Huge losses for 1st quarter yield warning

By Dianna M. Talbot
Manchester Herald

ComFed Bancorp officers said today that the bank's future is questionable, after its weekend announcement of huge losses for the first quarter of the year. ComFed operates three branches in Manchester, the product of its 1987 acquisition of Manchester-based Heritage Savings & Loan. Although the bank recently reversed an announcement that it would close its Manchester branches, bank industry analysts say that move is probably only a prelude to a sale of those offices.

Court: prayer groups can use schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — Student prayer groups must be allowed to meet at public schools that permit other organized extracurricular activities, the Supreme Court ruled today.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the court, said the Equal Access Act of 1984 passes the court's long-standing three-part test aimed at assuring separation of church and state.

"The possibility of student peer pressure remains," she said. "But there is little if any risk of official state endorsement or coercion where no formal classroom activities are involved and no school officials actively participate."

Native shares skills

A 3-year-old girl traveled by camel with her family for 10 days so the doctor could treat the infected abscess on her face.

A 6-year-old girl hobbled to him on one leg because her other was decaying from gangrene. The wounds, caused by shrapnel from an artillery shell, were weeks old, the doctor said.

Both young Afghan refugees probably would have died without Dr. Thomas B. Walden.

Walden, a 42-year-old Manchester native and son of Dr. and Mrs. Robert C. Walden Jr. of Princeton Street, visited the war-torn, Pakistan-Afghanistan border region in the Middle East for three months, ending in March.

The Eastern, Penn., resident left his wife, children, patients and associates because he wanted to go somewhere where people truly needed help, somewhere where he could make a difference, he said.

While there, he saw people — some of the nearly 3 million refugees who fled their homeland to Pakistan during the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan — living from hand to mouth in mud-walled huts and tents in the desert.

The people virtually had no access to medical care, and Walden's goal was to help bring Afghan physicians, many who were refugees themselves, up-to-date on surgical procedures.

The trip brought him personal satisfaction. "I got a lot out of the system in the U.S. and feel it's time to give

School asbestos job questioned

By Nancy Foley
Manchester Herald

Before paying for any school asbestos removal, the Board of Directors must be convinced that the work is necessary, according to two Republican directors.

Mayor Terry Werhoven and town Director Ronald Oella said the danger of asbestos has been overblown, and schools and businesses are often ripped off by asbestos-removal contractors.

"Asbestos isn't that bad," Werhoven said. "We don't want to haphazardly remove asbestos that isn't a health hazard," Oella said.

The pair made their remarks in response to a request by the Board of Education to re-establish a reserve fund with a starting balance of $300,000 to remove asbestos in the schools.

But school officials say they only want to do work that is absolutely necessary. "We don't take it out just to take it out," said Wilfred Dion, director of buildings and grounds.

Asbestos, a carcinogen, becomes dangerous once it is airborne, or friable.

The most urgent project is at Waddell School, where a boiler needs repair. That will cost only about $5,000, according to Dion. But asbestos removal in the room, which has two other boilers, will cost $50,000.

Before any contractor will repair the Waddell boiler, the asbestos must be removed from the room, Dion said.

However, Oella and Werhoven said that perhaps only some of the asbestos could be removed, or the asbestos could be encapsulated, which is much less costly than removal.

"There is no need to waste taxpayers' money," Oella said.

Students, police duel in Beijing

By Dianna M. Talbot
Manchester Herald

BEIJING (AP) — Beijing University students hurled bricks and bottles at security forces and hundreds rallied early today in the boldest anti-government protest since troops crushed the pro-democracy movement one year ago.

The campus protest defied the heaviest security Beijing has seen since martial law was lifted in January, and several Western journalists who covered it were roughed up and briefly detained by police.

Thousands of soldiers and police were out in force in the capital. For a fourth straight day, Tiananmen Square was sealed off by paramilitary police to prevent any attempt to honor victims of the June 3-4 crackdown.

Hundreds and possibly thousands of unnamed civilians were killed in last year's army attack, which cleared the square and the rest of central Beijing of pro-democracy demonstrators.

Students led last spring's pro-democracy protests, attracting workers, intellectuals and some peasants to their campaign for reform and against official corruption. For weeks, they occupied Tiananmen, China's symbolic center.

Today, vanloads of police guarded streets near the 100-acre square. At the midnight rally at Beijing

University, hundreds of student protesters shouted, "Get rid of Li Peng!"

The Chinese premier, one of the leaders involved in the crackdown, is the most widely blamed and hated.

The Beijing University campus was quiet the rest of the day, and students went to class. University authorities told students they could face repercussions if they ignored orders to stay on campus.

The great majority, cowed by a year of intimidation, obeyed. But some students said they were prepared to join any protest that occurred. "We're tightly conpared with a 4.5 percent increase during all of 1989. Original data had unit labor costs rising 4.9 percent so far this year. Hourly labor costs — a major inflation measure for businesses — rose at an annual rate of 4.1 percent in the first quarter of 1990. Those costs increased by 5.5 percent for all of 1989. The report provided one bit of good news — productivity in the manufacturing sector climbed 4.9 percent so far this year, a huge improvement over the 2 percent increase during all of 1989. Unit labor costs in that sector dropped 1.3 percent in the first quarter of 1990. Please see PRODUCTIVITY, page 8

Onnen leads Coventry to win

Patriots advance to S quarterfinals

By Jim Tierney
Manchester Herald

COVENTRY — Senior southpaw Gary Onnen has been one of the main reasons for the brilliant season the Coventry High baseball team has assembled.

And, Friday afternoon in a second-round Class S state tournament game with 15th-seeded St. Thomas Aquinas of New Britain, the home-staying and second-seeded Patriots utilized the arm and bat of Onnen to edge the Saints, 3-2, at Coventry High.

Coventry (19-3) will meet 10th-seeded East Granby (15-6) in a quarterfinal game tonight at 6:30 at Muzzy Field in Bristol. Aquinas bows out at 12-8.

Onnen, who possesses a fine mix of offspeed pitches and fastballs, fanned 13 batters and walked one in his superb complete-game victory which raised his unblemished mark to 9-0. He allowed five hits and struck out the side in the third, sixth and seventh innings.

Of the three Patriot hits, Onnen had two of them, including a key two-run triple in a three-run first frame. He was 1-for-14 previous to Friday's game. "I was throwing offspeed stuff to their top four hitters," Onnen said.

Coventry coach Bob Plaster understated Onnen's effort. "He pitched well," he said.

Aquinas coach Ken Skoglund credited Onnen as being the key to Coventry's win. "It was a well-played game," Skoglund said. "We have nothing to be ashamed of. We got beat by a good pitcher. Both pitchers did their job. We swing. We don't hit it. There's not much you can do."

All of Coventry's runs came in the first frame. With one out, Steve Poulin reached on a check-swing infield hit down the third base line. Jeff Rheault grounded to Saints' shortstop Tim Sullivan, who flipped to second baseman A.J. Nedeko for the force play. But Nedeko dropped the ball, and everyone was safe.

Onnen then delivered his two-run triple to deep right field, and scored on a suicide squeeze by John Toten. "We made that one mistake in the first inning and that kind of opened the gates," Skoglund said.

"The first inning they made a couple of mistakes and that ended up being the only runs we scored," Plaster said. "We really didn't hit the ball today."

Aquinas came right back with a run in the second on a leadoff solo home run by cleanup hitter Scott Szyalek to deep centerfield. The 6-4 Szyalek, who legged it around the bases before the relay, is bound for Fairfield University on a basketball scholarship.

After the home run, Andy Riccio doubled. With no outs, Jamie Palmese attempted a sacrifice bunt, but Onnen nailed Riccio at third base.

The Saints chopped their deficit to 3-2 in the third when T.R. Marcinczyk drilled a triple to centerfield scoring Alex Baras, who drew the only free pass by Onnen on the afternoon.

GROUNDOUT — Coventry High's Steve Poulin makes contact, but grounds out in the third inning of Friday's state Class S second-round tournament game with St. Thomas Aquinas. The Patriots won, 3-2, to advance to today's quarterfinals.

What's News ...

Sewer fees to be voted upon

A 45 percent increase in sewer fees stands tall among the several changes in water and sewer charges scheduled to be enacted by the Board of Directors Tuesday.

The increase is supposed to generate more than $1 million, much of which will be used to pay for some of the cost of the sewage treatment plant upgrade project.

Other changes include new charges for the inspection of new mains, repaired mains, and new connections for service. The cost for new connection inspections will be $40 and main inspections will be $3.10 per foot.

Also, fees for removing meters will increase from $32.50 to $40. And the fee for installing meters on fire hydrants will jump from $60 to $80. Story on page 4.

Birth control anniversary

NEW HAVEN (AP) — As a young minister in New Haven during the 1950s, Joan Forsberg drove women to New York each month on a mission that could have gotten them arrested in Connecticut: She was shuttling them across the state line to buy birth control.

Those days seem almost unimaginable today, especially after Connecticut adopted perhaps the most liberal abortion law in the country last month. But until 1965, Connecticut, which has always prided itself as "The Middle Temple," resisted the sexual revolution and the rising tide of feminism, enforcing its 19th century blue law banning the sale or use of contraceptives, even for married couples.

This week, advocates of reproductive freedom celebrate the 25th anniversary of the law's demise: The Griswold vs. Connecticut decision, handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court on June 7, 1965. Story on page 4.

Paramedics are injured

Two Manchester Ambulance paramedics were treated for minor injuries at Manchester Memorial Hospital after the wheel on the ambulance they were riding in fell off, police said.

Michael A. Doolan, 27, of East Hartford, was treated for neck strain and discharged, and Colleen Flavell, 34, of 3 Gardner St., was treated for upper back strain and discharged, a hospital spokesman said.

No other injuries were reported in the 9:55 p.m. accident which occurred on Thursday. According to the ambulance company and police, the paramedics had just stopped for something to eat and were driving east on East Center Street near the intersection of "The Middle Turnpike" when the left front wheel of 1989 Ford Econoline Ambulance fell off.

The accident damaged the vehicle's tire axle, police said. The vehicle was towed to Charles Towing and Road Service, 260 Tolland Turnpike.

Miranda rule is clarified

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police undercover agents may seek to elicit confessions from jailed criminal suspects without first having to give so-called Miranda warnings, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By an 8-1 vote, the justices said jailed criminal suspects need not be told about their right to remain silent or to get a lawyer's help before being questioned by someone secretly working for the police.

In its famous 1966 ruling, the court ruled that police must give such warnings before interrogating suspects who are in custody.

But writing for the court in an Illinois case today, Justice Anthony M. Kennedy said, "Miranda warnings are not required when the suspect is unaware that he is speaking to a law enforcement officer and gives a voluntary statement."

Kennedy added: "Conversations between suspects and undercover agents do not implicate the concerns underlying Miranda. The essential ingredients of a police-dominated atmosphere and compulsion are not present when an incarcerated person speaks freely to someone that he believes to be a fellow inmate."

Justice William J. Brennan, the court's leading liberal, agreed with Kennedy.

Obituaries

James Veitch Sr., building and grounds supervisor at BHS

James Veitch Sr., of Hebron Road, Bolton, died today (June 4, 1990) at home. He is survived by his wife, Helen Veitch.

He was born in Bolton. He worked for the town school system as a custodian at Bolton Center School. He was the superintendent of building and grounds at Bolton High School. He was recognized by high school graduates last year for 30 years of service.

School Superintendent Richard Packman said: "Jim Veitch's death is a severe loss to the school. He was a fine man. He was one in a million. Bolton was extremely lucky to have him." School administrators are working with students to help them deal with his death, Packman said.

"The kids have loved and known my father for years. People always ask me all the time how he is. He was like a fixture there," said James Veitch Jr., a town selectman. He said his father often slept near the school's boiler whenever there were problems with it to be sure it kept going through the night.

He is also survived by another son, Robert Veitch of Old Saybrook; and five granddaughters.

Funeral arrangements are incomplete at this time.

Eleanor L. Cooney

Thoughts

My mother's number one piece of advice to me has always been: "Just do the best you can." Whenever I worried about a test in school, or grades on my report card, or how well I would play in a basketball game, or anything else, Mom would say, "Just do the best you can."

Of course, that is not as easy as it sounds. Psychologists point out that we very seldom really do the best we can, or feel that we have done the best we could. How many times in your life have you really felt that you did your best?

The encouragement to "do the best you can" is liberating because it does not measure success externally, by the grade from a teacher, or by one's place in the competition with peers. But it is also a burden, because it sets a high standard and demands reaching for a personal goal which is always ahead of actual achievement.

For me, that is realism. There really is a gap between what we do and what we know we ought to do. And so the best we can do, if it is not the absolute best. But it is the best we can do, at that time. And we resolve that next time, perhaps our best will be a little better.

Thoughts

My mother's number one piece of advice to me has always been: "Just do the best you can." Whenever I worried about a test in school, or grades on my report card, or how well I would play in a basketball game, or anything else, Mom would say, "Just do the best you can."

Of course, that is not as easy as it sounds. Psychologists point out that we very seldom really do the best we can, or feel that we have done the best we could. How many times in your life have you really felt that you did your best?

The encouragement to "do the best you can" is liberating because it does not measure success externally, by the grade from a teacher, or by one's place in the competition with peers. But it is also a burden, because it sets a high standard and demands reaching for a personal goal which is always ahead of actual achievement.

For me, that is realism. There really is a gap between what we do and what we know we ought to do. And so the best we can do, if it is not the absolute best. But it is the best we can do, at that time. And we resolve that next time, perhaps our best will be a little better.

Man charged with burglary

A Coventry man was arrested for burglary Friday night after allegedly stealing liquor and food from a house whose owner he knew, police said.

Charles White, 26, of 282 Riley Mountain Road was charged with 3rd-degree burglary and 4th-degree larceny, held on a $1,500 bond and scheduled to appear today in Manchester Superior Court, police said.

An officer who was on routine patrol spotted suspicious activity at a house on Bunker Hill Road, police said. After the arrest, police recovered the stolen items, police said.

STATE

Quarter century of birth control this month

By Nita Lelyveld The Associated Press

NEW HAVEN — As a young minister in New Haven during the 1950s, Joan Forsberg drove women to New York each month on a mission that could have gotten them arrested in Connecticut: She was smuggling them across the state line to buy birth control.

These days seem almost unimaginable today, especially after Connecticut adopted perhaps the most liberal abortion law in the country last month.

But until 1965, Connecticut, which has always prided itself as "The Land of Steady Habits," resisted the sexual revolution and the rising tide of feminism, enforcing its 19th century blue law banning the sale or use of contraceptives, even for married couples.

This week, advocates of reproductive freedom celebrate the 25th anniversary of the law's demise: The Griswold vs. Connecticut decision, handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court on June 7, 1965.

The historic ruling, written by the court's great liberal, Justice William O. Douglas, established a woman's right to privacy and became the single most important precedent in the Roe vs. Wade decision legalizing abortion eight years later.

"What I was doing in the 1950s wasn't a cause for women," recalled Forsberg, whose testimony against a birth-control clinic in New Haven helped make the court challenge possible.

"I wasn't organizing," she said. "I was just doing what any woman would do to avoid getting pregnant by mistake."

At the time, more than 2,400 women made similar out-of-state trips each year to buy diaphragms and birth control pills when they became available, according to Planned Parenthood of Connecticut.

Connecticut's Griswold Law banning birth control and obscene books and pictures was passed in 1879. It was named after Anthony Comstock of New Canaan, who traveled the country for four decades, lobbying for Victorian legislation to return America to its Puritan roots.

Comstock once explained his aims with the question, "Can't everybody, rich or poor, learn to control themselves?"

In Comstock's lifetime, 28 states passed "little Comstock laws." But by the 1960s, only those of Connecticut and Massachusetts remained on the books.

By the 1920s, Connecticut's law was largely unenforced. Planned Parenthood operated 10 clinics without opposition, primarily dispensing birth control information rather than birth control itself.

In Comstock's lifetime, 28 states passed "little Comstock laws." But by the 1960s, only those of Connecticut and Massachusetts remained on the books.

By the 1920s, Connecticut's law was largely unenforced. Planned Parenthood operated 10 clinics without opposition, primarily dispensing birth control information rather than birth control itself.

But in 1939, a group of Waterbury clergymen decided morals were getting a little too loose and convinced police to raid the local clinic.

The raid, in which two doctors and a nurse were arrested, forced the closing of all 10 clinics across the state.

Contraceptives returned to the black market for the next quarter of a century.

Generations of Connecticut women did not even know contraceptives existed, said Forsberg. She was constantly amazed in the 1950s at how few people in her inner-city New Haven neighborhood had any sense of control over when they would bear children.

"People would ask me all the time, 'When are you going to have more children?' When I would tell them that my husband and I were planning our family and that we would have another child when we were ready, they would say, 'What do you mean?'" Forsberg said.

"Knowledge of birth control was very middle class at the time. It just wasn't in the vocabulary of inner-city culture here.

Forsberg got involved in the battle to overturn the law inadvertently. In 1961, she visited a birth control clinic that had recently opened in New Haven expressly to challenge the Comstock Law.

Bessie Littlefield, executive director of the Planned Parenthood League of Connecticut, started the clinic with Dr. C. Lee Buxton, the chairman of Yale University's department of gynecology and obstetrics.

Like other advocates of family planning, Griswold and Buxton had done now, had fought for years to have the birth control law repealed by the state Legislature.

"They finally concluded that their only choice was to open a clinic to dispense birth control, get themselves arrested and challenge the law in court.

Rosberg went to the clinic to buy to birth control pills, happy to save herself a New York. As she was leaving, she thanked Griswold for fighting for the women of Connecticut.

A few days later, she received a call from Griswold, who asked if she would testify in court that she had been to the clinic and had contraceptives prescribed for her there.

Griswold and Buxton had been arrested, and they needed three patients to testify against them.

Forsberg agreed and turned over her birth control pills to police. Griswold and Buxton were found guilty and fined $100 each. Their lawyers appealed to the state Supreme Court, which upheld their convictions. Four years later, the case made its way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The court's ruling was much broader than anyone had hoped for, according to Harriet Pipel, who represented the Planned Parenthood Federation in the Griswold case.

"It was the first case of the best of my knowledge that spelled out the fundamental right of privacy with respect to reproductive rights," Pipel said. "There were prior cases which in effect held that there was a right of privacy in other contexts."

But none of them made big statements. The Griswold case summarized and expanded the basic rights to be left alone.

At Baal's parents' request and over his objections, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco had stayed the execution Saturday, saying a lower court had not holding a hearing on whether Baal was mentally competent to appeal.

The Supreme Court majority held there was no basis for that conclusion.

Baal was executed for the Feb. 26, 1988, killing of bus driver Frances Maves, 34. She was robbed and stabbed while inspecting her bus at an airport in Las Vegas.

According to Baal, she gave him $20 when he asked for money, but he demanded more and a struggle ensued. "You shouldn't have done that," he said, according to his confession. "Now you pay. I sentence you to death."

Before the execution got under way, Baal looked through viewing windows at the 24 witnesses and tried to speak to Dean Stanton, the prosecutor in the case. Stanton said he couldn't make out what Baal was saying.

After that, Baal appeared to talk to himself, then closed his eyes as the lethal injections began.

Baal spent a sleepless night in a cell next to the death chamber and made a last confession to the prison chaplain.

Killer gets his wish — is executed

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Thomas Baal sent love to his parents before he was put to death by lethal injection. It was an execution he fought for over his parents' court objections.

Baal, 26, was executed Sunday for fatally slaying a Las Vegas bus driver. His parents had tried to intervene, saying he was mentally incompetent and should not have been allowed to decide for himself to die or appeal.

"Send my love to my mama and my papa," Nevada State Prison Warden Pete Demosthenes quoted as Baal's last words.

State Prison Director Ron Angione said Baal told him to tell his parents, Edwin and Doris Baal of Mesa, Colo., that "Jesus was taking him home and he was not scared."

The execution came 10 hours after the U.S. Supreme Court voted 5-4 to allow it.

At Baal's parents' request and over his objections, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco had stayed the execution Saturday, saying a lower court had not holding a hearing on whether Baal was mentally competent to appeal.

Gorbachev pursues private deals nationwide

PRESSING THE FLESH — Mikhail and Raisa Gorbachev push their way through a crowd of well-wishers Sunday outside the Minnesota governor's mansion.

Bush braces for fight over pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush prepared a review of his summit accomplishments for the friendliest audience in town, his Cabinet, today as he braced for a congressional cold shoulder over the provisional trade agreement which so pleased Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Bush's decision to sign the trade pact without concessions on Lithuania had drawn reproach from both parties.

Despite sharp differences remaining on the fate of the Baltics and on the military alignment of a reunified Germany, Bush and Gorbachev are heralding their summit gains and predicting another 1990 session to nail down arms treaties that eluded them this time.

They ended their second summit on Sunday, speaking warmly of each other and proclaiming the meeting a big success. "Neither of us tried to cover over the differences," Bush said.

The president was to give a report on his sessions with Gorbachev to his Cabinet this morning. For his part, Gorbachev was spending his day in California before flying home.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, a nimble negotiator in cutting a trade deal with President Bush, today pursues his cross-country mission for American money and know-how with a whirlwind visit to his high-tech mecca.

Gorbachev's trip already has yielded two dividends — pacts with Chevron Corp. and IBM Corp. — and promises more after a power lunch today with 150 captains of industry in oil, banking, food, entertainment, airlines, hotels, real estate and computers.

The Soviet leader's business in San Francisco was preceded by pleasure at a midmorning coffee klatch with former President Reagan and the two men's wives at the home of the Soviet consul general, where the Gorbachevs spent the night after flying in late Sunday from Minneapolis-St. Paul.

Reagan and Gorbachev broke the ice in the Cold War in their five summit talks. For Reagan, today's meeting marks one of his few moments back in the limelight since leaving office last year.

Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa, were welcomed to California late Sunday by Gov. George Deukmejian, who presented a letter to the Kremlin chief from the state's Armenian community conveying their hopes for the future of the Soviet republic of Armenia, where activists are seeking greater autonomy from central authority.

"They hope that he will be able to provide greater protection and safety for the people there," said the governor, who is of Armenian descent. Many Armenians have been killed in ethnic and political strife in the southern U.S.S.R.

After a speech later today at Stanford University, south of San Francisco, Gorbachev was to Rudy Perpich say today that Gorbachev was some allies in his meeting with business leaders Sunday.

Trade also was expected to dominate Gorbachev's late-afternoon summit with South Korean President Roh Tae-woo, the first meeting between leaders of the two countries since the Korean peninsula was partitioned. Their talks were expected to help pave the way for an easing of tensions on the peninsula.

The Soviet president heads home from San Francisco late today, wrapping up a seven-day North American visit.

On Sunday, Gorbachev stopped for seven hours in Minneapolis on his way to San Francisco, wooing street crowds and business leaders and calling for help with his country's radical reform agenda.

"When we begin such a project, we feel we need American business because it is so big," he said at an evening meeting attended by such corporate luminaries as the heads of Anheuser-Busch Co., PepsiCo, Amoco Corp. and Dow Chemical Co.

In summit discussions last week in Washington, Bush and Gorbachev agreed to a trade deal that was less than he sought. He settled for a promise that most-favored-nation status, which reduces tariffs on Soviet goods, would be forthcoming, depending on progress on Soviet relations with the breakaway Baltic states.

The trade deal was the result of classic Washington-style horse-trading, in which Gorbachev proved himself as skillful a deal-maker as Bush.

Bush agreed to give the Soviets full, normal trade rights, receiving in return an implicit timetable to put liberal emigration policies into Soviet law and a commitment to pursue peaceful dialogue with independence-minded Lithuania.

The trade pact faces an uncertain future in Congress, where many insist it will not gain approval unless Gorbachev eases economic pressure against Lithuania. But Minnesota Gov. Rudy Perpich said today that Gorbachev was some allies in his meeting with business leaders Sunday.

There was "a very clear message" that "the business community ... really are going to put pressure on Washington that the Soviet Union be granted most-favored-nation status," Perpich said on CBS This Morning.

State man is national greeter

GREENWICH (AP) — As the U.S. Chief of Protocol, Joseph Verner Reed greets more foreign heads of state during the year than anyone except President Bush and the secretary of state.

Reed, a Greenwich resident, was the man in charge of making sure Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's summit visit went off without a hitch. As the nation's official chief hon, he sees to it that protocol is followed in every stage of Gorbachev's stay.

"There can be no mistakes," he says. While admitting that he has heard the argument that protocol is merely "style," Reed counters that protocol paves the way for substantive discussions and diplomacy.

Although he never gets to argue with Gorbachev over global matters such as chemical weapons or Lithuania's bid for independence, Reed sees the Soviet leader more often during the summit than anyone outside the highest American officials.

Reed choreographed each official ceremony of the summit with a precision that has helped earn him the nicknames "Mister Manners" and "The Protector of Propriety."

Reed, 52, likes to say he and his staff of 70 are "in charge of all the moving parts." That means everything from the line up of dignitaries on the receiving line for Gorbachev to the distribution of occupancies for every vehicle in the 40-car motorcade.

Whenever President Bush is during an official ceremony, Reed is not far behind.

But sometimes there are snags. The summit planning process was seriously disrupted when Moscow suddenly assigned a new ambassador to Washington to replace Yuri Dubinin less than two weeks before the start of the summit. Reed moved quickly to pick out any glitches in the planning process with Ambassador Aleksandr Bessmertnykh before he was even settled in his limousine after landing on American soil.

"We started to work immediately — the door wasn't even closed," Reed said.

The extensive planning in the protocol department includes making a special scheduling book for each state visit. The book for Gorbachev's recent visit had 89 pages. It included a minute-by-minute schedule, details on the members of the welcoming committee, motorcade assignments, and guest lists for VIPs.

The history of protocol as a part of American diplomatic life dates back for decades. The title — chief of protocol — was created in 1934.

Tutu: apartheid pressure working

By Andrew Fraser The Associated Press

MIDDLETOWN — Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu says campus protests demanding American universities to divest from firms operating in South Africa have been crucial in the battle to end apartheid.

Tutu, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize for his work against apartheid in South Africa, spoke Sunday at Wesleyan University's 150th commencement where a record 680 students received degrees.

He said he was taken aback to find American college students complaining about South African investments, when they could concern themselves with grades and "making it in the rat race."

Young people are largely responsible for shaping political opinion and forcing congress to mandate sanctions against South Africa, he said.

"I am quite certain, the most important reason why things are happening as they're happening at home is the effect of economic sanctions on the South African government," Tutu said. "Without those sanctions we would not be on the verge of negotiations to end that vicious policy of injustice and oppression."

Tutu's remarks were made on the heels of a decision by Wesleyan officials to completely divest from companies operating in South Africa.

Tutu met with a group of Jewish students and faculty for Jewish students and faculty for a half hour Saturday to discuss their concerns. He said he supported Israel's right to exist as a sovereign state. At the same time he added that he believed "the Middle East issue will not go away until the cries for a Palestinian sovereign state are heard."

Tutu's appearance at Wesleyan also coincided with heightened racial tensions at the school.

"If they're looking for a Republican, there must be a stronger Republican than me to put on the ticket to get the Republican vote," she said. "Yeah, I'm a Republican and I'm a registered Republican."

She recalled how she first ran for the Hartford Common Council as an independent and managed to hang on to the corporation counsel's job only with the support of Democrats on the council.

Groark likes political changes

By Judd Everhart The Associated Press

HARTFORD — Eunice S. Groark says the best part about running for lieutenant governor on a ticket headed by independent Lowell F. Weicker Jr. is the opportunity to run without having to worry about party politics.

"Give us a chance to run this state with no strings attached, with no baggage," said the 52-year-old Hartford lawyer who plans to step down soon from her job as the city's corporation counsel. "Give us a shot at putting together something that is going to give you confidence ... for the rest of the 90s and into the next century."

"The people have really lost confidence in their government," she said at week's end after Weicker announced that she was his choice for a running mate. "They just don't perceive it as working right."

"And my feeling is, you really have a right to have confidence in your government. When people start failing to have confidence, that thing is not rational or reasonable, then you've got some serious problems," she said.

She calls herself assertive, diligent, smart, self-confident. "I'm not put off or terrified by the breadth of this thing," she told one interviewer. "Everybody doesn't know everything, but you've got to be smart enough to know where the answers are."

She and Weicker, both lifelong Republicans, now constitute the entire campaign of Weicker's newly created Connecticut Party.

Republicans, where some polls have shown him lacking.

Mechanical problems take toll on shuttle's schedule

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Mechanical problems are starting to take a toll on NASA's shuttle schedule, and the space agency is wondering whether the troubles are random or somehow related.

On Columbia and Discovery, the troubles were not spotted until they were at the launch pads.

Replacing Columbia's cooling valve and Discovery's auxiliary power unit was the first time such work had ever been performed at the pad. Both resulted in two-week delays. And a shuttle launch had never been scrubbed during fueling until last Wednesday's Columbia scrub.

"I see it as the odds," said Brewer Shaw, deputy director of shuttle operations for NASA. "It's complicated hardware. It's going to break once in a while. I don't get too depressed over that."

NASA officials said they do not intend to scale down future flight plans as a result of this year's disruptions. Nine shuttle missions were scheduled for 1990, the same number as in 1989, which was the year before Challenger exploded and put the program on hold for 2 1/2 years.

One of the remaining six missions — possibly Columbia's — likely will slide into next year.

A test is set for Wednesday in which Columbia's external tank will be partly filled with super-liquid hydrogen. Officials want to duplicate the conditions under which hydrogen escaped into the rear engine compartment.

Aides left red-faced by colors

When Eighth District leaders figured out how to run the elections at the annual district meeting, they were trying to make sure that everybody who voted was a legal voter.

The plan was to give each voter who was checked off on the voting list an identification card. Anyone who displayed the card was entitled to get a ballot for each election as it came along.

The goal was to pick a distinctive card, something that could not be quickly duplicated.

Whoever picked out the card did such a good job that Attorney John D. LaBelle Sr., the moderator at the meeting, was fooled. A couple of times he referred to the "brown or tan" card.

Eventually somebody better versed in such matters told him it was really naive and he made the needed correction.

No harm done by the confusion. But when the senior full-time administrative employee of the district chooses the distinctive colors for future elections, he should instruct the moderator just before the meeting starts so that he will properly name such hues as magenta, chartreuse, puce, champagne, coral, fuchsia and the like.

Smoking ban gets ammo from study

The Environmental Protection Agency has fanned the flames of the smoking debate with a comprehensive study on the hazards of second-hand cigarette smoke.

The study is about what you would expect. People who don't smoke themselves but are exposed to cigarette smoke are at a greater risk of dying from cancer or other smoking related diseases.

The EPA draft report attributes 3,000 deaths annually to cancers caused by secondhand smoke. Other illnesses cause more deaths. Children of smokers are a particular concern.

Reaction to this news also was predictable. The tobacco industry said the study proved nothing. A Philip Morris official said the report was based on 24 studies, 18 of which showed no danger from secondhand smoke, and three showed that breathing other people's cigarette smoke was actually good for you.

The point is that even though the conclusions are preliminary, the findings are good information from a good source that is a danger exists. And the report provides ammunition for anti-smoking groups, employers and sympathetic lawmakers to extend regulation of smoking in public areas and workplaces.

The Herald welcomes letters from its readers. Letters should be no more than two double-spaced typewritten pages. The Herald reserves the right to edit letters for any reason, including length, taste and style.

Letters to publish all letters, but the decision of the editor is final. Writers may be limited to one letter per month. All letters must be signed, and writers must include their address and a telephone number for verification. Mail letters to Open Forum, Box 591, Manchester 06040.

Now, however, in the present budget-crisis atmosphere, the duck doesn't seem to be quacking anymore.

While publicly asserting their bed-rock opposition to raising taxes, Bush and Darman are considering a wide range of new revenue-raising measures. They just aren't calling them taxes.

When Bush and Darman unveiled their fiscal 1991 budget in January, it included cuts and revenue enhancements that would enable the budget to meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit target of $74 billion for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. Their figures, however, were predicated on certain assumptions about the economy during the coming year.

Darman forecast a healthy rate of economic growth, which would have meant that the government would take in more tax revenue at current tax rates. He also forecast falling interest rates, meaning the Treasury would have to pay less interest on the money it borrows to finance the deficit. He further forecast a level unemployment rate, which would have meant a rising number of workers paying taxes.

At the time, nobody really believed this rosy forecast, but it was politically convenient for everyone to play along. Now, though, it has become apparent that Darman's assumptions were hugely inaccurate.

Interest rates are going up, not down as a result, interest on the national debt will be much higher. The economy is slowing (2.1 percent growth compared to the forecasted 3.4 percent), and corporate

Gorby confronts a new era

By Walter R. Mears

WASHINGTON — Like many an embattled politician before him, Mikhail S. Gorbachev took a crack at Congress, worked his smiling way through crowds, counter-punched his critics and made the most of his inebriation.

During his week in the West, the Soviet president rebuked those who call him weak or consider his nation enfeebled by the throes of economic change. He scolded the American Congress for double standards and told its leaders they should not meddle in the affairs of his legislature.

It was a telegenic combination of grand ceremony and feisty politics, and it would have played well for an American politician in Moscow. That may not apply in the opposite direction.

The overwhelming Soviet concerns are domestic and economic. It is a time of wrenching change from communism to a market system Gorbachev said his government is trying to build from the ground up. It is no easy matter.

It is difficult to be a politician nowadays because a politician used to be an advisor who sat in his study and was consulted by his superiors. Gorbachev told congressional leaders "but now one cannot divorce himself from the popular sentiments, from the sentiments of those who do not want to be simple bystanders."

Senate and House leaders can understand that. They have their political problems, too. But for them, it is traveled territory and they know the rules. In the changing Soviet system, it is new terrain. Gorbachev talked with remarkable candor about his problems in what he called a genuine revolution. He also warned the West against seeking to take advantage of it, saying that turmoil in either system will mean trouble for the other.

When congressional leaders complained about his clambourning against the dependence in Lithuania, Gorbachev countered with Panama.

"Why do you allow, for example, your own government, your own administration, to invade Panama, which is a sovereign country, if you love freedom so much?" he demanded.

"Where were you when Panama was invaded and why that double standard?" It didn't match the 1959 kitchen debate with which Richard M. Nixon, as vice president, gained political capital in a Moscow argument with Nikita S. Khrushchev. But it had the flavor.

More substantively, Gorbachev went home from his summit journey Monday night with a preliminary trade agreement, a pact he sought in his effort to ease Soviet economic problems. It is conditional and will not take effect before the Soviet parliament passes a law guaranteeing the right of free emigration. But he got a deal, unexpectedly.

In the scoring system of American politics, all that should serve to strengthen his hand at home, at least for a while. But those rules don't necessarily apply.

Nor can the Soviet system be measured the way American politics is. Gorbachev and his allies have changed it too drastically. It is both their achievement and their problem.

One product of the reformed system is the rise of Boris N. Yeltsin, Gorbachev's leading rival, newly — but narrowly — elected to the post of president.

Encounters with the bureaucrats

By Jack Anderson and Dale Van Atta

WASHINGTON — When a bureaucrat goes the second mile, it's news. In fact, judging by the list of nominees for a national "My Favorite Bureaucrat" contest, it's news when a bureaucrat does his job, plain and simple.

The contest was sponsored by Matthew Lesko and Information USA Inc. of Chevy Chase, Md., the publisher of an encyclopedia of government services called "Lesko's Info-Power." Lesko devotes himself to teaching people how to use the government they pay for. His 1986-page directory is due out this month.

Lesko received more than 1,000 nominations from people who, wonder of wonders, please a bureaucrat with a government bureaucrat. The ordinary citizens who wrote about their experiences with the bureaucracy seem generally amazed that they got help when they needed it, without a fuss. The nominations are replete with accounts of bureaucrats who answer their own phones, return phone calls, give information when asked and get the job done in a reasonable amount of time.

There was the clerk at a Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles who told a woman that she couldn't change the address on her husband's motor vehicle registration without the husband's signature. The woman explained how her husband worked out of town. The clerk responded as though she had not heard the problem. "Go outside, get your husband's signature and bring it back to me," the clerk said. The confused woman repeated her story, and the clerk repeated the instructions. Finally the woman got the clerk's attention. The clerk said, "I'm sorry, but I can't help you."

My ex-husband is presently involved in the social and political activities of a single group. I don't know what his plans are, but he is 48, and on the surface he would appear to be a good "catch" for a 45-year-old divorcee. I hope he's not the person in Sacramento who speaks so lovingly of me. I am signing my name and address in case you want to check me out for authenticity, but please do not publish it.

Man of dreams is transvestite

DEAR ABBY: This is in reference to "Peg," the 45-year-old divorcee who wrote for advice concerning her 18-year-old transvestite boyfriend.

When I was 20, I married a man of my dreams. He was charming, intelligent and masculine. A year later, he notified that he was a transvestite. (I didn't even know what the word meant.) He explained that he had the need to wear women's clothes occasionally — especially underwear — for purposes of sexual or emotional gratification. This hit me like a ton of bricks, but I thought I could change him. I was wrong.

Five years and three children later, he was shaving his legs, wearing padded bras and lingerie to bed, and contemplating sex-change surgery. He became progressively depressed, feeling that he was a woman trapped in a man's body. He consulted a psychiatrist who specialized in gender disorders and sex-change therapy, and after extensive medical and psychological testing, he was told that he was a "transsexual."

The therapy for transsexualism involves changing the body to match the mind. This led to two years of electrolysis to remove all facial hair and the hair on his chest. He was given massive doses of estrogen, which left his skin, enlarged his breasts and made him impotent.

When I turned 40, I decided to file for divorce. The children chose to come with me.

Turner wasted no time in asking Fonda for date

NEW YORK (AP) — Jane Fonda says her current beau, cable king Ted Turner, wasted no time phoning her up after reading last year about her breakup with husband Tom Hayden.

"He wanted to know if I was available to date," Fonda said in an interview on the June 11 issue of People magazine. "I think I said I wasn't feeling so hot, that he was an interesting guy, too, but I wasn't feeling 'peppy.'"

Fonda and Turner eventually met, but she and Italian soccer player Lorenzo Cucchiaroni were dating at the time, the magazine said. Turner, whose holdings include CNN and the Atlanta Braves, waited until that relationship ended to make a move, People said.

Turner, 51, was uncharacteristically reticent about his relationship with Fonda, 52.

"It's hard to have your dating life dissected," he told the magazine.

Turner did say he works out more now than he did before. He has made a series of exercise videos. And Fonda occasionally participates in some of Turner's adventures — fly fishing and turkey hunting.

"Ted is extremely knowledgeable about wildlife," Fonda said.

Redford urges graduates
BOSTON (AP) — Robert Redford urged a new crop of university graduates to forest politicians into a decade of "naked greed and profit at the expense of the environment."

The actor and longtime environmental activist spoke Saturday at commencement ceremonies on the Boston campus of the University of Massachusetts.

"It is time to send a message to our elected officials that if they do not protect our environment they will be voted out of office or never get elected in the first place," Redford said.

Redford said the 1980s were devastating for the environment.

"Never can I remember a time of such naked greed and profit at the expense of the environment as the last decade," he said.

Redford, who received an honorary doctorate of science degree, criticized President Bush for failing to follow up on campaign promises to improve the environment.

"I don't think we need to wait around anymore for something to come from the top," he told 2,400 graduating seniors and their guests. "It ain't gonna happen. I don't want to be told, 'read my lips' when the lips aren't saying anything."

State tax case causes confusion

You spend most of your time in one state, but you have property and perhaps business dealings in another state. Who income taxes do you pay?

The answer seems simple: The state in which you live. But the answer isn't that easy, as recent court cases demonstrate.

Some states, most notably New York, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, have become more vigorous in recent years in challenging claims that people do not owe them taxes because they have moved to another state.

Unless you are careful, you can find yourself amid a confusion of lawyers, laws and expenses — all of which you may well end up paying.

A typical family will move every five years or so. Usually, this is straightforward. When you move, you file state income taxes in the state where you formerly lived only for the months you lived there.

But what if your move isn't a clean break? Perhaps you decided to keep your old home, or you want to wait until the slump in real estate prices ends. You may choose to deal with the same securities broker, investment manager and lawyer you've known for years. You may still have dealings with a bank in your former home area.

All of these things can be used by your old state in an effort to establish that while you are physically elsewhere, you are still a resident of your former home state. The situation becomes even worse if you are fortunate enough to become a resident in two states, dividing your time between them.

What criteria have the courts recognized in establishing residency? They include:

Where your car is registered and where your driver's license was issued.

Where you seek medical and the location of local charities to which you donate.

The location of clubs and organizations to which you belong.

Where you do business. This means the location of your bank account, your lawyer, your stockbroker and your financial adviser.

Where you seek medical and dental treatment.

Where you own property.

Where you keep family photographs, memorabilia and so on.

Where, of course, you work. If you show up at a job each day, it will be difficult to avoid paying at least some taxes in the state in which you work (presuming it is a state that has income taxes). States generally have a provision for reduced taxes for those who live in one state and work in another, as is common in border areas and in the small states of the Northeast.

It is a surprising fact that the states are likely to become more so as cash-strapped states seek to employ new methods to increase their riches. As some states dig deeper for revenue, it becomes more feasible to pursue funds that may have been overlooked before.

How can you avoid this expensive hassle?

The first person to consult is your financial planner. He or she can help you arrive at a plan for the orderly transfer of your resources to your new state. Your broker can help you transfer your account.

As soon as you arrive in your new home, transfer your automobile registration and driver's license. Register to vote.

something back to mankind in general," he said.

As for why he chose to help the needy outside the U.S., Thomas said, "There really isn't equal access to healthcare in the U.S., but (at least) you can find it. This is not so in other countries."

The opportunity for surgery and medical services overseas came as a result of the physician's volunteer participation in Freedom Medicine Inc., a non-profit organization funded in part by the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Headquartered in Washington D.C., Freedom Medicine was founded in 1985 to provide medical and humanitarian assistance to Third World countries, with the largest project operating in Thal, Pakistan, in the area known as the North-West Frontier Province.

Last week, Thomas took another leave of absence from his private urology practice in New Jersey and flew to Angola, Africa, where for 10 days he and others planned to study whether medical services there could be increased.

Robert Walden, a 38-year town resident who retired as an obstetrician and gynecologist two years ago, said he is a little concerned about his eldest son's visits to strife-ridden, unpredictable countries.

"I asked him if he had a death wish," Robert said. But, he admits, Thomas always has been on the aggressive and adventuresome side. When he was barely a teen-ager at Hilling Junior High School, Thomas entered a bicycle obstacle contest.

saying "I'm going to win," and he did, his father said. The boy also never was afraid to leave home for extended periods of time, to go to summer camp, for instance, his father said.

"I told them that after college, you really are just even with the pack," he said. "I told them on the idea of exceeding. Without education, you don't have anything today," Robert Walden said he remembers telling his son about 25 years ago. "It puts you in a better position. It's too easy not to go to school."

trolled, but we haven't given in," said one.

Thousands of political activists were arrested nationwide in the months that followed the June 3-4 assault, and many remain jailed without charge.

The government has purged Communist reformers and staged a massive ideological campaign to stiffen dissent. All students are required to take courses in Marxism and Mao Tse-tung and a clean political record has become key to getting a good job or a passport to visit overseas.

Only a few isolated protests have taken place since the crackdown, although anger over the army crackdown remains widespread.

The Communist Party's official People's Daily, in a front-page editorial today, said the government's decision to use force to end last year's demonstrations was "absolutely correct and necessary" to preserve stability.

Despite the tight security, a middie-aged Chinese man attempted to pass out leaflets near the entrance to the Forbidden City across the street from the square, foreign witnesses said. He was quickly taken away by police.

A Buddhist monk and a disciple who were chanting and beating a drum on a bridge at the entrance to the Forbidden City were also chased off by police. It was not clear if they were detained.

On Sunday, two people were arrested near the square for trying to deliver protest messages to Western television crews.

Convoys of police vehicles with flashing lights and soldiers on foot circled the university district Sunday evening, while security forces checked vehicles at major intersections.

Witnesses said the Beijing University protest began when a small group of students hurled books, rusty bicycle wheels and other objects at security forces on the Total business productivity, including farming, fell at 2.1 percent for the first quarter compared with a 1.1 percent gain for all of 1989.

Since 1982, productivity growth has averaged 1.8 percent a year. While a slight improvement over the 1.2 percent average growth rate in the 1970s, it was still far below the 3.3 percent rate of increase posted in the two decades following World War II.

American workers enjoyed healthy wage gains and a rising standard of living during those decades.

Increasing productivity is considered basic to boosting living standards because it allows businesses to pay workers more as their output rises without risking higher inflation.

During all of last year, productivity rose just 0.9 percent, the poorest showing since the 1981-82 recession.

Today's report showed that output in the non-farm sector rose 1.0 percent during the first quarter of 1990, well below the 3.9 percent increase in the number of hours worked, the Labor Department said.

investors. Park refused to speculate on how soon the federal Office of Thrift Supervision might take over the company's management. But Stangle, the stock analyst, quipped that "it certainly looks like they're in their final days."

Any action on the part of the Office of Thrift Supervision is not expected to affect depositors or the bank's plan to maintain its three branch offices in Manchester, Park said.

Locally, ComFed Bancorp operates its subsidiaries, ComFed Mortgage Co. and ComFed Savings Bank, out of a main office at 1007 Main St. The savings bank operation also has a north end branch office at 23 Main St., and another office at the K-Mart shopping plaza, 217 Spencer St.

money for the convenience of a labor union that is adamant about asbestos," Ocella said. "Workers should be careful when they're in an area with asbestos."

Dion said the set-up to remove asbestos is so expensive that it is worthwhile to remove all of it, or even rather than a small portion. Expansion is a possibility, he said, but the town is eligible for state reimbursement, currently at 58 percent, only once.

Therefore, if it is necessary later to remove the asbestos, there would be no reimbursement, according to Dion. "If we make an interim repair, the next time around it's all ours to take care of," Dion said.

Before a fund is re-established, a survey of the schools must be done by a qualified firm, Ocella said. A survey done by Dion is "not sufficient," Ocella added.

But Dion said he has been doing that type of work for the schools since 1977 and is qualified.

In one address, Li Ming, a junior majoring in economics management, demanded that land be returned to the peasants and factories to the workers.

Li was seen being led away, possibly by plainclothes police, but students said later it was not known whether he had been arrested.

The demonstration ended peacefully at about 1:30 a.m. But security forces detained about a dozen foreign journalists who had just left the campus.

Westside High School case, but expressed some serious reservations. Marshall, in an opinion joined by Brennan, said schools such as Westside must be careful to "effectively disassociate themselves from the religious speech that now may become commonplace in their facilities."

The officials said the clubs are related to classroom work or other aspects of the school curriculum. For example, they said chess helps students learn mathematics and logic and scuba diving is tied to the school's physical fitness program.

The officials said the 1984 act, therefore, should not apply to them. But they also argued that if the law does apply, it should be declared unconstitutional as a government-sponsored establishment of religion.

Some groups who supported the school officials, such as the National School Boards Association, said the 1984 law is a thinly disguised move to return prayer to the public schools. The Supreme Court in 1962 banned organized, school-sponsored prayer sessions at students.

The Bush administration defended the 1984 law as a legitimate attempt to protect religious liberty for students. Students at Westside High sought recognition in 1985 of a Christian Bible study club to meet after school hours on school grounds. Officials refused to approve it, and suggested the students meet instead at a church next door.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in 1989 overruled a federal judge and said the club must be allowed to meet on school premises. The Supreme Court in 1991 said state-run universities cannot ban student groups from using campus facilities for religious worship and study. But before today, the justices had not decided whether the same rule should apply to public high schools.

Energy industry experts said the appeals court ruling could lead to refunds of more than $100 million.

Pistons looking to repeat

By Harry Atkins
The Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — While Detroit Pistons are dreaming of another NBA title, the Chicago Bulls are back to mainly daydreaming.

The Pistons, getting 21 points from Ish Thomas and 33 points from their bench, defeated the Bulls 93-74 Sunday in the seventh and deciding game of the Eastern Conference championships.

Bridding to become only the third franchise in league history to repeat as champion, Detroit will open the NBA Finals at home Tuesday night against the Portland Trail Blazers.

"It was just another game in the playoffs for us," Thomas said. "Maybe their youth and inexperience showed. We felt confident coming into the game."

Michael Jordan, proving that a one-man team isn't enough in the NBA, scored 31 points for the Bulls. But the only other Chicago player in double figures was Horace Grant with 10.

"Some players didn't play as well as they're capable of, but you have to take your lumps and move on," said Jordan, whose chair-kicking temper tantrum was credited with helping the Bulls stave off a sweep after they dropped the first two games.

"Maybe the pressure got to us," Jordan said. "There was some nervousness. Nobody besides (Bill) Cartwright has been in this situation. You could see their killer instinct. They had us back on our heels. They overwhelmed us."

The Bulls, who shot only 31.1 percent, actually led 19-17 after one quarter. But the Pistons broke the game open in the second quarter, building a 46-33 halftime lead. The Pistons' bench outscored the Bulls' bench 33-17 in the game and 213-131 during the series.

Before the game was over, they were relaxed, open and real loose," said John Salley, who chipped in with 14 points and five blocked shots for Detroit. "Like (Coach) Chuck (Daly) said, this team has 12 companies and each company set down at the round table and decided to go for one objective. Everybody was here today."

The Bulls, who never have lost their last eight games in Detroit, dating back to the first game of last year's conference finals. The Bulls won all three games in Chicago Stadium and kept saying they felt confident they could win in Detroit.

But when it came time to do it, they never came close. Chicago never shot 50 percent against Detroit and never scored 100 points in any of the four games at the Palace of Auburn Hills.

"They proved today that they're better on paper and better on the court," Jordan said. "They're the best defensive team in the league. In the playoffs, not too many people are going to get layups or dunks."

The Bulls staged a mild rally to narrow the score to 69-59 after three quarters. But with Aguirre and Vinnie Johnson each scoring a basket, Detroit started the fourth quarter with an 8-2 burst and the Bulls never recovered.

"We made a shot of it down to 10 going into the fourth quarter, but ran out of gas," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said. "We got beat by the better team at this time, but I think we got respect from the Pistons. They know we're for real."

The Pistons now are 11-4 in the playoffs (9-0 at home, 2-4 on the road). Over the last two years, the Pistons are 26-6 in the playoffs with five of those six losses coming against the Bulls.

"This is it," Salley said. "After 82 (regular season) games, if all comes down to this. Only the elite teams are here. We had the idea that we knew how important it is to get to the Finals. That is the only thing."

The Pistons were 1-1 against Portland during the season. Detroit and Portland finished with identical 59-23 records, but the Pistons will have the home-court advantage in the best-of-7 Finals because they had a better conference record than the Trail Blazers. Detroit was 40-14 against Eastern Conference foes, Portland 41-15 against Western Conference opponents.

"In terms of matchups, the teams are pretty even," Thomas said.

Coventry girls in semis again

By Herald Staff

DERBY — It started out as a breeze, and turned into a mammoth struggle. Regardless, Coventry High had the movie to come back with a run in the bottom of the eighth inning for a 5-4 win over Housatonic Valley Saturday afternoon at Ryan Field to earn its third trip to the state Class S girls' softball semifinals in four years.

The fifth-ranked Patriots, 20-4, will meet top-ranked and unbeaten Central Catholic of Norwalk (20-0), a 13-1 winner over Griswold, in Tuesday's semifinals at 3:30 p.m. at the University of New Haven. The winner meets Touraine-Derby Fielder for the state championship at Falcon Field in Meriden.

Coventry will be seeking its first trip to the championship round since 1985 when it lost to Derby. They (Housatonic) were in the semifinals in 1987 (lost to Torrington) and in 1988 (lost to Old Saybrook). The Patriots last met Central Catholic in 1986, losing a 4-3, nine-inning affair in the quarterfinals.

"We'll have to play to our full potential," Coventry coach Rick Page said. "They played excellent defense. I did think we should have hit the ball better."

Coventry collected eight hits, three by Johanna Vankruijning and two by Kristin Filippi. And the Patriots did build a 4-0 lead, only to be forced to play on one hop, allowing Flanagan to score. "We usually hit the ball much better than we did tonight," Cirillo said. "I've got faith in Mike Hickey. He's considered the best Class S player in our league. We sent a couple of boys to the Coventry area and they screwed off all the newspapers from March to the present. So, we had a book on every one of their games."

Coventry had the top of its lineup against Hickey in the bottom of the seventh, in final chance. Toplift struck out and Poulin flew out to left field for two quick outs. Rheault sent a 3-2 Hickey offering behind second base for an infield hit. Cleanup hitter Omen struck out swinging to end the game.

But, nothing can detract from Coventry's fine season. "The kids should be proud," Flaster said.

Coventry handed RHAM, a Class M semifinalist, its only loss of the season in the Charter Oak Conference playoff championship game. Housatonic, the No. 20 seed, bows out at 12-11.

They (Housatonic) are a lot better than their 10-10 (regular-season) record," Page said. "They played excellent defense. I did think we should have hit the ball better."

Brophy runner-up in NCAA decathlon

By Herald Staff

DURHAM, N.C. — Manchester native Brian Brophy took second place in the decathlon at this past weekend's NCAA Track and Field Championships held at Wallace Wade Stadium on the campus of Duke University.

Brophy, the 1988 Manchester High graduate now at the University of Tennessee, totaled a personal best 7,779 points to place second in the national championships behind Drew Facer of Southwest Texas State who totaled 7,922 points. Brophy had two personal bests in the 400 (69.79) and 1500 (1:57.17). Javelin: 180' 11"; 1500-meter run (4:36) in the two-day, 10-event decathlon. Brophy was fifth after the first day with 3,900 points. He needed to beat another entrant by 12 seconds in the 1500 to assure second place, and did so.

Brophy's total, and placement, qualified him for the TAC National Championship Meet June 16-17 at Serritos, Calif.

Brophy's effort included: 100-11.3; long jump: 21' 6"; High jump: 5' 10"; Shot: 49' 5"; Discus: 163' 8"; Pole vault: 14-99; Javelin: 180' 11"; 1500-meter run (4:36) in the two-day,

Bridge

Bridge scores table with columns for North, East, South, West and various card suits.

Keeping control

By James Jacoby

Trump management is the theme of today's deal. Since much of bridge education consists of learning from mistakes, let's first watch Willy Nilly and continued, and Willy ruffed. He played a spade to dummy's king split! He now ruffed the club finesse. East won the king and played another jack of spades from the hand, leaving the spade king in dummy. Whenever trumps split 3-2 nothing will matter, but keeping the spade king in the North hand can be crucial when the trump split badly. When declarer sees that West started with four spades, he plays no more trumps. Instead he leads the club queen, finesse. East wins the king and plays a third diamond. Declarer ruffs low and then plays the A-J of clubs. West has to follow. Declarer then cashes the A-K of hearts, and fortune smiles as West has to follow to both hearts. South can now play his last club and ruff with still make his long trump trick. Unfortunately he has to ruff his partner's winning heart, and declarer South makes 10 tricks.

James Jacoby's books "Jacoby on Bridge" and "Jacoby on Card Games" written with his father, the late Oswald Jacoby, are now available at bookstores. Both are published by Pharos Books.
