Feb. 20, 1990
Lots of exciting things will be brewing in your year ahead, but much of what will be occurring will be going on behind the scenes. Fortunately, these aspects will be trending in your favor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Valuable knowledge can be acquired today by being a good listener and a keen observer. What you learn you will later be able to use to achieve unique advantages.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Joint ventures look exceptionally promising for you today, especially if you are tied in with an individual who is imaginative and resourceful.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You have what it takes to succeed today, but unless someone gets behind you, you give you a big shove, you might not use your talents to your best advantage.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your possibilities for material gains look extremely encouraging today. Your rewards will be proportionate to the efforts you expend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You're likely to be much luckier in partnership arrangements today than you will be in situations where you go it alone.

"He was the way you'd want all kids to be," his father said Monday. "He was the kind of boy who had a list of his goals taped to the mirror in his room so he could study them every day."

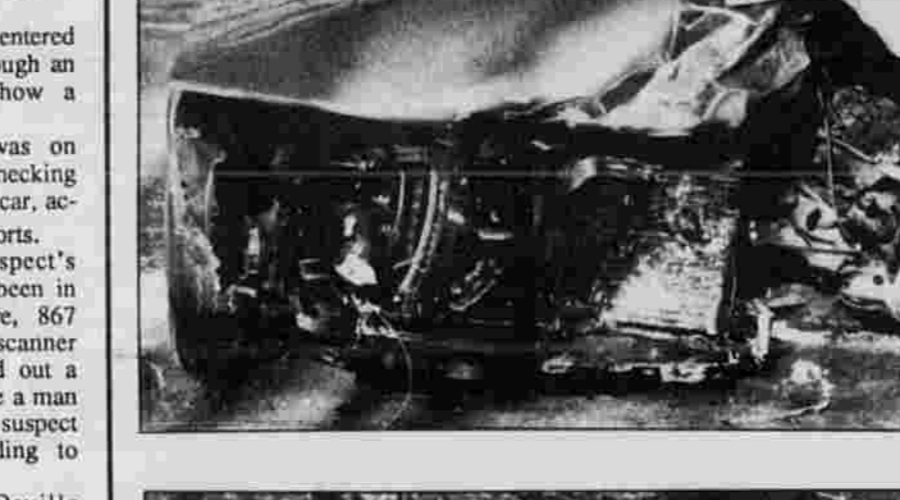

Man eludes police in 4th heist at SBM

By Dianna Talbot and Andrew J. Davis Manchester Herald
A man robbed the Savings Bank of Manchester drive-through office on Purnell Place this morning of an undetermined amount of cash in the fourth heist to hit the bank's Manchester branches in a little more than a year, police said.

The suspect allegedly was on foot, but police were also checking out reports of a suspect in a car, according to police scanner reports.

According to Sgt. Orville Cleveland, who was investigating at the scene of the robbery, two people were in the office at the time of the robbery. The office handles drive-through and walk-in transactions and is located behind the bank's main office at 923 Main St.

Police Roundup

Driver faces five charges

A Manchester man, arrested early this morning on a charge of driving while intoxicated, is facing four additional charges stemming from the incident, police reported.

The other charges brought against Jeffrey M. Long, also known as William Long, of 26 Benton St., are threatening, possession of a weapon in a motor vehicle, interfering with a police officer, and operating without a license, police said.

Long was arrested at 12:48 a.m. after he failed a field sobriety test he was given after being pulled over for weaving near Spruce and Eldridge streets...

After Long was arrested, a search of the vehicle yielded rifle ammunition between the front seats, police reported. Because the ammunition was found, police searched the trunk and found a knife at least 8 inches long, police reported.

Police reported that Long was charged with threatening and interfering with a police officer after he told the arresting officer that he would kill him, and he was uncooperative during the booking process...

Long is being held on $5,000 bond. No court date has been set. The state police barracks in Colchester.

BB gun incident prompts arrest

A 22-year-old Manchester man was charged with second-degree reckless endangerment and third-degree criminal mischief in connection with a BB gun shooting incident earlier this month, police reported.

Walter T. Kelly, of 48 Biwell St., was charged Monday in connection with the incident, which happened Feb. 9, police reported.

At that time, Kelly and a friend were confronted by police who suspected them of shooting a vehicle parked at Birch Street residence. Police report that Kelly and the friend allegedly were attempting to shoot at targets in Kelly's yard.

Kelly was held on a $250 non-surety bond and is scheduled to appear Monday in Manchester Superior Court.

80 years ago, 8th tangled with railroad over right of way

The railroad was asked to send representatives. Another document, dated Sept. 4, 1912, signed by Sweet at a meeting that notified the railroad officials of the amount decided upon by the district.

It was $25. But the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad Company did not think it was enough money, apparently.

A third document is a summons to the district to appear in court in December 1912. There is no document on hand telling what happened in court, but the younger Sweet is sure the sewer line was built. He thinks it killed two district septic tanks...

In just about the same language used in legal documents today, the paper tells that at the July 23rd meeting the railroad representatives protested against the district taking the property. It also tells that the case is a bill from the railroad to the district for a much larger amount of money...

The documents were found by Fred A. Sweet among his father's papers. The elder Fred Sweet was a dentist who was also a clerk of the district when it was formed in 1912, where the right-of-way dispute comes in.

The items Lasow has are the original documents relating to a dispute between the district, then called The Manchester Sanitary and Sewer District, and a railroad, then called New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad.

Railroad bill filed State Sen. Michael P. Meotti, D-Glastonbury, co-chairman of the General Assembly's Transportation Committee, has announced he will be introducing legislation to greatly improve railroad crossing safety in Connecticut.

'Safe' campuses seen adding to attraction of magnet schools

HARTFORD (AP) — A state university and a private college are being studied as possible sites for schools that would aid in the process of voluntary desegregation, state officials said.

Central Connecticut State University in New Britain and Trinity College in Hartford are being considered as possible sites for schools that would attract black and Hispanic children from cities and white children from the suburbs.

Bill requires doctors to report to state on addicted moms-to-be HARTFORD (AP) — Two state legislators, seeking to curb mothers of drug-addicted children, have proposed legislation that would require doctors to report suspected drug use by pregnant women.

The proposed bill, submitted by state Rep. Anne E. Dandrow, R-Southington, and state Rep. Norma Gyle, R-New Fairfield, would also apply to other health-care professionals. The cases would be referred to the state Department of Health Services.

"We really care, and we care about the mothers as much as the babies," Gyle said.

The bill, which will be brought before the Legislature's Public Health Committee on Thursday, would also prevent the evidence gathered by medical staff — such as drug test results — from being used to prosecute the mother on criminal charges.

Health-care officials in Connecticut have said criminal prosecution might drive some drug-abusing women, many of whom are impregnated, away from much needed prenatal care.

The bill's sponsors say they are chiefly concerned about the most addictive of drugs, crack, a highly potent form of cocaine.

The women "have serious problems at this time and their main priority is their addiction. Once their addiction is treated and under control, then their other priorities will trigger in," said Dandrow, who along with Gyle, is a member of the legislative committee.

The legislation would require:

•The health department to get in touch with a facility for treatment for the mother.

•The state Department of Children and Youth Services to determine if the child should be placed in temporary state custody while the mother seeks help, and if the child should be monitored for as long as a year.

•The establishment of a task force — comprised of representatives of various state agencies — that would meet every 60 days to share information about treatment programs.

NU ratepayers may be left holding the bag for botched repair job

HADDAM (AP) — State utility regulators will decide who will pay for the nearly $30 million in repair costs at the Connecticut Yankee nuclear power plant, generated by problems with floating metal chips and a protective shield.

For 17 months the tiny metal chips were flung around the water surrounding the uranium fuel at the plant, eroding fuel rods and causing an estimated $5 million in damages.

The chips apparently came from drilling done during repairs. The shield and the millions of dollars NU will spend to buy replacement power while the plant is shut down for repairs.

NU said the problems have only economic significance and affected the safety of the plant to only a small degree.

However, Robert Pollard, a nuclear safety engineer with the Union of Concerned Scientists, takes issue with NU's assertion.

"To claim this has no safety significance is equivalent to saying because a drunk driver got home without an accident, there is no safety significance to being drunk," Pollard said.

Long search ends with siblings united

MILFORD (AP) — It was a quirk of fate, a highly unlikely coincidence, perhaps even something of a miracle that led to 24-year-old Dana Drury finally locating her brother from whom she had been separated when she was less than a year old.

The search for the tinker after so many decades was an interesting and efficient matter in the city clerk's office with a good memory.

For more than 15 years Drury had been trying to find her older brother, whom she knew as Tip. They last saw each other as children before they were sent to different families when their biological parents gave them up for adoption in Tennessee.

The brother and sister finally made contact with help from clerk Kandy Smith and a big stroke of luck.

Some educators say college campuses in or near cities represent neutral territory where most parents would feel comfortable sending their children.

State Education Commissioner Gerald N. Tirozzi says he supports the idea, even as civil rights groups have begun a court battle aimed at desegregating schools.

"Wouldn't it be wonderful if on every college campus in this state you had a public school?" Tirozzi said.

Tirozzi last year issued a report on racial integration that called for the creation of specialized magnet schools which would be aimed at attracting students from the cities and suburbs.

The report was also issued as a civil rights group filed a lawsuit last April. Those who filed the lawsuit argued that segregated schools in Hartford violated the state Constitution and that they doubted that voluntary measures can achieve reasonable levels of integration.

Minority groups make up 91 percent of the student enrollment in Hartford public schools.

At Central, officials have proposed a school that would enroll children from preschool age through third grade.

The school at Central could be built on land adjacent to the campus and could attract students from New Britain, Newington, Farmington, Plainville and Berlin.

"We want to create a school of such high academic quality that its program would be attractive to students from those communities," said John W. Shumaker, Central's president.

Schumaker has proposed a school with day-care and child-care programs and possibly expanding to include upper grades and high schools.

Support cools for O'Neill housing plan

HARTFORD (AP) — White Gov. William A. O'Neill's proposal to merge Connecticut housing programs initially won praise, some legislators and housing advocates are now urging caution.

O'Neill two weeks ago proposed merging the state Department of Housing and the Connecticut Housing Finance Authority into one quasi-public agency.

The O'Neill administration has yet to release details of the plan, but is expected to submit a bill to the General Assembly concerning the merger this week.

But State Rep. Shaun McNally, D-Norwich, says that abolishing the Department of Housing and the Finance Authority would require about 250 pages of changes in state laws.

"This is a great deal of concern. We need this bill immediately. It's too big a bill to rush through while the mother seeks help, and if the child should be monitored for as long as a year."

McMahon said, "The department is proposed to take effect in April. The merger is proposed to take effect in April. The merger is proposed to take effect in April."

Family, victim of walkaway stabber, now pushes for high security facility

WALLINGFORD (AP) — The family of 9-year-old Jessica Short, the girl brutally stabbed by a Connecticut Valley Hospital patient last July, is pushing for a high-security facility for patients with violent histories.

"We feel it could happen again with the way the present system is," Cathy Short, Jessica's mother said. "And we just can't bear to think this could happen to someone ever again."

The Short family asked friends and supporters to back a high security facility at legislative hearings scheduled for today in Hartford.

The hearing is expected to attract a large crowd of people, including a friend of Jessica's who was with her when she was stabbed at a street fair in Middletown, Cathy Short said.

Just because of what has happened to me is enough to warrant the new facility," Cathy Short said.

Getting the new facility off the ground will require a great show of support at the hearings today, said Rep. Mary M. Mushinsky, D-Wallingford.

Mushinsky proposed legislation last year to have a new hospital built after David Peterson walked off the hospital's grounds undetected last summer, picking Jessica from a crowd at sidewalk sale and stabbing her repeatedly.

The merger is also seen as a budget tightening measure that could save the state $50 million in a year it is running a deficit that is closing in on $100 million.

The merger would also eliminate about 270 jobs in the Department of Housing, although some employees may be transferred to departments, state officials said.

Members of non-profit housing development groups, which have been favored for grants and loans under state housing commissioner John Papandrea, also say they are concerned they may be overlooked in favor of private developers.

The bus driver, Margaret Flaherty, 25, faced separate charges of negligent homicide after the accident.

Family of boy hit by bus reaches financial accord

WATERBURY (AP) — A financial settlement has been reached in a lawsuit stemming from the death of a 5-year-old boy who was run over by a school bus in 1988.

The mother and sisters of Juan Batista Lopez are receiving an undisclosed sum to settle the suit against the bus company, the city of Waterbury, the Board of Education and the driver, the attorney for the family said.

The company, Florida-based Ryder Student Transportation Service Inc., will pay the entire settlement, according to attorney Michael Fasano, who represented the family.

The agreement bars disclosure of the amount of the settlement, Fasano said.

However, he said it was "satisfactory" regarding that in these circumstances you can never compensate with money for the loss of a loved one.

Transplant pioneer gets second liver

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A team of surgeons worked today to replace the diseased liver of 12-year-old Stormie Jones, who became the world's first recipient of a heart-liver transplant six years ago.

Lead surgeon Andreas Tzakis and six other doctors started the operation at 3:15 a.m. today, hospital officials said. Transplant pioneer Dr. Thomas Starzl was present for part of the procedure, expected to last at least 12 hours.

Stormie and her mother, Lois Purcell, flew to Pittsburgh from their home in the Dallas suburb of White Settlement, Texas, on Monday, arriving at the hospital about 7 p.m.

As she was wheeled from her plane to a waiting ambulance, Stormie joked, "I feel like I'm in a straight-jacket" because of the stretcher's confining straps.

Doctors were optimistic because a donor liver was found only a week after Stormie's name was placed on the nationwide transplant list. The success rate of a second liver transplant is estimated at 65 percent to 70 percent, hospital officials said.

Hepatitis damaged Stormie's first transplanted liver and the organ no longer functions normally, said Liz McMahon, a spokeswoman for Children's Hospital.

Hepatitis, which is caused by a viral infection, inflames the liver. "She was last hospitalized here in January," McMahon said. "The do-

Coal miners accept Pittston offer

CASTLEWOOD, Va. (AP) — Appalachian miners apparently have voted to end a 10-month-old strike against the Pittston Coal Group that became a rallying point for the U.S. labor movement.

Pittston's 1,695 United Mine Workers members in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky, along with several hundred laid-off miners, voted Monday on a pact that would give them the job security and health and retirement benefits they sought while letting the company operate around the clock and on weekends.

UMW locals in Virginia, where about 1,200 of the company's union miners work, voted 2-1 in favor of ratification, according to unofficial returns cited by union officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At four locals in Logan County, W. Va., the combined unofficial tally was 171-113 in favor of passage, said Danny Wells, executive board member of the UMW's District 17.

But the only local in Kentucky affected by the strike rejected the contract 96-93, according to unofficial results. Many miners there had said they would reject the pact because of the pending suspension of 13 miners for alleged misconduct on the picket line.

UMW Vice President Cecil Roberts planned to announce the official results today at the union's southwest Virginia district office.

Mrs. Dole appointed the supermoderator, former Labor Secretary William Usery, who helped forge the tentative settlement announced Jan. 1.

Rufus Hall, 56, said miners were concerned about the scheduling flexibility in the new pact, but about nine out of 10 members of his Virginia local voted for it.

"It's a pretty good package except for the swing shift," he said.

Under the tentative agreement, Pittston would continue to pay 100 percent of miners' health-care coverage, rather than forcing them to take on 20 percent of those costs. Pittston also would continue paying into an industry-wide pension fund from which it had withdrawn.

The company won the right to operate shifts around the clock and to suspend 13 strikers accused of illegal strike activity and force them to go to arbitration if they want to keep their jobs.

The strike drew widespread support from labor unions and religious leaders because of the use of peaceful civil disobedience — primarily mass sit-down demonstrations.

Delozier also testified that in the captain's quarters he found two empty cans of a low-alcohol beer. He said there were more cans of the beer in a refrigerator.

The defense may cite the presence of the beer to explain why Hazelwood tested positive on a blood-alcohol test administered 10 1/2 hours after the Exxon Valdez grounding and some 15 hours after he was seen at a bar in Valdez. The blood test showed Hazelwood had a blood alcohol level of .061, under the limit for driving in Alaska but above the federal limit for operating a commercial vessel.

The 43-year-old skipper is charged with second-degree criminal mischief, a felony, and three misdemeanors, reckless endangerment, operating a vessel while intoxicated and negligent discharge of oil. If convicted, his maximum penalties could be 7 1/2 years in prison plus $60,000 in fines.

The Exxon Valdez, a 987-foot tanker, ran aground on jagged Bligh Reef, gashing holes in its oil tanks and spilling almost 11 million gallons of oil into the clear waters of Prince William Sound.

The spill was the nation's largest, killing countless birds, fish and wildlife and blackening hundreds of miles of rocky shore.

Delozier's testimony focused on the much-debated question of whether Hazelwood was drunk at the time of the accident. Testimony has been inconclusive on how many drinks Hazelwood had during an afternoon in the town of Valdez before the ship sailed.

Ship's officers who accompanied him say he had two or three drinks. The prosecution maintains he was in a bar for about six hours and kept ordering vodka on the rocks.

The only point on which all witnesses seem to agree is that Hazelwood never appeared to be drunk on the Exxon Valdez.

Seidman also chairs the Resolution Trust Corp., the government's S&L bailout board, and he spent much of his speech defending its record against critics who say it is moving too slowly.

In addition to the more than 350 thrifts it has taken over in 37 states and the $1.4 billion advanced to its subsidiaries to stem bank runs or replace high-cost brokered deposits, the board has developed internal rules and listed about a tenth of its 300,000 properties, Seidman said.

The RTC's merger with the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. is a marriage that is about the equal of Trump versus Trump," he said in a reference to the marital troubles of Donald and Ivana Trump.

Hazelwood prosecutors mount final drive to prove his guilt

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Prosecutors in Joseph Hazelwood's criminal trial were preparing a final barrage of evidence this week aimed at proving the Exxon Valdez skipper was drunk and reckless the night the tanker went aground.

After two weeks of testimony from 23 witnesses, assistant district attorneys Brent Cole and Mary Ann Henry plan to conclude their case by early next week.

They hope to show jurors that Hazelwood's alleged drinking and his behavior in the hours preceding and following the accident were reckless.

The trial is scheduled to resume today.

The Friday, Coast Guard investigator Mark Delozier told of boarding the grounded tanker in the early morning hours of March 24 and confronting Hazelwood, who smelled of liquor. He said the smell was "very intense and very obvious."

Delozier also testified that in the captain's quarters he found two empty cans of a low-alcohol beer. He said there were more cans of the beer in a refrigerator.

The defense may cite the presence of the beer to explain why Hazelwood tested positive on a blood-alcohol test administered 10 1/2 hours after the Exxon Valdez grounding and some 15 hours after he was seen at a bar in Valdez. OPINION

Politics must not interfere

There appears to have been a bit of political one-upmanship involved in the effort of town elected officials to get the state to increase the principal education grant to Manchester over the amount recommended by Gov. William A. O'Neill.

The three Democratic delegates to the General Assembly announced that they would work within the assembly to get more grant money. And they set up a date for a meeting at which they would hold a round-table discussion with the town's Board of Directors and the Board of Education on state issues facing the town during the current session of the Legislature. The grant, for which the governor proposes about $1.6 million less than the town expected to get under the full formula for determining the grant, is the most obvious state issue.

Republican Mayor Theunis Werkhoven told the three Democrats who represent Manchester in the General Assembly that a scheduling conflict would prevent him from attending their meeting, but he invited them to attend one at a different time with a larger cast. It would include the two Republicans who represent the town in the Legislature.

As a result, both meetings will be held. It would be pleasant to think that both Republicans and Democrats to protect Manchester's best interest in the current session of the assembly, the town will fare well.

But the state's financial situation will be a major issue in this year's gubernatorial race. Some of those who participate in the two meetings planned in Manchester may have the state election in their thinking.

It would have been more assuring if a single meeting with the entire legislative delegation had been planned in the first place.

Proposes town hall site

To the Editor: I suggest the town get away from the to-do about remodeling town hall, having to build garages, the mess that will occur when trying to build, and doing business as usual, etc.

I would like to suggest a complete new (I believe ideal) location. I suggest the town acquire the lot at Center and Alexander streets. This would be an ideal location and could perhaps accommodate a new police station.

The present town hall property is a prime location and I am sure it would bring in a long-term lease or sale. Lincoln Center could be sold. I believe there is enough parking to convert it into apartments.

I think the most practical, and least costly alternative would be a new location.

I would also like to say that in my 50 years in Manchester I have never seen such petty politics and bickering. The focus should be on the best interest of all of Manchester, not trying to embarrass someone.

I also do not think any director who lives in the 8th Utilities District, unless he also pays taxes in the town fire district should vote on anything pertaining to the town fire department. He should abstain.

I also think this broadcasting of the meetings is for the towns. The only time it's interesting is when some special group is trying to get something. The more you get your 2 cents worth in it at the meeting, not after.

Keep on reading his lips

By William Rusher

Well, President Bush's budget proposal for fiscal 1991 (which begins Oct. 1) is now before Congress, and once again Mr. Bush has proved as good as his word: There are no new taxes in it.

The Democrats have been demanding more taxes at least since 1984, when Walter Mondale stood before the San Francisco convention and pledged to enact them if elected. His subsequent defeat, 49 states to 1, convinced the Democratic leadership in Congress has (with one notable exception) grudgingly refused to push a tax increase unless President Bush first requested it — which, of course, he has not done.

The exception was the House Democratic leadership's call, last September, for an increase in the top income-tax rate — an idea supposedly harmless politically, since it would hurt only "the rich." Even so, the proposal was eventually scuttled by cooler heads in the Democratic Party.

But the Democrats have been confident, all along, that this was one battle they were bound to win in the long run. When George Bush stood before the Republican convention in August 1988 and made his famous pledge, "Read my lips: No new taxes," the Democrats were sure he was lying, and they looked forward ward to reminding the voters of his duplicity when, at last, he backed down. Even when he submitted, and successfully negotiated, a budget for fiscal 1990 that contained no new taxes, they wined but looked forward to fiscal 1991 when (they were positive) new taxes would be essential.

But now his 1991 budget has reached Capitol Hill, and once again there are no new taxes.

Moreover, there are growing signs that Bush is going to be able to keep his pledge straight through the four years of his administration.

For George Bush is not only shrewd but lucky. In retrospect, we can see that the jerry-built house of world communism had to collapse on the watch of some U.S. president, but it just happened to do so on Bush's. And one byproduct of its collapse is a gradual but substantial decrease in the amount of money the government will have to spend on defense. This "peace dividend" may never be huge, and it will of course be battled over by the thousands of special interests that want subsidies from the federal government. But it will most certainly render new taxes unnecessary for years to come.

So you can depend on it that when Mr. Bush steps to the microphone at the next Republican national convention to accept renomination for a second term, there will be a long paragraph in his speech reminding voters of his promise at New Orleans, of the loud scoffs of the Democrats, and of the fact there have, nonetheless, been no new taxes.

Democratic Sen. Daniel Moynihan's proposal to cut the FICA tax, which is theoretically designed to fund the heavy Social Security payments coming due in 25 or 30 years, would have the effect of forcing passage of new taxes, since huge FICA set-asides would no longer be available to help bring the annual federal budget deficits within the Gramm-Rudman guidelines. But that is precisely why the proposal won't pass Congress or (if it does) win presidential approval.

Moreover, if the Republicans could bring themselves to get as down-and-dirty as the Democrats invariably are when playing politics with Social Security, they could scare the daylight out of America's elderly by accusing Sen. Moynihan of trying to knock the financial underpinnings out from under the Social Security program. Moynihan could deny it till the cows come home, but he would lose the rhetorical battle.

Fortunately, such tactics will probably be unnecessary. And there will be no new taxes.

A bad case of 'rabbit ears'

WASHINGTON — In the taunting chatter of the daggot, they'd call it rabbit ears — ballpark slang for the way some players seem to hear every word and could perhaps accommodate a new police station.

a day's events. On Thursday, irked, the president said he was going to change his ways and stop holding so many question-and-answer sessions because he wasn't going to get burned any more.

Bush has been holding presidential press conferences at a rate never approached in the era of televised questions and answers. There's been nothing like it since the early years of Lyndon B. Johnson's presidency, and many of his sessions were off-camera.

Bush was supposed to have trouble with communications — at least by comparison with the smooth old professional, Ronald Reagan — and he has spent a year proving otherwise.

And it's working. Thirteen months into his term, Bush has poll approval ratings far beyond those of his predecessors, Reagan included. His job performance is gaining the approval of 75 to 80 percent in the major public opinion surveys. All those news conferences have helped build that standing.

But that constant exposure can be wearing, even grating, especially when it leads to adverse commentary about the answers, some of which have indeed been misleading.

Hence the rebuke, which wasn't unusual, although such rebukes usually come when a president is having political trouble. Bush's political stock is up. So there is not likely to be a major shift in the way he does business, communication included. It's working too well for that.

Among the specific items on which Bush's comments have turned out to be misleading: —The president said Feb. 12 that he didn't think it was time for a conference of the four allied powers of World War II on German reunification, "not at this juncture." The next day, the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France agreed on such a conference.

Long after the administration has started planning for what became the Malta summit meeting with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Bush said no such plans were in the works. He then said there would be no set agenda for Malta, and went there with 21 proposals to be discussed.

Shortly after the administration banned high-level exchange visits with China because of the military crackdown on democracy demonstrators, two Bush aides were sent on a secret mission to Beijing. They went again in December. Bush took shelter in semantics, saying he hadn't banned contacts, only exchanges.

Episodes like those have led to complaints that Bush and his aides sometimes misled the press and therefore the public in order to maintain secrecy on things they aren't ready to announce. There are other ways to handle the problem. As Secretary of State James A. Baker III said after acknowledging a televised misstatement on China, he could and should have said no comment.

Bush did a lot of commenting as he lectured reporters aboard Air Force One on the way to Colombia. "I have to be secretive, to say nothing of deceit," he said, choosing the words his critics had used.

"I think we have too many press conferences," he said. "It's not good. It's overexposure to the thing..." "So from now on, it's going to be a little different."

Later that day, White House Press Secretary Martin Fitzwater said the president had only been kidding. "I think the president had it backward," said Chief of Staff John Sununu. "I'm supposed to be the bad cop."

Consultants trade in photo ops

By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta

WASHINGTON — Influence peddling has fallen on hard times in Washington. Everyone is spooked by ethics scandals. Washington's "consultants" who get rich because of who they know are becoming pests. And suddenly the whole business smells like the selling of the White House.

Take for instance, "photo opportunities" with the president of the United States. Foreign heads of state clamor for them. But sometimes the tete-a-tete doesn't fit the State Department's foreign policy agenda, or the president doesn't have time for chitchat. In that case, foreign governments aren't above paying someone with connections to cut the red tape.

One incident sums it up. The prime minister of Somalia, Gen. Muhammad Ali Samatar, wanted an audience with a bigwig at the White House last year. Somalia's hired gun was Washington, the lobbying/legal firm of Black, Manafort, Stone and Kelly, was just the firm to get the job done. The partners are tight with the Bush administration. They have budget deficits within the Gramm-Rudman guidelines. But that is precisely why the proposal won't pass Congress or (if it does) win presidential approval.

Moreover, if the Republicans could bring themselves to get as down-and-dirty as the Democrats invariably are when playing politics with Social Security, they could scare the daylight out of America's elderly by accusing Sen. Moynihan of trying to knock the financial underpinnings out from under the Social Security program. Moynihan could deny it till the cows come home, but he would lose the rhetorical battle.

Britain pushes South African investment

By Jack Anderson

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Britain today pressed fellow European Community members to drop the wealthy trading bloc's ban on new investments in South Africa, hinting that it might otherwise lift the embargo unilaterally.

She also says that unless South Africa's president, F.W. de Klerk, can show some international response to his legalizing of the African National Congress and release of Nelson Mandela this month, he may be toppled by a white backlash.

Mrs. Thatcher unilaterally lifted academic and cultural restrictions when de Klerk announced his reforms this month. She moved again, saying Britain would encourage such contacts, when ANC leader Mandela was released Feb. 11.

Apart from Britain, the community includes three of South Africa's other major trading partners: West Germany, Italy and France.

Hurd, in angry exchanges with opposition legislators in the British Parliament last week, said that if there is no agreement in Dublin, "the government must reserve its right to act on its own if necessary."

Mrs. Thatcher said she will not drop unilaterally binding embargoes agreed on by the community in 1986. They consist mainly of bans on the imports of iron, steel and Kruggerand gold coins.

"The team would likely consist of officials from France, Ireland and Italy — possessors of the past, present and next European Community presidencies, the sources said. The presidency of the 12-nation organization rotates every six months.

Earlier, Irish officials said British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd appeared isolated in his demand for an immediate easing of sanctions.

The community's Commissioner for External Relations, Frans Andriessen, added in an Irish Radio "will not be easy. But there might be much more understanding than people believe there to be."

The foreign ministers also were expected to focus on rapid moves toward German unification. Ireland announced last week that it would call a special European Community summit in April because of the pace of developments.

Four drown in futile rescue attempt

Three youths, object of efforts, are also missing

MAMMOTH LAKES, Calif. (AP) — One after another, four rescuers plunged into the frigid waters of a mountain lake as they tried to save three youths who fell through thin ice during a holiday outing. All seven are presumed dead.

"It was horrifying," said Pierre LaBrosse, a reporter who watched three of the rescuers go into the icy waters of Convict Lake on Monday, never to reappear.

The hole they fell through froze over within hours, said Mono County Sheriff-Coroner Martin Strelneck.

Divers planned to try to recover bodies today from the lake in the eastern Sierra Nevada, about 200 miles north of Los Angeles.

The boys — all 13- to 16-year-olds — from a nearby camp for youthful offenders — were on an outing when they apparently fell through thin ice around noon, Strelneck said.

Two Camp O'Neal counselors fell into the lake as they tried to save the youths, Strelneck said. A U.S. Forest Service worker and a volunteer firefighter followed them the frigid water. None were immediately identified.

A fourth teen-ager who fell through clambered back onto the ice and walked to safety, LaBrosse said.

The 15-year-old youth, who was not identified, was treated for hypothermia at Cedars-Sinai Hospital and released, said a hospital official who declined to give her name.

A paramedic was hospitalized overnight for observation, she said. The youths were playing on the ice about 200 yards from shore when the surface gave way, Strelneck said.

Arriving soon after the boys fell through the snow-covered lake surface, LaBrosse said he saw the youth bobbing on the surface in an ice hole.

"Two rescue people were kneeling on the ice," said LaBrosse, a reporter for the Mono County Review Herald. "About 20 minutes later, one guy went into the ice."

As he and dozens of others on shore watched helplessly, two other adult rescuers plunged into the lake in failed attempts to reach the teen-ager still floundering in the icy water.

"It was horrible," he said. "They were trying to figure out any way to get across the ice. It was such an incredibly long distance. They couldn't just stick a rope out there."

Forest Service spokeswoman Margaret Gorski said the accident happened in the center of the lake, which is a mile long and an eighth- to a quarter-mile wide.

About 70 would-be rescuers used rubber boots and ropes to try to reach the youths, but to no avail.

The firefighter who fell in was a member of the volunteer Long Valley Fire Department, and "it was a heroic effort on his part," Strelneck said.

"The input I got on the man was he was one of these men who go gung-ho," Strelneck said.

The state-run probation camp is for young people convicted of relatively minor offenses.

Convict Lake, just south of the Mammoth ski resort, got its name from a shoutout between a posse and convicts in the late 1800s.

"People ski and skate on the lake in winter, LaBrosse said. The area received heavy snow in a weekend storm, but the weather at time of the accident was clear and sunny.

Congress considers 'khaki parachute' as troops reduced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is mulling for the possibility that large numbers of troops will be mustered out as a result of growing world peace.

At least two lawmakers have introduced proposals providing a "khaki parachute" to soften the landing of soldiers in civilian life, and a law that took effect in January could lay the groundwork for making readjustment easier.

Among the measures: Legislation introduced by Rep. Thomas J. Downey, D-N.Y., to restore unemployment compensation benefits to ex-military personnel to the same number of weeks available to civilians.

Veterans now must wait four weeks to start 13 weeks of benefits instead of one week to start 26 Air Force, Jacksonville for the Navy and Fitzsimmons Army Hospital, Colo.

"In an era when we are cutting defense spending at the same time we expect our fighting men and women to risk their lives in Grenada and Panama, the least we can do is provide them with 26 weeks of benefits after the coming reduction in force," Downey said.

A bill introduced by Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., would entitle enlisted personnel and non-commissioned officers to separation pay if they have completed five or more years of active duty before being involuntarily discharged. Officers also receive up to $30,000 in severance pay, Slattery said.

"Many men and women join the service expecting to spend their entire career serving their country," Slattery said. "I think that it is unfair for the government to release them without some kind of compensation."

An estimate prepared by the private Non-Commissioned Officers Association says the cost would be $58 million to $105 million, depending on when in the fiscal year the soldiers are separated.

The NCOA says that money would be offset by savings of $126 million in unemployment compensation. Those 5,000 officers were earning $36 million a month, the estimate says.

A package of veterans' benefits legislation that was enacted last year set up a pilot program to provide employment and training services to members of armed forces preparing to leave.

"Oldly done, it was not in anticipation" of the budget or events in Europe, said John V. Meyers, deputy assistant secretary of labor for veterans' employment and training. "However, the timing of the major's press secretary, Lurma Rackley said the mayor had complained of "cameras positioned on top of trucks to shoot over into patients and their relatives who come and go."

Rackley said a reporter from WRC-TV in Washington tried to enter the rehabilitation center over the weekend.

robbery was described as a white male, 40 to 45 years old, between 5 feet 2 inches and 5 feet 5 inches, with short brown hair, and wearing a blue cloth jacket, the police and the FBI have said.

The suspect in that robbery was said to have left the scene in a small gray-blue vehicle with spoked wheels and a Connecticut license plate, police have said.

On May 18, 1989, SBM's Hartford Road branch was robbed of $6,200.

On Nov. 4, 1988, an armed man stole $11,000 from SBM's branch at 244 Spencer St. Wood said he did not know if the man had any connection to any of the previous robberies.

Also, the Northeast School Employees Credit Union, 233 Main St., was robbed of about $100,000 on Oct. 11, 1989. Police were searching for two black men.

No one has been charged in any of the robberies, police said.

In the fall, while continuing to go to school and practicing with the football team, he was a Big Brother and co-chairman of the East Catholic Big Brother program.

"He would not give up one thing. He just kept up doing everything," his mother said.

But by mid-October, Zabkar had to give up football because doctors feared it was draining too much of his strength. And in early November, he was admitted to the University of Connecticut Medical Center.

Despite his worsening condition, he continues to keep up with his homework, taking a final exam in chemistry in December in the hospital.

Students from school were very supportive, coming to visit him and sending him over 200 Christmas cards, his parents said.

Zabkar came home Christmas Eve and stayed Christmas Day, but that was the last time he was home. The doctors told his parents that little hope was left.

His doctor would tell Zabkar that he was in the ninth inning with a score of 19 to one, and Zabkar would respond, "But I've still got three outs."

On the day he died, his father told him that it was OK, that he had a lot. He read him the last line from his favorite passage in the Bible before he died.

So that some good can come of his death, Zabkar's parents have set up a John Michael Zabkar III Memorial Fund, care of the Savings Bank of Manchester, Route 6, Andover, 06232. It will fund research on leukemia as well as the Boy Scouts.

Students at East Catholic responded by raising over $1,700 for the fund through a dance held on Feb. 2.

Zabkar was a "terrific kid" who was very well-liked by other students, Peggy Siegmund, the school's principal, said. The school charged its Most Valuable Player Award to the Mike Zabkar Courage Award.

The tragedy of Zabkar's death for the school was compounded by deaths of the fathers of two other students. Edward Gagnon, of Manchester, died of a heart attack in January. He was the father of Andrew Gagnon, a senior at the school.

At the beginning of February, John Fiori, of East Hartford, was struck and killed by an automobile. He was the father of Martin Fiori, a senior, and Laura Fiori, a junior.

Students were shocked by the deaths, Siegmund said. Teen-agers often have a sense of immortality, Fachini said.

"When someone their own age does die, it's harder for them to understand," he said.

"But the greatest mood at the school was one of pulling together as a community," Siegmund said. "It is just inspiring to see that kind of spirit in these times of crises."

ROBBED AND CLOSED — A Savings Bank of Manchester customer is greeted by a "Closed" sign as he drives through the bank's Purnell Plaza office area, located behind the bank's main office at 923 Main St., about one hour after the office was robbed this morning. The robber walked into the office, where walk-in and drive-through transactions are handled, and escaped with an undisclosed amount of money, police said.

Soviet Jews have hard time proving ethnicity in Israel

By Sergei Shargorodsky The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Asya Gomelsky says she survived two pogroms in her 83 years but never expected her Jewishness to be called into question in Israel.

"That is what happened when Mrs. Gomelsky's 50-year-old son Boris asked the Interior Ministry for identity papers for his family now that it has arrived from the Soviet Union."

The Gomelskys were turned down on grounds that they had no documents proving they were Jewish — birth certificates, for example.

Those who are rejected can get rent subsidies and other benefits as immigrants, but their ID cards do not say "Jewish." Without that word, they may have trouble with marriage, divorce or other personal matters controlled by Israel's ultra-Orthodox establishment.

The Gomelskys' story and similar tales surfacing with the new rush of Soviet immigrants have sparked protests by Soviet activists and complaints by four Israeli liberal parties over policies of the Interior Ministry, which is controlled by the ultra-Orthodox Shas party.

But on a visit to Interior Ministry offices here a reporter found several recent Soviet arrivals who came for identity cards still were being turned away under the same policy.

"Go home and come back when you have papers showing you are Jews," an official told them.

entered a 28-day drug treatment program at Connecticut Valley Hospital in Middletown three days after his arrest. No trial date has been set.

The brothers have gotten together only occasionally for holidays and family birthdays, although Robert did stop by for John's victory party Nov. 7.

Melvin, who has spent the last five years on the front lines of New Haven's escalating drug war, is trying to forget the day he faced off against his brother in that battle.

"I don't want to keep on opening it up," said the police detective, whose nickname is "Rock." "I want to let that thing die."

"Let me put it simply for you," he said. "It's part of the territory of being a police officer. Even though it hurts sometimes, you do what you got to do."

John Daniels Jr. is the oldest of the three sons and two daughters of John and Lucinda Daniels, who were on hand to watch him swim in as mayor. The family moved from Georgia to New Haven when John Jr. was a young boy.

A star football player in high school, John attended Villanova University on a full athletic scholarship. His first job was as a teacher, and he later worked for Quinnipiac College, Yale University and a city development agency.

Melvin entered the Navy after high school and worked as a mechanic before becoming a housing authority police officer in 1969. "He is sort of a carbon copy of my father," said Albert Rogers, the mayor's executive assistant and friend since grammar school. "He just went out and did his job."

John has two daughters, but is separated from his wife, was always "a very lovable and happy-go-lucky guy," said Melvin.

In his 1960 high school yearbook, Robert listed dancing as his favorite hobby and entry into the Air Force

Indefinite terms OK'd in certain child abuse cases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Parents suspected of child abuse may be jailed indefinitely for refusing to disclose the whereabouts of their children, the Supreme Court ruled today.

The court said society's need to protect children from harm generally outweighs a parent's constitutional right against self-incrimination.

By a 7-2 vote, the court upheld the indefinite jailing of a Maryland woman until she tells authorities where her young son can be found. The boy is feared dead.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the court, said forcing parents in such cases to reveal the whereabouts of children is aimed at protecting the children and not gathering incriminating evidence.

"Even when criminal conduct may exist, a court may properly request production and return of the child... for reasons related entirely to the child's well-being and through measures unrelated to criminal law enforcement or investigation," O'Connor said.

Justices William J. Brennan and Thurgood Marshall dissented. The court ruled against Jacqueline Bouknight, who has been in a Baltimore jail since April 1988 for refusing to disclose the whereabouts of her son, Maurice.

The boy has been missing since September 1987, when he was 11 months old. Maurice was admitted to a Baltimore hospital on Jan. 23, 1987, when he was 3 months old, for treatment of a broken leg and other injuries.

For years, the Interior Ministry also has been ruled by the ultra-Orthodox, for whom the mostly secular parties and a religious one usually hold the key to forming coalition governments.

Neither of the country's two major parties, the right-wing Likud bloc or center-left Labor Party, has ever won enough seats in the 120-member Knesset, the Israeli parliament, to govern on their own. That means each scrambles to bring the religious parties into coalitions.

Over the years, Israel's religious community used this power to pass laws favoring the Orthodox and enforce rules forcing businesses and entertainment spots to close from sundown Friday till sundown Saturday, the Sabbath.

The ultra-Orthodox fear this may change with the Soviet Jewish immigration wave, which they claim would take to the streets over Deri's policies.

But on a visit to Interior Ministry offices here a reporter found several recent Soviet arrivals who came for identity cards still were being turned away under the same policy.

"Go home and come back when you have papers showing you are Jews," an official told them.

Hungry caterpillars could aid drug war

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is looking into whether to enlist swarms of caterpillars in the war against cocaine in Peru and Bolivia by setting them loose to eat coca plant leaves. The Washington Post reported today.

The administration, at the urging of national drug policy administrator William Bennett, recently more than quadrupled — to $6.5 million — the budget for a research program to develop chemical and biological agents to destroy drug crops, the newspaper said.

The principal focus of the effort, the Post said, is the caterpillar white moth that in its caterpillar stages eats the leaves of the coca plant.

Growers in Peru's Upper Huallaga Valley, where more than half the world's cocaine originates, douse their crops with insecticide to kill the native maulumba caterpillars.

Researchers were said to believe that if they could breed the insect in mass quantities, hundreds of millions of maulumba eggs or caterpillars could be air-dropped over the coca-growing regions, thwarting the growers' efforts at crop protection.

Waldemar Klassen, associate director for the Agricultural Research Service, was quoted as saying, "This is quite a novel idea. If we could put them down there in sufficient number, we could then defoliate the plants."

Klassen was not immediately available to discuss the report. A man who answered his home phone Monday night said Klassen was asleep.

Dr. Charles Burke said of the Pentagon's running out of options in treating Lemieux's painful herniated disc, which recently cut short his record-breaking streak at 46 games.

Because the problem is aggravated by an arthritis-like condition that could further injure Lemieux's back if the troublesome disc is removed, Burke said surgery "is our very last option."

"Realistically, even if he responds to the treatment, the best we can hope for is to get him back by the playoffs," Burke said Monday. "Obviously, if the (Penguins) are going to go anywhere, they need him."

Henefeld comes to UConn's rescue in OT

By Ian Auster Manchester Herald

STORRS — Overtime games in the Big East Conference haven't exactly been Connecticut's forte. The Huskies, who learned earlier in the evening of their highest ranking ever in the AP national poll at No. 6, in fact had dropped nine in a row.

But the Huskies, thanks to Nadav Henefeld's 3-pointer with three seconds left were able to slip past Providence, 75-72, Monday night at the Harry A. Gampel Pavilion.

Connecticut's last OT win was a 47-45 win over the Friars in 1981-82.

Henefeld, named earlier for the third time the Big East Rookie of the Week, didn't have one of his better games. But his clutch field goal gave Connecticut its 23rd win in 27 outings, tying the school record for victories set previously in 1953-54 and '64-65.

UConn (10-3) now has a half-game lead in the Big East on Georgetown.

"Both teams just defended the heck out of each other. Both teams just really wanted it," Husky coach Jim Calhoun said. "It was one of those games where somebody had to give and nobody did. I don't think that's what this time of year is all about."

"The last couple of minutes (the second half) we got a little more aggressive offensively," PC coach Rick Barnes said. "Our guys hung in there. That's what this time of year is all about."

"We got down, but we came back against the sixth-ranked team on their home court. It was a great game. I'm sure everyone enjoyed watching it," he added.

"This was the first of a few times with this particular team that someone has made a terrific run at us," Calhoun said. "I know we're going to have a terrific run at us," he added.

"Eric Munrook (21 points) tied it in regulation for the Friars (14-9, 7-7) with four seconds left. PC twice led in the overtime before Chris Smith (17 points) gave the Huskies the lead with a 3-point play and a steal that George (16 points) laid in for a 70-67 lead.

PC, down 72-67, tied it one last time on the top of the key with 50 seconds to go in the extra session.

The bench helped UConn secure a 39-28 halftime lead. After Carlton Screen gave PC a 23-22 lead, reserve guard John Gwynn (9 points) sandwiched two jumpers around a Rod Sellers block for a 26-23 edge.

Henefeld, on a beautiful shovel pass from Toronto Walker, hit a 3-pointer from the top of the key and followed that with two free throws for a 31-24 edge. Scott Burrell (12 points) hit UConn's final two buckets of the shot, the second with two seconds left after a steal in the frontcourt.

The Husky bench scored eight of Connecticut's final 17 points in a streaky first half. UConn hit 5 of its final 6 shots, after streaks of 0-of-9 and 1-for-12. It would shoot 13-for-33, 39.4 percent, in the half but still emerged with the 11-point spread.

MHS girls 19-0; one game remains

By Jim Tierney Manchester Herald

The Manchester High girls' basketball team, whirring its way through a storied season, is now on the brink of perfection.

Following Monday night's comfortable 52-29 win over Enfield High in CCC East action at Clarke Arena, Manchester, ranked second in the state poll, moves to 19-0.

The Indians' final regular season game is Wednesday night when they host East Hartford at 7:30 at Clarke Arena. Manchester won at East Hartford, 56-45, on Jan. 26. Enfield falls to 9-10.

Manchester, which already clinched the league championship, is 13-0 in the CCC East. A win over East Hartford would not only give Manchester the first unbeaten girls' hoop squad in school history, but would also guarantee the Indians the No. 1 seed in the upcoming Class LL state tournament which begins Monday.

"Who would have thought we'd be 19-0 at this point," Manchester coach Joe DePasqua said. "Joe Erardi (assistant athletic director/girls' soccer coach) is the only one who thought so. That's their goal. They said they want to go undefeated. Our main goal is to do well in the (state) tournament."

The opening quarter was a tentative one for the Indians. Enfield guard Collins Finerty (team-high 19 points) scored seven points as the Raiders jumped to a 13-8 lead after the first quarter. Manchester was 3-for-12 from the floor in the first eight minutes.

"We were just a little flat," DePasqua said. "I knew that we'd come around. We made an adjustment. We put Tammy (Dubois) on Finerty in our box-and-one press. And they started turning the ball over. That's when the game kind of broke away. Tammy did a good job on her (Finerty). She (Finerty) has improved so much. She was a JV (junior varsity) player last year. She's one of the top guards in the league."

Dubois dished out eight assists while junior Shelby Dieterle pumped in a game-high 22 points, including 10 in the fourth, to go along with her 10 rebounds. Senior Cheryl Fowler had 11 points, including a pair of 3-pointers, while senior Jodi Widmer added 10. Senior Trish O'Connell grabbed nine rebounds.

Tammy's best play looked to "nose," DePasqua said. "I honestly believe she's the best guard going to the league. She plays so smart."

Manchester, which took the lead for good at 14:13 after a Dieterle hoop off a pretty feed from Fowler, went on a 10-0 run to start the second. A Fowler 17-footer gave the Indians an 18-13 advantage. Enfield was outscored, 14-2, in the quarter and Fowler's 3-pointer just before the end of the quarter extended the Indians lead to 35-19.

Dieterle scored the first two hoops of the fourth by pushing the Indians lead to 39-19. A 3-point play over by Dubois gave Manchester a 50-25 lead with 2:53 left.

Shelly is just a very tough player," DePasqua said. "She's a JV (junior varsity) player last year. She's one of the top guards in the league."
