Reevaluation study not recommended

By Andrew Yurkovsky Manchester Herald An independent assessor has told the town's firm it will likely not be able to finish a review of the town's troubled reevaluation in enough time to ensure that recommendations can be adopted to avoid the same problems next year.

Cummings, DiRosa hit Weiss on reval

By Alex Girelli Manchester Herald Democratic Town Chairman Theodore Cummings says Town Manager Robert B. Weiss is to blame for the problem-ridden reevaluation because he was "not keeping the store."

8th may not be belle of the ball

A ball which was scheduled as the kickoff event in the Eighth Utilities District celebration of the 100th anniversary of its fire department may have to be canceled because only about 15 tickets for the $125-a-plate event have been sold, according to William Parker, co-chairman of the event.

Builder, renovations give old stone house a new life

By Nancy Concelman Manchester Herald A house on Tolland Turnpike that is more than a century old may be standing in the way of progress, but it will remain standing.

The game plan of Manchester real estate developer Gerald Rothman, of Rothman and Beaulieu Development Inc. has been applied to the Planning and Zoning Commission's review of the house.

It is now being rented to Deimar and Gail Violette and family. Rothman said he has no plan to turn it into a two-family dwelling or to alter it significantly in any other way.

Walking through the house, hearing the sounds of a stereo and television set, is like taking a trip through the 1880s and the 1980s at the same time. There's a stove, not a fireplace, in the kitchen for cooking, but on the mantelpiece above a fireplace in one of the other rooms sits a Manchester Historical Society plaque from 1880, not 1840.

While he refused to comment on the company's financial status, he said that the loan payment wouldn't be a problem for the company to pay back. Union officials have demanded financial information from the company to be used as a basis for collective bargaining and have said they will file unfair labor practice charges if the company does not respond.

Adopt a pet: Benji available

By Barbara Richmond
Manchester Herald

Good news and bad news again this week. The good news: there is only one dog at the dog pound. The bad news: the dog was featured two weeks ago.

However, Aid to Helpless Animals Inc. has many cats and kittens that need to be adopted. This week's featured cat is a handsome butterscotch male tiger cat named Benji.

Benji is about 10 months old. He's been neutered and has had his shots. He is living in a foster home until someone adopts him. Unfortunately, at this time of year when many cats are abandoned and die if they are not found.

Judy Lazorik, Aid to Helpless Animals, said the organization has many cats and kittens that are either in foster homes or are being kept at area veterinary clinics.

The dog pound is located on town property near the landfill area off Olcott Street. Rand is duty at the pound Monday through Friday from 8 to 9 p.m. There is a $5 fee to adopt a dog and the new owner must see that the dog has its rabies shots and is licensed.

Thoughts

God is terribly unfair. He isn't just to my way of thinking in the least. He loves sinners. He loves people I can't imagine loving no matter how hard I tried. He loves those that deserve little by our standards. Again, and again he reaches out to outlandish sinners and calls them to him. His love is so great, it's downright unfair.

I guess if anything could be more faretched than God's love for us, it's our lack of response to his call. It takes some doing to resist his love for us — that unfair, all out-of-proportion love for people who constantly turn from him.

The bible makes many references to God as husband to his people. Like lovers, we are unfaithful, ungrateful, and undeserving of a second chance. Yet, he always wants to reconcile, to try it again. And for the spouse who abandons God, He awaits in return. It's unfair, unwarranted and unreasonable. And thank God it's that way.

Water, trash and housing

By Alex Girelli
Manchester Herald

Problems like clean water, rubbish disposal, and affordable housing are pretty much the same all over the world and local governments are being called on more and more to solve them everywhere. Town Manager Robert Weiss concluded after attending a conference in Israel, Weiss represented the International City Manager's Association at the World Conference of Twin Cities and Municipal Institutions in Tel Aviv last month. He presented a paper on trends of local government in the United States.

As an illustration that local problems are alike almost everywhere, Weiss explained in an interview that he and his wife, Gloria, were house guests of a family in a suburb of Tel Aviv. The town had run out of landfill space for its rubbish and shares a landfill with an adjacent community.

There is only one recycling facility in Israel, a limited one that handles mostly paper goods, Weiss said.

Up to about 25 years ago, an automobile was a luxury almost everywhere but in the United States. Now the two-car family is not unusual in Israel.

Suburbanization is not an American phenomenon but a worldwide situation, Weiss said. And national governments everywhere are withdrawing their financial support of local governments, leaving more for local officials to do.

Weiss said he drew his conclusions not so much from formal presentations at the conference, but from informal talks with participants.

There were marked differences between the situation in Israel and in the United States, however, Weiss said. In Israel, there are no tax-free municipal bonds. Much municipal spending is on a pay-as-you-go cash basis.

Mortgages are on a variable rate basis. When inflation was running at 500 percent annually, mortgages were rare. Even at the current 15 percent inflation rate, they are difficult.

As a result, people build houses in stages, as money became available. With deodorant selling at $6 a stick, ordinary shampoo at $10 a bottle, and Honda Civics at $28,000 with the high tax on them, people have to save like crazy, "to build a house, Weiss said.

It is not unusual to see concrete buildings that look a bit like ruins. Actually, they have only weathered for a year or so while their owners wait for money to make them complete houses.

Rents are cheaper, however, and so are fresh fruits and vegetables. Medical care, provided by facilities like Health Maintenance Organiza-

STATE & REGION

Bill would open files

HARTFORD — Future grand jury reports would be made public under a compromise bill now on its way to the House of Representatives.

The state Senate unanimously approved the measure Wednesday after adopting a compromise amendment to exclude reports from past grand juries.

Rep. Jay B. Levin, D-New London, one of the architects of the compromise, said including such reports would have been unfair to people who testified before the grand juries in the law called for keeping most grand jury reports secret.

He also said grand jurors would draft their reports differently, knowing that they will be made public.

Racketeer unit starts

HARTFORD — Hartford County State's Attorney John M. Bailey announced the creation of a unit within his office to deal with racketeering.

To be headed by Assistant State's Attorney John Massimino, the unit will be used to investigate white collar crimes, narcotics, loan-sharking, professional gambling and prostitution operations.

Bailey said in a recent letter to police chiefs within his judicial district, "Such crimes are 'not an easy prosecution,'" Bailey said. "You have to search titles, corporate records and even follow money back to the source of origin."

He said bank records required for such investigations are among the most difficult to subpoena.

Pay settles complaint

WETHERSFIELD — More than $1 million in unpaid wages owed to employees of Windham Community Memorial Hospital has been paid in settlement of a complaint, state Labor Commissioner Betty L. Tianti announced.

The money represented unpaid overtime earnings of 1,251 current and former hospital staff members with payments to individuals ranging from $16 to $6,358.

Tianti said Wednesday.

The year-long arbitration and auditing of the hospital's wage payment records covered the period from July 31, 1982, through Sept. 27, 1986.

State Department of Labor investigators concluded that the hospital had failed to pay workers for hours spent on the job both before and after their regular shifts.

Prague's bill delayed

HARTFORD — A tough drunken driving bill that called for on-the-spot license suspensions for drivers who refused a sobriety test or registered a blood alcohol level of 0.1 percent or higher suffered a setback when it was returned to committee.

Rep. Edith Prague, D-Columbia, said the House action Wednesday did not mean the bill's demise, although she had hoped to keep it out of the Judiciary Committee because of opposition from high-ranking committee members.

"This bill will come out of this committee," Prague said. "If it doesn't, people will have to answer to their constituents."

Divers tell about saw

NEW LONDON — Police divers have testified about their discovery of a key piece of prosecution evidence in the state's case against Richard Crafts, accused of killing his wife and disposing of her body through a wood chipper.

"I observed a bright orange color and immediately recognized it as a chain saw," said Trooper Paul Krissavage, a member of the state police diving team, recalled from the stand Wednesday.

State Department of Labor investigators testified about the discovery in January 1987.

Property tax bill heads to House

By Judd Everhart
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — Opponents of a controversial property tax relief bill, most of them business lobbyists and members of Gov. William A. DiBella's staff, are signaling Democrats to revive the working to kill or at least revise the measure in the House.

The Senate approved the bill on a 23-18 vote Wednesday.

The House Speaker Irving J. Stoberg, D-New Haven, says the vote will be close and won't predict whether it will make it through the House.

In the hours after the Senate vote, O'Neill staffers were working the House floor while business lobbyists buttonholed House members at their home and went for the chamber.

The governor has said he will veto the bill if it clears the House because of its "homestead exemption," which would exempt up to the first $25,000 of the value of residential and commercial property from local property taxes.

"It's going to mean tax increases for business," said Anita Scheper-Hughes, spokeswoman for the Connecticut Business and Industry Association. "We will mount a full effort to defeat the bill in the House."

The measure is designed to provide relief in those towns undergoing revaluation, which often results in dramatic tax increases for residential property owners. The bill also contains tax breaks for the elderly.

O'Neill proposed, and the bill contains, tax credits for residential property owners, starting at $200 and phased out over five years.

All elements of the bill would be up to local option, in any combination.

Stolberg has not when the bill

Stolberg has not when the bill will be brought up in the House.

Sen. Reginald J. Smith, R-New Haven, said the bill would provide little in the way of tax relief, because towns using the bill's provisions would be forced to raise their mill rates to keep their tax bases intact.

The bodies were found Wednesday aboard the 36-year-old, diesel-electric sub, the Navy's Atlantic Fleet Command said. The Navy refused to say when the bodies would be returned to grieving relatives ashore.

Sen. Fred H. Lovegrove Jr., R-Fairfield, said he was certain the matter would become an issue in this fall's legislative elections.

"The only thing we're doing is raising the mill rate," Smith said.

Sen. Fred H. Lovegrove Jr., R-Fairfield, said he was certain the matter would become an issue in this fall's legislative elections.

The Republicans tried to divide the bill so that its elements could be voted on separately, in hopes of excising the homestead exemptions from the bill. But the effort to divide the bill was voted down.

Senate OKs blocking of hostile takeovers

By Brent Lovmon
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — In moving to shield Connecticut corporations from hostile takeovers, the state Senate has given companies that refuse protection only one alternative: meet certain standards of responsible corporate conduct.

The chamber voted unanimously Wednesday to block for five years any hostile takeover that is approved by a target corporation's directors, including a majority of the directors who are not employed by the corporation.

The bill now goes to the House.

"In a quiet way, this is one of the most important bills we're going to have to deal with this session," said Senate Majority Leader Cornelius O'Leary, D-Windsor Locks. "This bill is going to have a fundamental impact on the economic stability in the state of Connecticut."

Some lawmakers had originally envisioned offering the protection only to companies that subscribed to such standards.

Business leaders this session pleaded for some protection from hostile takeovers, saying that corporate raiders can, once in control of a corporation, strip it of its assets, leaving a weakened company unable to compete.

Corporations could only reject the protections offered by the bill if they signed onto guidelines for responsible corporate conduct established under the Connecticut Partnership Compact.

The bill creates a commission of business and labor leaders and public officials to establish the guidelines, which would cover areas like worker safety, affirmative action and community and societal responsibilities.

Some lawmakers had originally envisioned offering the protection only to companies that subscribed to such standards.

Arab guerrillas killed

JERUSALEM — Two Arab guerrillas who infiltrated Israel and wounded a truck driver before being killed by Israeli soldiers picked one of the most vulnerable spots along Israel's border with Lebanon, a military analyst said.

The infiltration on Wednesday was the second by guerrillas in as many days. Also Wednesday, an army report concluded that a 15-year-old female Jewish settler whose death in the occupied lands raised a furor was killed by a bullet from a careless Israeli guard, not by stones thrown by Palestinians.

Meeting on acid rain

WASHINGTON — Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney came to Washington seeking more U.S. action to reduce the acid rain that he likens to "dumping garbage" on his country, but he got no promises from President Reagan.

During a one-hour meeting on Wednesday, Reagan held up the administration's 7-year-old position that more research is needed before targets are set for reducing the pollution blamed for acid rain.

Bonefish in tow

NORFOLK, Va. — Salvage crews took the stricken USS Bonefish in tow after striking the bodies of three crewmen aboard the submarine, apparently killed when explosions and fire filled the vessel with toxic smoke and gases.

The bodies were found Wednesday aboard the 36-year-old, diesel-electric sub, the Navy's Atlantic Fleet Command said. The Navy refused to say when the bodies would be returned to grieving relatives ashore.

Threats about strike

WARSAW, Poland — An organizer of Poland's largest work stoppage since martial law stifled Solidarity 8 1/2 years ago said managers threatened during negotiations today to have riot police end the strike.

On Wednesday, the second day of the stoppage by thousands of workers at the huge Lenin steel works outside the southern city of Krakow, strikers rejected a government offer that nearly met their demand for a 50 percent pay increase.

In Warsaw, the government's chief spokesman, Jerzy Urban, said he would not be surprised if the labor unions called for a general strike.

Stella Nickell, testifying Wednesday at her U.S. District Court trial, quoted her husband, Bruce, as saying before he collapsed at their home June 5, 1986.

SEATTLE — The woman accused of killing her husband with a cyanide-spiked painkiller tearfully told a courtroom that she watched him collapse, never knowing that he was dying.

"Babe, I feel like I'm going to pass out," Stella Nickell, testifying Wednesday at her U.S. District Court trial, quoted her husband, Bruce, as saying before he collapsed at their home June 5, 1986.

Population could double

WASHINGTON — The world population could double to more than 10 billion people within four decades, say researchers who contend previous predictions of a slowdown appear to be wrong.

"The overall world population is growing faster than had been projected in the late 1970s and early '80s," said Carl Hanb of the private Population Reference Bureau.

The new billion could be reached by 1988, said Hanb, adding, "That's really fast."

Program on track

WASHINGTON — The step-by-step search for a defense in space against Soviet ballistic missiles is on track and the first phase of the Star Wars program will be technically deployable between 1985 and 2000, a senior U.S. negotiator said today.

In a prepared speech to a major defense contractors group, Edward L. Rovny said the program is "not only alive but healthy and thriving" in such areas as developing technology that can discriminate between Soviet decoys and nuclear warheads targeted on the United States.

Vacancies are a concern

WASHINGTON — Federal prosecutors are increasingly concerned about vacancies at the top of the Justice Department which Attorney General Edwin Meese III has been unable to fill for nearly a month.

U.S. attorneys held a lengthy discussion about the vacancy in the department's No. 2 post, concluding in an informal vote that they want one of their colleagues, rather than someone from outside the department, to fill the position, said three department sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The consensus at Tuesday's meeting at the Justice Department was that Robert Ulrich, the U.S. attorney in Kansas City, should be chosen by Meese to become deputy attorney general, said the sources.

Ulrich is chairman of the U.S. attorneys advisory committee, but was not in the room at the time of the discussion by the panel's 15 or so members, the sources said.

Democrats urged to revitalize bill

By Mike Robinson
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Trade Representative said today President Reagan will veto a massive trade bill passed by the Senate and called on congressional Democrats to revive it "very quickly" without a controversial plan-closing provision.

"We need a trade bill this year," Clayton K. Yeutter said on NBC-TV's "Today" program.

"There are a lot of good things in that legislation, so if a couple of necessary corrections are made and the bill comes back, I'm really quite confident the president would sign it," he said.

The Senate approved the bill 63-36 Wednesday. That left Democrats at least three votes short of the 60-vote majority needed to enact their version over Reagan's objections.

The bill would streamline the system under which the United States imposes import curbs to protect U.S. industries threatened by foreign-made goods. Other provisions range from billions of dollars in agricultural subsidies to repeal of the windfall profits tax on oil companies. Also included are sanctions against Toshiba Corp. of Japan and Kongsberg Vapenfabrik of Norway for selling submarine-silencing equipment to the Soviet Union.

Reagan keeps low profile

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has chosen a low-profile role at the Republican National Convention that will crown George Bush as his would-be successor, administration and Republican Party sources say.

Reagan is waiting to give Bush a formal endorsement, but presidential spokesman Martin Fitzwater said nothing should be made of that.

Fitzwater said Reagan talked campaign strategy privately with Bush over lunch Wednesday and said the president plans to help wherever he can.

Curbs on overseas shipment

Curbs on overseas shipment of high-tech equipment would be eased. The government would be barred from buying goods from countries that freeze out U.S. exports and the president empowered to halt any corporate merger or takeover on national security grounds.

The bill had cleared the House last week with more than enough votes to override a veto. But after Democrats fell short in the Senate, Reagan made his veto intention clear.

Asked what he planned to do with the measure, he replied: "Just what I promised."

Danforth said the chief problem in the Senate was the provision to require all but the smallest employers to give 60-day notice of plant closings and large-scale layoffs.

Judge threatens to drop charges against North

By James Rowley
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The judge in the Iran-Contra case is threatening to dismiss charges against Oliver North and three other defendants unless the Reagan administration stops withholding key documents.

The defendants are charged with conspiring to defraud the United States by illegally diverting money from secret U.S. arms sales to Iran to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels when such assistance was banned by law.

Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten denied there was any deliberate foot-dragging in preparing the documents for defense review.

"There is certainly no attempt being made to impede the process in any way," Korten said. "We're talking about a large volume of material here that needs careful examination."

Representatives of the Justice, State and Defense departments, as well as the White House and CIA "are working as fast as they can to process the documents," Korten said.

Under the Classified Information Procedures Act the government agencies that produced the documents, not the prosecutor, has ultimate control over the material.

Kidd officer: Gulf action 'tense'

By Mark Seovv
The Associated Press

WEST HAVEN — The best way to describe action in the Persian Gulf is "tense," according to an officer on the USS Kidd, a Navy guided missile destroyer that took part in last fall's bombardment of an Iranian oil platform.

"Normally it is very busy and hectic because we had to identify all of the aircraft, ships and boats and classify them," said Lt. Jg. Frederic A. Priskey, said Wednesday.

"That was the hard part, keeping track of them and letting anybody surprise you," Priskey said during a news media tour of the Kidd, at anchor in Long Island Sound, five miles off the coast of West Haven.

"I would say 'tense' is the best single word to describe the gulf," Priskey said as he led the tour at the beginning of a four-day stopover.

The 320-member crew who were coming ashore for what town officials called a "hero's welcome," said they are prepared to return to the Persian Gulf if duty calls.

"We are always preparing and prepared to take on any mission that is within our capability at any time and that's true of any ship in the Atlantic Fleet," Cmdr. Phillip M. Ballew, the commanding officer, said in an interview.

"If the possibility arose that the Kidd would be needed for some-warships that destroyed two Iranian oil platforms in the Rostam oilfields of the gulf on Oct. 19, 1987, in retaliation for an Oct. 16 missile attack on the U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti tanker Sea Isle City.

The 563-foot vessel was also accompanied by the destroyer Bridgeton when it hit a mine in the Persian Gulf in July 1987.

The only surprise group that accompanied the Bridgeton struck a mine. Martin said the Kidd was hit about 300 feet off the tanker's port side when there was an explosion.

About seven feet below the waterline, the mine ripped a roughly 200-foot hole in the 1,200-foot tanker's bow. No injuries were caused by the explosion.

"You couldn't see anything because the Bridgeton was struck down below the waterline," Martin said. "We received a report from the Bridgeton that she struck something. We had no confirmation at that point that it had hit a mine."

Three months later, the Kidd led a strike against the oil platforms, although the crew did know of plans until 24 hours before the raid, Martin said.

Platform workers were given 20 minutes to clear off before the Navy vessels opened fire.

"It didn't take many bullets before that thing was in flames," said Lt. Christopher Young of Washington, Conn.

Low-level waste dump site planned for area

NEW HAVEN (AP) — At least one disposal site for low-level radioactive waste will be picked in the Connecticut-New Jersey area by 1991, and voters will have no say about where it will be located, officials said at a public hearing.

The state's first meeting Wednesday of the Northeast Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Commission began the series of steps that will bring the region into compliance with federal guidelines for dealing with the waste.

The five-member commission will determine what kind of site is needed, and once the determination is made, the bill is in the court of the Connecticut Hazardous Waste Management Service.

The service will choose the location of the disposal sites, according to Kevin McCarthy, the Connecticut chairman of the commission. The service is no relation to a similarly named unit of the state Department of Environmental Protection.

"The commission has no siting responsibilities whatsoever," McCarthy said.

The nation's three present sites in Nevada, Washington and South Carolina will stop accepting waste in five years, and Connecticut and New Jersey have to develop jointly their own facilities.

The audience of about 20 included private citizens and members of environmental groups.

Dukakis, Bush eye November battle

By Laura King
The Associated Press

George Bush, the Republican presidential nominee in all but name, expressed eagerness to debate Michael Dukakis and challenge the Democratic front-runner to "fire away," Dukakis did just that, using the Iran-Contra affair as ammunition, and added that he'd be "delighted" to debate.

Jesse Jackson, meanwhile, said his big loss to Dukakis in Tuesday's Pennsylvania primary did not mean he was out of the Democratic contest.

"This is a tight race... It is closer now than ever before," Jackson said as he campaigned in Ohio, where 159 delegates are at stake in Tuesday's contest. He had a series of stops around the state today.

Indiana and the District of Columbia also vote Tuesday, offering 79 and 16 Democratic delegates respectively.

"We know how to win," Jackson told a crowd of 5,000 at a rally in Cincinnati on Wednesday night. "We've come a long way." Bush now has more than enough delegates to assure him the GOP nomination. His boss, President Reagan, is holding off on a formal endorsement but the White House indicated that one is near.

Republican Party and administration sources said Reagan planned to play a low-key role at the GOP's convention in August to avoid upstaging Bush. The sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the president would address the convention on Tuesday night — Monday, Aug. 15 — and then leave the next morning for California.

On the Democratic side, Dukakis remained reluctant to describe himself as the likely nominee despite a string of wins and a widening delegate lead. Any reference to a fall faced with Bush is cautiously qualified with an "if."

Dukakis was sounding increasingly relaxed and confident. He sent the Boston Bruins hockey team a telegram Wednesday following a win over the Montreal Canadiens that advanced them to the semifinals in the Stanley Cup series.

Manageable government for Bolton

A subcommittee of the commission that is studying the Bolton Town Charter has suggested considering a council/manager form of the government to replace the selectmen/town meeting/board of finance government under which Bolton now operates.

In support of the recommendation, the subcommittee chairman argues that within five years the job of running Bolton as it continues to grow may become "unmanageable" for the five part-time selectmen.

A great many steps would have to be taken before that dramatic change in the Bolton's form of government could take place. They include public hearings and ultimately, of course, approval by town voters in a referendum.

The process should involve a number of different approvals because the change has serious consequences. It should not be made unless it has wide popular support by townspeople who understand its implications and are ready to accept them.

As the subcommittee chairman, Robert Lessard, says, the council/manager government would provide a greater degree of administrative professionalism.

But the council/manager government does not provide a number of democratic checks and balances that Bolton people have become accustomed to in their town government. In its most effective form, council/manager government concentrates almost all the administrative authority in the hands of a professional public administrator and almost all the policy-making authority in the hands of a single elected council, including the power to set the entire town budget. If too many deviations from that formula are permitted, council/manager government can get bogged down as badly as any other kind of local government.

Recent Bolton history shows the town should be looking toward a more streamlined and effective form of local government to avoid some of the problems it has had. But if the town does adopt a council/manager government, its political leaders and its citizens should be prepared to make some adjustments in their attitude toward their local government. And they should not expect it to be a perfect solution to all administrative problems, as Manchester's experience with its recent failed tax revaluation shows.

Stop harassing the country club

To the Editor:

I am a taxpayer in the town of Manchester. I play golf. I am not a member of the Manchester Country Club.

I am really fed up with the exaggerated comments and unsubstantiated generalities being thrown around by people like Mr. Hooker. He claims municipal golf courses throughout New England are profitable. I've seen the 1986 city of Hartford reporting that Goodwin and Kenev municipal golf courses are losing half a million dollars per year.

Wouldn't it be great if these same two town administrators could come up with ways to save money and improve services?

A simple and practical way would be to sell the Buckland firehouse to the Eighth Utilities District for approximately $700,000. This money could then be used to replace and update some of the antiquated firefighting equipment that the town now has. The equivalent of nine firemen now stationed at the firehouse could then be used to fill in for firemen stationed at the town's other firehouses who are out sick, on vacation, etc. This would nearly eliminate the proposed $300,000 overtime budget. The end result would be better service and equipment for less cost.

I sincerely hope our town directors will put their political differences aside and adopt a proposal such as this rather than increase taxes unnecessarily.

Don't raise taxes for more medics

To the Editor:

As a town of Manchester taxpayer, it bothers me that two administrators, Town Manager Robert Weiss and town Fire Chief John Rivona, are proposing to spend a great deal of money for something of a questionable need.

I'm referring to the proposed second paramedic within the town fire department. They are proposing this unit because the current unit is unable to respond immediately to less than 3 percent of the calls that come in. I can't understand the need for this unit, as the Manchester Ambulance Service has offered to cover these few calls with its own paramedic unit.

These administrators are claiming that to staff this second unit with eight people would only require the hiring of three additional personnel, as the other five would be current firemen. Does this mean that the town fire department is now overstuffed by five firemen? If so, why does their overtime budget exceed $300,000 a year?

Crash victim gets nothing but sympathy

WASHINGTON — On the morning of Dec. 4, an American fighter pilot bailed out of his crippled plane and splashed safely into the Mediterranean. He was lucky, but a family on the ground was not. The pilotless plane veered back over a coastal town in Lebanon and smashed into the home of Abdo Tabet.

The incident is a lingering reminder of the bungled U.S. air attack on Syria. Because of it, Tabet lost his wife and his home, but he has yet to receive anything more than condolences from the U.S. Navy.

Children first, tenants second

To the Editor:

After attending the Manchester Board of Education meeting on Monday night, I was appalled at the apathy and lack of advocacy of the board members. Only Dr. Gavin appeared interested in pursuing further the partial opening of Highland Park School.

The board's main concern is that of the current tenants of the building rather than the elementary school children. The inability to find alternate space for these occupants within the next 18 months is incredible.

Rather than rubber-stamping Dr. Kennedy's recommendations, the board should evaluate his ability to manage the school system.

Duke looks the part, but can he play it?

The question in Democratic politics is whether the Duke can make small and skinny pay off. As a people we have a predilection for tall politicians, although from time to time a person of run-like stature is able to claim the voter's fancy.

But the Duke has also saddled himself with another yawning burden — he is advertising himself as a "manager." To most of us this translates into words like accountant, consultant, comptroller and office manager. Not fun-type guys, but at least the Duke's supporters can say that their man looks the part he wants to play. Not since Calvin Coolidge have we had a presidential candidate less cast in the heroic mold. Even Harry Truman, in his wide-lapelled, double-breasted suits and gray fedoras had a game-cock nobility about him in the eyes of many of his contemporaries.

"Give 'em hell, Harry," they shouted at Truman during his whistle-stop campaign of 40 years ago. It is hard to imagine a Dukakis crowd crying for him to turn up the gas, and harder yet to imagine this son of Greek immigrant parents doing so. Perhaps he thinks any deviation from a kind of emotionally squashed WASP norm might give the impression that the children of immigrants had brought with them the flamboyance and effervescence of other climes.

He who falls to give people goose bumps is judged deficient in leadership qualities. He lacks charisma. If I may be permitted the use of that overworked, silly word, "No doubt about it, the Duke's inspirational powers are decidedly deficient. But this may be the year when a manager can sell himself to the electorate.

It won't be easy. For the past 60 years the promise to "cut the waste and run the government efficiently" has been a stock phrase in everybody's stump speech. Even Jimmy Carter, a man who let administration slip out and away from him during his years in office, campaigned for the job with the promise that he would bring the federal budget under control. Ronald Reagan's opinion on government operations needs no repeating, yet in the waning months of his second administration it is obvious to anyone filling out a tax form or buying a postage stamp that seven years under his direction has left government as costly and ineffectual as it was the day he took office.

If anyone was swept into office with a mandate to make government work, it was Ronald Reagan. In his first years in office he faced a crowd Congress which would have accepted any request to change the laws to streamline bureaucracy and give force and effect to the huge apparatus named Washington City. Yet he never made good on his campaign promises, often never even tried.

Instead of getting rid of the Department of Education as he said he would, he will probably leave office having burdened the nation with yet one more unnecessary Cabinet-level department, this one for veterans. Reagan arrived with cadres of corporate executives who were "going to run the government like a business," with apparatuses from the reactionary think tanks, yet now that his time has almost passed, you look around and see nothing was accomplished; nothing, evidently, was attempted.

In the end the reason that Reagan and his friends failed to clean up the government and make it run right was that they don't believe in government. They don't want it to run right because they don't want it even if it's doing its job.

But there are several hundred millions of us who don't have that luxury. Be it the mail, be it drug enforcement or Medicare, we must have the services government is supposed to provide. That's where the Duke might come in. Americans might harken to a candidate who could convince us that he was determined to spend a term in office being the chief executive in something beside name only.

Perhaps the Duke could present himself as the candidate who doesn't want to abolish government but who wants to make it work. Nobody else will. Straightening out the Departments of Interior, Commerce and Health and Welfare is not inspirational work, but nothing's more necessary. It demands burning the midnight oil, not burning up the airwaves with patriotic blather. It requires dogged, gut work. It needs the dull administrative skills. Heaven only knows the Duke looks the part, but we're yet to discover if he can play it.

Striped dolphin dies

MYSTIC — A striped dolphin that was rescued off the Long Island and brought to the Mystic Maritime Aquarium died of liver and kidney ailments, an aquarium spokesman said.

The 8-foot-long, 271-pound male died Wednesday after being shipped to the aquarium Monday when it was sighted in the waters off eastern Long Island.

The animal underwent a series of tests that indicated it was suffering from a liver disorder and dysfunction of the kidneys, according to aquarium spokesman George T. Donnelly.

The striped dolphin was the first live specimen of the species to be brought to the aquarium, giving researchers a rare opportunity to study the mammal. Data on the animal's chemistry and bacteria cultures was collected before it died, said Donnelly, and recordings were made of the high pitched sounds dolphins emit to find food and navigate themselves.

SO FAR, SO GOOD — A spin-casting furnace revolves at the University of Arizona's Steward Observatory Mirror Laboratory during the making of an 11½-foot telescope mirror Tuesday. Astronomers and engineers said the glass mirror looks good, but it will take six weeks to cool before it can be removed from the mold and the success of the project determined.

Fat people sluggish

BOSTON — New evidence that chubby people have sluggish nervous systems may help explain one of the great injustices of dieting — why some people burn up calories more quickly than others.

The study published today supports the theory that many fat people get that way because their bodies use up less energy, even when they are doing the same things as ordinary-size people. So they need less food.

Sun screen needed

SKILLMAN, N.J. — A half million Americans will get skin cancer this year, according to The American Academy of Dermatology, and one in seven Americans will get skin cancer in his or her lifetime.

Most people receive 80 percent of their sun exposure by age 20. Because youngsters spend so much time out-of-doors and because sun exposure and resultant skin damage are cumulative, pediatricians and dermatologists are pointing to children as the best time to prevent skin damage, including severe sunburn, skin cancer and premature skin aging that begins to appear decades later.

Doctor, why am I so tired?

Fourth in a series
By Dr. Richard N. Podell

No one knows why nature requires that humans sleep. One research scientist remarked only half in jest that sleep is nature's way of keeping us from roaming in the dark and bumping into things.

If so, the allure of sleep was dealt a blow when Thomas A. Edison invented the electric light and Johnny Carson hit late-night television. In fact, modern school children reported a full hour's less sleep each day than did children surveyed in 1960. Underinspired is a way of life for many busy Americans.

Number of hours slept is a useful but imperfect guide for deciding if you are short of sleep. You can suspect you sleep too little if you usually sleep much less than average — six hours or less on most nights.

Another indicator is a change in sleeping pattern. If you are tired after 45 minutes less sleep than in the past, you're probably getting too little rest.

A third clue that you might be short of sleep is the presence of factors that might increase your need for sleep. Athletes often feel they need more sleep when in heavy training. Sustained mental work or emotional stress can increase the amount of sleep needed to feel well. Sleep disrupted by physical pain and emotional distress can increase your needs.

Few working people wake up without an alarm and feeling well. So don't worry if you hate your first 15 minutes awake. However, if you are not alert and feeling well by the time you dress, consider too little sleep a possible cause. If you can't wake up until you've had coffee, the problem may be caffeine addiction.

Commit yourself to a prescription of more sleep. Increase your nightly sleep time by 45 minutes for two weeks, and see if you feel better.

If you have difficulty falling asleep earlier or can't wake up later, ask your physician to consider a brief trial of mild sleeping medicine to help you "reset" your personal clock for an earlier bedtime. Another useful alternative might be an afternoon nap.

Millions of Americans know they do not get enough sleep — and not because they love late-night TV. Some can't fall asleep, and others wake at 3 a.m. and can't go back to sleep. They suffer from insomnia.

National surveys find a third of adult Americans have some problem with insomnia. At least 15 percent of us consider our problem serious and chronic.

If you can't sleep for one or two nights every week, you have moderate insomnia. If you suffer three nights a week or more, your problem is certainly serious enough to do something about.

Taking 30 minutes or more to fall asleep should be considered abnormal. Reawakening during the night for 30 minutes or more is also abnormal, although waking during the night is not abnormal in itself.

Some individuals think they have insomnia

Death rate linked to tight regulation of some hospitals

BOSTON — Hospital death rates in states with tight-fisted governmental controls are up to 10 percent higher, according to a study published today that prompted one doctor to comment, "You can't have a Cadillac for Chevy prices."

The study suggests, but doesn't prove, that patient care suffers because hospitals in more cost-regulated states may try to hold down costs by laying off staff, eliminating services or spurning expensive equipment.

"There is cause for some concern," said Stephen M. Shortell, the study's director. "There is no need to frighten the public, but there is something here that does need to be dealt with."

In efforts to lower medical costs, many states have set up review procedures for hospital rate increases. Others have certificate of need programs. These require hospitals to get approval for expansions or major purchases, such as new diagnostic machines, that cost more than a specific amount, often $500,000 or $1 million.

The report did not provide a state-by-state breakdown. However, Shortell said that among the highest death rates were Washington, New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts.

Dr. Myron Peterson, head of pediatric intensive care at Boston's General Hospital, said he was not surprised by the findings. "The probe is focusing on whether a nurse was present — according to regulations — in the unit while the unidentified patient began bleeding April 2."

He said he believes the public does not understand the consequences of cutbacks in hospital spending.

"If people want to make the choice to cut costs and have less medical care, that's all right, but they ought to know the truth," Peterson said. "You can't have a Cadillac for Chevy prices. It's common sense. If you pay less, you get less."

Shortell, a health services researcher at Northwestern University, published his findings in the New England Journal of Medicine. They were based on the records of 214,639 patients in 981 hospitals in 45 states.

Shortell and his co-author, Dr. Edward F.X. Hughes, compared the actual death rates and the rates that would be expected based on the patient's ages, the severity of their illnesses and other factors.

They found that the ratio of actual to predicted death rates in states with the most stringent rate reviews were 6 percent to 10 percent higher than in the least tightly controlled states.

In states with the strictest procedures for reviewing appli-

State probes dialysis death

HARTFORD (AP) — Two agencies are investigating the bleeding death of a patient while undergoing treatment in the kidney dialysis unit at Hartford Hospital, officials said.

The probe is focusing on whether a nurse was present — according to regulations — in the unit while the unidentified patient began bleeding April 2.

In an interview, Shortell recommended a greater effort to monitor hospital death rates, although they vary in how severely they restrain hospital spending. Some of the programs, he said, permit such low levels of spending that "it forces hospitals to go through more hoops and discourages innovation. Some hospitals are not even applying to upgrade equipment. It may mean that it has some adverse effect on patient outcomes."

New refrigerators more energy efficient

By the Editors of Consumer Reports

Just because refrigerators today look much as they did 20 years ago doesn't mean they haven't changed. When Consumer Reports' engineers tested 16 models recently, they found that the units used 27 percent less energy than did comparable models of less than a decade ago. That's a welcome improvement, since the refrigerator is the most energy-greedy appliance in most households.

The tested refrigerators are sold under 16 different brand names, but represent only five corporations. General Electric owns Hotpoint; Maytag owns Admiral, Jenn-Air and Magic Chef (and supplies Montgomery Ward); Raytheon owns Caloric and Amana; Whirlpool owns KitchenAid and White; and Whiting Consolidated Industries owns Frigidaire, Gibson, Kelvinator, Tappan and White-Westinghouse. Siblings from each corporation usually perform similarly. The models tested all had their freezers on top, a style that accounts for about two-thirds of the market.

According to the engineers, a refrigerator should hold foods at about 37 degrees F in its main compartment and 0 degrees F in its freezer. Frozen beef, for example, keeps nicely for 13 or 14 months at 0 degrees, but only for about five months at 10 degrees. The zero level also helps offset the warming effects of an open door, the defrost cycle and warm food waiting to freeze.

Some models couldn't hold the ideal temperature when working in a 70-degree room. For instance, the freezer of the Sears Kenmore 66881 and the similar Whirlpool ET18AKXS averaged 6 degrees and couldn't be set colder without chilling the refrigerator compartment excessively. And the four Maytag-made models tested produced only about 4 degrees in the freezer at their coldest setting. These same six models also had troubles when the room temperature was boosted to 90 degrees.

A good refrigerator should also cool evenly. If it doesn't, you could wind up with frozen milk from a too-cold corner or softened ice cream from a too-warm freezer-door shelf. While most of the models didn't vary much in temperature, three units — the Gibson, Kelvinator and Tappan — each had hot spots on the freezer door that were 15 degrees warmer than the main area.

Top-rated was the Amana TCR1, which averaged $720 in price. It displayed the best combination of energy efficiency, performance and convenience. Other Amana models

Douglas defends marriage

Michael Douglas

LONDON — Oscar-winning actor Michael Douglas insists his marriage is intact, and suggests rumors that he and his wife, Diandra, are splitting may be an unhappy spinoff of his role as an adulterer in "Fatal Attraction."

Douglas, who recently won an Oscar for Best Actor for his latest movie "Wall Street," spoke to reporters Wednesday before a London premiere of the film, at which Princess Diana was a guest.

Asked if his marriage to Diandra, a 36-year-old model, was over as some reports have said, Douglas said, "It's not true and I really do not know how any of it got started."

"I suppose it was doing pictures like 'Fatal Attraction,' a movie about how a family was thrown into crisis by the husband's adultery. Asked whether he saw anything of his own personality in the character he played in the movie, he retorted, "How long have you been married? Do you feel around?"

When the reporter declined to answer, he went on to the next question.

Segal awards presented

NEW YORK — Two young instrumentalists were wealthier to the tune of $4,000 today as recipients of the Martin E. Segal Award, named for the former chairman of the Lincoln Center board.

"They are our hope for the future, and also for civilization," George Weisman, chairman of Lincoln Center, said Wednesday in presenting $4,000 awards to trumpeter Richard Kelley, 21, a sophomore at the Juilliard School, and George Wellington, 29, bassist, performing with the New York Philharmonic.

The award was announced in 1986 when Segal retired as chairman of the Lincoln Center board. MoneyTo help further careers of young artists connected in some way with Lincoln Center was donated by the board and Segal's family.

The first recipients of the award were filmmaker Anita Thatcher, whose work has been presented by the Film Society of Lincoln Center, and Karen Nolte, soprano in the New York Opera's national touring company. They received the award last year.

Ford earnings set record

DETROIT — Ford Motor Co. today reported a record first-quarter earnings of $1.6 billion, 9 percent over the same period of 1987, and attributed the increase to the company's efforts to improve quality and efficiency.

First-quarter worldwide earnings amounted to $3.30 per share, compared with $1.5 billion, or $2.87 per share, in the January-March period of last year.

Ford's U.S. first-quarter income was $1 billion, down $119 million from the same period last year, while foreign quarterly earnings were a record $300 million, up $350 million from the corresponding period last year, Ford said in a written statement.

"Our first-quarter earnings reflect the good balance of the overall Ford team effort," said Chairman Donald E. Petersen and Vice Chairman Harold A. Poling said in a statement.

FCC drops hookup bill hike

WASHINGTON — Computer users won't see a hike in telephone bills that had been considered by the Federal Communications Commission.

The FCC formally scrapped the unpopular provision, which would have added about $4.50 an hour to the cost for a computer user to link up electronically with an information provider, more than double the hookup price for some data bases.

In a statement issued Wednesday, the commission said it abandoned the idea in a vote last week because the information services industry is in a "uniquely complex period of transition."

The commission found virtually no support for its original plan to increase the costs. Computer users said the increased costs would drive many of them off the computer networks and crush a fledgling industry.

Defense jobs topic at GE

WAIKESHA, Wis. — General Electric Co. Chairman Donald E. Petersen and Vice Chairman Harold A. Poling said in a statement, the company's annual meeting by discussing GE's bright future for the next decade.

But after the opening remarks, most of the congressional attention centered on GE's involvement in the nuclear weapons industry.

The meeting was held Wednesday in Waikesha, the home of the company's Medical Systems division, and GE's stockholders overwhelmingly rejected several proposals that were related to the company's defense contract work.

The discussion at the meeting dealt little with strict business issues and instead covered topics ranging from abortion to South Africa.

Outside the meeting, a protest against GE's military work was organized by a Boston-based group called INFACT, which has helped lead a national boycott against GE products.

Personal incomes rising

WASHINGTON — Americans' personal incomes, propelled by profit-sharing payments in the auto industry, shot up 0.8 percent in March, the biggest increase in three months, while consumer spending posted a healthy advance as well, the government said Wednesday.

The Commerce Department said consumer spending rose 0.7 percent, after an even stronger 0.8 percent rise in February.

The spending and incomes report provided further evidence that the key consumer sector was continuing to power economic growth despite the fears that had been raised following the October stock market collapse.

In a report Tuesday, the government said consumer spending, after adjusting for inflation, climbed at an annual rate of 3.8 percent from January through March, providing most of the strength for overall economic growth of 2.3 percent during the first quarter.

Murdoch to sell TV station

BOSTON — Rupert Murdoch has put his Boston television station up for sale because he says he would have difficulty receiving a government waiver allowing him to keep both the station and the Boston Herald.

The move comes less than a month after a federal appeals court struck down a Communications Commission ruling extending temporary waivers to its cross-ownership rule.

LOS ANGELES — Security Pacific National Bank will close 40 to 60 branches or up to 10 percent of the company's total number over the next three to six months, officials for the state's second-largest bank announced.

Executives with Los Angeles-based bank, who made the announcement Wednesday, declined to say how many of the bank's 10,000 employees would lose their jobs. They said some workers would be transferred to other branches and some vacant jobs would be left unfilled.

Broker pleads guilty in bank merger case

HARTFORD (AP) — A stockbroker pleaded guilty to wire fraud charges in a case involving the merger of two banks.

Arthur Silverman, 62, of West Hartford pleaded guilty Wednesday to five counts of wire fraud and mail fraud charges in the merger of the Suffolk Savings Bank and Coastal Savings Bank of Maine.

Silverman learned of secret merger discussions between the banks, and used the insider information to buy 1,200 shares of Coastal Savings stock for his personal account and those of his family, and realizing profits when the stock was sold at higher prices.

He also was charged with recommending the purchase of Coastal stock to clients and a co-worker.

Twardy said Silverman's case represents the first insider trading conviction in Connecticut.

Actor defends teacher

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. — Blair Underwood, who portrays the devious lawyer Jonathan Rollins on NBC-TV's "L.A. Law," came to the defense of his former acting teacher during a tenure hearing at West Virginia University.

"I know the kind of woman she is, and I would not be where I am today without her guidance and teaching," said Underwood, who studied under Angela D'Ambrosia while she was at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

D'Ambrosia applied for tenure at WVU in 1986 after teaching there for two years. Her request was denied and a state hearing examiner is conducting an appeals hearing, which is expected to conclude today.

Underwood, 23, said Wednesday that D'Ambrosia is one of two people he consults for advice about his work.

"Through her I have been able to grow as an actor and I really attribute my success to her teachings," Underwood said. "Coming here and testifying on her behalf in my way of giving back a little of what she has done for me."

Joining Underwood in his defense of D'Ambrosia was actress Lisa Waltz, who played Nora in the movie "Brighton Beach Memoirs." Waltz also studied with D'Ambrosia while the instructor was at Carnegie Mellon.

Mother is critical of store for giving credit to minors

Dr. Gott Peter Gott, M.D.

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: My daughter, who is substantially under 18 years old, unemployed but loves clothes, received a credit card from a major department store.

I telephoned the store's credit department and asked if there was an age requirement for those who applied for credit cards. I was told there was not. Then I asked if a person had to be employed in order to obtain a credit card. It was told no.

When I explained that my daughter was an unemployed student, I was told that if she were supported by a parent, that was the only "employment" necessary.

Abby, I am a single mother working full time to support myself and my daughter without financial aid, and I am struggling to stay afloat. I feel as though I have been stabbed in the back! I'd appreciate your comments.

Repeat of strep can't be avoided

DEAR DR. GOTT: Twice in the last year I've contracted a severe strep infection. Both times, it started abruptly with a 102-degree fever and settled in my right leg, causing an inflamed, tender rash. What can I do to prevent recurrence?

DEAR READER: Erysipelas is a diffuse infection of the skin, caused by streptococcus bacteria. For unknown reasons, the condition may recur. On occasion, a persisting focus of infection — such as athlete's foot — can harbor strep and provide a source of repeated infection. The treatment of choice for erysipelas is penicillin, which should be administered for a minimum of two weeks.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I take Tenormin for cluster and migraine headaches. What can you tell me about this drug?

DEAR READER: Tenormin (atenolol) is a long-acting beta-blocker that produces relaxation of blood vessels. It is extremely useful in treating hypertension and certain forms of heart disease. In some patients with migraine, it prevents headaches or reduces their frequency. By and large, it is a safe drug, but must be used with caution in people with asthma or heart failure.

Couple should seek advice of counselor

DEAR DR. REINISCH: I'm 55 and go with a man of 57. We get along very well, have a good sex life, and I am very much in love with him, but I'm having a little problem. I can't seem to have an orgasm. My partner seems to be very concerned about this, even though I tell him not to worry about it and our sex is very pleasurable to me. Is something wrong with me?

DEAR READER: Do you have a pelvic exam each year? If not, make an appointment (you should be doing this anyway) and ask the gynecologist if there is any physical problem that might block having orgasms. As the estrogen level drops around the time of menopause, many women experience genital changes. Taking estrogen and progestin hormones on a cyclic schedule can reverse many of these changes. Also, tell the gynecologist about all medications you take; some can reduce a woman's ability to have orgasms.

Once you've determined whether your physical health is involved, other questions must be addressed. Do you have orgasms at times other than during intercourse (such as by self-stimulation or by your partner touching you with his hands or means she must tell her partner what type of touching or other stimulation helps or hinders this process. A loving partner's role is to listen and carry out these suggestions — but he is not responsible for reading her mind or "giving" her orgasms by himself. Moreover, women differ in what helps or hinders their orgasmic response, so that the types of stimulation that one woman needs to have orgasms do not necessarily apply to a different woman.

If you decide you would like to try to work on having orgasms during intercourse, find a sex therapist or sex counselor. This person can tell you about the therapy programs designed to do this.

If this matter is not important to you, but your partner continues to worry about it despite your reassurances, suggest he talk with a therapist or counselor so that he can better understand why your orgasms are not important for judging whether or not he is a "real man" or a good lover.

Drexel chief takes fifth; workers subject of probe

WASHINGTON — Congressional investigators zeroed in today on whether Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. employees manipulated bond prices, after the firm's junk bond chief took the Fifth Amendment to avoid answering questions.

Drexel chief executive Frederick Joseph was appearing before a House panel one day after junk bond director Michael R. Milken testified that he had been under investigation for 18 months by a federal grand jury in New York City, which is reported to be conducting a massive probe of insider trading.

Both the firm and Milken have denied any wrongdoing. Joseph has not been subpoenaed, but subcommittee members said they expected him to testify. The firm has been supplying the subcommittee with documents.

Dingell said congressional investigators are concerned about three junk bond issues underwritten by Drexel in an offering in 1985 by of Beatrice Cos., an offering for the Phoenix, Ariz., based Testastore Corp., and another by Hanover Petroleum Corp.

He said the subcommittee has evidence that Drexel placed parts

Mizesko spins fourth no-hitter of the season

PORTLAND — It wasn't perfect, but Coventry High's Kim Mizesko spun his fourth no-hitter of the season in leading the Patriots to a 9-2 win over host Portland High Wednesday afternoon in Charter Oak Conference girls' softball action.

Mizesko, senior right-hander who has picked up all seven wins on the mound for the unbeaten Patriots, struck out 11 while walking four.

Portland, 5-3, scored both its runs in the first inning on an error, walk, wild pitch and errant toss by catcher Leslie Daneyh. "Kim then came back to strike out the next three," advised Coventry Coach Dick Page. "When she had to make good pitches, she did."

Linda Hewitt won her second varsity game, allowing five hits while walking two and striking out one.

Alison Barkowski singled and doubled to lead Glastonbury. Donna Murphy was the losing pitcher.

EC girls beaten

TRUMBULL — The story of the East Catholic-St. Joseph's girls' softball game Wednesday afternoon in Trumbull was Kadel pitcher Jess Loda.

Loda, besides striking out 11 and walking three, pitched a 10-2 victory for the Kadets. She also allowed two hits and scored two runs. Loda's first at-bat was a long home run.

The Eagles are 1-3 in the ACC and 6-4 overall while St. Joe's is 2-2 overall. East was scheduled to host Sacred Heart today at 3:30 p.m. at Robertson Park.

"She (Loda) is probably the best pitcher in the league," East Coach Jay McConville said. "She is a phenomenal player. She does everything."

St. Joe's led, 6-0 before East scored his two runs in the top of the fifth. After Sue Conannon, who took the pitching loss for the Eagles, walked, Brenda Bailey drilled a two-run triple. St. Joe's came back to score four runs in the bottom of the fifth to put the game away.

"Conannon was around the plate. She didn't have the support today," McConville said.

MHS wins again

The Manchester High girls' softball team made its two straight wins Wednesday afternoon with a 21-12 duke over Glastonbury High in interconference play at Fitzgerald Field.

Manchester is now 3-5 while the Tomahawks slide to 4-4. Manchester's next game is Friday at 3:30 p.m. against South Windsor High at Fitzgerald Field.

Glastonbury made a game of it in the sixth inning when it scored nine runs on seven hits, two walks and three Indian misuses.

Glastonbury scored one run in the first inning with Manchester coming back in the bottom of the stanza for seven runs on three hits, three walks and two Tomahawk errors. Ryan said he felt good about his no-hitter in two years and that doesn't mean he can't pitch another no-hitter.

The amazing 41-year-old fireballer came within two outs of what would have been the sixth no-hitter of his record-breaking career, then dejectedly went for a no-decision as the Astros beat the Philadelphia Phillies 3-2 Wednesday night.

"I'm disappointed," Ryan said. "It would have been my first complete game and shutout in quite a while. I don't even remember when my last one was. This last complete game was April 25, 1986."

"I'd just lost a no-hitter and won the game. I would have been disappointed. I let the lead get away, and I was one out away from winning the ballgame — a complete ballgame."

Ryan, who struck out nine, lost his no-hit bid when Mike Schmidt singled with one out in the ninth. With two out, Lance Parrish doubled home two unearned runs to tie the score. Ryan left for a pinch hitter in the bottom of the ninth.

In the Houston 10th, Glenn Davis singled with one out off reliever Kent Tekulve and sent to third on Kevin Bass' hit-and-run single. Alan Ashby was intentionally walked to load the bases and Craig Reynolds batted for Chuck Jackson. He hit a grounder near second base which shortstop Steve Bock's first playoff game in his life. Cardinals 2, Padres 1

Tom Brunansky hit his first National League home run and rookie Luis Alcazar had a run-off home run as the Cardinals snapped San Diego's four-game winning streak.

Brunansky led off the fifth with a homer off Jimmy Jones, ending the Padres' shutout string at 37 innings. The Cardinals made it 2-0 in the seventh when Brunansky reached first on third baseman Randy Ready's throwing error, took second on a wild pitch and third on a groundout, then scored when Alcazar bounced a single through a drawn-in infield.

Winner Bob Forsch took over for starter Greg Mahews, who left after three innings with a sore left shoulder. Forsch went 3-1-3, allowing just three hits and an unearned run, before needing help from Todd Worrell.

"When you come to a power ballclub and you're a power pitcher, you expect you to hit home runs," Brunansky said. "I had

Hooked on new addiction

I have a new addiction. After fishing for over 50 years, I've really hit a new facet of the sport and am hopelessly addicted. What is it? Tarpon fishing.

Let me tell you what happened to me. Last year, on my wife's spring break from school, we hit the Florida Keys to fish with Eugene Moriarty, who guides out of Islamorada in the Keys. Moriarty, no stranger to readers of this column, is an excellent bonefish, tarpon, and permit guide.

Unfortunately for us the tarpon, and bonefish were not too plentiful at the time we were fishing. After three days and a water was, which made conditions not too conducive to bonefishing, since you have to be able to spot the fish.

So we rigged up with bait (pin fish ... a remarkably tough bait fish that tarpon like to feed on) and a bobber and tried drifting over waters Moriarty knew tarpon would frequent on the change of a tide. All I could think of, was how similar bait fishing is for all species, whether they be salt-water or fresh.

The fishing was terribly slow no matter how Gene tried to put us over fish. And he did that. They just were not biting anything, although we could see some porpoises rolling every so often.

Suddenly, my bobber went down like a shot, and this monster barreled out of the water a good six feet, and the back down, stripping line as he went. I have to admit, I just stood there in the boat with my jaw hanging open while he peeled line so fast I couldn't see it go. Then up out of the water again, and "Goodbye Charlie, that was all she wrote." The fish was gone, and there I stood so shook I didn't know if I was about to have a heart attack. "Fish was a good 120 pounds, and six feet long. Was Moriarty's dry observation. "You should have set that hook three more times, and good and hard. They have a real hard mouth. They're tough fish to keep on a line.

Day two was not as good as day one. We saw fewer tarpon, more wind, but did enjoy seeing huge manta rays leap into the air, porpoises doing their thing, rolling and feeding, giant loggerhead turtles coming up for air, and all kinds of sea birds.

Day three, saw Moriarty and I out alone. Joyce had had enough of floating, and had gone exploring the Keys. We saw lots more tarpon. And lots more boats after them. First shot, a fish rolled at my bait but didn't take. Gene's rod, which was on all the time, told the same story. Fish rolling at bait but not taking. And then it happened. My bobber went down, the fish exploded out of the water, and I was hanging on for dear life as line peeled off the reel. Again, the line went so fast I couldn't see it go, but man, I could feel the power of that fish as he pulled against the drag. One more time he came out of the water, a good five feet, whole body flashing in the sun. What a sight! Back down with a tremendous splash. That was the jump that did me in. When he came down, out came the hook, and goodbye tarpon.

Well, that was it. Two fish in three days. None landed. Second fish guasted at 90 pounds. But although the fish "got away," I didn't. I'm hooked. Can't wait till next year.

Jazz wary of the Blazers

By Bill Barnard
The Associated Press

The fact that Portland won six more games than Utah and has the homecourt advantage in the first round of the NBA playoffs doesn't count for much with Blazers Coach Mike Schuler.

"When you beat a team four out of five times, twice in their own place, you've got to be considered the favorite," Schuler said of the Jazz, who travel to Portland for tonight's opener of their best-of-5 series.

But Jazz Coach Frank Layden is just as adamant that Utah's 4-1 advantage over Portland this season and its 7-1 regular-season finish won't help his team.

"I think it's a lot of baloney," Layden said. "First of all, we're playing a team that won 53 games; that's no little feat. And when you get to the playoffs, the home team becomes a bigger factor."

"Regardless of what happened in the regular season, my feeling is they've got to have the edge."

The Utah-Portland game is one of four NBA series openers tonight. Elsewhere, it's Washington at Detroit, Cleveland at Chicago and Houston at Dallas.

On Friday, Milwaukee is at Atlanta, New York at Boston, Seattle at Denver and San Antonio at the Los Angeles Lakers.

Dallas, denied a chance to get even with Seattle for last year's NBA title, still believes it has something to prove against the Rockets.

"We have the incentive to do better in the playoffs this time," Dallas coach Jerry Sloan said. "The loss to the Sonics was a fluke. We'll show everybody that this year."

"I don't want to go through another summer of asking what happened," guard Rolando Blackman said.

"Dallas' first priority against Houston will be to slow down Akeem Oluajunwa, who has averaged 26.5 points and 9.8 rebounds against the Mavs this year. For his career Oluajunwa is 24.4 and 10.5.

Houston has been successful against Mark Aguirre, who shot only 38 percent from the field with Rodney McCray guarding him. McCray has held Aguirre to 20 points per game, five below his average.

The Bulls, with eight more victories this season than Cleveland, remember that the Cavaliers beat them Friday in a regular-season game.

"I think it gave them more confidence," Chicago Coach Doug Collins said of Cleveland's 107-103 victory. "But it probably sent a message to our guys, too — that this team is for real and we can't just walk in and beat them."

"We hope we can get off to a good start," said Michael Jordan, the NBA's scoring champion. "But we have to come out here and play, and not just relax because we're playing at home."

The Bulls are coming off their first 50-game winning season in 14 years, with a 50-32 record. Jordan won the NBA scoring title with the 35-point average, and Charles Oakley narrowly missed the league rebounding title despite grabbing 35 against the Cavaliers last week.

The Cavaliers finished 42-40, their best record in 10 seasons, but they probably won't be able to use Ron Harper, who sprained his right ankle Friday in the victory over the Bulls. The 6-6 Harper, who averaged 15 points a game, had been assigned to guard Jordan.

Manchester Mayor Peter DiRosa is scheduled to throw out the first ball.

Following the ceremonies the schedule is: Boland Brothers vs. Dairy Queen, 10 a.m.; Grames Printing vs. Ansaldo's at 1 p.m., and the Oilers vs. Moriarty Brothers at 4 p.m.

Chlxos may be moving

CHICAGO — An agreement in principle for a $10 million relocation loan has been reached between the Chicago White Sox and a financial services holding company if the team agrees to a long-term commitment to Florida, a company executive said Wednesday.

Tom Krzesinski, group vice president for Florida Progress of St. Petersburg, said the company would provide a $10 million bridge loan to the team to help it pay for the move to Comiskey Park to the Florida Suncoast Dome.

"I call it a commitment on our part, and the White Sox have agreed to it," Krzesinski said in a telephone interview Wednesday night from his Florida home. "But there's still a lot of things to be finalized."
