Regulations needed on day care

The Planning and Zoning Commission is considering what provisions it should add to the town's zoning regulations for the operation of various kinds of day-care facilities.

Some provisions clearly are needed because when the zoning regulations were written day care as we know it today did not exist as a common use for property.

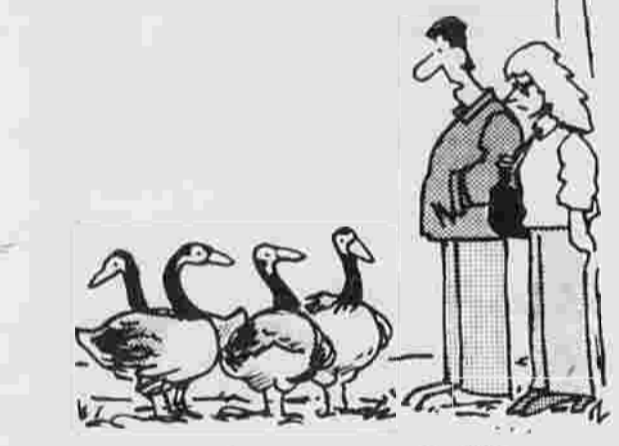

The zoning enforcement officer has had to interpret the regulations broadly in order to determine what provisions applied to day-care facilities, considering some of them akin to nursery schools and some to occupations carried on in homes.

With the growth of day care in contemporary society, it has become necessary to provide for the facilities specifically in the regulations.

State definitions classify day-care facilities for six or fewer children as family day-care homes and those with up to 12 children as group day-care homes. Under state law, both must be permitted in all residential zones and no conditions can be set on family day-care homes if the residence involved meets local code requirements for dwellings.

The town planning staff has recommended that both the smaller types of facilities be allowed in all residential zones and a number of other zones. At a public hearing on the provisions Monday, one citizen raised an objection to lumping them together and not considering separate provisions for the group day-care homes. The objection said most communities require special permits for group day-care homes in residential areas.

The point is well worth considering. A facility for as many as 12 children does not seem to be comparable to most of the ordinary home occupations.

"They don't migrate anymore, because people feed them and, of course, the air traffic is horrendous!"

Mayor takes credit

To the Editor:
Peter DiRosa is taking credit for bringing the Buckland mall to Manchester. It was Betty Sadloski and the Manchester Taxpayer Association who forced the $16.5 million bond issue to the ballot.

The voters in Manchester voted not to subsidize the mall. DiRosa, going against a campaign promise, changed the figure to $9.5 million. This project would have been built without any subsidy at all. The I-84 corridor was one of the hottest pieces of real estate in the country. DiRosa not only gave away $9.5 million in future dollars, he wanted to give away $16 million. Now he wants a gold star and your vote for a job well done. I thank Betty for saving us $6 million.

The North Elm housing project was supposed to pay for itself. We got the land for nothing, town employees did some of the site work, and still the project came in with rents higher than the private sector. We are subsidizing the project for $90,000 a year.

DiRosa says the project will pay for itself after 20 years. This will only happen if we raise the rent up to $1,100 a month for that period of time. Tell me the politician who will raise these rents. Will DiRosa promise to raise rents for the elderly every year? For this he wants your vote.

DiRosa claims he has taken care of the parks. The money for the Center Springs Lodge came from a state grant which was earmarked for Capital Improvement. This money could have been better spent fixing sidewalks and making repairs to our infrastructure. He wants credit and your vote for getting money from a state grant.

The blown real and the fines for the sewer treatment plant were things that should have been noticed. There was mention of the road being built in wetlands when the houses on Love Lane were being built over a year before the problem came to a head.

The sidewalks on Homestead Street were pushed up on the priority list because of political ties.

Peter DiRosa owns a business on Main Street and still voted for it to be repaired. This project should have gone to referendum. In my opinion, he showed bad judgment in not abstaining from this vote. He had a clear majority and could have given the appearance of good government. This administration has shown a lack of leadership, a lack of ethics, and a lack of control.

We are facing a new reval; it will show that the biggest growth in our tax base is coming from homes that were built in the 50s and 60s. These are the small ranches and capes that are owned by elderly, retired, and people starting off with new families. The tax burden will fall on their shoulders.

DiRosa and Co. have seen this coming for two years. They have made every effort to put their spending program through before the taxpayers realize who is paying the bills. It's great to say you brought the mall to town, but if you give away the tax income from it, you're behind in the game.

DiRosa's claim of bringing $43 million in new taxes over the next 10 years is only true if all these projects go through. These figures are as bogus as his promise to go along with the vote of the people on the Buckland Mall issue or him saying that the North Elm housing project will pay for itself.

The rush to put a new town hall complex to a vote on the referendum is the most unplanned, irresponsible act. The project went from costing $16 million to $13.9 million in one meeting. The cost of purchasing property is hidden because the money is coming out of the same slush fund as the Main Street project.

O'Neill decision looms

By Bob Conrad

Gov. Bill O'Neill can thank the doom-sayers about his chances of re-election for one thing—they have made his political plans for 1990 the centerpiece of speculation wherever you go these days.

Will he run for a third full term or will he say, possibly early next year, that he won't? Ah, that is the question.

It was the dominant subject of conversation as Democrats prepared to fall on their petite filet mignon at a recent statewide kick-off dinner in Hartford and they were still talking about it at some tables when they reached the chocolate roulette.

What do you think, is he going or isn't he? Almost in the next breath was the question of whether he can win if he runs. It was posing these Democrats, mostly party regulars, $300 apiece to engage in this collective exercise in anxious curiosity.

Adding a special bouquet to the buzz about O'Neill at the Hartford Hilton dinner was the presence of U.S. Rep. Barbara Kennedy of that city and U.S. Rep. Bruce Morrison of Hamden, who is trying to shove the governor out the door so he — Morrison — can be nominated.

Significantly, Mrs. Kennedy was busy working the tables that night. It was also noteworthy that when Morrison was introduced from the head table he got the thunderous applause of Ted Baldwin, his manager, and little else. O'Neill had not returned from Europe, so missed it all.

Ironically, the more O'Neill says he INTENDS to run, the louder becomes the murmur that he will not. Amazingly, the woods are suddenly full of doubters about his running—most of them Democrats.

Agency wrong on issue

By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta

WASHINGTON — Five small supermarket chains in the United States and Canada have pledged to phase out all produce treated with cancer-causing pesticides. For their trouble they have been lambasted by the very agency that is supposed to take the consumer's side—the Environmental Protection Agency.

Despite the EPA's sleepy record of pesticide regulation, it can't seem to stomach the idea of someone else doing the job. EPA Assistant Administrator Linda Fisher condemned the supermarket chains, saying that decisions about pesticides should be taken out of the marketplace and put back in the government where they belong.

But if marketplace waited for the government to act, it would wait a long time. The EPA has spent the last two years studying one of the pesticides that the supermarket are worried about, although it had information 10 years ago that the pesticide could cause cancer.

The supermarket chains, like the public, simply got tired of waiting. "We've gotten to the point where the industry, the media and everyone else is making decisions on pesticides while the EPA is sitting around sucking its thumb," one independent research scientist who specializes in pesticides told our reporter Greg Moore.

The chains are ABCO Supermarkets in Arizona, Raley's in California and Nevada, Perini in California, Provigo Distribution Inc. in Canada and Safeway and Circus in Boston. Their gradual phase-out of produce treated with cancer-causing pesticides will be a small ripple for consumers, but the announcement made a big splash in the grocery industry.

The Food Marketing Institute, the supermarket industry group in Washington, D.C., sent a menacing letter to its members warning them not to participate in phase-outs. The institute called the tactic "economic terrorism."

On the list of pesticides the stores want to phase out are ethylenebisdithiocarbamates or EDBCs. They are used on one-third of all fruits and vegetables grown in the United States. The EPA suspects something might be wrong with EDBCs, but the agency is taking its own sweet time figuring that out.

Evidence that EDBCs do cancer was available as early as 1974. The EPA circulated a memo in 1979 reporting that tests of EDBCs on mice resulted in liver tumors.

In 1982, the EPA had closed meetings with the pesticide industry and decided to impose minimal restrictions on EDBCs. The Natural Resources Defense Council, a private environmental group, sued the EPA over the decision to lock environmentalists out of those meetings, and the EPA said it wouldn't do that any more.

But it wasn't until 1987 that the EPA agreed to reconsider the rules on EDBCs. It has been promising a decision since May.

While the EPA has been sucking its thumb, another study has turned up damning evidence about EDBCs. The National Toxicology Program in North Carolina released data in July showing that more than 90 percent of the rats who were fed EDBCs in an experiment developed tumors. The results are preliminary and are still being reviewed.

EBDC pesticides are made by four companies. They're waiting on the EPA too, and doing damage control in the meantime. The companies say they will reduce the number of crops treated with EDBCs from 73 to 13, but that is only window dressing. EDBCs are still used on major crops including wheat, tomatoes, potatoes, onions, grapes and sweet corn.

The makers of EDBCs have long maintained that most of the pesticide is removed by rain and washing before the fruit and vegetables pass anyone's lips. EPA officials told us they didn't know until last March that the residue reduction from washing could be significant, so now they're studying that too. Farmers have known about the washing theory for a long time. As usual, the EPA was the last to hear about it and may be the last to take a stand.

Commuter airline subsidies on verge of elimination

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal subsidies that keep commuter airlines flying into 21 small towns from Temple, Texas, to Benton Harbor, Mich., are on the verge of elimination, a casualty of budgetary warfare.

"I've lost the subsidy... Mansfield loses air service," said Ralph Baker, vice president of GCS Air Services, which has shuttled passengers from Mansfield, Ohio, to Cleveland since February 1988. The company has lost money on the route despite the federal assistance, Baker said.

"This is going to be a drastic blow to us," said John Chaddock, manager of Twin Cities Airport, which serves Benton Harbor and St. Joseph, Mich.

A House-Senate conference committee voted this week to spend $30.7 million for the Essential Air Service program, which subsidizes air carriers that serve small communities.

The Senate had sought the $35.5 million needed to preserve funding for all 110 communities now being helped. The House called for only $12.4 million, while the Bush administration proposed phasing out the program, starting with a $5.5 million cut.

The $30.7 million figure is close to last year's $31.6 million total. But the lawmakers adopted new criteria that will squeeze out 21 towns that currently qualify.

Under the agreement, towns would not be eligible if the average subsidy exceeds $200 per passenger. Current rules deny aid to communities with average subsidies exceeding $300 per passenger.

Communities also would not qualify if they are closer than 70 miles to the nearest large or medium hub airport, within 55 miles of a small hub or 45 miles of a "quality-non-hub," which averages at least 100 passenger boardings a day. The restrictions do not apply to Alaska or Hawaii.

The program is included in the $11.9 billion transportation spending bill for fiscal 1990, which began Oct. 1. The compromise bill must be approved by the House and Senate and signed by President Bush.

Congressional attitudes about the program perennially split along geographic lines, pitting lawmakers from urban areas against those from sparsely populated and large states. Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., is a vocal supporter of the program.

Philip Trenary, whose small airline provides subsidized service to Temple, Texas, said he will not abandon the central Texas town and will try to keep providing service to Dallas-Forth Worth International Airport until the route turns a profit.

"I'm going to let the community know we're not bailing out, we're going to find a way to stay there," said Trenary.

Backers say the program helps small communities attract and maintain industry through their link with larger airports. Opponents say the deficit-strapped federal treasury cannot afford the subsidies, which sometimes reach $400 per passenger.

A loss of federal funds does not necessarily mean the end of commuter service to affected airlines. But unless state or local governments or other sources take up the slack, the future of air service to the 21 towns will depend on whether the airlines find it worthwhile to continue.

Two flag amendment sponsors drop out

WASHINGTON (AP) — A constitutional amendment to ban flag-burning is moving toward a vote in the Senate minus two original sponsors, who balked at saying they do not want to tamper with the Bill of Rights.

"It was a mistake of the heart but nonetheless it was a mistake," Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., told the Senate on Tuesday he would withdraw as a sponsor of the proposed constitutional amendment.

Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., another cosponsor, also took to the Senate floor to abandon his support.

And Democratic critics said for the first time the measure was likely to be defeated in a floor vote set for Thursday morning.

"I hope and expect that there will not be sufficient votes to bring the amendment to prevail," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, told reporters.

The measure would authorize the federal and state governments to ban burning the American flag.

The House approved and sent to President Bush on Thursday a bill that would ban burning and other desecration of the American flag by simple statute. He said he would allow it to become law without his signature while continuing to press for a constitutional amendment.

Supporters of a constitutional amendment say any statute is likely to be overturned in court on grounds that it violates free speech guaranteed under the Bill of Rights.

The campaign for a constitutional amendment began in June after the Supreme Court threw out the conviction of Texas flag-burner Gregory Lee Johnson on grounds that his right to free speech had been violated.

A backer of the amendment said, "content neutral" law that outlaws flag-burning regardless of whether it involves political protest is better than tampering with constitutional freedoms.

"This freedom has never been deemed absolute," Hatch said. "Obscenity has never been protected under the First Amendment." He said other restrictions also exist, such as libel laws.

Hatch said the measure "does not prevent a single idea or thought from being expressed... it merely prevents conduct with respect to one object and one object only and that's our flag. We can withdraw that object from desecration without limiting freedom of speech."

"I believe it is futile to try to overturn this particular Supreme Court interpretation of the Constitution by statute," Hatch said.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said, however, that the measure would put new powers in the hands of government and "it contains no limits, no checks on the exercise of that power."

"We are the decision-makers," he said. "We will be responsible if the Constitution will be amended, and if it is amended it will be the first time in the history of our country that we have altered the Bill of Rights."

A backer of the amendment, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, scoffed at the notion that the Senate would be unduly tampering with freedom of speech if it passed the measure.

"This freedom has never been deemed absolute," Hatch said. "Obscenity has never been protected

Kid's sex poll brings complaints

ALTOONA, Pa. (AP) — The president of the city's school board said he erred in allowing university researchers ask sixth graders personal questions about their sexual development and emotional well-being.

Richard L. Lockard, president of the Altoona Area School Board, apologized publicly for the survey, conducted by Penn State's College of Health and Human Development to identify adolescent concerns that may contribute to depression among youth.

After a board meeting Monday, Lockard said he found the survey "disturbing" and asked that board members receive copies of any future surveys.

Among the questions asked were, "Have your breasts begun to grow?" and "Do you think the timing of your physical sexual development was any earlier or later than most boys (girls) your age?"

Elizabeth Koelle, the mother of a child enrolled in an Altoona school, said she asked for the apology because many children were disturbed and offended by the survey.

The defendant said he went to Paul's home in an attempt to buy Valium from him, according to the affidavit.

After the hearing, Narus said he did not want to speculate as to why Giacomo would have brought a knife to Paul's apartment if he was going there to purchase drugs.

In presenting his case, Narus called upon several witnesses, including police officers who investigated the crime, neighbors of Giacomo, Giacomo's brother and a Manchester man who found the knife allegedly used as the murder weapon.

A knife, fitting the description of one police noticed as the only one missing from a set they found in Giacomo's kitchen, was found by Everett Cone, the building superintendent of a homeless shelter on Main Street.

Cone, who said he discovered the knife in a small, grassy area next to the shelter on Sept. 5 or 6, brought it to Manchester police Sept. 8 after reading in a newspaper that police were searching for the weapon.

Photographs of the knife and the incomplete set found in Giacomo's apartment were submitted by Narus as evidence.

Anthony Giacomo, John Giacomo's younger brother, said he was told by his brother on the day of the murder that he hid the knife with his bloody meekers somewhere on Main Street.

Since his brother John's arrest, Anthony Giacomo, of 52 Mount Vernon Drive, Vernon, has been charged with hindering prosecution of the accused because he drove his brother from Manchester to Vernon, which is out of the jurisdiction of the investigating agency. He also was charged with not telling police the name or location of the victim and with attempting to lodge a suspect in his home.

The winged spaceship, grounded Tuesday by rain, was scheduled to lift off with its crew of five astronauts at 12:50 p.m. The launch period, dictated by the alignment of Earth and Jupiter, closes at 1:21 p.m.

Weather forecasters said early today there was a 60 percent chance conditions would be favorable at launch time, but that a cold front advancing on Florida could bring rain showers and thunderstorms. Weather was expected to worsen Thursday, before brightening this weekend.

John Giacomo's next pre-trial hearing is scheduled for Nov. 17 in Hartford Superior Court.

Rain delays launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Thunderstorms posed a threat today as space shuttle Atlantis was once again readied for an afternoon launch with the nuclear-powered Galileo probe bound for Jupiter.

The winged spaceship, grounded Tuesday by rain, was scheduled to lift off with its crew of five astronauts at 12:50 p.m. The launch period, dictated by the alignment of Earth and Jupiter, closes at 1:21 p.m.

Weather forecasters said early today there was a 60 percent chance conditions would be favorable at launch time, but that a cold front advancing on Florida could bring rain showers and thunderstorms. Weather was expected to worsen Thursday, before brightening this weekend.

branches, their markets, and their financial performance, she said.

"The 21 were not the very best fit for our retail distribution strategy," Soyester said.

However, she said the offices should be attractive to other banks.

When the restructuring is complete in about nine months, CBT, a Hartford-based subsidiary of Bank of New England Corp., will lay off about 100 workers. CBT employs 6,800 statewide.

In total, 53 Bank of New England branches will be closed and 800 bank employees will be laid off.

Bank of New England Corp. reported a 41 percent drop in earnings for the third quarter while undergoing corporate restructuring, as compared with the same quarter last year.

Bank of New England, which concentrates heavily in real estate marketing, had earnings of $42.7 million, or 61 cents a share, for the third quarter ended Sept. 30, compared with third quarter earnings last year of $72.3 million, or $1.04 per share.

The bank, the second largest in the region, also said it was closing loan production offices in Chicago, New York and Philadelphia.

Bank of New England said its net interest income totaled $254.7 million, down 10 percent from last year's third quarter. Non-interest income totaled $114.4 million, compared with $95.2 million in last year's third quarter.

IRA withdrawals allowed under some circumstances

NEW YORK (AP) — "Middle-Aged Person Makes Early Withdrawals From IRA and Pays No Penalty"
Maybe that will never make it as a headline at the supermarket checkout stand. But it is a feat that can be accomplished in real life, quite possible to your financial benefit, without breaking the law.

When it comes time to make next year's withdrawal, she will recalculate how much she is entitled to, based on the remaining balance in her IRA and the latest life-expectancy tables.
Chances are the balance will be a bit more than $250,000 then, since she withdrew only about 3 percent of her money this year and can easily earn a higher interest rate on the remaining amount in the account.

Russian Elvis fan arrives

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The first person granted a visa from the Soviet Union just to visit Elvis Presley's Graceland arrived in the United States. Wearing blue suede shoes.

"I am an ambassador of Russian rock 'n' roll," Kolya Vasin told about 100 well-wishers when he arrived at Memphis International Airport on Sunday night. "For 30 years I love rock 'n' roll. I am happy to be here today."

It was the first trip outside the Soviet Union for Vasin, 44, whose visit was arranged by a British fan club. Traveling with 79 Elvis fans, mostly from Britain, he planned to visit Graceland, home of the late King of rock 'n' roll, today.

The Leningrad resident, who organizes rock concerts, said official disapproval has left Soviet Elvis fans pretty much on Lonely Street.
"Many many people want more information about Elvis, but in Russia is very little information about Elvis," he said in accented English during a stopover in Boston. "This is great problem. There is a problem with black market and underground information between people: no LPs, no books, no posters or any information."

At a stop in London, Vasin added to his collection of Elvis memorabilia.
"This is my dream on my feet," he said of his brightly colored football. "All my life I hear 'Blue Suede Shoes' and I dream about them."

The long-haired, bearded fan explained his infatuation with the man who might be known in Moscow as The czar: "I listen to 'Jailhouse Rock' for the first time in 1958. After this shocking moment, I love Elvis forever."

The visit, which some have called "Presleynost," is being sponsored by Elvis' Yours, a London Elvis fan club. According to club president Sid Shaw, fans raised the $3,500 for Vasin's trip.

Every year, Elvis' Yours pays for several handicapped children to accompany the group to Graceland. Shaw, who has been to Graceland 36 times, said he decided last year to find a Russian fan to sponsor.

The Soviet Embassy in London refused to help, but he finally found an expert on Soviet rock 'n' roll at the BBC who told him that Vasin was the biggest Elvis fan in the country.

Garbage cop says it's the litter things that count

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Tom Foley was driving when a landscaper's truck in the city's North End when he saw a coffee cup dropped from the truck to the street.
"I followed him until he pulled over," says Foley. "He says, 'The cup fell out of my hand.' So I say I'm going to put something on your littering."

Foley can do that. He is the city's lone full-time enforcer of litter and dumping laws. He won't often go after a lone coffee cup. There are much bigger, fouler violations to pursue. There are overflowing dumpsters, food spilling onto streets from plastic bags, junk cars and old appliances filling vacant lots. There are people who work under cover of darkness, sometimes dodging the heavy landfill dumping fees by dumping for absolutely nothing in a vacant lot.

But when a violation, no matter how small, happens right in front of him it's difficult to let the violator slide.
"Once you commit yourself to either approach, you must keep using it faithfully until you reach age 59 1/2 or more and have been taking the distributions for at least five years."

Fail to meet this requirement, and you are subject to a so-called "recapture" tax that amounts to a reimposition of all the penalties you thought you had avoided.

When the occasion demands, Foley dons rubber gloves and sifts through trash and garbage to find something with a name and address on it to lead him to violators.
"Once I found an address on some envelopes, went to the house and the woman paid the ticket."
While patrolling the city last week, Foley checked a spot on Linwood Avenue in the West End, where trash had been blocking the street and the owner was told to clean it up or face a fine. The owner cleaned it up promptly.

"On things like that, you can't let them call your bluff. That's a complete disregard for other people's lives."
A few blocks away, he finds a pile of wood left by the curb, untouched by city trash trucks because it is not cut to size or properly bound. He tells the woman living there to remove the wood. He issues only a warning and leaves copies of the city's rubbish-collection regulations. The warning instead of a fine for a first offense is standard.

The regulations specify:
"Trash must be put out after dark on the night before pickup.
Trash must be put out in covered containers.
Trash bags are not acceptable substitutes for containers.
Wood, branches and brush must be cut to lengths no longer than 5 feet and tied in neat piles.

Leaves must be placed in bags or containers and broken glass or sharp objects must be placed in plastic or metal containers.
Large appliances must be placed on the curb.

Toxic materials will not be picked up.
Foley and the other deputies can fine as little as $15 for littering or as much as $300 for the illegal dumping of large objects. Fines double after 14 days, double again after 28 days. Violators can contest tickets in municipal court.

On Waldo Street, near Linwood, he finds a pile of tires, an old television set and other trash blocking the sidewalk. It is property he has cited before.

"He'll probably say someone else dumped it," says Foley.
On Anthony Street nearby, he finds an overflowing dumpster. He has seen it before.

"I've cited this gentleman four times and he's paid fines four times.
"Part of the problem with the dumpster is that some of the stuff is not his. But he's responsible for it."
The fine is $50 for each violation.

Widow says troops upset by Noriega

MIAMI (AP) — Panamanian soldiers tried to overthrow Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega because of his constant drinking and corruption, which left troops so poor they had to mend their own boots, the wife of the slain coup leader says.

Adela Bonilla de Giraldo, who was the first person to make contact between the conspirators and U.S. officials, described the mood among the rebels before the Oct. 3 revolt led by her husband, Maj. Moses Giraldo.

"My husband was once stationed in Nicaragua, and he always said to me, 'I can't continue this way — we are on the same road as Nicaragua under Somoza. The officers are corrupt and we will end up the same as Somoza.'"
The 36-year-old Mrs. Giraldo said of the late Anastasio Somoza.

She fled Miami with her three children, her brother and her parents after the failed coup.
Giraldo was named to the top security post at Noriega's central headquarters after he helped put down a coup in March 1988. But while Noriega grew wealthy, Giraldo and other loyal military officers saw their countrymen and their troops' situation deteriorate, his wife said in an interview last week.

"The people were hungry," she said. "There were units where they don't even have enough money to take a bus home. If their boots have holes, they must repair them themselves."
In addition, she said, Noriega drank to excess and behaved erratically.

"General Noriega spends all day drinking, 24 hours a day drinking, so he can make decisions," she said. She said he fires ministers and banishes officers based on what his inner circle tells him while he is drunk.

On Sept. 29, Giraldo told his wife he planned to lead fellow officers in a coup, arrest Noriega and turn him over to the U.S. military. They never planned to kill him, she said.

Then on Oct. 1, she said, he asked her to get in touch with U.S. officials because it was too risky for him and the other officers.
A friend who worked with the U.S. military arranged a meeting between Mrs. Giraldo and a U.S. colonel.

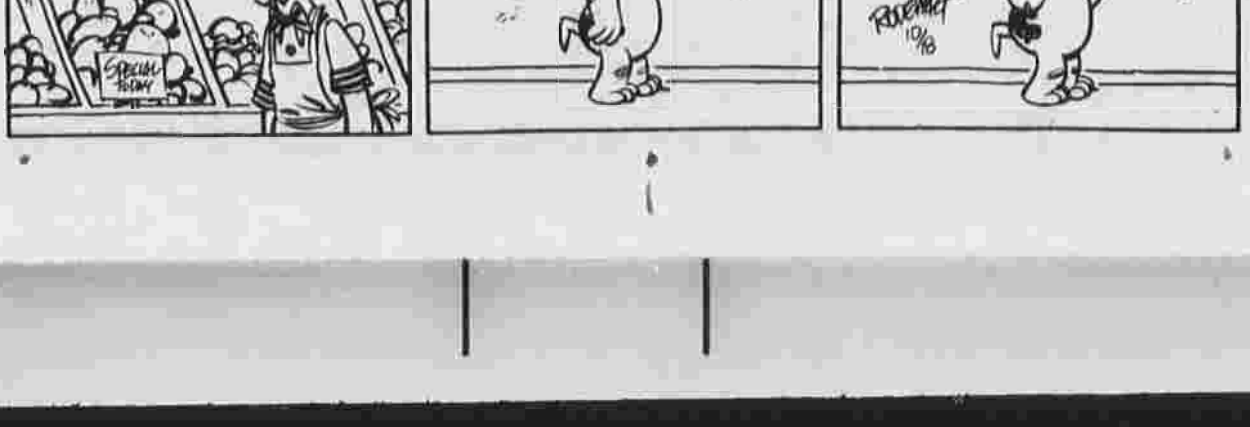

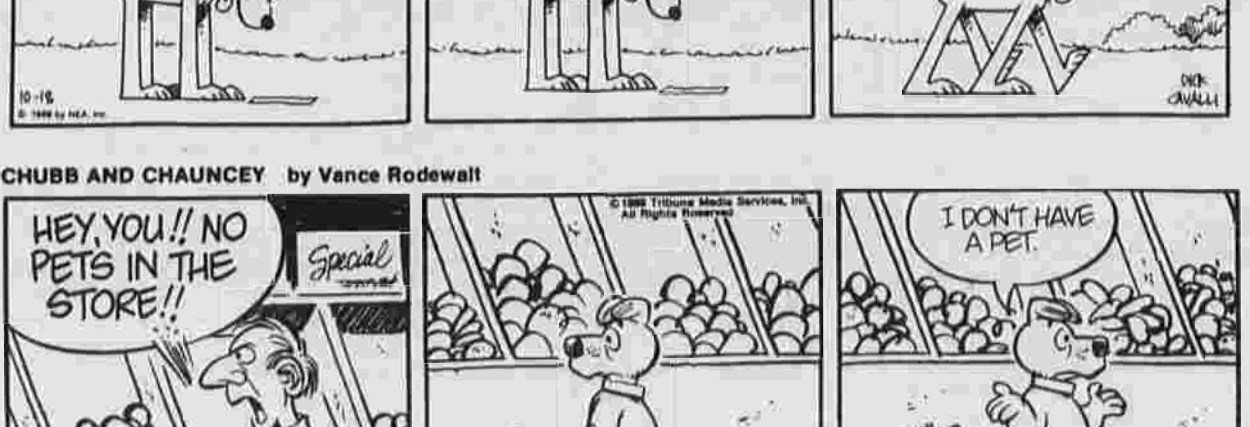

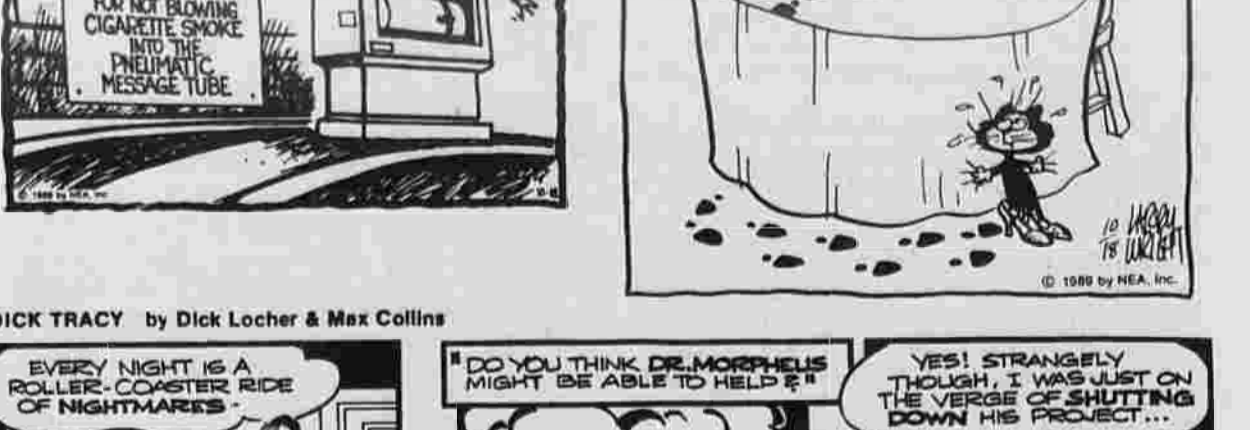

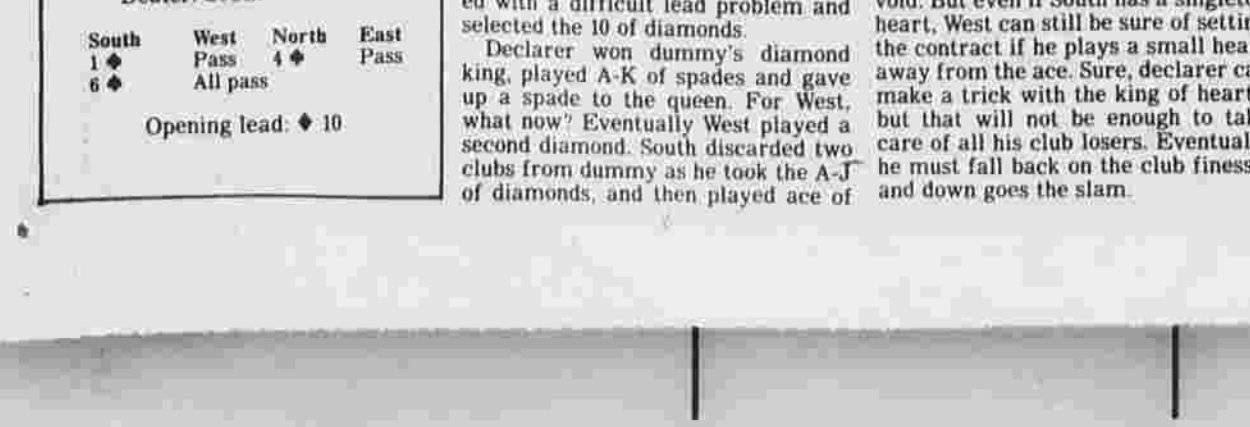

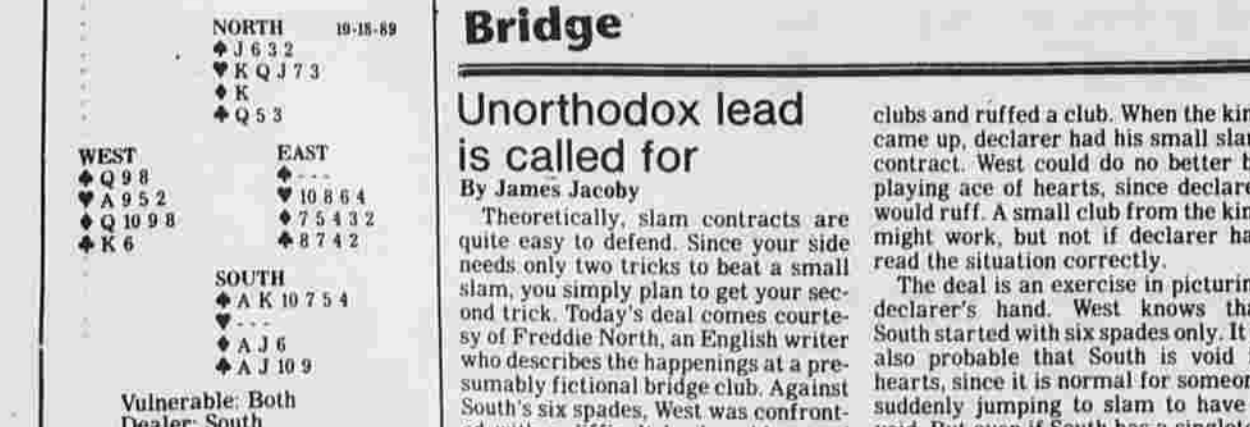

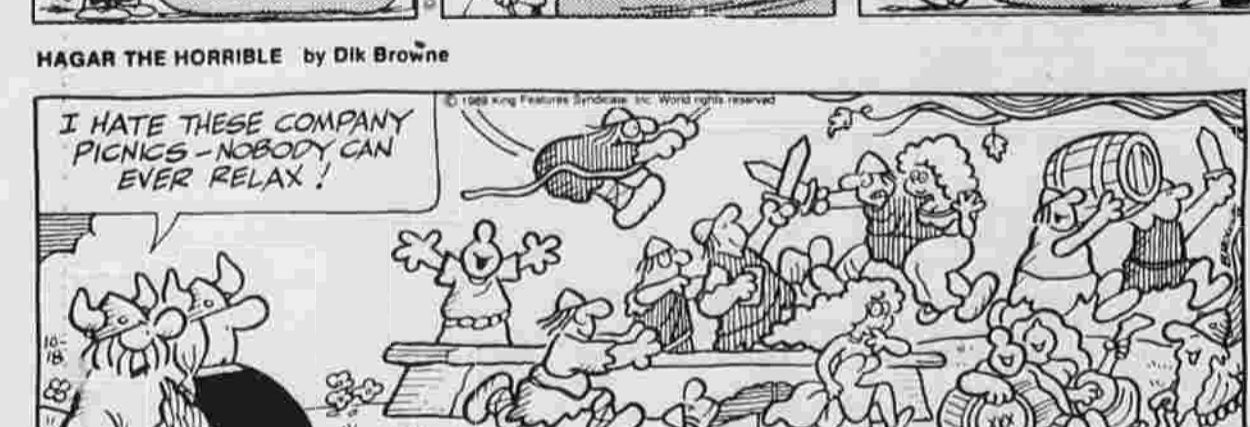

She told the colonel the rebels needed the United States to send flights over Panamanian air bases to keep Noriega loyalists on the ground. They also wanted U.S. roadblocks around Noriega's downtown headquarters.

The colonel called in two Americans in street clothes who later met with her husband. Giraldo said he was elated with the U.S. response.
On Oct. 2, her husband reported to headquarters. She visited him in the barracks that night. She would never see him again.

The next morning she took her family to Fort Clayton, a U.S. base outside Panama City. But because the coup plans were secret, the officer on duty wouldn't let her in at first, she said.
