300 glimpse a Cheney holiday

By Maureen Leavitt
Manchester Herald

It was a visit to Christmas past. Nearly 300 people took advantage of the first sunny Sunday in four weeks to leave their homes and enter another to get into the holiday spirit at the Cheney Homestead Open House.

Bright eyes of the young and old alike peered out from winter hats and coats to experience what a simple, Yankee Christmas might have been like 100 years ago. Hosts and hostesses from the Manchester Historical Society explained paintings and furniture of members of the George Cheney family while the musical duet of flutist Peter La Bombard and Violinist Peg Walker drifted throughout the three levels of the 200-year-old Homestead Sunday.

Holly sprigs, berries and pine cones decorated fireplace mantles and arrangements of shalacked fruit topped various tables. A perfectly-shaped live Christmas tree decorated with strands of popcorn, simple wooden and cloth ornaments and plain white candles helped to set the festive mood.

Frank Knight, a member of the Manchester Historical Society, cut down the tree, which he has done for the last few years, from a wooded section off of Lewis Street.

The instant visitors entered the house they were enveloped by the enticing aroma of spicy, hot-mulled apple cider served in a

U.S. doesn't want another Reykjavik

By Susanne M. Schafer
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The memories of the Soviet surprise at Reykjavik, Iceland, two years ago are still fresh in the minds of U.S. officials as they prepare for Wednesday's meeting between President Reagan, George Bush and Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

U.S. officials, by playing down expectations for the meeting and claiming it is "not a summit in the traditional sense," echo similar assertions made two years ago prior to the so-called "mini-summit" held in Reykjavik.

"Everyone agrees that the most important reason for this meeting is to review where the relationship between the two countries is, to reflect on the historical strides that we have made in our relationship," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said after the New York meeting was announced.

But Lt. Gen. Colin Powell, Reagan's national security adviser, said Friday that the U.S. side will be ready if Gorbachev springs anything.

"I think we would be prepared to deal with any surprise that they might come up with, take it under advisement, without feeling that we're under any pressure during a ... 2½-hour lunch period, to necessarily respond in a substantive way to something that has not been anticipated," he said.

The Icelandic summit was touted as a brief session, with the goal of making advances in the arms control arena that would pave the way for a full-fledged summit later in the year on U.S. soil.

True, no noses were bloodied, but Reagan and Gorbachev parted company at the windswept Hofdi House amid bitter looks and even harsher language, having wrestled with the earthshaking question of ridding the world of the superpower nuclear arsenals. Gorbachev caught the U.S. side off guard by proposing a global ban on intercontinental ballistic missiles, and the so-called non-summit disintegrated when Reagan refused to budge over proposed curbs on his Star Wars missile defense system.

In Reykjavik's wake, charges flew that Reagan and his U.S. team had been woefully unprepared to deal with the stunning arms control proposals hurled about by Gorbachev. The White House scurried to recoup, with then-chief of staff Donald T. Regan rejecting the idea that the parley had been a disappointment, claiming instead that it gave the two leaders a deeper understanding of one another and narrowed differences over offensive arms.

Yet it took months for the superpower relationship to get back on a more productive track, leading to the extensive summits in Washington and Moscow and the first-ever treaty banning an entire class of nuclear weapons.

Even though the New York session has been as hastily arranged as Reykjavik, and even though it is also being held with the intent of making sure the U.S.-Soviet relationship remains stable, few independent Soviet and arms control analysts expect a replay of the surprises that

Legal fight looms over access road

By Alex Girelli
Manchester Herald

A group of downtown merchants has hired the Manchester law firm of Eldergill and Beck to fight plans to build an access road as part of the $15 million Main Street reconstruction project.

Attorney Bruce Beck said today that he mailed a Dec. 2 letter to the state Department of Transportation and town officials which claims that the access road was planned without the necessary environmental impact report. He said that the report is required under both federal and state environmental laws.

"We're putting them on notice. We think there's a deficiency procedurally in the way this thing is handled," he said.

Beck, who practices with attorney Kathien Eldergill at 447 Center St., said the letter to the DOT requests that an environmental impact study be done on the effects of the access road. He said the statement should address not only traffic and environmental concerns but others including the "social and cultural" impact of the road plans.

Members of Heritage Group, a real estate group that owns an office condominium on Main Street, have said they could lose as many as 30 parking spaces because of the access road.

The access road plans would also require moving or demolishing part of a commercial building at the east corner of Purnell Place and Oak Street.

The access road, which would run through parking lots east of Main Street, is designed to handle traffic while parts of Main Street are torn up and to provide further access to the parking lots. The reconstruction project is scheduled to begin in the spring of 1990.

Beck said a six-member steering committee of the group he represents includes Main Street merchant George Marlow and Dr. Robert Fish. He said the merchants decided to hire his firm after receiving little satisfaction in a meeting with Mayor Peter P. DiRosa Jr.

The group has taken the name "ADAPT," which stands for "A Downtown Association to Preserve the Thoroughfare."

Fish said this morning that opposition to the access road is widespread among Main Street merchants and property owners. He said that a petition the group is circulating would contain signatures from about 80 percent of downtown merchants.

The group plans to present the petition to the town Board of Shuttle crew deploys secret radar satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The crew of space shuttle Atlantis successfully deployed a powerful radar satellite over the weekend, reportedly the chief goal of the clandestine military mission, knowledgeable sources said today.

The $500 million Lacrosse satellite reportedly was designed to gather extremely sharp all-weather images of Eastern Bloc military targets and would help American intelligence agencies monitor Soviet compliance with arms control treaties.

The sources, who requested anonymity, said the satellite was operating well as it followed a course that carries it over 80 percent of the Soviet Union.

As word about the satellite was reported, Atlantis' five astronauts were beginning the fourth day of their mission and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Air Force were keeping a tight lid on information about their activities.

Before today, there had been no in-flight information leaked to news agencies as it was on two earlier Defense Department shuttle missions.

"It seems the Air Force and NASA have learned how to plug the leaks," said one official Sunday, on condition he not be named.

NASA stages mishap to test landing rescue — story on page 7

The two agencies have promised to break the silence to provide a 24-hour advance notice on when the shuttle would land at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

Sources had said before Friday's launch from Cape Canaveral that the flight would end today or Tuesday unless the crew needed more time to deploy the radar satellite or to conduct other military-oriented experiments.

At Edwards, a ground crew Sunday conducted a simulated shuttle landing, an exercise normally done a day or two before a mission ends. But there was no

Gentle persuasion settled L'Ambiance

By Linda Stowell, The Associated Press

NEW HAVEN — A handshake and promises were all that sealed the historic settlement between 44 victims, 92 attorneys and more than 40 companies involved in the L'Ambiance Plaza building collapse before it was filed in federal court.

It is that kind of spirit that indicates the confidence all of the parties had in the case's chief mediator, U.S. District Court Judge Robert C. Zampano. But that kind of confidence in Zampano is nothing new.

He remembered the twinge of fear he felt two days before Thanksgiving when he realized one of his own cases during that time.

Zampano said during an interview Friday.

The day after the settlement was filed, Zampano reflected on the ups and downs of his months of negotiations that sometimes occurred on weekends, holidays and at night. Zampano also handed his own cases during that time.

He remembered the twinge of fear he felt two days before Thanksgiving when he realized one of his own cases during that time.

"Everyone knows if Zampano takes a look at it, if he can't do it (mediate a settlement), I don't know who can," Daly said.

Zampano, 59, is a graduate of Yale University Law School, and a former Connecticut U.S. attorney who began practicing law in 1954. He has been on the bench for nearly 25 years and said the L'Ambiance case was the most complex he has ever dealt with.

course all South has to do is review the bidding to know that North did not think he had an original opening bid, but there is no law that North cannot hold just a shade under an opening plus classic shape — i.e., good support for any suit South might bid. So South was happy to bid five hearts. West bid no more for two good reasons. He was afraid of too big a penalty, and he feared that North-South might have a slam.

The play went quickly. Declarer ruffed a spade in dummy, played ace of hearts and came to his hand with a high diamond to ruff a second spade. Then he led a heart from dummy. With East holding the K-J, the defenders could take only one heart trick, and 12 tricks were made. Declarer did not even need to take a club finesse, since the possible club loser went away on the fifth diamond in dummy.

Business braces for bad year in '89

By Martin Crutinger
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. economic growth will slow dramatically next year, reflecting weaker consumer spending and rising inflationary pressures, economists for the country's major corporations predicted today.

Members of the National Association of Business Economists said President-elect George Bush should make reducing the budget deficit his No. 1 priority but their gloomy assessment of the economy, if it comes true, would make that job much more difficult.

Two out of five of the economists surveyed said the country probably will be in a recession by this time next year and an overwhelming 80 percent predicted that the next downturn will arrive before the end of 1990.

"Our membership has been fairly consistent over the past year in holding to the belief that there will be a recession sometime in the 1989 or 1990 period," said Jay Woodworth, senior economist at Bankers Trust Co. of New York and president of the association.

The NABE economic outlook, based on responses from 200 of the group's members, was far more pessimistic on economic growth, interest rates and inflation than the assumptions the Reagan administration is using to prepare its final budget request to Congress.

The overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, will grow an anemic 2.2 percent next year. This compares to the administration's forecast of 3.5 percent GNP growth next year. Through the first nine months of 1988, the economy has been expanding at an annual rate of 3 percent.

Consumer prices, which have been rising at a 4.6 percent annual rate so far this year, will climb by 5 percent next year. The administration is looking for inflation to increase just 3.7 percent in 1989.

Interest rates, which have been rising, will probably peak in the first half of 1989, responding to further credit tightening on the part of the Federal Reserve, as the central bank moves to dampen inflationary pressures. Thirty-year bonds will average 9.5 percent next year, up from 9 percent this year. By contrast, the administration is looking for interest rates to drop by one-half percentage point.

The assumptions on the economy play a major role in determining the size of the federal budget deficit. Growth and inflation estimates affect the size of revenue predictions, and interest rate forecasts suggest how much the government will have to spend to finance the $2.6 trillion national debt.

The Reagan administration, using its far more optimistic assumptions, is projecting a federal deficit of $135 billion in the fiscal year that begins next October. That means the administration is likely to propose just $35 billion in deficit cuts in the budget it sends Congress on Jan. 9 to meet the deficit target of $100 billion called for in the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law.

However, Woodworth said the business economists believe the federal deficit will be much nearer the $155.1 billion run up in the current fiscal year, meaning that the task facing Bush to reduce the deficit without resorting to higher taxes will be more difficult.

In a survey on policy questions, the economists ranked cutting the budget deficit through a combination of lower spending and higher taxes as the most urgent policy action the Bush administration should take.

Bush has continued to reject calls for higher taxes, saying the deficit can be reduced through a flexible freeze, by which overall government growth would be held to the rate of inflation.

While the flexible freeze received support among some economists, it was also dismissed by a large number of analysts with 46 percent ranking it as their lowest priority.

Essex firm finds success with 3-D ads

By Dean Golembeski
The Associated Press

ESSEX — When Chris Crowell says his latest project folded, it's not a matter for concern. All his schemes collapse by design.

Crowell, 55, is the founder and president of Structural Graphics Inc., an Essex-based company that specializes in print advertisements that pop up, play music and flash lights.

His company's work has been displayed in millions of magazines, numerous sales brochures and store displays. It also has been featured in books and greeting cards and hung from the ceilings and walls of businesses across the country.

One recent pop-up advertisement the company produced for Camel cigarettes was used to mark that brand's 75th anniversary. Readers of the March issue of Rolling Stone magazine who opened up the advertising insert on page 16 had a cigarette-smoking camp pop up, while an electronic chip played "Happy Birthday."

Crowell's company produced 1.5 million such inserts, a sign of how far three-dimensional ads have come since Structural Graphics was established in 1976.

The business began with fewer than a handful of employees in a colonial-style home in Old Lyme, Conn., where background was in graphics and advertising, was convinced that 3-D ads deserved a place in business, and he went after skeptical advertising executives.

"I began pushing to get the advertising industry interested," he said during a recent interview. "Now, they believe it works."

Crowell said the big break came in 1984, when his company designed an advertising insert for Yves Saint Laurent's "Paris" perfume in Vogue magazine. When a seal on the ad was broken, a bouquet of roses popped open and the smell of perfume was released.

"We had been primarily in direct mail until that time," Crowell said, explaining his company is now deeply involved in magazine inserts.

Crowell claims that Structural Graphics is the largest company in its field, but he declined to release sales figures for his privately owned company. He said he produces between 50 million and 100 million 3-D pieces a year. A pop-up can cost as little as 15 cents or as much as $10 apiece.

"We get a kick out of just making effective (ads) and making them pay for the advertiser," Crowell said. "It's almost as good as the money."

Crowell also claims his company is the most innovative, citing numerous awards and patents. For instance, his company launched the first musical print advertisement in December 1987 in People magazine. The two-page spread for Canadian Mist featured a winter scene and the Christmas carol, "Deck The Halls."

The business of producing a 3-D ad typically begins when an advertising agency contacts Structural Graphics with a proposal. Once presented with an idea, Crowell unleashes a team of engineers and others who design a pop-up to fit the agency's requirements.

Once the ad is accepted, it is printed outside Structural Graphics and then assembled, usually by hand, by about 300 people employed at a company plant in Piedras Negras, Mexico. Some smaller volume ads also can be completed at Structural Graphics' plant in Essex or another in Dallas. The projects take 20 to 25 days to complete.

Because of the work involved, 3-D ads are more expensive than ordinary print ads. As a result, companies interested in the ads are usually major companies seeking to promote themselves or new products, said Eric Thruelsen, Structural Graphics marketing and sales director.

The company's list of clients includes Xerox, Ford, General Motors, IBM, McDonald's, Pitney Bowes and Donald Trump.

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. decided to use a 3-D ad as part of its Camel promotion because it wanted to "celebrate in a contemporary fashion," said Seth W. Moskowitz, a senior public relations representative at the cigarette maker. The musical ad was the first of its kind in the tobacco industry, where 300 styles compete for consumer dollars.

"We were looking for eye-stoppingness, and in this case, also eye-stoppingness," he said.

Moskowitz said he didn't have specific numbers on consumer reaction to the pop-up ad, but said the overall campaign "helped to create very, very high awareness."

Crowell said advertisers like 3-D ads because they are extremely effective. Studies conducted by Crowell's companies and others have shown that as many as 90 percent of those who see a pop-up ad also read it. He said a typical print ad has about a 30 percent readership "if it's lucky," Crowell said.

Crowell believes the surface has barely been scratched for 3-D advertising. He said he's always coming up with new ideas and has yet to put most of them into production.

"It's being used, but not as much as the media blows it up," he said. "Lots and lots of people are considering it."

Branch to open next year

People's Bank plans to open a branch office at 354 Broad St. next year and may open a second branch in town.

The bank, headquartered in Bridgeport, received approval from the Department of Banking Nov. 2, to open the Broad Street branch, said John Klein, senior vice president in charge of operations at the bank's Hartford office.

The bank is looking at another site in Manchester but has not applied to the Department of Banking to open a second branch there, Klein said. He declined to name the second site, but said it is part of a strip center.

The 3,000-square-foot Broad Street office, to be located in an existing building, will be a full-service bank with eight teller stations, an automatic teller machine, two drive-up windows and services for businesses and consumers. Klein said the bank has a mortgage and loan center at the location for about 15 years, he said.

State jobless rate rises

WETHERSFIELD (AP) — Connecticut's unemployment rate rose slightly in October. From 2.9 percent to 3.0 percent, but state labor officials said personal income reached a new all-time high and 13,800 new jobs were recorded.

State Labor Commissioner Betty L. Tianti said there were 53,700 unemployed state residents, an increase of 2,600 from September. The state's 3.0 percent unemployment rate remained well below the national rate of 5.9 percent.

The highest level of unemployment was 4.0 percent in Danielson. The lowest was 2.0 in Stamford.

Meanwhile, the state reported that there were 13,800 new jobs created in the month, bringing the total number of jobs in the state to 1,682,300, an increase of 24,800 over last year. Manufacturing employment remained at 373,100, down 2.6 percent from last year.

Thirteen labor markets in the state reported an increase in unemployment in the month. The only declines were in Bristol and the Lower River area.

Plano company shuts plant

ESSEX (AP) — The Schmer Plano Co., which has existed for more than a century, has been shut down.

The 116-year-old company, which had lost money since moving to Connecticut in 1982, was closed Friday, company officials said.

The president of the union local at the firm said she and another union official were told Friday as workers left for the weekend that the business would close that night.

"Tom Bradshaw, the president, called a meeting with me, our chief top steward, himself, the company consultant and attorney at the end of the workday," said Barbara E. Kelen, president of Local 105 of the AFL-CIO International Union of Electronics.
