficulty.

But his win in the Iowa caucuses Feb. 8 didn't provide the "bounce" that he hoped for in the states that followed.

Man kills wife, then self

WATERBURY — A 33-year-old Waterbury man shot his estranged wife to death before shooting and killing himself, police said.

Police said Douglas D. Pratt shot his wife, Robin, 29, several times with a rifle after returning home to retrieve his belongings around 4:30 p.m. Sunday. Neighbors said the two had recently separated.

Pratt, who worked as a truck driver, had also found a bedroom with gasoline, but he didn't light it, police said.

Angels may try again

NEW HAVEN — The leader of the anti-crime Guardian Angels says a lack of leadership led to the demise of the chapter in New Haven, but he hasn't ruled out trying again.

"In New Haven, we really couldn't build up a support network," Curtis Silwa, 34, of New York said in an interview last week. "It was an internal failure in the group to structure a program that could perpetuate itself."

"We were unable to develop local leadership that would have influence in the public-housing sector of New Haven, in the real urban areas. We really needed leaders who were a reflection of that community, but we didn't find them."

Silwa, who founded the Guardian Angels in 1979 in New York, says he now has more than 5,000 members in 60 cities. Attempts to establish chapters in Hartford and Bridgeport in the early 1980s failed.

Church-goer still waiting

WASHINGTON, Conn. — A 78-year-old Middlebury man says he hopes Easter will give rise to an invitation that has eluded him since a court order barred him from entering a church here.

John Steinmann, who is barred from worshipping at the First Congregational Church here because church elders said he was trying to molest women, was not invited inside Palm Sunday despite waiting patiently on public property across the street. He took up his post around 10 a.m. Sunday — a half-hour before the scheduled start of the service.

"There is a temporary injunction restraining me and I will not go against that temporary injunction," Steinmann said referring to a court order issued March 21.

Scouts face abuse problem

HARTFORD — Several Connecticut Boy Scout troops are launching programs aimed at confronting the problem of sexual abuse of Scouts in the wake of two arrests.

The arrest of a troop leader this month and the conviction of another last year — both on charges they sexually assaulted boys under their supervision — have focused attention on the issue.

Scout leaders throughout the state have taken different approaches to the problem. Some have confronted it by having discussions with their troops. Others follow a policy dictated by a national campaign that requires, among other things, that two adults accompany a troop on any outing.

Yale professor's book puts physicians on trial

NEW HAVEN (AP) — Many major surgical procedures are performed unnecessarily each year according to a book written by a Yale professor that puts the medical industry on trial.

Lowell S. Levin, a medical professor at Yale University, contends in his book "Medicine on Trial" that sloppiness and greed cause thousands of deaths and unnecessary operations each year. He contends the public has blind faith in a profession that is filled with corruption, incompetence, negligence and arrogance.

The authors note that medical equipment is often defective or misused, medications are incorrectly administered and useless diagnostic tests are performed.

In addition, Caesarian sections, coronary bypass surgery, hysterectomies and radical breast cancer surgery are often done unnecessarily, Levin said.

Hospital patients frequently get infections because the hospital staff is so lazy about handwashing and handling sterilized equipment.

All hospitals are guilty, but teaching hospitals, such as Yale-New Haven, are the greatest offenders, he said.

"You have so many caregivers in the kitchen," Levin said. "You have a lot sicker people (at teaching hospitals) so they're more vulnerable. Patient care is not the only thing on their agenda. Teaching and research are also on their agenda."

C. Thomas Smith, president of Yale-New Haven Hospital, said, "Since we haven't seen it, it's impossible to comment on the book's content."

The president of the hospital contacted by the New Haven Register refused to discuss Levin's book without first reading it.

Dr. Sherwin B. Nuland, a prominent New Haven surgeon, told the newspaper that Levin is "essentially throwing his credentials in the waste basket with a title like that."

"It hurts to do this," Levin said. "Who the hell wants to be the messenger of this kind of news? I would rather have a message of hope, but we have been living in a lotus land of pipe dreams about the high quality of health care in the U.S."

"Medicine on Trial" based on hundreds of studies and reports published in the past 20 years, claims that:

- One out of every five hospital patients leave the hospital with a condition they didn't have when they were admitted.
- Of 35 million operations performed each year, 5 million are unnecessary.
- One out of every six drug addicts is a physician.
- Up to 10,000 people a year die because anesthesia is incorrectly administered.
- Nearly 78,000 people develop cancer from medical and dental X-rays every year.

Nuland, an associate clinical professor of surgery at the Yale School of Medicine, said 20 percent to 30 percent of hospital patients experience "some event that might be called a disease who would not have had it, had they not been in the hospital."

School aid debate opens Capitol week

HARTFORD (AP) — A controversial new approach to distributing state education aid to cities and towns faces its first test when the General Assembly's Education Committee takes up the funding bill at a meeting today.

The measure would replace the current Guaranteed Tax Base school-aid formula, which has been on the books for the past nine years.

Among its more controversial provisions is one that takes into account a town's average scores on state mastery tests.

A town with a lower average would get more money.

The House may also take up the bill say it would reward failure. Proponents say its a fair way to help determine a town's school needs.

Also Monday, the tax-writing Finance, Revenue and Bonding Committee plans a hearing on a bill that would allow the city of Bridgeport to sell bonds to help get it out of a financial crisis.

On Wednesday, the House of Representatives is expected to take up a bill requiring schools to include information about AIDS in health and safety classes. State Rep. Eugene A. Migliaro Jr., R-Wolcott, plans to introduce an amendment allowing parents to keep their children out of those classes by sending in a note to the school.

The House may also take up a bill providing $38.7 million for state agencies that have overspent their budgets.

Political 'attack ads' will return this fall

By Jill Lawrence
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The "attack ads" of Super Tuesday have given way to a gentler spring, but experts say the most pointed ads of the presidential primary season will be back this fall — with a new twist.

"History" tells us that we're likely going to see Democrats being quoted against the Democratic nominee and Republicans quoted against the Republican nominee both in advertising and in speeches," says Kathleen Hall Jamieson, author of two books on political campaigns and advertising. "It's a classic move and this year both sides are vulnerable."

The outbreak of tough television talk started in New Hampshire, when Sen. Paul Simon questioned Rep. Richard Gephardt's consistency and Vice President George Bush doubted Senate GOP Leader Bob Dole "Senator Straddle."

The negativity was contagious. By Super Tuesday on March 8, almost all of the candidates had been both victims and perpetrators of attack ads by their intra-party rivals. The determination to survive the 20 contests that day stronger than any long-term concerns about the fall.

"When the others keep attacking you and it's going to cost votes, there's no choice but to fire back and worry about the consequences at a later date," says Dan Payne, a media adviser to Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis.

Some people are lucky. Bush's offhand remark in 1980 about Ronald Reagan's "voodoo economics" didn't keep him off the ticket and didn't keep the ticket from winning.

But Jamieson said that was because Jimmy Carter didn't use the remark effectively. "It could have been much more damaging than it was, but the Democrats didn't take advantage of it," she said.

Pre-convention squabbles have played a significant role in several recent elections. Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan won in 1964, 1972 and 1980 at least partly because they reminded voters of what had been said about their opponents in contested primaries.

In 1964, Jamieson said, Johnson reiterated the charges that George Romney, Nelson Rockefeller and William Scranton had made against Barry Goldwater. In 1972, Nixon's most effective ads against George McGovern "simply repeated the attacks Hubert Humphrey made against McGovern," she said.

And in 1980, Jamieson said, one

Opportunity to help pick a candidate

Voters have variety of reasons for enrolling in political parties. Surely one of the chief reasons must be to have a voice in the selection of political candidates for office.

When the opportunity comes along to help select the party's candidate for the highest elective office in the nation, it makes no sense for any party member to pass it up.

Admittedly the decision of any Connecticut voter about his party's candidate is diluted somewhat by the long and involved process of picking candidates. And the force of any Connecticut voter's individual choice can vary considerably according to the choices other voters in the nation have already made.

As the campaign has developed it appears almost certain that the Republican nominee will be Vice President George Bush. It also appears that the Democratic nominee ultimately will be chosen as the result of "brokering" at the national level.

There are rationalizations readily at hand for not bothering to vote in Tuesday's presidential primary. None of those rationalizations change the simple fact that a vote is more meaningful than a non-vote. If a vote tomorrow accomplishes no other purpose, it will be a bit of statistical evidence that voters want to have a direct voice in the selection of presidential candidates.

The polls are open from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m. Party members who do not vote Tuesday will be ignoring a major reason for belonging to a party.

Trying to spot American POWs in Vietnam

WASHINGTON — Nobody paid very much attention recently when the leaders of a group that believes U.S. soldiers are still being held captive in Southeast Asia announced that they were posting a $1 billion reward for the return of any prisoner left over from the Vietnam War.

One billion.

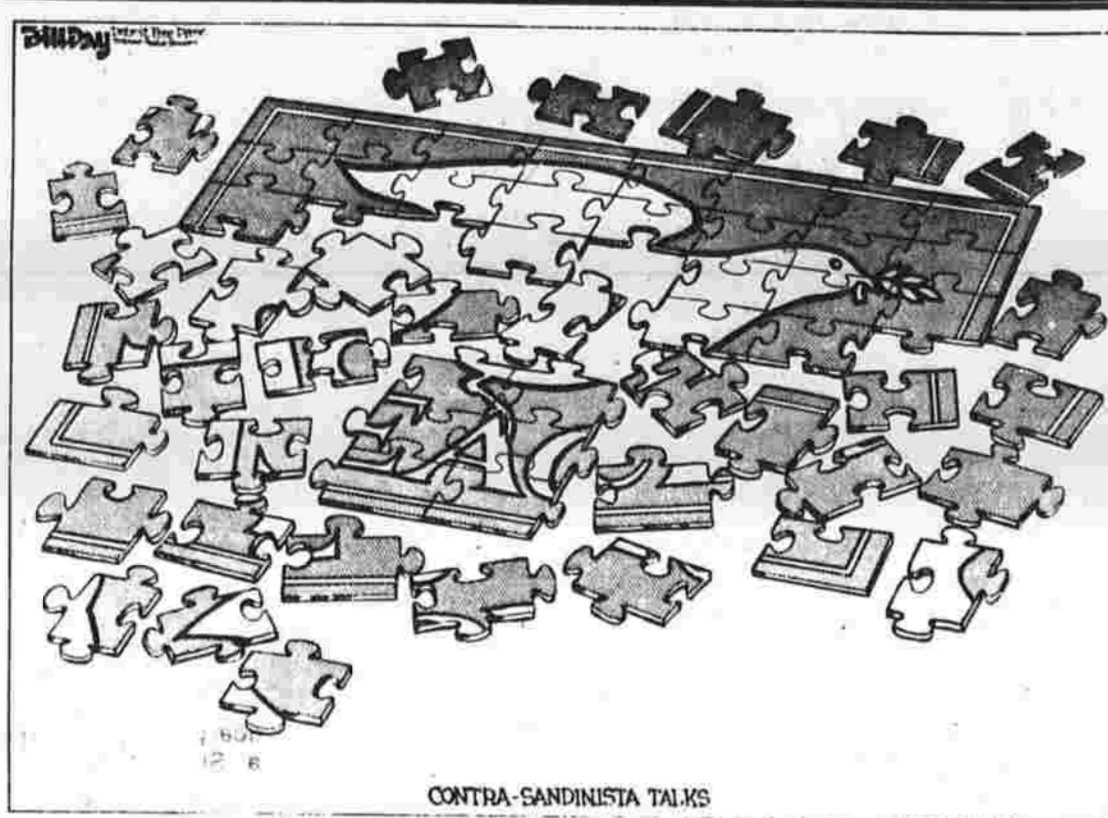

It's a boggling figure. It would be the largest ransom ever paid for a human being. But the declaration was greeted with a polite and perhaps understandable yawn. The question of POWs has become an issue without end; it has been argued for 15 years now in a nation that has other pressing business to attend.

And yet, one billion! That's enough dollars to reach from here to Hanoi, 10 times. The POW controversy may well be old stuff, but the people who keep the faith keep trying. The last POW returned from Vietnam in the winter of 1973; the claim continues that 50 to 200 more should be forthcoming.

The claim today is embodied in the group that is offering the reward. The American Defense Institute is a small organization that has become the most imaginative advocate of the POW matter. It was co-founded by Eugene McDaniel, who was a prisoner in Vietnam, and Billy Hendon, who has a different perspective.

Hendon is a one-time U.S. representative from North Carolina who may know as much about POWs as any civilian can. He is a tall, powerful man who also has unique personal information on the subject; he has made nine visits to Southeast Asia where he says he has confirmed the existence of some prisoners.

Hendon made the trips in the first half of the 1980s. He says he did it under special orders of President Reagan. He says he was in office then, and he made it clear that he believed some POWs were still alive. He gave the issue "the highest

Communist threat real in Nicaragua

To the Editor:

U.S. involvement in Vietnam was initiated by two Democratic presidents. With the help of a Democratic Congress, they caused us to lose a war we never should have entered. Unlike Vietnam, Nicaragua is literally our own back yard and of vital strategic importance. Cuba is a serious threat to the U.S. but the establishment of a Russian stronghold in Central America will have dire consequences. When the Soviets have asserted their power in Nicaragua and operate naval bases on both its Pacific and Atlantic coasts within easy reach of the U.S., we can then congratulate the Democrats in Congress who deny the reality of this geo-political struggle.

The media resists reporting the fact that Nicaragua invaded Honduras. They refer to it as an "alleged incursion" and "fighting along the border." Speaker Wright suggested that it may be that Nicaragua invaded Honduras "by accident." What? Did those last minutes just happen to fall out of some Sandinista's pocket? All three major networks refused to televise our president's appeal to the American people on the eve of the Contra vote which was decided by eight votes. The media questions the validity of our own intelligence reports but takes the word of Ortega as gospel.

Communism isn't a threat but the Sandinistas, Cubans and Russians are. Peace can easily be achieved through surrender, but lasting peace in Central America can only be achieved if it is backed up by military strength on our side. After the fall of Saigon, the communists, who are experts at talking peace, slaughtered millions. That story was never told by

Club rules should end some gripes

To the Editor:

Representatives of the Manchester Country Club have been meeting in recent weeks with the subcommittee of the Board of Directors, and real progress has been made in reaching agreement on how the club can better serve the community. Although the club represents some of the unkind and frequently inaccurate charges made, it must be admitted that the criticism has prompted a study of why the controversy exists and what should be done to correct the problems. It is surprising to many that residents still think that it is a private club when it has not been for many years, and when greens fees prove that many non-members have been aware of the truth. However, it is true that many residents apparently have not known they could play, and the club is certainly guilty of not publicizing this, although it is not clear that this was their responsibility alone.

In fact, the criticism of the club seems intended to create the impression that residents could not play, which is not true. In any event, the notice in the Herald last week should make it clear that non-members can play, and how to arrange to do so. These new regulations — which are incidentally identical with rules in effect at public courses all over the country — require that all members, residents and taxpayers in the town of Manchester be given equal opportunity to secure starting times for play. Some members will grumble and ask why they should pay annual dues and not get any preference, but they will accept the rules because they understand the situation; they are not spoiled children and they respect the right of others to play. Play will be heavy in 1988, but with a little patience and cooperation we can make the best of a situation where there are too many golfers for the number of golf courses available, and it may get worse.

Although these new rules should effectively silence one of the main complaints of the opponents, namely that residents cannot play at the Manchester Country Club, this is probably too much to expect. It is also expected that members will press the issue of why they pay dues and subsidize the operation to the extent of nearly $300,000 each year. Taxpayers of Manchester should understand that if Manchester has a municipal golf course, operation someone will have to pick up the bill and it is not hard to figure out who it will be. In all the claims, how many times has Manchester can make by taking over the course, this fact seems conveniently overlooked by the crusaders. As a matter of fact, why don't more of the town's residents avail themselves of the privilege to join the club, play in the various competitions there, and help defray the cost of maintaining a first-class golf course?

We also reported previously that Brazil's traditional rival in America, Argentina, was building its own rocket at a slower pace. Just last September, Brazil's President Jose Sarney announced that his country has succeeded in enriching uranium, the major obstacle in producing nuclear weapons. Sources now tell us the Brazilians could have the bomb in less than three years. Argentina has the technology to produce nuclear weapons, but has not made the political decision to do so.

Brazil coyly insists it is only developing its nuclear energy program. But its nuclear research program is being run by the military. Brazil refuses to sign the 1968 treaty banning the spread of nuclear weapons. And it insists it will simply use the uranium as fuel for nuclear submarines, even though Brazil has no nuclear submarines and no convincing plans to build or buy any.

The younger Chun was expected to be summoned for questioning Tuesday and he will probably be detained, Kang said. "Once Chun is summoned, it will be difficult to allow him to return home in view of circumstances," he said.

Leaders fear violence

W A K U L L A, N.C. — Communist Party leaders expressed fears of a violent reaction following the shotgun slaying of an activist who had sought to become the first Lumbee Indian judge in his racially troubled county.

Julian Pierce, 42, was shot to death in his home early Saturday, in what authorities called the first assassination of a candidate for political office in the state. No arrests have been made.

Miller pleaded guilty in the Iran-Contra case, along with conservative war-raiser Capt. Oliver Channel, to conspiring with North to defraud the government by raising money through a tax-exempt foundation to purchase weapons for the Contras.

Attorneys said it appeared Pena's activity was not unlawful.

Pena could not be reached for comment. Lynam said Pena is on vacation in Central America, and he had been unable to reach him to ask about the matter. Pena's office said he did not check in for messages last week.

Miller worked with North, then a National Security Council aide, raising private money to help the Contras during the congressional ban on U.S. aid.

Miller's company, International Business Communications, routed close to $3 million through the Caymans, which was disbursed at North's direction to the Contras and related efforts, the Iran-Contra committee's report said.

Brazil ready to sell arms in the Mideast

WASHINGTON — Brazil is shaping up as the country that could introduce highly accurate ballistic missiles to the powder keg of the Middle East.

Three countries — Brazil, Israel and India — are intent on producing long-range, super-speed missiles that could be topped, in time, with nuclear warheads. But it is Brazil that has the Central Intelligence Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency alarmed. As one CIA source told us bluntly, "Brazil will sell arms to anybody, especially Iraq and Libya."

Ballistic missiles were so named because they are as fast as bullets. In the foggy hands of Iraq, they would threaten not only the Iranians but also American warships in the Persian Gulf. It may have been an accident, but it was a slower Iraq missile that struck the USS Stark last May, killing 37 Americans.

Ballistic missiles in the hands of the far more volatile Moammar Gadhafi would have more dire consequences. At worst, Gadhafi is a madman who would strike any country with such a missile. The kindest assessment of him is that he is a desert fox who is not above using missiles against U.S. ships in the Mediterranean, or in the waters he claims in the Gulf of Sidra. Giving Gadhafi a ballistic missile would be like sending a pit bull to greet the mailman. Someone would get hurt, and it wouldn't be the dog.

Our intelligence sources say that Libya and Iraq have already asked Brazil about buying the SS-300, a surface-to-surface missile now under development in Brazil.

In 1984, the Brazilians successfully launched the Sonda IV rocket, and now they are working to transform that technology into the SS-300, which is supposed to have a 600-mile-plus range. It is estimated that it will be operational in 1990, and available for sale.

Worse, the Libyans and Iraqis are pressing Brazil to speed up the development of the SS-1000 missile, which will have a longer range, sharper guidance systems and more payload capability than the SS-300. Most significantly, it will be capable of carrying a nuclear warhead. The SS-1000 could be off the assembly line in Brazil as early as 1991.

The military missiles are a byproduct of Brazil's active space program, run by a Brazilian Air Force research group called the Aerospace Technical Center (CTA) at Sao Jose dos Campos. The aim of the program is to put four satellites into orbit between 1989 and 1992, two of them for weather forecasting and two for terrain photography.

As we reported after the Brazilians launched the Sonda IV rocket that can launch satellites, they can easily be converted into a rocket that can launch nuclear weapons.

One of the primary roadblocks to producing missiles for export was overcome by the Brazilians early last year. A plant to produce ammonium perchlorate, a key ingredient in solid fuels used by missiles, was quietly opened at Jacare, a town not far from the CTA. The plant produces 50 of the 800 tons of perchlorate the Brazilians need annually for their space program. It is only the sixth such plant in the world.

We also reported previously that Brazil's traditional rival in America, Argentina, was building its own rocket at a slower pace. Just last September, Brazil's President Jose Sarney announced that his country has succeeded in enriching uranium, the major obstacle in producing nuclear weapons. Sources now tell us the Brazilians could have the bomb in less than three years. Argentina has the technology to produce nuclear weapons, but has not made the political decision to do so.

Brazil coyly insists it is only developing its nuclear energy program. But its nuclear research program is being run by the military. Brazil refuses to sign the 1968 treaty banning the spread of nuclear weapons. And it insists it will simply use the uranium as fuel for nuclear submarines, even though Brazil has no nuclear submarines and no convincing plans to build or buy any.

Mini-editorial

A mathematical puzzle that has defied solution for 350 years was recently figured out by a Japanese mathematician. "Fermat's Last Theorem" holds that the formula, a squared plus b squared equals c squared, can never have a whole-number solution with a power other than two — or something in that ballpark. The Japanese whiz has reportedly developed proof that the theory is true, something no one other than the late Fermat has been able to do. Fine. But if they can solve Fermat's Last Theorem, why can't they invent wheel guns that will come off when you're stuck with a flat on a lonely highway?

Panama crackdown warned

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The mayors of Panama City and its largest suburb today threatened to crack down on a mass demonstration aimed at ousting Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega and ending the worst crisis in the nation's history.

In a communique published in this morning's state-run newspapers, the mayors said they had instructed "competent authorities" to enforce a ban on public demonstrations.

Those authorities are the police and soldiers commanded by Noriega.

But opposition leaders said they would proceed with plans for the afternoon protest march and called the ban illegal.

Lawmakers get the blues

WASHINGTON — Lawmakers from areas where Japanese imports threaten to cut into jobs are coming down with a case of the blue-collar blues over changes they say will water down their sweeping trade bill.

"I don't see why we should be pulling all the teeth out of our bill out of fear of a presidential veto," says Rep. Donald J. Pease, D-Ohio.

The concerns are surfacing as a House-Senate conference committee prepares to meet Tuesday to begin thrashing out what lawmakers are calling the "cosmic issues" still remaining in the debate, such as retaliation against foreign trade barriers.

Senate tackles budget

WASHINGTON — Senate budget writers get their shot this week at crafting a $1 trillion fiscal 1989 federal spending plan, an exercise that normally causes fear to fly by this year should be relatively tame.

With 1988 an election year, a truce has taken hold in what is usually a three-way budget battle among the White House and congressional Democrats and Republicans.

The reason is last fall's budget summit pact between Congress and the administration, an accord that settled most of the fiscal fights well in advance. Lawmakers are showing no inclination to reopen the usually wrenching decisions about taxes and military and domestic spending that the summit has already made.

Houston fears new loss

HOUSTON — Houston has suffered low oil prices, a troubled space program and the near-exodus of its pro football team. Now it wants to avoid another hit: the departure of superstar superconductivity physicist Paul Chu.

"I think we need to be sure we don't drop the ball," says City Councilman Jim Greenwood. "It's probably not important to keep Paul Chu as it was to keep the Houston Oilers."

Superconductivity, the potential of some materials to carry electricity without energy loss, has become one of the hottest areas in science today. And Chu, a 47-year-old University of Houston physics professor, has become one of the hottest researchers in superconductivity.

Shamir criticizes meeting

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir today sharply criticized a meeting in Washington between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and two Arab-Americans linked to the PLO.

A 19-year-old Palestinian, meanwhile, died of wounds he suffered during a clash Sunday in the West Bank village of Salbit. Hussein Kamel Odeh died of a gunshot wound to the heart, Israeli radio and the Arab-owned Palestine Press Service said.

The army said villagers attacked protesters who came to rescue a tour bus that mistakenly entered the village.

Korean officials corrupt

SEOUL, South Korea — A prosecutor today said the brother of former President Chun Doo-hwan embezzled at least $9 million, and opposition leaders charged other members of Chun's family were involved in widespread corruption.

Prosecutor Kang Won-il said officials uncovered evidence Chun Kyung-hwan embezzled $9.3 million as head of the semi-official Saemul development movement. Kang said altogether up to $14 million may have been embezzled.

The younger Chun was expected to be summoned for questioning Tuesday and he will probably be detained, Kang said. "Once Chun is summoned, it will be difficult to allow him to return home in view of circumstances," he said.

Leaders fear violence

W A K U L L A, N.C. — Communist Party leaders expressed fears of a violent reaction following the shotgun slaying of an activist who had sought to become the first Lumbee Indian judge in his racially troubled county.

Julian Pierce, 42, was shot to death in his home early Saturday, in what authorities called the first assassination of a candidate for political office in the state. No arrests have been made.

Prison release precedes new truce talks

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Sandinista and Contra negotiators heading back to the bargaining table to determine the areas where rebel fighters will gather during the cease-fire called for in the accord signed last week.

The talks, scheduled for today in the southern outpost of Sapoa, may also consider the issue of when the U.S.-supported Contras lay down their arms.

On Sunday, the leftist Sandinista government fulfilled the first part of the cease-fire accord by freeing 100 political prisoners under an amnesty program.

Afterward, Interior Minister Tomas Borge called the amnesty "possibly the beginning of the end of the (6-year-old) war," and he called for the Contras to release Nicaraguan peasants whose troops had kidnapped.

After celebrating Palm Sunday Mass, Roman Catholic Cardinal Miguel Obando Briceno called the prisoner release "very positive."

However, during his Holy Monday Managua archbishop warned the cease-fire agreement did not mean that "we have already reached peace."

"I don't see us not making a mistake," he told his parishioners. "Let us not confuse ourselves. They have only signed a cease-fire," he said, emphasizing the point by repeating the last sentence three times.

It was in Sapoa where leaders of the Contra umbrella organization, the Nicaraguan Resistance, met with the Sandinistas last week and agreed on a 60-day cease-fire beginning April 1. Further high-level negotiations are tentatively scheduled for April 6 in

Managua to reach a more permanent truce.

No fighting between Sandinista and Contra forces has been reported since both sides signed the accord in Sapoa on the night of March 23.

Maj. Gen. Joaquin Cuadra, deputy defense minister and chief of staff of the Sandinista army, was to head the government delegation at today's talks. Deputy Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco and military intelligence chief Maj. Ricardo Wheelock Roman were to accompany Cuadra.

Under the Sapoa agreement, rebel forces are to gather without interfering from Sandinista forces in specified zones inside Nicaragua during the first two weeks of April. Today's talks between special commissions of the two sides were to define "the localization, size and modus operandi" of those zones, according to the text of the Sapoa accord.

In addition to the 82nd Airborne, the reinforcements include soldiers from the 7th Light Infantry in Fort Ord, as a cover for providing equipment to the Contras. U.S. officials have said the troops are taking back all the equipment they brought with them, including tanks and aircraft.

"First they'll have to go through a complete inventory of property to make sure they can account for all the equipment they brought," Hovatter said.

Nicaragua denied the report and claimed the United States was preparing to invade or using the deployment

Airborne battalion is first to leave Honduras

PALMEROLA AIR BASE, Honduras (AP) — The first battalion of U.S. troops deployed here in a show of force against Nicaragua is heading home.

About 800 paratroopers from the 82nd Airborne Division were expected to load onto transport planes at the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa, said Sunday. He said the soldiers would probably parachute into Fort Bragg at about 5 p.m. EST today.

"It's great to be going home," said

Sgt. Dale Taylor, 22, of Red Springs, N.C. "It's going to be a six-hour-bus occasion. They're going to have a band and our families will be there."

President Reagan ordered 3,200 paratroopers and light infantry to Honduras on March 17 and 18. Honduran President Jose Azcona Hoyos asked for a show of force against after the reported incursion. Nicaragua denied the report and claimed the United States was preparing to invade or using the deployment exercises to flex U.S. military muscles after a reported incursion by about 2,000 Nicaraguan troops chasing U.S.-supported Contra rebels.

"I'm sure they'll be home for a late dinner at least," Maj. Gary Hovatter, the U.S. military public affairs officer at this base 40 miles northwest of the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa, said Sunday. He said the soldiers would probably parachute into Fort Bragg at about 5 p.m. EST today.

Wright adviser offered arms to the Contras

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright says he had no idea that one of his own advisers had tried to sell weapons to the Contras.

Wright's secret Contra supply network three months before the Iran-Contra scandal began to unravel.

The speaker, who has long opposed military aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, has been a leader in trying to achieve a negotiated peace there, said he knew nothing of the 1986 arms offer by his associate, Richard M. Pena.

Pena, former House Foreign Affairs Committee staff member, contacted North's associate Richard Miller just three months before disclosures about the Iran-Contra affair shut down North's operation in November 1986.

In an Aug. 15, 1986, letter to a front company set up by Miller, Pena offered grenades, bombs, mines and boats from two South American companies.

The letter went to World Affairs Counselors, a Cayman Islands front company formed by Miller and his partner Frank Gomez to handle their Contra transactions for North. A copy of the letter was obtained by The Associated Press.

Pena has been one of Wright's advisers on Central America over the past several years and as recently as January was the Texas Democrat's paid emissary to the region as the warring factions wrangled over starting cease-fire talks, said Wright aide Marshall Lynam. He said Pena was on the Contras' payroll for a few days on each of three occasions.

Wright, through Lynam, said he had no knowledge of the arms sale offer by Pena.

"Jim Wright was not aware of any of these activities. He knew Richard Pena as a Texas, a man who had extensive connections and acquaintances in Central America, a person who was acquainted with the Contra people in Central America," Lynam said. He said Wright "had confidence in his advice ... and had no reason to think there was any reason why he should not use him in an eyes-and-ears capacity."

The special congressional committees that investigated the Iran-Contra affair took sworn depositions from Pena after finding his letter in Miller's documents, committee sources said. But one source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the committee staff decided not to pursue the Pena matter because it appeared to be an isolated incident, rather than an integral part of the North network.

Miller pleaded guilty in the Iran-Contra case, along with conservative war-raiser Capt. Oliver Channel, to conspiring with North to defraud the government by raising money through a tax-exempt foundation to purchase weapons for the Contras.

Attorneys said it appeared Pena's activity was not unlawful.

Pena could not be reached for comment. Lynam said Pena is on vacation in Central America, and he had been unable to reach him to ask about the matter. Pena's office said he did not check in for messages last week.

An agent can help when cutting album

DEAR BRUCE: I have a job and I support a wife and two children. But for the last 10 years, I have been playing in a rock band that's been doing pretty well. We'd like to cut a record album, but the studio fees are very high and we're not sure what we would do with the record once it's cut.

I just can't seem to get music out of my head. I've tried to persuade the other guys in our group to put the money up to make the album, but so far only the lead singer and I have agreed to front some funds. The rest of the members say that the risk is too great and they can't afford it.

record companies. I have said many times, but it bears repeating, that most of us at one time or another are bitten by the entertainment bug. I'm no exception. It is a difficult business to penetrate but one that can be rewarding if you are successful.

A key to success is hiring an agent who has connections with publishers, recording studios, distributors and radio stations. If such an agent has expressed an interest in your organization and wants no money up front (that is critical, for there are many charlatans out there who will take your money and deliver nothing), I would proceed.

There is no outside chance that with your spec album you could get the attention of an agent or a record company. But this should not be blood money — funds that have been borrowed or would take away from the standard of living of the participants. If you fellows can find enough money that meets that description, I'd go ahead and cut the album, but understand that this is a highly speculative enterprise. I wish you the best of luck.

DEAR BRUCE: I recently answered an advertisement that offered to start anyone in a business seeking out scholarships for college students. I can buy the list of available scholarships from the company for under $10 and they suggest selling them for $40 to $60.

Have you heard of this kind of a business, and how does it work?

C.L. FLINT, MICH.

DEAR C.L.: I most certainly have. I believe we have addressed it previously in this space. There are several companies that have searched the highways and byways for rather obscure college scholarships, grants, etc., and can provide these lists.

Cooley files bankruptcy

HOUSTON — Filing for personal bankruptcy was "embarrassing," says famed heart surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley, but it was the only solution for his financial troubles.

Dr. Denton Cooley

If the firm you are dealing with has an in-depth list (research it carefully to be sure), this can not only be a viable enterprise but it can also render an important service to those who are seeking scholarships and don't know where to begin.

As I said, be certain to investigate carefully to determine that the company you are dealing with does have access to information about a great many scholarships and does deliver what they say they will because after all, it is your reputation that is being put on the line.

Fed-watchers see concern

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve has been trying to keep the economic recovery alive following the October stock market collapse, but many economists believe it is starting to worry more about rising inflationary pressures.

The central bank's top policy makers will meet behind closed doors Tuesday to review monetary strategy. The decisions made by the Federal Open Market Committee will not be revealed until mid-May.

White analysts are not looking for major policy changes to come out of the meeting, they said recent comments by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan indicate that the central bank has begun to worry once again about inflationary pressures.

LOS ANGELES — The average retail price of gasoline fell again during the past two weeks, although prices were still higher than a year ago, according to an industry survey.

The price drop for all grades of gasoline was 0.78 cents a gallon, bringing the average price to 94.96 cents a gallon as of March 25, according to the Lundberg Survey of Gasoline Prices from stations around the United States.

The average price is just over 11 cents a gallon more than that of March 1987, and almost a nickel less than the March 1986 price when crude oil prices were crashing, analyst Trilby Lundberg said Sunday.

The average prices for self-service pumps were: regular unleaded, 85.55 cents a gallon; premium unleaded, 1.0083 cents a gallon; and regular leaded, 82.13 cents a gallon.

Lease firm joins CoFC

Bank Leasing Group of 481 Porter St., a vehicle-leasing business, has joined the Greater Manchester Chamber of Commerce.

Arthur B. Shorts is owner and president of Bank Leasing Group and Anita Shorts is vice president. As previous owners of the Stop Smoking Centers of Connecticut, they were members of the chamber.

The business specializes in cost-saving programs for leasing vehicles for periods of up to 60 months.

Arthur Shorts has been involved in the automobile business since 1962, how, after being affiliated with Carter Chevrolet, Lynch Motors and Riley Oldsmobile.

Shorts said Bank Leasing Group has participating dealers in all makes and models of vehicles. He said the company's objective is to provide the best full-service leasing at competitive rates. Bank Leasing also offers appraisals for insurance claims, income taxes, estates and charitable contributions.

The firm will sponsor the "Connecticut Yankee" entry in the Great American Race of antique cars from California to Boston in June.

Shorts will enter a 1932 Chevrolet with Joseph Curry of Bolton as navigator.

WASHINGTON — Western Europe's top airline regulator is warning U.S. officials that there may be a sudden rise in fares in this country as a result of deregulation.

Frederick Soerensen, head of the air transport division at the European Commission, says U.S. deregulation has been in the main successful.

But then he says, "When we see how, after the first few months of enthusiastic expansionism, the number of operational airlines is tending to shrink further and further, we may well wonder whether deregulation does not lead in the end, to cartelization, and whether the tendency for fares to fall in the first few years may not suddenly go in reverse."

QUESTION: The $7,000 I invested in a bond mutual fund in January 1986 now is worth only $7,000. I can understand that because interest rates rose. But I don't understand why my dividends have been reduced. I still have the same number of shares. Can you explain?

ANSWER: That mutual fund collects interest from the bonds it holds, and after deducting its operating expenses, passes that money on to shareholders as dividends.

When interest rates went up, the value of the fund's holdings and the fund's shares fell. The fund receives less money from the continuing sale of its shares and, when it buys new bonds, receives lower interest yields. That reduces the dividend the fund pays on each of its shares.

Over the long term, Treasury and federal agency securities did not take big price swings and government bond mutual funds were relatively stable investments. But in recent years, interest rates have gyrated. So have the values of government bond fund shares.

Author, Hemingway's friend, now runs 'wacko food thing'

NEW YORK — A.E. Hotchner traveled with Ernest Hemingway, has authored best-selling books and scripted plays. This is not the man one expects to find running a food business, but there he is, assuming the role of entrepreneur at the behest of another of his famous friends, Paul Newman.

Listening to Hotchner talk, one gets the feeling he is also incredulous — even after six years — to find himself in charge of Newman's Own Inc., a $40 million-a-year business Hotchner calls "this wacko food thing."

Hotchner, the star of films such as "The Hustler" and "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" and the president of Newman's Own, is a 67-year-old St. Louis native who worked for Newman's Own Inc. as a food products manager.

Hotchner said the actor had his own homemade dressing. When he visited friends, he took bottles of it with him. He gave it as Christmas presents.

Hotchner, his longtime friend and neighbor in Westport, Conn., to help fill wine bottles with dressing, and when there was some left over, Newman got the notion of selling it.

"I did everything to ignore him," Hotchner said. "Newman wouldn't let go of the idea. While he went off to film 'The Verdict,' he put his friend to work, setting up a salad dressing company."

"He would call from the movie set between takes: 'Hotch, how are we doing? You got a bottle of the sauce?'" Hotchner said. "I'd drop me nuts."

With a $40,000 investment, they began to market the dressing locally in Connecticut.

"We didn't know what we were doing," Hotchner admitted. "But after two months they began to sell in major supermarket chains like Grand Union and A&P."

Hotchner sounds like he still does not believe it all happened. "It was 80 percent luck," he said. "The Newman aura was a major factor in their initial success."

Hotchner admitted that, but he said, what has kept the company going since then is its insistence on quality.

"You can get acceptance because of Paul's face on the label, but what's in the bottle better be good," he said.

Hotchner said Newman was a major concern, particularly when it came to food. "Look, we don't intend to be food tycoons, so let's just give it all away," Hotchner quoted Newman as saying. In the six years since Newman's Own began, it has donated $15 million to charity and helped up a camp for seriously ill children.

DEAR BRUCE: I recently answered an advertisement that offered to start anyone in a business seeking out scholarships for college students. I can buy the list of available scholarships from the company for under $10 and they suggest selling them for $40 to $60.

Have you heard of this kind of a business, and how does it work?

C.L. FLINT, MICH.

DEAR C.L.: I most certainly have. I believe we have addressed it previously in this space. There are several companies that have searched the highways and byways for rather obscure college scholarships, grants, etc., and can provide these lists.

Vasectomy was not answer for this family's planning

DEAR ABBY: I have a message for "Angry" who feels that her husband is selfish for refusing to have a vasectomy. I was in the same situation after our second child was born. We had a boy and a girl and agreed that our family was complete, so I asked my husband to have a vasectomy.

He agreed, but his heart wasn't in it. The arrangements were made, and I prepped him for the operation the night before. When we arrived at the hospital, the nurse gave us reading material and consent forms to sign. We read about the surgery procedure, discomforts to be expected, the possible complications, follow-up visits, etc.

Ten minutes later, the nurse came in said, "Mr. Smith, are you ready?" When my husband replied "Yes," I noticed that his voice was pitched about two octaves higher than normal. At this point I realized that he was doing this just for me, so I said, "What do you say we go get some breakfast and forget the whole thing?"

That did it! He bolted for the door, and with a look of undying gratitude in his eyes, kept saying, "Thank you, thank you" over and over. He didn't even care when he was lightning to death while his hair grew back in!

Shortly after, I had a tubal ligation. There was no pain, no swelling, no loss of work, and best yet, no weekly sperm checks. I would have advised "Angry" to have a tubal ligation, and leave the family jewels alone. A vasectomy is not for every man. Trust me.

Apple pie scores hit in contest

Granville and Jean Wrathall of Bristol, the first-prize winner, will go next to the final round of competition on April 10, where New England's Best 2-Crusted Apple Pie will be named. That contest, too, will be held at the Salem Cross Inn, where the pies are baked in a beehive oven reconstructed from a 1699 tavern. About 12,000 words of prizes will be awarded at that time.

"I am so thrilled! I am just so excited!" said Granville, when the judges announced the news to a room full of nervous contestants and anxious relatives.

Her smile lit up her corner of the inn's 18th century inn room, which was otherwise illuminated only by the golden light of electrified candles.

Granville, active with the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, the Manchester Memorial Hospital volunteer corps, the American Heart Association and other groups, was bitten by the cooking contest bug more than 10 years ago.

That's when her late husband suggested that she enter the National Beef Cook-Off. Although she was certain that "just a little housewife coming out of a country kitchen" could never win, she wound up winning the top prize in the nation, in 1977.

Since then, Granville has specialized in apple pie contests. She has won prizes at the annual fall bake-off at Lyman Orchards in Middlefield, and has been a contestant at Salem Cross Inn for three years in a row.

In fact on Saturday, contest coordinator Martha Salem, introduced Granville to the nine other contestants as "our veteran."

In attending the various apple pie contests, Granville said, she has made a great many friends. One is Esther Armstrong, another Manchester woman competing on Saturday. Another is Judi Manfre of Ellington, with whom she drove to Saturday's competition.

Celebrities raise cash for charity shoppers walked right by not noticing that the models in the window occasionally blinked. Other shoppers just stood away from the windows and stared looking a bit like the freeze models themselves.

"People have been amazed," Garfield said. "Somebody said it's spooky."

The children at the plaza seemed most entertained.

"That's a real lady," a woman said to her young daughter, pointing at Sen. Herbst, who modeled for the Shelter for the Homeless. "I don't know if that one is too," she said of the freeze model next to Herbst.

"Mom, she moved!" the girl replied.

The shelter was one of several area groups and charities that benefited from the event. Tri-City Merchants Association contributed $50 to the charity of the model's choice.

The money comes from the monthly donations by the 34 stores in the plaza, Garfield said. Tri-City Plaza is located in Vernon at Exit 64 off Interstate 84, just over the Manchester town line.

Roberts modeled clothing from Action Wear in the window of Parade of Shoes for Newington Children's Hospital. Other models, including Donald Edward, principal of Lake Street School in Vernon and Chris Walsh from WCSS radio, modeled for the Visiting Nurse and Community Care Inc. of Vernon, Tri Town Shelter, Center Road Clothing PTO and the Foster Parents Plan.

Meisner modeled clothing from D & L Stores for the Bennet Junior High School's Student Discretionary Fund, which provides money to needy students at the school, he said.

Asked what it felt like to be a mannequin, he replied, "stiff."

Meisner broke his leg and dislocated his ankle playing basketball about three weeks ago and had to model shorts while sitting in a chair.

"I got lucky," he said. "I was in a comfortable position, I guess."

Meisner's wife, Elaine, was taking pictures of him. She agreed that he did well as a freeze model.

But I think he better stick to being principal," she said.

APPLAUSE — Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis acknowledges applause as he is introduced at a senior citizens' housing complex in New Haven Sunday. From left in background are Connecticut Gov. made it even more likely that the race wouldn't be decided before the convention and opened new doors for his campaign.

"The Dukakis campaign has used the word 'inevitability.' All this past week in Washington, the Dukakis campaign staffers were going around Capitol Hill saying Mike Dukakis is the inevitable candidate. Well, that's gone now," Gore said at a news conference in Hartford, where he attended a fund-raiser.

There's nothing inevitable about this contest except that it's going to be a long, hard-fought contest and it is inevitable that after Michigan, voters are going to be looking for another alternative."

Gore, who also campaigned Sunday at an Italian-American club in Derby, said he was banking on a good showing in Connecticut, where he spent $75,000 for television advertising. Campaign staffers said Dukakis planned to spend $20,000 on television and Jackson $10,000.

With returns from 94 percent of the voting sites in Michigan, Jackson had 107,689, or 55 percent, to 55,337, or 28 percent, for Dukakis. U.S. Rep. Richard Gephardt had 24,995, or 13 percent, Sen. Paul Simon had 4,069, or 2 percent, and Gore had 3,818, or 2 percent.

In the latest AP delegate count, Dukakis had 603.55 to Jackson's 597.55. Gore had 362.8. Simon had 17.5. Gephardt 167 and uncommitted 362.6.

Gephardt was re-evaluating his campaign Sunday after his third-place finish in Michigan, where he had hoped a "miracle" would invest some vigor into his quest for the presidency. He scheduled a news conference for today.

Simon, who won the primary in his native Illinois, also hasn't campaigned in Connecticut but concentrated instead on Wisconsin, where primaries will be held April 5.

The candidates reminded Connecticut voters Sunday of their stands on the issues.

A horse Jackson set out his plan of stopping drugs from entering the country, more money for AIDS research, programs to combat teen-age pregnancy, and increased aid to education.

"Four years of college invariably costs less than four years in the penitentiary," he said. "Schools cost less than jails. Teachers cost less than jail wardens."

"I just don't read about teenage mothers. I was born to a teenage mother who was born to a teenage mother," Jackson said.

Dukakis turned his criticism on the Reagan administration and its policies on child care, housing, Central America, and defense spending.

None of the Republican candidates campaigned Sunday in Connecticut, where all 35 of the delegates to the national convention are at stake. Vice President George Bush made two stops last week in the state.

New method aids cataract patients

Doctors soon may be able to surgically implant bifocal lenses, eliminating the need for glasses for many cataract sufferers. Ophthalmologists have developed a plastic lens called a bifocal intraocular lens that focuses on both near and far objects, like a natural lens.

Cataracts occur naturally as people age, when the lens gradually becomes clouded and hardened from normal use, partially preventing light from passing through to the retina. Most of the 1 million cataract surgeries in this country are performed on seniors, and three out of five Americans older than 60 have some form of cataracts, according to Billardi, director of the Eyesight Information Center of America in Monrovia, Calif.

Confident Whalers near playoff berth

By Jim Tierney
Manchester Herald

HARTFORD — Confidence is the operative word around the Hartford Whalers' camp these days.

With their likely playoff adversary — the Montreal Canadiens — in town, the Whalers hoped to send a preview of coming attractions to the Habs.

Well, they did.

With only three regular season games remaining, the Whalers have appeared to have all but assured themselves of the final playoff spot in the Adams Division.

Three third-period goals — including two by Carey Wilson — lifted the Whalers to a comeback behind 4-2 victory over the Canadiens Sunday night before a sellout crowd of 15,223 at the Civic Center.

Back-up goalie Richard Brodeur, filling in for the injured Mike Luit (right ankle), stopped 22 shots en route to his fourth win for the Whalers and third in a row. Brodeur was in goal for Hartford's 8-1 win over Minnesota Saturday night.

The win was the fourth straight for the Whalers (34-36-7) and fifth in their last six games. Quebec (32-40-8) dropped a 6-3 decision to Pittsburgh Sunday afternoon, suffering its fourth consecutive defeat and falling seven points behind Hartford.

Any combination of Hartford wins or Quebec losses totaling two points will clinch fourth place in the division and the final playoff position for the Whalers. The Nordiques have four games left.

The Whalers will be in Buffalo Thursday, host Boston Saturday, and end their season in Pittsburgh on Sunday.

"I thought the guys played a heckuva hockey game," Whaler Coach Larry Pleau said. "I think they've gained a lot of confidence. They're going to the net well. They're creating second and third efforts. They're not throwing the puck blindly. Again, that's confidence with the puck."

Stewart Gavin gave the Whalers a 1-0 lead in the first period when he scored his 10th goal of the season and fourth in the last three games. Montreal (43-22-12) countered with two goals in the second period to assume a 2-1 lead heading into the third.

Chris Chelios put the Canadiens on top at 16:25 of the second period when he slammed his own long rebound past Brodeur, who was caught far in front of the net. A fatal miscue by Montreal's Bob Gainey allowed the Whalers to tie the score at 2-1 early in the final stanza. Gainey, attempting to circle the net, lost control of the puck. Ron Francis, right on Gainey's back, alertly and quickly deflected the puck into the open left side of the net for the score at 2:39.

"We gave them the game on a silver plate," Montreal Coach Jean Perron said. "We don't like to lose games this time of the year, but I think it's going to us some good." It was Francis' 25th goal.

Just 54 seconds later, Wilson took a back-handed pass from Dean Evason along the right boards and deposited it high into the left corner of the net and the Whalers led 3-2. "We're playing with more confidence," Wilson said.

The 35-year-old Brodeur credits his defense. "The guys are playing so well in front of me," he said. "They're getting used to my style."

Wilson notched an insurance goal with 6:46 left when he deflected in an Alf Samuelsson heukva hockey game," Whaler

NIT's Final Four field has a Boston flavor

By Dove Goldberg
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The cover of the Colorado State basketball media guide features a picture of Coach Boyd Grant and the exclamation: "Boys' Back!"

The same slogan could apply to the National Invitation Tournament.

Grant, who won the NIT with Fresno State in 1983, will pit his Rams against Ohio State in the opener of Tuesday night's semifinals as the tournament reaches Madison Square Garden Saturday.

The other semifinal has Boston College and Connecticut in a matchup of the Big East's seventh- and ninth-place teams.

"It's the biggest thing that ever happened to our school," Grant said of the 64-49 victory over Arkansas State last Friday that brought the Rams to New York. "It's bigger than New Year's Eve."

Grant, 54, left Fresno State after the 1986 season and sat out a year before returning to his alma mater this season.

The Rams, 21-12, finished in a tie for fifth in the Western Athletic Conference but have outscored the four WAC teams that made the NCAA Tournament field. The same is true of Ohio State, sixth in the Big Ten, and Connecticut and Boston College, who remain alive while the conference's six NCAA invitees have gone home.

Boston College's 18-13 was the last team to qualify getting 24 points from Dana Barros and 17 points and 17 rebounds from Steve Benton to beat Middle Tennessee 78-69 Saturday night. Connecticut beat Virginia Commonwealth 71-62 and Ohio State beat New Mexico 68-68 Friday night.

Grant is the outsider among the four coaches, all of whom have ties to Boston.

Gary Williams of Ohio State, for example, left Boston College 16 years ago after leading the Eagles to post-season play in each of his four years there.

"If I weren't playing Colorado State, I think I'd be back for the Big East Tournament," Williams said.

But all four share one thing — the achievement of reaching Madison Square Garden.

"Nobody gave us a chance to do anything at the beginning of the season," O'Brien said. "They said we'd be lucky to win three games in the league and 10 for the season. Here we are with 18 wins."

"We were 15-14 at the end of the regular season and we were lucky enough to get a bid," said Calhoun, who starts two juniors, a sophomore and two freshmen at Connecticut. "But we were 13-1 outside the league and played in what I still think is the best conference in the country. I think we deserve to be here."

Arizona and Kansas round out NCAA field

By The Associated Press

It's final. The four are Arizona, Oklahoma, Duke and Kansas. These four teams will battle for college basketball's national championship next Saturday and Monday at Kansas City.

Second-ranked Arizona brought the Pacific-10 Conference back to the Final Four for the first time since UCLA was there in 1980, while No. 4 Oklahoma and Kansas gave the Big Eight dual representation for the first time.

"We've said all year long we're not carrying the banner for anybody but Arizona," Wildcats Coach Lute Olson said, referring to frequent criticism that the Pac-10 has been weak since UCLA fell from national prominence.

The trip is the first for Arizona but second for Olson, who took Iowa to the Final Four in 1980, when it lost to Louisville in the semifinals. Fifth-ranked Duke has been to the Final Four six times, but has never won a national championship.

Arizona got to the Final Four by beating No. 7 North Carolina 76-52 for the West Regional championship Sunday, handing the Tar Heels their worst NCAA tournament loss since 1969, in the day's other game, Kansas beat No. 20 Kansas State 71-58 for the Midwest title.

On Saturday, Duke upset No. 1 Temple 63-53 to win the East Regional, and Oklahoma defeated Villanova 78-59 in the Southeast Regional. Arizona, 35-2, plays Oklahoma, 34-3, and Kansas, 25-11, meets Duke, 28-6, in next Saturday's semifinals.

West

No. 2 Arizona 76, No. 7 N. Carolina 52, Arizona, which failed for the first time in the tournament to win by at least 20 points, is the first Pacific-10 Conference team in the Final Four other than UCLA since Oregon State went in 1983.

It was fun to be in the final five," North Carolina Coach Dean Smith said. "We were the last team eliminated. But we don't feel very good, and maybe we should. We did beat North Carolina Sunday for the West Regional title in Seattle.

Olson, now one victory short of 300 for his 26-year career, becomes the eighth coach to guide two different teams to the Final Four.

North Carolina, which hit only two field goals in the final 15 minutes, goes home with its worst tournament whipping since a 104-84 loss to Drake in the 1969 Final Four consolation game.

All-American forward Sean Elliott, voted the outstanding player of the regional, led Arizona with 24 points and teamed with frontcourt mates Tolbert and Anthony Cook to hold North Carolina All-American forward J.R. Reid to 10 points.

Midwest

Kansas 71, No. 20 Kansas State 58: Danny Manning scored 20 points and got some help from his supporting players to lead Kansas into the Final Four for the eighth time, fourth-highest total in NCAA tournament history.

Scoutler Barry, son of NBA Hall of Famer Rick Barry, scored a career-high 15 points for Kansas after averaging just 2.8 during the season. And Milt Newton had 18 points, nine rebounds and seven assists while holding Kansas State's Mitch Richmond to 11 points, nearly 12 below his average.

"When I looked around the locker room, an awful lot of kids gave us an opportunity to go to Kansas City," Kansas Coach Larry Brown said.

The good news is that between 25 and 30 percent of people with phobias and panic disorders can be significantly helped, if not cured outright. A combination of techniques is most often used, including short-term group and individual psychotherapy, behavior modification, relaxation exercises and special drug therapy to treat the debilitating symptoms.

For those who do not improve with these approaches, more thorough, probing behavior therapy that involves facing and resolving ongoing interpersonal conflicts may be necessary to find out what continues to "fuel" the phobia.

Penguins, Devils remain in the playoff hunt

By The Associated Press

With one week to go in the NHL season, the Pittsburgh Penguins and New Jersey Devils usually are stripped of emotion and going through the motions.

With one week to go in this NHL season, the Penguins and Devils are thinking and talking playoffs.

The Penguins moved above .500 and into a tie with the New York Rangers for the final playoff berth in the Patrick Division by beating Quebec 6-3.

The Penguins and Rangers have 77 points, while New Jersey has 74. The Penguins and Devils each have four games remaining.

Pittsburgh hasn't made the playoffs since 1982; the Devils never have made postseason play since moving to New Jersey in 1982.

Also on Sunday, Hartford moved within two points of clinching the final playoff berth in the Adams Division by beating Montreal 4-2, and Detroit defeated Boston 5-3.

Penguins 6, Nordiques 3
Mario Lemieux, the league's dominant player this season, got a pair of shorthanded goals and set up three scores as he continued to run away with the scoring race. Lemieux has 65 goals and 160 points, with eight of those goals shorthanded.

On his first score Lemieux stole the puck from Anton Stastny at the Pittsburgh blue line and skated alone to beat goaltender Mario Gosselin over the left shoulder.

Devils 7, Rangers 2
Kirk Muller and Pat Verbeek each scored two goals, with Verbeek connecting on a penalty shot as the Devils won for the sixth time in nine games.

Verbeek set a franchise record with 43 goals, breaking the mark set by Bill Palement in 1977-78 when the team was in Colorado.

Verbeek's second goal closed out the first-period scoring at 18:03. Referee Don Koharski ruled defenseman Mark Hardy had thrown his stick at the puck and awarded the Devil a penalty shot.

Willanova's game plan fails to derail Sooners

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Villanova did the only thing it could, and it still wasn't enough to end No. 4 Oklahoma's quest for its first college basketball national championship.

The running, gunning Sooners forced to play at a snail's pace by Villanova's deliberate offense rallied from an eight-point deficit in the final 14 minutes of Saturday's game and earned a berth in the Final Four with a 78-59 triumph over the Wildcats.

"I'm sure we still have non-believers, but we proved ourselves today," Oklahoma's Harvey Grant said after the Sooners claimed the NCAA Southeast Regional title.

It was the eighth consecutive victory for the Sooners, who will carry a 34-3 record into a national semifinal test at Kansas City on Saturday against second-ranked Arizona, which captured the West Region championship on Sunday with a 76-52 victory over No. 7 North Carolina.

The other semifinal will match East champion Duke, ranked fifth, against unranked Kansas, the Midwest Region winner.

"A lot of people have tried to slow it down against us, but that's the best halfcourt offense I've ever seen let alone played against," Oklahoma's Dave Sieger said.

Plansky doing most of the ball-handling duty, the Wildcats handled Oklahoma's relentless full-court pressure, repeatedly maintaining possession to eat up as much as 40 seconds off the second shot clock.

It got the Sooners, who love an uptempo pace, out of sync.

It was the key reason Nova held a 38-31 halftime lead and a 48-40 edge with 14 minutes to play.

"I'm sure we still have non-believers, but we proved ourselves today," Oklahoma's Harvey Grant said after the Sooners claimed the NCAA Southeast Regional title.

Kansas State led by two at halftime and upped its lead to 36-29 with 16:10 to play.

Kansas got the Final Four despite playing most of the season without starters Archie Marshall, out with a knee injury, and Marvin Branch, who was academically ineligible.

"I think the team gutted it out and everybody did the best they could because they knew we lost our game," Brown said.

The last time Kansas went to the Final Four, in 1986, the Jayhawks also played Duke in the semifinals, losing 71-67. Kansas lost to Duke earlier this season, 74-70 in overtime.

49ers looking for support at NCAA women's finals

Long Beach State Coach Joan Bonvincini is offering her team for adoption by Seattle and Tacoma fans for next weekend's NCAA women's finals at the Tacoma Dome.

"I'll do anything they ask. I'll even stand on my head or tell a few jokes," she said after Long Beach State, 28-5, earned a second straight trip to the Final Four Saturday night.

"We played great defense without fouling," Krzyzewski said. "We had to make sure we were confident that we would win." Krzyzewski said, "Finally, that confidence moved over to the offensive side and we hit some 3-pointers. Our 3-pointer was the key shot. That got us going."

Changing of guard to take place in figure skating

By Jennifer Parnelee

BUDAPEST, Hungary — Every four years or so in figure skating, there comes a time to pass the torch.

The medals are shelved or displayed on the mantelpiece. Champions fight off nostalgia for past glories and set their sights on the future.

Some will turn pro. Others will turn to acting, even medicine. Some don't know.

One thing is certain: they will be replaced and the 1989 World Figure Skating Championships in Paris will be without them.

All the winners of the world championships, which closed the season, will be heading in new directions. It is the first time in figure skating history that all four world champions are leaving.

Dance was the latest event to go down in the spotlight that has illuminated her during her brilliant days as an amateur.

Two-time Olympic gold medalist and four-time world titleist Katarina Witt of East Germany and Canadian Liz Manley and U.S. champ Debi Thomas all officially ended their careers here with a 1-2-3 finish in the women's singles.

Thomas announced that she had married a 23-year-old University of Colorado student, Brian Vanden Hogen, just before the world championships.

Also at the end of their competition days were four-time world champion ice dancers Natalia Bestemianova and Andrei Bukin of the Soviet Union, and teammates Elena Valova and Oleg Vasiltsev, who won the world pairs title.

Orser, who at 26 is getting old for such a youth-oriented sport, says "It's no secret I plan to turn professional."

Boitano, with his California god looks, has been showered with offers from both pro skating and television. And he says there's a bottom line.

"It'll be 25 (in October) and I have to start thinking about making a living," the Olympic gold medalist said.

Witt, too, would like to continue in the spotlight that has illuminated her during her brilliant days as an amateur.

"I don't want people to come up to me every day and say 'Am I you that skater who used to be famous?'" she has said. "I am. It will be, much more than that."

Thomas, on the other hand, would like to slip quietly out of the public eye, expected to continue as an amateur.
