Mounties pluck Merrill from orchard

By Andrew Yurkowski
 Manchester Herald

Connecticut State Police plan to extradite career-criminal Frederick R. Merrill, who was captured in Canada Thursday after eluding police for 13 months following his escape last year from the state prison in Somers, police said today.

Marcy Stamm, a state police spokesman, said that a trooper would go to Canada, probably this weekend, to exchange information with Canadian police and to verify that the man captured is Merrill.

Sgt. John Murray, an officer in the major crime unit of the Toronto Metropolitan Police, said that the procedure for Merrill's extradition would depend on the nature of the charges against him in Connecticut.

"That's something we're going to have to look into," he said.

An officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, posing as an apple picker, took Merrill, 41, into custody Thursday afternoon in an orchard in Gagetown, New Brunswick, Stamm said. She said Merrill was armed with a bowie knife at the time of the capture and was taken into custody without incident.

Police were called to the orchard to investigate a dispute between Merrill and an orchard foreman, Stamm said.

Merrill, a Tolland native with a history of prison escapes, was reported missing from the Connecticut Correctional Institution in Somers on Aug. 23, 1987. He was being held in connection with the sexual assault of a South Windsor woman on March 11, 1987.

He also had been questioned in connection with the March 7, 1987, murder of Manchester resident 88-year-old Bernice B. Martin, but Stamm said Merrill faces a charge of first-degree escape in connection with his escape from Somers last year. In connection with South Windsor assault, he faces the following charges: first-degree sexual assault, first-degree burglary, first-degree unlawful restraint, threatening and sixth-degree larceny.

Merrill is to be transported this weekend from New Brunswick to Toronto, where police have a warrant charging him with breaking and entering in connection with a break-in there, Murray said. He said that Toronto police have information linking Merrill to two break-ins in that city and to consider him a suspect in break-ins and sexual assaults both in Toronto and in Peterborough, Ontario.

Murray said that Merrill would probably be arraigned in Toronto on Sunday.

Bolton aims 'to grow old gracefully'

Growing pains clash with farming roots

By Andrew J. Davis
 Manchester Herald

BOLTON — Continuing growth has put the future at stake as the town struggles to "grow old gracefully."

The Charter Revision Commission wants to change from a selectmen form of government to a town manager style. There's a two-classroom addition being built at Bolton Elementary School. The Board of Education wants to hire an architect to figure out costs for long-range school additions. The Board of Selectmen is desperate for more space in the town hall.

But how much will the town grow over the next few years, and what does that mean for government, schools, industry and the residents' way of life?

To town officials, change is inevitable, and it is up to the town to meet the challenges of growth directly. Robert Young, chairman of the Charter Revision Commission, is one who believes the town will continue to grow.

"I don't see any reason why it should stop growing," he said. "It's like saying you'd like to be a young forever. You have to grow old gracefully. You have to mature."

The growth in population — from 3,800 to 4,200 residents in 10 years — is one reason for the commission's suggestion to change the form of government, said Thomas Manning, member of the charter commission and the school board.

"We're anticipating that the changes will continue," Manning said. "That's the reason for the need for professionalism (in government)."

The transformation of Bolton from a farming community to a bedroom community for Hartford professionals has become dramatically clear since the opening of an interstate highway link in 1971, Manning said.

"That cut the time down so much (to Hartford), Bolton became a commuter town," he said. "It's no longer (a) farming community."

But not all townpeople like the growth, especially one farmer who remembers when the town was built on agriculture.

"When I started first grade, there were 40 farms in town," said Richard Rose, owner of Valleyview dairy farm, who was in first grade in 1944. "Eighty percent of the kids were from a farm. Now there's a dozen farms total in town."

Rose said the growth has gotten to the point

Crime down 3.4%, says state report

By Michele Noble
 Manchester Herald

While a state police report indicated that crime in Connecticut was up 3.8 percent last year, crime in Manchester was down 3.4 percent, despite two murders, according to the annual report entitled "Crime in Connecticut."

The survey compiles figures from seven of the most common crimes: murder, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, motor vehicle theft, burglary, and larceny. Except for murder, each category includes attempts to commit those crimes.

Gary Wood, the Manchester Police Department's spokesman, said the department did not receive the state report until Thursday and has not had time to evaluate the numbers.

"At this time, we can't give a credible answer about how we feel about the report — good, bad, or indifferent," Wood said. Police Chief Robert D. Lannan was not available for comment.

The report says that while motor vehicle thefts in the state were up 18.8 percent in 1987, the number of motor vehicles stolen in Manchester decreased from 152 to 120. The value of motor vehicles stolen dropped from almost $300,000 to about $294,000.

According to state figures, Connecticut police handled more murders, rapes, aggravated assaults and larcenies, but fewer robberies.

In Manchester, rapes, aggravated assaults and robberies decreased while murders, burglaries and cases of larceny increased.

There were 14 rapes in Manchester in 1987, compared to 21 in 1986.

The number of aggravated assaults decreased from 29 to 25. The number of robberies decreased from 31 to 16.

There were two murders in Manchester in 1987, up from none in 1986 and 1985. There have been no murders so far in 1988. Of the two murders in 1987, a suspect has been arrested in one case and the other is still under investigation, police said.

The number of burglaries in Manchester increased from 452 to 457. But while the burglary rate increased just 1 percent, the value of property taken in those burglaries increased from $72,820 to $108,339, or about 33 percent. Statewide, burglaries increased 2.2 percent to 38,028 incidents with $27.3 million worth of property stolen.

Despite the increase in the value of goods stolen in burglaries, the total amount stolen in Manchester — when combining burglaries with motor vehicle thefts, robberies, larceny — dropped from $793,595 to $623,565, or about 21 percent.

While the number of larcenies in the state jumped 2.9 percent with 90,531 incidents, larcenies in Manchester only increased from 1,386 to 1,393, or 0.5 percent.

The report's figures did not include such crimes as drug offenses, less serious assaults and white-collar crimes. And they included only incidents that are reported to police, although surveys have shown, for instance, that only half of all burglaries are reported.

There were 156 murders in Connecticut last year, an increase of eight, or 5.4 percent, over the 148 murders in 1986. Police reported solving 138 of them, or 88.5 percent.

$400,000 Cheney Hall bonding is approved

By Alex Girelli
 Manchester Herald

A $400,000 state bond issue to help pay for renovations to Cheney Hall in Manchester was approved today by the state's Bond Commission on recommendation of Gov. William O'Neill.

State Rep. James McCavanagh, D-Manchester, said today that he had been informed by David McQuade of the commission's staff that the bonds were approved by the commission, which met this morning.

McCavanagh said this week that he had urged the governor to seek approval of the bonds despite efforts to cut the state budget to avoid a budget deficit.

The next step in the process of getting the funds is for the Cheney Hall Foundation to make an application to the Connecticut Historical Commission, which will administer the funds.

The money will be used to take preliminary steps to renovate the interior of the hall which will become a community center and a performing center under the management of the Little Theatre of Manchester.

LTM will use the hall for its own productions and arrange for its use by other groups.

The exterior has already been renovated although a small amount of outside work still remains to be done.

A subcommittee from the Cheney Hall Foundation, working with the architect for the project, Malmfeldt

Associates of Glastonbury, has tentatively agreed on what work will be done with the $400,000. It includes installing a heat pump, modernizing the sprinkler system, doing some basic electrical work, insulating the space above the left, and demolishing the stage, which is to be replaced later with a larger stage.

The hall is expected to become the focal point for the Cheney Historic District where former textile mills have been or will be converted to apartments.

Deaver gets $100,000 fine, escapes prison

By James Rowley
 The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Michael K. Deaver, once one of President Reagan's closest aides, was given a suspended three-year sentence today and fined $100,000 for lying under oath about his lobbying activities after he left the White House.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, saying he doubted a prison term would deter others from committing what he called "the crime of opportunity," also ordered Deaver to perform 1,500 hours of community service.

In addition, the judge directed Deaver to refrain from lobbying the federal government during the term of his suspended sentence.

After the hearing, Deaver told reporters, "It was a very fair sentence. If I had been guilty," he said, "I would have accepted it."

Outside the federal courthouse, Deaver said he has proposed to the court that he fulfill the community service requirement by counseling alcoholics.

Although Jackson said he did not doubt that Deaver had given false answers to questions about his lobbying, the judge said imprisonment would not be the correct way to rehabilitate Deaver.

Jackson, referring to Deaver's fight against alcoholism, said that "such rehabilitation as is needed, as he well knows, must come from within himself."

In pleading for leniency, Deaver, once Reagan's deputy chief of staff, said that the investigation "has taken a terrible toll on me and my family and my friends and my business."

But Deaver said, "I can take comfort in the fact that I have had the support of friends and family in coming to grips with the worst demon that I faced, and that was alcoholism."

His realization that he had a problem with alcoholism "changed my life dramatically," Deaver said.

Olive M. Holcomb

Olive M. (Jones) Holcomb, formerly of Hartford, died Wednesday (Sept. 21, 1988) at a Manchester convalescent home.

She was born in Staffordshire, England, and had lived most of her life in Hartford before moving to Manchester. She was active and served as chairman for British War Relief in Hartford during World War II. She was a member of the Connecticut Arts and Crafts Club and the Town and County Club of Hartford.

She is survived by two sisters, Phyllis D. Ross of Manchester and Millicent A. Jones of Bolton; a brother, Victor C. Jones of Mentor, Ohio; and several nieces and nephews.

Graveside services were held today at 1 p.m. in East Cemetery. There were no calling hours. The Watkins Funeral Home, 142 E. Center St., was in charge of arrangements.

Richard LaChapelle

Richard L. LaChapelle, 74, of East Hartford, formerly of Manchester, died Thursday (Sept. 22, 1988) at the Veterans Administration Medical Center, Newington. He was the husband of Sally (Abratis) LaChapelle.

He was born in Vernon on June 30, 1914. He lived in Manchester for 25 years before moving to East Hartford in 1962. Before retiring in 1962, he was a technician with Sears, Roebuck & Co., Newington. He was a communicant of St. Isaac Jogues Church, East Hartford, and was a U.S. Navy veteran, serving in World War II. He was a former member of the Army and Navy Club of Manchester.

Besides his wife, he is survived by a son, Richard M. LaChapelle of West Hartford; two daughters, Patricia LeBlanc of Colchester and Patricia Holtz of Hamburg, N.J.; and two sons, 4 and 7 to 9 p.m.

The funeral will be Saturday at 8:15 a.m. at the Samsel & Carmon Funeral Home, 419 Buckland Road, South Windsor, followed by a Mass of Christian burial at 9 a.m. in St. Francis of Assisi Church, South Windsor. Burial will be in St. Mary's Cemetery, East Hartford. Calling hours are today from 2 to 4 p.m. and 7 to 9 p.m.

Her maternal grandparents are Helen and Gilbert Heifelt of Wilmington, N.C. Her paternal grandparents are Joe Foley of Locust Valley, N.Y. and Irene Schmidt, Pampama Beach, Fla.

Thoughts

We are each a part of the world around us. We are each connected in some vital way to this community, this country, and to the world. As citizens of the world we must open ourselves to the voices of those around us. We must listen to the voices of the voiceless — those who live on the streets, those who suffer violence, those who are oppressed. All people can challenge us, pull us out of ourselves, and offer us new ideas. As we listen we may find new ways to help, new ways of being.

Quinn came home and police found cocaine in his pocket, police said.

In the bedroom, bags containing a cocaine residue, a free-basing pipe and other items were found, police said.

Quinn and Charbonneau were both charged with possession of cocaine, possession of marijuana, possession of drug paraphernalia and operating a drug factory.

Both were released on $5,000 non-surety bond and are scheduled to appear in Manchester Superior Court on Wednesday.

Man, woman arrested

A Windsor man was arrested Thursday and charged with possession of burglar's tools and possession of drug paraphernalia, police said. A woman with him was arrested on larceny and drug charges.

Charney C. Chiarizio, 28, of 275 Windsor Ave., Windsor, was arrested along with Janet Timko, 28, of 111 Sunset Drive, Windsor Locks, at the Sears store at 348 W. Middle Turnpike, police said.

Store security personnel called police after identifying the men as shoplifting suspects, police said. Police said Timko told them she had a stolen sweater in her vehicle. A search of the vehicle revealed the sweater, two syringes, a razor blade, tubing containing an unknown substance, miscellaneous tools, coin slugs and a U.S. Mint bag, police said.

Police found a syringe cap, a slug and two small tools used for opening locks on Chiarizio, police said. Chiarizio was also charged with sixth-degree larceny and unlawful possession of coin slugs. He was held on $2,500 cash bond and was scheduled to appear in Manchester Superior Court today.

Timko was charged with sixth-degree larceny and possession of drug paraphernalia. She was released on $1,000 non-surety bond and is scheduled to appear in Manchester Superior Court on Wednesday.

Police Roundup

2 charged in robbery

Police arrested two youths this week in connection with a Sept. 4 robbery at the Xtra Mart, 385 Main St., police said.

Daimone told police he didn't know what Patano was planning to do when he went into the Xtra Mart. Later, he said that the three had discussed the robbery, but that he had been asleep in the car when the robbery occurred and did not learn about it until Patano told him about it, police said. No statement from Patano was available.

Both youths are being held on a $5,000 bond and are scheduled to appear in Manchester Superior Court on Monday.

2 face drug charges

Two Manchester residents were arrested Thursday and charged with operating a drug factory after members of the Tri-Town Narcotics Task Force found cocaine and drug paraphernalia in their home, police said.

Thomas P. Quinn, 30, of 121 Elvree St., and Anne Marie Charbonneau, 25, of the same address, were arrested at around 6 p.m. at their home after task force members executed a search warrant, police said.

Charbonneau was the only one there when police arrived and she told police there were no illegal drugs in the house, police said. She admitted to having drug paraphernalia and showed police a cocaine sifter, scale and plastic containers, police said. The containers had cocaine in them, police said.

Quinn came home and police found cocaine in his pocket, police said.

'Grandfather' of town's emergency service is honored

By Michele Noble
Manchester Herald

The man many call "the grandfather" of Manchester's Emergency Medical Service was awarded Thursday night with "the world's largest Band-Aid," signed by more than 100 people who have worked with him over the years.

Dr. Robert Butterfield Sr., who headed the EMS Department at Manchester Memorial Hospital for more than 13 years, was honored at the service's fifth anniversary reception. He recently announced his plans to retire from his honorary position on the EMS Council.

More than 150 people from Manchester Memorial Hospital, the Town of Manchester Fire Department and people who have been served by the town's Emergency Medical Service attended the reception.

Among those at the event were about 50 people the service considers a "save," or people who probably would have died if they had not received the emergency treatment.

Mayor Peter P. DiRosa Jr. gave Butterfield a town proclamation thanking him for his years of service. After the presentation, Butterfield received a standing ovation.

"We've had some light times, some good times and we've shared a lot of times and I'm going to miss it," Butterfield told a crowd of about 150. "But at age 69, I can't keep up with these new guys. It's time for me to move on."

Richard Carter, a member of the EMS Council and one of the first organizers of the system who worked with Butterfield, called him "a really tough individual" and said that he was "scared to death of him" during the council's first meetings.

Unhappy landlord plans own commission

One dispute gets settled

By Andrew Yurkovsky
Manchester Herald

A landlord who is dissatisfied with a ruling of the town's Fair Rent Commission says she will go forward with plans to start "landlord's commission." She voiced her unhappiness to the commission at its Thursday night meeting.

The landlord, Annette G. Kelehan, said that the formation of the landlords' commission was in the works. But she said she didn't know what the function of the commission would be.

Kelehan and her husband, Charles P. Kelehan, criticized the Fair Rent Commission's decision last month to phase in a $125 rent increase they sought at the six-bedroom apartment they own at 65 North St. Under the decision, the increase, which would bring the rent to $675 per month, would start going into effect after the correction of housing-code violations in the apartment.

About 15 people showed up for the meeting in the Lincoln Center hearing room. Four landlords, besides the Kelehans spoke during the meeting, asking questions about how the commission works.

While one landlord said that the commission's decisions appeared to be slanted against landlords, Robert Faucher, a former chairman of the town's Human Relations Commission, defended the commission.

Annette Kelehan described the decision on the North Street apartment as a "raw deal." She said that she and her husband began an eviction proceedings against the tenants, Rita E. Kelsey and Raymond E. Krueger, before the tenants had filed a complaint about the increase to the commission.

"It's in retaliation, and we're suffering for it. It's as if the Fair Rent Commission is on the back," Kelehan said, referring to Kelsey.

Commission Chairman Joseph Kelehan said that he would be in contact with the tenants, Charles Kelehan said that he had been threatened with Krueger because they claim, Kelsey and Krueger have not paid a water bill and because the tenants had promised to leave the apartment by Sept. 1.

The procedures of the commission allow disputes to be settled informally through what is known as conciliation.

In conciliation, two members of the commission try to settle complaints before they go to a public hearing.

The tenant, Forrest R. Carson Jr., of 62 Spruce St., said he was angry with the commission that cited the condition of the apartment, a reduction in services and an increase in rent from $400 to $700 per month.

Commission member William Runde, who helped mediate the dispute, said that the landlord, Boyle Management Co., had given Carson a list of problems that would be corrected.

"He feels the landlord is sincere and will get the situation rectified," Runde said during the commission's meeting in the Lincoln Center hearing room.

2 imo services await rulings

Comment session is set for Oct. 6

The state Bureau of Public Transportation is expected to rule in about a month on applications for permits that would allow limousine services to open in Manchester, a prospect that has put the owners of existing area services on guard.

The bureau held a public hearing on Thursday on an application from Michael J. Lindsey to operate six limousines in Manchester, just two weeks after a hearing was held on another service proposed for Manchester.

A hearing was held Sept. 7 on an application from Richard Comollo of Manchester that would allow him to operate two vehicles under the name Richard's Limousine.

If both applications are approved, there would be 18 permitted limousines in Manchester, including 10 authorized for use by A & A Limousine Service, said Kenneth Gambardella, an adjudicator with the Bus, Taxi and Limousine Division of the state Department of Transportation.

A & A is one of the services that commented during both public hearings, has only five of its cars registered to operate, Gambardella said. Many services will keep only some of their cars in Manchester for various reasons, including maintenance and the state of the market, he added.

A & A owner Roger Talbot, who also owns the Ambulance Service of Manchester Inc., could not be reached for comment this morning.

The two other services that commented at the hearings are the Peter F. Dolin Limousine Service of Wethersfield and Ambassador Limousine Services of Glastonbury.

Steven DiMarco, owner of Ambassador Limousine Services, said after the Comollo hearing that representatives from existing services will often appear at the hearings to ask questions about the applicants' background and experience in running a service.

Ambassador operates nine vehicles and has been in business three years.

DiMarco said fear of competition was not the reason his service attended the hearings. If there were no opposition, anyone could get a license to operate a service, he said.

"The procedure of opposing (at hearings) is normal," DiMarco said. "There are too many gypsy operators around. It really hurts the whole industry."

The limousine business is open run 24 hours a day, seven days a week, he said.

"It's very very difficult to be successful," DiMarco said.

Gambardella said about 60 to 70 percent of the services that apply succeed.

DiMarco also said the fact that A & A operates only some of its vehicles may indicate that the business isn't as great a need in Manchester as it is for other services.

The law states that you have to prove there's a need in the town of Manchester," DiMarco said. But Comollo said he believes there is a market for more limousine services in town and argued that the existing services are worried about competition.

"They're definitely afraid of me," Comollo said. But he added, "It's good to have competition."

He agreed with DiMarco that

No conflict seen in mall-PZC role

Ethics Commission has ruled that a local engineer may work as a consultant for the town Building Department on the Buckland mall project and remain a member of the Planning and Zoning Commission.

By Nancy Concelmon
Manchester Herald

The Ethics Commission has ruled that a local engineer may work as a consultant for the town Building Department on the Buckland mall project and remain a member of the Planning and Zoning Commission.

Members of the Ethics Commission ruled on Thursday that there would be no conflict of interest if PZC member William A. Bayer, a partner in the Kahn & Bayer engineering firm, works for the town Building Department as a consultant on the design phase of the mall and on subsequent inspections.

"I think it's an interesting project and I'd like to get involved," Bayer said at the hearing.

Under the Ethics Commission's rules and regulations, Bayer will have to abstain from any votes the PZC makes on applications for the mall. The PZC has already approved final site plans.

Bayer said he hasn't been commenting or voting on applications from the mall developer, the Chicago-based Homart Development Co., because two or three years ago his engineering work on the project.

Homart did not hire his firm, but Bayer has continued to obtain because he missed some presentations on the applications.

"Here's somebody who was not involved with a project as a member of the PZC," said Ethics Commission member Robert Franklin.

Commission members said because Bayer had not been commenting or voting on Homart applications there would be no conflict under Ethics Commission rules and regulations, but they said they might be concerned with appearances.

Bayer said he hadn't considered that there might be appearance of conflict.

Commission member M. Adler Dobbin argued that if the commission were always concerned with appearances, "we could exclude a lot of expertise."

Bayer said he hadn't considered that there might be appearance of conflict.

Commission member Sol R. Cohen said he didn't see a conflict, but that the public might.

"There may be no conflict here but I've always had the concern that in the eyes of the public there appears to be conflict," Cohen said.

But commission member M. Adler Dobbin argued that if the commission

Test scores dip but still beat averages

By Andrew J. Davis
Manchester Herald

Average scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test declined for the second year in a row at Manchester High School, but the scores are still above the state and national averages. Principal Jacob Ludes III said.

"It (the drop in scores) was anticipated since 302 students took the test," Ludes said. The previous year, 287 students took the test. "When you're talking of a standardized test, which the SAT is, half will be above the norm, half below."

The SAT is a two-part, multiple-choice college-entrance examination, with the verbal and math sections scored on a scale of 200 to 800.

Compared to 1987, scores in the math section among Manchester High School students dropped one point to a 479 average score, while the verbal section average score fell from 452 to 443, Ludes said. But the scores still are above state and national averages.

The state average in the verbal section was 436, seven points lower than Manchester High's average. In math, the state average of 472 also was seven points lower, Ludes said.

The average verbal score for Manchester High School, at 443, is 15 points higher than the national score of 428. The average math score among Manchester High School students, at 479, is three points higher than the national average of 476.

Ludes said the high school administration expected the test scores to decrease because of the higher number of students taking the test. This is the second year in a row that test scores have declined at Manchester High School. In 1986, the mean math score was 487 and the mean verbal score was 462.

Though the test scores are lower, Ludes said there is a bright side. The increased number of students taking the tests means more students are thinking about attending college, he said.

"More and more kids are keeping their options open. Students who achieve in the lower (half of the class) are going to college in greater numbers."

High school officials plan to look at ways to increase the mean scores, Ludes said. The staff will be instructed into preparing students more for the test, and the school also will promote a SAT preparation course, he said.

With school officials trying to get more and more students to participate, Ludes said those changes could keep scores from declining.

"We intend to get as many kids as possible to take the test," he said. "I'm not happy with the fact that our scores are down some."

'They're in the ball park,' Moon says of condo figures

By Andrew Yurkovsky
Manchester Herald

Deputy Assessor William Moon said today that a quick review of condominium and house sales in Manchester shows that both types of dwellings are assessed appropriately, despite questions from Director Barbara B. Weinberg about the assessment procedure for condominiums.

Weinberg, who runs Re/Max East of the River, a real estate firm, on Wednesday questioned why some condominiums are assessed at values similar to those of single-family homes of the same size. She asked the town Assessor's Office to provide answers to that question and others during a meeting of the directors' revaluation committee on Wednesday.

Moon, who is the acting assessor, said at the Wednesday meeting that the assessment of each condominium unit includes a percentage of the land of the

Meotti gets PAC support

Environmentalists to Elect Legislators in Connecticut, a Hartford-based political action committee, has announced it is endorsing state Sen. Michael Meotti, D-Glastonbury, who is seeking re-election in the 4th Senatorial District.

A news release from the organization praised Meotti. "This state must soon make some hard choices about the way we use our land, the products we buy, and what we do with our garbage," said ELECT board member Susan Merrow. "Mike has shown us through his work as chair of the Environment Committee at the State Capitol that he not only understands the importance of these issues, but that he will lead the fight to defend environmental priorities in the Legislature. This will be especially important in view of the state's budget deficit."

Meotti is being challenged by former Republican Sen. Carl A. Zinsser of Manchester.

Bush makes up deficit

HARTFORD (AP) — Vice President George Bush has roared from behind and may have taken a narrow lead over Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in the state's presidential contest, according to a poll released today.

The Hartford Courant/Connecticut Poll showed that state voters, who favored Dukakis by 17 percentage points in July, now prefer Bush by 39 percent to 37 percent for Dukakis, with 24 percent undecided.

But because the 2 percentage point edge for Bush is within the poll's margin of error of 5 percent, it is impossible to determine which candidate is in the lead.

Also, about 20 percent said they might change their minds between now and Election Day.

Welcker cited for integrity

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Sen. Lowell P. Welcker Jr. of Connecticut has won the Wayne Morse Political Integrity Award, beating out former President Jimmy Carter and Democratic Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois.

The award is named after the late Oregon senator who voted against the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, a measure which escalated the Vietnam War. He lost his Senate seat following the vote.

Democrats talk of victory at opening of headquarters

State Attorney General Joseph Lieberman told Manchester Democrats Thursday night that with their help he is going to be Connecticut's next senator.

Lieberman was one of six Democratic candidates who were endorsed by the voters of the 4th Senatorial District at a clear choice. He said he has done more in two years as a state senator than his opponent, former Sen. Carl Zinsser, did in six years in the position.

Meotti said he helped get special legislation Manchester needed when its tax revaluation failed and is now working to help Manchester protect its landfill from being used for out-of-town refuse.

Referring to a football schedule Zinsser distributes as part of his campaign literature, Meotti said, "If you want to find out who the San Diego Chargers are playing next week, call Carl Zinsser. If you want to find out about the environment, call me."

Thompson, who represents Manchester's 13th Assembly District, said that when John Papanicolaou, the state housing commissioner, spoke in Manchester recently, he said the town is a model in providing housing for the elderly.

He said that if he brought to Manchester the commissioners of mental health, mental retardation, aging or education, they would say the same thing about their respective areas of expertise.

Lieberman said he was proud to be identified with the Democratic Party.

The other candidates who she also wants to find out whether the assessment of an apartment complex after conversion to a condominium complex is higher than it was before.

"I suspect that the assessments of a complex in total after conversion are far greater than prior to conversion," she said.

Weinberg on Wednesday provided a listing of assessments for condominiums and single-family houses, which she said was a random sample from a recent multiple-listing book put out by the Manchester Board of Realtors. Moon said that in determining whether the condominium assessments were fair, he did not use the same properties cited by Weinberg.

According to Weinberg's list, for example, a condominium at Brook Haven with 978 square feet was assessed at $19,200, while a home on Hartford Road with 975 square feet had an assessment of $17,490.

She said the question became of interest to her in the last few weeks because she has been showing condominiums to a number of clients.

Weinberg said Thursday that strong even though the state is in a tight time for providing services. "We are going to meet our commitments," he said.

Thompson's Republican opponent is Susan Buckno.

McCavanaugh, who is running unopposed for re-election in Manchester's 12th Assembly District, said that although a lot of money has been stripped from the state's bonding package, Manchester will get the $400,000 he has sought for renovations to historic Cheney Hall.

The state Bond Commission was scheduled to act on that issue today.

Bates, an East Hartford legislator whose 9th Assembly District includes Voting District 9 in the southwest corner of Manchester, thanked Democrats of that district for their support and said Manchester is an important part of his district.

"I'm very confident our candidates are going to win," he said. Bates is being challenged by Republican Paul Munns of Glastonbury.

John Quinn of Hebron, the Democratic candidate in the 55th Assembly District, told the Democrats, "You're going to see a lot of me in Manchester." His district includes Voting District 3, the northeast section of town.

Quinn is challenging Rep. J. Peter Fuscus, R-Marborough.

"We've had eight years of a representative who was not visible," Quinn said of Fuscus.

Quinn said that when he is elected he will have to represent a diverse district. "Manchester's needs are different from those of Hebron," he said.

gance and callous disregard for ethics in politics," he said.

At issue was a $500-a-person fund-raiser held Monday at Gahan's Saloon, owned by former Waterbury Democratic Chairman Thomas F. Gahan, who was arrested last year on bribery and other charges. Gahan eventually pleaded guilty to five misdemeanor election law violations.

The event was hosted by Waterbury Deputy Sheriff Frank Bocchicchio, not Gahan. Gahan said the saloon remained open to the public during the event and that while it was going on, he was tending bar and working in the kitchen. He said he did not make a monetary contribution to the campaign.

The Lieberman campaign shrugged off Poliner's criticism.

"It's ridiculous," said Maria Romash, Lieberman's campaign press secretary. "I really think Bob Poliner is stretching."

"We had people in Waterbury who had indicated an interest in raising money for Joe's campaign," Romash said. "They had indicated they wanted it, that there would be a large crowd and an opportunity for Joe to meet some people."

This matter calls into question the judgment of Lieberman who, as attorney general of the state of Connecticut, is supposed to enforce the law and, by his own claim, be 'above the fray' of scandal," Poliner said at a state Capitol news conference.

Seabrook operation eyed

Jamaica to get relief
HARTFORD (AP) — After days of trying, state officials said they had found a cargo plane and carrier to take 60,000 pounds of food, medical and other supplies to hurricane-ravaged Jamaica.

The state will charter the plane, paid for with about $20,000 from Connecticut insurance companies, and send the supplies to Jamaica on Wednesday. Gov. William A. O'Neill said Thursday.

Donations of food and money are still being solicited. O'Neill said, and should be channeled through the Jamaican Hurricane Relief Committee, PO Box 12394, Hartford, 06112. The telephone number is 247-5659. Donations may also be taken to state police barracks.

NEW BRITAIN (AP) — A man identifying himself as an independent candidate for U.S. Rep. Nancy Johnson's congressional post threatened to hold her local staff hostage and then said he was just joking.

The New Britain Herald reported.

The man, who said he was Louis Marietta, 67, called the newspaper Thursday saying he planned to go to Mrs. Johnson's New Britain office with a shotgun as a way of forcing a her to agree to a political debate with him, the newspaper said.

Marietta is vying against incumbent Mrs. Johnson for the Sixth Congressional District post.

Teletheater postponed
WINDSOR LOCKS (AP) — A steel skeleton is all that stands at a 6-acre site where a proposed $6.8 million off-track betting teletheater was supposed to open this fall.

Developer Raymond A. Roncari acknowledged last month that the opening would be postponed.

He said Thursday nobody is working on the project except for him and his lawyers, who are continuing to negotiate with the state Division of Special Revenue over the amount the state will pay to rent the facility.

Sen. Marie A. Herbst, D-Vernon, has said the state is balking at paying Roncari an annual rent of as much as $500,000. Herbst said that figure is $203,000 more than the rental ceiling originally agreed to by the Division of Special Revenue.

Buyout plan rejected
HARTFORD (AP) — Plans for a $2.3 billion nationwide buyout of two cable television companies may be upset if a draft decision is adopted by Connecticut utility regulators.

The draft decision, to be presented to the Public Utilities Control Authority on Sept. 28, rejects a planned buyout of the state's three Storers cable television companies, saying it would leave the state's cable television business in the hands of too few companies.

It's too early to tell whether a decision by Connecticut to veto the buyout would affect the national buyout of Storers by Tele-Communications Inc. of Denver, Comcast Corp. of Philadelphia and the Knight-Ridder Publishing Co. of Miami.

Prof pleads innocent
NEW BRITAIN (AP) — A Central Connecticut State University professor accused of growing and possessing marijuana pleaded innocent to drug charges on Thursday.

Robert M. Fischbach entered the pleas in New Britain Superior Court to charges of cultivating marijuana, possession of marijuana and possession of marijuana with intent to sell. His case was placed on the jury trial list and continued to Oct. 19, a court official said.

Fischbach was arrested by Wallingford police on drug charges on July 20. New Britain police arrested him on similar charges on Aug. 18 after recovering about a pound of marijuana from his New Britain home.

Consultants cost state $93 million

HARTFORD (AP) — A lack of regulations governing the hiring of consultants enabled state agencies to spend $93 million to hire more than 1,000 outside experts in the last fiscal year, a legislative inquiry has found.

The preliminary report by researchers for the legislative Program Review and Investigations Committee said state agencies enjoy virtually free rein when it comes to using, selecting and paying for consultant services.

"It seems that anything a little bit out of the ordinary in terms of paperwork that comes across people's desks, they hire a consultant to do it," state Auditor Leo V. Donohue said when informed of the report's findings.

The General Assembly in February authorized the Program Review Committee to study the state's use of consultants. A Sept. 29 public hearing on the issue has been scheduled at the Legislative Office Building in Hartford.

The researchers found that during the 1987-88 fiscal year that ended June 30, the state had 1,110 active consultant contracts worth some $93.4 million. The average contract value was nearly $84,000 with the average duration 294 days.

The entire state budget for the year ended June 30 was $6.65 billion.

Consultants' services included advice in management, planning, personnel, training, electronic data-processing, finance, legal and technical matters.

"Program review staff found a lack of accountability in the consultant procurement system," the researchers said. "There is no independent review to determine if an agency needs a consultant; the selection method used by an agency is appropriate; and agency management of consultant services is adequate.

"Thus, an agency has relative autonomy when contracting for professional services, with no checks and balances on the appropriateness of the expenditure," the report said.

The Department of Transportation spent the most money on consultants during 1987-88, accounting for 35 percent of the total contract cost at nearly $34.5 million.

Next in line were the state comptroller, $13.5 million; the Department of Education, $12.1 million; the Department of Administrative Services, $7.3 million; the Office of Policy and Management, $5.2 million; the Department of Public Safety, $2.4 million; the University of Connecticut, $2.1 million; the Department of Income Maintenance, $1.9 million; and the Department of Health Services, $1.7 million.

Researchers surveyed 54 state agencies. Ten of the 43 that responded said they had some written procedures governing consultant procurement and management, the rest did not.

The attorney general's office must review and approve all consultant contracts, and the comptroller's office must approve funding for all of the contracts. But Donohue said that with all the other responsibilities of those offices, such reviews have become mostly a matter of routine.

Hartford Symphony Orchestra on strike

HARTFORD (AP) — Members of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra, fighting what a union official called "very low wages," voted 71-2 on Thursday night to strike.

William D. Steinberg, president of American Federation of Musicians Local 400, said union members voted to strike after failing to reach an agreement on a new three-year contract. The old contract expired June 30, but musicians had agreed to work without a contract and continue negotiations, Steinberg said.

"The musicians would obviously prefer to perform, but we have been forced into this by management," Steinberg said. "The musicians are prepared and expect to stay out on strike however long it takes to get the proper scheduling and pay we deserve."

Sen. Marie A. Herbst, D-Vernon, has said the state is balking at paying Roncari an annual rent of as much as $500,000. Herbst said that figure is $203,000 more than the rental ceiling originally agreed to by the Division of Special Revenue.

the national average falls between 47 percent and 55 percent of a musician's budget.

Morton Handel, president of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra, said the union was asking for a $700,000 increase in wages during the first year of the contract and $2.5 million over three years. He said the symphony's budget for the 1987-88 season, represent about 38 percent of the city's phony's overall budget. He said

Hartford man convicted of murdering bystander

HARTFORD (AP) — A 25-year-old Hartford man, who police said gunned down an innocent bystander outside a Hartford apartment last year, has been convicted of murder.

A 12-member jury returned a verdict at 12:30 p.m. Thursday convicting Michael Walker of murder, conspiracy to commit murder, and first degree assault in connection with the May 12, 1987, slaying of 60-year-old John Dixon.

Hartford police have said Dixon was killed as he sat on a porch outside his apartment with Barrington Solomon, who was hit in the leg and stomach by seven .30-caliber bullets. Solomon survived the attack apparently because the bullets were slowed as they passed through the wooden porch.

Police have said Solomon was the intended target of the attack because he had allegedly severely wounded Walker's brother in a gun battle several months earlier.

Michael J. Dodson, Walker's attorney, said he was disappointed with the verdict which was reached after the jury deliberated over parts of two days.

Dodson said he believes that a key witness in the case may have been pressured by police into identifying Walker as Dixon's killer.

Nadine Collier testified during the trial that she saw Walker go past her window moments after hearing the automatic gun fire that killed Dixon.

"My gut feeling is that police came to this witness and made suggestions to her that they knew who the suspect was," Dodson said. "I think the prosecution had a weak case and relied on a witness who was not in any position to make an identification."

Lieberman won't resign post

By Judd Everhart
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — The campaign of Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Joseph I. Lieberman dismisses as political rhetoric a call for Lieberman to resign as attorney general because he held a fundraiser at a bar owned by a man convicted of election law crimes.

The call came Thursday from state Republican Chairman Robert S. Poliner, who said Lieberman had "soiled" his office's reputation by allowing the event to be held at the Waterbury saloon.

"This matter calls into question the judgment of Lieberman who, as attorney general of the state of Connecticut, is supposed to enforce the law and, by his own claim, be 'above the fray' of scandal," Poliner said at a state Capitol news conference.

"What's worse, it demonstrates an unprecedented arro-

Duck poison still untraced

A man-made or naturally occurring poison caused the death of 40 ducks at a pond on Irving Street last week, a biologist at the University of Connecticut said Thursday.

Dr. Alex J. Bermudez, an assistant professor of pathological anatomy, said that tissues from two birds of the flock were sent to a state laboratory to determine what toxin caused the deaths. He said results of those tests might not be ready for another month.

The quarter-acre pond off Irving Street is on the property of Homestead Park Village, an apartment complex owned by Manchester developer Raymond F. Damato. The ducks were found in the early morning on Sept. 16.

Bermudez ruled out the possibility that the ducks were killed by a bacterial infection. He said the toxins could have come from insecticides or pesticides or from natural sources, such as blue-green algae or botulism.

Bermudez said that if the toxin was from a naturally occurring source, blue-green algae or botulism would be the most likely

Color issue wastes time of planners

The rather insignificant question about the color of a sign a Manchester businessman wanted to put up at his grocery store and deliessen has been resolved, and if the Planning and Zoning Commission is wise, no similar questions will come up again.

The problem arose because the PZC wanted to assure some kind of uniformity in the appearance of signs along the roof line of a shopping center on West Center Street.

After the PZC set the requirement and the businessman, apparently unaware of the requirement, had a sign made in the colors he wanted, the state Supreme Court issued a ruling in another case which said that zoning officials cannot dictate the color or lettering styles of signs.

The court's ruling is sound. If the owner of property wants to make uniformity of signs a condition of a lease, that is his prerogative. But the decision is not one that should be made by a government agency. Public safety is not involved and sign colors pose no potential problem of public expense.

Furthermore, the PZC has more important things to concern itself with—like the problems presented by roads that dead-end in turning circles that are too small for school buses to turn around in.

The Manchester Board of Education is concerned because it may have to use vans instead of larger school buses in some places in town simply because children have to be picked up along roads ending in the small circles.

Ultimately there will be a cost to taxpayers if the tight circles dictate what kind of vehicles will be used.

The apparent solution is to require wider turning circles at the end of dead-end roads and to plow them thoroughly so that buses can turn in them.

As one member of the PZC points out, requiring wider turning circles will cause problems with lot frontages.

But since a serious question of safety and of public expense is involved, the PZC should give the matter serious consideration.

How to view the debate

WASHINGTON — When George Bush and Michael Dukakis debate on Sunday night they hope to sharpen their images as potential leaders of the Free World.

The vice president and the governor will try to convince the voters they are cool and forceful, that they have a clear idea of U.S. objectives and the problems they would face abroad.

Beware of catchy phrases, the kind that have overtaken presidential campaigns in the television age, and firmly set jaws, designed to reflect determination.

Try to listen past the picture to the substance of what they are saying.

The next president will inherit an imaginative adversary in Moscow. Mikhail Gorbachev tested President Reagan with a fast-paced series of arms control initiatives. There is no reason to believe Gorbachev will slow down with Reagan's successor.

Gorbachev sent his foreign minister, Eduard Shevardnadze, to Washington this week with some ideas about how to complete a treaty to reduce long-range bombers, missiles and submarines by 30 percent to 50 percent and how to open East-West negotiations to take thousands of troops and tanks out of Europe.

No one seriously expects the treaty to be finished in the four months left to the Reagan administration. But Secretary of State George P. Shultz and his arms control advisers would like to whittle down the differences.

The next president will have to decide whether to go ahead, and what to do about the energetic U.S. program to develop a space shield against missile attack. The Soviets are trying to sidetrack the Strategic Defense Initiative, known popularly as Star Wars. How determined is Bush to push ahead? And is Dukakis moderating his past opposition to SDI?

In the arena of conventional forces, the United States and the Soviet Union have fallen over 14 years of talks to work out reductions in Central Europe. But the United States wants a more ambitious agenda — cutbacks all the way from the Atlantic Ocean to the Ural Mountains in the Soviet Union.

Washington has a commitment from Moscow to give equal attention to human rights.

Otherwise, the negotiations will not get started.

Shultz, as always, gave the "pride of place" in his 28th meeting with Shevardnadze, putting it first on the agenda.

The debate Sunday night may offer clues as to whether Bush and Dukakis agree with this priority.

Look at a map and you will find other problems.

The next president will inherit a stalemate between the Arabs and Israel. Neither side is ready to negotiate. Nor are the Palestinians, who are rebelling on the West Bank and in Gaza.

There are just so many approaches to the 40-year conflict. They all are risky. Have the candidates any new ideas to offer? Would they pressure Israel to relinquish all the territory, most of it, or defer to the parties to shape their own future? Would they deal with the Palestine Liberation Organization?

In Central America, a decision must be made on whether to help the Contras in what has been an unsuccessful war against the Marxist government of Nicaragua.

There is hope of an agreement to remove Cuban forces from Angola and grant independence to Namibia.

In the Persian Gulf, there is a shaky attempt by the United Nations to end the war between Iran and Iraq.

The United States has played a leading offstage role in both sets of negotiations. Do the candidates favor a different strategy?

In Afghanistan, the Soviet army is withdrawing. But the war will go on. The next president will have to decide whether to keep arming the guerrillas or to work out a gradual disengagement with the Soviets, who are supplying the Marxist government.

Peace and justice, like taxes and social security, tend to dominate debates. The format provides little opportunity for the candidates to offer extensive accounts of their foreign policy.

But enough may come through Sunday night to give Bush and Dukakis stand.

Pot farmers booby trap U.S. forests

WASHINGTON — Getting back to nature isn't what it used to be. Hikers, campers, hunters and fishermen using the national forests may confront a man-made threat as great as any posed by the flora and fauna.

Drug traffickers are festooning the forests with fish hooks and other booby traps that maim and kill, all to protect marijuana that is being secretly grown on public land.

We have reported on this threat in past columns. Now we have seen a confidential intelligence report compiled by the Drug Enforcement Administration, which surveyed marijuana-growing activity in 34 states, state by state.

The DEA outlined the grim details, state by state, of the methods used by marijuana growers to scare away intruders.

In Oregon, many growers use harmless alarm systems connected by trip wires to car batteries and horns. On the other end of the spectrum are growers in Arizona and Tennessee, who dig pits, fill them with sharpened punji sticks similar to those used in Vietnam, then camouflage the pits with brush.

"Explosive devices have been found in (Arizona) gardens in addition to punji boards and shotguns tied to tree stumps," the DEA report says. More crude devices "such as boards with nails sticking up concealed in and around the fields" have been found in Mississippi, Florida and Virginia.

A number of explosive devices have been attached to thin trip wires that are all but invisible to a hiker or a forest ranger. In Kentucky, according to the DEA, "booby traps have also been found... in the form of shotgun shells with blasting caps and trip wires." In Mississippi, "wired shotguns" are prevalent.

Growers in Perry County, Pa., protected their 300 marijuana plants by ringing the garden with pipe bombs containing gunpowder and nails.

Guard dogs are one of the most common methods of protecting illegal marijuana gardens. Both trained and untrained dogs are used in Arizona, California, Maine, Mississippi, Oregon, West Virginia and Wisconsin, the DEA reported.

Animal traps, especially the cruel steel leg-hold traps, have been found in fields in Florida, Georgia, Kentucky and Colorado.

One of the newest and most diabolical methods is used in Florida where growers tie rattlesnakes on the trails leading to the pot patches. The guard snakes, bound to be cranky because they are tied up, strike out at unsuspecting passers-by. Some Georgia growers have improved on this technique by cutting the rattles off the snakes so there is no warning.

"Booby traps and other protective measures no longer discriminate as to their victims and present a danger to all segments of society," the DEA noted. The growers themselves travel heavily armed with rifles, bazookas, machine guns and even "homemade cannons." California officials estimate that 80 percent of their pot growers "are armed during the growing season and nearly all carry guns throughout the year."

Nature lovers who stumble on the illegal gardens are often threatened with assault. California has seen an increase in the number of homicides related to pot cultivation including, said the DEA report, "a case in which a young man's leg had to be amputated after being hit by shotgun blasts in both knees."

In late 1984, three Oregon deer hunters happened upon a marijuana garden on Bureau of Land Management property in southern Oregon. Two of the hunters were shot.

Some of the growers have turned to professional gangs for help. The DEA found that to be the case in Oklahoma, California and Texas. "One large field north of Austin was guarded by machine-gun-toting members of the Bandito motorcycle gang," the DEA reported.

Bush, Dukakis gearing up for debate

By Donna Cossato
The Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis lashed out at George Bush's record on crime as the Republican nominee ventured into his rival's backyard to pick up a police union endorsement, a campaign break from presidential debate preparation that the two White House contenders could not ignore.

With the first of two nationally televised debates just two days away, Dukakis and Bush cleared their schedules today to pore over briefing books and confer with staff and advisers on Sunday's showdown.

Dukakis is engaging in a mock debate and meeting with New Jersey Sen. Bill Bradley. The Democratic presidential nominee also was getting in a bit of physical exercise with an early morning game of catch with Boston Red Sox center fielder Ellis Burks outside Dukakis' Brookline home.

Bush was spending the day cramming at the vice president's residence.

Negotiators for the two candidates reached agreement Thursday on the final logistical obstacle to the debate — the composition of the panel. Jim Lehrer of public television's MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour will moderate the debate in Winston-Salem, N.C., and the panelists will be ABC News anchor Peter Jennings, Anne Groer of The Orlando Sentinel and John Mashek of The Atlanta Constitution, the bipartisan commission on debates announced.

While the two presidential candidates limited their appearances, Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle did the same, spending the day in Washington tending to Senate duties.

Democrat Lloyd Bentsen was campaigning in three crucial states — Illinois, Ohio and Pennsylvania where he was expected to reiterate the ticket's stands on Social Security, trade and health care.

The Democrats received some encouraging news from a national poll that put the race at essentially a dead heat, but found a slight dip in Bush's support since the week after the Republican National Convention.

The NBC News-Wall Street Journal survey of 2,630 likely voters found Bush leading 45-41 percent compared with last month's poll showing Bush ahead 47-40 percent.

The margin of error was plus or minus two percentage points for the survey, conducted Sept. 16 through Monday.

On Thursday, Dukakis used Bush's visit to the Massachusetts governor's home state to criticize the vice president's description of himself as a crimefighter and environmentalist.

"We're here today to investigate a felony — assault and battery on the truth," an invigorated Dukakis told a rally outside the Massachusetts statehouse. "What George Bush is doing to the truth in this campaign is a crime."

Earlier, Bush had traveled to Boston to pick up an endorsement from the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, a 4,000-member union that has consistently supported Republican candidates.

At the rally, Dukakis surrounded himself with police officers from several Massachusetts departments as well as law enforcement officials from Texas, Florida, Michigan and other states.

He then launched into his attack, charging that "for the past eight years George Bush has been running with a crowd that wouldn't know the rule of law if it hit them in the face."

Dukakis also said that when Bush toured polluted Boston harbor earlier this month to criticize the governor's clean-up efforts, the Republican nominee cared less to impersonate an environmentalist.

Bush, who received the police union's pledge of support on Wednesday, formally accepted the endorsement and charged that Dukakis is soft on crime.

"I'm here to receive this endorsement but also to make it clear that I'm the one in this race who wants to strengthen law enforcement," said Bush, who was surrounded by about 50 patrolmen, all elected representatives of the police union.

Soviets propose limits on long-range weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev is proposing that interim limits be placed on the most potent U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear weapons to keep arms control momentum going, U.S. officials say.

Gorbachev's proposal was sent to the State Department before Secretary of State George P. Shultz on Thursday.

These include assurances there will be no interference with the monitoring of test flights of the strategic nuclear missiles that carry the warheads and have ranges of 3,500 miles and beyond.

After a session today with Vice President George Bush and another round with Shultz concentrating on problems in the Middle East, southern Africa and Southeast Asia, the Soviet foreign minister had a session scheduled at the White House with President Reagan.

A joint statement to be issued there to mark the progress that "has been achieved," and Shultz and Shevardnadze were to hold separate news conferences in the evening, a U.S. official said.

It was not clear whether an agreement on temporary ceilings could be reached during the two-day visit. The Soviets did not raise the proposal in the first sessions on Thursday, the U.S. official said.

The United States and the Soviet Union set goals for limiting warheads at the summit last December. Gorbachev wants to put those limits into effect on an interim basis, separate from other arms issues.

Shevardnadze carried a range of other arms control proposals to Shultz along with a letter from Gorbachev to Reagan.

Rival Moslem, Christian governments take over

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Leaders canceled another effort to elect a new president as Lebanon's civil war raged today to life under rival Christian and Moslem governments.

The sectarian strife threatened to erupt into a 12-year civil conflict that has taken more than 130,000 lives.

Today's scheduled session of Parliament to elect a new chief of state was called off after President Amin Gemayel named an interim military government led by a Christian.

The Maronite Catholic president announced the caretaker Cabinet on Thursday night — five minutes before his six-year term expired.

Moslem leaders branded his move a virtual coup and vowed support for the existing Moslem-led Cabinet.

The denunciations came Thursday on a day of renewed religious violence. Three leaders of the main Shiite Moslem militia, Amal, were assassinated earlier in the day, and Christians battled Moslems for two hours along Beirut's dividing Green Line. One Christian was reported killed.

Though Gemayel's move was aimed at assuring a measure of unity in the crisis, it initially appeared to have the opposite effect. Three Moslem appointees immediately refused to serve in the Cabinet, now led by army commander Gen. Michel Aoun, a Maronite Catholic.

"This is a midjet coup d'etat. It's not going to lift off the ground," said Druse Moslem chief Walid Jumblatt in a statement broadcast by Moslem radio stations in Beirut.

Jumblatt said the "only legal government is that of acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss," a Sunni Moslem.

Gemayel's choice of Aoun as prime minister came after leading Moslem politicians refused to take part in an interim Cabinet headed by a civilian Maronite prime minister.

An unwritten national covenant calls for Lebanon's president to be a Christian, the prime minister a Sunni Moslem and the speaker of Parliament a Shiite Moslem.

Gemayel, 45, named the transition government because Parliament, deeply divided along religious lines, failed to elect a new president Thursday. Christian deputies opposed presidential candidates backed by Syria, the nation's main power broker, and boycotted voting.

William Rusher

But then Dionne played his joker. Bush, he asserted, had made certain conservatives "apoplectic" by planning to name former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to a campaign advisory committee on national security.

According to Dionne, these conservatives "see Mr. Kissinger as the architect of the policy of detente with the Soviet Union and of arms control agreements they opposed."

He even turned up with a quote for that proposition: Burton Yale Pines, senior vice president of the Heritage Foundation, Pines, a placid man who I don't very much was "apoplectic," did point out that Kissinger "represents all the great U.S. foreign policy defeats" of the 1970s.

But the cream of the jest is that Kissinger and his old boss Richard Nixon are now well aware how disastrously they mismanaged American foreign policy when they were in charge of it, and both are hard at work trying to live down their richly deserved reputations. Two men, in recent years, have even tried to depict themselves as to the right of Ronald Reagan, by criticizing him publicly for making too many concessions to the Soviet Union. Both, for example, actually opposed the INF treaty until it was a fait accompli.

So, while Kissinger's track record might well, as Pines suggested, make him a poor foreign-policy consultant, knowledgeable conservatives aren't likely to become "apoplectic" on the subject. The real danger, paradoxically, is that Kissinger might actually derail some useful initiative in a belated attempt to compensate for his own distasteful "soft" performance while in office.

Dionne, of course, knows all this very well. But mentioning it wouldn't serve the devious purpose of his article — so he just didn't mention it, or quote anyone who did.

He did, however, rehash the fact that recently another Times "reporter," Gerald Boyd, briefly managed to convince a lot of conservatives who ought to have known better that Bush had reneged on his policy of testing (as well as researching) the Spaceshield. Forty-eight hours of hysteria could have been avoided by one phone call to Bush's press office, but no one made it. Bush himself had to put out the fire, two days later.

And who do you suppose was in the forefront of the hysteria? I figured that Bush had sold out? Henry Kissinger.

Avoiding extra tax charges not difficult

DEAR BRUCE: We filed for an extension on our income taxes and I've just paid the bill. Not only did we have to pay extra money because not enough was taken out of our paychecks, but we had to pay some penalties because we didn't file the tax return by April 15.

Smart Money
Bruce Williams

How can we be sure this time around that we won't owe taxes?
U.A.
HARRISBURG, PA.

DEAR U.A.: One of the more misunderstood elements of the federal income tax system is tax withholding. The number of dollars you have withheld from your paychecks is not direct bearing on the amount of taxes that you pay. Rather, it is simply an estimation of the amount of money you owe each week. The money is in your "account" so it doesn't have to be paid in a lump sum. Further, the government takes a dim view of people who deliberately have their taxes under-withheld.

It shouldn't be too difficult to determine what your approximate tax liability will be as of next April. Any competent tax preparer could calculate this within a 10 percent range of error. Let us assume that he or she determines that your tax liability will be $5,200. This means that if you have a weekly paycheck, $100 should be withheld each and every week. Therefore, if this is done from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, your "account" will hold the appropriate $5,200 to meet your obligations. Since the year is now well underway, it may be that if you were under-withheld from January through the present date, you will have to accelerate your withholding for the rest of the year in order to catch up. By all means, if you can't make the calculations yourself, let a professional do so. It will save you a ton of grief in the long run.

DEAR BRUCE: I work in a two-woman office. There are three men who use our secretarial and clerical service; they are partners in the firm. I get along very well with two, but the third has a habit of calling me by all sorts of pet names rather than my real name. I don't object to him using my first name, but I do take exception to being called things like sexpot, heatbreaker and others that I would prefer not to share with you.

I don't want to give up the job, because the money is good and I like working here, but when he comes in my stomach turns. I know it would be easy to talk to the other partners, but I should add that he is the man who started the business and the other men, although they are partners, look to him as their boss. What do you suggest?
R.U.
SAN DIEGO.

DEAR R.U.: You are, indeed, caught between a rock and a hard spot. In today's work, there is no excuse for anyone to speak the way your boss does if the person to whom the comments are directed finds them offensive and says so.

I think your choices are clear. One, put up with the status quo, or two, discuss this with the individual involved. Three, if he doesn't see fit to change, then you'll have to change your job.

Whether or not he is violating any laws is a question that is better directed to the labor department in your state. But I would hope that the two of you can sit down together and agree on a responsible resolution of this problem. Understand that many people simply don't get it. They are not bunter in an office situation. That is not an endorsement of it, but just an observation that it is very common in many industries. However, if anyone finds such name-calling offensive, then it should clearly be terminated.

Good roles hard to find

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Denzel Washington says good roles are hard to find, despite the Oscar nomination he won for his portrayal of martyred South African activist Stephen Biko in "Cry Freedom." "It's not a coincidence that the last three pictures I've made, I've had to go out of the country to do," he said. "Cry Freedom" was filmed in Zimbabwe. "For Queen and Country," made in London, and "Finding Matheus," made in Jamaica, will be released early next year. Washington's dream is to play the leading man in a romantic comedy, something like Jimmy Stewart's role in "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington."

Lawmaker downs burglar

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A burglar picked the wrong victim in Mike Synar when he allegedly stole a pair of gold cuff links from the Oklahoma congressman's Washington home. Synar chased and tackled the man Thursday with assistance from a passerby. The 37-year-old Democrat said he returned home shortly after dawn from jogging to find a burglar in his house. "I was standing outside my house screaming, 'Call 911, call 911!' I looked like Richard Dreyfuss in the movie 'Down and Out in Beverly Hills,'" Synar told The Tulsa Tribune's Washington bureau. Synar said when he saw the man open a second-story bedroom window and hop out, he shouted for help to a young man on the street. "I followed him through yards and alleys," and grabbed the man about three blocks away, Synar said. "I knocked him down. I had his hands pinned and then the cops came and we got him."

DEAR ABBY: Maybe this is why some folks haven't been getting their mail: A postal inspector in Pensacola, Fla., used a front-end loader to remove the last five tons of undelivered mail found piled at the home of a rural mail carrier. An estimated 500,000 pieces of mail up to 3 years old were discovered.

MAGNOLIA, KENTUCKY DEAR MAGNOLIA: Now I suppose a lot of folks will be saying, "Your check was in THAT mail."

DEAR ABBY: I am a Hogg by marriage and I am not ashamed of the name. When my husband was in the military, there was a fight in his squadron. How about this? And just what do you have against Hogs, Abby? Being a native Iowa girl, you should be especially fond of hogs. They helped make Iowa the great farm state it is today. Shame on you!

LONDON (AP) — The show went on in the best Broadway tradition as assistant choreographer Toni Kaye replaced Ann Miller in the starring role in the just-opened musical "Sugar Babies." "This lady to my left is what show business is all about," co-star Mickey Rooney told the Savoy Theater audience Thursday during the curtain call for the third night of the musical, which toured the United States for eight years. Miss Miller, suffering from a swollen ankle, performed the Thursday matinee, but decided about 90 minutes before the curtain went up not to do the evening performance, said company manager Jane Tamlyn. She said Miss Kaye had performed the role in America and Australia and was Miss Miller's size, so could be called upon on short notice.

DEAR ABBY: I read you favor full-time jobs and would like to respond to "Concerned in Cleveland," the married lady who is paranoid about "single chicks" through Operation Dear Abby. I am a 15-year-old girl living in a remote bush community in Alaska due to my parents' occupations. Here, mail is a once-a-week blessing from heaven! Thanks to you, Abby, I to pay a check, so be careful. Times to stop a check: a person to whom you gave a check has lost it; someone to whom you mailed a check hasn't received it after a week or two.

Denver to deliver awards
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer John Denver will appear on his first Country Music Association Awards Show next month, the CMA announced. Denver, whose hits include "Thank God I'm a Country Boy," will present the 1988 Song of the Year Award during the nationally televised show Oct. 10, the association said Thursday. The CMA announced earlier that Dolly Parton will be host of the two-hour program at the Grand Ole Opry House.

Duchess welcomed warmly
SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — The Duchess of York was greeted by enthusiastic well-wishers when she arrived in Sydney on official visit marking Australia's bicentennial. The duchess, the former Sarah Ferguson, will join her husband, Prince Andrew, on Sunday when his ship, HMS Edinburgh, docks in Sydney after a Far East tour. The two have been apart since shortly after their daughter, Princess Beatrice, was born Aug. 8. The baby stayed behind in England. The royal couple will officiate at the Oct. 1 Bicentennial Naval Salute, comprising 21 warships and support vessels from 16 nations in the largest such formation to sail into Sydney harbor.

Nathan gets hospital post

Diane Howard Nathan of Glastonbury, a registered nurse, has been named director of DRG and utilization review at Manchester Memorial Hospital. She will be responsible for the evaluation of patient hospital stays and how they relate to hospital care. Nathan received her diploma from Newark Beth Israel Hospital in Newark, N.J. She also has worked in Dallas, New Haven and Paoli, Pa. She most recently served as director of utilization and quality assessment at Mount Sinai Hospital, Hartford. She is a charter member of the National Association of Quality Assurance Professionals, and she is a member and past treasurer of the Connecticut Association of Quality Assurance Professionals.

Albetski joins lab staff

Jan Albetski of Vernon has been named administrative director of laboratory services at Manchester Memorial Hospital. Before joining the staff, she served as laboratory manager at New Britain General Hospital. She has been an assistant laboratory manager at William W. Backus Hospital in Norwich and a clinical instructor at St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center, Hartford. She is a graduate of the University of Connecticut.

Some dental goals unmet

ATLANTA (AP) — A new federal report says that while a growing majority of the nation's children are free of cavities, the prevalence of sugar in schools and other problems means that other dental health goals are not being met.

Preliminary results from a 1986-87 survey of U.S. schoolchildren show more than 65 percent of 3-year-olds were free of tooth decay, the national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday. The figure was 49 percent in a 1979-80 survey and 29 percent in 1973. And while federal health officials' goal of no tooth decay in 40 percent of the nation's 3-year-old children has been surpassed, three of 11 other dental-health goals for 1990 are unlikely to be reached, the CDC said. One other objective has been reached, progress is being made toward four, and information is not sufficient to assess the other three, the Atlanta-based agency said.

Fish oil clears arteries

BOSTON (AP) — Fish oil provides the first effective way of keeping newly opened heart arteries working smoothly after angioplasty, a procedure used on 200,000 Americans annually with heart disease, according to a study published Thursday in the New England Journal of Medicine. "It looks very promising," said Dr. Gregory J. Dehmer. "It's the only agent so far that has even shown a hint of having an effect. This study is a little like the light at the end of the tunnel."

Angioplasty is widely used because it provides a non-surgical alternative to coronary bypass operations for people with coronary artery disease. Doctors use tiny balloons to squeeze open clogged heart arteries. A major drawback of the procedure is restenosis, the spontaneous reclosing of the newly cleared arteries. This happens in about one-third of all patients within six months of their angioplasties.

Salt tablets don't help

NEW YORK (AP) — Don't replace lost sodium with salt tablets, recommends the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau. It's a myth that salt tablets replace sodium lost through sweating, it says. They actually draw water from the tissues into the stomach to dilute the abnormally high sodium concentration from the tablet, says Nancy Clark, a Boston-area sports nutritionist. This gastric reaction dehydrates you and performance is hampered. Clark's advice: Stay away from salt tablets and concentrate on replacing lost fluids.

Wanted: someone to love boarder babies

By Judie Glive
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The infant gingerly reaches for Ed Belling's mustache. Their eyes meet and a big baby grin spreads across the 2-month-old's face. The boy's teenage parents, homeless and drug addicted, aren't there to capture the moment. But Belling is. He is one of a growing number of 60-minute dads and moms. They give their time and love to help nurture and care for the city's small army of boarder babies — infants forced to live in sterile hospital settings.

Looking around the crowded nursery at St. Luke's Hospital in Manhattan, Belling, an unmarried box-office clerk, prefers to dwell on the positive: "What I've done is given a tiny baby some nourishment, some comfort, even if it is only for an hour." "The babies wind up in hospitals for various reasons. Some have been abandoned or have parents who can't afford to take care of them. Most have parents who aren't fit to take care of them," usually addicts, says Alan Ormsby of the city's Human Resources Administration, which oversees the boarder baby program.

There are about 300 such infants in the city, most of them black or Hispanic; children who, at one point, spent as much as three months lying in steel-sided cribs and plastic basinetts, waiting to be put in foster homes. Reforms in the system have since helped reduce that wait to an average of five days for healthy infants. But those with special needs can stay as long as eight months, says Carolyn Jordan, of the Greater New York Hospital Association, which represents 70 hospitals.

Boarder babies are fed and changed at regular intervals by already overworked staff nurses. "But what about love?" That's where people like Belling come in. They're part of St. Luke's Roosevelt Medical Center's volunteer program to give the infants the human touch they crave. Nine women and eight men donate an hour each week to care for the hospital's boarder babies. "Before the volunteers came up to hold the babies in the nursery, the babies were not reactive to anything," said Virginia Crosby, director of volunteers at the medical center. "The staff would go in and feed them when they could. The babies didn't even react to sound after a while." "Once the volunteers started, it was totally different," Ms. Crosby said.

TENDER MOMENT — Ed Belling, an unmarried box-office clerk, cuddles an infant at St. Luke's Hospital in New York. Belling is one of a growing number of 60-minute dads and moms who give their time and love to help care for boarder babies — infants forced to live in sterile hospital settings.

"They began to react to the love and you could see a real difference." It was there in the face of the month-old boy Loretta Donato gently rocked in a dispirited rocking chair inside St. Luke's boarder baby nursery, a small, gray-walled room that would be cheerless if not for the efforts of the staff nurses who used their own money to decorate it. Eight tiny "cribs" — actually, percent said they had five or more partners in the past year. That particularly includes the 30 percent who reported one sex partner or none in the last year.

People also were asked about the status of their sex partners — their gender and whether they were spouses, friends, pick-ups or prostitutes. Six percent of the men and 1 percent of the women surveyed said at least one of their sex partners in the previous year was a "casual date or pick-up." Well below 1 percent reported paying for sex. Of the men reporting sex in the previous year, 3 percent said their partners included males and another 6 percent didn't answer the question. Homosexual men make up the largest group of AIDS patients in the United States. The survey was conducted between Feb. 14 and April 25.

Overall, 22 percent of the respondents said they had had sex partners in the previous year, and 60 percent reported only one partner. Eleven percent said two to four, 2 percent said five or more, and 6 percent did not answer the question. "Most Americans appear to be at relatively low risk of infection" from the virus that causes AIDS, the CDC said. The survey said that particularly includes the 30 percent who reported one sex partner or none in the last year.

Testing resources need to be concentrated on those people rather than populations that probably haven't been exposed. "Let's not take limited resources... and waste them," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chief sponsor of the testing measure. "Let the states do their own efforts as they see fit." The Waxman bill would give states complying with its terms an extra $400 million a year to conduct widespread, voluntary AIDS testing and counseling. It also would protect the confidentiality of counseling and testing records, speed up research into acquired immune deficiency syndrome and create a national commission to advise Congress on issues raised by the fatal disease. Final House action could come as early as today. The bill then goes to the Senate. The Human Rights Campaign Fund, a political action committee for the gay and lesbian community, praised the House for rejecting what it called hostile amendments proposed by Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Calif., and other conservatives. "Members of the House have sent a clear signal to Rep. Dannemeyer and others who support irrational, punitive AIDS actions that the time has come for responsible AIDS policy," the fund's executive director, Vic Basile, said in a statement.

The virus that causes AIDS, a fatal disease, most often is spread through close contact with contaminated blood products or semen. Its principal victims have been male homosexuals, hemophiliacs and intravenous drug abusers. The House agreed to require testing of prisoners convicted of prostitution or crimes related to sexual assault or 1V drug abuse. The plan was approved 266-137 as an alternative to mandatory testing of all prisoners.

Drowning man show thanks by biting hand that saved him

DEAR ABBY: I have a message for Jennifer Morales, the "nature lover" who resented all the "No Trespassing" signs she saw while vacationing in the north woods of Wisconsin. Grow up, Jennie! If you invite strangers on your property to smell the roses, you'd better carry plenty of liability insurance!

I run a deep-sea charter fishing boat service, and three years ago, my mate, a customer and I pulled a drowning man from Fire Island Inlet (the inlet to the Atlantic Ocean). In one practiced move, my mate ran aft, kicking off his boots and throwing the life ring. As luck would have it, the drowning man caught hold of the line and we pulled him into the boat. It took three of us to haul him aboard. A week later, my insurance company called to inform me that a claim of $150 had been placed against me. It seems that when we pulled the drowning man aboard, he lost his eyeglasses and wallet!

I was notified that because my deductible was higher than the claim, I had seven working days in which to reimburse the company or my insurance would be canceled. CAPT. JOHN BILITSKY JR., NORTH BABYLON, N.Y.

DEAR CAPTAIN JOHN: Incredible! Truth is, indeed, stranger than fiction. As we age, the constituents in our sweat change; we tend to become more "aromatic." Also, bacterial action on perspiration will release odors that are socially unacceptable. You need a complete medical examination to make sure that you don't have a disease causing your problem. If you don't, you may have to be content with washing frequently with deodorant soap. Chlorophyll is useful only in absorbing the odor of bad breath; it will not affect body odor.

Checking accounts have been upgraded
It's big news that you no longer have to wait more than a reasonable amount of time after you've deposited a check in your checking account before it becomes available for withdrawal. Effective in September, banks, savings and loan associations (thrifts), and credit unions must give customers access to the money they deposited within one, three, or seven days. The exact time depends on the type of check (for example, local or non-local).

Now that you're thinking about checking accounts, do you know how to make sure a bank hasn't made a mistake with the amount of a check you've written? Do you know how to stop a check? Here are some guidelines for getting the most from your checking account. 1. When to use checks. Write checks for anything where you may need a record — to prove that you've paid a bill, to prove to the IRS you had certain deductible expenses, and the like. 2. If you're making out a check to an official of a firm — say, an insurance company — include the person's title, so the money can't be deposited into a personal account.

Sylvia Porter

3. Always fill out the stub of a check, indicating the amount and to whom it was paid. One reason you might mislay a canceled check. Another reason: you can quickly check that the amount hasn't been altered. When you fill out the stub, make sure that the bank imprints on the bottom right of the check are the same. 4. If you make a mistake on a check, write void on both the stub and the check. Keep the voided check if you're ever audited by the IRS, missing checks could arouse suspicion. 5. For simplicity in record-keeping, attach the canceled check to a copy of the bill. 6. Make sure that the numbers that the bank imprints on the bottom right of your canceled check match the check's amount. 7. The Consumer Federation of America claims that the best checking accounts are either NOW accounts or credit-union share drafts — if you can afford to keep a certain minimum amount (say $1,000) in such accounts. (NOW stands for "negotiable order of withdrawal.") Such accounts earn interest for you, and you may not be charged any fees. Choose the checking account with the lowest minimum (or average) balance that allows you to earn interest and avoid fees. Super NOW accounts require higher minimums, but pay higher interest. 8. If you can't meet the minimum required for a NOW account, choose a regular checking account with the lowest minimum amount you need to avoid charges. 9. If you write only five to 10 checks a month, look for a bank with a "lifestyle" account. Such "no minimum" accounts generally charge very low fees — lower than for a regular, no-minimum account. 10. To avoid the pain of bounced checks, try to get an account with a credit line. 11. Shop around for the best checking account. Compare monthly service and transaction fees, charges per check, charges for deposits, charges (if any) for using an automatic teller machine, charges to stop a check. You can save more than $100 a year, reports the Consumer Federation. 12. Stopping a check. You can get into legal trouble by telling a bank not to pay a check, so be careful. Times to stop a check: a person to whom you gave a check has lost it; someone to whom you mailed a check hasn't received it after a week or two.

Super NOW accounts require higher minimums, but pay higher interest. 8. If you can't meet the minimum required for a NOW account, choose a regular checking account with the lowest minimum amount you need to avoid charges. 9. If you write only five to 10 checks a month, look for a bank with a "lifestyle" account. Such "no minimum" accounts generally charge very low fees — lower than for a regular, no-minimum account. 10. To avoid the pain of bounced checks, try to get an account with a credit line. 11. Shop around for the best checking account. Compare monthly service and transaction fees, charges per check, charges for deposits, charges (if any) for using an automatic teller machine, charges to stop a check. You can save more than $100 a year, reports the Consumer Federation. 12. Stopping a check. You can get into legal trouble by telling a bank not

'Union says EB plays 'mind games'

GROTON (AP) — Electric Boat says it will reduce the size of its required workforce through such measures as subcontracting as long as a strike continues, but a top union official says the company is just "playing mind games" with its employees.

"A lot of this is to create an illusion of a real bad scene," Joseph Messier, president of the striking 10,000-member Metal Trades Council, said Thursday.

Union officials met Wednesday and again Thursday with EB representatives to discuss work the company is awarding to subcontractors.

"Whenever you are talking about permanent subcontracting and have the opportunity to discuss it, you want to avail yourself of the opportunity," Messier said.

There have been no contract talks since Aug. 11, when EB, for the first time, dropped its demand that workers accept only bonuses and offered a 3 percent wage increase in the third year of a proposed four-year contract. Described as inadequate by MTC leaders, the offer was never put to a vote of the membership, which struck July 1 after rejecting the first contract proposal by a 5-to-3 margin.

Electric Boat on Wednesday informed the MTC about the subcontracting of work it said represents about 370,000 man-hours. That translates into about 177 jobs, if you figure the average employee is responsible for about 2,000 man-hours a year, Messier said.

But Messier said "that doesn't mean to say that many jobs are being eliminated."

"Some of that work was going to go out anyway," he said, "and some of it may not necessarily be MTC jobs. Whenever we do work, it goes through different hands."

"This is one of many ways they (EB managers) are playing mind games with peoples' heads," said Messier. "They are doing whatever they can do to coerce our people back."

But a company spokesman, Neil Ruenzel, said Thursday that Electric Boat is merely doing what it said it would do from the start of the walkout. EB has made clear that "the longer the strike goes on, the smaller the workforce will be at the Groton shipyard," Ruenzel said.

The latest agreements with subcontractors bring to 700,000 the number of man-hours' work, including some janitorial services, Electric Boat has turned over to outside workers since the walkout began, said Ruenzel. He added the number would likely climb to at least 1 million.

Ruenzel said that "for the most part," the subcontracting cited in the talks with the union is a direct result of the strike. He could not pinpoint exactly how many jobs have been lost as a result of actions taken specifically in response to the strike.

Even if several hundred jobs were lost to subcontractors, Messier said, that doesn't mean that many strikers would be without employment when a contract agreement is reached.

Delta engine contract major coup for Pratt

EAST HARTFORD (AP) — Jet engine maker Pratt & Whitney has pulled off a major coup: a contract with Delta Air Lines worth at least $300 million.

Delta placed firm orders for Pratt & Whitney's PW4000 engine to power nine McDonnell Douglas MD-11s and nine 767s. The company also has options on 31 MD-11s and 16 767s, Pratt & Whitney said Thursday in a statement.

Based solely on the firm orders the contract is worth at least $300 million and including firm installed engines, spares and options will mean the company will deliver more than 530 engines, Pratt & Whitney said.

McDonnell Douglas MD-80 series powered by Pratt & Whitney's JTJ-D-200 engines, and for Boeing 757-232s to be powered by Pratt & Whitney PW2037 engines, the company said.

"This is an outstanding moment in Pratt & Whitney history," said Pratt & Whitney President Arthur E. Wegner.

"I consider Delta's decision a solid endorsement of our decision to commit to new engines—the PW2000 and PW4000," he said.

In selecting the PW4000 for its Douglas MD-11s and Boeing 767s, Delta became the 24th customer for the engine, which entered service in 1987 with Pan American World Airways and Singapore Airlines.

Delta previously had firm-ordered 60 PW2037-powered 757s, with options on 20 aircraft. Thirty-eight of these aircraft are in service, Pratt & Whitney said.

Delta has also placed options for 100 MD-88s which will be part of the 'Big ticket' orders soar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders for "big ticket" durable goods soared 6.6 percent in August on the strength of big jumps in the military and transportation sectors, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said total orders jumped to a seasonally adjusted $123.1 billion last month. The big jump follows a huge 7.4 percent decline in July, the biggest in more than four years, and an 8.7 percent increase in June, which was the largest in 39 months.

Orders for transportation equipment in August were up by 20.9 percent to $35.4 billion. More than half the increase was for motor vehicles and parts. Auto orders had been weak in July as factories were switching over to a new model year.

Five pass state CPA exam

Five people from Manchester are among 197 who passed the Certified Public Accountant examinations given by the state in May.

The Manchester residents are Steven E. Cote of 161 Oak Forest Drive, Pamela B. Cronin of 141K Tudor Lane, Mary F. Kozel of 165K Tudor Lane, David C. Schneider of 99 Hawthorne St., and Jennifer A. Hedlund of 91 Pitkin St.

The 1974-hour exam is administered over a three-day period and is the second major step leading toward state licensure and certification. Applicants must also demonstrate they have three years of acceptable professional experience and must complete an ethics course.

College to honor Pryor

Millard H. Pryor Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of Corcap Inc. of Manchester, will be among four people honored Thursday by the Hartford College of Women.

Others to be honored are Harzel Lebed of Bloomfield, interim president of the University of Hartford; Dorothy C. Goodwin of Storrs, a member of the Connecticut State Board of Education; and Georgette A. Koopman of West Hartford, who has been involved in cultural and educational work for many years.

The four will be saluted for service to the public and private sectors. The event is the third annual "In Celebration of Liberal Arts" at CIGNA in Bloomfield.

Sales force productivity declines over long term

STAMFORD (AP) — Top management needs to focus on why sales force productivity is dropping while the cost of selling is rising, a new study says.

The study found that there was an average increase of only 2.3 percent in annual sales volume per sales person. It also found there was an average increase of more than 12 percent in the cost of a sales call.

"The average sales person's selling time has decreased by about 250 hours per year and they are spending more time on administration and paperwork," said William A. O'Connell, a partner for the Norwalk-based Personnel Corp. of America.

O'Connell said Thursday the study involved 12,000 sales people at 550 companies in 40 industries. Personnel Corp. of America, which conducted the study, is a management consulting firm.

O'Connell said several factors have contributed to the poor long-term performance, including increased price competition from overseas suppliers and more sophisticated purchasing techniques.

He also said selling "has become increasingly complex."

He said that earlier, there was little data on how much selling costs. But, he says, now that companies see the price, they're going to demand more for their money.

"These marketplace factors are compounded by the fact that many American sales managers have failed to collect the data necessary for them to measure the productivity of their sales force and to allocate resources efficiently," O'Connell said.

O'Connell predicts that continuation of the current trends in selling costs and sales volume "will increasingly force the top management of American corporations to shift their attention away from manufacturing functions in order to focus on sales force productivity."

Looking to the next decade, O'Connell says there will be an increase in automation in sales. "They will use more computers to reduce paperwork," he said.

O'Connell said sales managers also will come from different backgrounds. Now, he says they often have built their careers on interpersonal skills, but says they also need analytical skills.

No one shows up as Coventry airs school-work plans

By Jacqueline Bennett
Manchester Herald

COVENTRY — What if a Special Town Meeting was held, and no townspeople came? That's what happened Thursday night at a meeting held to discuss a request from the School Building Committee to appropriate $730,000 for school renovation projects. But members of the Board of Education and Town Council went ahead and conducted business speaking to a virtually empty auditorium at Coventry High School.

Bolton panel worried about architect funds

By Andrew J. Davis
Manchester Herald

BOLTON — Members of the Board of Education expressed concern Thursday that the Board of Finance may not pass a $45,000 request to hire an architect to help determine needed improvements in schools. Board member Barry Stearns said he is very concerned about the request even though the Public Building Commission and the Board of Selectmen have already approved the school board's request.

"I don't think they have enough information," said Stearns, who said the selectmen are confused by the request at their Tuesday meeting. "We're really trying to get estimates on what this town wants to do."

The school board wants to hire an architect to make schematic drawings and figure cost estimates for improvements to Bolton Center School and Bolton Elementary School. Improvements might include a new auditorium, gymnasium and classrooms and lunch space.

Lions Club sponsors its sixth Bolton Fest

BOLTON — Hot-air balloon rides and a hay-filled wagon ride will be among a long list of events planned for Saturday's sixth annual Bolton Fest to be held at Herrick Memorial Park. More than 25 booths will display arts and crafts, flowers, baked goods and the programs of the National Guard, the Drug Abuse Program Committee and the Boy Scouts. There will also be a booth so visitors can have their blood pressure checked.

MORE SPACE — A two-classroom addition is currently being built at Bolton Elementary School to handle increased enrollment. Educators think more space will be needed in the next decade.

Growing pains

"I like the Bolton I grew up in. There's no reason why the Bolton my grandchildren may grow up in won't be a nice place," she said. "The Bolton of 1988 is not the Bolton of 1977 or Bolton of 1985." While the town is growing, the government is finding it harder and harder to get the money it needs to run the town efficiently, said Selectman Douglas T. Cheney. In May, townspeople, complaining that town budget was too high, voted down a 7-mill increase in the tax rate. Later, they overwhelmingly accepted a 6.5-mill increase.

CROMWELL (AP) — The governor and General Assembly will "be in a pickle come spring" when they try to balance the 1989-90 budget, according to an economics professor at the University of Connecticut. Professor William A. McEachern estimates there will be at least a $300 million hole to fill and that tax increases will almost certainly be required. Addressing a conference of municipal officials on Thursday, McEachern blamed the governor and the General Assembly for using millions of dollars in one-shot revenue sources while approving huge spending increases in recent years at a time when tax revenues were leveling off.

adding more classrooms, lunch space, an auditorium, and what to do with the old school. School Superintendent Richard Packman said the Center School is old and has many state-code violations. He said the system could abandon the building or refurbish it. "We have town and school needs that must be dealt with," he said. "We see both sides of it. We're realistic to know there's a financial side to it. We can't approach it in a piecemeal, Band-Aid approach. That would be tragic."

Aouita gets vote as best runner ever

As the track and field portion of the Olympics commences, most fans are anticipating another Carl Lewis-Bob Johnson clash in the 100 meters. Great Britain's Daley Thompson attempting to become the first person to win three decathlon gold medals. Florence Griffith-Joyner's bid to prove she's the fastest woman in the world after her meteoric success this summer. 400-meter intermediate hurdler Edwin Moses trying to take his place in Olympic history with his third gold medal in his specialty and, of course, Mary Decker-Slane's determined efforts toward her elusive gold medal in either the 1500 or 3000 meters after colliding with Zola Budd in the 3000 final in 1984.

Undoubtedly, all of the scenarios will provide an abundance of drama and excitement for the world. However, one man poised to stake his claim as the greatest distance runner of all time is patiently waiting to take center stage in the 800 and 1500-meter events — Morocco's Sid Aouita. The world record-holder in the 1500, two mile-2000 and 5000, Aouita has lost but one race (a 3000-meter steeplechase last year) in his last 43 appearances on the track. He won the gold in the 5000 in Los Angeles and is ranked No. 1 in the world in the 1500 and 5000. Aouita was also the 5000 champ at the World Track and Field Championships last summer in Rome.

Posing a definite threat to Aouita in the 800 and 1500 is Englishman Steve Cram, the world record-holder in the mile. Aouita and Cram have effectively "duked" each other during international competition the past few years, reminiscent of the avoidance of rivalry between Great Britain's former Olympic champs, Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett.

The Aouita-Cram showdown will be as heated and emotional as a Lewis-Johnson (the 100 final at 11:30 p.m. tonight). A few days ago, Aouita told the media in Seoul that he was considering also running the 5000. This would translate into 10 races in nine days for Aouita and, literally, running back-to-back Olympic finals in the 1500 and 5000 which are a mere 10 minutes apart.

What is probably more an act of mental warfare against his adversaries than an honest plan, Aouita remains the only human with any hopes of pulling off the 800-1500-5000 triple.

Nevertheless, if Aouita sweeps the 800-1500 double and does so in impressive fashion, he has my vote as the best distance runner of all time.

Mets — no hum — clinch division

By Ben Walker
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — While the New York Yankees guaranteed a division championship this season, the New York Mets went out and won one. The Mets — as expected — clinched the National League East title Thursday night by beating Philadelphia 3-1. They did it the same way they keep winning, with the best pitching in the majors. Ron Darling held the Phillies to six hits, the defense contributed some key plays and the offense, which has sputtered at times, managed to score enough. In short, a microcosm of the Mets' season.

clinging the NL East title as they beat Philadelphia, 3-1, Thursday night at Shea Stadium.

"We always knew we were going to win it. We just had to keep telling ourselves we would," captain Keith Hernandez said. The postgame celebration had the usual trappings of spraying champagne and lots of shouting. But it lacked the verve of the victory party in 1986 after the Mets clinched the division. Bob Digan will be manager of ceremonies. Tickets ($15 apiece) will be available at the door. Special guests will be former track Olympians Pete Close, Joe McCluskey and Lindy Remington.

PHILLIES scored in the fourth on Von Hayes' sacrifice fly. The Mets tied it against Don Carman, 11-12, in the fifth on rookie Gregg Jefferies' RBI grounder, took the lead in the sixth on a wild pitch and added an insurance run in the seventh when Mookie Wilson dashed home from second base on McReynolds' infield single.

One who will try to remain undefeated while the 7-6 will attempt to rebound from a 7-6 loss which broke a 16-game winning streak dating back to Oct. 24, 1986. Those are the respective scenarios for the Manchester High and East Catholic football teams as each has its home opener on Saturday.

The Indians (1-0) are coming off a last-gasp 7-0 victory over Windsor last week while the Eagles suffered a last-minute defeat to New London in the greatest distance runner of all time is patiently waiting to take center stage in the 800 and 1500-meter events — Morocco's Sid Aouita.

Memorial Field while the Eagles will entertain Fairfield Prep in its All-Connecticut conference opener at Carlin Field, also at 1:30. "We're not under any illusions," McLaughlin said, referring to last week's win. "I don't think we had a particularly good game. We were very fortunate but we showed a lot of character. We have to sustain an offense. I was very pleased with the defense."

Track takes center stage

SEoul, South Korea — Watch the clock and check the record book. Carl Lewis is in high gear with a 9.99-second warm-up for Saturday's 100, Edwin Moses is going brightly over the hurdles and Jackie Joyner-Kersey is more than halfway to an historic gold.

The spotlight shifted to track and field Friday at the Summer Games, though a doe-eyed Soviet teen became the new queen of gymnastics, thrilling fans with a perfect 10 to gain the crown and Olympic gold, and getting a hug from the 1984 queen, Mary Lou Retton. It was also a day of easy triumphs for the American men's basketball and water polo teams.

Just hope I'm feeling the same way on Friday that I felt last Saturday." Hudson, who has missed considerable time this season because of tendinitis in his right shoulder, had one of his stronger outings of the season in last Saturday's 3-1 loss to the Red Sox. New York manager Lou Piniella says his club has rebounded well after the Boston bust one week ago. "We needed to win six games at home," he said after the Yankees had swept a three-game series from the Baltimore Orioles at home. "We got half of our goal. By Sunday we'll know exactly where we were more pressure on the Red Sox than the Yankees this weekend."

Balance will be the key for UConn, Yale gridders

By Len Auster
Manchester Herald

NEW HAVEN — Balance. That's the focal point both UConn head coach Tom Jackson and Yale University head coach Carm Cozza zeroed in on at the annual luncheon prior to their gridiron tussle Saturday at 1 p.m. at the Yale Bowl.

UConn went on to win that game, 17-12. Cozza said he won't hesitate to use sophomore John Purlanic. "I've told both (quarterbacks) they might play in this game," he said. Jackson, who holds a 3-1 edge over the Elis in his four previous years, is hoping to find the signal-calling chores. Brubaker filled in for injured Kelly Ryan in the '86 game with Connecticut and was 5-for-5 for 61 yards in the first period, engineering an 82-yard drive. UConn went on to win that game, 17-12.

The good news against the Wildcats was that Connecticut scored 20 points with possession for only 2 1/4 minutes. The bad news was time of possession. "Defensively, we have to get the ball back better," Jackson says. "New Hampshire did some things to us that got us out of (what we do)," he added.

Yale leads in the series, 31-7. The Elis dominated until seven years ago when UConn strung together four consecutive wins. Cozza is 15-7 against the Huskies.

GRID NOTES — Yale senior Buddy Zachery, an East Catholic High School graduate, is listed No. 2 on the depth chart at tailback. He scored a touchdown in the Elis' opening game.

Coaches clinic to air

A Boston Red Sox coaches clinic that was held in Glastonbury on August 15 will be aired by Cox Cable Public Access-Channel 33 every Wednesday at 8 p.m. and Saturday at 6 p.m. in the month of October.

Tippett out 2-3 weeks

HARTFORD — Hartford Whalers' left wing Dave Tippett will be sidelined 2-3 weeks because of strained ligaments in his right knee, the club announced Thursday.

Ojeda resting comfortably — Bobby Ojeda's nearly severed finger is showing improvement and the New York Mets pitcher is resting comfortably, team doctor Jim Parkes said Thursday.

U.S. wins in water polo — Terry Schroeder scored four goals and the American team overpowered China 14-7 in Olympic water polo competition Friday.

Spain remains unbeaten in the B group. West Germany is unbeaten in the A division.

U.S. clinches top spot

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The U.S. men's basketball team outrebounced China 54-18 and clinched the top spot in its Olympic pool Friday with a 108-57 victory.

The United States played the entire game without J.R. Reid and Stacey Augmon, nursing minor foot injuries and available only in emergencies.

The top spot in the pool means the U.S. team will play the fourth-place finisher in the other pool in Monday's quarterfinals.

Bengochea upset winner

GENEVA (AP) — Eduardo Bengochea of Argentina ousted defending champion Claudio Mezzadri of Switzerland 6-2, 6-2 Thursday to advance to the quarterfinals of the $220,000 Geneva Open.

Bengochea won the last four games with aggressive net play to beat Mezzadri, ranked No. 61 in the world, in 79 minutes.

B.J. Scoot triumphs — B.J. Scoot led from start to finish in the third edition of the Little Brown Jug by 1 1/2 lengths over Threfoed at the Delaware County Fairgrounds on Thursday.

Arryan Vajda of Czechoslovakia downed Pablo Marjan of Peru 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

Gibbs is not wondering

HERNDON, Va. (AP) — Regardless of how Mark Rypien performs in his stint as the Redskins' starting quarterback, Washington coach Joe Gibbs will not wonder what might have happened if he had kept Jay Schroeder around.

Williams was listed in fair condition at a Washington-area hospital Thursday after undergoing an emergency appendectomy late Wednesday night. The Redskins placed him on the injured reserve list, and there's a chance he could be out for up to eight weeks.

CLOSE COMPANY — Cheney Tech's ball during their match Thursday afternoon at Cheney's field. Prince took Roy Steer for possession of the soccer decision, 3-2.

Cheney can't recover in time

Too little, too late was the cry from the Cheney Tech boys' soccer team after its match with Prince Tech Thursday afternoon. The visiting Falcons came out quickly and held on for a 3-2 non-conference win. Cheney falls to 1-2 while Prince Tech is 1-1. Cheney will be at Bolton Saturday morning at 11 a.m.

Prince Tech assumed a 2-0 lead in the first half on goals by Marvin Porter and Juan DeJesus. Beaver senior Stephen Infante trimmed the score to 2-1 in the second half on an assist from Shannon Mallett. Infante set the Falcon goal to Juan Amador to the ball and tapped it in for the score.

After a Sergio Pereira put the Falcons up 3-1, Cheney senior Scott House, tallied from an impossible angle with four minutes left, but the Beavers ran out of time. Mike Cote assisted on House's goal.

"We came out flat," Cheney Coach Paul Soucy said. "Most of the first half we controlled the ball but we couldn't finish it off." "We moved and supported so much better today. And the defense played outstanding," he added, citing the play of senior stopperback Brenda Thalacker.

Cougars defeated

The first-year Manchester Community College women's soccer team got a rude introduction Thursday afternoon as visiting Becker Junior College took home an 8-1 decision at MCC's Cougar Field.

Nancy Brooks and Joanne Gallagher and Gail Russell each had two goals and Nancy Hutchings and Kathy Derry one apiece to lead the way for Becker. MCC got on the board on a goal by Wendy Burnett at the 77:02 mark, assisted by Teri Burnett.

MCC Coach Cathy McGillicuddy was satisfied with her team's performance. "Most of these kids have never played soccer before and this is a learning process for all of us," she said. "I have a lot of athletes that are coming out for soccer for the first time. They wanted to play a fall sport and I'm happy for their participation."

MCC will play a six-game schedule, five at home. Its next game is Wednesday at 4 p.m. at home against Springfield Tech.

East German swimmers add to gold medal count

MADAME BUTTERFLY — Janel Jorgensen of Ridgefield churns through the water in the 100-meter butterfly preliminary in Seoul today. The Connecticut resident finished fifth in the finals.

Rosa Mota, the "Atomic Ant" of Portugal, bounded over the 26-mile, 385-yard course in 2 hours, 25 minutes, 39 seconds to add a gold to the bronze she won in the same race in the 1984 Los Angeles Games.

Australian Lisa Martin won the silver in 2:25.52, and Katrin Dörre of East Germany took the bronze in 2:28.20. Nancy Ditz, the top U.S. finisher, came in 17th. Joan Benoit Samuelson, winner in 1984, didn't compete here after complaining of injuries, but Mota said she hoped the American would return to running.

Mota, 5-foot-1 and 99 pounds, is the only woman medalist Portugal has ever had and she has almost single-handedly created a running craze in her homeland. "I'm proud for me and my country, a small country," Mota said. "Today we stand beside the large countries."

The U.S. track team, which hopes to dominate the glammed-up events at these Games, started off with a silver medal in the shot put.

East Germany's Ulf Timmermann won the shot with a toss of 69 feet, 9 1/4 inches while Randy Barnes of South Charleston, W.Va., took the silver at 68-4. Alessandro Andrei of Italy was third at 66-2 1/4.

The Americans showed some fire when Lewis blazed to the only fire when Lewis blazed to the only sub-10-second time of the day in winning his second 100-meter qualifying heat.

Lewis complained about the quick trigger finger of the starter, something that could give rival Ben Johnson an advantage in the final Saturday because of Johnson's lower, faster starting position.

"We were told all summer we'd have a long gun," Lewis said, "but then we came here and it's a quick gun. It definitely caught me by surprise in the first round."

Lewis ran 10.14 in his first heat. Johnson, who holds the 100 world record of 9.83, blasted out of the blocks in the first heat, grabbed a huge lead, then coasted to a 10.37 finish. In the second round, he ran 10.17 but finished third behind Britain's Linford Christie and American Dennis Mitchell.

Moses, seeking his third Olympic gold in the 400 intermediate hurdles, sped to easy victory in his first heat but left the stadium furious about race conditions. "It was chaos at the start," he said. "I was not a chance to warm up, with people running all over the track."

Joyner-Kersey is on a pace to become the first woman to crack the 7,000-point barrier in the Olympic heptathlon, a grueling series of seven events whose winner is often dubbed "the world's greatest woman athlete."

SEOUL, South Korea — Kristin Otto and Uwe Dassler added to East Germany's Olympic gold medal chest while Mary T. Meagher and Matt Cetlinski came up empty again for the United States Friday night.

The 6-foot-2 Otto won her fourth gold medal in four tries in an Olympic record time of 59.00 seconds for the 100-meter butterfly. It was the second fastest time in history behind Meagher's 57.93 in 1981. Meagher also held the previous Olympic mark of 59.25, set in 1984.

Birte Weigang of East Germany finished second in 59.45 and Hong Qian of China was third in 59.87. The other American, Janel Jorgensen of Ridgefield, Conn., was fifth in 1:00.48.

Dassler set a world record in the night's last three events, the men's 200 breaststroke, women's 100 breaststroke and men's 400 freestyle, which the United States has never lost in the Olympic Games. American Chris Jacobs, Troy Dalbey, Tom Jager and anchor swimmer Matt Biondi, the world record holder in the 100 freestyle.

Earlier in the day, preliminaries were held in six events, including tonight's five finals. The final of the 800 freestyle, in which Astrid Strauss of East Germany and Janet Evans of Placentia, Calif., were the top two qualifiers, are scheduled for Saturday night.

Other two medalists, 200 freestyle winner Duncan Armstrong of Australia and Wojdat also bettered the mark. Armstrong finished in 3:47.15 and Wojdat in 3:47.34.

Cetlinski, who holds the American record of 3:48.06, led after 300 meters but couldn't keep up with the blistering pace and finished fourth in 3:48.09.

The victories by Otto and Dassler and the second-place finish by Weigang kept East German swimmers in the lead with seven gold medals, six of them by women, and 15 total medals, 12 by women. The United States is second with nine medals, including four golds, less than expected.

Koreans delighted by world attention

By Barry Renfrew
The Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Delighted Olympic organizers say the Seoul Games are putting South Korea on the world map and they shrug off complaints about a flood of big spending foreign visitors.

South Korean officials say the Games are meeting their goal of transforming the country's image as a billion people around the world watch the Games and the host nation on television.

"The world is seeing Korea as an advanced, modern nation. The reaction has been overwhelming," said an official of the Seoul Olympic Organizing Committee.

Olympic officials dismiss complaints from some businesses that the Games have been overwhelming. "It's a little scary," Slaney said. "It just made me think of Los Angeles for a second."

The only violence at the boxing arena Friday was, appropriately, between the boxers after five Korean officials were banned for Thursday's attack on a New Zealand referee.

Romalis Ellis, a 132-pound southpaw with fast hands from Ellenwood, Ga., anticipated a tough time against Korean Lee Kang-suk but came away with a 5-0 decision that didn't lead to any complaints from the crowd or Lee's corner.

"I was very scared it might go the other way," Ellis said. "We knew we had to go out there and take control. The crowd is a factor in the judging and there is so much controversy out there."

Ellis quieted the crowd when he forced Lee to take two standing 8-counts in the second round and bloodied the Korean's nose. He appeared to have won when he knocked Lee down late in the round, but the referee ruled it a slip.

The win was so convincing that even the Korean coach applauded when the decision was announced.

The American team is 6-2 overall and has 10 fighters still in the tournament. The Korean team, considered one of the stronger ones going into the Olympics, has lost five of 12 fights.

Soviet fighters kept rolling along, winning their 12th fight without a loss.

Soviet gymnast Elena Shushunova captured the all-around gold medal just the way American Mary Lou Retton did in 1984 — scoring a perfect 10 on the vault, her final event of the day.

WASHINGTON — European automakers must think this is the year for you to take the plunge on that sports car with enough horsepower to achieve Earth orbit or on the luxury barge with faucets for red and white wine in the back seat.

They're offering more models than ever before, 40, that get caught by the U.S. "gas-guzzler" tax, which they also paid in 1987 but escaped last year.

As usual, the Japanese are the mileage champs. For the fourth straight year the fuel-slinging cars are the Japanese-made Geo Metro, formerly the Chevrolet Sprint, and the two-seater Honda Civic CXH HF.

The Metro's mileage was 53 miles per gallon in the city, 1mpg below last year's figure for the same car, and 58 on the highway test, the same as last year. Geo is the new name for General Motors Corp. is putting on the imports of its Chevrolet division.

The Civic's figures are identical to last year's: 50 mpg city, 56 mpg highway.

The gas-guzzler tax, unique to the United States, assesses a penalty in the form of an excise that rises with declining fuel economy. It starts at $500 and goes up to $3,500. It was enacted in 1975, when fears of fuel shortages were rampant, and aimed at discouraging the thrifty.

In all, 45 models — some of them identical except for trim — are official gas-guzzlers. Last year's list included only 24, and the year before that the count was only 18.

This year's includes five Rolls-Royces that escaped in previous years through a now-closed loophole that exempted cars of more than 6,000 pounds gross vehicle weight.

European models that will pay the tax come from Rolls and Bentley badge, plus Maserati, Ferrari, Mercedes-Benz, Porsche, Aston-Martin, Jaguar, Volvo and BMW.

The proliferation of guzzlers reflects a growing desire for performance and status, analysts say.

"Around here it's almost a status symbol to have paid a $3,000 penalty tax," commented Garrett Stasse, auto editor of The Register in Shrewsbury, N.J., in Allentown Missouri County.

"If you have a car in your lineup that does not live up to its performance image, you're in more trouble today than if you have an official gas-guzzler," said Ed Miller, a senior editor at Ward's Automotive Publications in Detroit.

Clarence Dittow, director of the Center for Auto Safety in Washington, an advocacy group that frequently has opposed relaxation of government fuel standards, said: "We are going in the wrong direction. We ought to be headed the other way and making gas-sippers."

But manufacturers, he said, "think they'll make more profits than they pay in penalties."

"The tax really isn't objected to by the buyer" of luxury cars, said Kyle Johnson of GM's Cadillac division. "It does not alter GM's commitment to stay away from the gas-guzzler tax on U.S.-built cars."

Johnson was commenting on the Cadillac Allante, a $50,000-plus two-seater introduced last year to compete against the upscale Europeans. A larger engine this year brought it under the tax with a rating of 17 mpg in the city and 23 mpg on the highway, adding $650 to the sticker price.

The other taxed U.S. entry is one model of the Chrysler TC by Maserati, which had ratings of 17 and 21. Other TC models escape the tax, but not the one with the turbocharged 2.5-liter engine (155 cubic inches) without the top-gear lockup feature on the three-speed automatic.

This car is built in Italy using many U.S.-supplied components. The Cadillac Allante is built in the United States using an Italian body.

The other U.S. gas-guzzlers are the Chrysler Fifth Avenue and its identical twin, the Dodge Diplomat and the Plymouth Grand Fury. They get 16 mpg in the city and 23 mpg out of town, according to EPA, compared with 17-23 last year and 16-21 in 1987.

Europeans are going after the other three are the only entirely U.S. models ever to pay the tax, which they also paid in 1987 but escaped last year.
