May index signals fall in economy

By John D. McCain
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government's chief economic forecasting gauge plunged 1.2 percent in May, the biggest decline since the stock market crash in late 1987, the Commerce Department reported today.

The decline in the Index of Leading Economic Indicators was the third in the last four months, as the gauge designed to foretell economic activity six to nine months into the future continued to flash strong signals of a significant decline in economic activity.

The 1.2 percent decline was significantly steeper than analysts had been expecting. However, economists generally believe the economy can escape a recession this year, although they are looking for a major slowing in economic growth accompanied by rising unemployment.

The 1.2 percent drop in May followed a 0.6 percent gain posted in April. The index had fallen 0.6 percent in March and 0.3 percent in February.

The May decline was the steepest since a 1.8 percent plunge in November 1987. That drop reflected the shock to the economy from the 508-point plunge in the Dow Jones index of 30 industrial stocks on Oct. 19, 1987.

The April increase had allowed the index to steer clear of the traditional signal of a forthcoming recession — three declines in a row. But the May report added to the overall downward trend this year that has worried many economists.

Today's index figure reinforced recent government and private industry reports that show almost every sector of the economy contracting because of the Federal Reserve Board's efforts to raise interest rates to control inflation.

For instance, only two of the 11 forward-looking business statistics that make up the composite index — higher stock prices and

Bush to propose high-level pay hikes

By Rita Beamish
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Thursday will propose a pay raise for members of Congress, judges, and top-level administration officials, four months after public outrage killed a 51-percent increase, an administration source said today.

Bush was in a speech centered on campaign reform and gerrymandering of congressional districts, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

As of today, the president was not planning to ask for a specific figure, the administration source said.

In April, Bush endorsed a 25 percent pay increase for federal judges.

The Washington Times, quoting unnamed sources with access to Office of Management and Budget information, said he would ask for raises of up to 25 percent in his proposal.

Bush on Tuesday was asked about the pay raise issue at a news conference. He did not mention a specific proposal, but said he favored a raise, and that he would like to see congressional increases considered separately from those for judges and other top executive branch positions.

"Now whether the Congress is willing to do what I've suggested, I don't know. But I will have suggestions when we make our announcements on Thursday — further announcements along this line — as to what I think needs to be done. This is a matter of considerable concern."

Bush backed pay raises for members of Congress, judges and senior executive branch employees early in his administration. But Congress, amid a public clamor opposing such increases, in February quashed a 51-percent pay raise that would have taken effect automatically earlier this year if the lawmakers had not voted it down.

Bush endorsed the 51-percent salary increase for Congress in January at his first news conference.

That would have taken congressional salaries from $89,500 to $135,000.

More reform likely for Eastern Europe

By Barry Schweld
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The pace of reform in Poland and Hungary is picking up even as President Bush gets set to visit the two East European countries — with assurance to Moscow he will not try to overhaul their economies or pose a threat to the Soviet Union.

While Bush on Tuesday was advising Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev not to get "upright" about his trip to Warsaw and Budapest, U.S. officials said privately the second stage of elections in Poland and a revamping of the Communist party leadership in Hungary have improved the trend to democracy.

There is uncertainty who will eventually become prime minister of Poland, however, and the reshuffling in Hungary may require a change in protocol on such delicate issues as who sits next to Bush at dinner. A four-man ruling body has sharply reduced the power of General Secretary Karol Gruz.

"He'll still see the same Hungarians, but in what order?" said a U.S. official who assessed developments on the condition he would not be identified. "We've asked the Hungarians."

In both countries, Bush will meet with prominent leaders of the opposition, and he is bound to dwell on his session with Lech Walesa, the leader of the Polish trade union movement Solidarity.

Poland has now had two rounds of elections, and Solidarity has done well. It won 99 of 100 Senate seats, and the union has won all of the contested races for the lower house.

A president is to be chosen by July 18. Bush will be in Warsaw and Gdansk, the Baltic seaport where Solidarity was launched, July 9-11.

There may be a caretaker government for a while, and it's not clear if Wojciech Jaruzelski will wind up wearing the twin hats of president and Communist party chief.

"There is a lot of nervousness among the Poles because nobody knows how all of this is going to work out," said another U.S. official, who also insisted on anonymity. "But we know the way the trend is running, and we welcome the trend."

In Hungary, he said, the reshuffling at the top of the party "doesn't change things much." Democratic change is so far advanced it is conceivable a grocery items as she could in three minutes. The spree was sponsored by Mechanics Savings Bank.

Speedy shopper nets $1,304.54

By Maureen Leavitt
Manchester Herald

As Rose Kwart ran down the produce aisle of Highland Park Market pushing her grocery cart Tuesday, she tossed a list of meats to the meat packers and flew down another aisle, wildly grabbing groceries.

This was no ordinary housewife in a rush to get home for dinner.

Actually, Kwart had three minutes to grab, push or pull whatever grocery items she could into shopping carts during a shopping spree sponsored by Mechanics Savings Bank, which recently opened a new branch at 341 Broad St.

The speedy shopper managed to pile $1,304.54 worth of goods into three carts by the time the buzzer sounded at the market at 317 Highland St.

Kwart wasn't the only winner in the spree. Bank President Edgar Gorwag presented MaryAnn Palmara, administrative director of New Hope Manor Inc., 48 Hartford Road, a

House not rushing on flag issue

By Lorry Margasak
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House will not rush to nullify a Supreme Court decision on flag-burning, says House Speaker Thomas Foley, who contends the issue should not be used for "crass political purposes."

Moving Tuesday to slow down a possible stampede for constitutional change, Foley announced that hearings will be held in July on setting aside the court ruling that threw out flag desecration laws in 48 states.

He acted only hours after President Bush joined a chorus of lawmakers in proclaiming that a constitutional amendment — a process used only 26 times in the nation's history — is the only solution to change the 5-4 ruling. Foley, D-Wash., said the House Judiciary Committee hearings "are not going to be rushed but they will not be obstructive." They will "be conducted calmly in the spirit of deliberation and care ... we are not seeking to inflame this issue," he told reporters.

With senators already home for their July 4 break, Foley gave House members outraged by last week's ruling a chance to vent their feelings. He scheduled an immediate vote on a non-binding resolution expressing "profound concern" over the decision, and the House passed it, 411-5.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., said Tuesday he favors seeking to nullify the ruling by

Burnt-out garage is demolished

A burnt-out garage at 166 W. Middle Turnpike that residents have complained about for more than three years was demolished earlier this month under orders from the town Building Inspection Division.

Garage owner Harry Mull was ordered to demolish the building because he violated town ordinance on public nuisances. Mull also violated local and state building codes by leaving the charred structure in place after it burned in April 1985, according to division officials.

The building, which was demolished June 6, was at the corner of West Middle Turnpike and Essex Street, attached to Turnpike Auto Body Works, 166 W. Middle Turnpike.

Mull said earlier this year he planned to renovate the garage, but on May 22 the Zoning Board of Appeals denied a special exception permit for the work. The permit was denied because Mull didn't meet requirements for minimum yard sizes, building division records show.

ZBA approval was required because an auto repair facility is a non-conforming use in a Business I zone, Zoning Enforcement Officer Thomas O'Marra said.

The order to demolish the building was the second Mull was issued this year.

In a March 22 letter to Mull, Chief Building Inspector Leif Beval said Mull had to apply for necessary variances within 30 days or the Building Division would begin proceedings to demolish the structure.

Beval said today Mull did apply in time, but after the ZBA's vote the building division issued a second order to demolish the structure, Mull complied with that order, he said.

Mull said he hadn't tried to rebuild the garage because the cause of the fire was being investigated. Mull's attorneys sent several letters to Beval explaining that, Mull said. Beval said he would have Mull's attorneys sue him if he didn't rebuild the garage.

He also said that every study conducted so far shows the Newtown site "ideally suited" for the prison.

The protesters carried signs with such slogans as "Fairfield isn't! Mentally III, O'Neill's Next Victims."

One demonstrator, Trudy Compton, said it was likely that court papers would be filed this week seeking an injunction against the Newtown facility.

Carbone said he couldn't conceive of any Superior Court judge issuing such an injunction, noting that it is judges who are sending criminals to jail in the first place.

"The greatest threat to public safety is prison overcrowding," he said.

The ceremonies also signaled the start of construction of the $38.5 million, 400-bed prison in Enfield, Brooklyn, Montville, Cheshire and Natick, according to state Public Works Commissioner Donald Cassin.

"When offenders think they are beating the system, because there is not enough space for them, that doesn't do any of us any good," said Correction Commissioner Larry Meachum. He said the new prison space would mean less reliance on early release programs, allowing the state to "hold offenders accountable."

Although Suffolk political leaders originally opposed the new prison, they later dropped their fight after the state agreed to provide the town with $5 million in benefits.

Notably absent from Tuesday's groundbreaking ceremonies was Gov. William A. O'Neill, who has led the fight to get more money and land for prisons around the state and who was lauded and praised by his commissioners and others leading the ceremonies.

Jon L. Sandberg, the governor's press secretary, said O'Neill couldn't attend because of other meetings scheduled in his office.

"I don't think it was necessary for him to be here," said Carbone. He said O'Neill had already taken "substantial political heat" over the program.

"It's all done to assure a high quality of life in every Connecticut neighborhood," Carbone said. "It's not a popular task, but one

Prison officials gird for Newtown lawsuit

SUFFIELD (AP) — After breaking ground for one prison, Connecticut criminal justice and correction officials are turning their attention to an expected lawsuit aimed at blocking another facility.

Groundbreaking ceremonies were held Tuesday for the medium security, $72 million prison in north-central Connecticut as a handful of protesters marched peacefully nearby.

The demonstrators wanted to register their opposition to the planned 400-bed prison on the grounds of Fairfield Hills Hospital in Newtown, a state mental hospital. A suit against the prison in north-central Connecticut is expected to be filed this week.

"Many people believe we are adding space to make things more comfortable, to make things more pleasant for offenders, but the state constitution charges us with protecting people, with guaranteeing their safety," said William H. Carbone, head of criminal justice planning in the governor's budget office.

"The greatest threat to public safety is prison overcrowding," he said.

The ceremonies also signaled the start of construction of the $38.5 million, 400-bed prison in Enfield, Brooklyn, Montville, Cheshire and Natick, according to state Public Works Commissioner Donald Cassin.

Jury still out on effects of golf course expansion

By Maureen Leavitt
Manchester Herald

It is too early to determine if Globe Hollow Reservoir might be affected by the construction of 36 additional holes at the Manchester Country Club, engineers said Tuesday night.

Marc Garrett, an engineer with GHR Engineering, the environmental consultant studying the plans, told town officials and representatives from the country club that a 12-month environmental assessment of the reservoir and the streams which feed into it will have to be completed to determine if the reservoir will be affected.

GHR recently completed the first stage in the reservoir study. Three more studies will provide engineers with information on environmental conditions during all seasons.

Garrett said it is also too early to determine if three existing holes near the Globe Hollow Reservoir would need to be moved if more holes were constructed.

There is concern that the new construction might affect the existing first second and 18th holes. Those three holes are located on Class I watershed lands, where water runoff has a greater impact.

The town is considering adding holes to increase the opportunity for public play. The Manchester Country Club leases the course under a 25-year agreement that ends in 1991.

Town and club negotiators have worked out a two-year lease extension and the Board of Directors approved the lease concept May 9. Some directors have questioned some of the conditions the club stipulated in the lease.

Garrett told those at the meeting in the Lincoln Center hearing room that he has seen no major problems based on the four plans submitted by Brian Silva, a golf architect with Cornish and Silva. "We really have seen no major concerns based on regulatory issues. I don't think we've seen anything that's alarming."

Silva said he will work with GHR representatives and continue to make improvements to the present plans and anticipate possible questions from the state Department of Health Services.

If the town were to approve plans for additional holes, the state Department of Health Services would have to be asked for a change-of-use permit.

Silva said there could be several different layouts of the extra holes, not only the four plans he has drawn. He said the effect on reservoirs of water runoff from golf courses is actually more of a perceived one.

Town directors and club representatives have shown interest in a plan that calls for retaining the 18-hole course and building 18 new holes. It would allow golfers to play either the first nine holes or second nine holes of golf and finish at the clubhouse.

The problem with the method used in figuring the budget and the tax rate, Sullivan said, is that the Town Council doesn't offer budgeting guidelines to town departments before preparing the town budget.

So what you get is a Christmas list," he said, "and you have to start cutting."

Education spending would be cut under the new budget proposal, which allocates $8,891,212 for schools. This is a decrease of $120,000 from the previous proposal.

Lawrence Mickel, Board of Education chairman, said, "We'll try to make cuts in such a way that they don't harm the children."

The danger, Mickel said, is creating the impression that the school system is operating smoothly when existing conditions are not as they should be. This would reinforce the town's referendum.

"We brought to the town the no-mill increase because the town had to have a budget approved," Lewis said.

The new fiscal year begins July 1. Because of the earlier budget rejections, the town will be operating without a budget from Saturday until at least Thursday, July 6.

Killer no-show in court

HARTFORD (AP) — A West Hartford man free on bail since he was convicted of killing a man after a barroom argument, failed to appear in court and state prosecutors believe he has fled the state.

Adam M. Zachs, sentenced in October to 60 years in prison for the 1987 murder of Peter D. Carone, was free on bail while an appeal of his conviction was pending in the state Supreme Court.

Zachs failed to appear for a hearing in Hartford Superior Court on Tuesday that was to determine whether or not Zachs had violated the conditions of his bail, said Hartford State's Attorney John Bailey.

Bailey said that one of the conditions of Zachs' bail was that he live with his parents. Zachs' parents said their son had not been living at their home since June 8, Bailey said.

Zachs was ordered rearrested and a new bail was set at $1 million. His previous bail of $250,000 was ordered forfeited with a stay of six months.

Guard has new leader

NEW LONDON (AP) — The leadership of the Coast Guard Academy was to change hands today as Rear Adm. Richard P. Ceroni, superintendent for three years, relinquishes command to Rear Adm. Thomas T. Matteson.

Two ceremonial 15-gun salutes — one for each rear admiral — and a shifting of admirals' flags at the Washington Parade Ground will mark the change in command.

Ceroni is retiring from the Coast Guard after 36 years of service.

Matteson, a native of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, comes to the academy from Washington, D.C., where he was chief of the Office of Personnel and Training for the Coast Guard.

Since being promoted to flag rank in 1985, he has also served as chief of the Office of Boating, Public and Consumer Affairs.

Explosion injures man

DARIEN (AP) — A Darien man was in critical condition today as investigators tried to determine the cause of an explosion that ripped through his Darien home.

Darien police Sgt. George Janda said the explosion leveled a home owned by Alexander Roe, 48, around 2:30 p.m. Tuesday.

He said a Southern New England Telephone Co. employee, who was working on a telephone line near the home, smelled gas and advised Roe and his wife to leave the house shortly before the explosion.

Roe suffered multiple fractures in the explosion and was listed in critical condition at Stamford Hospital, a nursing supervisor said.

Janda said a firefighter sustained a minor back injury while fighting the fire and was treated and released from St. Joseph Medical Center in Stamford.

No other homes in the area were damaged, police said.

Hospital reopens unit

NEW HAVEN (AP) — Yale-New Haven Hospital has reopened its newborn special care unit after having closed the unit to new admissions for a month because of a viral outbreak.

Nineteen of the 44 infants in the unit in May tested positive for one of two viruses to sweep through the ward, and six developed symptoms, according to Thomas Urtz, a hospital spokesman.

One virus caused cold-like symptoms, while the other caused gastrointestinal ailments.

Three babies who died during the first two weeks of the outbreak tested positive for a virus, but hospital officials said it was impossible to tie the deaths to the virus because the newborns were very weak to begin with.

Most of the infants who were in the unit have been discharged, and the few still there have developed no symptoms, indicating the viruses are no longer a threat, Urtz said Tuesday.

New railway opens

PLAINVILLE (AP) — A renovated 16.9-mile stretch of railway has opened between Waterbury and Plainville.

A train carrying dignitaries, business people and state transportation officials made its maiden voyage on the renovated stretch Tuesday.

The $1.2 million renovation project means freight trains that used to chug along at 10 mph can now go as fast as 25 mph.

For Tuesday's dedication ceremony, a special inspection train roared the line, part of the Springfield Terminal Railroad, formerly the Boston & Maine Railroad. The line is owned by Boston-based Guilford Transportation Industries Inc.

The state picked up 70 percent of the $1.2 million cost of refurbishing the track.

Foley says governor's race top priority

WALLINGFORD (AP) — Newly elected state Republican Party Chairman Richard Foley says his top priority will be leading the GOP to its first gubernatorial victory in two decades.

Foley, a four-term state representative from Oxford, was unanimously elected state GOP chairman by the Republican State Central Committee on Tuesday night.

"We will hold the opposition's feet to the fire," Foley said outside the steamy conference room where he was elected by acclamation by the 72-member Republican State Central Committee to succeed Robert S. Poliner, the chairman for the past two years.

"We believe we have a mission. We believe have a story to tell," Foley

Tuesday night's contest amounted to a rematch between the two. In 1987,

Poliner narrowly defeated Foley.

Up until last week, Foley had been in a neck-and-neck race with Poliner.

But Poliner suddenly quit the race

when several committee members announced they would support Foley.

Poliner, a soft-spoken newcomer on the state political scene two years ago, concentrated on rebuilding the debilitated GOP when he took over.

He is credited with getting most of the party's debts paid off, but has never actually sending harsh words toward Democrats.

The GOP, wracked by in-fighting for years, has had a dismal record in Connecticut in recent history.

The party has won just one gubernatorial election since 1954 —

Thomas J. Meskill's victory 19 years ago. Republicans have controlled the General Assembly for just four of those 19 years.

Back in April, Foley stood outside

Democratic Gov. William A. O'Neill's office to announce he would seek the chairmanship.

O'Neill has indicated he will run for third full term next year, his health permitting.

"Bill O'Neill has robbed this state of its dreams and has robbed this state of its hope," Foley said. "Buffalo Bill and board of cronies must go. If we work together, we'll win together."

Foley refused to speculate on possible Republican challengers to O'Neill next year.

He said he would prefer the nomination be settled at the convention rather than in a primary in 1990.

Foley also said he would not resign from the General Assembly, but had not decided whether to seek reelection to the 131st district seat next year. He did indicate that he would resign his job as a business parts salesman.

Also elected were Joan Rader of Greenwich as vice chairwoman,

Maureen Barron of West Hartford,

secretary; and Bob Norman of East

Haven, treasurer.

The committee also adopted a resolution endorsing President

Bush's call for a constitutional amendment making desecration of the flag a crime.

Tirozzi wants $1.4 billion for education

HARTFORD (AP) — State Commissioner of Education Gerald Tirozzi was expected to unveil a $1.4 billion 1990-91 education budget today emphasizing improvements in teacher training and encouraging racial integration.

Tirozzi's proposed budget carries an 11.3 percent increase over the current fiscal year. It also represents the smallest increase Tirozzi has sought since becoming education commissioner in 1985.

"We're trying very much to respect the fiscal climate," said Tirozzi, who will present the budget at a State Board of Education meeting.

Much of the increase is locked in by state school spending formulas, Tirozzi said. The formulas are established by laws that have resulted in sweeping education reforms during the past six years.

For most programs not governed by spending formulas, the state Department of Education recommends increases at a projected annual inflation rate of 5 percent.

Among areas in the budget targeted for funding increases are racial integration, Tirozzi said.

Tirozzi is recommending $1.5 million, about a 50 percent increase, to help neighboring school districts develop voluntary plans to eliminate racial segregation, Tirozzi, who has issued two reports in the past two years outlining the extent of segregation in Connecticut schools, has urged cities and towns to work together on voluntary integration plans.

Tirozzi has said he intends to continue to pursue voluntary desegregation measures despite the filing of a school desegregation lawsuit against the state in April.

Civil rights leaders filed the suit in Hartford Superior Court, charging that racially segregated schools in Hartford violate the state Constitution.

The proposed budget continues a pattern of sharp increases. Since 1983, the annual state education budget has almost doubled to the $1.2 billion approved for the fiscal year beginning Saturday.

The money has supported a variety of reforms, such as statewide testing for students and dramatic pay raises for teachers.

Salaries rose sharply as a result of the 1986 school reform law known as the Education Enhancement Act.

Connecticut's average salary for teachers ranked 16th in the nation in 1984-85 but had reached $37,009 in the 1988-89 school year, behind only the District of Columbia and Alaska, according to the National Education Association.

For example, the proposed $230 million for special education is 19 percent more than the 1989-90 figure, partly because of expansion of programs for handicapped students, a growth in programs for gifted students and an increasing level of support for salaries of special education teachers.

School construction costs are projected at $39 million, a 30 percent increase that covers interest payments on bonds for new buildings and renovation projects, including asbestos removal and correction of code violations.

Victim's parents to file lawsuit against four men

HARTFORD (AP) — The parents of a man killed two years ago on the front lawn of their Suffield home are filing a lawsuit against three of the four young men linked to the double slaying, the family's lawyer said.

John J. Houlihan Jr. said Tuesday the suit, which seeks financial damage in excess of $15,000 from Andrew R. Patterson, his younger brother, Bryan Patterson, and Richard A. Bazzano Jr., will formally be filed this week. Houlihan said the suit has been presented to the sheriff in the case, who will serve it to the defendants.

The Pattersons, Bazzano and Eric K. Steiger were arrested in the July 11, 1987, deaths of Daniel Seymour, 25, of Suffield and William Price, 26, of Monroe.

Seymour's parents, Ralph and Kathleen, filed a lawsuit in April against Steiger, who has been found guilty by a three-judge panel of two counts of murder, two counts of conspiracy to commit murder and capital felony, which carries the death penalty. The same panel is scheduled to begin hearing testimony July 5 on whether Steiger should be executed or given life in prison.

Andrew Patterson, 23, has pleaded guilty to first-degree manslaughter and is awaiting sentencing. The state is appealing a decision to dismiss criminal charges against Bryan Patterson, 20; Bazzano was granted immunity in exchange for testimony against the others.

The shootings occurred after the two victims tried to break up an outdoor beer party and threatened Steiger with pipes.

The lawsuit to be filed this week says the Patterson brothers and Bazzano were negligent in that they assisted Steiger in loading the weapons used in the shooting and that they failed to dissuade him from returning to the Seymour house.

The lawsuit also says Bryan Patterson "at the direction of Steiger, lured Daniel A. Seymour from his residence to the front lawn by shining the headlights of his motor vehicle at and about the residence."

BICYCLES TO HARTFORD — Gary Downs, who was brain injured in a motorcycle accident seven years ago today, arrived in Hartford from Philadelphia on a bicycle. He is greeted by Timothy Knapp, also a brain injury victim with the Easter Seals Organization.

Accident victim marks date

HARTFORD (AP) — Gary Downs, a 31-year-old East Hartford man who suffered a traumatic brain injury in a motorcycle accident in 1982, has completed a bicycle trip from Philadelphia to Hartford to mark seventh anniversary of his accident.

After pedaling up the hill to the Capitol on Tuesday, Downs said he had undertaken the 300-mile, five-day bike trip to draw attention to the lack of long-term rehabilitation facilities for TBI victims in Connecticut. Downs spent a year in a rehabilitation program in Bensalem, Pa., near Philadelphia.

Claire Saltzman, a case consultant at the Connecticut Traumatic Brain Injury Association in Rocky Hill, said the lack of Connecticut facilities forces TBI victims into convalescent homes and facilities for the mentally handicapped.

"I'm sick and tired of being treated like a mentally disturbed person, which I'm not," said Downs, who was told after his accident he would never walk or talk again.

He said the TBI association has a waiting list of 200 TBI victims looking for adequate programs.

Association suspends exchanges of English teachers with China

NEW HAVEN (AP) — An association that has long promoted educational exchanges with China has made the "extremely difficult decision" to suspend its exchange program for occupying Pinned Square in Beijing, the only teacher working in Beijing, said he saw troops marching toward the square, heard automatic gunfire.

The Yale-China Association has taken the action because it doubts the political climate in China would allow for "meaningful cultural exchange" and because it is worried about its teachers' safety, said John B. Starr, head of the association for the past 10 years.

Eleven Yale graduates were to have been sent to teach English this September in schools in Chang Sha and Wuhan, both in south central China. Five would have been returning for the second year of two-year appointments. Two are still in the country.

Starr said the decision could be reversed if the situation proves completely different, but he said that was "fairly unlikely."

To show it remains committed to educational exchanges with China, the association said it is expanding its fellowship program by inviting an increased number of Chinese scholars to study at Yale and other American colleges this coming year.

Founded in 1901, the association has been promoting educational exchanges with China longer than any other organization in the United States. Since reopening its educational work in the People's Republic of China 10 years ago, the association has recruited and sent more than 60 Yale graduates to teach English in that country.

The program was suspended because "it was our judgment that it was unlikely they (the Yale-China teachers) would have been able to carry out the goals of the program," Starr said Tuesday.

"The political climate there is very unlikely to allow for meaningful cultural exchange," Starr said.

The goal of the program is not only to teach English but also

Notziger's case spurs Congress

By Pete Yost
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress is trying to block the route which former Reagan administration aide Lyn Notziger used to win a reversal of his conviction for illegal lobbying.

Rep. Barney Frank said Tuesday the House Judiciary Committee will consider amending the Ethics in Government Act to revise provisions Notziger used successfully in appealing his conviction.

"We saw it as a potential loophole," said Frank, a Massachusetts Democrat.

In a 2-1 decision Tuesday, the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Notziger's conviction must be set aside because it wasn't based on a finding that he had knowledge of each element of the offense.

He was convicted Feb. 11, 1988, of three counts of illegally lobbying top presidential aides on behalf of private clients after he left the White House one year into the Reagan administration.

The clients were scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp., a maritime engineers union and the manufacturer of the Air Force's A-10 anti-tank plane.

The appeals court said Tuesday that in order for a conviction to be valid, the prosecution must demonstrate that Notziger knew the matters on which he lobbied were already of "direct and substantial interest" to the White House.

The proposed amendment would eliminate the provision requiring knowledge of each element of the offense, said Frank, chairman of the House subcommittee on administrative law. Congress passed a similar measure last year but it was vetoed by President Reagan.

Independent counsel James McKay, who prosecuted Notziger, said he will continue appealing. He could seek a review by the federal appeals court in Washington or by the Supreme Court.

A five-year statute of limitations could make it impossible to bring revised criminal charges.

His conviction was reversed in a decision written by U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge James Buckley, joined by Judge Stephen Williams, both Reagan appointees. The third member of the panel and lone dissenter was Judge Harry Edwards, a Carter administration appointee.

Notziger, the White House political director in 1981, began lobbying his former colleagues within months of leaving the government. He said he was trying to stimulate their interest in various matters, which would not be a violation of the one-year ban on lobbying an ex-employee's former government agency.

"The case against Notziger was the first major test of the revolving-door provisions of the Ethics in Government Act."

"I don't think I am part of any revolving-door syndrome," said Notziger. "People lobby in this town; the main industry in this town besides government is lobbying."

Asked whether he thought he got off on a legal technicality, Notziger said, "Absolutely not. I think they came after me on a technicality."

Notziger said he was pleased by the decision. "I think I'm innocent from the beginning; I still think I am innocent," he said.

donation matching Kvar's total. Kvar had filled out an entry blank during the grand opening of the bank for a chance at the shopping spree. And like most people who enter such contests, she didn't really expect to win.

"I had forgotten about it," said Kvar, who grew up in Manchester but now lives in Vernon. "It was really a surprise."

She and her family visited the store before the contest so she could develop a plan of attack.

Her husband, Al, daughter, Tina, and son, Eric, came Tuesday to cheer the shopper along.

Her main target? The meat counter.

She was allowed to prepare a list of the meats she desired and employees behind the meat counter wrapped up piles of the choices she requested and placed them on the meat counter.

At the start of the race, a half dozen men in white coats stood behind the counter armed with white wrapping paper. When Kvar threw them the list, they got busy.

So did Kvar. First stop was just beyond the dairy case where she grabbed cans of lobster meat which cost about $9 each, canned hams, frozen shrimp and bacon.

Then she stopped at the peanut butter shelf and wiped out a whole section of Jif and Skippy jars. They landed safely into her cart.

She went down that aisle and up through the one containing paper goods, where she snagged a box or two of diapers. She then wound her way to the detergent aisle, where she handily managed several bottles of Tide and Era. After a quick grab at some tuna fish, she had filled up one cart in about a minute and a half.

She still had to grab back to the meat counter to get as much of the wrapped meat she could.

Not to worry, this shopper had it all under control.

Armed with an empty cart, Kvar stocked it with the choicest steaks, hams and roast beefs. With some of the hefty pieces costing $84, it was easy to see how her bill exceeded $1,000.

"I'm pooped," a visibly exhausted but elated Kvar said after the revelry. She drank a soda and looked on while cashier Kristen Turek rang up the total.

When she finished, Turek wiped her brow and said "Who's paying?"

Kvar said the two refrigerator freezers she has at home will come in handy.

Tuesday's event was the third such event the bank has sponsored this spring, said Gerwig, who came up with the idea.

Three weeks ago, a branch of a New Britain branch opened, another shopper collected $1,046 in groceries. And a shopper in Avon packed away $3,462 worth of groceries.

Index

Increased building permits — pointed upward in May.

The others pointed down: a drop in the money supply; lower prices for sensitive materials, indicating slower demand; the fourth consecutive drop in an index measuring consumer confidence; faster vendor deliveries, meaning declining demand; a shorter average work week; fewer orders for plants and equipment; a decrease in manufacturers' unfilled orders; higher initial claims for jobless benefits; and a decrease in manufacturers' unfilled orders.

The various changes left the index at 143.8 percent of its 1982 base of 100. So far this year, the index has declined at an annual rate of 0.3 percent, compared with an increase of 4.5 percent for all of 1988.

There have been signs recently the Fed has relaxed its grip slightly, but the effects remain. Some economists fear that, unless the central bank eases more, the economy could be pushed into a recession.

"We're still looking for a soft landing without a recession, but we're keeping our fingers crossed," said David Wyss on Tuesday. Wyss is senior financial economist at Data Resources Inc., in Lexington, Mass.

majority of the Hungarian parliament will be noncommunist in the next two to five years, a State Department official told a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

The official, Curtis W. Kammer, deputy assistant secretary for European affairs, said the administration does not believe House legislation to give Hungary a five-year exemption from economic and trade restrictions is needed.

He explained that Hungary has removed practically all restrictions on the ability of its citizens to travel abroad or to emigrate at will, the objective of the restrictions.

Bush will be in Budapest July 11-13, just before he goes to Paris for an annual economic summit meeting with the leaders of Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan and West Germany.

At a news conference Tuesday, Bush said he will not export the Polish and Hungarian people to take actions that might invite repression.

"I want to see a much more open Europe," he said. "And I think that the importance of the visit is along that line. It's not going to be that we're going to solve the problem of the Hungarian economy or the Polish economy."

Bush took a relaxed view of U.S.-Soviet competition and Gorbachev's own travels to the West. For instance, Bush said, it was "a good thing" that the Soviet leader went to West Germany earlier this month.

"It's a good thing for him to go to Western Europe, and it's a good thing for the president of the United States to go to Eastern Europe," he said. "I want to see us move beyond containment."

Debate on the resolution, sponsored by House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, was often emotional despite the non-binding nature of the language.

Rep. Carroll Hubbard Jr., D-Ky., asked those who burn the flag to "consider moving to Iran, China or Cuba, where burning the flag is encouraged."

But Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., said the court acted correctly to preserve freedom of speech, adding, "I exult in the decision."

Because the Supreme Court has validated once again the Constitution and the Bill of Rights," he said.

Saying he personally deplored desecration of the flag, Weiss cautioned members against "reckless tampering with the Constitution."

Voiting along with Weiss against the resolution were Reps. Gus Savage, D-Ill.; Ronald Dellums, D-Calif.; William Clay, D-Mo., and George W. Crockett Jr., D-Mich.

The House hearings could be held by the full Judiciary Committee, but Brooks could assign the lead daily pledges of allegiance to the flag.

"I am sure there will be people trying to play politics with it," he said. "Anybody who suggests that there is a party difference in respect for the American flag is using this deep affection of Americans, twisting it, manipulating it, using it for the most base and crass political purposes. It would be reprehensible and disgusting. I am condemning those who are doing it."

But Bush said earlier Tuesday at a news conference, "I think respect for the flag transcends political party and I think what I've said here is American. It isn't Republican or Democrat. It isn't liberal or conservative."

passing legislation to prohibit burning the flag. A law can be ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, interviewed today on "CBS This Morning," noted that the courts still would have a role in interpreting the amendment.

"If the constitutional amendment is passed, it will obviously require some implementing legislation at both the federal and state level if the Congress and state legislators want to follow through on it effectively, and the terms of that legislation would then be subject to construction in the courts," he said.

Foley told reporters he will vigorously fight any attempt by conservative Republicans to use the flag issue against Democrats.

President Bush scored points against Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis last year by criticizing the Massachusetts governor's veto of legislation that would have required the state's public school teachers to lead daily pledges of allegiance to the flag.

"I am sure there will be people trying to play politics with it," he said. "Anybody who suggests that there is a party difference in respect for the American flag is using this deep affection of Americans, twisting it, manipulating it, using it for the most base and crass political purposes. It would be reprehensible and disgusting. I am condemning those who are doing it."

But Bush said earlier Tuesday at a news conference, "I think respect for the flag transcends political party and I think what I've said here is American. It isn't Republican or Democrat. It isn't liberal or conservative."

Debate on the resolution, sponsored by House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, was often emotional despite the non-binding nature of the language.

Rep. Carroll Hubbard Jr., D-Ky., asked those who burn the flag to "consider moving to Iran, China or Cuba, where burning the flag is encouraged."

But Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., said the court acted correctly to preserve freedom of speech, adding, "I exult in the decision."

Because the Supreme Court has validated once again the Constitution and the Bill of Rights," he said.

Saying he personally deplored desecration of the flag, Weiss cautioned members against "reckless tampering with the Constitution."

Voiting along with Weiss against the resolution were Reps. Gus Savage, D-Ill.; Ronald Dellums, D-Calif.; William Clay, D-Mo., and George W. Crockett Jr., D-Mich.

The House hearings could be held by the full Judiciary Committee, but Brooks could assign the lead daily pledges of allegiance to the flag.

Hospital says Dempsey considers chemotherapy

HARTFORD (AP) — Officials at the University of Connecticut Health Center all but confirmed today that former Gov. John N. Dempsey has cancer when they disclosed that he had been offered chemotherapy.

Beverly Park, spokeswoman for the UConn hospital named for Dempsey, said the 74-year-old Democrat had not decided whether to take the treatment.

The disclosure that chemotherapy was being considered was the closest the hospital has come to confirming that Dempsey has cancer.

Park said again today that the family has asked that the exact nature of his illness not be disclosed. She said only that he is seriously ill and remains in stable condition at the UConn hospital that bears his name.

Park also said that Dempsey would be in the hospital for a while, but couldn't elaborate. He was admitted on June 16.

Dempsey, Connecticut's 81st governor, served from 1961 to 1971. He had been lieutenant governor before that.

WIMBLEDON, England — Trust John Patrick McEnroe.

On a day when everything before and after him was predictable and dull, the world's most charismatic tennis player lit up the world's most famous tennis court with the comeback of his 4-year career.

"I don't ever remember coming back from two sets down before," the mercurial McEnroe said after his 4-6, 6-2, 6-3, 6-6 first-round victory over Darren Cahill of Australia on Wimbledon's Centre Court on Tuesday.

"It's great to come back and win the match," he said. "Let's face it, I could easily be out of the tournament."

Technically, the match may not have been of the highest quality. Both players struggled with their first serves. But it transcended tennis. It was pure theater.

"I never really got my game in total gear," McEnroe said after the 3½-hour battle that started in sunshine and finished with evening gloom with a standing ovation for both players. "I don't think it's the greatest match he's ever played either. But for excitement."

For excitement, it beat the rest of the day's matches put together. They included straight-set victories for defending women's champion Steffi Graf and her three main rivals, Martina Navratilova, Chris Evert and Gabriela Sabatini.

Graf, playing her first match since losing the French Open final to 17-year-old Arantxa Sanchez, gave up only eight points on serve as she swamped Julie Salomonsen 6-1, 6-2. Navratilova opened her bid for a record ninth women's singles title with a 6-3, 6-2 victory over Jill Hetherington of Canada.

Evert, recovered from an ear infection, downed Peanut Harper 6-1, 6-1, while Sabatini conceded fewer games than any of the main contenders by trouncing Diane Bales 6-1, 6-0.

But of all the 42 completed singles matches on the second day of the championships, one stood out — the best rally of McEnroe's career.

"I expected a tough match. I didn't expect something like this," McEnroe said. "It's a positive just to be able to sit and dwell on this for a day but I'm proud of this, coming from two sets down to win."

For two sets, the left-handed American, who gave up a large part of the European clay-court season to concentrate on winning a fourth Wimbledon crown, appeared to have wasted all the preparation.

Deserted by his serve — he double-faulted 16 times — McEnroe allowed his 23-year-old opponent, at No. 26 the highest-ranked non-seeded player in the men's draw, to control the match.

Cahill, a dangerous serve-and-volleyer who beat Boris Becker on his way to last year's U.S. Open semifinals, appeared set to become the second unseeded Australian in successive years to end McEnroe's Wimbledon hopes.

Last year, Wally Masur upset the three-time champion in the second round in McEnroe's return to Wimbledon after a four-year absence.

But with the crowd behind him and his temper in check apart from sporadic swipes of his racket, McEnroe dug deep into his repertoire of unorthodox strokes and turned the match around.

As his first serve and returns of serve improved, McEnroe broke Cahill twice in the third set and again in the fourth, passing the Australian with flicked backhands and mixing up the pace on his volleys.

In the fifth set, McEnroe's touch and variation were at their best. He blew five break points and, serving second, was under continued pressure.

He kept his cool, broke Cahill with a backhand cross-court pass to go up 7-6 and serving ace, and the match with a pair of swinging, serving aces.

They were two of his best serves in the match. "My serve just wasn't there today," McEnroe said after his best comeback in 162 Grand Slam matches. "At the beginning I felt mentally and physically paralyzed. I don't know why. In the fourth and fifth sets, I think I had more energy than he did."

McEnroe said he was just thankful to be in the tournament.

"This gives me the opportunity to regroup and get going again," he said. "I'm not here to lose in the early rounds. I know I can win the tournament."

Cahill said he was disappointed to lose in

Nance undergoes surgery

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cleveland Cavaliers forward Larry Nance had surgery to repair a fractured tibia in his left ankle Tuesday and probably will miss the first month of the 1989-90 NBA season.

Dr. John Bergfeld performed the surgery at the Cleveland Clinic, team spokesman Bob Price said.

"Technically it went well. However, Nance is not expected to return to playing condition until December," Price said.

Nance, 30, averaged 17.2 points and eight rebounds a game last season, and was fifth in the NBA in blocked shots with an average of 2.82 per game. He blocked a team-record 11 shots against the New York Knicks on Jan. 7.

The injury forced him to leave a game against Washington on Jan. 29 and caused him to miss four games between Jan. 31 and March 5, and four more in April.

Rose

viety over Atlanta. "It'll all die down," he said. "We'll probably have a response next week sometime, around the sixth (of July)." That's when Rose's lawyers are scheduled to appear again before Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel, who ruled Sunday that Giannetti has prejudiced Rose's guilty. Nadel barred Giannetti from deciding the case until the judge can hold a hearing on a preliminary injunction request.

Some of the more severe accusations against Rose are contained in a statement given to baseball's investigators over two days in February by Paul Janzen, who claims he placed bets for Rose. Janzen said the bets included Reds games, an offense that could bring Rose a lifetime ban. Janzen, a bodybuilder who recently completed a four-month stay in a halfway house for failing to report income from the sale of steroids on his taxes, said Rose threatened to involve the cocaine dealer if he was not released.

It was the first time Rose has been publicly linked with drugs by testimony in the investigation, which was announced March 20.

Janzen didn't say that Rose used drugs, but said the manager thought he could get cash from Rose. According to Janzen, Rose once inquired whether he could get involved in the cocaine operation with money from a certificate of deposit that was about to mature.

Janzen quoted Rose as saying: "I'll use that money and buy the kilos and I'll keep them in my house because nobody would come to my house." Janzen also said he was told Gioiosa brought a suitcase with $200,000 in the Reds' clubhouse sometime during 1987 and showed Rose the money, which supposedly was going to be used to buy cocaine in Florida.

"Well, they used to tell me that Pete was really excited and he wanted to get in on that," Janzen said. "He wanted part of that because it was cash money and he wanted to get the cocaine and sell it."

Rose declined to comment on Janzen's statements, but Pittsburgh called them "ridiculous." He rejected the story about the $200,000 in a briefcase. "It's like a story you see on television," Pittsburgh said. "As near as we can tell, there's no basis in fact. People in the real world just don't live this way."

"What I'm going to come out there is Pete was friends with some people that got into drug problems. When Pete learned that these people had gotten in drug problems, he broke off those relationships."

Janzen also claimed that Rose once said he'd consider taking a game if he had a large bet riding on it.

"He did say to me once, he said, 'You know, if I had enough money riding on a game, I'd think about throwing the game,'" Janzen said. "He said there are a lot of easy ways to do it. He said, 'Hell, Paul, I could pitch a guy at a game and get a million dollars hit-and-run at the wrong time. I could have a guy hit at the wrong time.'"

Dowd told reporters last week that baseball's investigators found no evidence that Rose had ever tried to influence a game because of his wagers. "I don't have any evidence, no evidence at all, of ever throwing a game," Dowd said.

Janzen said Rose used his clubhouse phone to check with other managers before placing some bets.

"Of guys 6-foot-8 and above, he's the best athlete best player, best runner, best runner. Yet there are questions about him," said his coach, Jim Calhoun.

"Despite the cool facade, I don't think Cliff realizes what he's doing. The 6-foot-11, 223-pound Robinson said.

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — Two-time Olympic champion hurdler Roger Kingdom says time is ripe for the 8-year-old world record to tumble.

Kingdom, a 26-year-old American, returned to form Tuesday, leaving the two other 110-meter medalists from the Seoul Olympics behind with a year's best time of 13.13 seconds in the first rematch since the 1988 Games.

"My objective is to get back in the shape I was in last year, and get the record," Kingdom said after winning the gold medal.

He said the start-studded field would have made a world record possible if not for a slight headwind and rainy cool weather.

Kingdom would need to better his sea-level personal best, 12.98 at Seoul, by only 65 centiseconds to set the world mark of 12.93 set by Renato Noveck on Aug. 19, 1981.

Colin Jackson of Britain, the Seoul silver medalist, knocked down three hurdles and finished second Tuesday in 13.23. World champion Greg Foster was third in 13.29.

Tommy Campbell, the bronze medalist at Seoul, was sixth in 14.45.

Foster, Jackson and Campbell delayed the race with false starts. But that apparently didn't faze Kingdom, who averaged losses this year to Foster and Jackson.

"This was a very special race," said Kingdom, who also won in the 1984 Olympics. "We're even now, but I have the fastest time this year."

The Lausanne meet was the first major one on this year's IAAF Grand Prix circuit.

In the other standard Olympic rematch, Carl Lewis got less of a challenge than expected in posting his 58th straight long jump victory with a leap of 27 feet, 8 inches.

The two-time Olympic champion left behind Larry Myricks, the last one to beat Lewis and the Seoul bronze medalist, at 26 inches. Mike Powell, the Seoul silver medalist, came in third in a U.S. sweep, reaching 26-7 1/4.

The 6-foot-9 Ellison averaged 17.6 points and 8.7 rebounds last season for Louisville, where he earned the nickname "Never Nervous" Pervis.

Michael Fry, who owned the gym, is serving an eight-year term for cocaine trafficking and tax evasion.

Lingering doubts contribute to Robinson's draft choice

STORRS — Cliff Robinson, the fourth-leading scorer in University of Connecticut basketball history, was selected by Portland Trail Blazers in the second round of the National Basketball Association draft Tuesday night.

Robinson was led Connecticut in scoring and rebounding last season with 18.1 points and 10.1 rebounds a game.

"I don't have any evidence, no evidence at all, of ever throwing a game," Dowd said.

Janzen said Rose used his clubhouse phone to check with other managers before placing some bets.

"Of guys 6-foot-8 and above, he's the best athlete best player, best runner, best runner. Yet there are questions about him," said his coach, Jim Calhoun.

"Despite the cool facade, I don't think Cliff realizes what he's doing. The 6-foot-11, 223-pound Robinson said.

the only team worse than Sacramento in the Pacific Division, and they need help of almost any type. Their biggest immediate problem, however, may be lack of experience, and they might be willing to part with Perry to gain it.

"We might keep the pick or we might move it if we can get a quality veteran," Clippers general manager Elgin Baylor has said.

So, the 6-foot 9 Perry said that while he thought he could have gone No. 1 after averaging 22.6 points last season at Duke, he won't be surprised, no matter where he winds up.

"I'm not 100 percent sure I'll be with the Clippers," he said. "You never know with trades. I'll step better tomorrow night."

Scientists study silk by spiders

NEW YORK (AP) — In research that could provide new materials for high-strength cables, bulletproof vests and sutures, scientists have turned to one of the most delicate-looking fibers in nature: silk spun by spiders.

Researchers want to learn more about the gossamer threads because they offer an apparently unique combination of great stretchability and strength.

Some day, scientists hope, spider genes will be custom-made to produce silks with characteristics most needed for various uses, maybe even clothing.

Spiders themselves customize their silk. A spider may produce half a dozen kinds for a variety of jobs, each silk coming from a different gland. Several kinds are used in webs. Another, called dragline silk, is what spiders use to dangle from the ceiling. Still another is used to make a cocoon for eggs.

In contrast, silkworms spin only one kind of silk, said David Kaplan of the U.S. Army Natick Research, Development and Engineering Center in Natick, Mass.

Some spider silk is nearly as strong as Kevlar, a synthetic fiber used in bulletproof vests, said Randy Lewis, head of the molecular biology department at the University of Wyoming in Laramie. To snap a dangling 12-inch piece of dragline silk, for example, it is estimated that one would have to hang another piece of silk from it approximately 10,000 miles long.

Much of the work so far has focused on the dragline silk of the golden orb-weaver. Found in Florida and Central and South America, the spider is named for its yellowish web, which can be up to six feet wide.

Kaplan, Stephen Lombardi and Wayne Muller have determined the detailed chemical makeup of the dragline silk, and are using that information to seek the gene that directs production of the silk.

Lewis, whose work is supported by the Federal Office of Naval Research, believes he has found the gene. He is now determining its chemical details.

Finding a silk gene is important because researchers can then insert it in bacteria or some other organism that can churn out the protein that makes up the silk far faster than spiders do. That will allow further study of the protein, to find out why it is so stretchable and why it has other properties of interest.

Knowing the gene should also allow scientists to alter it somewhat so that the resulting silk will perform better in particular applications.

One possibility is lightweight but strong fiberglass-like materials, which might be used in aircraft skin, helmets and other applications, Kaplan said.

Another potential use is sutures, Lewis said. Spider silk appears not to provoke an immune-system reaction from the body, and it contracts when moist, which could keep stitches snug during the healing process.

Man discovers dinosaur bones

OXON HILL, Md. (AP) — A freelance paleontologist was explaining to a group of 7-year-olds what dinosaur bones looked like when he stumbled on the real thing.

The June 10 birthday party outing led by Peter Kranz to a housing construction site resulted in the discovery of what may be the most complete fossilized skeleton of the Dinosaur Age found in the Washington, D.C., area in a century, said Nicholas Hotton, a research curator of paleontology at the Smithsonian Institution's Museum of Natural History.

Kranz said he was describing fossilized dinosaur bones to the children when he found a chunk of dark carbon. Other fragments were uncovered, then Kranz sent the young amateurs home and called the Smithsonian.

Routine mammography exams reduce risk of breast cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Routine use of mammography and breast examinations can reduce deaths from breast cancer in women over age 40, a coalition of medical and research groups says.

The groups — including the American Cancer Society, the American Medical Association and the National Cancer Institute — on Tuesday issued recommendations for screening women with no signs or symptoms of breast cancer.

Beginning at age 40, annual clinical breast exams and mammograms every one or two years.

Age 50 and older, breast exams and mammograms every year.

Breast cancer is the leading type of cancer in U.S. women and second only to lung cancer in cancer deaths among women. About 142,000 women are expected to be diagnosed with the disease and some 43,000 will die from it this year.

"We would like to recommend (these guidelines) to all women and all doctors in the country as a way of decreasing this great mortality rate from breast cancer in the United States," said Charles R. Smart, chief of the early detection branch at the National Cancer Institute.

The major groups in the coalition had already recommended this mammography schedule, but some of the other groups had not.

The American Cancer Society and the AMA said they will continue to recommend that women between 35 and 40 have a baseline mammogram for doctors to use as a comparison during later regular screening. The groups said they agreed on the recommendations to end confusion caused by differing guidelines, which they said has resulted in only about a quarter of physicians routinely recommending mammograms.

They cited mounting evidence that early detection of breast cancer prolongs survival and said mammography has improved greatly as a diagnostic tool since the 1960s.

About half of all breast cancers currently are found in the early stages of the disease, but that could increase to 70 to 75 percent if the recommendations are followed by all women, Smart said.

FDA investigates secret drug trial

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration is investigating an unauthorized clinical trial of an experimental AIDS drug from China in which one patient died.

Organizers of the study involving Compound Q, a purified extract of a protein from the root tubers of Chinese cucumbers, defended their actions under the FDA's so-called compassionate use policy for experimental drugs.

"It would be foolish not to give the benefits of research coming out of an individual's use of this drug, ethically, morally and legally. It is the correct and proper thing to do," said Curtis Fong, an attorney for San Francisco-based Project Inform, a non-profit group that helped set up the trial.

The FDA, under its so-called compassionate use decision, allows individuals to import "personal use" quantities of experimental drugs. Large-scale importation of unapproved products for commercial use is prohibited.

Dr. Alan Levin, a San Francisco immunologist who helped set up the study, said the program is at least six months ahead of mainline research on the drug's efficacy and contended he could have dosage recommendations within three months.

The patients under monitoring by nine physicians all showed clinical improvement, with reductions averaging 50 percent of the P-24 antigen, a key indicator of viral activity caused by AIDS infection, said Levin.

He added the drug produced its best effects in those least ill from the disease, said Levin. He and Dr. Vera Byers designed the trial.

Levin said another 33 patients had received the drug but were not part of the study. However, Levin issued a public plea to AIDS patients asking them not to inject themselves with the drug without medical supervision. Several people have been injured after obtaining bootlegged supplies of the potent drug.

In a statement issued late Tuesday, FDA spokesman Brad Stone said the agency would investigate the underground trial because "the exact circumstances surrounding the death and other adverse reactions reported to have occurred in this trial have not been ascertained."

Violating FDA policy on distributing unapproved drugs could result in seizure of the material; cease and desist orders; or, in rare cases, mostly involving for-profit schemes, criminal penalties.

Fong and Levin, who is helping Project Inform organize the trial, said the equivalent of 225 doses were brought into the country from Shanghai by a Los Angeles man, who had to bribe officials in another country to get it out.
