Pump a new way to give medicine

By Dianna M. Talbot
Manchester Herald

Like many people who face the prospect of a hospital stay, Becky Edlund was scared of needles.

So when the 29-year-old registered nurse underwent hip surgery last fall at Manchester Memorial Hospital, where she works, Edlund opted to try a modern method of pain control that was being tested at the hospital.

Aside from having an intravenous line attached to her arm, it required no regular shots.

For 24 hours, whenever Edlund felt the after-surgery effect of pain, she pressed a button connected to a pump. The signal sent a measured amount of the strong pain killer, morphine, into her bloodstream.

"It was wonderful," said Edlund. "I didn't have to have a shot. I just pressed a button."

After one day of using morphine, Edlund said she felt well enough to switch to aspirin.

Since then, the hospital has finished testing "Patient-Controlled Analgesia," or PCA, and it has become available to the public.

It is unique in that it is among the first in technology that allows hospital patients to deliver a controlled amount of pain relief medication to themselves.

MNH has purchased six PCA pumps at a cost of about $3,500 each, according to hospital officials.

Recently, a 72-year-old Manchester woman underwent gall bladder surgery at MNH. She said it was her second surgical operation; her first one was for a bleeding ulcer 27 years ago.

One day after her gall bladder was removed, the woman, who asked not to be identified, lay in her hospital bed holding a small device with a button on it that was connected to a nearby PCA pump.

An IV line connected her bloodstream to a large syringe of medication attached to the pump.

The PCA pump was affixed to a portable box, to which IV pumps typically are attached. Besides a syringe, the pump featured three frequency and basal rate, or steady flow of medication.

Under her physician's orders, the pump allowed the woman to press the button as often as every six minutes. When she did, 5 milligrams of Demerol, another type of pain medication, was released into her bloodstream.

"The pain is going down all the time," said the woman, who added that her second hospital stay was far more comfortable than her first, mainly a result of her use of the PCA pump.

Treasurer explains sour deal

By Rick Santos

Town Treasurer Roger Negro, who makes single-day investments of as much as $5 million, said today that he delayed telling town officials about a year deal because a town director's husband told him that the town money in that deal — now presumed to be lost — would be returned.

Negro, a Democrat, has no boss other than the townspeople, who have supported him in elections every two years since 1971.

The investment, which town officials are trying to recover, was the purchase of $200,000 in promissory notes for a start-up company that planned to operate a blood bank.

The Denver, Colo.-based Merus Corp. declared bankruptcy in December.

However, the company's due date to pay back the notes plus the $22,000 in interest they were to ac-

Report: Smith ready to quit

HARTFORD (AP) — State Senate Minority Leader Richard J. Smith will reportedly drop his Republican bid for governor and endorse independent candidate Lowell P. Weicker.

Smith's departure would leave U.S. Rep. John G. Rowland, the GOP front-runner, and Joe Schiavone, a New Haven businessman, to vie for their party's nomination.

Neither Smith nor Weicker campaign officials would comment on the endorsement, which sources said was scheduled to be announced at a press conference today, according to a report in today's Hartford Courant.

Meanwhile, Rep. Edith G. Prager, D-Columbia, said Tuesday she would support Weicker. And other lawmakers — although only a fraction of the 187 in the legislature — expressed varying degrees of support or interest in his candidacy.

Although Smith and Prager are prepared to support him publicly and others are willing to acknowledge they are considering it, the entire group probably be debated.

Smith was a Weicker supporter when Weicker was a Republican U.S. senator and had called on the GOP to embrace Weicker's candidacy after he announced in March that he would run as an independent.

Smith, who lost his job as a municipal financing specialist with Connecticut Bank & Trust Co. as part of the bank's staff cutbacks this winter, has previously had discussions with Weicker about posts in his administration.

The question of how much support Weicker can glean from the highly partisan General Assembly has hung over his campaign since he announced his candidacy.

Many have wondered whether he would be effective as an independent governor without the voting bloc that support governors of established parties.

But although Smith and Prager are prepared to support him publicly and others are willing to acknowledge they are considering it, the entire group probably be debated.

Loyalists accused of 'coup attempt'

RIGA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Guards surrounded government buildings in the socialist republic of Estonia today after Soviet loyalists converged on parliament in what the premier called a failed "coup attempt."

Lawmakers in neighboring Lithuania began a closed-door debate on new proposals designed to end an impasse with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Calm May 21 unless their demands are met by Thursday, according to Interfax, a news service of Radio Moscow.

In Moscow, Secretary of State James A. Baker III said he would press Soviet leaders to explain why they have not begun talks with Baltic leaders. Baker is on a four-day visit to meet progress on arms control before Gorbachev and President Bush meet in Washington this month.

In the Latvian capital, Riga, about two dozen pro-independence demonstrators stood outside parliament, holding a banner that shows a cow made up of the national colors of the three Baltic republics and a figure of Gorbachev sucking on the latter. The also held Latvian flags.

Anti-independence protesters in Estonia threatened a general strike May 21 unless their demands are met by Thursday, according to Interfax, a news service of Radio Moscow.

Sammy Davis Jr. dies; singer, dancer was 64

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sammy Davis Jr., the lively song-and-dance man whose carefree charm and bewhiskered smile helped make him an entertainment institution, died today.

He was 64.

The health of the cancer-stricken performer deteriorated steadily since his release from Cedars-Sinai Medical Center on March 13. He went home to his wife of 20 years, Alva, and died there this morning, said his publicist, Susan Reynolds.

He had been admitted in January for treatment of a gum infection. Doctors later said that he had a recurrence of throat cancer, and no further chemotherapy was planned. His cancer was first diagnosed in September 1989.

Davis, who embraced Judaism at the age of 26 in 1954, was honored May 8 at a testimonial dinner by the Friends of the Israel Defense Forces. Over the years he joked that he was the nation's only "black, one-eyed, Jewish entertainer." He converted to Judaism while recovering from an automobile accident that cost him his left eye and nearly his life.

An actor, singer, dancer and impressionist, the exuberant Davis lived life hard and fast. His gold chains, heavy rings and gaudy bracelets were as much a part of his personality as the chain of cigarettes he smoked.

He created a lounge act so distinctive that it drew scores of comedians — most notably Billy Crystal — imitated his slack-jawed routine and "peace and love" patter. He, in turn, was imitated by others.

Furniture may give Mac Attacks to students

By Nancy Foley
Manchester Herald

Instead of viewing the draft, dad furniture associated with most school cafeteria students at Bennett Junior High School get to feel like they're walking into a McDonald's when they enter one of the school's cafeterias.

Today, school officials unveiled that cafeteria, recently remodeled by McDonald's furniture. The project is credited to Bennett vice-principal Bob Cuprak.

Cuprak said he was driving by the abandoned shell of a McDonald's on West Center Street about a month and a half ago when he began wondering what happened to its furniture.

Police Roundup

Man faces kidnap charge

A New Jersey man was arrested Monday on charges of attempted kidnaping stemming from a January incident in which a Massachusetts woman said two men tried to kidnap her children in the parking lot of J.C. Penney's warehouse, police said.

Joseph R. Jordan, 31, of Brick, N.J., the ex-husband of the woman who made the kidnaping complaint, was charged with criminal attempted kidnaping, second-degree assault, unlawful restraint and two counts of risk of injury to a minor, police said.

He was held on a $100,000 bond and scheduled to appear today in Manchester Superior Court, police said.

According to police, on Jan. 27, Robyn Jordan, 25, of Westfield, Mass., her twin two-year-old boys and a female friend went into the department store and came out about 45 minutes later, police said.

As the women were about to put the toddlers into the car, two men jumped out of a gray van and grabbed hold of a stroller the boys were in, but the women held on, police said.

One woman was assaulted during the struggle, which ended when the women would not let go of the stroller, police said.

The men fled in the van, which later was found abandoned in the parking lot of Caldor's, police said. Inside, police said they found evidence of planned a long-term kidnaping, including food, bottled water, a portable toilet, handcuffs, duct tape, a cellular phone and portable radio.

Man charged in computer thefts

A Manchester man was arrested Tuesday in connection with a series of computer thefts from Robertson School earlier this year.

Ronald Fudge, 27, of 360 Oakland St., Apt. 5-D, was charged with third-degree burglary and third-degree larceny and presented in Manchester Superior Court today, police said.

He became a suspect in several break-ins and computer thefts at the school after police followed a path in the woods leading from the school to the Oakland Street apartment complex where Fudge lives, police said.

Man leads police on chase

An Andover man faces several charges after he was arrested early Tuesday morning while driving on Hartford Road, police said.

Allan D. Giles, 21, of Hendece Street, Andover, was charged with driving while intoxicated, engaging police in pursuit, carrying weapons inside a motor vehicle, possession of cocaine, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia, police said.

He was held on a $500 bond and scheduled to appear Monday in Manchester Superior Court, police said.

A police officer motivated for Giles to pull over after he saw Giles driving erratically, police said. Instead, Giles led police on a 4.5 mile chase until his car broke down, police said.

A search of the car revealed a hunting knife, small quantities of cocaine and marijuana, and drug paraphernalia, police said.

School board to give more to Head Start

The Board of Education will have to contribute $400,000 to the Head Start program next year to make up for a shortfall in federal funds, according to School Superintendent James P. Kennedy.

In addition, the town will not be eligible for any of the new money that the federal government is pumping into the program as part of President George Bush's drive to enhance Head Start, according to Iris C. Rouleau, director of the program.

The $400,000 was not included in the original budget recommended by the superintendent, and is needed to balance the education budget. The shortfall happened because the federal government gives increases of one and two percent each year in the grants, while at the same time salaries and other costs of the program are increasing at a higher rate, Rouleau said.

"This is going to be forever now," said Raymond E. Demers, business manager for the schools, referring to the town's contribution to the program.

Head Start is a preschool program that serves disadvantaged children and those with special needs.

Distributors' workers expect long dispute

By Dianna M. Talbot
Manchester Herald

About 40 men were picketing outside Hartford Distributors Inc. this morning when a gleaming, pale yellow, Mercedes sports car pulled up alongside them.

"That's Ross Hollander, one of the owners of the company," said a picketer, one of about 120 truck drivers and warehouse employees of the beer distributorship who have been locked out of their jobs since negotiations over a new labor contract began, he said.

George Brook, a company shop steward and representative of the Teamsters Union Local 1035, which also represents locked-out employees of four other area beer distributorships, walked up to the expensive-looking car.

At Brook held a brief conversation with its occupant, a picketer commented on the Mercedes, which he said is not the only sports car its driver has, and how he thought it related to their labor situation.

"I don't begrudge the employer for what he has, but let us live too," said the truck driver, a 23-year employee of the company who asked not to be identified.

The comment was just another part of a growing rift between company management and employees.

The company says its employees are among the industry's best paid in the country and wants to cut back on some company-provided health benefits in the new contract. But employees say the company can't do that without giving them a substantial increase in pay.

The old contract expired on May 1, and after a week of unsuccessful negotiations, the beer distributorships imposed work stoppages to prevent employees from striking just before during Memorial Day holiday weekend, one of the industry's biggest money-makers.

At the picket line, Brook finished his conversation with the Mercedes driver and walked back to the picket line. The Mercedes drove away.

The two men had discussed a meeting later today between union and company representatives during which negotiations over a new three-year contract would resume.

Brook said, "It would be the third such meeting this week, according to Walter Chambers, spokesman for the union. Two were held on Monday and Tuesday, but the union walked out of each when both sides refused to agree on terms relating to health and welfare benefits, he said.

Describing the atmosphere during those meetings, Chambers said, "I wouldn't say it was cordial, and I wouldn't say it was out of hand. They know we are upset."

Most employees have lost about $700-$800 worth of pay since the lockout began, he said. But they do not plan to give in because of the financial strain.

"Realistically, I don't see an end to this labor dispute soon," Chambers said. "I think this could continue well past Memorial Day."

Donald Strickland, an attorney and spokesman for the company, did not return phone calls Tuesday afternoon and this morning.

Three years ago, employees struck for 10 days while their old contract was being negotiated.

"After about a week there should be some movement (in negotiations), but there hasn't," said Ken Toner, a 10-year warehouse worker who stood at the picket line today.

"I think everybody (the employees) are willing to wait," he continued. "Obviously, it's a worthwhile cause. If we give in, what happens the next time during contract time?"

Another picketer, who identified himself only as Mike, a 12-year truck driver at the firm, complained that the company is losing the trust of its workers.

"They tell us for two years and 11 months that we are great workers," he said. "Then, when contract time rolls around, all they say is that we are overpaid and do next to nothing. So it turns out that it was only a bunch of rhetoric they were throwing at us."

Lieberman, Johnson richest state congressmen

By John Diamond
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Life as a member of Congress from Connecticut meant free trips to Florida, thousands in speech fees and even a Persian rug, but it also meant the expense of maintaining a second home, financial disclosure reports show. Financial disclosure forms for 1989, released Tuesday, indicated a wide range of incomes and lifestyles for the six House members and two senators from Connecticut. And the reports showed that party membership, seniority or a seat in the higher branch mattered little when it came to income and individual wealth. The annual disclosure forms, required by law, are made public at the end of the month. But they were due in the House and Senate clerks' offices Tuesday and delegation members made copies available. Although the reports are not a complete accounting of the wealth of an individual member — for example, they leave out ownership of a personal residence — they indicate that Democratic Sen. Joseph Lieberman and Republican Nancy Johnson are the wealthiest members of the delegation. Lieberman, the state's junior senator and the newest delegation member, received along with his wife and dependent children between $33,952 and $61,016 last year. (Financial disclosure forms only require members to list ranges of income and asset value rather than the specific amount. Lieberman provided exact figures for himself and ranges for other family members.) Lieberman's added income came on top of his annual Senate salary of $89,500. The income sources ranged from modest interest on a checking account to some $18,000 in rental income for two condominiums in New Haven, Conn. Among Lieberman's stock holdings were 200 shares in Bassett Furniture of Bassett, Va., valued at $7,400 and which paid dividend income of under $1,000. The family's total assets — those Lieberman was required to report — totaled about $284,000. They included the two condominiums, a $17,220 savings account and several individual retirement accounts. The condominiums each carry $70,000 mortgages. Sen. Christopher Dodd, also a Democrat, showed assets of between $6,000 and $25,000 in value. Only income-producing assets must be reported. While Lieberman received no honoraria, Dodd took in $15,000 from the New York Stock Exchange and $2,000 for a speech to The Equitable insurance company in New York. Dodd is chairman of the Senate Securities Subcommittee. He has proposed legislation that would ban all honoraria. Among the two congressmen running for governor it is the Democrat — Bruce Morrison — who appears to have the most in income and assets. Both Morrison and Republican John Rowland donated to charities all their honoraria from speeches — $7,100 from Morrison and $2,000 from Rowland. Morrison, who also provided exact figures for his income and holdings, earned $11,386 in interest, dividends, rent, and the sale of stock in 1989. That came on top of his $89,500 House salary. Morrison's stock holdings last year were worth $21,494. During the year he sold 300 shares and bought 400. His stocks included Motorola, Varsity Corp. and First Constitution Financial Corp. Morrison is making payments on a $119,684 mortgage for his Washington, D.C., residence and attached rental apartment. Rowland's financial disclosure form is a quick read. The leading Republican gubernatorial contender took in under $2,000 in interest or dividend income in 1989. He listed no holdings, transactions, liabilities or gifts. Democratic Rep. Sam Gajdon kept almost all of the $28,150 in honoraria he took last year. He earned between $7,000 and $22,000 in interest and rent. Gajdon's holdings, worth between $65,000 and $150,000, were topped by an apartment attached to his personal residence valued between $50,000 and $100,000. Gajdon listed no mortgage liabilities. Republican Rep. Christopher Shays earned no outside income beyond his House salary and accepted no honoraria. He listed as holdings a house in Stamford worth more than $250,000. But it appeared that the house is Shays' personal residence — no income from the property was reported and was not required to be included on his financial disclosure form. Republican Nancy Johnson listed no honoraria.

$250m loan cited as Ames' first step

By Denise Lavoe
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ames Department Stores officials, struggling to revive the ailing discount retail chain, say a new $250 million loan agreement is the first step toward restoring confidence in the company. "This is what it's going to take to start this company on the road to recovery," said Michael Cook, the lead attorney representing Ames in hearings in U.S. Bankruptcy Court, where the credit was approved Tuesday. Ames also said it had cut the number of store closings planned immediately from 74 to 33, but said it still is reviewing its operations and could close more stores later. The nation's fourth-largest retailer filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code on April 25 after many suppliers who had not been paid for earlier deliveries stopped shipping merchandise. The company also was unable to get a new credit agreement from its lenders to ease a cash flow crunch. Officials said the new $250 million line of credit will allow the company to pay vendors on time and keep merchandise coming into its 680 stores. "I believe it was what we needed to hear to give the trade (vendors) the security to feel free to ship us the goods we need," said Ames President George Grandif. The agreement approved by U.S.

Bankruptcy Court Judge Howard C. Buchanan III allows Ames to borrow up to $250 million from Chemical Bank. Buchanan authorized the financing after a group of 33 banks withdrew its objection to the plan. In his order, the judge said Ames did not have sufficient working capital to finance its operations. "Absent such availability, the debtors cannot supply their retail stores with the inventory they need in order to ensure adequate sales levels and continued customer loyalty," Buchanan said. Stephen L. Pitzer, Ames' new chief executive officer, confidently predicted the company would make a comeback with the new financing. "If we want to save this company, it takes money and competent business. I know how to do the rest," Pitzer said. Buchanan postponed a final hearing on Pitzer's appointment at CEO until May 24. Creditors had asked for more time to review terms of his contract, which could pay him up to $8 million in salary, bonuses and benefits over three years. A bank group headed by New York's Citibank withdrew its objection to the $250 million loan after reaching an agreement with Ames early Tuesday. Ronald DeKoven, an attorney for the banks, said the agreement allows the banks to split with the company $91 million in cash collateral Ames has in its account. He said the agreement also resolves a dispute between Ames and the bankers over outstanding letters of credit.

Schiavone weighs bid after defeat

STAMFORD (AP) — Underdog gubernatorial Republican candidate Joel Schiavone finds himself reassessing his candidacy today after a crushing defeat at the hands of frontrunner John G. Rowland in Stamford's winner-take-all election for 19 nominating convention delegates. Rowland, a three-term congressman from Waterbury, won over Schiavone to "take a good hard look at the viability of (his) campaign... and look toward victory in November." "Now is the time for all Republicans to unite," Rowland said after his victory Tuesday night. "Whether we like it or not, we are still outnumbered by Democrats and unaffiliated voters in this state." Returns from the Stamford registrar's office showed Rowland, a three-term congressman from Waterbury, with 1,133 votes to 1,458 votes for Schiavone, a New Haven developer. "This is indeed the first winning shot across the bow toward victory in November," Rowland said. "Today's vote reflects the interest and the desire to return the state toward fiscal conservatism. He [Schiavone] managed our resources and a clear opposition to a state income tax." Schiavone conceded defeat shortly after 9 p.m. Tuesday and said he would immediately reassess his

Moffett wins big in delegate chase

WATERBURY (AP) — Former congressman Toby Moffett has socked Shelton Mayor Michael E. Pacowia in his own back yard, winning delegate primaries in four 5th District communities and furling his chances of winning the Democratic nomination in July. Meanwhile, Tuesday's Republican primaries in two communities lifted state Sen. James H. McLaughlin back into the thick of the fight for the GOP nomination. Pacowia was unseated by losing five delegates to Moffett, and vowed to stay in the race and take it to a primary in September. He said he did not consider the small voter turnout to be an indication of true support among Democrats in the Valley towns. "We set our sights on Congress and that's where our sights still are," Pacowia said. "As far as we're concerned, we're in it to stay." Pacowia had hoped to take eight delegates away from Moffett in Tuesday's primaries, but wound up losing five of his own to Moffett, a former four-term congressman from the fifth district, who now lives in Newtown, Conn. Moffett and Pacowia had claimed to

Homeless bill inked

HARTFORD — Gov. William A. O'Neill has signed into law a sweeping bill aimed at preventing homelessness and phasing out the state's reliance on "welfare mothers" to shelter poor families. The bill, which the governor signed Tuesday, puts aside about $30 million in state money for a variety of programs, including increased rental assistance to help poor families stay in apartments and increased spending to renovate

Anti-racism measures are proposed

HARTFORD (AP) — State higher education officials are calling for tougher measures against students who show racial slurs or harass people in other ways on campus, complaining that a recent series of racial incidents is part of a general breakdown of discipline among college students. The board received progress reports Tuesday from public and private colleges around the state on the creation of anti-racism policies. Most of Connecticut's colleges reported establishing campuswide committees as part of a number of steps to combat racism, said Debra P. Graham of the Connecticut Department of Higher Education. "If we did not have as many minorities on campus I would suggest we would not see as much unrest," said Glasgow, who has made minority recruiting one of the chief goals of the Department of Higher Education. Many students have difficulty adjusting to campus life because they attended elementary and secondary schools that were racially segregated, said board member Lynn Alan Brooks. "College campuses are perhaps the first place our young adults experience pluralism," he said. "They came out of all-black schools, all-Hispanic schools, all-white schools." The board of governors is scheduled to receive a report in January on the number of racial incidents reported at campuses across the state. Court refuses to overturn ex-prosecutor's conviction

HARTFORD (AP) — The state Appellate Court has refused to overturn the drug conviction of a former police prosecutor. The appeals court ruled that the evidence presented during Paul Sherbacow's trial was enough to sustain a conviction beyond a reasonable doubt. The judges rejected all of Sherbacow's arguments, finding that Superior Court Judge Harry Hammer did not shift the state's burden of proof to the defense. The appeals court also denied Sherbacow's claim that an inspector with the state's attorney's office violated a request for an order by speaking with a key prosecution witness during the trial. In May 1988, Hammer sentenced Sherbacow, now 49, to five years in prison for selling 500 grams of cocaine to a former client. Shortly after his sentencing, Sherbacow posted a $75,000 appeal bond set by Hammer. The judge also ordered the suspension of Sherbacow's law license. That suspension is still in effect and will remain so until the appeals process is exhausted or Sherbacow opts for disciplinary proceedings to go forward, said Statewide Grievance Committee Counsel Daniel Horwich. Sherbacow's trial lawyer, F. Mac Buckley, did not immediately return a telephone call Tuesday seeking comment. Testimony in Sherbacow's trial began Feb. 25, 1988. He was prosecuted by the late Assistant State's Attorney Herbert Appleton, who was assisted by Inspector Lawrence Skinner. The evidence against Sherbacow came from three primary sources: police surveillance; Sherbacow's former client, Thomas Cardillo; and Charles M. Kehoe Jr., to whom Cardillo testified he sold cocaine that he had bought from Sherbacow on Nov. 18, 1986. Cardillo testified that the transaction occurred in Sherbacow's home and in the parking lot of an Avon bar. Kehoe testified that he received nearly 500 grams of cocaine from Cardillo on Nov. 18, and that he didn't buy any more of the drug between then and a Dec. 11, 1986, raid of his home in Hartford. Throughout the trial, Sherbacow maintained his innocence. Both he and Buckley have characterized Cardillo — an admitted drug dealer — as a liar.

Suspended surgeon stops practice

HARTFORD (AP) — A Bridgeport Hospital surgeon, suspended from the hospital last month after one of his patients bled to death during surgery, has temporarily surrendered his right to practice medicine in Connecticut and agreed to undergo a psychiatric examination. A state Department of Health Services investigation into the death is continuing. In an action state officials described as extremely rare, Dr. Norman M. Canter of Fairfield signed an interim consent agreement that calls for him to stop practicing medicine for 30 days. "The agreement is 'not an admission of any wrongdoing,'" said Steven Errante, an attorney representing Canter. Errante said Canter "fully expects that once a full inquiry is made, all that you can't see when someone is obese, you can't really see." According to the Chief State Medical Examiner's office, Hirsch died as a result of "bleeding due to complications of a surgical procedure." The consent agreement, which Canter signed Friday, was presented to the Connecticut Medical Examining Board in Hartford Tuesday, where it was unanimously endorsed. The board is composed of medical and lay people who oversee the quality of health care delivered in the state. The agreement is "not an admission of any wrongdoing," said Steven Errante, an attorney representing Canter. Errante said Canter "fully expects that once a full inquiry is made, all

Violent Oklahoma storms kill one, injure another 14

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP)—Tornadoes killed a child, injured 14 others and damaged scores of buildings in northern and western Oklahoma, authorities said.

At least seven other people in Stillwater, hitting residential areas and the Oklahoma State University campus. At least three other tornadoes touched down in Oklahoma Tuesday night.

A 4-year-old was killed in Stillwater as his mother and a relative's home to take shelter, authorities said. Authorities said the mother, who was cut, was unable to explain exactly what happened when the storm overtook them.

Damage was reported to six apartment complexes and other homes, businesses and schools in this town of 40,000.

About 40 housing units on a university campus were reported damaged, and the storm tore part of the roof off the physical education center.

A twister, bearing winds of 100 mph, cut a mile-long swath in Stillwater, hitting residential areas and the Oklahoma State University campus. At least three other tornadoes touched down in Oklahoma Tuesday night.

Low prices overcome stigma of Love Canal

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP)—The stigma of Love Canal hasn't stopped people from signing up to buy homes at reduced prices at the former chemical dump.

About 200 people by Tuesday had signed a list for homes that will go on the market in about six weeks, according to the Love Canal Area Revitalization Agency.

The Environmental Protection Agency on Monday pronounced 250 homes in what had become a symbol of the nation's toxic waste problems safe to live in. They will be put up for sale over the next three years.

Among those signing up were former Love Canal residents who want to return to the neighborhood they remember fondly.

"The canal went right through my backyard. As kids, we used to go back in those fields, mow them down, play baseball," said Gail McCluskey. "I'm fine, and I have two children. They're fine. I keep in touch with some of the friends I grew up with. They're fine."

James E. Carr, the revitalization agency's planning director, said drains have been installed to catch any leakage from chemicals dumped here by the Hooker Chemical Co. in the 1940s and 1950s.

"They do testing all the time. There's a continual monitoring going on," he said. "Sure, I'd live here."

But Lois Gibbs, a former Love Canal housewife who became an environmental activist, said she and her allies would sue to block resettlement.

She said the study on which the EPA ruled was flawed because scientists compared soil and air samples from the Love Canal neighborhood with samples from two other contaminated parts of the city.

Carr said the asking price for the homes will be between $40,000 and $60,000, about 20 percent less than the going price for similar homes elsewhere in Niagara Falls.

"We are building in a certain stigma factor," he said. "We think that's around 10 percent. We are also building in a factor of the neighborhood being largely vacant."

The government declared Love Canal a disaster area in late 1970s after the dump began leaking PCBs, dioxin and other toxic chemicals. About 2,500 people were evacuated, and nearly 1,100 homes, some built virtually on top of the dump, were left vacant.

"A lot of people never believed (the danger) anyhow," he said. "These are the people who are lined up on our list now."

Anniversary of slayings passes barely noticed

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Twenty years ago, police opened fire on a college dormitory and killed two students, linking Jackson State with Kent State in the national consciousness of a war's bloodshed brought home.

But while the May 4, 1970 killings of four students at the Kent, Ohio, university were marked this year by the inauguration of a monument in a ceremony attended by thousands, the 20th anniversary of the Jackson State shootings passed virtually unobserved.

Classes here ended May 12, and the few staff and students on the quiet, sunny university campus Tuesday went about their business, evidently oblivious to the anniversary of the deaths of James Earl Green and Phillip Gibbs.

A small ceremony took place May 2, attended by about 300 people.

School officials said turnout was light because classes weren't dismissed that day, but some students admitted they knew little about the barrage of gunfire aimed at a crowd outside a women's dormitory.

"There wasn't much talk about (the shootings)," said Tracie Archie, a 20-year-old political science student, who stopped by to view a black stone memorial to the slain students on Tuesday. "My mother told me about it."

At 12:05 a.m. on May 15, 1970, policemen opened fire on students at Jackson State, then a college, during a protest of the Vietnam war and civil rights issues. The FBI later found more than 275 bullet holes in the five-story Alexander Residence Center.

Killed were Gibbs, a 21-year-old pre-law major, and 17-year-old Green, a Jackson high school student walking through the campus on his way home from work. A dozen other students were injured.

"It's a part of history that really, I think, was kept quiet," said Cass Parker, an assistant chemistry

Bush puts his worth at $2.3 million

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Bush's personal worth is valued at $2,352,500, most of it in a blind trust, and he has liabilities of just $49,000, the White House says.

In addition to the blind trust, Bush's principal asset is his seaside home in Kennebunkport, Maine, which he valued at $892,000, according to disclosure forms released Tuesday. However, other estimates have put the value of the ocean-side compound at more than $3 million.

Vice President Dan Quayle and his wife Marilyn reported assets ranging from at least $691,004 to $1,045,000 or more. The Quayles' tax return, released last month, showed interest and dividend income of $16,430, primarily from stock holdings in Central Newspapers Inc., a publishing company owned by Quayle's family.

The Quayles' only liability was the mortgage on their home in McLean, Va., which they rent out while living in the vice presidential residence. The mortgage was listed as between $100,001 to $250,000. They paid off a promissory note of less than $50,000 to Huntington Newspapers on Feb. 28, 1989.

Regulations permit federal officials to list assets and liabilities in ranges rather than precise dollars.

The disclosure forms showed that both the Bushes and the Quayles collected more than $20,000 in all kinds of personal gifts from cowboy boots, to evening bags to baseball cards.

They must publicly disclose any gifts from a single source valued at more than $100.

Spokesmen for Bush and Quayle said many of the gifts were given away to family and friends, such as the 11 pairs of boots a Texan sent for the Bush grandchildren.

Bush and his wife Barbara received at least $26,839 worth of such personal gifts last year, including a $995 pair of cowboy boots and a box of glass Christmas ornaments and tinsel from Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, the forms showed.

Mrs. Bush received the most expensive gift listed on the report: four evening bags valued at $3,102 from a New York designer, Judith Leiber.

First dog Miller got a gingerbread-style Christmas doghouse made from dog biscuits that was valued at $100 from public relations executive Robert Gray.

The Quayles collected $23,014 in personal presents, including a pair of hunting knives worth $2,750 from Gilbert Hibben of Hibben Enterprises in Louisville, Ky.

The disclosure form said Bush's blind trust grew in value in 1989 to $1.28 million from $998,000.

In addition to the Kennebunkport home, the Bushes' assets not in the blind trust were listed as a lot in Houston valued at $81,000, insurance policies with a cash value of $39,000, bank accounts worth $32,000 and individual retirement accounts worth $35,500.

The Bushes have no mortgage. Their only liabilities are three 5 percent loans totaling $45,000 against their life insurance policies.

Among their gifts: two neckties and a watch worth $300 from the Aga Khan; a $455 sweater from designer Ralph Lauren; $466 worth of golf shirts, caps, golf club and instructional videotapes from golfer Lee Trevino; a sweatshirt, jogging shoes and tennis shoes from tennis star Bjorn Borg worth $150; a $100 sterling silver box from Italian President Francesco Cossiga.

A $288 set of baseball cards came from Hall of Famer Stan Musial and Edward Stack of Cooperstown, N.Y.

Dems push Bush for deficit plan

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congressional Democrats say they want President Bush to lay out his own deficit plan to tell them how to slash a federal deficit the administration now says could approach $200 billion next year.

Bush and other top administration officials met Tuesday with 21 leading lawmakers of both parties in the first talks on the politically deadlocked 1991 federal budget.

The talks began two weeks after Congress began moving toward approval of $1.2 trillion spending plan written by Democrats. Those measures slash Bush's proposed Pentagon budget, but lack the deficit reduction the White House now says is needed.

Bargainers said that while Tuesday's session went well, no specific approaches for attacking the shortfall were discussed, including possible tax increases or spending cuts.

"Everything was generalities," said Rep. Silvio Conte of Massachusetts, ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Committee.

Participants said the 100-minute meeting focused on the growing size of the budget gap and the urgency of tackling the problem.

"It is important to act while the economy is still growing, for growth is not as strong or secure as it should be," Bush told the negotiators.

Leary of being blamed for suggesting tax increases or spending cuts, Democrats insisted that Bush — who called for the proposal two weeks ago — must lay out his own deficit plan.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., said Democrats told Bush that after bargainers finish discussing technical issues, "the next step in our judgment was to hear the administration's recommendations on how we approach the problem."

Another negotiator, Senate Budget Committee Chairman James Sasser, D-Tenn., said he believes Bush wants Democrats to first reveal their own deficit-reduction ideas.

"There was not an affirmative response from the president that he'd come forward with proposals," Sasser said.

Sasser also said that at Tuesday's session, White House budget chief Richard Darman offered new figures further swelling the expected size of the budget gap for fiscal 1991, which starts Oct. 1.

According to Sasser, Darman said next year's deficit would range between $140 billion and $188 billion if the costs of rescuing the savings and loan industry are included. The shortfall would be about $138 billion if those expenses are not counted.

The new figures mean it would take $72 billion to $124 billion in some combination of higher taxes and spending cuts to stay within the Gramm-Rudman deficit limit of $64 billion for next year.

One possible outcome of the talks, however, is an agreement to raise next year's deficit target, thus requiring fewer cuts or new taxes. Darman has said he believes a good goal for the negotiators is agreement on a $50 billion deficit reduction package.

Sasser said the figures resemble projections by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office, which lawmakers consider reliable.

"I'm not that surprised about them," Sasser said, referring to Darman's numbers.

Just last week, Darman told Republican senators that he believed the 1991 deficit could be from $124 billion to $164 billion.

The administration blames higher interest rates, a drop in tax collections and the rising savings and loan costs for the swelling deficit projection.

Under current law, the savings and loan expenses must be considered in deficit calculations, but the administration and many in Congress want to exclude them. Supporters say that otherwise, the savings and loan costs will cause wild swings in the deficit in the next few years as the government assumes the assets of failing institutions and later sells them.

Negotiators plan to meet again Thursday.

OPINION

Tradeoff is money vs. preservation

The preservation of the Cheney Historic District on the whole has gone very well, but the means of preserving the Cheney Lawn has been a perplexing problem.

The mill buildings have been or will be converted to other uses, mostly residences, without any appreciable change in their exterior appearance.

Aside from a few disputes about signs and accessories attached to the buildings, and adequacy of parking, the process of guaranteeing the survival of the historic area has gone smoothly. The success has come about as the result of reconciling the economic interests of those who own the properties with the need for historical integrity, if not total historical accuracy.

The lawn has been a special problem. It was originally maintained by the Cheney families for their own use.

For a long time after the Cheney era, the owner of the most visible part of the lawn maintained it undeveloped and it remained there for public view.

Now the land is owned by others who do not find it economically feasible for them to maintain the lawn without some economic return from it.

After considerable negotiation a broad agreement was reached by the Cheney Historic District Commission and the owners of the lawn. The plan would keep the most visible part of the lawn undeveloped. It seemed like the next best solution to the do-nothing option, which appeared legally and economically unfeasible.

Now a consultant engaged by the Connecticut Trust for Land Preservation has come forward with a number of suggestions prompted by a desire for historical purity.

Some of the consultant's specific observations about how the lawn should and should not be developed are interesting and well worth consideration.

But the development constraints suggested in the study are coupled with recompensing owners for loss of development rights, possibly by purchasing them.

However, the idea of issuing bonds to make the lawn public was broached some years ago when voter support appeared unlikely. And the idea of getting public contributions for the lawn also was considered and dropped.

It seems clear that any solution to the lawn problem will have to be reached without the use of public funds, even if that involves some historical sacrifices.

Draft for Dodd emerges worked for the late U.S. Sen. Thomas Dodd, the current senator's father. Goodin says "Chris will kill me" for going public like this, but he believes Dodd is the one who can win and turn a troubled state around. He says Dodd has the prestige and contacts to assemble a top-level team for an administration that would do just that. He's told Dodd emphatically that the state needs him. In terms of practical politics, Goodin also says Dodd has the statewide recognition and favorable standing that Morrison lacks. He says Dodd could raise significant money quickly. He says Dodd could rally a party that is deeply worried about November. John Sullivan, of Manchester, is also a long-time insider with the Dodd family going back when the elder Dodd was in Congress and the Senate. He says "I'm talking this up; he is our only hope." A veteran member of the Democratic State Central Committee, Sullivan is working on others there share his fears for the fall election. Sullivan has suggested to Dodd that he owes it to the party to come to its rescue. He told the senator that many incumbent Democrats — some of whom have helped him — can lose if the party takes a bath. Between Goodin and Sullivan, they want of Dodd to identify the two chief proponents of the draft Dodd idea who otherwise aren't communicating with each other, but are quite serious about what they are doing. Al Goodin of Coventry is a long-time close friend of the Dodd family.

Driftners continue to kill

By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta

WASHINGTON — Efforts to save the world's dolphin population from the nets of tuna fishermen have gained momentum recently. American tuna companies, starting with Starkist, are pledging to develop new fishing procedures that will keep the docile mammals from being caught in nets, where they die. The gesture was hailed by environmentalists. But congressional investigators told us that the advances will merely put a dent in the number of marine mammals killed by fishing boats around the world. Tens of thousands of dolphins were trapped last year by foreign driftnets, where they suffocate, bleed or starve to death. And the biggest killer is not the United States, but Japan, South Korea and Taiwan.

Driftnets, made of nylon material that is almost invisible to marine life, are up to 40 miles long. They scoop down 50 feet, snagging the fish that are the targets of fishermen, but also drawing in mammals and sea turtles. Rep. Jolene Unsoeld, D-Wash., and Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., are pushing legislation that would impose sanctions against foreign countries that continue to use driftnets without regard for the dolphins. But the Bush administration opposes the sanctions. The president's fanclub uses one of their classic lines, that there isn't enough scientific documentation to justify the sanctions.

While some conservation initiatives have been launched at home, the administration has been unwilling to pressure other countries to follow suit. That is a mistake. The threat to wildlife, air and water is a global problem, not just an American one. The United States and Japan have signed a pact to monitor use of drifters by Japanese, Taiwanese and South Korean fishing fleets in the North Pacific. But critics of that plan told our associate Scott Sleek, that the checks are inadequate. Only a small percentage of the fleets will be checked. The United Nations last year adopted a resolution banning drifting by 1992 unless adequate conservation systems are used. Unsoeld calls that a loophole. Inadequate monitoring of fishing fleets by the United States will make it easy for fishermen to skirt the resolution.

What now, Toto? George Bush has been caught up in the end of World War II — should continue operations in a united Germany, the panel said in its annual report. It said the continued broadcasts would serve as a "major source of information about democracy and the United States" for the 16 million East Germans who would be joining a united German nation.

The panel said the goal of Radio Free Europe and other surrogate broadcasting operations "will be achieved if democratic trends in Eastern Europe are sustained." It said a strategy should be developed now for transferring the assets of Radio Free Europe to the Voice of America, "where the separate need for them ceases."

Strikers put more pressure on Chamorro

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A pro-Sandinista strike virtually paralyzed public services in the capital today, putting staggering pressures on the 3-week-old government of Violeta Barrios de Chamorro.

Nicaraguan and U.S. government officials accused the once-ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front of trying to undermine the conservative administration, a charge no Sandinista official has denied publicly so far. Sonia Ortiz, a labor leader, said the strikers want a 200 percent pay raise, a subsidized food package, rehiring of a labor leader fired Monday, and the demobilization of the Contra rebels. "Lady Violeta has no idea what organized Sandinista workers are," she said.

Telephone, telegraph and telex communications were dead, cutting off most of Nicaragua from the rest of the world. Communications workers allowed journalists to file stories but urged them to observe. Working phone service even to President Chamorro's offices was cut for several hours on Tuesday.

Officially, the goal is higher pay but Mrs. Chamorro, whose 14-party coalition defeated the Sandinistas Feb. 25, is looming as a major and growing target. Her government has an inflation rate running about 70 percent a month. In a cable to President Bush, Mrs. Chamorro appealed for a quick $40 million to curb the economic crisis that led to the strikes while Congress considers a $300 million aid request. "My country is bankrupt," she said.

European changes imperil Radio Free Europe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States should begin planning now to end broadcasts by Radio Free Europe because their goal of inspiring democratic change in Eastern Europe is being achieved, an advisory panel said today. The U.S. Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy said that congressional directives to establish such operations as TV Marti, which broadcasts to Cuba, "reduce the flexibility needed to meet opportunities in Eastern Europe and maintain core public diplomacy programs of proven value." While Radio Free Europe broadcasts probably should eventually come to an end, U.S. government officials said, the panel urged that the separate need for them cease. It said the criteria for making the

Subway shover caught

NEW YORK (AP) — A 36-year-old Queens man was pushed from a subway platform onto the tracks at the Rockefeller Center station early today, but was helped back up and the suspected shover was captured, Transit Authority police said. It was the second such incident within 24 hours on the subway system. The suspect loosely fit the description of a man who pushed a college student under a train at an elevated station in Queens early Tuesday, said Transit police spokesman Al O'Leary. He said investigators were looking into whether the incidents were connected. O'Leary identified the man thrown to the track as he waited for

Van Gogh pic nets $82 million

NEW YORK (AP) — Vincent van Gogh's melancholy portrait of the doctor who treated him in the weeks before his suicide sold at auction for $82.5 million, making it by far the most expensive painting in the world.

The sale Tuesday of "Portrait of Dr. Gachet" came after a 10-minute bidding war at Christie's auction house between two buyers who jacked up the price in increments of $1 million.

The 26-by-22.5-inch oil was worth $141,000 per square inch to Kobayashi Gallery of Tokyo, which has emerged in recent years as a major buyer of Impressionist art.

The total surpassed the $53.9 million paid for van Gogh's "Irises" in 1987 at Sotheby's, said Susan Britman, a Christie's spokeswoman.

Explaining the astronomical price, Christie's President Christopher Wainwright said the painting's good condition, its high-profile exhibitions in New York and London, and its "aura" as one of van Gogh's five best paintings.

"We may have to wait another 20 years for a picture of that importance," Burger said. Dealer Hideto Kobayashi told Kyodo News Service he bought the painting on behalf of an unidentified Japanese company that wanted the work at any price. "I'm extremely pleased," Kyodo quoted Kobayashi as saying.

Owned by the trust of German-born banker Siegfried Kramsky, who died in 1961, "Portrait of Dr. Gachet" had hung since 1984 at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Christie's had expected it to fetch between $40 million and $50 million.

The painting was completed in 1890, five weeks before the artist's suicide in 1890.

Inflation inches up moderately

WASHINGTON (AP) — Falling costs for vegetables, fuel oil and women's clothing helped hold consumer price inflation to 0.2 percent in April, the government said today. It was the first moderate report after a severe cold snap sent prices spiraling 1.1 percent in January.

The Labor Department's Consumer Price Index had risen 0.5 percent in both February and March. For the first four months of the year, inflation was running at a 6.8 percent seasonally adjusted annual rate, up from 4.6 percent for all of 1989.

In April, food and beverage prices fell 0.2 percent, the first decline since July 1987. Non-alcoholic beverages and dairy products were down, while prices rose for cereal and bakery products, beef, pork, sweets and oils.

Fresh vegetable prices, which rose 29.2 percent in the first two months of the year, fell 15.3 percent last month, bringing the decline for April and March to 19.8 percent. Energy prices dropped 0.4 percent after declining the two previous months. Gasoline prices, with the start of the new school driving season, climbed 0.3 percent and electricity costs were up 0.2 percent.

However, fuel oil fell 0.6 percent, the third consecutive decline, while natural gas dropped 3.0 percent. Excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, prices rose a moderate 0.2 percent after rising a worrisome 0.7 percent in March. Economists say this "core" number is often a better indicator of underlying inflationary pressures in the economy.

New automobile prices fell 0.2 percent in April. Clothing price inflation moderated from a month earlier. Apparel prices overall were unchanged after rising 1.7 percent in March.

Women's and girls' clothing costs fell 0.5 percent. However, men's and boys' clothing costs were up 0.4 percent while infants' and toddlers' costs rose 1.9 percent.

Health care costs rose a steep 0.8 percent, the third increase in a row at that level.

Cafeteria

Cuprak returned to Bennet and spoke with the school's other vice-principal, Marsha Gunther. Gunther's efforts to find an answer to that question were unsuccessful, however.

Finally, through contacts with the business community, Joyce Wazer, coordinator of volunteer services for the schools, was able to get in touch with Gary Gersten of Windsor, a realtor for McDonald's.

He told Cuprak that McDonald's just threw away its old furniture.

Gersten, however, liked the idea of donating the furniture to a school. Therefore, he arranged for Bennet to receive the furniture from a McDonald's in Springfield, Mass. that was undergoing remodeling.

Cuprak drove up to McDonald's on a Friday to look at the furniture. "It was in excellent condition," he said.

He rented a truck and found some men to move the furniture and picked up the first load on Tuesday, about two weeks after he had driven by the abandoned McDonald's on Center Street.

The school closed one of its three cafeterias while setting up the furniture in it. With donations, the school bought flowers and plants to decorate the room.

"It's beautiful, absolutely beautiful," Cuprak said. "It looks like a restaurant." The furniture includes the booths and benches typically found in McDonald's — even McDonald's trash cans.

Today, students were allowed to eat in the room for the first time. "The kids are all excited," Cuprak said.

Lunch schedules will be arranged so all the students will be given a chance to eat there, Cuprak said.

School officials are so happy with the furniture that they want to give another cafeteria that McDonald's lost.

Arrangements are being made to move furniture from a McDonald's in Torrington and one in Windsor, Cuprak said. These restaurants have a different design from the one in Springfield to the second cafeteria that is remodeled will not be the same as the first.

Besides being brighter than the former decor, the McDonald's furniture also has practical advantages, according to Cuprak. The new furniture can seat many more students in the cafeteria than the previous furniture. Therefore, school officials believe they will no longer need a second cafeteria and will be able to convert it to a lounge or a student store.

Negro

said Town Attorney Maureen Chmielecki today.

So Chmielecki and one of her assistants plan to travel to New York Friday to look for Edward Westlow, an attorney who was in charge of handling Westlow funds.

Chmielecki said attempts to telephone Westlow have failed with the numbers either being out of service or saying Westlow does not live there any more. But the town has a Madison Avenue address.

"It might be some number that doesn't exist or some hole in the wall," she said, but adds, "my conscience tells me I should at least take a trip down there. I'm very fearful that if we don't make the trip, then whatever money was there will be gone."

However, Chmielecki said she does not know if Westlow had made an illegal withdrawal of town funds from a New York bank and if he had had an interest in politics.

The job is part-time, and his duties take from 25 to 30 hours per week.

Negro explained the work involved. He invests any and all of the town's surplus funds, which vary depending upon the given day expenditures and revenues.

modern technology as an improvement in hospital services that provides increased health benefits to patients.

PCA frees up valuable time of nurses, who traditionally have administered pain relief to surgery patients in the form of injections every six to eight hours, a nurse only has to refill a syringe on a PCA pump twice per day.

"How they can get just the right amount," said Pam Duchesneau, director of medical nursing at MGH.

PCA also gives patients constant pain relief, rather than the high and low periods of pain felt just before and after an injection is administered.

"People out there who are afraid or anxious about coming to the hospital for an operation now can feel more comfortable in knowing that they will not be at the mercy of nurses," said Dr. Robert Audest of the MGH's anesthesiology department. "They will have control post-operatively."

Many patients who undergo operations "feel like they are on a raft going down a river out of control," Audest said.

PCA helps to minimize patients' stress by giving them some control, he said.

Using PCA, a patient who undergoes a certain type of surgery, such as abdominal, or suffers from chronic pain, such as that which is caused by cancer, administrators only as much pain relief as he feels is needed, the physician said.

That way the patient does not become overmedicated and groggy.

Patients using PCA can breathe more freely and get up to walk around while in the hospital, which is crucial to their recovery, the physician said. Patients who are inactive have a greater risk of developing health problems such as blood clots, collapsed lungs, fevers and pneumonia, he said.

"The best thing to decrease a hospital stay is movement," said Audest. "This machine allows them to do that."

According to the physician, other modern methods of pain control used at MGH are oral medication, such as pills or liquids; intravenous drips, in which medicine drips continuously into a patient's bloodstream; nerve blocks, which temporarily block nerves from sending pain signals to the brain; and epidural catheters, which numb certain parts of the body.

Of these, PCA is the logical choice of pain control for doctors to make in many medical situations, Audest said.

turn, gave endearing send-ups of such performers as Jerry Lewis.

His work on stage, screen and television displayed a versatility matched by few in the business. Though scorned by some as merely a gilded Las Vegas drone, and criticized by others as being a stolen of the "Fat Pack," Davis was greatly admired and respected as an entertainer's entertainer. Sir Laurence Olivier reportedly used Davis as a guide in preparing for his role in the 1965 film version of "Othello."

"He is the most talented performer I've ever known," his longtime sickle Frank Sinatra once said.

In 1958's "Anna Lucasta," one of the few all-black dramas to emerge from Hollywood before the 1970s, Davis played a munny sailor opposite a lusty Eartha Kitt. He was slick and engaging as Sportin' Life in Otto Preminger's "Porgy and Bess" (1959). In 1964's "Salt and Pepper," he and Peter Lawford portrayed London nightclub owners who solve a murder.

Davis appeared in more than 20 movies and starred in two Broadway productions — "My Wonderful" and "Golden Boy." He received a Tony nomination for best actor in a musical for "Golden Boy" in 1965 but lost to Zero Mostel, who won for "Fiddler on the Roof."

Davis also performed on numerous television specials and series, including "General Electric Theater," "Mod Squad," "Lawman and "All in the Family."

He attracted a wide and diverse audience, and was considered a big enough draw to have his own TV series. "The Sammy Davis Jr. Show" in 1966, and "Sammy and Company" in 1975-77.

His lively, upbeat manner belied a very difficult life. His career was scarred by vicious racial bigotry. There were endless taunts, and at one time, he couldn't gamble or rent a room in some of the Vegas hotels at which he played. His second marriage to Swedish actress Mai Britt was scorned by some.

He also faced drug and alcohol abuse and crippling tax problems.

abolition of the resolution on the national status of Estonia.

A pro-independence newspaper, The Estonian Independent, reported that Estonian Prime Minister Edgar Savisaar told Baker in a telegram about Tuesday's attempt by Moscow loyalists to occupy Estonian government buildings.

Savisaar told Baker the Estonian government "would be deeply surprised were the incidents in Estonia and Latvia not to find reverberation" in today's talks.

A crowd estimated at up to 6,000 swarmed around Estonia's parliament building in the republic's capital, Tallinn, on Tuesday. Savisaar broadcast an appeal for citizens to "Come here to save Estonia!"

"There is a coup attempt here," he said in the broadcast, which was monitored in Moscow and transcribed by the ETA Estonian news agency in Tallinn.

Thousands of Tallinn residents rushed to the parliament and replaced the red Soviet flag with the traditional blue, white and black banner that was raised last week when the legislature restored a 1937 independence charter.

Pro-independence demonstrators formed two human chains through which Soviet loyalists were allowed to leave the area, ETA reported.

Calm returned to the city by 7:50 p.m., Estonian reports said.

East slammed out of ACC playoff picture

By Herald Staff

TRUMBULL — If there was any question about East Catholic High defending its All Connecticut Conference baseball championship, it all came to an end with one crack of the bat Tuesday afternoon.

St. Joseph's Pat Petrie blasted a grand slam homer in the bottom of the seventh as the Cadets downed the slumping Eagles, 5-3.

The win lifts the Cadets to 5-3 in the ACC, 9-6 overall. They're in the third and final playoff slot while the Eagles fall to 3-5 in the ACC to occupy fifth place in the six-team circuit.

"Psychologically, this really hurts," East coach Jim

Penders said. "I hope the kids can rebound. We're not young, but inexperienced. It's a tough loss because it's our third in a row and Xavier won't feel sorry for us."

Xavier, which hosts East tonight at 7 at Palmer Field in Middletown, stands at 7-10 and needs to win its final three games to qualify for the state tournament. East, 8-6, needs to win two of its final six games to make it into the tournament.

St. Joseph pitcher Jeff Pisarcetta limited the Eagles to four hits. "We're not hitting the ball hard like we were the start of the year," Penders said. "I think we hit two balls hard today. We're struggling at the plate."

Pisarcetta struck out four and walked seven. But the Eagles stranded nine runners in the final four innings.

East scored a run in the fourth. Sophomore Rob Penders, who drew three walks, received a bases on balls. Jim Penders was safe on an error. Designated hitter Brian Daniels drew in the run with a single off the second baseman's glove.

East added its final two runs in the sixth. Rob Penders walked and Dave Canuso singled off the third baseman's glove. John Fisher was safe on an error and Neil Darjes followed with a two-run single.

The Cadets placed their first run in the sixth. In the seventh, Mike Reel and Scott Torreso drew bases on balls from firing East hurler Fisher. Pisarcetta singled to left to load the bases and Petrie, who doubled and scored in the sixth, unloaded on Fisher's first offering, blasting

Athletes can do well in both arenas

There's still a dumb jock image that pervades today. Just open a newspaper, or turn on a sports broadcast on television, and you'll hear about another Prop 48 victim — a talented basketball player who isn't eligible to play his freshman year because of his underachieving in the academic realm.

Or you'll hear about an entire team that played basketball, but didn't have a clue what the inside of a classroom looked like. Call it the Jim Valvano school of education.

With stories like this cropping up all the time, there are an awful lot of people who lump all athletes together. Not true.

There are, indeed, student-athletes who fill both pronouncements superbly. There are several examples of this on the scholastic level with the Manchester High School track programs, and the Coventry High girls' basketball program.

For example, Manchester's Alexis Cruz, who just won two events (long jump and triple jump) at the prestigious Hartford Public Invitational Track and Field Meet last weekend, is in the top 10 of the senior class. She's been accepted at Harvard. Dave Campbell, one of the leaders of the boys' team in the shot put, discus and 400, is also in the top 10. He's Yale bound.

Erica DeLoannis is among the top five in the senior class. Mary Suior (James Madison University), Doung Hennavanh (WPI), and Pat Dwyer (UConn) are among the top 25 in the class while Heidi Howarth, Emil Isaacs (UConn) and Dave Jarvis (UConn) are in the top 50 of the senior class that numbers 483.

All are high honor or honor roll students.

Klima makes his time count for Oilers

By Ken Rappoport

BOSTON — Petr Klima didn't start and didn't play much. All he did was finish off the Boston Bruins.

"I had an advantage because I was fresher than anyone else out there," Klima said after ending a bizarre marathon game at Boston Garden with a goal at 15:13 of the third overtime, giving the Edmonton Oilers a 3-2 victory over the Bruins in the opener of the Stanley Cup finals Tuesday night.

Until he scored the game-winner to end the five-hour, 32-minute game, Klima was practically a no-show.

As a member of Edmonton's fourth line, he had played only a couple of shifts in the game and sat on the bench from before 10 p.m. until after 1 a.m.

"The game plan was to use three lines," Klima said. "I knew before the game that I wouldn't be playing much."

Klima, nor anyone else, figured he would be playing at all after the second period.

But no one figured, either, that the game would be one for the record books as the longest in the Stanley Cup finals.

The 55-minute, 13-second overtime beat the 53:50 established in the 1931 finals when Cy Wentworth scored in the third overtime to give the Chicago Blackhawks a 3-2 victory over the Montreal Canadiens. Tuesday night's game was also the ninth longest game in NHL history.

Klima wasn't too concerned with that — only with ending a game that was as unusual as it was tense.

It was a game that had everything, including tight defense, hard hitting and great goalkeeping by Edmonton's Bill Ranford and Boston's Andy Moog.

"You had to be on your toes all the time in a game like that," said Ranford, who made 50 saves. "I think we were all exhausted."

But, somehow, Ranford managed to stand tall, even though the Bruins had tied the game with two third-period goals by defenseman Ray Bourque, the second one with just 1:29 remaining in regulation.

Bourque practically owned the third period. He got off seven shots on goal, one more than the entire Oilers team. "The way they came at us in the third period, it was hard to stay confident," Ranford said. "I started to tighten up a little bit."

"My pads got a little heavy, my gloves got heavier," Ranford said. "I was starting to get dehydrated. It wasn't easy."

Ranford wasn't the only one feeling it. The Bruins' Craig Janney, who had the flu, eventually was forced to leave the game with dehydration.

Then came the problem with the lights at Boston Garden.

Early in the third period, a power shortage hit the Garden — reminiscent of the infamous blackout in the 1988 playoffs between these two very same teams. That fourth game of the series was canceled when a faulty generator plunged the Garden into darkness. The game was replayed in Edmonton two nights later, when the Oilers completed a sweep of the Bruins.

"It happened again," Oilers forward Craig Simpson said. "Fortunately, it didn't cancel the game this time."

SAYS IT ALL — Boston goalie Andy Moog slumps against a goal post during a break in Game 1 of the Stanley Cup finals against the Edmonton Oilers at Boston Garden. The Oilers won in triple overtime, 3-2.

For a while, it looked as if the Oilers wouldn't need an overtime to beat the Bruins.

Adam Graves scored a first-period goal at 9:46 and Glenn Anderson one in the second period at 13:00 for a 2-0 Oilers lead. It stood that way until Bourque took charge in the third.

The Bruins outshot the Oilers 15-6 in that period to send the game into overtime tied 2-2.

"He has done that all year," Boston coach Mike Milbury said of Bourque. "That is why he is the MVP of the season for us. He has done it again and again. I don't know how much ice time he logged tonight, but it must be staggering."

Meanwhile, Klima was just hoping to get into the game.

Finally, Muckler gave him the green light.

"We had to get some fresh bodies out there that at that point," Muckler said of the third overtime. "Nobody was really generating too much offense late in the overtime. They were two exhausted hockey clubs."

The fatigue factor was equal on both sides, except for Klima, whose fresh legs ended the "Boston Marathon."

"The two teams tied together," said Moog, who made 28 saves. "Then it was just a matter of who gets the break, and they got it tonight."

The series will continue with Game 2 Friday night in Boston and Game 3 Saturday night in Edmonton.

"It was a tough loss, but we can't worry about it any more," said Boston's Glen Wesley. "You just have to look at it as one game and regroup for Friday."

Cary's outing lift for Yanks

NEW YORK (AP) — Check Cary, who hadn't pitched this season because of bone chips in his left elbow, came off the disabled list and gave the New York Yankees a big lift.

Cary pitched seven strong innings for his first victory of the season and Don Mattingly hit his 100th Yankee Stadium homer, leading the New York Yankees to a 7-3 victory over the Minnesota Twins on Tuesday night.

The left-hander was activated from the 21-day disabled list before the game and allowed one run on four hits. He walked one and struck out eight.

"I wouldn't say I feel great," said Cary, who spent over a month on the disabled list. "But I feel good enough to go out there every fifth day."

"I'm excited to just be back. But to come back like this is especially exciting," he said. "Realistically, I only thought I was capable of going five or six innings tops, and hopefully keep us in the game."

But he did more than that, allowing the Twins only a hint of a rally in the fifth, when he gave up his lone run. He missed a fastball and had slider with a sweeping curve and screwball, consistently keeping the hitters off balance.

"It was the best I've ever seen him pitch," Minnesota's Kent Hrbek said. "Maybe he should get hurt more often."

"Frankly, Cary was too much for us to handle tonight," Twins manager Tom Kelly said.

Cary, the club's fifth starter, went on the disabled list April 15, retroactive to April 9. He was sent on May 1 to Tampa of the Class AAA League on a rehabilitation assignment, where he went 2-0 in three starts.

To make room on the roster for Cary, the Yankees optioned pitcher Clay Parker to Class AAA Columbus of the International League.

Mattingly, who had four RBIs, gave the Yankees a 3-0 lead in the first with a three-run homer off starter Roy Smith (1-4). It was his third homer of the year and first since April 25.

THE PITS — Manchester High's Alexis Cruz lands in the pits during her effort in the long jump in Tuesday's meet against Enfield High at Peto Weyron Track. Cruz won the event with a jump of 16 feet, 8 inches. For complete scholastic results, see page 12.

Florida lawmakers looking for a fight with the NCAA

By Bill Kazor
The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — A bill that would make the NCAA follow state due process requirements when it investigates alleged rule violations in Florida is an "inappropriate intrusion" and might be fought, a top NCAA official said.

Florida lawmakers took turns hatching the National Collegiate Athletic Association before a Senate committee approved the bill Tuesday.

Sylvia Porter

Reclaiming land can be difficult

If you, your family or your business once owned property abroad that was taken over by a foreign government, what can you do to recover it?

During World War II and in the years before and after, holders of U.S. citizens and companies in Eastern and Central Europe were seized by new governments that took control in those areas.

And that dealt only with claims arising before 1933. No claims arising since 1933 have been addressed at all.

There's always a possibility that an agreement can be negotiated, and we certainly have a continuing interest in that.

It's difficult to determine the extent to which Americans have unresolved claims against Eastern Bloc countries, says those involved in the issue.

In 1966, Congress authorized mining of the 5-cent piece. In 1965, actor Henry Fonda was born in Grand Island, Neb.

Unhappy patron sues hairdresser

DEAR ABBY: Re the letter from "Sheard" who asked, "Has anyone ever sued a barber for a lousy haircut?" I have. I took a hairdresser to small claims court. It was a matter of principle. I just wanted to recover the cost of the lousy haircut he gave me.
