BUSH ASKS PAY HIKES

Plan paves way to aid Congress

By Tom Roum
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush asked Congress Friday to give 7,900 federal executives pay raises of 8 percent to 25 percent, but said the officials should prove their worth every three years or forfeit the increase.

Bush also proposed a ban on congressional honoraria, such as outside speaking fees, after 18 months to open the way for a pay hike for members of Congress. He stopped short of actually proposing a salary increase for them but promised in a letter to House and Senate leaders to "work with Congress toward this end."

"He told the Congress early on that he would be supportive of a congressional pay raise, but that's a matter he would like to work out with them. They are of the same attitude," said presidential press secretary Martin Fitzwater.

Bush earlier this year gave his support to a proposed 31 percent pay raise for members of Congress endorsed by the Reagan administration, but the plan was rejected in Congress after a public outcry arose.

In a third major feature of his federal pay package, the president proposed a new super-pay category to enable 200 federal employees with "specialized and critical skills," such as physicians or space scientists, to earn up to $124,400 a year.

Bush's proposal would give across-the-board 25 percent pay increases to the most senior federal officials, matching a 25 percent hike he proposed for federal judges last April.

Included would be members of the Cabinet, whose pay would go from $99,500 to $124,400, as well as Vice President Dan Quayle, who would get a raise from $115,000 to $143,900. Bush's own salary would remain at $200,000.

Junior executives would receive lesser salary boosts, depending on their federal pay grade, with the minimum increase 8 percent.

Shaping up as the most contentious part of the package was its requirement that all members of the senior executive service undergo a re-certification process every three years to keep their higher salaries.

The procedure is designed to "assure that these people perform at a level that justifies the higher salary. We do not believe it would weaken their rights," Fitzwater said.

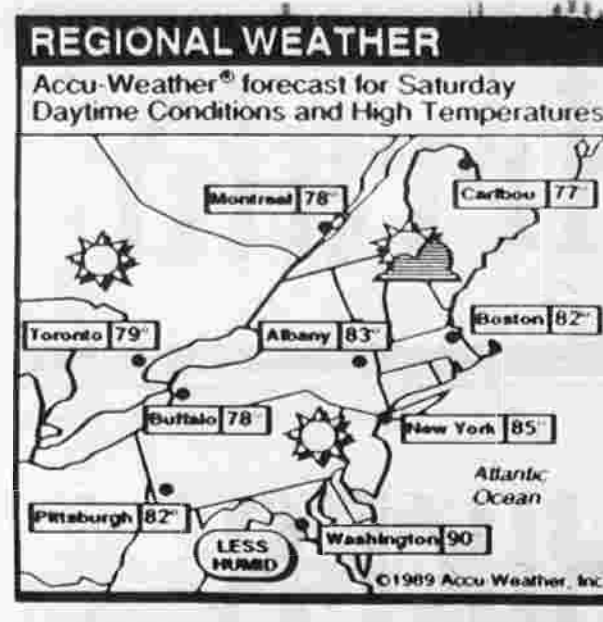

However, Rep. Gary L. Ackerman, D-N.Y., chairman of a House subcommittee on civil service, said: "It creates a system in which there will be a political litmus test. People will have to snooker up to their supervisors and kiss their rings to keep their pay raises. That's not what government service is all about."

WHERE FOUR DIED — Authorities check the wreckage of a car that slammed into a tree late Thursday night in New Haven and killed four people.

Four die as car slams tree

By Larry Rosenthal
 The Associated Press

NEW HAVEN — Four young New Haven men were killed when their speeding station wagon went off the road, slammed into a tree and burst into flames, police said.

All four victims were burned beyond recognition, but the state medical examiner's office said three were dead before fire engulfed the car.

A security guard working at the nearby regional center of the state Department of Mental Retardation and a passerby told authorities they tried in vain to open one of the car doors before the smoldering vehicle exploded in flames 30 feet high. Both said they heard a passenger coughing.

Yul Watley, the passerby, told television station WTNH he saw the coughing person's head come out the window before the flames forced him to retreat. He was driving home when he spotted the wreckage.

The crash late Thursday night was the second car accident in New Haven in eight months to claim four lives.

The car crossed the double-yellow center lines of a tree-lined stretch of road along West Rock Park shortly after 11:30 p.m., ramming into a large maple tree only three to four feet from the edge of the pavement.

Witnesses who had seen the car in the area, including the security guard, told authorities the driver had been traveling at a high rate of speed.

The driver, Willie Gattison, 17, died of multiple blunt injuries, the state medical examiner's office said.

The front-seat passenger, Charles Dickey, 18, died of asphyxia by chest compression and smoke inhalation from the flash fire, said Dr. H. Wayne Carver II, deputy chief medical examiner. Dickey is the half-brother of New Haven Alderman Willie Moore.

Calvin Spivey, 20, and the other rear-seat passenger, whose identity was being withheld pending positive identification, died of head injuries, the medical examiner's office said.

The medical examiner's office used dental records and X-rays to make the positive identification of the three victims. Identification of the fourth victim was delayed because no medical records on him were available locally, Carver said.

Police from neighboring Hamden, who were the first to be summoned to the scene, found the car engulfed in flames.

The car belonged to a New Haven couple who were apparently renting the vehicle to a friend of the victims, said Lt. James Sorrentino, a police spokesman.

The friend had been with the four young men earlier in the evening, and told police they were out visiting girlfriends, Sorrentino said.

Missing P&W engines recovered

HILL AIR FORCE BASE, Utah (AP) — Three F-16 jet engines that mysteriously disappeared from Hill Air Force Base earlier this week were found Friday, but their return was as murky as their leave-taking.

The 3,200-pound engines, valued at about $2 million apiece, were recovered by the FBI, but the bureau isn't talking. The engines "are in the possession of the government," said Hill spokesman Len Barry.

"We cannot discuss any details of the theft or recovery of these engines because the matter is still under investigation by the FBI and the Air Force Office of Special Investigation," Barry said.

FBI Special Agent Tim Screen confirmed the engines had been located, but refused to provide further details.

Retired Rear Adm. Gene R. La Rocque, director of the Center for Defense Information, a military think tank in Washington, said he knew of engine parts being stolen in the past.

"But... whole jet engines, that just boggles my mind," he said Friday. "I'd think it would be easier to steal a whole plane."

La Rocque said millions of dollars have been lost through military employees stealing parts to sell, including many for a lucrative black market in spares for the F-14 fighter.

The engines are rebuilt Pratt & Whitney F-100 T1200 series, about 17 feet long, 34 inches in diameter and weighing 3,200 pounds each.

WATCHING THE SHOP — Inventor F. Jerry Gutierrez and one of his surveillance mannequins monitor a photograph as he takes their picture.

Anne Droid is no dummy

You can't beat her photographic memory

By Nancy Nemecek
 The Associated Press

DENVER — Anne Droid looks like a typical mannequin, except for an unusual twinkle in one eye. That twinkle means Anne Droid can "see" you. She can also "hear" and even "remember."

Anne Droid is a surveillance mannequin designed to watch for shoplifters, an idea that has caught the eye of some retailers.

"My wife is a jeweler," says F. Jerry Gutierrez, Anne Droid's creator. "We were in a jewelry store and they had a TV monitor set up, but I couldn't find the camera. Then the jeweler showed me this tiny thing and I thought, 'My God, that would fit in a mannequin.'"

At the time, Gutierrez's job was to restore mannequins — a business he started when he was laid off as a carpenter.

Now, the 40-year-old Gutierrez has designed a line of mannequins with built-in cameras and microphones, which he hopes business owners will use to fight shoplifting.

Gutierrez inserts a miniature camera behind a mannequin eye, and the image is projected on a monitor that can be viewed privately. For sound, the mannequin sees or hears can be recorded on videotape.

"It's got a perspective no other surveillance system has," said Eric Freehling, who owns Odyssey Jewelry and Watch Out Watches in Denver.

He said when he first heard about Gutierrez's mannequins he was interested only in getting one for his store.

"I thought it was a heck of an idea," Freehling says. "Then I realized he didn't have as much of a business background as he needed to get off the ground. With my CPA background and a lot of experience in retail I told him I'd see if I could help."

A partnership developed, as did a spinoff from the mannequin restoration business called Anne Droid Security Systems. Freehling pitched in $115,000 to help launch it.

Basic security mannequins cost about $2,400, not including extras like a time-lapse VCR, Gutierrez said.

"One gentleman travels a lot and he wants to have a male mannequin that would 'watch' television to give the appearance someone is home," he said. "If that wasn't a deterrent the mannequin would double as security for him" by recording anyone entering the room.

Gutierrez said he has an order for 10 mannequins from a major Denver retailer but wouldn't give the company's name and did not say how many he's sold altogether.

Cuban hero, 3 others to be executed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Former Gen. Arnaldo Ochoa, who fought alongside Fidel Castro and became one of Cuba's best-known war heroes, was sentenced to death by firing squad Friday for helping smuggle tons of cocaine into the United States, the official Cuban news agency said.

Three other former officers also were condemned by a court-martial, which handed out prison sentences ranging from 10 years to 30 years to 10 other defendants, Prensa Latina said in dispatches monitored in Mexico.

Castro's regime launched an unprecedented and highly publicized investigation into Ochoa aimed at erasing a stain on the nation and the Communist Party.

Ochoa's actions constituted an attack on "the credibility of President Fidel Castro and weakened the prestige and defense of the Cuban revolution," prosecutor Brig. Gen. Juan Escalona said in his summation Wednesday.

For years, the United States had been accusing Cuba of allowing drug traffickers to operate, an accusation Castro indignantly dismissed as a U.S. plot to discredit Cuba.

But, embarrassingly, the accusations turned out to be true. A military hearing and the separate court-martial revealed details of an operation that used Cuba as a way station for smuggling cocaine from Colombia's Medellin cartel into southern Florida.

The court-martial, made up of three senior generals, sentenced Ochoa, ex-Col. Antonio de la Guardia Font, ex-Maj. Armando Fridron and ex-Capt. Jorge Martinez to death. All were stripped of their rank and expelled from the party last week after the hearing before a 47-officer court of honor.

The prosecutor had asked for the death penalty for three other officers, Eduardo Diaz, Antonio Sanchez and Alexis Lago, but the tribunal sentenced them to 30 years in prison.

Prensa Latina, hailing the verdicts as a "reflection of the exercise of democracy and legality in Cuba," said appeals to Cuba's supreme military court and the council of state were being expedited. It said the defendants had admitted guilt but were asking for mercy based on their records and contrition.

The fall of Ochoa was most impressive because of his background and standing. He fought alongside Castro in the Sierra Maestra in the 1950s, battling and eventually defeating the forces of dictator Fulgencio Batista.

Ochoa earned the prestigious Hero of the Republic of Cuba medal for his command of troops in Ethiopia in 1978 and in Angola in 1987-1988. He also headed Cuba's military advisory mission to Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government in 1985-86.

Prosecutor Escalona told the court that Ochoa robbed the Nicaraguans "of big sums of money," betrayed the Angolans with black market deals, and planned "to build a mansion with fine woods from the Angolan jungles."

He profited from the hunger of the Angolan people with the flour, salt and fish that hungry Angolan stomachs clamored for and thousands of children died, simply because they lacked these items," Escalona said in his summation.

The smuggling ring apparently was centered in an Interior Ministry unit headed by de la Guardia and dedicated to circumventing the 1983 U.S. trade embargo on Cuba.

In addition to drugs, the officers were convicted of smuggling diamonds, ivory, sugar, manufactured goods and U.S. dollars.

Confessions and testimony showed the ring worked with the Medellin cartel for at least 2½ years and allowed tons of cocaine from Colombia and shipments of Jamaican marijuana to pass through Cuban waters and airspace into the United States.

KICKOFF — Kelly Field, 12, of Manchester, black belt and hopes to be in the Olympics some practices tae kwon-do at S K Tae Kwon-Do in Hartford last Friday. She has earned a first-degree

Karate kid earned her black belt

By Rick Santos
Manchester Herald

What's so unusual about a 12-year-old girl who likes cats, sports, books, and movies? Nothing, unless she also is an exceptional student who has earned a first-degree black belt in tae kwon-do. Kelly Field, of Manchester, has been practicing the self-defense style for less than three years and has passed through 14 belt levels with mostly hard work.

"If you're not dedicated, you won't get anywhere," Field said Thursday afternoon while sitting in front of a cabinet displaying the many awards she earned in tae kwon-do competitions.

Field, who won a silver medal at last year's state competition and a gold this March, recently received a scholarship from her tae kwon-do school in Hartford.

She was given the award because of her academic excellence, said Sang H. Kim, owner and head instructor at S K Tae Kwon-Do.

"The fund is to encourage the educational aspect of martial arts," Kim said.

Kim said he has not yet decided the amount Field will receive, but it will be somewhere between $100 and $200 and may increase if Field shows more excellence in tae kwon-do and in school. The straight-A student will attend Iling Junior High School this fall. She says she cannot wait to get there because she wants to use the school's "huge" library.

Before graduating from Robertson Elementary School this year, she accumulated a pile of awards for academic excellence, school spirit, and athletics. She also won the Presidential Academic Fitness Award.

Field says her favorite aspect of tae kwon-do is poomse, the name for the detailed form of the art.

The forms in poomse are like dance routines, she says, except the art includes a series of punches, kicks, and blocks.

When a student's mastery of the forms is measured, the qualities examined are speed, accuracy, power, balance, timing, coordination, eye direction, and self-presentation.

She goes to the tae kwon-do school three times each week for 60-and 90-minute practices.

"Sometimes the workouts are hard, and sometimes they are easy—but you never know what's in store for you," Field says.

Kim said he has not yet decided the amount Field will receive, but it will be somewhere between $100 and $200 and weekend, he told the students they would have to work off some of the pounds gained from eating too many hot dogs.

Field says understanding the importance of a healthy diet isn't always enough.

"I try to stay away from sweets, but it just doesn't work," she says.

What does work for her is tae kwon-do.

"When she first started, she was so shy," Kim said. "Now she's kind of a leader among the kids."

The instructor says the art not only teaches self-defense, it teaches self-respect, self-discipline, and self-confidence. People need these characteristics to grow properly, he said.

Kim said Field has developed these traits.

"She tries to improve herself all of the time," he said. "Kelly is very consistent."

"When she sets a goal, she concentrates on the goal with all her energy," he said.

Field, whose goal ever since she began learning tae kwon-do was to earn a first-degree black belt, now has an even greater one.

"I want to be in the Olympics," she says.

Housing programs safe here

By Maureen Leavitt
Manchester Herald

The directors of the Manchester and Coventry housing authorities said Friday their towns will not be affected by a decision by U.S. Housing Secretary Jack Kemp to suspend a housing program for the elderly.

Carol Shanley, executive director of the Housing Authority of Manchester, said the housing for the elderly complexes in Manchester are funded through a Department of Housing and Urban Development program different from the Retirement Service Center Program that Kemp suspended Thursday.

The authority, a non-profit organization, operates 356 apartments in Manchester, 276 of which are subsidized by HUD. Shanley said the suspended program would not affect non-profit groups such as the authority.

In addition, a $2.9 million project in the works in Manchester to build congregate housing for the elderly is in no danger under the decision because it is being funded by a state grant, not federal monies.

Julie Bradley, manager of Orchard Hill Estates, an elderly housing project containing two 40-unit parcels in Coventry, said she does not believe Kemp's decision will affect the project.

"We have not had any concerns," Bradley said. "We really don't think it's a problem."

The first 40 units, built 10 years ago, were funded through HUD. But there were no federal funds available when the second 40 units were built about six years ago, Bradley said.

The program which Kemp has suspended was designed to provide apartments for low- and moderate-income elderly people. It is the third program canceled or frozen at HUD.

The program was designed to provide housing to people over age 70 who can live on their own and afford market rents. The centers offer such services as central dining and recreation.

Kemp said the program cost the government $119 million in direct payments to cover defaults on HUD-insured mortgages. That cost is likely to grow because defaults now total $250 million and are expected to continue, Kemp has said.

He also said the program was not serving those it was created to help, citing a HUD-backed project in Palm Harbor, Fla., that reportedly charged $2,100 a month rent for a two-bedroom apartment.

Parking plan is up for vote

By Nancy Concelmon
Manchester Herald

The Board of Directors is scheduled to decide Tuesday whether the town should buy property on Trotter Street for additional Municipal Building parking.

The town has a contract for $175,000 to buy a residence at 17-19 Trotter St. that is for sale and is considered for acquisition.

A citizens' committee appointed last year to study expansion of municipal and police facilities recommended that the town acquire properties around the Municipal Building and Lincoln Center for parking.

The town has hired Kaestle Boos Associates of New Britain to do a cost and space study on the committee's recommendations for new or expanded municipal facilities.

Lappen sees solutions for crowded classes

Craig Lappen, former president of the townwide PTA, has officially announced his intention to seek the nomination from the Democratic Party to run for a seat on the Board of Education.

Lappen, 42, of 298 Timrod Lane, said his financial experience as a portfolio manager for Aetna Insurance Co. would be helpful to the board because of the financial issues facing the board.

Specifically, he noted the problem the town faces with classroom space.

"With a $40 million budget, it's going to take some doing," Lappen said.

He said another key issue facing the board is ensuring that children with disabilities are taught in the least restrictive environment.

Lappen served as president of the Interstate 291 right of way in the Buckland Industrial Park to pay for the property.

If the board approves the acquisition Tuesday, it would have to appropriate the funds in August, Sartor said.

The 7,885-square-foot parcel on Trotter Street, next door to the existing Municipal Building parking lot, could yield 15 to 22 parking spaces.

A citizens' committee appointed last year to study expansion of municipal and police facilities recommended that the town acquire properties around the Municipal Building and Lincoln Center for parking.

The town has hired Kaestle Boos Associates of New Britain to do a cost and space study on the committee's recommendations for new or expanded municipal facilities.

Weiss had also recommended that 1,291 right of way funds be used to cover improvements to intersections throughout town.

Assistant Town Engineer James Weber said Friday the state has approved the town's plans for improvements to seven intersections, estimated to cost $4.1 million.

The town's share for some of those projects would be 12.5 percent, but Weber said the exact amount the town would pay has not been calculated yet.

An item on the Board of Directors' Tuesday agenda for an appropriation of $487,500 for intersection improvements was removed because some technical matters had not been resolved, Sartor said. The appropriation will probably appear on the August agenda.

Weber said the state Department of Environmental Protection has questions on plans for some of the intersections. The town had hoped to begin work this past spring but will probably have to wait until this fall to put the projects out for bid, Weber said.

The intersections are: Center and Summit streets; Middle Turnpike and Summit Street; Main and Haynes streets; Forest and Otis streets; Charter Oak and Spruce streets; Charter Oak and Autumn streets; and Highland and Gardner streets.

O'Neill cool to state study of spending

By Peter Viles
The Associated Press

HARTFORD — Gov. William A. O'Neill gave a lukewarm endorsement Friday to a new study of the way the state spends its money, a $4 million project that won't be complete until 1991 — well after the next gubernatorial election.

"I think it can be a valuable tool for state government," O'Neill said after signing a bill authorizing the study. "I don't know how needed it is, but it's certainly going to be a good thing overall."

The study, first suggested by Democrats in the General Assembly, is intended to look at the efficiency and necessity of state programs and services. It will end with recommendations by Jan. 1, 1991, on how the state can deliver services more efficiently, increase state revenues and reduce spending.

"I personally believe that this study will find that the state of Connecticut is running very good programs, and delivering its services well in a timely fashion under sometimes difficult circumstances," O'Neill said. "But I welcome whatever recommendations will come to do a better job."

The study will be conducted by a 23-member commission, including 14 members of the General Assembly, nine Democrats and five Republicans.

The remaining nine members will be three O'Neill administration officials, a chairman and five other members of the private sector, all appointed by the governor.

O'Neill on Friday announced his pick for chairman, Dery C. Thomas, president and chief operating officer of ITT Corp. O'Neill also said he would name Timothy J. Moynihan, president of the Greater Hartford Chamber of Commerce.

Thomas referred to his new post as an "interesting and important opportunity," but said it was much too early to discuss specifically the commission's goals.

"We intend to proceed carefully and slowly and not to do anything that's too untoward or too sudden," he said.

Republicans have expressed little confidence in the commission, complaining that 18 of its 23 members will be either Democrats or people appointed by Democrats.

"It's hardly bipartisan," said House Minority Leader Robert Jaekle, R-Stratford. He said the commission's Democratic tilt "raises questions about any results that would come out of it."

He predicted that the study would not lead to significant changes in the way the state spends its money.

Jaekle, who is considering running for governor next year, also took exception to the commission's 1991 deadline, which will keep its recommendations out of the 1990 gubernatorial campaign.

"That was a shame," Jaekle said. "I thought the recommendations should be injected into a gubernatorial campaign so the public would know how the candidates feel about the recommendations."

O'Neill disagreed, saying that releasing the report after the election will ensure that it does not become a political football during the campaign.

"After the election... it can be a very honest, sincere report and it can't be utilized by anyone as a political document," the governor said.

After signing the study bill, O'Neill vetoed two technical bills passed during the 1989 legislative session. His legal aide, Howard Rifkin, said he doubted the General Assembly would overturn the vetoes.

Consider leaving your beneficiaries a percentage of your estate, rather than a fixed sum of money in your will. Inflation and appreciation can change the relative value of the gift. Consider the woman who in 1953 signed her will and provided a gift of $25,000.00 to her best friend. This woman died in 1988 and the $25,000.00 gift she thought was appropriate in 1953 when she signed the will, still was $25,000.00 in 1988, but the residue had grown substantially. Her executor in the residue of her estate was valued at more than $1,000,000.00. She never intended that the charities get 40 times more money than her only blood heir.

Boy, 14, charged in girl's shooting

HARTFORD (AP) — A 14-year-old boy was charged with attempted murder after he allegedly shot a 13-year-old girl in the leg while aiming at another person, police said Friday. The boy, who was not identified because of his age, was also charged with first-degree assault and reckless endangerment, police said. The girl, who was not identified, was in satisfactory condition Friday at St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said. Hartford police Sgt. Gerald Kummick said the girl was standing next to an unidentified male on a third-floor balcony around 11:20 p.m. Thursday when a car pulled up. Several people got out of the car and passed a gun among themselves, encouraging each other to shoot "him," Kummick said. The 14-year-old boy finally took the gun and fired, hitting the girl in the upper thigh, Kummick said. He said police are unsure how many people were in the car, or what type of gun was used. The boy was arrested at 4 a.m. Friday at his home in Hartford; he was turned over to juvenile authorities, Kummick said. He could not say how police were able to find the boy.

Cable firm denies violating state law

STAMFORD (AP) — American Television & Communications Corp. on Friday denied violating state law as alleged by an attorney for Paramount Communications Inc.'s, and asked a Superior Court judge to reprimand the attorney for the remark. John L. Warden, a New York attorney representing Paramount, said Thursday in Stamford Superior Court that Time Inc. twice violated Connecticut law in dealings with ATC. Warden said Time failed to get approval from Connecticut utility regulators when it acquired ATC stock in 1978 and last month when it sold some Time stock to Warner Communications Inc. Time owns 82 percent of ATC stock. ATC is the nation's second-largest cable television company with franchises in 33 states. Because ATC operates a cable franchise in Connecticut, its actions are subject to review by state utility regulators. ATC's attorney, James F. Stapleton of Hartford, called the allegations irrelevant, but didn't dispute them. ATC is seeking an injunction that would stall Paramount's proposed $12 billion hostile takeover of Time. On Friday, Stapleton wrote a letter to U.S. District Judge Nicholas A. Cioffi saying the "inflammatory charges are untrue and misleading." He said ATC and Time received state approval prior to their merger and the Warner deal didn't require state approval. Stapleton asked Cioffi to admonish Warden for the remark. Warden was not in his office Friday and was not available for a comment, a secretary at his law firm said.

O'Neill aide resigns

HARTFORD (AP) — Charles Monagan, an administrative aide and speechwriter for Gov. William A. O'Neill, has resigned to become editor of Connecticut Magazine, the governor announced Friday. "It is with regret that I make this announcement," O'Neill said in a statement. "Charley Monagan has provided my office with extraordinary staff work and he will be missed." Monagan, 39, has worked as a reporter for the Meriden Journal, a free-lance writer, and in a variety of writing and editing positions for Connecticut Magazine from 1977 to 1980. His last day at the state Capitol was Friday.

Agreement is reached to free abortion protesters next week

HARTFORD (AP) — Nearly 100 abortion protesters who have been jailed for three weeks will finally identify themselves and walk out of state jails next week under a tentative agreement reached Friday. Hartford's chief prosecutor said. Authorities had been searching for a way to end the stalemate because the protesters, arrested at a June 17 demonstration in West Hartford, had pushed the state's already crowded jails above legal capacity threatening to trigger the automatic release of hundreds of prisoners. That situation, however, was eased Thursday when prison officials got approval to add 216 prison beds statewide and released 88 other inmates into home release programs.

Hartford State's Attorney John Bailey met Friday for nearly six hours with leaders of Operation Rescue, the anti-abortion group that organized the protest at the Summit Women's Center, in an effort to convince some of the protesters to identify themselves and leave jail. Bailey described the meeting as "very difficult," but said the prisoners would probably give their names and be released next week. In return, prosecutors have agreed not to require cash bond for the protesters. "We had certain things we would not negotiate," Bailey said of his insistence that the prisoners give their names. "If this goes as I see it, we have kept the integrity of the system, and these people will be released on our terms and not their terms."

The protesters' incarceration had threatened to trigger the automatic release of as many as 800 convicted criminals. But William Flower, a Department of Correction spokesman, said 88 inmates — not abortion protesters — were released from prison into the supervised home release program, and prison officials installed 216 new beds, mostly by "double-bunking" existing cells. The additional beds, approved Thursday by the state's Prison Overcrowding Commission, brought the state's legal capacity for male inmates to 7,385. If the state exceeds the capacity by 10 percent or more for 30 straight days, it must release all the extra inmates — a mass release of about 800 criminals. But the new prison beds increased the system's 110 percent limit to 8,124, and with the releases, the prison population dropped to 8,119, stopping the 30-day clock with five days left, Flower said.

In West Hartford, court proceedings continued Friday as the first of more than 300 abortion protesters arrested in this spring at the Summit Women's Center, continued to trickle through the court system. About 60 people were arrested April 1, and another 209 were arrested June 17. Charges against two of the protesters were dropped Friday because of a paperwork error, court officials in West Hartford said. The men, who were jailed because they refused to give their names, were to appear in court June 21, but someone mistakenly filed their court papers in the July docket, a clerk in the Superior Court in West Hartford said. Because the men had not been arraigned in a timely fashion, Superior Court Judge Jerry Wagner agreed to dismiss the charges Friday, the clerk said. Prosecutors in West Hartford refused to comment on the case. Four people arrested in the April protest went on trial Thursday in West Hartford on public disturbance charges. When their trial began, the judge made clear he would not allow the case to become a stage for a debate of the abortion issue.

Hearing set on pension plan

A public hearing will be held by the Board of Directors Tuesday on changes in the town's pension ordinance to permit the new town manager, Richard Sartor, to buy back about nine years of pension entitlement. The proposal is part of the agreement the town directors made with Sartor when they hired him. Under it, Sartor would be permitted to get pension credit for the years he worked as a police officer in Manchester before becoming general manager in South Windsor. He would have to pay $7,311.22 into the fund in a lump sum or in periodic payments between now and June 30, 2001. Sartor's rights in the plan would thus become vested immediately. Another proposed change would provide that Sartor would not make a payment of 5 percent of his salary in each pay period to the pension fund. The town will make the 5 percent payment annually for Sartor. The hearing is one of several that will be held at the Board of Directors' meeting in the Lincoln Center hearing room beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Miners find Greenwich pleasant

By Dean Golembeski The Associated Press

GREENWICH — Frank Martin brushed aside the sight of fancy cars and expensive shops and savored what he found most precious in this affluent town. The retired coal miner took a deep breath. "The air is so clean." "If you stood in my town, after a while you'd look like you were working in a coal mine," said Martin, from Lebanon, Va. "The coal dust really flies," agreed his wife, Mavis. Martin, 54, has a keen appreciation for clean air. He suffers from black lung disease, a debilitating ailment that forced him to retire from the mines nine years ago. He was in Greenwich on Friday with his wife, his wife's sister and his brother-in-law to picket one last day outside the corporate headquarters of the strike-bound Pittston Co. before heading home. Martin's benefits have been wiped out and his brother-in-law is out of work as a result of the strike by about 1,700 coal miners in West Virginia and Virginia that began in April.

As part of the United Mine Workers' strike strategy, the union has been bringing up groups of a dozen or so miners and their families to picket outside Pittston headquarters.

Although violence has erupted elsewhere, the Greenwich picket lines have been peaceful. Martin and his family were part of a group of 13 visiting Connecticut. On the way north, they participated in rallies held by labor unions in Baltimore and Newark, N.J.

The group was divided in three teams upon arrival in Greenwich. Martin and his family formed one team, and they worked three-hour shifts on the picket line daily this past week.

"I would like to live here, if I could afford it. It's a clean town, a nice town," said Martin's brother-in-law, Lloyd Blakenship, from Rowe, Va. "But I like my job. We like the family ties we have down there." "We know everybody by name," added his wife, Marie. They said Lebanon and Rowe have about 10,000 residents each. Greenwich, with 60,000 residents, is one of the nation's wealthiest communities and home to many celebrities and top business executives who commute to New York City.

Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Blakenship said they were impressed by the beautiful homes and the variety of shops, although the prices were dismaying.

The average sale price of a home in Greenwich last year was $800,000, while Mrs. Martin said her home — "one of the nicest homes in Lebanon" — is on the market for $135,000.

Mrs. Blakenship said everyone in Greenwich drives a nice car, while back home pickups and huge coal-hauling trucks predominate.

Despite the differences, the four said they found Greenwich residents to be friendly.

NATION & WORLD

The Associated Press

WEAPONS BANNED — Stephen Higgins, director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, holds one of the assault-type weapons which will be banned permanently from importation to the United States. He made the announcement at a Washington news conference. Similar domestic-manufactured weapons will not be affected by the ban.

Death penalty saves suspect

STRASBOURG, France — In a landmark ruling Friday, the European Court of Human Rights said a West German must not be extradited to the United States because he could face execution if he is convicted of a double murder.

Jens Soering, 22, who is jailed in Britain, is wanted for the stabbing deaths of a girlfriend's parents in Virginia in 1985. The British government agreed last year to his extradition.

But the court in Strasbourg said if Soering is sent to Virginia, the prospect of execution violates his rights under the European Human Rights Convention, whose charter bans "inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment."

"The applicant's extradition to the United States would expose him to a real risk" of treatment banned under the European human rights charter, the court ruled.

The court said if Soering were sent instead to West Germany, which also has asked for his extradition, he would not face the death penalty and would not serve years on death row, which the court said also violates the charter.

Court officials said the ruling broke new ground because it involved human rights abuses that had not yet occurred.

"Normally the court has the power to rule only on violations of human rights," said Paul Mahoney, a lawyer at the court.

Rulings by the rights court, a branch of the 23-nation Council of Europe, are not binding on the 23 council nations but are rarely ignored.

Assault-style weapons ban to cover only importations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The vast majority of assault weapons barred from importation since spring will be banned permanently from this country, the government announced Friday.

The ban imposed on 43 styles of semiautomatic weapons — including the popular Chinese-made AK-47 and Israeli-made Uzi carbines — followed a four-month study by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms on whether the weapons met the standards imposed by the Gun Control Act of 1968, which barred importation of weapons that are not used for legitimate sporting purposes.

"The study was undertaken because of the dramatic increase in the number of these weapons being imported and police reports of their use in violent crime," said Stephen E. Higgins, director of the ATF bureau.

While the 43 were banned permanently, another seven whose imports had been suspended since early spring will be available for import again as a result of the study. Those include six 22-rimfire caliber rifles and a gun called the Valmet Hunter, which had been considered an AK-47 type of weapon during the suspension.

Higgins said the ATF, which studied the marketing and use of the weapons, said the models banned were "not being used for sporting uses." Such weapons were identified officially Friday as "semiautomatic assault rifles."

The ATF annually traces 35,000 to 40,000 guns used in crime, and about 10 percent of them are semiautomatic assault weapons, Higgins said, estimating that slightly more than half of them were domestic makes that are not subject to ATF control.

"We're not saying that it will solve the basic problem" of crime, Higgins said, adding, "Their use in crime is probably disproportionately high compared with the number that are here."

Holding aloft one of the banned weapons — an Israeli-made Galil rifle — Higgins pointed out some of the accoutrements that led to its prohibition: a folding stock, a night sight, a flash suppressor on the end that could serve as a grenade launcher, its ability to accept a bayonet lug, a pistol grip and a large magazine.

In the future, he said, weapons with several of these features probably also would be subject to an import ban.

Higgins estimated that the Customs Service has seized about 20,000 of the weapons and that those will not be allowed into the country unless purchased by law enforcement agencies. Asked whether the government will pay damages to importers, Higgins said, "That's something the court would decide."

Three importers already have brought suit against the government over the suspension, and although a district court has upheld the government in one of the cases, Higgins said the ATF would accept comments on the permanent ban from any importers for 30 days. The final regulations would be issued "very quickly" after that, he said.

Asked why the ATF previously had allowed imports of the now-banned weapons, Higgins said the committee set up after the 1968 law was passed to determine whether guns qualified for import had "concentrated primarily, almost exclusively, on handguns." It wasn't until the number of assault-style weapons being imported increased dramatically that the ATF focused on them, he said.

The action Friday was lauded by gun control advocates, but John M. Snyder, spokesman for the Citizens Committee for the Right to Keep and Bear Arms, said it "shows the unacceptability of government, because originally, the ATF had certified that these rifles could be imported because they are suitable for sporting purposes."

"I think it also tends to further undermine whatever credibility President Bush has left with the firearms-owning community in the United States," he added.

Bush, a hunter and a lifetime member of the National Rifle Association, came into office opposing any bans on the assault-style weapons, despite an outcry over their increasing popularity among drug gangs and a heightened public concern triggered by the January schoolyard slayings of five children in Stockton, Calif., by a man wielding an AK-47.

However, Bush asked William J. Bennett, the director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, to advise him on what to do about the weapons. In March, at Bennett's urging, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady suspended the imports of many of the weapons, and Bush expanded the list the following month.

No sweat Half of fitness goals miss mark

ATLANTA (AP) — When it comes to aerobic exercise, most Americans apparently say no sweat. Also no running, walking, swimming or other strenuous activity, federal health officials have found.

The Centers for Disease Control reported Friday that at least five of 11 physical fitness goals for 1990, which it outlined at the beginning of the decade, probably won't be met.

"Evidence indicates that regular physical activity reduces the incidence of ... many medical conditions," the CDC said in its weekly report, citing the benefits of exercise in fighting heart disease, colon cancer, diabetes and obesity.

Nonetheless, the agency concluded, "objectives for participation in regular physical activity will not be fully met."

Here are some of the government's 1990 "Objectives for the Nation," published in 1980, and the progress — or lack thereof — that's been made:

- The proportion of adults ages 18-65 participating three times a week in vigorous, 20-minute exercise should exceed 60 percent. Unlikely to be met: a 1984-87 survey shows that only about 8 percent of adults exercise regularly at such a level.
- Half of Americans 65 and older should walk, swim or engage in other "appropriate" aerobic exercise at least three times a week. Not likely: a 1985 survey showed that while 46 percent of older Americans said they walked for exercise, only 8 percent met the three-times-a-week, 20-minute level.
- More than 90 percent of kids ages 10-17 should participate three times a week in 20-minute sessions of vigorous exercise. Not likely: a 1984 survey found only 66 percent of children exercised at that level.
- More than 60 percent of children 10-17 should participate in daily school physical education programs. Not likely: a 1984 survey placed the figure at 38 percent, only up by 3 percent from a 1974 survey.
- More than 70 percent of U.S. adults ought to know that cardiovascular health is best promoted by exercising at least three times a week, for 20 minutes or more, and at a level that makes heart rate and breathing "a lot faster," but not so much that talking is impossible. Not likely: a 1985 survey found that fewer than 40 percent got those questions right. The only goal deemed likely to be met: having more than 25 percent of large companies offer some kind of fitness program.

Over-the-counter antibaldness creams are banned by FDA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration said Friday it is banning sales of non-prescription antibaldness creams and aphrodisiac products because none has been shown to work.

Over-the-counter hair-growth products — usually sold by mail or through barbers or beauticians — have dwindled in number since the FDA indicated in 1985 that it would ban the products.

But the FDA said these products "have continued to be an area of considerable fraud. The ban of all such products will provide a greater and more uniform protection to the public."

John T. Walden, a spokesman for the Nonprescription Drug Manufacturers Association, said: "The industry has been anticipating this for a long time."

The number of companies marketing nonprescription aphrodisiacs also has shrunk in anticipation of a ban.

The FDA said none of the products that claim to arouse or increase sexual desire or improve sexual performance is effective. No manufacturer even defended its product during the agency's review, the FDA said.

The ban will become effective in six months.

For antibaldness products, the ban applies to those available without a prescription that are used externally.

"The only product approved by the FDA for stimulating hair growth on the crown of the head is a prescription drug that is a 2 percent solution of minoxidil, which is applied externally. The drug is manufactured by the Upjohn Co. and sold under the name Rogaine.

The FDA also said it has no evidence that vitamins, food supplements or other products taken orally retard baldness or grow hair and warned it will remove from the market products for which such claims continue to be made.

The FDA's ban on non-prescription antibaldness products is based on a recommendation of an advisory panel that evaluated a number of ingredients, including lanolin, olive oil, wheat germ oil and vitamins. The panel found none of these prevented baldness or promoted hair growth.

The FDA said that once the ban is in effect, manufacturers of any non-prescription remedy claiming to prevent baldness or grow hair will have to provide proof that it is safe and effective before it can be sold.

The FDA said that to demonstrate the effectiveness of a hair restorer, a manufacturer would have to show the product "gets into the hair root and stimulates hair growth."

Cattle gallstones stolen

WYALUSING, Pa. (AP) — A man was arrested on charges of stealing two pounds of cattle gallstones valued at $20,000 from a meat packing company where he worked.

The mineral deposits are prized in Asia as aphrodisiacs, according to officials at the Taylor Packing Co., which had planned to sell them through an exporter.

Paul A. Mueller, 42, was arrested Wednesday by state police and charged with theft, receiving stolen property and criminal conspiracy to receive stolen property. He was released on $10,000 bail, pending a July 14 court hearing.

Police said the gallstones were stolen sometime from June 26 to 28. They weighed 2.2 pounds and are worth $600 per ounce, said Kenneth H. Taylor Jr., president and secretary of Taylor Packing.

"The amount stolen was several months worth of stones," Taylor said. "They are in very few of the cattle. It takes thousands of cows to make up the amount stolen."

"I LIKE THESE RULINGS!... NOW THERE'S A BRANCH OF GOVERNMENT THAT THE PUBLIC HATES MORE THAN US!..."

The bad news about jobs

By Robert Walters

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. — "Everybody in this town who wants a job has one," says Roy Burke, the manager of the A&P supermarket here who maintains a constant but usually futile search for employees to stock the store's shelves and check out its customers.

"There's just not a whole lot of people around," adds an exasperated Burke, "except for those just released from prison, mental invalids and people with social problems — and there's really not many of them available."

Although somewhat overdrawn, that description aptly characterizes Portsmouth, long one of the country's tightest labor markets. In April, the most recent month for which the federal government's Bureau of Labor Statistics has complete data, this seacoast community's 9.6 percent unemployment rate was the lowest in the nation.

Indeed, Portsmouth's unemployment rate last year was 1.85 percent — about one-third the national average. Moreover, such low rates exist throughout both the state and region.

The monthly BLS reports routinely rank New Hampshire as the state with the lowest jobless rate. Other New England communities — including Burlington, Vt.; Stamford, Conn.; Nashua, N.H.; and Portland, Maine — regularly compete with Portsmouth for the honor of recording the lowest rate of any metropolitan area in the country.

The conventional wisdom holds that low unemployment is a goal toward which society should strive — but full employment has its negative aspects, most notably in tendency to prematurely lure teenagers into the work force. Desperate to find workers in tight labor markets, employers increasingly have turned to young teen-agers (those aged 13 to 15) because the pool of older teen-agers has been shrinking or more than a decade, in terms of both absolute numbers and the proportion of young people not already employed.

Of the eight states in which teen-agers have the highest participation rates in the labor force, four are New England states with low unemployment rates — New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Massachusetts. (New Hampshire ranks second in the country, behind only Minnesota.)

The supermarket operators in Massachusetts last year persuaded the state legislature to extend from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. the latest hour 14- and 15-year-olds could work in a food store. They were unsuccessful, however, in their efforts to amend the law that forbids 16- and 17-year-olds from working later than 10 p.m.

Ambitious work schedules can lead youngsters to subordinate their school work — cutting classes, ignoring homework, being absent for entire days and eventually dropping out. But the immediate gratification of employment at wages as high as $8 per hour does not compensate for the long-term loss of education that would have provided the basic skills necessary for more advanced jobs.

Not long ago, parents were the first line of defense against that danger to both their youngsters and the economy. But today, in many families whose budget is stretched to the breaking point even with both parents working, the addition of another wage-earner is tolerated if not encouraged. Working teen-agers may not directly pay family expenses, but they are less likely to beseech their parents for expense money — and that can be important at a time when real hourly wages have declined 3.5 percent in a decade.

With parents abandoning their traditional role, a greater burden is placed upon the Labor Department compliance officers assigned to enforce the federal child labor laws. During the past six years, the number of violations they have cited nationally has more than doubled.

Fully one-third of those infractions have been recorded in New England. With more than 10,000 youngsters found to be working illegally in the region during the past two years, even low unemployment clearly poses serious problems.

Pronoun hunt a sexy subject

By Sarah Overstreet

I read in The New Republic this month that great minds are discussing the "she rule" again. The author says there's much ado about whether to use the feminine forms of the third-person-singular pronoun. "She, her, hers," so it'll finally have a little gender equity in the personal pronoun department; or to just continue using the standard "he, him or his" to refer to both sexes when either:

(a) we are speaking about more than one person, and the group consists of both males and females ("Every person with a season parking pass must make his lot choice by Sept. 5"); or

(b) The sex of the referent is unknown ("Any marching band student showing up without his instrument two times during a semester will receive a grade cut of one letter.")

Many people, usually women, argue that we have used the male form for waayyyyy too long, and that it's time to even up the score a little. Those folks are for the "she rule." That means using the feminine form when there is a choice of masculine or feminine pronouns — "She who hesitates is lost," or "She laughs best who laughs last."

We could go on and on, and some religious denominations have given their hymnals, and even the Bible, a good go at pronoun equality of late. I wish them luck. Seems like no matter which pronoun you use, someone is ticked.

We journalists seem to come in for a lot of the ill will. If we use the standard male version, we get letters from angry women. Some of the daring journalists that use the feminine version, even just now and then to take a stand, are considered just slightly less weird than Andy Warhol.

Personally, I try whenever possible to please everyone. (After all, all those hes and shes buy the papers that pay me.) But it can sure get awkward and unwieldy. "Each contestant will be asked to give a five-minute explanation of why he or she believes he or she should be elected class president."

And the new penchant for hyphenated names, and you have double the awkwardness: "Andrea Markovitz-Metzbaum, in her address to the students, asked each to reflect on his or her dreams for the future." Twelve Markovitz-Metzbaums and seven hses and hers later, you have copy that's barely intelligible, even to the writer.

The New Republic columnist asked us for suggestions for solving this gender dilemma. I guess the most logical solution would be to create a third-person-singular pronoun that represents both sexes. Say, for example, "se" instead of "he or she." And perhaps "hir" for "his and her," along with "hirs"!

I know it will sound a little silly — no, make that a lot silly — for a while, but it's still easier than using two pronoun forms all the time, or trying to talk or write around it. But then, I guess I don't have much hope for that, either. I thought "Ms." was a perfect solution for the formal-title dilemma: Just like "Mr.," it simply allows us a way to refer to a person formally, without having to designate marital status. Yet, no matter which title you use, there are people who will take offense either on their own behalf ("It's Mrs.!!!!!!," you young feminist trollop, Mrs. Ferdie Sr.") or on the behalf of someone else ("My sister likes to be referred to as Ms. Jansen. Ms. Overstreet. Where were you during the women's movement?")

Which leaves me, unfortunately, at the same stalemate. The New Republic columnist found himself (herself?) toward the end of his (her?) discourse.

Help! Any suggestions? Sarah Overstreet is a syndicated columnist.

Nation faces toxic timebomb

By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta

WASHINGTON — Canaries once were sent into coal mines to detect lethal gases. If the birds died, the miners were kept out. Today, the American worker may be acting as the canary, unwittingly the subject of unsafe workplaces.

America is dotted with toxic timebombs. But the Occupational Safety and Health Administration — the watchdog of the workplace — is napping. Ironically, one of the most blistering assessments comes from the trade group of the industry that is most culpable.

We have reviewed an internal consultant's report prepared last year for the Chemical Manufacturers Association (CMA) that echoes warnings sounded by many authorities: The chemical industry's record on revealing dangerous ingredients is poor.

Federal law orders chemical makers to complete a form for everything they produce. The CMA study, focusing on 10 dangerous chemicals, found that companies are providing vague and confusing information on how to store a handle the chemicals, and inadequate first-aid instructions in case of exposure.

The report charges that problems with the forms "raised red flags about the ability...to adequately convey information and warnings, and about the effectiveness of training programs."

When OSHA commissioned Harvard University to conduct a study on hazardous chemical data sheets used in auto repair and body shops, the September 1988 study also found the information inadequate and in violation of federal standards.

Yet John Pendergrass, OSHA director during the Reagan administration, rejected the notion that it was his agency's job to monitor chemical company reports for accuracy. Pendergrass was no rogue; he reflected the hands-off approach followed by the deregulation proponents of the Reagan administration.

A government effort to develop an independent chemical information file was spiked by Pendergrass, who told our associate Scott Sinek that federal agencies ought to rely on data supplied by chemical producers. Last year, Pendergrass scrapped an independent information service, which OSHA had acquired to assist agency inspectors.

The current flap over data disclosures is only the latest chapter in a sorry story of how OSHA has abdicated authority for workplace health and safety. While OSHA boasts about imposing fat fines on firms that violate worker-safety rules, it has cut deals with those same firms for about half the original fine.

A company official who willfully violates federal OSHA laws stands a greater chance of winning a state lottery than being criminally charged by the federal government for workplace safety violations," concluded one recent Senate investigation.

Pension funds — a bedrock of retirement security — could be headed for a scandal that would rival that of the savings and loans.

Almost a million separate pension plans hold the life savings of more than 77 million trusting pensioners. Is that trust misplaced? Just as fraud has looted the thrift industry, so too are pension plans falling prey to unscrupulous businessmen. The latest headline speaks of five New Mexico businessmen indicted for conspiring to embezzle more than $9 million from their company's pension plan. Unfortunately, the Labor Department is outmanned and outgunned. It has only 300 auditors and investigators to protect $1.6 trillion currently invested in pension plans. Labor must rely on audits from private accountants hired by the same people who are under suspicion. The same cozy relationship between rip-off artists and accountants prevailed during the thrift crisis.

Could pension funds require the next big taxpayer bailout?

Mini-editorial

In the spirit of "If I can't have it, you can't either," a cluster of defeated congressmen is trying to limit the perks they unwillingly surrendered when they were defeated. Since more than 95 percent of incumbents were re-elected in 1986 and 1988, the Coalition to End the Permanent Congress wants a constitutional amendment to limit representatives and senators to 12 years in office. The coalition also seeks a law prohibiting contributions from PACs and abolishing honoraria. It wants to end mass congressional mailings at public expense, too. The non-partisan coalition held its first meeting in Kansas City, Mo., in May.

High court gets meaner

By Chuck Stone

Abraham Lincoln once yearned for America to be touched by "the better angels of our nature." George Bush now pines for a "kinder, gentler nation."

Both sentiments seem doomed to extinction because of what has become a meaner, nastier Supreme Court. That vituperative indictment is shared equally by impassioned defenders of the American flag's sanctity, supporters of affirmative action plans for women and minorities and opponents of capital punishment for juveniles and retarded persons.

Somewhere amid the hodgepodge of the court's rulings may be a thread of judicial consistency, but it has thus far eluded me.

Conservatives are licking their chops over the Supreme Court's destruction of affirmative action programs, and its authorization of the death penalty for teen-age and retarded criminals. But they are suffering ideological indignation over the court's interpretation that the right to free speech permits people to burn the American flag.

Liberals are hailing the court's protection of unshackled free speech. But they are denouncing the court's methodical desecration of the human dignity of women and minorities.

The Gaelic wit of Mr. Dooley was never more appropriate: "No matter whether th' constitution follows th' flag or not, th' Supreme Court follows th' illicition returns."

The Rehnquist court is simply carrying out the Neanderthalic mandate of the 20th century's most divisive president — Ronald Reagan. Yet, I find myself strangely ambivalent about two of this antediluvian court's recent decisions.

I'm as passionate about freedom of speech as anyone, but I don't see restrictions on burning the American flag as a concomitant corrosion of free speech. I also support the death penalty, but I question the educational merits of executing a retarded person.

Although I believe that Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist is a philosophical ally of Atilla the Hun, he issued a one-sentence statement that seemed to capsize our Tocquevillian sense of democratic values.

Dissenting on the right to burn the flag, Rehnquist wrote: "Surely one of the high purposes of a democratic society is to legislate against conduct that is regarded as evil and profoundly offensive to the majority of people — whether it be murder, embezzlement, pollution or flag burning."

The unhappy news is that the majority of Americans seem to believe that employment and educational barriers for women and minorities are not "profoundly offensive." That's because white males historically have enjoyed preferential treatment, and they are still determined to protect their exclusivity in the power structure.

In his own words, President Bush had a "visceral reaction" to the court's flag burning ruling. He immediately called on his aides to draft a constitutional amendment to annul the court's 5-4 decision in Texas vs. Johnson. But even if he is incapable of a gut feeling about the court's four anti-affirmative action decisions, surely he cannot believe that a national symbol is more precious than the democratic equality of millions of women, blacks and Hispanics.

Justice Kennedy ruled that "no special justification has been shown for overruling" stare decisis (a legal doctrine that means "to stand as decided") in a case involving an 1866 civil rights law.

And yet, his court has repeatedly disembowled stare decisis when it implemented racial and gender equality.

Ironically, the American people have no compunction in harmonizing "kinder, gentler" protective feelings toward the American flag with meaner, nastier feelings toward many of their deprived fellow citizens.

FOCUS Little league has special players

By Mark Seavy
The Associated Press

A group of Norwich parents recently witnessed a baseball game that most thought they would never see in their lifetimes. There were no hits, no runs and no errors. But what made the game perfect was that there were no losers. That's just the way they like it in the Norwich Little League's Special Needs Program, which was launched last year for disabled youngsters between the ages of 6 and 15.

Under league rules, batters hit the ball off a 3-foot tee and run base paths that are a few feet shorter than the Little League distance of 60 feet. They also use a ball that is softer than the typical Little League hardball. In addition, scores aren't kept and outs aren't recorded. Each team bats its entire lineup and then takes the field. Each game is played for about an hour with no set number of innings required. Allowing the handicapped youngsters a chance to toe the rubber and dig in at the plate was what Norwich Little League President James B. Rusiecki envisioned when he first began putting the league together in 1986.

"They have just as much enthusiasm and heart as any of the kids playing ball," said Rusiecki, a mustached supervisor at a Norwich naval products company. "Why should a child have to stay home because he or she may not be as good as anyone else?"

Rusiecki's proposal, born from the desire of some parents to give their handicapped children a chance to play ball, did not become a reality without a fight. The board of directors of Little League Baseball Inc., the national organization, rejected the proposal for a special-needs program in February 1987 and refused to sanction it, citing insurance problems and the possible need for professional educators.

College frat lobbies for husky as mascot

STORRS (AP) — A University of Connecticut service fraternity, dogged by the lapse in status of the school's mascot, is asking the board of trustees to restore some of the luster to the Siberian Husky. Alpha Phi Omega, a coeducational service fraternity, is asking the trustees to restore the status of Jonathan VIII, the latest in a line of huskies to represent UConn since 1934. The board will take up the issue at its meeting July 14. Fraternity members say the husky mascot's status lapsed in 1959, when Connecticut State College changed its name to the University of Connecticut. The fraternity, which cares for the dog, plans to show him off at more sporting and social events this fall, and he may even be grand marshal of the Homecoming Day parade. "He is the symbol that can help make UConn a better place to be, the point around which everyone rallies," said one of the students, Gary Najarian of Wolcott. No one has shown this much interest in the Jonathan tradition since the 1950s, when Jonathan IV chased Rhode Island Reds at football games, frolicked on the basketball court at Madison Square Garden and survived a dog-

HOUSE OF THE WEEK — A feature of this house is a large bedroom on the second floor and two more bedrooms on the first floor. The living room has a beamed ceiling. Plan HA1527V has 1,370 square feet on the first floor and 645 on the second. For more information, write to architect Fenick A. Vogel, 19W. 44th St., New York, N.Y. 10036. Here's the Answer

QUESTION: The wallboard in our living room needs patching. I can handle most of the job, but I'm not sure how to go about filling the few spots where there are openings in the wall without anything behind them. Can I apply masking tapes over each opening and then cover with a patching compound?

ANSWER: Yes, but one of the modern products that will fill the hole is a ready-made patch available in most paint stores and home centers. Tape it on according to the directions and you will find it

Hardwood flooring popular

By Andy Long
The Associated Press

From various sources come these bits of information of interest to the homeowner: Even though the construction industry no longer was required to use hardwood flooring in newly built houses from the mid-'60s, more than 4.2 billion board feet of strip wood floors have been installed since that time.

Part of the reason for the continuing popularity of hardwood flooring was the fact that hi-tech urethane finishes and sealers changed the way of hardwood floor maintenance. Some consumers, however, have maintained their perception of past maintenance problems.

Gary Reynolds, president of BonaKemi USA, manufacturer of hardwood floor products, says homeowners who have their hardwood floors refinished make the mistake of not asking about the type of finish or treatment to be used. He suggests such questions as what products are being used, how long can the refinishing be expected to last, whether the job will save on the cost of long-term maintenance and whether some other product or treatment might save time and money in the future.

Reynolds says new formulations make finishes odorless, smooth flowing and fast drying, making it possible to stain and finish a hardwood floor in one day. These same finishes, he adds, are non-ambering, have better adhesion

Bugs problem for squash

By Earl Aronson
The Associated Press

There are three B's that cause problems for squash — beetles, bugs and borers. But you may not encounter all of them in the same year.

According to an Extension entomologist at Michigan State University, the worst of the trio, and the most destructive in the garden, are spotted and striped cucumber beetles. They feed on freshly germinated seeds, recently emerged plants and flowers, to leaves, stems and fruits. Severe damage can stunt a plant's growth. These pests also carry the organism that causes bacterial wilt.

Once a plant is infected, the entomologist says, it cannot be cured. For control, he recommends checking the beetles with applications of Sevin, malathion or methoxychlor.

Cucumber beetles overwinter as adults in pastures and woodlots. They feed on asters, golden-rod, willow, hawthorn and apple blossoms until cucumbers, squash or melons are available. Because they don't spend the winter in the garden, a cleanup of fall plant debris is not an effective means of control.

ANSWER: Latex paint formulated for use on concrete is generally considered better than an oil-based paint for such a purpose. Epoxy paints are considered tops, but cost more.

On The House and are more resistant to wear.

SURVEY RESULTS: An interesting result of a survey of home improvements conducted by Practical Homeowner magazine was the variance in the choice of people in different cities around the country.

For instance, while an interior facelift was rated first in Atlanta, Dallas, Cincinnati and Salt Lake City on the basis of how it might improve the value of a house, it was far down the list in some other cities. In Seattle, it ranked first on a list of 19 such home improvements. What ranked first in Seattle? The installation of skylights, not even mentioned on other lists. Exterior painting got the nod in Los Angeles, central air conditioning in Philadelphia and a swinging glass patio door in San Francisco.

USING SNIPS: Snips, most commonly used for cutting light sheet metal, should not be used to cut hardened wire or hardened metal of any kind. The Hand Tools Institute cautions that ignoring this practice damages the snips' cutting edge. In the case of hardened wire, the blade could be permanently damaged, leaving a ragged edge that will end its usefulness.

LAWNS: Did you know you are not supposed to remove more than one-third of the surface during any one cutting with the lawn mower? This advice comes from Dr. James Watson, chief agronomist for Toro Co. He says cutting more than a third of the surface in any one cutting redu-

Weeders Guide

However, sanitation is effective in controlling the squash bug. The entomologist says that the new adults from one summer overwinter in garden debris and under boards near the garden.

They lay eggs as plants start emerging. Adults and newly hatched young feed together on plants, sucking juices from their leaves and stems. At season's end, they'll even attack the fruit. Adults are five-eighths of an inch long, ash gray in color and winged.

The scientist says that though squash bugs can be controlled with regular Sevin treatments, you can help by watching for and destroying egg masses in spring. They usually are found between the two main veins on the underside of a leaf. They resemble masses of potato beetle eggs but are yellow to brown, not bright orange.

To help trap squash bugs, place boards near plants. In the morning, lift the boards and destroy the bugs. Try burying a cake pan up to the rim in the soil, pour a little soapy water in the bottom and place a board over

GARDEN BOOK: "The Garden Primer" by Barbara Damrosch (Workman Publishing, $16.95 paper, $24.95 cloth) offers 673 well-illustrated pages of easy reference for gardeners. Good gardening is simple, says the author. "You just have to learn to think like a plant."

QUESTION: My wife is covered by a retirement plan where she works. I am not. Our combined income is under the total allowable amount to have a deductible IRA. She was told that neither one of us can have an IRA because of her pension. Is this correct?

H.D. Boise, Idaho

ANSWER: This is a misconception with many individuals. If you are filing jointly and your adjusted gross income is $40,000 or less you both qualify for an IRA deduction. If your adjusted gross income is between $40,000 and $50,000, your IRA deduction will be phased out. There are a few adjustments that have to be considered, but that is the basic idea. Cheap software worth price
Shareware has many benefits, incentives

By Changing Times
A Kiplinger Magazine

Microsoft Word retails for $450. Lotus 1-2-3 lists for $495. dBaseIII commands $695 and XyWrite $445. But for as little as the price of a phone call you can own PC software that's in the same league as the most expensive products.

With shareware as this software is called, you don't pay for what you don't like. And if you do like it, you pay only a modest amount. Shareware authors don't sell their products in stores. They give it away. They bet that low prices will pay off in registration dollars.

Because many people who use shareware don't pay for it, authors add to the incentive for registering. Some include added features in their registered versions. Others distribute a previous version of the program as shareware and send an improved version when you mail in the registration fee. And many provide telephone support and complete documentation only to registered users.

QUESTION: My son, who is 26 years old, lived with me all last year and will again this year. Although he worked and made $5,000, I paid all the costs of running our house. My wages will be $16,000 total for this year. Can I file as "head of household" on my federal tax return?

R.R. Mobile, Ala.

ANSWER: You are eligible if you are unmarried or considered unmarried as of the end of the year, and you paid more than half the cost of keeping up your home for the entire year for you and your unmarried child. Your child does not have to be your dependent. If your son were married, he would have to be a dependent in order for you to file as head of household. Unfortunately, in your case, his income would then disqualify him as a dependent. If you qualify to file as head of household, your tax rate will be lower than for single or married filing separately.

QUESTION: Where do you get it? The quickest way is from another PC user, says Changing Times magazine. There are three alternatives:

- Bulletin Boards: Using any communications software and a modem hooked to your computer, call one of these electronic services and start pushing buttons. Prompts or menus lead you to the programs you want and help you transfer them to your own computer. Darwin BBS, (801) 251-9296, updates a national list of bulletin boards each month.
- Software Libraries: They sell entire catalogs of shareware and public-domain (free) software. The largest among them are:
  - PC-SIG, 1038 E. Duane Ave., Suite D, Sunnyvale, CA 94086; (800) 245-6717 or, in California, (800) 282-2996. The directory costs $12.95 and describes more than 700 programs. A supplement to the directory costs $5.95. Disks ordered from PC-SIG's catalog cost $6 each plus $4 per order for shipping and handling.
  - Public Brand Software, P.O. Box 51315, Indianapolis, IN 46251; (800) 426-8475 or (317) 826-7571. The catalog is free and includes more than 550 programs. Disks cost $5 each plus $3 per order for shipping and handling.
  - Public Software Library, P.O. Box 35705, Houston, TX 77235; (800) 242-4PSL or (713) 665-5705. A free sample copy of "PSL News" lists 1,000-plus programs. But well worth the $14 are two disks that are updated monthly and include thorough descriptions of the offerings. All disks are $5 each ($8 for 3 1/2-inch disks) plus $4 per order for postage and handling.
- User Groups: Many computer groups maintain software libraries, electronic bulletin boards or both for members. To locate one in your area, look for a list of groups on a local bulletin board, or consult the back pages of "Computer Shopper" magazine, where hundreds of local groups are listed.

Best of the Bargains: Here are some of the best shareware programs listed by function:

- Data Sorting: One of the very first shareware programs, PC-FILESORT or (206) 454-9475, as long as the PC. Today, the program (Button Ware, (800) 206-8777, version 3.0IG, $40) is an easy-to-use tool for organizing almost any kind of information. A slightly more expensive version of the program, PC-File-DB exchanges data with dBase III. You can get both programs by calling (206) 454-2082.
- Spreadsheet Analysis: As Easy As (Tris Software, (508) 794-8777, version 3.0IG, $40) is as easy to use as Lotus 1-2-3. As Easy As comes without a manual (if you don't register), but if you've used Lotus you won't need instructions. The best part: With minor limitations, As Easy As reads Lotus's WKS and WK1 work sheet files and creates WKS files that can be used in Lotus 1-2-3. Get As Easy As from Stocks and Such bulletin board, (201) 377-2536.
- Writing Programs: Like PC-File, Bob Wallace's PC-Write (Quicksoft, (800) 888-8088, version 3.02, $89) was one of the first shareware programs and has benefited from years of enhancements. The program has always been popular for its speed and flexibility. The latest version adds 500 new features, including the ability to create documents as large as your computer's memory. The shareware version of PC-Write can be found in just about any library or general-interest bulletin board and includes an abbreviated, on-disk version of the manual. You can also order the shareware from Quicksoft, (800) 888-8088, for $16.

- Financial Programs: The following are standouts in a huge field of financial programs:

Get PFRFI from Computerized Investing's bulletin board or Stocks and Such.
- Money-management software: Cashtrac (Column One Software, (301) 948-8599, version 4.00, $45) is a popular and solid program despite some drawbacks. The program manages 16 checking or credit card accounts and 255 investment or savings accounts, each with its own set of up to 255 budgeting categories. Some flaws have to do with entering data. Cashtrac is available by calling (703) 841-5954.

23 million TVs sold in 1988

The sales success of monochrome TVs came quickly after their introduction in 1946, rising from 6,000 sets sold in 1946 to almost 3 million in 1949. Color televisions initially sold slower, taking 18 years before they outsold monochrome sets in the U.S.

Widow has rules to live by

DEAR ABBY: I can't cross the enclosed article a few months ago in my mother's Bible. She passed away 12 years ago. How few even open their doors to such a situation today. This was such a fine article, I think you might want to run it again.

MRS. NORMAN SMITH BOYNTON BEACH, FLA.

DEAR MRS. SMITH: Thank you for sending it. I agree that it's worth a second exposure, and I hope my readers also agree. Here's the piece:

DEAR ABBY: Years ago, when my widowed mother came to live with me and my husband, she made our lives so miserable that I determined that I would never bring such misery to my children if I ever had to live with them.

One day I sat down and wrote myself a letter. In it were some pertinent rules, and on the outside of the envelope I wrote, "To be opened on the day I go to live with my daughter, heaven forbid." I tucked it away in an old book and forgot about it. I've been widowed and self-sufficient for six years, but now I was recently forced to give up my job and go to live with my oldest daughter. I've opened that letter and I think your older readers might benefit from it, as I intend to.

- Here are the rules:
• Give what you can toward your keep. Any budget will stretch just so far.
• Keep yourself clean and neat.
• Remember, it is their home. Be especially considerate of him. He allowed her to bring you here.
• Give them privacy at every opportunity.
• If they want to go away on a vacation, but are hesitant because of you, offer to visit another relative or friend, so they will be free to go.
• Don't offer any advice or express any opinions unless asked.
• Volunteer information that they might be too embarrassed to ask for, such as arrangements for your burial, hospitalization, etc.
These rules were written more than 20 years ago. I read them often, and am determined to keep them.

TV treatment not only way

DEAR DR. GOTT: Is the laser method for removing hemorrhoids as painless as it has been described on the TV shows? I have a problem with hemorrhoids, and I am not sure which method to consider.

DEAR READER: No method of hemorrhoid removal is entirely painless because all the techniques alter living tissue that is supplied by nerves. For many people, laser treatment, which coagulates the hemorrhoids, is perfectly satisfactory. I suggest you discuss your concerns with an MD who can advise you which method is right for you. For example, ligation (tying off) or surgical removal might be of more benefit to you, depending on the severity and location of your hemorrhoids. In general, be skeptical about television claims; they usually make things sound too easy.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have a nagging cough I attribute to my bronchitis because my husband is a chain smoker. Someone told me about Bronkaid so I took them at a frantic pace. After almost a month in the hospital, because of a galloping pulse and damage from the medication, I am now home with a nitro patch and unmetoprol pills to control the situation. Some good came from the problem because my husband now smokes on the porch, but I am trying to warn people not to be their own physician and take medication without a doctor's approval.

DEAR READER: Over-the-counter medicines

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter signed "ANYWHERE USA" regarding courtesy to bicycle riders. I will gladly give these people the respect I give to automobile drivers when these bicycle riders:
• Obey the same rules of the road as drivers (i.e., no riding through stop signs, red lights, etc.)
• Stop weaving into the path of my car.
• Stop making turns or changing lanes without signaling or checking to see if the way is clear.
• Start yielding the right-of-way to those who deserve it.
I'm sick and tired of listening to bicycle riders complain about how motorists are always trying to run them off the road. Law-abiding bicycle riders are few and far between. Respect is a two-way street.

The same goes for motorcycle riders!
DEAR ABBY: You asked for suggestions concerning the standard salutations and the meaningless sign-offs used in business letters. Here's my suggestion: What is the first thing you look for when you pick up a letter? You would like to know who it's from and what the sender wants. That's why it makes sense to indicate across the top of the page:
From:
Subject matter:
Simply eliminate the salutation as well as the meaningless sign-off. How much easier a solution can you find?

ROBERT O. COX, MAYOR, CITY OF FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.

Dr. Gott Peter Gott, M.D.

often contain compounds that can cause symptoms and side effects, especially if the medicines are taken too liberally or in inappropriate ways. For instance, the product you mention — Bronkaid tablets — contain ephedrine (which can cause over-stimulation, nervousness, rapid pulse and urinary retention) and theophylline (a common cause of nausea and vomiting). Bronkaid is used for relief of bronchial asthma, not for the reason you mention; the manufacturer recommends no more than five tablets in any 24-hour period. Evidently, your excessive use of this medicine "triggered" angina, heart cramps due to inadequate oxygen supply to the heart muscle. This is predictable because medicine, such as Bronkaid, may increase the heart rate and amount of cardiac work, thereby exceeding the body's ability to compensate. I endorse your conclusion: Don't be your own physician. Also, never take any medicine in doses that exceed the manufacturer's (or the doctor's) recommendation.

Unborn baby hurt by use of drugs

By George D. Malkasian, President, The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists

There's an old saying: "When you are pregnant, you are eating for two." That proverb holds true for anything you take in the sense that whatever you eat, drink, smoke, or swallow goes to your baby. Between you and the fetus is the placenta (afterbirth), an organ which filters the different nutrients that go to the baby. In the past, doctors believed that the placenta acted as a barrier against harmful substances that got from the fetus as previously thought, and that the fetus can be affected by such things as alcohol and drugs before and after birth. Hardly a day can go by without hearing of the problems caused by use of such drugs as cocaine and heroin. This is particularly true for the pregnant woman because the drugs she takes can harm her and her unborn child. For instance, a woman who is addicted to heroin can give birth to a child who also is addicted. With the greatly increased use of cocaine and crack, doctors are beginning to see women giving birth to babies who are also affected by the drug. And women who abuse alcohol can have children with Fetal Alcohol Syndrome — a collection of physical and mental disabilities. But the majority of mothers-to-be aren't addicted to hard drugs or alcohol. They may, however, have an occasional drink, or take over-the-counter remedies, such as cold tablets or aspirin, and prescribed medications. Taking a drug such as aspirin or cough medicine is so common that most of us don't think twice about it. Pregnancy is the time to change that thinking. Your doctor will tell you that for your baby's sake, you should not take any drugs without checking with him or her first. If you have a medical problem that requires regular medication, talk to your doctor (S) — the one who is treating you and the one who will care for you during pregnancy. In some instances, you cannot risk going without the medication. In these cases, your doctor may change your pregnancy, also stop and think before taking any medication. A stuffy nose and headache may be uncomfortable, but make sure that the drugs you use to relieve your illness won't harm your unborn child.

Our Language

Squab can be a young pigeon or a thick cushion. Use this noun carefully, or else squab can start a squabble. Mase thinks over or silently considers. Of course, it's best to consider the verb mase when you're in a museum.

QUESTION: A politician was talking the other day about a "crisis situation." How is that different from a "crisis"? ANSWER: It isn't. The noun crisis alone is sufficient, or if you prefer a phrase try critical situation. When used after another noun, situation should usually be eliminated from the sentence. Crisis situation is just one example of the situation crisis in Our Language.

Talking with Sigourney Weaver
'I have had a lot of advantages'

By Frank Sanello

Sigourney Weaver returns in "Ghostbusters II" to do battle with obnoxious spirits that have once again taken over New York City. Her appearance in the farcical film is something of a surprise. She is a widely respected dramatic actress who received not one but two Oscar nominations in 1989.

Weaver's role as the tragic zoologist Dian Fossey in "Gorillas in the Mist" earned her an Oscar nomination for Best Actress. Her unscrupulous businesswoman in "Working Girl" landed her a Best Supporting Actress nomination.

Weaver, a graduate of Stanford and the Yale School of Drama, is the daughter of former NBC president Sylvester "Pat" Weaver. She became a star in her first major movie role as Ripley, the commander of a spaceship in "Alien." She had a bit part in an earlier film, Woody Allen's "Annie Hall," playing Allen's girlfriend at the end of the comedy.

The Manhattan-born actress soon demonstrated her range in a series of unusual roles. She played a scholarly prostitute in "Half Moon Street"; an arms dealer in "Deal of the Century"; a romantic diplomat in "The Year of Living Dangerously"; and a newswoman stalked by a murderer in "Eyes Wide Shut."

QUESTION: You're a serious actress who received two Oscar nominations in one year. Why did you do a piece of fluff like "Ghostbusters II"?

ANSWER: Bill Murray is one of my favorite actors — he and Bill Hurt. What pleased me about "Ghostbusters II" is that the characters were all fleshed out, compared to the first film.

QUESTION: So many stars,

SIGOURNEY WEAVER ... earns respect

when they make an issue-oriented film like "Gorillas in the Mist," become involved in the issue dramatized in the movie. But after the film comes out, they often drop their support. Are you still doing anything to help save the endangered mountain gorillas of Africa?

ANSWER: I'm continuing as honorary chairman of the Dian Fossey 10 help the gorillas.

The government of Rwanda wants to increase the number of tourists allowed to see the gorillas, which may agitate them. I sent a man to Rwanda to do research and see if an increase in tourism is harmful.

I've also adopted a gorilla named Magee. She just had a son named Rainy. Weather Adoption costs $5,000. I'm trying to initiate other programs that aren't too expensive so schools that can't afford $5,000 can become "friends of gorillas" for $500.

QUESTION: At one point in your life, you wanted to be a journalist. Do you think you would have been happy in that career?

ANSWER: I probably wouldn't have made as much money — not that I feel rich. Journalism appealed to me because you dive into a story and find out as much as you can. You get to the heart of it. You look at it from the point of view of the subject, which is the same as acting.

QUESTION: Do you agree with the magazine article that described you as patriotic?

ANSWER: Compared to the world of other people in a lot of other people in the world, I have had a lot of advantages. But I don't think I've had that upper class, haughty upbringing.

My father had a show-business background. If your parents are in show biz, you don't fool yourself into thinking you're Conquistador Vanderbilt.

But I love playing patrician characters, like Katherine (Parker) in "Working Girl." It's fun to play them because I went to school with patricians. I can spot a patrician 20 feet away!

QUESTION: You didn't have the average childhood. For example, I read that once when you were sick, Art Linkletter came over to cheer you up. Did you say "the darndest things" to him?

ANSWER: I was mystified by Art Linkletter. I was only 2½ at the time, but I saw home movies of the visit when I was older. I was deeply embarrassed to have a stranger come and see me in my pajamas.

Holy Grail inspires Indiana Jones movie

By Soni Efron

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The Holy Grail may not exist but it's a proven moneymaker.

Scholars say the makers of the blockbuster movie "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" are just the latest to cash in on the search for the impossible icon.

A 12th century abbot was the first to claim he had found the cup that Jesus used at the Last Supper, and his monastery became the wealthiest in England, according to Eckehard Simon, professor of Germanic medieval literature at Harvard University.

The Grail has since inspired romantic poems in several languages, a Wagner opera and even a Monty Python movie.

One legend had the Grail coming to rest in the south of France and by the 15th century, a French king had a collection of grail cups according to popular book on the subject, "Holy Blood, Holy Grail."

A German version inspired Richard Wagner to write the opera "Parsifal" in 1882.

Hollywood took up the trail in 1934, when Paul Newman played a scullion who made the cup for Jesus in "The Silver Chalice."

There is, however, no evidence the Grail existed, Simon said.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York does have a rumored silver cup that was once said to be the Grail. The Antioch Chalice, discovered in Syria in about 1910, was exhibited at the 1938 World's Fair, said curator Jane Hayward of the Clusters, which once owned it. But the chalice was made 500 years after Jesus' birth, and scholars never believed the claims, she said.

people would come on pilgrimages," Simon said. "They also managed to fabricate the story that King Arthur was buried there, and also that they had Excalibur," Arthur's sword.

Much of the mail I've received in the 10 years I've been writing this column has been from youngsters eager to find out how to get into the "glamorous" world of photojournalism.

I've spent most of my life in that glamorous world and have seen some of my peers climb to the top, some of them burn out, and also many others die in some strange corner of the world covering a war or riot that few of us can recall today.

My advice to any youngster dreaming of such a life is: Don't even consider it unless you want to live, eat and sleep photography for the rest of your life, with no guarantee that you will ever succeed.

The competition is ferocious.

mind. When a new gadget comes along — filter, lens, flash unit or whatever — they can't wait to take it home and play with it. Using the family as guinea pigs, they'll shoot and shoot until the new gadget is old hat and they understand all its ramifications.

Many years ago, when the fisheye lens first came out, there was a rash of circular pictures (A fisheye lens has a tremendous depth of field, from inches to infinity. It also distorts a lot.) Photographers were using the lens to get as much into the picture as possible. But the fad soon wore off. Nobody wanted circular pictures any more, and this extremely wide-angle lens languished in the lens locker.

A week before Halloween, one of our new young photographers asked if he could borrow the lens. He took it home and using multiple flash and his children as models, came up with two of the best uses for the lens I had ever seen.

His pictures were square, cropped from the circle the fisheye normally produces. For one photo, he had cut out the back of a pumpkin lantern for the lens. It showed a candle burning in the foreground and his children peering in from the outside and framed by the mouth, nose and eyes that were cut from the front of the pumpkin.

For his second shot, he climbed to the top of a stepladder and shot down at his children, who were dressed in Halloween costumes. They appeared completely distorted as they gazed into the lens from inches away.

The photos were just in time to move on the AP wire to newspapers around the country for Halloween. Both were used widely.

That young photographer was Eddie Adams, who has since gone on to become one of the world's foremost photojournalists.

And, he still experiments.

Heat and exhaustion two summer dangers

By Dr. Alan Leventhal

Heat stroke and exhaustion are summer-time dangers.

In hot weather, watch pets for rapid breathing, greatly increased body temperature, weakness, and muscle tremors. The pet's collapse may follow. Vomiting and diarrhea may also occur accompanied by a blank stare in severely affected pets.

With heat stroke, immediately cool down the patient by immersion in cold water (a bath or hose). Allow small amounts of water in heat exhaustion and apply cool water to the body. In either case, get the pet to a veterinarian immediately.

Beware of leaving pets in cars this summer. Even with partially opened windows, the temperature in cars can skyrocket in minutes. Fans and air conditioning in hope are indicated for obese, heavily coated, cardiac-stressed pets and those with existing breathing problems (asthma, etc.). Remember to always keep a supply of cool clean water available, and don't over exercise pets in the heat.

WLEA WEATHER: This is the weather that fleas love — hot and humid. For the pet that are sensitive to their bites just two or three fleas may trigger severe itching and self-mutilation. Late summer and fall will see the tick population subside but fleas will be out there until a hard freeze. Then they love to accompany your pet indoors, if they're not there already. Since a large part of the life cycle is spent of the pet on the ground, in your carpet or your pet's bed, fleas must be attacked everywhere. Your veterinarian has the armament. Dips

Chance meeting changes life
Author becomes obsessed with Navajos

By Phil Thomas
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Tony Hillerman had a chance encounter with a troop of Navajo Indian horsemen more than 40 years ago. He hasn't been the same since.

They were going to a ceremony called "The Enemy Way." It goes on for several days and is used to cure a Navajo of exposure to foreign cultures.

Hillerman, now 64, credits the meeting as being the seed that grew into his mystery novels featuring Navajo tribal police officers Jim Chee and Joe Leaphorn.

story dealing with murder, political assassination and grave robbery. And as in all of Hillerman's books, there's a generous serving of information about the Navajos but "I don't let it get in the way of the plot. People are not buying an anthropology book." So, it's served in such a skillful way that it doesn't interfere with the flow of the mystery but, rather, complements it.

Why Leaphorn thought. Why was always the question that lay at the heart of things. It was the answer Joe Leaphorn always looked for. Why did this (dead) man — obviously not a Navajo — have the name of a Navajo woman written on a note in his pocket. And the misspelled name of a Navajo ceremonial? The Yebichai. It was the ceremonial in which the great mystical, mythical, magical spirits who formed the culture of the Navajos and created their first four clans

Gilda's painful world

IT'S ALWAYS SOMETHING. By Gilda Radner, Simon & Schuster, 268 Pages, $17.95. When the phrase "It's always something" became popular, it was associated with the funny and purposely mindless ramblings of editorialist "Roseanne Rosannadanna" on television's "Saturday Night Live."

Now the phrase is the title of a book, penned by the late comedienne Gilda Radner, who created the character. Like Rosannadanna, the book is funny. But it's hardly in the same vein as the editorials of the popular series.

Radner's book is about her bout with cancer. She was diagnosed soon after her appearance in the film "Haunted Honeymoon" with husband Gene Wilder. Barely 40, she began to notice changes in her body, and after months of pain and confusion, doctors finally discovered the problem: ovarian cancer.

"It's Always Something" takes the reader through her childhood, "Second City Television," "Saturday Night Live" and a brief movie career. But her story is not about Gilda Radner the Entertainer; it's about Gilda Radner the Cancer Patient.

Her stories about "Saturday Night Live" are peppered with the fact that her diet consisted of saccharin, cyclamates and cigarettes. She was also bulimic, teaching herself how to throw up during the second year on the show.

She wrote: "I sang a song once called 'Goodbye Saccharin.' I sang that I had to have saccharin because sugar would make me fat and I'd rather be thin and get cancer than have bulging thighs. It came back to haunt me."

actually appeared, personified in masks worn by dancers. Hillerman, who lives in Albuquerque, N.M., was rather slow in putting his wide knowledge of the Navajos into novels. The first of the tribal police series, "The Blessing Way," appeared in 1979, but Hillerman, an amiable man with a ready smile, didn't begin writing on a full-time basis until four years ago.

Prior to that, he supported himself and his family — he and his wife have six children — by working as a newsman in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico. "Being a reporter is the best way to learn to write and also to learn about life in a hurry," he says.

News work was followed by a 20-year stint of teaching journalism at the University of New Mexico. He gave that up four years ago to write his books and because "you get to a point where you have an awful feeling that you are repeating yourself."

Radner focused on cancer throughout the book as part of her treatment. The disease that raged in her body was combated in part with positive thought, a technique she learned through The Wellness Community, a cancer patient support center located in Santa Monica, Calif.

Radner discussed the many modes of treatment she took: chemotherapy, radiation treatment, macrobiotic diet, the possibility of Laetrile, and surgery. Each treatment is described in detail, and it wasn't attractive or funny to imagine the comedienne who played nerdy Lisa Looper receiving a barium enema. The jokes about the challenges she faced were a way to purge herself of pain.

Well, if I'm gonna have it, I've got to find out what could be funny about it," she wrote. "I'm a comedienne. My life made me funny and cancer wasn't going to change that. Cancer, I decided, there and lighten it up."

The book is not morbid. Instead, the painful tale reads as if a funny friend plopped down on the couch and began to reveal her most intimate secrets. There is laughter and there are tears. In its heyday, "Saturday Night Live" was not just comedy, it was intelligent. Radner's book is the same way. She was funny and never played dumb about her disease or her life.

She said: "No matter what happens, whether the cancer never flares up again or whether you die, the important thing is that the days that you have had you will have lived." Gilda Radner lost her battle with cancer in May. She was 42.

Restrictions proposed on automatic tellers

By Lynda Horton The Associated Press

CHICAGO — An estimated 1,600 people are attacked annually at automated teller machines nationwide, and the near-fatal shooting of a woman forced to withdraw $400 proves ATM customers need more protection, an alderman said. Alderman Edward Burke introduced a plan Thursday that would shut down ATMs between midnight and 6 a.m. It also would require a yearly, $200 city license and safety inspections of ATM locations by police.

"We can no longer wait to take action to make these areas safer for the residents of Chicago," Burke said. Burke said his restrictions might have prevented the assault on Dana Feltier, 24, who was accosted near her apartment on June 18, forced to withdraw $400 from a cash machine and then was shot in the head. She remains hospitalized in a coma. "I see these machines that hand out cash to people standing on the street at any time of day or night and I know that they are inviting crime," said Police Superintendent LeRoy Martin, who is backing Burke's plan. Clinton Krislov, a lawyer who filed a class-action lawsuit on behalf of bank customers following the Feltier shooting, has called for ATM safeguards, including more drive-through terminals to let customers stay in their cars, and secret "panic" numbers to alert police to a problem. "Banks have security to protect machines from the customers," he said, but they don't have adequate security for those customers. In Ms. Feltier's case, a camera at the ATM where she was robbed took a picture only of her, but not her assailants, police have said. David Taylor, an executive with the Bank Administration Institute, a professional organization, said Friday the machines are safe but people must use common sense.

"It takes an extra measure of thoughtfulness and care on the part of people using the machines at night and in remote areas," he said. "They are a security problem," said Steve Petran, an office worker. "I can see where you're asking for trouble. But you have to be aware that that's life in the city."

Bank customers interviewed Friday said they'd feel shortchanged if ATM use was restricted. "The fact that you can come and get your money anytime day or night, that's the whole point of having these automatic tellers," said Chris Wells. "They are a security problem," said Steve Petran, an office worker. "I can see where you're asking for trouble. But you have to be aware that that's life in the city." Hearings on the proposed ordinance are scheduled July 18 before the council's Finance Committee, which Burke chairs.

Jobless figures hint economy may be slowing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate climbed slightly to 5.3 percent last month as continued declines in manufacturing and construction slowed overall job growth, the government said Friday in providing fresh evidence of a slowing economy.

Analysts were split on whether the jobless data provided by the Labor Department suggested a recession was near, but they were unanimous in saying there was nothing in the report to change the Federal Reserve's apparent decision to ease monetary policy.

"The Fed has apparently shifted gears now and it views the risk of a recession as more pronounced than the risk of inflation," Merrill Lynch analyst Bruce Steinberg said. The increase in the civilian jobless rate from 5.2 percent in May to 5.3 percent last month was not unexpected, most economists had predicted the rate would hold steady or edge up a notch.

More attention was focused on the department's report that non-farm businesses added just 180,000 jobs last month after a revised payroll expansion of 207,000 jobs in May. For the past four months businesses added an average of just below 200,000 jobs a month, well below the nearly 300,000 average monthly gains posted in 1988.

Virtually all of the June growth came in the service sector, with the goods-producing sectors of manufacturing and construction posting declines of 31,000 and 8,000 jobs, respectively. "This is certainly consistent with the picture that the economy is growing at a slower rate than it has been, with a real weakness in the goods-producing industries — where you would expect the impact of high interest rates to be most severe," said Pierre Ellis, a senior economist with Boston Co. Economic Advisers Inc.

Those higher interest rates are attributed to the Fed's more than yearlong campaign to slow growth by holding tight on credit, an effort which appears to have given way in recent weeks to an easing of monetary policy. The campaign has produced the slower rate of economic growth the central bank desired. But Ellis and other analysts said it was troubling that the burden for the slowdown to date has been borne almost solely in the goods-producing industries, because declines in those areas generally occur prior to a recession. Ellis predicted a recession in early 1990. Merrill Lynch has said one is likely in the second half of this year. Michael Evans, head of a Washington forecasting firm, disputed those estimates and said continued monthly job growth in the 200,000 range would allow the economy to slow without toppling into recession. In another sure indicator of slowing economic growth, the Labor Department said the average factory workweek slipped 0.1 of an hour to 40.9 hours last month, the first time this indicator has fallen below 41 hours since September 1987. There was a bit of encouraging news regarding inflation — the department reported average hourly earnings of production and supervisory workers were essentially unchanged. For the first five months of the year, hourly wages had grown on average by 0.3 percent. But analysts cautioned against reading too much into the month-to-month figures because the number often vary over a period of just a few months.

The payroll numbers are taken from the department's monthly survey of business establishments. Data from a separate household survey, used to set the unemployment rate, found that the civilian labor force grew by 492,000 people from May to June, to a total of 124.1 million. That increase came after a reported decline in the labor force in May and likely was influenced by summer entrants into the job market. Of the civilian labor force, 117.5 million held jobs and 6.5 million were looking for work but could not find it, the government said. Among most demographic groups the unemployment rate was unchanged or up just slightly. But increases in joblessness were reported for teen-agers in general and black female teen-agers in particular. The rate for the latter group shot up from 28 percent in May to more than 40 percent last month.

Among all teen-agers the unemployment rate rose from 15.2 percent to 15.6 percent. That came as the labor force for that age group grew by more than 100,000, apparently due to an influx of students into the labor market. The government said blacks made up the bulk of the new teen-agers in the labor force. In contrast to young black women, male black teen-agers had some success in finding jobs as their unemployment rate fell more than 3 percentage points to a still-high 33.3 percent. The civilian jobless rate has been hovering in the 5 percent range for more than a year. It was 5.4 percent in June 1988 and fell to a more than 15-year low of 5.0 percent in March before heading upward. Most analysts believe it will climb to 5.5 percent or higher by year's end.

Ford is facing $1.9 million fine

By John King The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Labor Department on Friday proposed nearly $2 million in fines against a Ford Motor Co. subsidiary it said had repeatedly violated an agreement reached with the automaker two years ago by failing to adequately report injuries and illnesses.

The subsidiary, Ford Electronics and Refrigeration Corp. of Lansdale, Pa., has 15 working days to contest the fine proposed by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. OSHA said the company had willfully ignored a 1987 agreement between the agency and Ford in which the automaker settled worker-safety complaints at two other plants and agreed to a companywide reform of its recordkeeping practices relating to illnesses and injuries.

Ford officials did not immediately return telephone calls seeking comment. The Pennsylvania subsidiary was cited for 241 willful violations of the agreement for allegedly misrecording or failing to record injuries and illnesses. It also was cited for serious violations for allegedly overexposing workers to the hazards of lasers and repetitive motion.

"The fact that you can come and get your money anytime day or night, that's the whole point of having these automatic tellers," said Chris Wells. "They are a security problem," said Steve Petran, an office worker. "I can see where you're asking for trouble. But you have to be aware that that's life in the city."

Hearings on the proposed ordinance are scheduled July 18 before the council's Finance Committee, which Burke chairs.

Willful violations are defined as situations in which the employer knew of a violation of OSHA standards or was aware that a hazardous condition existed but made no attempt to correct it. A serious violation covers alleged offenses in which the employer knew or should have known that a workplace activity posed a substantial probability of death or serious physical harm. If Ford contests the fine, the case would be referred to an administrative law judge, who would hold hearings on the matter. If either side appeals a judge's finding, the case is referred to the Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission, a quasi-judicial agency. Any appeals from that proceeding would go to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Fed has begun new easing of credit, say analysts

By Martin Cruzisner The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve, faced with further signs of a weakening economy, launched a second round of credit easing this week even before the end of a crucial midyear review of monetary policy, private economists said Friday.

The analysts predicted that the move would send a variety of consumer and business interest rates lower, with one saying that a cut in commercial bank's prime lending rate could come as early as Monday. "The Fed is easing and there is clear evidence that we have passed the peak on interest rates," said David Wyss, an economist with DRI-McGraw Hill, an economic consulting firm in Lexington, Mass.

The development was not unexpected, although some economists were surprised that the move came even before the end of two days of meetings of the Federal Open Market Committee, composed of members of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington and five of the 12 regional Fed bank presidents. The committee meets eight times a year to map monetary strategy and many had expected that the central bank would begin another round of easing moves in the period following this week's meeting. At the previous meeting, held on May 16, Fed policy-makers decided to leave credit conditions unchanged. They noted a variety of economic statistics pointing to slower growth, according to minutes of that meeting released Friday.

Wall Street betting heavily interest rates are dropping

By Chet Currier The Associated Press

NEW YORK — However else they may diverge, nearly all Wall Street forecasts share one common viewpoint right now: Interest rates are down and headed still lower in the weeks ahead.

All the signs point, analysts agree, to further moves soon by the Federal Reserve to relax its credit policy. After a year of tightening credit from the beginning of 1988 through early this year in a campaign against inflation, the Fed lately has signaled its evident switch to a more stimulative approach. In an effort to cushion the impact of a slowing economy. "We expect a move toward lower short-term interest rates," said Erich Heinemann, economist at Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. "The Fed should follow by cutting the discount rate before Labor Day."

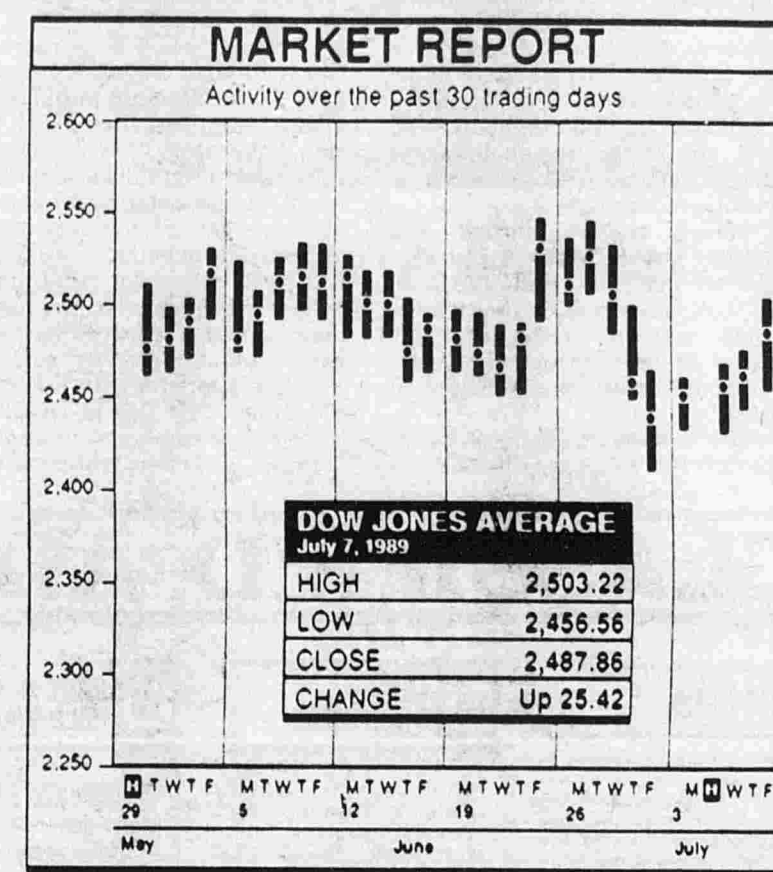

In the unlikely event that Fed policy stays tight, many observers contend, traders in the bond and short-term money markets would probably do some day to credit-easing on their own. The longer the Fed waits to loosen the reins, the reasoning goes, the more talk will spread of a possible recession. That would encourage investors to buy securities like Treasury bonds in expectations that rates would fall on the basis of slackening demand for credit.

As investors have learned to expect over the past decade or two, falling rates can be a powerful plus for stock prices. They tend to work, with a lag, as a stimulus to business activity and corporate profits. At the same time, they diminish the future appeal of interest-bearing securities — the main alternative to stocks that is available to money managers at investing institutions.

But as they study the current situation, some stock-market analysts confess to a few worries. First of all, experienced market-watchers naturally grow suspicious any time some purported positive for stocks becomes universally accepted dogma.

By the time everybody agrees on an issue like this, stock prices often have already taken the prospective news into account. Besides, the market has a demonstrated penchant for proving the majority wrong. Secondly, falling rates might not be so helpful to the stock market if they evolve into a symptom of serious weakness in the economy.

Investors put such misgivings aside in the past week. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 47.60 points to 2,487.86, rebounding from a 91.81-point slide in the last week of June that stood as its worst weekly showing in more than 15 months. The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained 3.66 to 181.56; the NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market climbed 7.13 to 442.42, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was up 4.78 at 383.75. Volume on the Big Board averaged 126.86 million shares a day, down from 162.15 million the week before. Whether the economy has a "soft" or "hard" landing, the stock market could ultimately benefit, argues Michael Sherman at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc.

"Obviously, the outlook for bonds and interest-sensitive and recession-resistant stocks could be very good if interest rates tumbled," he said. "More important, however, the entire equity market, while not immune to the disappointment of declining profits and financial problems, would ultimately respond vigorously to the further sharp fall in interest rates that would attend a hard landing."

The worst economic development for stocks, Sherman maintains, would be no "landing" at all — but persistent strength in the economy, accompanied by renewed upward pressure on inflation and interest rates. Sherman rates such a script as no more than a 10 percent probability.

Voyager discovers Neptune's third moon

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Voyager 2 has found a third moon orbiting Neptune, the first of many the space probe is likely to find as it zooms toward an Aug. 24 encounter with the blue-green planet 2½ billion miles from Earth, NASA said Friday.

"It's always a very exciting experience to discover a new satellite," said astronomer Steve Synnott, who spotted the moon in photographs taken by one of the spacecraft's television cameras.

"I never really jumped and screamed, but I clenched my fist, nodded my head to myself and said, 'Yep, that one's real.' Ninety-nine-point-nine percent of the time this discovery process is frustration, so it is finally nice to dig a nugget out of all the mud."

The newly found moon, temporarily designated 1989 N1, is the third known satellite of the solar system's fourth-largest planet, or roughly the size of Earth's moon.

"At this point, the moon is too indistinct to appear in photographic prints made from the Voyager images," laboratory spokeswoman Mary Beth Murrill said in a news release. "Pictures taken in coming weeks will show the moon more clearly."

At 9 p.m. PDT on Aug. 24, Voyager 2 will swoop within 3,000 miles of Neptune's north pole cloudtops — the closest of the close encounters that took it past Jupiter in 1979, Saturn in 1981 and Uranus in 1986. Five hours later, the probe will fly within 25,000 miles of Triton.

Voyager 2 was 43.7 million miles from Neptune on Friday, cruising at 42,201 mph. The spacecraft was 2.67 billion miles from Earth. Since it and Voyager 1, were launched in

McEnroe's odyssey at Wimbledon is ended

By Rick Warner The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — John McEnroe's amazing Wimbledon odyssey was ended Friday by defending champion Stefan Edberg, who overcame a rain delay and swept into the final with a sizzling serve-and-volley game.

Edberg's 7-5, 7-6, 7-6 victory stopped the 30-year-old American from continuing a remarkable comeback and reaching his first Grand Slam final in four years.

"I'm disappointed," said McEnroe, who showed no signs of a shoulder injury that forced him to withdraw from doubles a day earlier. "I felt like I could have won this tournament. Things just didn't work out."

Strangely, McEnroe lost despite playing what was probably his best match of the tournament. Each set was decided by a few crucial points, and Edberg won more of them than McEnroe.

"It was the small things that made me win," the 25-year-old Swede said. "I hit some good shots when I really needed to. There wasn't a lot of difference between the two of us."

The match was interrupted for 3 1/2 hours by rain early in the third set, and that delay forced officials to postpone the second semifinal between Ivan Lendl and Boris Becker until today.

The Lendl-Becker match will be played immediately before the women's final between Steffi Graf and Martina Navratilova. The last time a semifinal was staged the same day as a final was 1985, when Anders Jarryd and Becker finished a rain-interrupted match before the women's championship.

Edberg needed two days to beat Becker in last year's rain-plagued final. It took him far less time to beat McEnroe, but it wasn't easy.

The court was slippery, there were distractions from helicopters and birds, and McEnroe wasn't giving him many chances to break serve.

But Edberg won the first set with a break in the final game and then won two tense tiebreakers with his spinning serve and lightning reflexes at the net.

"He volleyed fabulously," McEnroe said. "I thought I'd be able to crack a few winners, but he was just too solid."

McEnroe, who was seeking his fourth Wimbledon title and first since 1984, kept his volatile temper in check despite continuing frustration over his faulty first serve. He got only 48 percent of his first serves in, and had nine double-faults along with eight aces.

However, neither player could break the other's serve in the final two sets.

"I didn't feel like he was in charge, my serve any more than I was on his serve," McEnroe said.

The last time McEnroe reached the final of a Grand Slam was at the U.S. Open in 1985. Since then, he has married, had two children with wife Tatum O'Neal, taken two sabbaticals from tennis and tried to regain the form that carried him to seven Grand Slam titles.

McEnroe appeared to be nearing that form after rallying from two sets down to win his opening match against Darren Cahill and getting past Mats Wilander in the quarterfinals. But Edberg was unstoppable.

"When I look back at it, I'll be proud of what I did here," McEnroe said. "Right now, it's not a high point because I lost last."

It was a high point for Edberg, who will be playing in his fifth Grand Slam final. He won the Australian Open in 1985 and 1987 and lost to Michael Chang in last month's French Open title match.

"It's great to be back in the final," Edberg said. "I know I can play on his stuff and if I serve well, then I'm going to cause some trouble."

At the start of the match, McEnroe complained briefly about the slippery court. But his real nemesis was Edberg's control at the net, where he flicked off winner after winner. By the time rain halted play with Edberg trailing 3-2 in the third set, McEnroe had won only four points on passing shots.

During the delay, Edberg came out of the lockerroom and sat near the Royal Box with his coach, Tony Pickard.

FINALIST — Defending champion Stefan Edberg raises his arms in victory after defeating John McEnroe in their men's singles semifinals Friday at Wimbledon.

"I wasn't too worried going back," Edberg said. "I felt good and I knew I had to concentrate really hard because I knew he was going to go out and try to get a good start."

When play resumed, Edberg held serve with an ace. In the 10th game, he saved a break point and held for 5-5 with a forehand volley.

McEnroe saved a break point of his own in the next game with a backhand volley. Edberg then forced the second volley, which was briefly halted by two sparrows that flew over the net while the Swede was serving.

Edberg took a 4-1 lead in the tiebreaker, but then made two straight errors.

Douglas leads seniors field

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — Dale Douglas shot an 8-under-par 64 Friday to take the first-round lead at the $900,000 Digital Seniors Classic.

Douglas, who has won $149,294 in 1989 without winning a tournament, equalled the competitive course record set by Bruce Crampton in 1988 and matched by Douglas in the second round last year.

In all, 32 golfers in the field of 72 broke par, with another 11 matching it.

"You'll see a lot of good scores. I think that's a tribute to the condition of the course," Douglas said.

Douglas held a one-shot lead on Mike Hill and Bob Charles, Miller Barber, Bruce Crampton and Walt Zembarkist were next at 66.

Lemond retains cycle lead

FUTUROSCOPE, France (AP) — Greg LeMond retained the lead in the Tour de France Friday after an easy ride in which the most of the pack rode together on the race's longest stage.

Frenchman Joel Peller took the sixth stage in 6 hours, 57 minutes, 45 seconds, winning by 1:34. But the rest of the pack finished close enough for the overall standings to remain virtually unchanged.

"I'm not complaining about the stage. Peller is more than nine minutes behind me," LeMond said. LeMond has a five-second margin over two-time winner Laurent Fignon of France after Friday's stage of the 23-day, 2,026-mile event.

Revolt delays Finks' election

By Dove Goldberg The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Jim Finks was not rejected, only put on hold. Finks remains the heavy favorite to become the next NFL commissioner despite being denied the job on his first crack at it because of a revolt by 11 "outsider" owners.

When club owners ended a 6-hour and 25 minute meeting an hour before midnight Thursday, the president of the New Orleans Saints was three votes short of the 19 necessary to give him the job that Pete Rozelle has held for nearly 30 years.

Five of the 11 abstentions — not "no" votes — were cast by owners who have joined the league since 1989 and feel they have been left out of the league's decision-making process. Most of the other abstainers were from a group that is rarely consulted by the inner circle of "football men" who comprised the selection committee.

"We feel that if we had received the information we had been seeking, Jim Finks would have been elected tonight," said Norman Braman of the Philadelphia Eagles, one of three organizers of the revolt. "We just didn't feel we had been given enough background on any of the candidates, including Finks."

There was no anti-Jim

NOTHING NEW — Retiring NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle, right, announces to reporters Thursday that Jim Finks did not receive enough votes to be named his successor.

Cowboys add Walsh to QB ranks

By Bill Bernard The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Dallas Cowboys, who are paying Troy Aikman more than $11 million for the next six years, drafted another rookie quarterback in Steve Walsh and said Friday they have no intention of trading him.

"We did not make this pick thinking trade," said Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson, who coached Walsh when he quarterbacked the University of Miami to a 23-1 record the last two years.

Walsh was taken in the first round of Friday's NFL supplemental draft, which means Dallas gave up its first-round pick in the regular 1990 draft to get him.

Eight other teams with six or fewer wins last season passed on the other top players available before quarterback Timm Rosenbach was selected by the Phoenix Cardinals and running back Bobby Humphrey by the Denver Broncos.

If the Cowboys decide to keep Aikman and Walsh, they will have two of college football's best quarterbacks, but they also will have to reopen their checkbook.

"If they want me to compete on an equal scale with Troy, compensation will have to be somewhat similar," Walsh said. "It's the only way to be fair to my career and Troy's career."

Walsh said his familiarity with Johnson can only help him with the Cowboys.

than about Finks and began when the selection committee was formed in March. None of the six selection committee members has been in the NFL for less than 20 years.

The owners will meet again this summer to try again to find a new commissioner.

back Mike Loman of Coffeyville Junior College was taken by Dallas in the 12th round.

The NFL did not release the order of selection by the first nine teams, which means it is not known how many, if any, teams passed on Walsh before Dallas took him.

One team that said it wanted Walsh was the Chiefs.

"I'm sure I will be speaking with Jerry Jones and Jimmy Johnson in the next week or so, as will other teams," Kansas City general manager Carl Peterson said. "I would venture to say Dallas will be talking to lots of teams. The assumption is probably a good one that they probably don't want to go into the 1989 season with both those young quarterbacks. But I can't speak for Jimmy Johnson or (Dallas owner) Jerry Jones."

Phoenix and Denver were in the second tier of teams that won more than six games but did not make the playoffs. The Cardinals and Broncos also gave up their first-round picks in 1990.

Rosenbach, a two-year starter at Washington State, led NCAA Division I-A in passing efficiency in 1988, completing 65.9 percent for 333.7 yards per game and 23 touchdowns. He led the Cougars to a 9-3 record, their best since 1950.

Rosenbach will be competing with Neil Lomax and Gary Hogeboom for a job at Phoenix.

Martina and Graf are all set for Round 3

By Rob Glover The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Round 3 in the battle of the bomber vs. the body puncher takes place today in the women's singles championship at Wimbledon.

The bomber is Steffi Graf, a baseliner and the defending champion.

The body puncher is Martina Navratilova, a serve-and-volleyer out to reclaim the title she loses the most.

History and pride will be on the line as Graf and Navratilova decide the title for the third year in a row, the first time that has happened in the women's draw here since 1907.

May Sutton of the United States, the first overseas player ever to win Wimbledon, and Dorothea Douglass of Britain faced each other in 1905 through 1907, when the defending champion went directly to the final. That challenge round system was dropped in 1921, and no two women's players have matched their streak until this year.

Navratilova defeated the West German 6-2, 5-7, 6-4 in the 1987 final, tying Helen Wills Moody's record of eight singles titles at Wimbledon. The American led Graf 7-5, 2-0 in the 1988 final, then dropped 12 of the final 13 games as Graf won in three sets.

The loss prevented Navratilova from gaining another piece of Wimbledon history — most consecutive singles titles. She and Britlin's Willie Renshaw, the men's winner from 1881-86, share the mark with six in a row.

For the last 12 months, Navratilova has waited for a rematch with Graf. She skipped the clay-court season to prepare for Wimbledon and has focused on winning her ninth title this summer.

"I want it badly, Steffi wants it badly. It should be a great match," Navratilova said. "This is what you live for."

While Navratilova is perhaps the best women's serve-and-volley player in history, Graf could have the most powerful groundstrokes of any woman. Graf, the No. 1 player in the world, has dominated the women's tour for the past two years and will be competing in her 10th consecutive Grand Slam final. But her streak of five Grand Slam titles ended with a defeat to Arantxa Sanchez in the French Open final last month, and Graf is eager to reassert her supremacy.

Even if she fails to win the ninth title Saturday, Navratilova promised she will continue her quest for the record.

"My goal is to win Wimbledon one more time, sometime," she said. "If it doesn't happen this year, I will be back here another four or five years maybe. My goal is always to still win Wimbledon."

Baseball's first half of year overshadowed by Pete Rose

By Ben Walker

The worst-to-first Baltimore Orioles, Mike Schmidt's retirement, amazing Nolan Ryan, Kevin Mitchell, big trades and key injuries. Baseball's first half, all overshadowed by two words. Pete Rose.

Guilt or innocent, it doesn't matter.

From now on and forever, 1989 will be the year Rose gambled with greatness. Turn on the television, listen to the radio, read the papers, there he is. Not the cocky, wisecracking Pete that everyone either loved or hated but always respected. No, it's Mr. Rose - as in Rose v. Giampati in court-speak - and he's looking more tired by the minute.

Turn on the television, listen to the radio, read the papers, there he is.

Not the cocky, wisecracking Pete that everyone either loved or hated but always respected. No, it's Mr. Rose - as in Rose v. Giampati in court-speak - and he's looking more tired by the minute. Too bad, because this could have been a really neat season. It has been so far, as if anyone noticed. Bats aren't clogging the bases anymore. They've dropped from 620 last year to 262 this season. Home runs are also down, about 10 percent. So is National League hitting, from 251 to 245, while American League averages are up.

Jim Abbott proved he could do with one hand what many others could not do with two.

The U.S. Olympic hero is the 10th pitcher to go directly to the major leagues since the amateur draft in 1965 and the California rookie already has more victories than any of his predecessors. White Abbot, Ken Griffey Jr. and others arrived, Schmidt left. He was so good, and so popular, that he became the first retired player to be elected to a starting spot in the Hall of Fame. He is ineligible to play Tuesday night in Anaheim, Calif., but will be there in the dugout, in his Philadelphia uniform.

"It will be my last hurrah," the game's seventh all-time home run hitter said.

He also hit the most homers in the 1980s - 313, including six this season. Ryan, at 42, may start the All-Star Game in the ballpark where he started for eight seasons. He has done everything else this year - he's come close to three no-hitters, is on course to fan his 5,000th batter and has continued to improve his strikeout-walk ratio.

"I look forward to coming back," he said. "That'll be a special game for both me and my family. I look forward to that more than my other All-Star Games, just because of the circumstances."

Speaking of circumstances, could anyone have predicted what would happen in Baltimore? Mike Scott. And if injuries to Dwight Gooden, Darryl Strawberry, Keith Hernandez and Gary Carter prevent the New York Mets from surging ahead in the NL East, this could be the first time there are four good races. Montreal led the division on July 4 and the last five NL East teams to be in first place on Independence Day won it.

Philadelphia and Detroit, two teams that hoped to improve, are much worse.

The Phillies tied to salvage something by trading former Cy Young reliever Steve Bedrosian to the Giants and two-time All-Star Juan Samuel to the Mets. Detroit, crippled by age and injuries to Jack Morris and Alan Trammell, played so poorly that Manager Sparky Anderson took two weeks off because of exhaustion. His streak of 17 consecutive winning seasons is in jeopardy as are the Tigers' hopes of being the winning team in the '80s. Detroit and the Yankees each took 780 victories into this year.

Other notables: - Toronto, which moved into its new SkyDome, made the only managerial change, firing Jimmy Williams and promoting Cito Gaston. Later when the Blue Jays played Baltimore, it was the first meeting between major-league teams with black managers. - Pete Robin Yount got his 2,500th career hit. He went into this year trailing Willie Wilson by six hits for most in the decade, but is now

Bats aren't clogging the bases anymore. They've dropped from 620 last year to 262 this season. Home runs are also down, about 10 percent. So is National League hitting, from 251 to 245, while American League averages are up.

Jim Abbott proved he could do with one hand what many others could not do with two. The U.S. Olympic hero is the 10th pitcher to go directly to the major leagues since the amateur draft in 1965 and the California rookie already has more victories than any of his predecessors.

White Abbot, Ken Griffey Jr. and others arrived, Schmidt left. He was so good, and so popular, that he became the first retired player to be elected to a starting spot in the Hall of Fame. He is ineligible to play Tuesday night in Anaheim, Calif., but will be there in the dugout, in his Philadelphia uniform.

"It will be my last hurrah," the game's seventh all-time home run hitter said. He also hit the most homers in the 1980s - 313, including six this season. Ryan, at 42, may start the All-Star Game in the ballpark where he started for eight seasons. He has done everything else this year - he's come close to three no-hitters, is on course to fan his 5,000th batter and has continued to improve his strikeout-walk ratio.

"I look forward to coming back," he said. "That'll be a special game for both me and my family. I look forward to that more than my other All-Star Games, just because of the circumstances."

Speaking of circumstances, could anyone have predicted what would happen in Baltimore?

Mike Scott. And if injuries to Dwight Gooden, Darryl Strawberry, Keith Hernandez and Gary Carter prevent the New York Mets from surging ahead in the NL East, this could be the first time there are four good races. Montreal led the division on July 4 and the last five NL East teams to be in first place on Independence Day won it.

Philadelphia and Detroit, two teams that hoped to improve, are much worse. The Phillies tied to salvage something by trading former Cy Young reliever Steve Bedrosian to the Giants and two-time All-Star Juan Samuel to the Mets.

Detroit, crippled by age and injuries to Jack Morris and Alan Trammell, played so poorly that Manager Sparky Anderson took two weeks off because of exhaustion. His streak of 17 consecutive winning seasons is in jeopardy as are the Tigers' hopes of being the winning team in the '80s. Detroit and the Yankees each took 780 victories into this year.

Other notables: - Toronto, which moved into its new SkyDome, made the only managerial change, firing Jimmy Williams and promoting Cito Gaston. Later when the Blue Jays played Baltimore, it was the first meeting between major-league teams with black managers.

- Pete Robin Yount got his 2,500th career hit. He went into this year trailing Willie Wilson by six hits for most in the decade, but is now

Vancouver nine ends its strike

By Pete Herrera

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — The Vancouver Canadians, the top farm team of the Chicago White Sox, ended a one-game strike Friday after the general manager delivered overdue paychecks.

Brent Imlach, in his first year as vice president and general manager of the Pacific Coast League team, met with the players and handed over the checks that were due June 30. It was the delay that caused the walkout.

The players, who said Thursday the White Sox have been consistently late in meeting the twice-a-month payroll, agreed to play the windup of a four-game series with the Albuquerque Dukes.

"We got our checks and we're going to play," said Vancouver catcher Marc Sullivan, whose father, Haywood Sullivan, is co-owner of the Boston Red Sox.

A source close to the Major League Baseball Players Association said Friday the union will contend that all players who were not paid on time are free agents because the club defaulted on their contracts.

Imlach said it would be up to the Chicago White Sox front office and the PCL to determine if any of the Vancouver players would be fined or suspended for not playing Thursday night's game. Imlach said he had discussed the situation with White Sox general manager Larry Himes, but "we did not discuss any disciplinary action."

White Sox spokesman Chuck Bizzell said Friday "the ballclub would never do anything to intentionally avoid paying players ... This was an oversight."

Bizzell said he could not respond to the players' claim that checks were chronically late "because we're still trying to discover what went on here. When we do, Larry Himes will have something more to say."

Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti did say something.

"I am concerned about it," Giamatti said in New York through a spokesman, Rich Levin. "My office is actively looking into the situation."

Imlach said the problem developed when the checks were sent by courier from Chicago to Vancouver late last week. They remained in Vancouver instead of being forwarded to the team in Albuquerque.

"We found the checks in the office and then I determined how best to get the checks down here to Albuquerque," Imlach said. "I decided the best way to get the checks in the players' hands was to bring the checks down myself."

Imlach said he was unaware other paychecks had been late as the players contended. "You can be sure that I will be working with the White Sox to make sure this doesn't happen again," said Imlach, who added he had apologized to the players.

"We care about the players and they're important to us in Vancouver," he said. Sullivan, among the most outspoken of the players, did not rule out the possibility of reprimands.

"Everybody stuck their necks on the line and now supposedly there are four of us, including myself, who are now taking most of the heat. Probably because we were more outspoken or because we're the older guys on the club," Sullivan said.

While Sullivan would not identify which of his teammates might be singled out by the parent club, Bizzell said the White Sox will inquire about the role of Doug Frobel and Jeff Schaefer in the walkout.

Selection to All-Star team can be worth extra dollars

By Ronald Blum
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Being selected to an All-Star team is more than an honor. It's a monetary bonanza.

Thirty-three players earned $447,500 in bonuses for making the American and National League teams, led by five players who made $50,000 each.

Houston's Mike Scott, one of 19 players who got $25,000, also had his base salary for each of the next two years automatically increase from $1.95 million to $1.975 million. He is 14-4 in 18 starts covering 138 2/3 innings. If he reaches 32 starts or 205 innings, his base salary for 1990 and 1991 would increase to $2.125 million a year.

Wade Boggs and Mike Greenwell of Boston, John Franco of Cincinnati, Rick Reuschel of San Francisco and Nolan Ryan of Texas earned $50,000 apiece.

Twenty-six players did not earn bonuses — including seven-time starter Ozzie Smith of St. Louis and five-time starter Cal Ripken of Baltimore, American League MVP Jose Canseco of Oakland and Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees. Cincinnati outfielder Eric Davis would have gotten $55,000 if he had been voted to start but earned nothing for his selection as a substitute.

American Leaguers earning $25,000 were outfielders Devon White of California, Harold Baines of Chicago, Bo Jackson of Kansas City, Kirby Puckett of Minnesota and Jeffrey Leonard of Seattle; pitchers Mike Moore and Dave Stewart and catcher Terry Steinbach of Oakland; pitcher Dan Plesac of Milwaukee; third baseman Gary Gaetti of Minnesota; second baseman Julio Franco of Texas; and third baseman Kelly Gruber of Texas.

In the National League, catcher Benito Santiago and outfielder Bobby Bonilla of Pittsburgh and Tim shortstop Barry Larkin of Cincinnati, and outfielders Darryl Strawberry of New York, Kevin Mitchell of San Francisco, and Von Hayes of Philadelphia made $25,000 each.

Oakland first baseman Mark McGwire made $20,000, while five players got $15,000 each — catcher Tony Pena and first baseman Pedro Guerrero of St. Louis; third basemen Bobby Bonilla of Pittsburgh and Tim Wallach of Montreal, and Chicago Cubs pitcher Mitch Williams.

Baltimore catcher Mickey Tetleton and Cubs second baseman Ryne Sandberg made $10,000 apiece, and outfielder Ruben Sierra of Texas got $7,500.

Many of the players can earn additional money for reaching certain levels by the end of the season.

Fernandez hurls Mets to victory

NL Roundup

NEW YORK (AP) — Sid Fernandez pitched a three-hitter and ended a streak of poor pitching by the New York Mets, beating the Cincinnati Reds 7-1 Friday night.

Fernandez, 7-2, lost his no-hit bid quickly as Luis Quiñones hit the left-hander's first pitch of the sixth inning over the left-field fence for his sixth homer of the season and third in two days against the Mets.

Entering the series, Quiñones had three homers in 382 at-bats in the majors.

Fernandez struck out three and walked two as he beat the Reds for the third time this season, losing once.

He helped the Mets break a three-game losing streak that saw starters Bob Ojeda, Ron Darling and Dave West roughed up. In the three losses, the Mets starters allowed 20 earned runs and 24 hits in 9 1/3 innings.

Fernandez has allowed just one earned run in each of his last three starts and 14 earned runs in his last nine.

It was Fernandez's 14th career start and only his 10th complete game, first of the season.

The Mets beat rookie Scott Scudder, 2-3, for the second time in a week, scoring two runs in the third inning, three in the fifth and two in the sixth.

Pirates 3, Padres 0: At Pittsburgh, Doug Drabek pitched a three-hitter for his second shutout of the season as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat San Diego 3-0 Friday night, handing the Padres their sixth loss in seven games.

The Pirates scored their runs on an RBI single by Mike LaValliere in the second inning, a homer by Gary Redus in the seventh and a sacrifice fly by Andy Van Slyke in the eighth.

Cubs 6, Dodgers 4: At Chicago, Jerome Walton drove in three runs Friday and the Chicago Cubs won their fourth straight game, beating Los Angeles 6-4 and sending the Dodgers to their fifth consecutive loss.

Rick Sutcliffe, 10-6, was the winner with the help of four relievers, including All-Star Mitch Williams, who got the last five outs for his 22nd save.

Braves 5, Phillies 3: At Atlanta, Atlanta right-hander John Smoltz beat the Philadelphia Phillies for the fourth time this season and Lonnie Smith knocked in the go-ahead runs with a two-run homer in a 5-3 Braves' victory Friday night.

Smoltz, 11-6, scattered six hits, struck out one and walked five in eight innings.

Boggs signs with Bosox

BOSTON (AP) — Wade Boggs, whose off-the-field life dominated Boston's offseason, agreed Friday to a three-year contract extension with the Red Sox worth about $7.3 million.

Boggs, who has won four consecutive American League batting titles, is making $1.7 million this year in the final season of a three-year deal. He would have been eligible for free agency at the end of the season.

Boston had attempted to trade him this spring as details of his affair with Margo Adams became public. But because of his contract status and notoriety, other teams didn't want him. Boston general manager Lou Gorman repeatedly has said that other teams initiated the trade discussions.

Boggs, voted as the starter on the American League All-Star team, does not have a no-trade provision in the new contract, leaving the Red Sox free to deal him.

SHARP EYE — New York Yankees third baseman Mike Pagliarulo stretches to make a catch on a hard line drive hit by Boston's Kevin Romine in the third inning of their game Friday night at Fenway Park. The Red Sox won, 6-4.

Red Sox trim the Yankees

BOSTON (AP) — Mike Greenwell broke a tie with an inside-the-park home run in the sixth inning Friday night, sparking the Boston Red Sox to a 6-4 victory over the New York Yankees.

Roger Clemens, 9-6, was tagged for three home runs in a game for the first time since June 1, 1987, but struck out eight and got the victory with strong relief from Rob Murphy, who took over with none out in the seventh.

The Yankees took a 2-0 lead in the top of the first on Steve Sax's leadoff homer, his third, and Jesse Barfield's bases-loaded sacrifice fly.

The Red Sox went ahead 4-2 in their half of the inning as the first five batters hit safely off Greg Cadaret, 1-1, making his first major-league start after 117 relief appearances.

Wade Boggs celebrated the signing of a new three-year contract with a leadoff double and took third on Jody Reed's single. Nick Esasky doubled both runners home and went to third on a single by Greenwell. Dwight Evans' single scored Esasky and Greenwell later scored on Rick Cerone's sacrifice fly.

The Yankees tied the score 4-4 on Roberto Kelly's leadoff homer in the second inning, his fifth, and Don Slaught's fourth homer with one out in the sixth.

Cadaret settled down after the first inning and held the Red Sox hitless until Greenwell led off the sixth with his 10th homer. Greenwell hit a drive off the left near the 378-foot mark in left-center and the ball caromed past center fielder Kelly.

Greenwell circled the bases and crashed into Slaught, who was unable to hang on to shortstop Alvaro Espinoza's

AL Roundup

The Tigers, who have dropped five straight games, led 4-1 entering the eighth behind solo home runs by Gary Ward and Rick Schu and the pitching of Paul Gibson, who allowed only three hits over that stretch.

Royals 4, White Sox 2: At Kansas City, Mo., Frank White's RBI double snapped a sixth-inning tie Friday night, leading the Kansas City over Chicago 4-2 and handing the White Sox their fourth straight loss.

Terry Leach, 2-2, yielded five hits in seven innings to win his first American League start. Jeff Montgomery pitched one inning and Steve Farr pitched the ninth for his 16th save.

dian Open two weeks ago. Players had to shoot 2-under 140 or better at the 6,786-yard Tournament Players Club of Connecticut to advance to Saturday's third round.

Among those who missed the cut by one stroke were 1984 GHO champion Peter Jacobson, the playoff loser last Monday in the Western Open, and Joey Sindelar, the playoff loser in last year's GHO.

Defending champion Mark Brooks shot a 66 for a total of 136, the course record and signalled his continuing improvement as he prepares for the British Open in two weeks.

After missing three consecutive cuts, including the U.S. Open, he tied for 18th at the Canadian

Open and tied for fifth last weekend at the Western Open.

"I was very disappointed when I went to Canada. Then everything kind of clicked over there," Trevino said. "I started hitting my irons well."

"I'm going to go into the British Open probably playing better than I've played in a long time," said Trevino, winner of 27 tournaments but none since the 1984 PGA Championship. "I'm looking forward to playing there. The way I'm playing, I'm looking forward to playing anywhere."

Trevino had a chance for an even better round Friday. He had seven birdies and nine pars in the first 16 holes, but bogeyed the 17th when he three-putted from 25 feet. Then he birdied the 18th with a 15-foot putt.

CROMWELL — Leading the Greater Hartford Open is nothing new to Kenny Knox. Staying on top would be — and he's confident he can.

Knox shot 4-under-par 67 Friday for a two-round total of 18-under-132 and held a one-stroke lead over Clark Burroughs, who is seeking his first PGA Tour victory.

Lee Trevino, five months shy of his 50th birthday and eligibility for the Senior Tour, had the best round of the tournament on a sultry day when temperatures soared into the 90s. His 64 put him in a tie for third at 134 with David Frost, who shot a 65, Jim Carter, Bill Britton and Robert Wrenn.

Knox had shared the first-day lead at 65 with Paul Azinger and Bob Gilder. But Azinger, the 1987 GHO champion, had a 70 Friday for a total of 135 and Gilder shot a 74 for 139.

Knox, who has two victories since turning pro in 1978, had a good chance to win the 1986 GHO. He was tied for first after three rounds, then soared to a 75 and ended up tied for 24th.

"I was just totally inexperienced," said Knox, an excellent putter who had four birdies and 14 pars Friday. "I was playing with Tom Watson and on every hole people said, 'let's go, Tom,' and that took me out of my concentration."

"If experience is a factor, I'm (three) years more experienced now."

His problem is that Burroughs, who shot a 67 Friday, also feels better able to handle the pressure of being in contention for the $10,000 top prize.

In his first full year on the Tour, Burroughs was tied for second after two rounds of the 1986 GHO. But he shot 74 the next day and finished in a tie for 19th.

"I was a rookie. I got up to that first tee on Saturday. I was so nervous," said Burroughs, who birdied the last four holes Friday. "I'll be nervous (Saturday) but I think I'll be able to handle it a little better."

Burroughs missed the cut in seven of his first nine tournaments this year, but survived in four of his last five and finished in a second-place tie at the Cana-
